Here then is a third Cape of good hope: that, though one had been down as deep in the entrails of the spirituall great Leviathan, as ever was Jonas in the Sea-whales, yet, even there also, not to despaire. He that brought Jonas from the deep of the Sea, and David from the deep of the Earth (his body, so:) He also delivered his soul from the nethermost hell, where Jonas and He both were, while they were in the transgression.

And now, by this, are we come to the very Signature of this signe, even to Repentance, which followeth in the very next word, for they repented, at the preaching of Jonas. Jonas preached it: and (indeed) none so fit to preach on that them (on repentance) as he, as one that hath been in the Whales belly; in both the Whales, the spirituall Whales too (for Jonas had been, in both.) One that hath studied his sermon there, been in Satans sieve, well winnowed (tribulus Theologus) he will handle the point best, as being, not only a Preacher, but a signe of repentance. (as, Jonas was both) to the Ninivites.

And, as Jonas, so Christ: how soon He was risen, He gave order straight, that repentance (as the very vertue, the stamp of his Resurrection) and, by it, remission of sinnes should be preached in His name to all nations.

But (indeed) if you mark well, there is a neare alliance between the Resurrection and Repentance; reciprocally, as between the Signe, and the Signature. Repentance is nothing, but the souls resurrection: Men are dead in sinne (saith the Apostle:) their souls are. From that death, there is a rising: Else were it wrong with us. That rising, is repenting: And when one hath lien dead in sinne long, and doth elutriate, wrestle out of a sinne, that hath long swallowed him up, he hath done as great a mastery, as if (with Jonas) he had got out of the Whales belly; Nay, as if (with Lazarus) he had come out of the heart of the earth. Ever holding this, that Mary Magdalen raised from sinne, was no lesse a miracle, than her brother raised from the dead.

And sure, Repentance is the very vertue of Christ's Resurrection. There, it is first seen, it first sheweth it self, hath his first operation, in the soul, to raise it.

This first being once wrought on the soul, from the ghostly Leviathan, the like will not fail, but be accomplished on the body, from the other of death; of which Jonas is here, Mysterium magnum, dico autem in Christo. For, in Christ, this signe is a signe, not betokening onely, but exhibiting also what it betokeneth, as the Sacraments doe. For, of signes, some shew onely, and work nothing, such was that of Jonas, in it self; Sed Ecce plui quam Jonas hic: For, some other there be, that shew and work what they shew; present us, with what they represent; what they set before us, set or graft in us. Such is that of Christ. For, besides that, it sets before us, of His: it is further a seal or pledge, to us, of our own, that, what we see in Him this day, shall be accomplished in our own selves, at his good time.

And even so passe we to another Mysterie. For, one Mysterie leads us to another: this in the Text, to the holy Mysterie we are providing to partake, which doe work like, and do work to this: Even to the raising of the soul with the first resurrection. And, as they are a meanes for the raising of our soul, out of the foil of sinne; (for, they are given us and we take them expressly for the remission of sinnes:) so are they no lesse a meanes also, for the raising our bodies out of the dust of death. The signe of that Body, which was thus in the heart of the earth, to bring us from thence, at the last. Our Saviour saith it coidem verbis, Who so eateth My Flesh and drinketh My Bloud, I will raise him up at the last day: raise him, whither He hath raised Himself. Not to life onely, but to life and glory, and both without end. To which, &c.

Preached before the

KINGS MAJESTY

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of Aprill, being Easter-Day,An. Dom. 1618.

I Co R. Chap. XI. Ver. XVI.

Si quis autem videtur contentiosus esse, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus, neque Ecclesiæ Dei.

But if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custome, neither the Churches of God.

His is no Easter Text, as we are wont to have : Nothing of the Resurrection in it. It is not for the day.

It is not, directly: But if it should happen, there were any contention about Easter, that would bring it within the word [contentious] here. Specially, if that contention about Easter were, whether it hath been ever a custome in the Church of God, for that would bring it within in the word [custome] here mentioned: And so would it both wayes fall within the compass of the Text. The Custome of Easter, made a contention, would make it an Easter-day Text.

1 How the Text may serve for Easter.

The Text two wayes qualified

1 Videatur Seems.

2 Si quis If any. All upon supposition. The Division

I say not, any such contention there is: I desire to proceed (as the Apottle doth) without the least offence. 1. He saith not, there be any contentions, but if any seem so be. That any be contentious, it may not be said. They will deeply protest, that from their hearts they abhor all contentions, and desire to walk peaceably. Be not, then: but, seem to be.

2. Nay, not seem to be, neither: Saint Paul saith not so much: sayes only, si quis, if any; puts but a case (and there is no harm in that.) No more will we: go no further, than the Text: If any such seem to be, this Text tells what to do: If none be, none seem to be, it is but a case put. And so by way of supposition, be all said, that shall be.

Upon the view, three points give forth themselves: 1. Here are contentions; and 2. here are customes; and 3. customes, opposed to the contentions. These the three heads.

To

I. To break them yet further, into certain Theses or propositions: to proceed by. 1. First, it should seem, there were contentions in the Apostles time. 2. Contentions, about what? About matter of circumstance. So was this here, Whether men were to pray uncovered, and women veiled, or no? 3. And that there were, which did not only contend, but (which is more) were even so. contentious about these. 4. For those that were so, here is a Siquis set up, If any seem to be such, what to do to them.

II. Not to pass them in silence, and say nothing to them: but this to say: We have no such custome, nor the Churches of God. And so oppose the Churches custome to contention.
In which saying, there are these heads: 1. First, that the Church hath her customs. 2. As she hath them, so she may, and doth alledg them. 3. And alledg them finally as the Apostle here, we see, resolveth the whole matter into them, as into a final resolution. 4. And all this by scripture confirmed: even by this Scripture: on which, the customs of the Church are grounded, and the power that shall be ever in them, to over-rule the contentions.

And let not this move you, that it seems to be negative, Non habemus talem. As (this time twelve moneth) Non dabitur nisi (a negative in shew) proved an affirmative, Dabitur, sed non nisi: So will this Non habemus talem, prove to Habemus, sed non talem. Churches we have, but none such. To apply it to the Apostles purpose: None to sit covered at prayer, Non talem, None such; but the contrary rather; To be uncovered then, talem, Such is our custome; Such an one, the Church hath.

Where, because the negative refers not to habemus, but to talem; And, a custome is not therefore good, because we have it, but because it is talem, so qualified; The talem to be: 1. First, if we (that is) the Apostles have had it, if it were Apostolick. The non talem to be, if our new Matters have taken it up the other day, and the Apostles never knew it. 2. the talem to be, if the Churches of God in general have had it, if it be Catholick. The non talem to be, if the Church of Corinth, or some one Church perhaps had it, but the rest never had any such.

III. Then, will we descend to shew the keeping of Easter, to be such: Ever in use vwith the Churches of God, from the time of the Apostles themselves. Which, if we can make plain, here is a plain Text for it: That if one should ask, What Scripture have you, why Easter may not be laid down? It may vwell be answered, Non habemus talem consuetudinem, nec Ecclesia Dei, Custome to keep it we have; the Apostles, the Church had it: but to abolish it, such a custome have we none; we depart from them both, if we do.

There wants not Scripture for Easter.
Epist. 119. cap. 14.
Psalm 118. 24.
1 Cor. 5. 7, 8.
But the Churches custome is more kindly.
Protesting yet, that we have no purpose to wave Scripture quite, for the keeping of Easter. S. Augustine is plain; Non ex autoritate divinarum Scripturarum; per anniversarium Pascha celebratur. Even by authority of divine Scripture it is, that every year, Easter is kept solemnly. We have touched two Scriptures heretofore: The day which the Lord hath made (118. Psalm) applied ever to this Feast That Text for the Old. And for the New Testament, that verse in this Epistle, Christ our Passover is offered, let us therefore keep a Feast.

But every thing standeth fast and sure, upon his own base: and the right base of this, I take to be Custome. We do but make our selves to be pitied other while, when we stand wringing the Scriptures, to strain that out of them, that is not in them, and so can never come liquide from them: when yet we have for the same point, the Churches custome clear enough. And that is enough, by vertue of this Text. There is, and shall be enough ever in this Text, to avow any Custome: The Apostles, the Churches of God had it: to disavow any; The Apostles, the Churches of God had it not.

The fruit of our labour will be this (I hope) at least, to confirm us in the keeping of it. We keep Easter, many of us we know not upon what ground. By this, we shall see, we have a ground for that we do. We do no more than the Churches of God, than the Apostles have done before us. So, our ears shall hear the voice in Esay behind us, Hac est via, This is the way: Ambulate in ea, Walk in it, as you do, you are in the right, and there hold you.

I. If any. This (if) I take it, is no idle if, no vain supposition; to say, if there be any, where there were none. No: contentions there were. When? when (we:) who be they? S. Paul and his fellow Apostles, vwhen they lived. And the Churches: what Churches? the Churches under them, of their times.

In the very prime of the Primitive Church, then were there contentions.

And those not with an enemy without (Jew or Gentile;) that, were ἀλλήλοις, vvar abroad: this is ἑαυτοῖς but a jar at home, among themselves. That former (abroad) they represent by Ismael and Isaac; and they were of two venters. This latter (at home) by the two Twins in *Rebecca*s womb. (I fear the time: else could I let you see this strife, in every Church of them)

This I note, first, that we may not ἐπιζητεῖν (to use Saint Peters terme) think it strange, if there be contentions in our times. They shall be no strangers with us, in ours: They were not vwith them, in theirs. Neither contentions (in this verse:) Nor schismes (in the next, the 18.) Nor heresies (in the 19. next to that.) It is of the fiery trial, Saint Peter speaks it (of persecution;) It is as true, of the watery trial (of contention;) As true it is of the last, as of the first Church: I proved thee also as the waters of strife. Those vvaters, the vvaters of Moriba, vwill hardly be dreined ever.

There were contentions then: About what? For, though peace be pretious, yet of such moment may the matters be, as they are to be contended for, yea, even to the death. For what then were these? for nothing, but a matter of Rite: Men praying, whether they should be uncovered; and women, whether veiled or no. For a Hat and a Veil, was all this ado. It was not about any the high Mysteries, any of the vital parts of Religion, Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: Only about the manner, how; the gesture and behaviour, wherewith, in vvhhat sort, to carry themselves; at Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: about matter of circumstance meerly, and nothing else.

Contentions about matter of circumstance: Verse 4, 5.

And even these, even the meanest things would be done for the better, not for the worse (saith the Apostle, in the next verse.) And the more order, the better. So the Apostle had set order for them, and inter alia, for this too. Other his ordinances (he saith) they remembred well, but not this: this was opposed. For, with some, all is not vvvorth a rush, if they see no further than their fellows, nay their betters, then: if they find not somewhat to find fault vvvith, if it be but a ceremony. And to pick a quarrel with a ceremony, is easie. A plausible theme, not to burthen the Church vvvith ceremonies: the Church to be free: vvhich hath almost freed the Church of all decency.

Ver. 2.

About such points as these, were there that did not only contend, but that grew contentious. Now G is one thing, to contend: φιλονεικία another, to be contentious. The Apostle saith not, if any contend: but, si quis contentiousus. And (ofus) is full: φίλος is one that loves it, is given to it. Strange, any such should be: But the Apostles if, proves to be no if. We see it daily, in persons but meanly qualified (God vvvot) yet so peremptory, as if the word of God had come, if not from them, yet to them only, and none besides. Good Lord! vvvhy should any love to be contentious? Why? It is the vvvay to be some body. In time of peace, what reckoning is there of Was Tiler, or Jack Straw? Make a sedition, and they will bear a brain with the best. Primitius and Maximianus were the heads of the two factions of Donatists in S. Augustine's time. He saith, it was well for them, that faction fell out: Else, Primitius might have been Positivianus, and Maximianus be Minimianus, well enough. But now, in schism, either of them vvas a jolly fellow, head of a party; This makes we shall never want contentious persons, and they will take order, we shall never want contentions.

Yes, contentiousness, which is more than contention. 1 Cor. 14. 16.

Well, if any such should happen to be, vvvhat is to be done in such a case? vvvhat saith the Apostle? Saith he thus? Seeing it is no greater matter, it skils not greatly vvhether they do it or no, covered or bare, sit or kneel, all's one: sets it light, and lets it go: No: but calls them back to the custome of the Church, vvvill not have them swerve from that; makes a matter of it. For (vve see) he presses the point hard; spends many vvvords, many verses, even half the Chapter about it.

Such contention not to be neglected.

Why doth he so? For two reasons: 1. First, he likes not contention at all. Why? If it be not taken at the first, vvvithin a while (within one verse after) ye shall hear of a schism (look the 18 ver.) And within a little after that (look but to the 19.) ye shall have a flat heresie of it. The one draws on the other: if the contentious humour be not let out, it will fester straight, and prove to an aposthume.

Not any contention;

2. Nor, he likes not the matter, wherefore; (though it seem but small.) Saint Paul knew Satans method vvell: he seems somewhat shame-fast at first, asks but some small trifle: Give him but that, he will be ready for greater points. If he vvin ground in the Ceremonies, then have at the Sacrament: If he can disgrace the one, it will not be long, but ye shall hear of him at the other.

No, nor in these small matters. For, from Ceremonies to Sacraments.

Speak I beside the book? vvas it not so here? At the very next verse, there he falls in hand with an abuse of the Sacrament, and that takes up the rest of the Chapter.

For, when they had sit covered at Prayer a vvhile, they grew even as unreverent, as homely with the Sacrament: Eat and drunk there, as if they had been at home, intriclinio; that the Apostle is fain to tell them (at the 22. verse) They had homes to be homely at: the Church, the house of God, they were to be used with greater reverence. He did not commend them for this their rude carriage, at the Sacrament. Did not commend them? you know vvvhat that meaneth (minus dicere, plus intelligitur) He blamed them much for it.

Then, are vve to make stay at these less matters at first (as the Apostle doth.) To think the Wife-mans council worth the following, Ne sit tibi minimum, non negligere minimum, Count it not small matter, not to neglect small matters. What so small as an hair? when these small hairs vvere gone from Samson, Judg. 16. 19. his strength left him. In it self, in his own nature, a Rite is not so much. This is much; that by it, they learn to break the Churches orders; and that thereby they are fleshed, to go on to greater matters.

Judg. 16. 19.

Opposing then to these, what course takes he? Lays for his ground, this, Nam habemus talem. The force of his reason is, If we, if the Churches of God, had any such custom, it were somewhat; that were warrant enough, for a Rite. But now, vve and they both, have none such; nay, vve and they have the quite contrary; therefore, let us hear no more of it.

II.
To these contentions, the Church customs opposed.

Where, it is plain, the Apostle is for the Church-customs. 1. And first, that she hath them. Every Society, beside their Laws in books, have their customs also in practice: and those, not to be taken up, or laid down, at every mans pleasure. The Civil Law saith this of Customs; Imo magna auctoritas hoc jus habetur: quod in tantum probatum est, ut non fuerit scripto comprehendere necesse. Men (it seems) had a great good liking to their customs, that they remembred them vvvithout book, that they never needed to be put in writing, as their Laws and Statutes did. Now, as every Society, so the Church, besides her habemus legem, hath her habemus consuetudinem too. There is such a thing, as populi Dei T.

The Church hath her customs. Rand. 1. Tit. 3. 1. 18. 35.

And fear not traditions a vvvhit. Those respect credenda, points of Doctrine: These, but agenda, or matters of Practice: And that, not in points of substance; reach only to matter of circumstance, go no further. Nor do we even them with, much less oppose them to, that which is written. Never any custom, against that: No custom, that comes from the will or wit of man, against Scripture, which comes from the wisdom and will of God. But, hac oportet facere, & illa non omittere. Only so.

The Church then, hath her customs. I add, these (we) here (that is) the Apostles had them; and the Churches under them, had theirs. It was but early day then, yet had they their customs, even then. At the writing of this Epistle, it was not (at the most) thirty years from Christ's Ascension. If that were time enough, to make a custom: Now, after these twenty times thirty years, and thirty times thirty years, and a hundred years to spare, shall it not be a custom now, by much better right? A custom is susceptible of more and less: The further it goeth, the longer it runneth, the more strength it gathereth; the more gray haire it getteth, the more venerable it is: for indeed, the more a custom it is.

Now then, as the Church hath them, so she stands upon them: fears not (we see) to allege them, to say habemus, or non habemus. Habemus, to uphold an ancient good one: Non habemus, to lay down an evil one, new taken up.

Here, negative, Non habemus talem. As our Saviour likewise, A principio non fuit sic. And yet, by implication, this here is, One we have, but not such an one. And our Saviours there, a way there was from the beginning, but this was not it.

But otherwhere, it is positive also, to affirm, and to maintain a good: And men positively referred, to know, what hath been the use in former times.

Higher than Moses, we cannot go. Moses as a Law-giver, one would think would be all for Law. He is positive full, for custom too. Enquire (saith he) of the days that be past, how it hath gone, since the day God created the earth. (And that, in the second edition, or setting forth of the Law.)

Job is for it too: Enquire, I pray you, of the former Age; and set your selves to ask, after the Fathers (for we are but of yesterday) shall not they tell you, thus; and thus it was in their times?

And, say not the Prophets the same? Stand upon the wayes (it is Jeremy) and there look for the good old way, and that way take, it is the only way to find rest for your souls.

To all which agreeable is that wherewith I shall shut up this point; which all the Fathers in the first Nicene Council took up, and which, ever since, hath been the Churches cry, τὰ ἀρχαία ὁδοὶ καλῶν, Mos antiquus obineat: Let old customs prevail, let them carry it. By this you see, habemus consuetudinem, hath been counted a sound allegation, not only from the Apostles, but even From Moses time.

And now, for the talem, For, it is not the habemus that binds, but the talem. Not because we have it, but because it is so qualified. It is not every custom, hand over head, we may stand on. Why binds not this? 1. Because though it may be, it was at Corinth (Ecclesia Dei, a Church of God, one Church) yet Ecclesia Dei, the other Churches of God, had it not; the word is plural. 2. Because, though it hath liked some, not long since to like well of it: yet the Apostles never knew it: or (the other way) if it have liked them to dislike it, and lay it down; yet the Apostles liked it well enough.

Non talem (saith the Apostle) non fuit. Qualem then? How shall he do to know the right talem? Thus. Non talem is here opposed, to two: To the Churches of God: To us (that is) the Apostles.

If it be but of some one Church, but at Corinth alone, it is too narrow; not large, not general enough. If it be but taken up by some of our Masters of late, it is too fresh, it is not ancient enough: Non talem, No such.

But by these two, we know our right qualem. If it be Ecclesiasticum (that is) if it be general: If we come to it (that is) the Apostles, if it be ancient: then is it rightly qualified; then it is as it should be; then it may be alleged, and stood upon, then it will bind: and then if any oppose, videtur contrarius esse.

I begin with the Church (in the plural.) Every Church hath power to begin a custom: and that custom, power to bind her own children, to it. Provided, her private custom affront not the general, received by all others: for then binds it not. By the Rule in the Mathematics, Ever Totum est partium majus: And by the rule in the Morals, Ever turpis pars omnis, toti non congruat.

As neither is any particular Church bound to the private custom of another, like particular, as it self is. But if the other Churches customs, have also been the general customs of the Church: then it binds, and may not be set light: For then said it must be, that S. Augustinus doth say, If the whole Church usually have observed ought: so go from that, or to question, whether it be to be observed, insolentissima insensate est.

It favours of a distemper coming of a heat, or humour of pride: For only by pride (saith Solomon) cometh contention. This for the Churches customs.

But if to this we add, or rather, if before this we set, this (was) the Apostles had it too, that it is Apostolick, we have then said as much, as in this point can be said, as much as may content any, that is not contentious, that is not more wedded to shew his wit, than to seek the truth, and more set quadratus pedes to maintain his own position, than to regard the Churches peace. For sure, if a custom be to be esteemed by antiquity, such a custom is ab hereticis usque temporibus, for they be our Heroes. 2. If it be to be esteemed by the author: What author more worthy in themselves, more worthy of our imitation, than they? Nothing can be devised more reasonable, than that in the 118. quest. ad Orthod. in Justin Martyr, Thou of and from whom we received it, thou shalt pray: of and from them, we should also receive it, and we shall know, and when, at what time, at what feast to do it. Their example (that is, the Apostles) the Church commended to her children to practice (a better she could not): that practice in time grew to a custom. That custom is antiquum, may safely be alleged.

Lastly,

Lastly, As this sheweth it may be alledged for a good argument in Divinity: So doth it, 1. what the men are against whom: 2. what the matters, wherein: 3. what the penaltie, vvhereupon it may be alledged.

1. Whom against. This may be alledged against si quis videtur contentiosus esse, such as are, or at least seem contentious. Habemus, or Non habemus consuetudinem, is their proper answer. No reasoning with such, it will be to small purpose, they will be sine fine dicentes. Saint Augustine saith vvell, they cannot distinguish between respondere posse, and tacere nolle: They take them, for all one. So they cry lowdeft, and have the last word, they take it they have answered sufficiently. Against these it lyeth most properly. None so ready a way, to stop their mouths: for custome is matter of fact, habemus, or non habemus may be put to the twelve men, and there's an end. Saint Paul then using here against these, teacheth us to use it against the like. Against such parties; against si quis videtur contentiosus esse, to put it upon this; Is there a custome, or is there none?

Specially, if the matter be of the nature of this here in the Text, where the question seemed to concern but matter of circumstance, and outward order; there hath it his right use; that, the proper place of it. You will say; But had it not been good though, to have used some reason for it? It had: And the Apostle used divers (if that would have served:) from the signification, at the third verse; from decency, at the thirteenth; from nature, at the fourteenth. But (to say the truth) such, (he saw) a wrangling wit would elude. The nature of the question afforded none other. It was well observed, and set down for a rule by the Philosopher, that in moral matters, men may not look for Mathematicall proofes: The nature of the subject will not bear them. If not in moral, in ritual, much less: they of all other, least susceptible of a demonstrative reason.

The Apostle saw this, and therefore finally resolves all, into the Churches practice by custome confirmed in matters of this kind, enough of it self, to suffice any that will sapere ad sobrietatem. In so doing, as he took the right course (we are sure) so he taught us by his example, in points of this nature; of Ceremony or circumstance, ever to pitch upon habemus, or non habemus talem consuetudinem. This to be final.

3. And then follows upon what penalty. Upon no other pain, but to be pronounced to be fallen into the Apostles figus; to be taken and declared, pro contentioso. Then if any, for every point of rite that takes him in the head, will hazard the Churches peace, will not acquiescere, but set himself against the Churches custome; he knoweth his doome here. For it turns back reciprocè. As, if any be contentious, the Churches custome is against him: So, if any turn upon the Churches custome, be against it, it is no good sign; videtur (saith S. Paul) to the Apostle he seems so (and he had his eyes in his head.) And what such seemed to him, they may well seem to us; and we take them for no less, that are like stirring in matters of no more weight. And so an end of this matter. For the Apostle when he had said this, thought he had said enough, needed to say no more. The Churches custome shall ever be of force, to over-rule such as are contentious. And when S. Paul had said this, he had said. And so have we.

This then being set down, That Customes so qualified are to be kept: Shall we now go on to the by-pothesis, that the keeping of Easter is such? (And now I would the hour were to begin again, so much is to be said for it.)

One foot of our compass we fix in the Apostles times. The other, where? They appoint us Gelasius time, who was fast upon the five hundred year. Be it so.

From the Apostles Age (which ended with Saint John, who survived Christ sixty eight years, and dyed the year CII. under Trajan) to Gelasius Age. Of these five hundred, the first hundred years as for (N^os) the Apostles time. From thence the four hundred years following, are for the Churches. Which four hundred we may divide again, into two even moieties, two hundred under persecution: two hundred under peace.

To prove (then) our habemus consuetudinem: We cannot better begin, than with this in the Text, the contentions, that from the beginning rose about it. These very contentions prove it. It must be, that must be contended for: and then it must be, when it is contended for. These three things in this one proof. 1. The contentions that were about it; even presently upon the Apostles times. 2. The great care had, and continual pains taken, to lay them down, that is, the Churches, contending for the Feast: 3. The censuring of those that took their up, with Saint Pauls contentiosus here, and with somewhat more: (Of Blasius, at Rome in Europe; Of Crescentinus in Egypt, for Africke: Of Andreas, in Syria, for Asia.) These were the principals, these were all written up in the black book, by those that registred the Hericks; by Tertullian, Epiphanius, Philastrius, Augustine, and Theodoret (all five.)

But as God would have it, the question never was of the Feast it self, but of the time of it only. All kept Easter, though not all at one time. For the keeping, they had the Churches custome: for the time of keeping, they had their own: the Feast of the Christians; the time of the Jews.

And I will tell you how this came, first. From Saint James (who was the first) there were successively one after another, fifteen Bishops of Hierusalem, all of them of the Circumcision. These (the sooner to win their brethren the Jews) condescended to keep their Easter XIII^o. Lana, as they did. That which was by them thus done by way of condescension, was after, by some, urged as a matter of necessity, as if it were not lawfull, but in that day to hold it.

The first that it took thus in the head (Tertullian in the end of De prescrip. saith) was one Blasius, about the dayes of Commodus. He began a schism. And Irenaeus presently wrote de schismate contra Blasium. But after, from schism Blasius fell to heresie, and began that of the Quarodecimani: to whose manner Epiph. bar. 53.

manner of keeping it, for the most part, other Hereticks did cleave, leaving the Churches custome of purpose, since they were departed from her.

Great pity, some in our days had not been then living, to have advised the Church to have saved her pains, and never have striven so about it, the shortest way was to have made no more ado, but kept none at all. But, non habemus talem consuetudinem, would have been their answer. For you will easily gheis: if these, for not keeping it at the right time, were scored up for Hereticks; what would become of them, that had been against the keeping of it at all.

Socr. l. 5. c. 20.

Till now in our dayes, there was never any such, but Aerius; he took it away clean, as Jewish. His reason was (saith Epiphanius, scorning it) because Christ our Paschever is offered. Christ our Paschever is offered, let us therefore keep a Feast (saith Saint Paul;) Let us therefore keep none (saith Aerius) holden for so saying, for little better than crazed. There was never any Council called about him: but as Aerius was his name, so was his opinion, and so it vanished into air, and was blown over straight. Otherwise, all Hereticks, an Easter they had: Not so much as the Novatians, that called themselves Cathari (that is, the Puritans of the Primitive Church) but one they had: but like good fellows (by their Canon adiaphorus) they left every one at liberty, so he kept one, to keep it whether vway he listed, but keep one he must. This contending about this custome from the beginning, sheweth, from the beginning, such a custome there vvas.

2 Proof from
chales.

Next vve avouch the Cycli Paschales (for the keeping it right) vvhich vvere indeed the Churches yearly Calendar (vvhich to this day the Greek Church call their μαγάλιον) made of purpose for the just keeping it, at the very time. A pregnant proof for this custome, if there vvere none but it. By Hippolytus first a famous Bishop and holy Martyr (his was the sixteen-year Canon set forth by him so timely, as it ended in the first year of Alexander Severus.)

And after him, that of eight years, devised by Dionysius Bishop of Alexandria, who was a Martyr also, and of high account ever in the Church. (And both these under the persecution.)

Then came Eusebius, whose devise the Golden number was, or Cycle of nineteen years. His held, till Theophilus of Alexandria's began. Now the time of the setting his, is recorded to have been the year 380.

Prosper came after him, and he set another. And last came Victorinus of Aquitaine about the year 460. (not much before Gelasius.) Two more came after these before it was fully settled, (but we will not pass our bounds.) If no such custome were, what needed all these pains, all this ado, in these Cycles setting, and calculation of times? It shews the great esteem, the Church had the Feast in, that it was so carefull of the precise time of it, every year.

Now, upon the consulting of the Bishop of Alexandria, there hangs a third proof. The Paschales epistola yearly sent abroad by that See, to this end. Leo confesseth to the Emperour, That because, they of Egypt were held for the most skilfull in the Mathematicks, best at calculations; it was by the first Council at Nice laid upon them (this trust) yearly to calculate the day exactly, and to give notice of it in time to other Churches, yea, to Rome and all.

And it was antiqua consuetudo, saith Cassian (who lived with Chrysostome, and was his Deacon) that every year, the morrow after their Epiphania, the Bishop of Alexandria sent abroad his Paschales epistola, to warn Easter, over the world. And, when (after) by reason of warres in the spring time, in many places they were intercepted, that they came not time enough: Order was taken anew by the great Council of Africk, that letters for warning Easter should come forth sooner, by the one and twentieth of August every year, that so they might have time to come, whither they were sent soon enough.

But, though by the Nicene Council this vvas laid upon the Bishop of Alexandria; I vould not have you conceive, it began then. Ruffin, saith, the Council did but antiquum Canonem tradere, deliver the old Canon, that had been before in use. For, long before, Eusebius mentioned those Paschales epistola sent about, by Dionysius Bishop there, even under the persecution.

Now if we will follow Job's advice, and set our selves to ask of the Fathers: we shall find habemus talem consuetudinem, cleer with them for it. Those first, that lived after the Churches peace. 2. Then those that during the persecution. Those in the Churches peace, four wayes. 1. By the Homilies or Sermons made purposely by them to be preached on this day. We have a full Jury, Greek and Latine of them; and that of the most chief and eminent among them is S. Basil, Nazianzen, Chrysostome, Nyssen, Theophilus, Alexandrinus, Cyril, Chrysologus, Leo, &c. And yet I deal not with any of those in Ambroses, Augustin, Maximus, now extant; I know, they are questioned. I rely only on the report of S. Hierom and Gr-nadins, who saw the right copies, and what they saw, have reported.

I will give you a taste of one. It shall be Nazianzen, furnished the Divine, and so one that knew what belonged to Divinity. Thus begins he a Sermon of his upon it. Easter-day is come, Gods own Easter-day: and again I say, Easter-day is come, in honour of the trinity: the Feast of Feasts, the solemnity of all solemnities, so far passing all other Feasts, holden not only by or for men, but even in honour of Christ Himself, as the Sun doth the Stars. In Pascha.

And, in his funeral Sermon for his father, having occasion but to name it by the way (for that his father once brought to the last cast, in a sickness of his, suddenly (as it were by a miracle) recovered upon an Easter-day morning.) It was (saith he) Easter, the great and famous Feast of Easter, the Queen and the Sovereign of all the dayes in the year. That, in his dayes they had (sure) such a custome.

(And so it seems they had in Ignatius dayes: for from him borrowed he that term of Lady and Queen of dayes, out of his Epistles ad Magnesians.)

2. By the Hymnes set for this day, to be sung on it. By Prudentius that lived in Saint Ambrose's time. By S. Ambrose himself. Before him by S. Hilary. But, Paulinus I insist on. He, in his Panegyrick for Felix, sets down in particular all the Feasts in the year, as they were then in use among them: Easter for a chief Feast. He liveth with S. Augustine. A pregnant Record, for the Churches custome then. By the Hymns upon Easter day.

3. By their Writings. 1. Some of them in their Commentaries (as S. Hierome) and namely on the Galatians, and on that place (ye observe dayes:) If that be a fault (saith he) we Christians do incur that fault, all. For we keep (by name) Easter, but not the Jewes Easter, of unleavened bread (which the Apostle excepts to) but the Christian Easter of the Resurrection of Christ. 2. Some, by way of Epistles and answers: as S. Ambrose, LXXXIII. Epistle, full to it. S. Augustine, CXVIII. CXIX. set Epistles concerning questions about it. 3. Some, by their anagoras: As Epiphanius (the Treasure of antiquity) in his L. LXX. and LXXV. heresie, ad oppositum. Positively in his Compendium of the true Churches orders, at the end of his Pannarium, whereof one is ἡ ἡμέρα τῆς ἡμέρας τῆς ἡμέρας. The great Solemnity upon Easter-day. 2. As S. Augustine expressly contra Adimantum, the 16. Chap. and the 32. book against Fauftus (that found fault, the Church kept it, yet kept it not, as the Jewes:) confesseth the one, (the Churches keeping:) traverses the other, that she ought, neither at that time, nor in that manner to keep it as they did: and that at large. 4. Some, by short Treatises, as Ambrose de mysterio Pasche. And some by full books, as Eusebius, who wrote a book of the whole order of the Churches Service then, dedicated it to Constantine, was by the Emperour highly commended for it. By their Writings touching Baker.

4. Lastly, as by writing, so by matter of fact. As Chrysostome, who when he was deposed, and so enjoyned not to come in any Church: yet Easter-day coming, so loth he was not to keep it, as he got him in Thermas Constantinis (a spacious great building, for the publick Bath of the City) and there held his Easter, with a very great company, that would not forsake him. As Athanasius, who being accused to Constantine the Emperour, for keeping the Feast of Easter in the great Church at Alexandria (then but newly finished, and as yet not dedicate) he layes the blame from himself upon the people; that would have it kept there, do what he could, the other Churches were so narrow, and the concourse to the feast so great, as he saith, it would have done the Emperours heart good, to have seen it.

And in his Epistles ad Africanus; with open mouth he cryeth out upon the Arrians, that came in military manner to install their new Bishop, and the many outrages by them done. Above all, that not only they did those outrages, but did them (of all dayes) upon Easter-day, Et ne ipsum quidem Dominicum diem sanctissimi festi ulli in reverentia habueret, and had not in any reverence; not the very Sunday of that most holy Feast. By matters of fact. Of Chrysostome Socras lib. 2. 18. Of Athanasius. Apolog ad Constantium.

Not the Sunday: for we are to know; the custome that is continued with us still, they then had, to keep two dayes beside the Sunday, three in all. For the Latine Church, plain, by S. Augustine de Civitate Dei, 22. Intertium Festi dicitur. For the Greek, by Nyssen, who expressly termeth it, ἡ ἡμέρα τῆς ἡμέρας τῆς ἡμέρας.

Thus, all these wayes, by singing, by saying, by writing, by doing, all bear witness to it: and I may safely say, there is not one of them, but one of these wayes or other, he hath his hand in it; and among them they make up a full proof, of this habemus consuetudinem. Custome for the three Holy-days at Easter. Cap. 8. Hom. 1. In Pascha.

From the Fathers, I pass to the Councils, and plead it by all the four. The Nicene first.

1. Two causes there were (saith Athanasius de Syn. Arim. & Sel.) of the assembling that Council. Nam & claudicabant circa Festum (and he makes that the first cause) They halced about the Feast, kept it not uniformly: and that was set straight against Crescentinus. And the Doctrin of the Son of God was questioned, and that was put into the Nicene Creed, against Atrius. You have the Councils Epistle for the setting it: you have the Emperours Sacra for the ratifying it, directed ad omnes Ecclesias (in the third book of his life, by Eusebius.) 5 Proof. From the Councils. The Nicene. Theod. l. 1. c. 9. Socras. l. 1. c. 9.

2. For the two General at Constantinople. As Constantine in the first; so Theodosius at this, was not behind. His Law remains, whereby he provided, that for fifteen dayes, from the Sunday before the day, till the Sunday after, no process should go forth, none should be arrested; a general cessation of all both processes and proceedings, in honour of the High Feast. That you have Easter day and the custome of holding it solemnly, in the body of the Law too, in Theodosius Code. The 2. of Constant.

3. At the third of Ephesus, there have you (in the 2. Tom. c. 32.) Rudius, Hesychius, and Ruffin, three Quartodecimani hereticks, publicly in the face of the Council, recanting their error, subscribing, and promising ever after to conform and keep their Easter, after the custome of the Churches of God. As Ephesus.

4. And at the fourth of Chalcedon, the sixth Session (the Emperour being there then present in person) the whole Council with one voice made this acclamation, Hanno Pasce ubi terrarum: Thanks be to God, one Easter now, and but one, all the world over. At Chalcedon.

Augustine.

But before all these (the Nicene and all) by a dozen years at least was the Councell of Arles, and in it, this custome proclaimed. I mention it, not so much for the antiquity; as that by it appeareth, how the custome of Easter went here with us in this Realme: for, at it was present and subscribed, the Bishop of London, Refrutius. A plain argument, We had such a custome then.

And for the other Realme, Gelasius shall speak. In a Synod of seventy Bishops, where he and they decreed, what bookes were to be read, what not: they say, there was then a Poeme of venerable Sedulius (who had the addition of Scotus for his nation) which they doe insigni laude preferre, (that is) very highly commend. Sedulius intitules it, his Opus Paschale, and begins it, with Paschales quicumque dapes — as it were inviting his Readers (his country-men, I dare say specially, if they will come to it) to a Feast, upon Easter-day.

But for both, none so worthy a witnesse, as the Emperour Constantine, who in his Rescript about Easter, directed to all Churches, expressly nameth this Isle, the Isle of Britannie, among those places, where this custome was duly and orderly observed.

All this while the Church had rest: during the persecution, how went it? Two we will take in; in the passage between the times of persecution.

1. Lactantius, the most part of his life, lived under the persecution, but dyed in the Churches peace. 2. So did Pierius of Alexandria (for his excellent learning, called Origen the younger.) In Lactantius seventh book, and nineteenth Chapter, there is a plain testimony for the solemn keeping of Easter-Eve. And Pierius (saith Sainr Hierom) hath a long Sermon upon the Prophet Hosee, made by him and preached at the solempne assembly on Easter-eve. And if the Eve were so held, we make no doubt of the day.

1. Now in the midst of the persecution, there fell out a speciall case of Philip the Emperour, (supposed to have given his owne and his sonnes name to the Christian profession, as Eusebius reporteth:) in signe thereof, He on Easter-eve offered to joyne himself at the Church-service, as knowing that to be their chiefest solemnitie: which they failed not to keep, no not then, when their case was at the hardest.

2. And even then at Alexandria, Dionysius the Bishop there, held this custome. Thus writes he to Hierax (a Bishop too) and to others: out of prison, That, though the persecution then raged much, and the plague more; yet were the Christians, even then, so carefull not to break this custome, as they kept their Easter, some in woods, some on ship-board, some in barnes and stables; yea, they in the very goale, keep it they did even then, persecution and plague both notwithstanding.

3. Cyprian held this custome: Not by his Homily (I wawe it, as doubtfull:) but in foure of his Epistles I find it. I name but one, his LIII. Some had consulted him, in a question of some difficultie. He writes backe, It was now Easter, his brethren were from him, every one at his owne charge, solemnizing the Feast with their people. So soone as the Feast was over, and they met againe, they should heare from him, he would take their opinions, and return them a sound answer.

4. Origen had this custome. In his VIII. against Celsus, frankly he confesseth, That other Feasts, Easter by name, the Christians held them; and that (as he saith) Causbragry, in more solempne manner, then Celsus, or any heathen-men of them all, held theirs.

5. Tertullian had this custome. * Many places in him. Only one I cite, in the fourteenth chapter, de Ieiunio, Quod si omnem in totum devotionem dierum erasit. Apostolus, cur Pascha celebramus annuo circulo? If it were the Apostles minde, to race out all devout observing of days quite, how comes it to passe, we celebrate Easter yearly, at the circle of the yeare turning about?

6. Irenaeus had this custome: His Epistle to Victor sheweth it: to Victor, and to many more (saith Eusebius) about that question, (understand still the question of the time, not of the Feast.) A book also (we finde) he wrote de Paschate, in the 115. quæst. in Iustin Martyr. So, he will be for it, certainly.

7. And it is strange, even during the persecution, how many bookes we finde written, to deduce the custome by. 1. Beside that of Irenaeus, 2. One by Anastolius the great learned Bishop of Laodicea: 3. By Theophilus Bishop of Cæsarea, and 4. by Bacchylus Bishop of Corinth, either of them one. 5. Another by Hippolytus, that made up the first cycle. Yet, 6. another by Clemens Alexandrinus. And last, which indeed was first in time of all; two bookes, 7. by the holy Martyr and Prophet Melito Bishop of Sardinia (in the next Age to the Apostles themselves) set forth by him (as he saith) at the time of the Feast, and in the very holy-dayes of it.

Nay, there wanted not Councils then neither, and that in seven severall parts of the world at once: all in the midst of the fervour of the fiery tryall, when the Church (God wot) could but evill intend it. It was no time to commend then. But it shewes, they made a matter of it, and no slight reckoning of the retaining it. Else might they have slipt it, without any more adoe.

Enough (I trow) to shew, such a custome there was in all the Churches, these parties lived in, which were all the Churches God then had. They must needs seeme contentious, that will contend against all these. I see not how they can scape the Apostles Si quis, that doe. And this I say, if some one example of some eminent man of worth, will serve to make an authoritie: If, that: Then this cloud of witnesses, and those 1. not persons, but whole Councils and Churches: 2. not in some one Region, but in divers, all the world over: 3. and that not for one time, but so many ages successively continued, from generation to generation: what manner of authority ought that to be? the greatest sure, and none greater, but of God Himself.

Now to (Nos) that is, to the Apostles themselves. First, that it was a Custome Apostolike and so taken. Saint Augustine is direct in his CXVIII. Epistle to Iannarius, who had purposely sent to him, to know his opinion touching certaine questions, all of them about Easter. Thus saith he there. For such things as come to us not by writing, but by practices (and yet such as are observed quite thorow the world) we are given to understand, they come commended to us, and were instituted either by the Apostles themselves, or by general Councils, whose authority hath ever been accounted of, as wholesome in the Church. Now what be those things so generally observed toti orbe terrarum? These: that the Passion, the Resurrection, the Ascension of Christ, and the coming of the Holy Ghost from heaven, anniversaria solemniter celebrantur, are yearly in solemn manner celebrated. And (saith he) if there be any besides these: for these are most clear.

First, he is clear, It was the custom of the Church, far and wide the world through. Then, that it must either by the Apostles be institute, or by some Council. Not by any Council: Many met about the time: about the Feast never any: that, not questioned at all: taken pro confesso ever, and so, Apostolick. They be his own words (lib. 4. de Bapt. contra Donat. cap. 24.) If the whole Church observe any thing, not having been ordained by some general Council, rectissime creditur, we are to believe, rectissime, by a good right as any can be, right in the Superlative, that they came to us, non nisi ab Apostolis, from the Apostles, and from none else, not by any other way. So S. Augustine is for nos habemus talem. So he held it.

An hundred years before him, Constantine is as direct in his Epistle Ad omnes Ecclesias. Many remarkable things there are in that Epistle. 1. The most holy Feast of Easter; four times he calleth it. That is the good Emperors style, In so great a matter, in so high a Feast of our Religion to disagree is utterly unlawful. And 2. τὴν καὶ αὐτῶν τὴν αὐτοῦ, what more honest, what more seemly, than that this Feast should be inviolably kept, by which we hold our hopes of immortality? (Mark that reason well.)

But, for Apostolick: Be it lawful for us Christians (saith he) rejecting the Jewish manner, that day, ἡμεῖς τὴν καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἡμέραν ἀγίου τοῦ κυρίου ἡμεῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which day ever since the very first day of his passion, we have to this present kept; to transmit the due observing of it to all ages to come. Mark the words, 1. They had kept Easter from the first day of Christs passion, till this present time. 2. And after that, we have received it of our Saviour. 3. And yet again, which our Saviour delivered to us. And concludes, that 4. accordingly, when he came among them, he and they would keep their Easter together. Nothing can be more full, that in his time this custom was, and that it was reputed to have come from the Apostles, as begun from the very day of Christs Passion. Which Leo shortly, but fully expresseth, Legalis quippe festivitas dum mutatur, impletur. The legal Feast of the Passover, at the fulfilling of it, was changed both at once. Fulfilled and changed, at one time, both. No distance between. And fulfilled (I am sure) it was in the Apostles time, and so changed then also. Leo Hom. 7. de Passione.

If you will see it deduced in story, that may you too. Thus of himself Irenaeus writeth, that he was brought up in Asia under Polycarpus; and that he (young though he were) observed and remembered well all his course of life. And namely, how coming to Rome in Anicetus time, he kept his Easter there. Not when Anicetus kept it, but keep it he did though. In the keeping they agreed: in the time they differed. Either held his own.

Polycarpus then kept Easter. Now, Polycarpus had lived and conversed with the Apostles, was made Bishop by them, Bishop of Smyrna, (Irenaeus and Tertullian say it directly) and he is supposed to be the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, Revel. 2. 8. And Polycarpus (as saith Irenaeus) kept Easter with S. John, and with the rest of the Apostles, totidem verbis, Euseb. lib. 5. c. 26.

Polycrates in his Epistle there (in Eusebius) expressly saith, that Saint Philip the Apostle kept it. If Saint Philip and Saint John (by name) If the rest of the Apostles had it, then nos habemus is true; then it is Apostolick.

But yet we have a more sure ground than all these: The Lords Day hath testimony in Scripture, I insist upon that: that Easter-day must needs be as ancient as it. For how came it to be the Lords Day? but as it is in the Psalm, the Lord made it? And why made he it? but because on it, the stone cast aside (that is Christ) was made the head stone of the corner? that is, because then the Lord rose, because his Resurrection fell upon it?

Now what a thing were it, that all the Sundays in the year that are but abstracts (as it were) of this day (the very day of the Resurrection) that they should be kept: and this day, the day it self, the prototype and archetype of them all, should not be kept, but laid aside quite, and be clean forgotten? That, the day in the week we should keep; and the day in the month it self, and return of the year, we should not keep? Even of every congruity, it is to be as they, and somewhat more.

Take example by our selves. For his Majesties deliverance the first of August: for his Majesties and ours, the first of November (being Tuesday both:) for these a kind of remembrance we keep, on Tuesday every week in the year. But when by course of the year in their several months, the very original dayes themselves come about: shall we not, do we not celebrate them in much more solemn manner? what question is there? weigh them well, you will find the case alike. One cannot be, but the other also must be Apostolick.

1. For the last proof I have yet reserved, one: or rather, three in one. 1. The custom of Baptism, known to have been minitred as upon that day, all the Primitive Church through. A thing so known, as their Homilies de Baptismo were most upon that day. S. Basil I name. In his upon Easter day, he shews the custom of Baptizing then, and the reason of it.

2. The use of the Keyes at that time specially. Then, were the censures inflicted: then were they released. 1. Inflicted: Against that time, did S. Paul cut off the incestuous person, that a little leaven might not sower them all. Even against the time that Christ our Paschever was offered, and they therefore to hold this feast. 2. Released: So you shall find the Council of Ancyra (elder than that of Nice) order, the censures should determine all, endure no longer than the Great Day (so, in their common speech they termed Easter) and then, all to be restored. 3. To which purpose the Council of Nice took order there should be in Lent, a Synod yearly to this end: that by it all quarrels being taken up, and all things set straight, they might be in better case, to come with their oblation at Easter to the Sacrament.

3. And last, by the never broken custom of a solemn Eucharist, ever upon this day. Origen in his seventh upon Exodus, he saith, Our Easter-day far passeth the Jewish Easter. They had no Manna on theirs: (The Passover was eaten in Egypt: Manna came not till they were in the Wilderneys.) But we (saith he) we never kept our Passover, but we are sure of Manna upon it, the true Manna, the Bread of life that came down from heaven. Let joys both; (he might well all three.) Paschalis quippe solennitatis hec est proprium, This is a peculiar that Easter-day hath, ut in eâ tota Ecclesia, remissione gaudeat peccatorum: That on it, all the whole Church obtaineth remission of their sins. One part, qui sacra Baptismate renascuntur, by virtue of the solemn Baptism then ministered: The rest, by benefit of the Eucharist they then receive; ad rubicundam mortalitatis (ie is his term) to the scouring off the rust which our mortality gathereth by the sins and errors of the whole year.

I will conclude all, with the words which S. Ambrose concludes his LXXXIII. Since then there be so many proofs for this truth that thus meet: according to the example of our fore-fathers, let us with joy and gladness keep this Feast of our common salvation. How? Sumamus spiritum ferventi Sacramentum in azymis sinceritatis. Let us receive the holy Sacrament, with the firm-bread of Sincerity. Postes nostros, ubi est orium verbi, sanguine Christi, in fide passionis coloramus. The poss of the door of our mouth (that is, our lips) let us dye them with the Blood of Christ, in the faith of his blessed Passion. JOHN Chap. XX.

Verf. 11. But Mary, stood by the Sepulchre, weeping: and as she wept, she stooped, and looked into the Sepulchre.

12. And saw two Angels, in white, sitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet, where the Body of JESUS had lien.

13. And they said to her, Woman, why weepest thou? She said to them, They have taken away my LORD, and I know not where they have laid him.

14. When she had thus said, she turned her self about, and saw JESUS standing, and knew not that it was JESUS.

15. JESUS saith to her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou? She (supposing He had been the Gardiner) said to Him, Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him thence.

16. JESUS saith to her, Mary: She turned her self, and said to him, Rabbi; that is to say, Master.

17. JESUS said to her, Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father: But, go to my brethren, and say to them, I ascend to my Father and to your Father, and to my GOD and your GOD.

This last Verse was not touched.

IT is Easter-day abroad: And it is so in the Text. We keep Solomons rule, Verbum dei in die suo. For, all this (I have read) is nothing else, but a report of Christs rising, and of his appearing this Easter-day morning, his very first appearing of all. S. Mark is exprets for it, that Christ was no sooner risen this day, but, He appeared first of all to Mary Magdalen: which first appearing of Christ his, is here by S. John extended, and set down at large. 1 Reg. 8 59.

The summe of it is, 1. The seeking Christ dead. 2. The finding him alive.

The manner of it is, That Mary Magdalen staying still by the Sepulchre, first she saw a Vision of Angels: and after, she saw Christ himself. Saw Him, and was her self made an Angel by Him: a good a good Angel, to carry the Evangel, the first good and joyfull tidings of His rising again from the dead. And this was a great honour (as I considered) to serve in an Angels place. To do that at his resurrection (his second birth) that, at his first birth an Angel did. An Angel first published that; Mary Magdalen brought first notice of this. As he, to the Shepherds, so she, to the Apostles, the Pastors of Christs flock; by them to be spread abroad to the ends of the world.

To look a little into it. 1. Mary is the name of a woman: Mary Magdalen, of a sinfull woman.

That, to a woman first; it agreeth well, to make even with Eve; that, as by a woman came the first news of death; so, by a woman also might come the first notice of the Resurrection from the dead. And the place fits well: for, in a garden, they came, both.

That, to a sinfull woman first; that also agrees well. To her first, that most needed it: most needed it, and so first sought it. And it agrees well, he be first found of her, that first sought him: Even in that respect she was to be respected.

Hof. 2. 15.

Luke 7. 37.

In which two, there is opened unto us a gate of hope, two great leaves (as it were:) one, that no infirmity of sex, (for a woman we see:) the other, that no enormity of sin, (for a sinfull woman, one that had the blemish, that she went under the common name of peccatrix, as notorious and famous in that kind:) That, neither of these shall debar any to have their part in Christ, and in his Resurrection; any, that shall seek him in such sort, as she did. For, either of these non obstante, nay, notwithstanding both these, she had the happiness; To see his Angels, (and that was no small favour;) To see Christ himself: And that, first of all, before all others, to see and salute him: And, to receive a commission from him, of Vade & dic, to go and tell, (that is, as it were) to be an Apostle, and that to the Apostles themselves, to bring them the first good news of Christs rising again.

There are three Parties that take up the whole Text; and if I should divide it, I would make those three parties the three parts; 1. Mary Magdalen, 2. the Angels, 3. and Christ our Saviour.

I. Mary Magdalen begins her part in the first Verse, but she goes along thorow them all.

II. Then the Angels part in the two Verses next: 1. Their appearing, 2. and their speech to her. Appearing, in the twelfth; Speech, in the thirteenth.

III. And last, Christ part in all the rest. 1. His appearing, and Speech likewise. Appearing, first, unknown in the fourteenth, and his speech thence, in the fifteenth.

After, His appearing, and speech again, being known, in the sixteenth and seventeenth. 1. Forbidding her, mane & tange, to stay and to touch; 2. and bidding her, Vade & dic, to get her quickly to his brethren, and tell them. His Resurrection was past, for (ascendo) he was taking thought for his Ascension, and preparing for that. Thus lieth the order and the parts.

The use will be, that we, in our seeking, carry our selves as she did: and so may we have the happiness that she had, to find Christ, as he is now to be found in the vertue of his Resurrection.

V. R. XI.

But Mary stood by the Sepulchre, weeping: and as she wept, she stooped, and looked into the Sepulchre.

OF the favours vouchsafed this same felix peccatrix (as the Fathers term her) this day, 1. To see but Christs Angels, 2. To see Christ at all, 3. To see him first of all, 4. But more then all these, to be employed by him in so heavenly an errand; reason we can render none, that helped her to these, but that, which in a place Christ himself renders, Quia dilexit multum, because she loved much.

Luke 7. 47.

She loved much: We cannot say, She believed much. For, by her sustulerunt thrice repeated (the second, thirteenth, fifteenth Verses) it seems, she believed no more, then just as much as the High Priests would have had the world believe, that he was taken away by night.

Defectus fidei non est negandus, affectus amoris non est vituperandus: It is Origen. We cannot commend her faith; her love, we cannot but commend; and so do: Commend it in her, commend it to you. Much it was, and much good proof gave she of it. Before, to him living: now, to him dead. To him dead, there are divers: 1. She was last at his cross, and first at his grave: 2. Stayed longest there, was soonest here: 3. Could not rest, till she were up to seek him: 4. Sought him, while it was yet dark, before she had light to seek him by.

Mat. 18. 13.

But, to take her as we find her in the Text, and to look no whither else. There are, in the Text, no less then ten, all arguments of her great love; all, as it were a commentary upon Dilexit multum. And even in this first Verse there are five of them.

I.

The first in these words; stans juxta monumentum, that she stood by the grave. A place, where faint Love loves not to stand. Bring him to the grave, and lay him in the grave, and there leave him: but come no more attill, nor stand long by it. Stand by him, while he is alive; so did many stand, and go, and sit by him. But stans juxta monumentum, stand by him dead; Mary Magdalen she did it, and she only did it, and none but she. Amor stans juxta monumentum.

The next in these, Maria autem stabat. But Mary stood. In the autem, the but (that helps us to another.) But Mary stood, (that is as much to say, as) others did not, But, she did. Peter and John were there but even now. Thither they came; but not finding him, away they went. They went: But Mary went not, she stood still. Their going away commends her staying behind. To the grave she came before them, from the grave she went to tell them, to the grave she returns with them, at the grave she stays behind them, Fortior eam figebat affectus, saith Augustine, a stronger affection fixed her; so fixed her, that she had not the power to remove thence. Go who would, she would not, but stay still. To stay, while others do so, while company stays, that is the worlds love: But Peter is gone, and John too, all are gone, and we left alone; then to stay, is love, and constant Love. Amor manens, aliis recedentibus; Love, that when others shrink and give over, holds out still.

The third in these, she stood, and she wept: and, not a tear or two; but she wept a good (as we say;) that the Angels, that Christ himself pity her, and both of them, the first thing they do, they ask her, why she wept so? Both of them begin with that question. And, in this, is love. For, if, when Christ stood at Lazarus's graves side and wept, the Jews said, See how he loved him: may not we say the very same, when Mary stood at Christ's grave and wept: See how she loved him? Whose presence she wished for, his mis she wept for; whom she dearly loved, while she had him, she bitterly bewailed, when she lost him. Amor amare flens, Love running down the cheeks.

The fourth in these, And as she wept, she stooped, and looked in, ever and anon. That is, she did so weep, as she did seek withal. Weeping without seeking, is but to small purpose. But her weeping hindered not her seeking; her sorrow dulled not her diligence. And, diligence is a character of love, comes from the same root, dilectio and diligentia from diligo, both. Amor diligentiam diligens.

To seek, is one thing: not to give over seeking, is another. For I ask, why should she now look in? Peter and John had looked there before; nay, had been in the grave (they.) It makes no matter: she will not trust Peter's eyes, nor John's neither. But, she herself had before this, looked in (too.) No force, she will not trust her self, she will suspect her own eyes; she will rather think, she looked not well before, then leave off her looking. It is not enough for love, to look in once. Thus we use, this is our manner when we seek a thing seriously; where we have sought already, there to see again, thinking we did it not well; but, if we now look again better, we shall surely find it, then. Amor querens quærit: Love, that never thinks, it hath looked enough. These five.

And, by these five, we may take measure of our love, and of the true multum of it. Ut propter nobis ejus stare, ejus plorare, & querere (saith Origen) that her standing, her weeping, and seeking, we may take some good by them.

I doubt, ours will fall short. Stay by him alive, that we can, juxta mensam: but juxta monumentum, who takes up his standing there? And our love it is dry-eyed, it cannot weep: it is stiff joynted, it cannot stoop to seek. If it do, and we hit not on him at first, away we go, with Peter and John; we stay it not out with Mary Magdalen. A sign our love is little and light, and our seeking suitable, and so, it is without success. We find not Christ, no marvel: but seek him, as she sought him, and we shall speed, as she sped.

V E R. XII.

And saw two Angels, in white, sitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet where the Body of Jesus had lien.

For what came of this? Thus standing by it, and thus looking in, again and again, though she saw not Christ at first, she sees his Angels. For so it pleased Christ to come by degrees: His Angels before Him. And, it is no vulgar honour, this, to see but an Angel: what would one of us give to see but the like sight?

We are now at the Angels part. Their appearing, in this Verse. There are four points in it: 1. Their place, 2. Their habit, 3. Their sit, 4. and their order. 1. Place, in the grave; 2. Habit, in white; 3. Sit, they were sitting; 4. and their Order in sitting, one at the head, the other at the feet.

The Place, In the grave she saw them: and Angels in a grave, is a strange sight, a sight never seen before; not till Christ's body had been there, never till this day; this the first news of the Angels in that place. For, a grave is no place for Angels (one would think;) for worms rather. Blessed Angels, not but in a blessed place. But since Christ lay there, that place is blessed. There was a voice heard from heaven, Blessed be the dead: Precious the death, Glorious the memory now, of them that die in the Lord. And, even this, that the Angels disdained not now to come thither, and to sit there, is an auspicious of a great change to ensue in the state of that place. Quid gloriosius Angelo? quid vilis vermiculo? saith Augustine. Qui fuit vermiculorum locus, est & Angelorum. That which was the place for worms, is become a place for Angels.

Their Habit, In white. So were there divers of them, divers times, this day; seen, in white, all; in that colour. It seems to be their Easter-day colour; for at this Feast, they all do their service in it. Their Easter-day colour, for it is the colour of the Resurrection. The state wherof when Christ would represent upon the Mount, His raiment was all white, no Feller in the earth could come near it. And our colour it shall be, when rising again, we shall walk in white robes, and follow the Lamb whither soever he goeth.

Heaven mourned on Good-Friday; the Eclipse made all thei in black. Easter-day, it rejoiceth, Heaven and Angels, all in white. Solomon tells us, it is the colour of joy. And that is the state of joy, and this the day of the first joyfull tidings of it, with joy ever celebrated, even in albis, eight dayes together, by them that found Christ.

3. In white, and sitting: As the colour, of joy; so, the situation, of rest. So we say, Sit down, and rest. And so, is the grave made by this mornings works, a place of rest. Rest, not from our labours onely, so do the beasts rest when they die: But as it is in the XVI. Psalm, (a Psalm of the Resurrection) a rest in hope; hope, of rising again, the members in the vertue of their head, who this day is risen. So, to enter into the rest, which yet remaineth for the people of God, even the Sabbath eternal.
4. Sitting, and in this order sitting, at the head, one; at the feet, another, where his body had lien.
1. Which order may well refer to Christ himself, whose body was the true Ark indeed, In which it pleased the God-head to dwell bodily; and is therefore here between two Angels, as was the Ark (the type of it) between the two Cherubims.
2. May also refer to Mary Magdalen. She had anointed his head, She had anointed his feet: at these two places, sit the two Angels, as it were to acknowledge so much for her sake.
3. In mytery they refer it thus. Because Caput Christi Deus, the God-head is the head of Christ, and his feet (which the Serpent did bruise) his manhood; that either of these hath his Angel. That to Christ man, no less then to Christ God, the Angels do now their service. In principio erat verbum, his God-head; there, an Angel: Verbum caro factum, his man-hood; there, another. And let all the Angels of God worship him in both. Even in his man-hood, at his cradle (the head of it) a quire of Angels; at his grave (the feet of it) Angels likewise.

And lastly, for our comfort (thus.) That, henceforth even such shall our graves be, if we be so happy as to have our parts in the first Resurrection, which is of the soul from sin. We shall go to our graves in albis (in the comfort, and colour of hope) lie between two Angels, there: they guard our bodies dead, and present them alive again at the Resurrection.

1. Yet before we leave them, to learn somewhat of the Angels: specially, of the Angel that sat at the feet. That, between them there was no striving for places. He that sat at the feet, as well content with his place, as he that at the head. We, to be so, by their example. For, with us, both the Angels would have been at the head, never en one at the feet: with us, none would be at the feet by his good will; Head-Angels all.

2. Again, from them both. That, inasmuch, as the head ever stands for the beginning, and the feet for the end, that we be carefull, that our beginnings onely be not glorious, (O an Angel at the head in any wise;) but that we look to the feet, there be another there, too. Ne turpiter aurum desinat, that it end not in a black Angel, that began in a white. And this for the Angels appearing.

V E R. XIII.

And they said to her, Woman, why weepest thou? She said to them, They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

Their question Now to their speech. It was not a dumb shew, this, a bare apparition, and so vanished away. It was visio & vox, a vocal vision. Here is a Dialogue, too: The Angels speak to her.

And they ask her, Quid ploras? Why she wept? what cause she had to weep? They mean, she had none (as indeed, no more she had.) All was in error, pie lachryma, sed caeca, tears of grief, but false grief, imagining that to be that was not, Him to be dead, that was alive. She weeps, because she found the grave empty, which God forbid she should have found full, for then Christ must have been dead still, and so, no Resurrection.

And this case of Mary Magdalen is our case oftentimes. In the error of our conceit to weep, where we have no cause; to joy, where we have as little. Where we should, where we have cause to joy, we weep; and, where to weep, we joy. Our ploras hath never a quid. False joyes, and false sorrows, false hopes, and false fears, this life of ours is full of, God help us.

Now, because she erred, they ask her the cause, that she alledging it, they may take it away, and shew it to be no cause. As the elench, à non causâ, pro causâ, makes foul rule among us, beguiles us, all our life long.

Her answer. Will you hear her answer to, why weep you? Why? sustulerunt, that was the cause; her Lord was gone, was taken away.

1. And a good cause it had been, if it had been true. Any have cause to grieve, that have lost, lost a good Lord, so good and gracious a Lord, as he had been to her.

2. But that is not all: a worse matter, a greater grief then that. When one dieth, we reckon him taken away, that is one kind of taking away. But his dead body is left; so, all is not taken from us; That was not her case. For, in saying (her Lord) she means not, her Lord alive, that is not it: she means not, they had slain him, they had taken away his life, (she had wept her fill for that, already.) But, her Lord, that is, his dead body. For, though his life was gone, yet his body was left. And, that was all, she now had left of him, (that, she calls, Her Lord) and, that, they had taken away from her, too. A poor one it was, yet some comfort it was to her, to have even that left her, to visit, to anoint, to do other offices of love, even to that. Et in visâ cadavere redolebat mori, at the sight, even of that, will love revive, it will fetch life of love again. But now, here is her case; that, is gone, and all, and nothing, but an empty grave, now left to stand by. That S. Augustine saith well, sublatum de monumento, grieved her more, then occisus in ligno; for, then something yet was left; now, nothing at all. Right sustulerunt, taken away quite and clean.

And

And thirdly, her nescio ubi. For though he be taken away, it is some comfort yet, if we know where to fetch him again. But here he is gone without all hope of recovery, or getting again. For they (but she knew not who) had carried him (she knew not whither,) laid him (she knew not where,) there to do to him (she knew not what.) So that now she knew not, whither to go, to find any comfort. It was nescio ubi, with her right. Put all these together, His life taken away, his body taken away, and no man knows whither; and do they ask, why she wept? or, can any blame her for it?

The truth is, none had taken away her Lord, for all this: for, all this while her Lord was well, was, as she would have had him, alive and safe: He went away of himself, none carried him thence. What of that? Non credens suscitatum, credidit sublatum, for want of belief He was risen, she believed, He was carried away. She erred in so believing, there was error in her love, but there was love in her error too.

And give me leave to lay out three more arguments of her love, out of this Verse. (to make up eight, towards the making up of her multum.)

The very title she gives him, of Dominum meum, is one, My Lord, that she gives him that term. For it shews, her love and respect was no whit abated, by the scandal of his death. It was a most opprobrious, ignominious, shamefull death he suffered; such, as in the eyes of the world, many would have been ashamed to own him (or say of him, meum;) but, any would have been afraid to honour him with that title, to stile him, Dominum. She was neither. Meum, for hers; Dominum meum, for her Lord she acknowledgeth him, is neither ashamed nor afraid to continue that title still. Amor scandalo non scandalizatus.

Another (which I take to be far beyond this) That, she having looked into the grave a little before, and seen never an Angel there; and of a sudden looking in now, and seeing two, (a sight able to have amazed any; any, but her) It moves not her at all. The suddenness, the strangeness, the gloriousness of the sight, yea, even of Angels, move her not at all. She seems to have no sense of it; and so to be in a kind of extasie all the while. Domine, propter te est extra se, saith Bernard. Amor extasin patiens.

And thirdly, as that strange sight affected her not a whit: so neither did their comfortable speech work with her at all. Comfortable, I call it; for they that ask the cause, why, (why weep you?) shew, they would remove it, if it lay in them. Neither of these did, or could move her, or make her once leave her weeping: she wept on still, (Christ will ask her, quid ploras? by and by again.) If she find an Angel, if she find not her Lord, it will not serve. She had rather find his dead body, then them in all their glory. No man in earth, no Angel in heaven can comfort her, none but he that is taken away, Christ, and none but Christ; and till she find him again, her soul refuseth all manner comfort: yea, even from Heaven, even from the Angels themselves. These three. Amor super amissum conatus consolari.

Thus she, in her love, for her supposed loss, or taking away. And what shall become of us in ours then? That lose him, 1. not once, but oft; 2. And not in suppose, as she did, but in very deed; 3. And that, by sin, (the worst loss of all;) 4. And that, not by any others taking away, but by our own act, and wilfull default; and are not grieved, nay, not moved a whit, break none of our wonted sports for it, as if we reckoned him, as good lost, as found. Yea, when Christ, and the Holy Ghost, and the favour of God, and all is gone, how soon, how easily are we comforted again for all this? that none shall need to say, quid ploras? to us; rather, quid non ploras? ask us, why we weep not, having so good a cause to do it, as we then have? This for the Angels part.

V B R. XIV.

When she had thus said, she turned her self about, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

Always the Angels (we see) touched the right string, and she tells them the wrong cause, but yet the right, if it had been right.

Now, to this answer of hers, they would have replied, and taken away her error touching her Lord's taking away; that if she knew all, she would have left her seeking, and set her down by them: and left her weeping; and been in white as well as they.

But, here is a Supersedeas to them: The Lord himself comes in place. (Now come we from the seeking him dead, to the finding him alive.) For, when he saw, no Angels, no sight, no speech of theirs would serve, none but her Lord could give her any comfort, her Lord comes. Christus adest.

Adest Christus, nec ab eis unquam abest, a quibus queritur, saith Saint Augustine, Christ is found, found by her; And this case of hers, shall be the case of all that seriously seek him. This woman here, for one, she sought him (we see.) They that went to Emmaus to day; they but talked of him sadly, and they both found him. Why, He is found of them that seek him not. Esay 65. 1. but of them that seek him, never but found. For, thou Lord never failest them that seek thee, Psalms 9. 10. God is not unrighteous, to forget the work and labour of their love that seek him. Heb. 6. 10.

So, find him they shall, but haply not all so fully at first, no more then she did. For, first (to try her yet a little further) He comes unknown, stands by her, and she little thought it had been he.

A case that likewise falls out full oft. Doubtless he is not far from every one of us, saith the Apostle to the Athenians. But he is nearer us many times then we think; even hard by us, and we not aware of it, Job 9. 11. saith Job. And, O si cognovisses & tu, O if we did know (and it standeth us in hand to pray that we may know) when he is so, for, that is the time of our visitation.

S. John saith here, the Angels were sitting: S. Luke saith, they stood, Luke 24. 4. They are thus reconciled. That Christ coming in presence, the Angels which before were sitting, stood up. Their standing up, made made Mary Magdalen turn her to see who it was they rose to. And so Christ she saw, but knew him not. Not onely not knew him, but mis-knew him, took him for the Gardiner. Tears will dim the sight, and it was yet scarce day, and she, seeing one, and not knowing what any one should make in the ground so early, but he that dressed it, the might well mistake. But it was more then so: Her eyes were not holden onely, that she did not know him, but over and beside, He did appear ἀντὶ προσώπου, in some such shape as might resemble the Gardiner, whom she took him for.

Luk. 24. 16.
Mark. 16. 12.

Proper enough it was, it fitted well the time and place (this person.) The time, It was the Spring: the place, It was a Garden (that place is most in request at that time) for that place and time, a Gardiner doth well.

Of which her so taking him, S. Gregory saith well, Profecto errando non erravit. She did not mistake in taking him for a Gardiner: though she might seem to err in some sense, yet in some other she was in the right. For, in a sense, and a good sense, Christ may well be said to be a Gardiner, and indeed is one. For, our rule is, Christ, as he appears, so he is ever: No false semblant in him.

1. A Gardiner he is then. The first, the fairest Garden that ever was (Paradise) He was the Gardiner, it was of his planting. So a Gardiner.

2. And ever since it is he that (as God) makes all our Gardens green, sends us yearly the Spring, and all the herbs and flowers we then gather; and neither Paul with his planting, nor Apollo with his watering, could do any good without him. So a Gardiner in that sense.

Jerem. 31. 11.

3. But not in that alone; but he it is that gardens our souls too, and makes them, as the Prophet saith, Like a well watered Garden, weeds out of them whatsoever is noisome or unsavoury, sows and plants them with true roots and seeds of righteounesse, waters them with the dew of his grace, and makes them bring forth fruit to eternal life.

But it is none of all these, but besides all these, nay, over and above all these, this day (if ever) most properly he was a Gardiner. Was one, and so after a more peculiar manner, might take this likeness on him. Christ rising was indeed a Gardiner, and that a strange one, who made such an herb grow out of the ground this day, as the like was never seen before, a dead body, to shoot forth alive out of the grave.

I ask, was he so this day alone? No, but this profession of his, this day begun, he will follow to the end. For, He it is, that by the vertue of this mornings act, shall garden our bodies, too: turn all our graves into garden-plots: Yea, and shall one day turn land and sea, and all into a great Garden; and so husband them, as they shall in due time bring forth live bodies, even all our bodies alive again.

Long before did Esay see this and sing of it, in his song, Isai. 26. 19. resembling the Resurrection to a Spring-garden. Awake and sing (saith he) ye that dwell for a time are as it were sown in the dust, for his dew shall be as the dew of Herbs, and the earth shall shoot forth her dead. So then: He appeared no other, then he was: A Gardiner he was, not in shew alone, but opere & veritate, and so came in his own likeness. This for *Christ*s appearing. Now to his speech, (but, as unknown still.)

V. R. XV.

Jesus saith to her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She (supposing he had been the Gardiner) said to him, Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him thence.

*Christ*s question unknown.
Augustine.

Still she weeps: So he begins with quid ploras? asks the same question the Angels had before; onely quickens it a little with Quem queris? Whom seek you? So quem queris, queris a te quem queris, whom she sought, he asks her whom she sought? Si queris, cur non cognoscis? si cognoscis, cur queris? saith Augustine. If she seek him, why knows she him not? If she know him, why seeks she him still? A common thing with us (this also,) to seek a thing, and when we have found it, not to know, we have so; but even Christum a Christo querere, to ask Christ for Christ. Which however it fall in other matters, in this seeking of Christ, it is safe. Even when we seek Christ, to pray to Christ, to help us to find Christ; we shall do it full evil without him.

This quid ploras? it comes now twice. The Angels asked it, we stood not on it then. Now, seeing Christ asks it again, the second time, we will think there is something in it, and stay a little at it. Thereafter, for that it is the very opening of his mouth, the very first words that ever came from him, that he spake first of all, after his rising again from death. There is sure some more then ordinary matter in this quid ploras? if it be, but even for that.

1 Thel. 4. 13.

Thus say the Fathers; 1. That Mary Magdalen standing by the graves side, and there weeping, is thus brought in, to represent unto us, the state of all mankind before this day, the day of *Christ*s rising again, Weeping over the dead, as do the Heathen that have no hope: comes Christ with his quid ploras? why do ye weep? As much to say, as ne ploras, weep not, why should you weep? There is no cause of weeping now. Henceforth none shall need to stand by the grave to weep there any more. A question very proper for Easter-day, for the day of the Resurrection. For, if there be a rising again, quid ploras? is it right, why should she, why should any weep then?

So that this quid ploras of Christ, wipes away tears from all eyes, and as we sing in the thirtieth Psalme (whose title is, the Psalme of the Resurrection) puts off our sackcloth, that is our mourning weeds, girds us with gladness, puts us all in white with the Angels.

Ploras then, leave that for Good-Friday, for his Passion: Weep then and spare not. But, quid ploras? for Easter-day, is in kind (the Feast of the Resurrection) why should there be any weeping upon it? Is not Christ

Christ risen? shall not he raise us with him? Is he not a Gardiner, to make our bodies sown to grow again? Ploras, leave that to the Heathen, that are without hope; but to the Christian man, quid ploras? why should he weep? he hath hopes; the Head is already risen, the members shall in their due time follow him.

I observe, that four times this day, at four several appearings, 1. at the first (at this here) He asked her, quid ploras? Why she wept? 2. Of them that went to Emmatus, quid tristes estis? Why are ye sad? Luke 24. 17. 3. Within a Verse following (the nineteenth) he saith to the eleven, Pax vobis, Peace be to them. 4. And to the women that met him on the way, gaude, that is, Rejoyce, be glad. So, no weeping, no being sad: Matt. 28. 9 now nothing this day, but peace and joy: they do properly belong to this Feast.

And, this I note the more willingly, now this year; because the last Easter we could not so well have noted it. Some wept then; all were sad, little joy there was, and there was a quid, a good cause for it. But blessed be God that hath now sent us a more kindly Easter, of this; by taking away the cause of our sorrow then, that we may preach of Quid ploras? and be far from it. So much for quid ploras? Christ's question. Now to her answer.

She is still where she wts; at sustulerunt before, at sustulisti, now: si tu sustulisti: we shall never get that word from her. Her answer.

But, to Christ she seems somewhat more harsh, then to the Angels. To them she complains of others, They have taken: Christ she seems to charge, at least to suspect of the fact, as if he looked like one that had been a breaker up of graves, a carrier away of Corpses out of their place of rest. Her (if) implies as much. But pardon love: As it fears where it needs not, so it suspects oft, where it hath no cause. He, or any that comes in our way, hath done it, hath taken him away, when love is at a loss. But Bernard speaks to Christ for her; Domine, amor quem habebat in Te, & dolor quem habebat de Te, excusasti eam apud Te, si forte erravit, circa Te: That the love she bare to him, the sorrow she had for him, may excuse her with him, if she were in any error concerning him, in her saying, Si tu sustulisti.

And yet, see how God shall direct the tongue! In thus charging him, Prophetas & nescit, she says truer then she was aware. For indeed, if any took him away, it was he did it. So, she was not much amiss. Her si tu, was true, though not in her sense. For, quod de ipso factum est, ipse fecit. All that was done to him, he did it himself. His taking away, virtus fuit, non facinus, was by his own power, not by the act of any other: Et gloria non injuria; No other man's injury it was, but his own glory, that she found him not there. This was true, but her meaning.

Origen.

Chrysologus.

I cannot here pass over two more Characters of her love, that so you may have the full ten I promised. One, in si tu sustulisti Eum, in her Eum, in her [Him] Him? Which Him? Her affections seem so to transport her, as she says no man knows what. To one a meer stranger to her, and she to him, she talks of one thrice under the term of Him, If thou hast taken Him away, tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will fetch Him: Him, Him, and Him, and never names him, or tells who he is. This is Solacismus amoris, an irregular speech, but loves own dialect. Him, is enough with love; who knows not who that is? It supposes every body, all the world bound to take notice of him whom we look for, onely by saying, Him; though we never tell his name, nor say a word more, Amor quem ipse cogitat, neminem prius ignorare.

The other is in her Ego tollam; If he would tell her where he had laid him, she would go fetch him, (that she would.) Alas poor woman, she was not able to lift him. There are more then one or two either, allowed to the carrying of a corps.

As for Him, it had more then an hundred pound weight of Myrrhe and other odours upon it, beside the poise of a dead body. She could not do it. Well, yet she would do it, though. O mulier, non mulier (saith Origen) for ego tollam seems rather the speech of a Porter, or of some huffy strong fellow at least, then of a silly weak woman. But love makes women more then women, at least it makes them have the courage above the strength, far. Never measures her own forces, no burden too heavy, no assay too hard for love, Et nihil erubescit nisi nomen difficultatis; and is not ashamed of any thing, but that any thing should be too hard or too heavy for it. Affectus sine mensura virum propriarum. Both these argue dilexit multum. And so now, you have the full number of ten.

John 9. 39.

V. XVI.

Jesus saith to her, Mary: She turned her self, and said to him, Rabboni; that is to say, Master.

Now magnes amoris amor. Nothing so assures, so draws love to it, as doth love it self. In Christ spectally, and in such, in whom the same mind is. For, when her Lord saw, there was no taking away his self king away from her, all was in vain, neither men, nor Angels, nor Himself (so long as he kept himself Gardiner) could get any thing of her, but her Lord was gone, he was taken away; and that for the want of Jesus, nothing but Jesus could yield her any comfort: He is no longer able to contain, but even discloses himself; and discloses himself by his voice.

For, it should seem, before, with his shape, he had changed that also. But now, he speaks to her in his known voice, in the wonted accent of it, does not name her name, Mary, no more, and that was enough. That was as much to say, Recognosce a quo recognosceris, she would at least take notice of him, that shewed he was no stranger, by calling her by her name. For, whom we call by their names, we take particular notice of. So God says to Moses, Te autem cognovi de nomine, Thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name. As God, Moses; So Christ, Mary Magdalen.

Augustine.

Exod. 33. 17.

And this indeed is the right way to know Christ; to be known of him first. Gal. 4. 9. the Apostle saith, Now

Now we have known God (and then correcteth himself) or rather have been known of God. For, till he know us, she shall never know him aright.

And now, lo, Christ is found; found alive that was sought dead. A cloud may be so thick, we shall not see the Sun thorow it. The Sun must scatter that cloud, and then we may. Here is an example of it. It is strange, a thick cloud of heaviness had so covered her, as, see him she could not, thorow it: this one word, these two syllables [Mary] from his mouth, scatters it all. No sooner had his voice sounded in her ears, but it drives away all the mist, dries up her tears, lightens her eyes, that she knew him straight, and answers him with her wonted salutation, Rabboni, If it had lien in her power to have raised him from the dead, she would not have failed, but done it (I dare say.) Now, it is done to her hands.

And with this all is turned out and in. A new world, now. Away with sustulerunt; his taking away, is taken away quite. For, if his taking away were her sorrow; Contrariorum contraria consequentia. Si de sublato ploravit, de suscitato exultavit, we may be sure: If sad for his death, for his taking away; then glad for his rising, for his restoring again. Surely, if she would have been glad but to have found but his dead body; now she finds it, and him, alive, what was her joy; how great may we think? so that by this she saw, Quid ploras was not asked her for nought, that it was no impertinent question, as it fell out. Well now, he that was thought lost, is found again: and found, not, as he was sought for, not a dead body, but a living soul; nay, a quickning spirit, then. And that might Mary Magdalen well say. He shewed it, for he quickned her and her spirits, that were as good as dead. You thought you should have come to Christ's Resurrection to day, and so you do. But not to his alone, but even to Mary Magdalens resurrection, too. For, in very deed, a kind of resurrection it was, was wrought in her; revived, as it were, and raised from a dead and drooping, to a lively and chearfull estate. The Gardiner had done his part, made her all green on the sudden.

And all this, by a word of his mouth. Such power is there in every word of his; so easily are they called, whom Christ will but speak to.

But, by this we see, when he would be made known to her after his rising, he did choose to be made known by the ear rather then by the eye. By hearing, rather then by appearing. Opens her ears first, and her eyes after. Her eyes were holden, till her ears were opened; comes aures autem aperuisti mihi, and opens them.

With the Philosophers, hearing is the sense of wisdom. With us, in Divinity, it is the sense of faith. So, most meet. Christ is the Word, hearing then (that sense) is Christ's sense; voce quam visu, more proper to the Word. So, sicut audivimus goes before, and then, sic vidimus comes after. In matters of faith, the ear goes first, ever, and is of more use, and to be trusted before the eye. For, in many cases faith holdeth, where sight faileth.

This then is a good way to come to the knowledge of Christ, by Hodie si vocem, to hear his voice. Howbeit, it is not the onely way; There is another way to take notice of him by, besides, and we to take notice of it. On this very day we have them both.

For twice this day came Christ; unknown first, and then known, after. To Mary Magdalen, here; and to them at Emmans. Luc. Chapter 24. To Mary Magdalen unknown, in the shape of a Gardiner. To those that went to Emmans unknown, in the likeness of a Traveller by the way-side. Come to be known to her by his voice, by the word of his mouth: Not so to them; for many words he spake to them, and they felt them warm at their hearts, but, knew him not for all that: But He was known to them in the breaking of the bread. Her eyes opened by speaking a word: their eyes opened by the breaking of bread. There is the one and the other way, and so now you have both. And now you have them, I pray you make use of them. (I see, I shall not be able to go further then this Verse.)

It were a folly to fall to comparisons, committere inter se, to set them at odds together, these two ways: as the fond fashion now adays is, whether is better, Prayer, or Preaching the Word, or the Sacraments. What needs this? Seeing we have both, both are ready for us; the one now, the other by and by. We may end this question soon. And this is the best and surest way to end it, to esteem of them both, to thank him for both, to make use of both; having now done with one, to make trial of the other. It may be (who knows) if the one will not work, the other may. And if by the one, or by the other, by either, if it be wrought, what harm have we? In case it be not, yet have we offered to God our service in both, and committed the success of both to him. He will see they shall have success, and in his good time (as shall be expedient for us) vouchsafe every one of us, as he did Mary Magdalen in the Text, to know him, and the virtue of his Resurrection; and make us partakers of both, by both the means before remembered, by his blessed Word, by his holy Mysteries; the means to raise our souls here, the pledges of the raising up of our bodies hereafter. Of both vvhich he make us partakers, vvhich is the Author of both, Jesus Christ the Righteous, &c.

AT

WHITE-HALL,

On the First of April, being Easter-Day.

An. Dom. 1621.

JOHN Chap. XX. Ver. XVII.

Dicit ei Jesus, Noli me tangere.

JESUS saith unto her, Touch me not.

MARY Magdalen, because she loved much, and gave divers good proofs of it, had this morning divers favours vouchsafed her: To see a vision of Angels: To see Christ himself; to see him before any other, first of all: He spake to her, Mary; she spake to him, Rabboni: Hitherto all was well. Now, here, after all this love, after all these favours, even in the neck of them (as it were) comes an unkind word or two, a Noli me tangere, and mays all; turns all out and in. Make the best of it, a repulse it is: but a cold salutation for an Easter-day morning.

Ver. 13.
Ver. 14.
Ver. 16.

A little before he asked, Why she wept. This is enough to set her on weeping afresh. For, if she wept for sustulerunt Dominum, that others had taken away her Lord: Much more, now, when her Lord takes away himself from her, that she may not so much as touch him.

We observed, that (this morning) Christ came in two shapes, and at either of them spake a speech. At first, he came unknown, taken for a Gardiner: the latter he spake in his own voice, and became known to her. I know not how; but, unknown, Christ proves better to her, then when he came to be known: better for her, he had kept himself unknown still. For, then unknown, he asked her kindly, why she wept? as much to say as, Weep not, Noli te angere, noli me plangere: there is some comfort in that. But known, he grows somewhat strange on the sudden, and asks her, what she means to come so near him, or offer to touch him; which must needs be much to her discomfort, to be forbidden, once to come near or touch her Saviour: and to be forbidden by his own mouth.

But there is a good use of Noli me plangere, and Noli me tangere, both. One, we have touched already: of the other, now. One would little think it, but they fort well: Quid ploras? and Noli me tangere. Quid ploras? To rejoyce at his rising: Noli me tangere, to do it with reverence. They amount to exultation in tremore.

Ver. 19.

Psalm 2. 11.

The

The Division.

The Verse of it self falls into two parts. We may divide it (as the Jews do the Law) into Do not, and Do: somewhat forbidden there is, and somewhat bidden. Forbidden, do not, not touch me: Bidden, but do, Go your wayes and tell. The forbidding part stands of two points: 1. a Restraint; and 2. a Reason.

I.
II.

1. The Restraint in these: Noli me tangere, &c. 2. The Reason in these: Nondum enim, &c. For I am not yet ascended, &c.

The Bidding part, of three, 1. A Mission or Commission, to go do a message, Vade & dic. 2. The parties to whom: to my Brethren, that is, to his Disciples. 3. The Message it self; I ascend to my Father, &c. And this latter is, as it were an amends for the former: That the Text is somewhat like the time of the year; the morning somewhat fresh, but a fair day after: Noli me tangere, the Repulse is the sharp morning; Vade & dic, the welcome Message, the fair day (we spake of) that makes all well again.

Either of these will serve for a Sermon, the former Noli me tangere, &c. it is so full of difficulties: but withal, of good and needfull caution. The latter of the Message, it is so fraught with high Mysteries, and beside, with much heavenly comfort. They call it Mary Magdalens Gospel: (for glad tidings it contains; and what is the Gospel else?) The first Gospel or glad tidings after Christs Resurrection. The very Gospel of the Gospel it self, and a Compendium of all the four. Of which (if God will) at some other time. Now, I will trouble you no further, but with Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to the Father.

I.
The Restraint,
Noli me tangere.

N O sooner had Christs voice sounded in her ears, but she knew straight Rabboni, it was He; and withal (as it may be gathered by this Noli me, &c.) she did that which amounted to a Volo Te tangere: that is, she made toward him, stretched forth her hand, and offered, would have touched him; but for this, Touch me not. Touch not? why not? What harm had there been, if he had suffered her to touch him? The speech is strange to be spoken either by Him, or to her: the reason, the For, yet more strange: Many difficulties in both, God send us well through them. There be but three words, 1. Noli, 2. me, and 3. tangere; touch, at which of these three you will, tangere; noli, and me, the two parties: Me, Him, Christ; Noli, her, Mary Magdalen: you will find somewhat strange this speech of his.

I.
Tangere, the thing forbidden.
Matth. 9. 11.

Tangere, the thing. Not touch? Why, it is nothing, to touch; and because it is nothing, might have been yielded to. And yet to touch Christ, is not nothing. Many desired, yea, strove, to touch him: there went virtue from him, even while he was mortal: But now he is immortal, by all likelihood, much more. That was not her case; to draw ought from him: it was for pure love, and nothing else, she desired it. To love, it is not enough, to hear, or see; it is carried further, to touch and take hold: It is affectus unionis; and the nearest union is per contactum.

The parties.M tk 14. 3.
Mark 16. 1.

Secondly, the Parties. Me: not Me, not Christ. Why not Him? Christ was not wont to be so dainty of it. Divers times, in divers places, he suffered the rude multitude to throng and to thrust him. What speak we of that? when, not three days since, he suffered other manner of touches and twitches both. Then, Noli me tangere would have come in good time; would have done well on Good-Friday. Why suffered he them then? why suffered he not her, now? She (I dare say for her) would have done him no hurt, she. Noli, is to her: Not (he: Not Mary Magdalen. She had touched him before now; touched his head, touched his feet; anointed them both; What was done, she might not, now? She hath even now, this morning, brought odours in her hand to embalm him: and with these, and with no other hands, doth she offer to touch him at this time: She might have been born with. It was early: as early as it was, she had this morning given many good proofs of her love. 1. That she was so early up; 2. came to the Grave first; 3. stayed there last; 4. had been at such cost; 5. had taken such pains; 6. had wept so many tears; 7. would not be comforted, no not by Angels, till she had found him; and now she hath found him, not to touch him? All these might have pleaded for as much as this comes to. For all these, one poor touch had been but an easie recompence. Of all other, this prohibition lay not against her: of all times, not at this. The more we look into it, the further off we find it, to be spoken, either by him, or to her.

II.
The Reason.

But if we go further, and look the Reason, we shall find it yet more strange: it will increase the doubt. Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended: What a reason is this? As who should say: when he was ascended, she should, then. But, then when he was ascended, one would think, she should be further off, then now. Si stans in terra tam propè non tangitur, receptus in celum quomodo tangitur? If standing on earth by him, he is not to be touched; when he is taken up into heaven, no arm will then reach him: past touching, then: that if not till then, never. The reason makes it yet further from reason. No remedy, but we must pray a consultation (as they call it) upon this Prohibition.

It cannot be denied, but for Noli me, there is a time and place. It is worth the noting: the world began with a Noli me tangere; both the worlds. The old world: the first words (in a manner) God spake then, were a kind of a Noli me tangere; Touch not the forbidden fruit. And as in the old; so here at the beginning this new, (for with Christs rising, began the New creature) it is Christs first speech, we see. Christ rising, it is his first precept: His first Law is negative; it is the first thing he forbiddeth us, the first he thought good to warn us of. Of his first words, we will have a special care, I trust. The rule is, Things Things that will hurt us, best not touch. Best, not touch? nay, sound and good was Arsenius the Eremita his advice touching those: Impera Eva & cave Serpentem, & tutus eris: Tutior autem, si arborem non aspexeris. Can you command Eve, can you so? and can you beware the Serpent? well: do so then, and you shall be safe: But (hear you) Tutior, you shall be yet more safe, if you see not, look not upon, come not within the reach; nay, not within the sight of the forbidden tree. But Christ is not the forbidden tree: John 11. 25. the tree of life rather; to be touched and tasted, that we may live by him. No place in Christ for a Noli me tangere.

Of those that hurt us, some we have no sense of at the first. Such are all things unlawfull and forbidden: which, though for the time they seem pleasant, yet they have their stings in their tail: sooner or later, we shall find, they will hurt us; any fruit of the forbidden tree.

Other things we feel hurt us, we forbear easily. An angry inflammation there is, the name of it is a Noli Verse 27. me tangere; and not that onely, but any bile or sore endures not the touching. What? had Christ any sore place about him, since his passion? No: For, Saint Thomas put his finger, nay, his whole hand into the place of his wounds, and put him to no pain at all. No place in Christ for this Noli me tangere, neither.

Not to hold you longer: Noli me tangere can rise but one of these ways: Either out of 1. Noli; or 2. out of Me: Ex parte tacti, or Ex parte tangentis; his that was touched, or hers that did touch him. Not on Christ 1. Touch me not, you will hurt me, I am sore; Ex parte tacti: 2. or, Touch me not, I shall hurt you; I am hot or sharp; Ex parte tangentis: Fire, I shall scorch you: an edge-tool, I shall wound you: Pitch, I shall defile you: some contagious thing, I shall infect you. Every one of these cries, Noli me tangere. But neither of these hath place in Christ. Christ rising, was not now in state, to receive any hurt; and neither now, nor ever in case to do any; to prick or to burn the fingers of any that touch him.

Wherefore then; it was not on Christ's part, this Touch me not. It should then more properly have been Nolo me tangi: But it is, Noli me tangere, and so on hers. No let in him, but he might be touched: the let, in her; she might not touch him. That it was never Christ's meaning, after he was risen, he would not be touched of any at all, it is evident. This very day, at even, appearing to the eleven, he not onely suffered, but invited them to touch him; nay more, Palpate Me, which is, touch Me thoroughly. This Luke 24. 39. very Chapter, at the XXVII. verse, he calls to Saint Thomas, Infer digitum, put in your finger: Nay, Affer manum, hand and all: which is to touch, and touch home (I am sure.)

How then? would he have Men touch him, and not Women? nor that, neither. This is his first appearing: at his second, and next to this, certain Women met him on the way: He suffered them to touch him, and take him by the feet. Some virtuous woman it may be: But Mary Magdalen had been a notorious sinner, and so unworthy of it. No, nor that, of the women that so met him, and so touched him, she was one. See Matth. 28. Mary Magdalen touch, and Mary Magdalen not touch? the difficulties grow still. For I ask: if at the second appearing, why not at the first? Why after, and not now? Why, there, touch and spare not; and here, Noli me tangere, not come thither.

Let me tell you what we have gained: These three things. 1. The Prohibition is not real: the touch, the thing is not forbidden: it is but personal. 2. Nay, not personal, neither absolutely; nor she simply, but not she, as now at this time. She might touch, (it seems) for she did, not long after. Mary Magdalen might: but not this Mary Magdalen. 3. And last, that it is not final; there is life, there is hope in it. Not, never to touch; but not, Stando in his terminis, standing in the terms she doth. What terms are those? And now (lo) we are come to the point, to that we search for.

Three senses I will give you, and they have great Authors, all three; Chrysostome, Gregory, Augustine. I will touch them all three; and you may take your choice of them; or, if you please, take them all: for, they will stand well together.

One is (it is Chrysostomes) That, all was not well; somewhat amiss; the something to blame in the manner of her offer, which was not all as it should. The most we can make, she failed in somewhat. Not, that she did it in any immodest or undecent manner: God forbid: never think of that. But onely a little too forward, it may be: not with that due respect that was meet.

We see by that is past, how the world went. Christ said, Mary: She answers him with her wonted term, with a Rabboni. And as she saluted him with her wonted term, so after her wonted fashion, she made toward him, to have touched him: not in such manner, as was fit to have been observed; nor with that regard, which his new glorified estate after his resurrection, might seem justly to require. It is in Me: not the same Me, he was. That that was enough to Christ, a few dayes ago, was nothing near enough, to day, for him. He that three dayes since endured so much, the day is now come, He will be touched after another fashion: Propter hoc exaltavit Eum Deus, For, to this end God so highly exalted Him. I tell you plainly, I did not like her Rabboni: it was no Easter-day-salutation, it would have been some better term expressing more reverence. So, her offer would have been in some more respective manner; her touch no Easter-day touch; her tangere had a tang in it (as we say.) The touch-stone of our touching Christ, is, with all regard and reverence that may be: Bring hers to this, and her touch was not the right touch; and all, for want of expressing more regard; not, for want of toto, but tanto: not, of reverence at all; but of reverence enough.

Two causes they give of this fail. One, a defect in her judgment: The other, an excess in her affection. Her amiss in the manner, grew out of her amiss in the mind; a misconception, he had been but even Rabboni still. As it should seem, it seemeth to her, it was with him no otherwise, then with her brother Lazarus: that Christ had risen idem qui prius, neither more nor less, but just the same, he was before.

But on Mary Magdalen.

Luke 24. 39.

Matth. 28. 9.
Luke 7. 47.

To correct her want of due reverence: 3. Chrysostom's senses.

Phil. 2. 9.

To be saluted, approached, *touch*ed, as formerly he had been. Formerly, he might have been *touch*ed: She thought, he might have been even so still. Whereas, with him, the case was quite altered: He is risen in a far other condition then so. His corruptible had now put on incorruption; and his mortal, immortality. He died in weakness and dishonour: Rose again in power and glory. And, as in another state, so to another end: Not to stay upon earth, or converse here any longer, but to ascend up into heaven. There was no ascendi in her mind.

His reason imports as much. You touch Me, not as if I were upon ascending; but, as if to stay here still. For, in saying, I am not yet; his meaning is, ere long, he should. Nondum ascendi, yet I am not: but ascendo, presently I am to do it; to leave this world, and all here beneath, and to go up and take possession of my Kingdome of Glory. To this new glorious condition of his, there belonged more then Rabboni; another manner approach then more solito. He being so very highly exalted, and far otherwife then he was, her access to have been according: Not being so, it made her unmeet to touch him, now. Nay, if you be but at Rabboni, and make toward Me in no other sort then thus, Noli me tangere, Touch me not.

Hence we learn, that when he sees, we forget our selves, Christ will take a little state upon him; will not be saluted with Rabboni, but with some more seemly term. Saint Thomas his, My Lord, and my God, a better far then Rabboni. Nor be approached to, after the old accustomed fashion, but with some more seemly respect, sicut decet sanctos. They that so pres to touch him, and besomewhat too homely with him, they are in Mary Magdalens case: Her Noli me tangere, touches them home. And their punishment shall be, that touch him they shall not.

It is no excuse to say, all was out of love: Never lay it upon that. Love, Christ loves well: but, love, if it be right, is παιδεία, nihil facit perperam (saith the Apostle) in αγνωση, doth nothing uncomely, keeps decorum; forgets not what belongs to duty, and decency; carries it self accordingly. And such love Christ loves. Otherwife, Love may, and doth forget it self other-while: and then, in that case, the Heathen mans saying is true, Importunus amor parum distat a similitate: such love is not love. A strange kind of love, when, for very love to Christ, we care not how we use him, or carry our selves towards him. Which being her case, she heard, and heard justly, Noli me tangere: you are not now in case, till you shall have learned to touch after a more regardfull fashion.

Mark 9. 6.

This may truly be said: she was not, before, so carried away with sorrow (that Passion;) but she was now as far gone in the other of joy: and so like enough to forget her self, in offering to touch him no otherwise then heri and nudius tertius, as two or three dayes ago she might have done. S. Peters case in the Mount, was just her case here: He knew not what he said, nor she, what she did: so surprised with the sudden joy, as she had no leisure to recollect her self, and to weigh the wonderfull great change, this day wrought in him.

Muth. 28. 9.

Out of which, our lesson is, that in the sudden surprize of any passion, Christus non est tangibilis, no touching Christ then. But, when the passion is over, and we come to our selves, it will be with us, as with her judgement calmed; her judgement settled better, then now on the sudden it was (as it seemed) she will be then fit, and then she may be admitted: and so, she was, and did touch him: but, that time, when she did so touch him, she was upon her knees, down at his feet, another manner of gesture, then here she offered.

1 Johh 1. 1.

Say, she were unfit, yet hangs there a cloud still: all is not clear. For, why then did others touch, to our seeming as unfit as she? Thomas with his faith in his fingers ends? The rest, in whose teeth he cast their unbelief and hardness of heart, they *touch*ed him at first: why not she, as well as they? They were unfit, I grant; but their unfitness grew ex alio capite, another way, then did hers. They believed not, were in doubt; thought, he had been but a ghost. To rid them of that doubt, that they might be sure it was he, and be able to say another day, Which our hands have handled of the Word of life; they were suffered to touch him. Touching was the proper cure for their disease: So, was it not, for hers. She never doubted a whit; was sure, he whose voice she heard, was Rabboni. She had no need to be confirmed in that. Her disease grew another way. Not from want of faith; of fear, rather: from want of due regard. To touch would not have cured her disease, but made it worse. So, they *touch*ed, because they believed not: she *touch*ed not, because she mis-believed; believed not of him aright. They *touch*ed, that they might know, he was risen: She *touch*ed not, that she might know, he was not so risen, as she wrongly imagined, that is, as in former times, she had known him.

Levit. 13. 45.

Esay 65. 5.

Out of that hath been spoken, we learn; That they be not so well advised, who, if they hear one speak of Noli me tangere, imagine straight, it must needs be meant of a bile, ulcer, or some dangerous sore. Every Noli me tangere is not so: Christ's here is not so. Learn here, there doth to Excellency belong a Noli me tangere, inducing reverence; no less then to biles or sores procuring indolency. Touch me not, come not near me, I am unclean (saith the Leper.) Stand back, touch not my skirts, I am holier then you, (saith one, Esay 65.) that is, Touch me not, I am so pure and clean; as if to his excellent holiness there belongeth this priviledge, *not to be touch*ed.

Psal. 105. 15.

Psal. 131. 1.

The truth is, in the Natural body, the eye is a most excellent part; but withal, so tender, so delicate, it may not endure to be *touch*ed; no, though it ail nothing, be not sore at all. In the Civil body the like is; there are in it, both Persons and Masters, whose excellency is such, they are not familiarly to be dealt with by hand, tongue, or pen, or any other way. The Persons, they are, as the apple of God's own eye: Christi Domini. They have a peculiar Nolite tangere, by themselves. Wrong is offered them, when after this, or in familiar or homely manner, any touch them. The Masters likewise, Princes affairs, Secrets of State, David calleth them magna & mirabilia super se, and so super nos: points too high, too wonderfull for us to deal with. To these also, belongs this Touch not.

And,

And, if of Kings secrets this may truly be said, may it not as truly, of God, of his secret decrees? May not they, for their height and depth, claim to this Noli, too? Yes sure: and I pray God, he be well pleased with this licentious touching, nay, tossing his Decrees of late; this sounding the depth of his Judgments with our line, and lead; too much presumed upon by some in these dayes of ours. Judicia ejus abyssus multa (saith the Psalmist) his judgments are the great deep. S. Paul, looking down into it, ran back, and cried, O the depth! the profound depth! not to be searched, past our fathoming or finding out. Yet are there in the world, that make but a shallow of this great deep: they have sounded it to the bottom. Gods secret Decrees, they have them at their fingers ends, and can tell you the number and the order of them just, with 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Men, that (sure) must have been in Gods Cabinets, above the third heaven, where S. Paul never came: Mary Magdalens touch was nothing to these.

Psal. 36. 7.
Rom. 11. 33.

2 Cor. 12. 2.

This was but upon the by. The main of the Text, that it beareth full against, ex tota substantia, in undae and undisful carriage: and against them that use it. Not, that Mary Magdalens was such: hers was but Tekel, certain grains too light, minus habens: Not altogether without regard, but not altogether so full of regard as it might and ought to have been. Make it as little as you will, Christ saith Noli to it: and Noli is a word of unwillingness. Christ is not unwilling with ought that is good: what he saith Noli to, is eo ipso, not good, would be forborn: would not be offered him, be it more then hers was. She (it may be) shewed more regard then we: Yet, if we shew not more regard then she, we shall hardly escape this Noli me tangere.

But, from this we rise. If Christ said noli to her, that failed but in tanto; what shall he say to them that fail both in tanto and in toto? The Noli to her given, reacheth them in a higher degree. Greater must their fault be, now, then hers was, then. She had no Noli to warn her: they have hers to warn them, and will take no warning by it. Christ, as he saw, she was; so, he foresaw, others would be as (yea, more) defective this way. The Noli that was given to her, was (in her) given to them all. Even to this day, Christ cryeth still, Noli me tangere: Even to this day, there is use of it, to call upon us for a better touch.

If the Text be against rudeness, to refrain it; then, it is for reverence, to enioyn it. If he say Noli, to the want of regard; we know, what he will say Volo to: that the more respectfully, the better we carry our selves, the better he will like us. This is sure, he will be approached to in all dutiful and decent sort; and he will not have us offer him any other. Whatsoever is most or best in that kind, if there be any one better then other, be that it. The best, we have (I am sure) is not too good for Christ. It is better to render account to him of a little too much, than of a good deal too little.

Take this with you: Christ can say Noli, then. For (I know not how) our carriage, a many of us, is so loose; covered we sit; sitting, we pray; standing, or walking (or as it takes us in the head) we receive: as if Christ were so gentle a person, we might touch him, do to him, what we list, he would take all well: He hath not the power, to say Noli to any thing. But, he hath, we see; and saith it; and saith it to one highly in his favour: and saith it, but for a touch a little awry, otherwise then it should.

As the heathen said, vultu; so the Text saith, tactu ladi pietatem. One may offend Christ, only by touching him; such the touch may be. We will allow him greater then the Ark: That, would not indure Man's touch; he dyed for it. We will hold us to our Text: if we touch him unduely, we shall do it involuntari; it shall be much against his will; he likes it not: Witness this noli here.

2 Sam. 6. 7.

Which, though it go but to the touch, yet, a paritate rationis, it reacheth to all the body, and to every member of it. To our very feet (saith Solomon) we to look to them when we draw near to him. To our very fingers (saith a Greater then Solomon) we to look to them when we touch him. And, as not with the foot of pride, nor the hand of presumption; so, along through the rest: neither with a scornful eye, nor a stiff knee: All are equally forbidden, under one: all to be far from us.

Ecclef. 4. 17.
Luk. 21. 31.

It reacheth to all: but yet for all that, the native vword of the Text (the touch) is to have a kind of pre-eminence. Most kindly, to that. To Christ it is every way; but most of all, to Christ as he is tangibilis: comes under our touch. To all parts of his worship; but, other parts will not come under tangere so fully, as the Sacrament. So, as the use may seem properly to have relation to that; and we, there, to shew our highest reverence. If we do so, Dicite iusto quia bene, we do vvell. But, diverse have too much of Mary Magdalens in them. I know not how they vould touch Christ, if they had him: that, which on earth doth most nearly represent him, his highest memorial, I know not how many both touch and take, otherwise, then vvere to be vvished.

Esa. 3. 10.

But, thus are we now come to the day, the very day, it was given on. Christ gave this Noli me tangere that it might be Verbum Dei, a watch-vword for this day. Take heed, how you touch: for, he easily foresaw this vwould be tempus tangendi, the time vwhereon, touch we must. Nay, more then touch him, we must: for, eat his flesh and drink his blood we must; and, that can we not do, but we must touch him. And this we must do by vertue of another precept, Accipite & manducate.

John 6. 56.
Mat. 26. 26.

How vwill Accipite & manducate, and noli me tangere cleave together? Take, eat, and yet touch not? If we take we must needs touch, one vwould think: If we eat, gustus est sub tactu (saith the Philosopher;) so, that comes under touching too.

It seems the Text was not so vvell chosen, these points considered. Nay, let the day aside we have no need (God vvot) to be preached to of not touching: we are not so forward that way. It vwould rather have been that of S. Thomas, Affer manum. This, is now out of season.

Verse 27.

But, you vwill remember still, I told you, this Noli was not general. It was but to Mary Magdalens. And, to her, but till she had learned a little better manners. Not to any, but such as she, or worse then she, that in unbecoming manner press and proffer to touch him. (the only cause of her repulse.) But, at another time, when she was on her knees, fell down at his feet, then did she touch him, without any check at all. Be you now, but as she was then, and this noli me tangere will not touch you at all.

Mat. 28. 9.

Ve. 27.

It is the case of the Sacrament right. There is place in the taking it, for noli me tangere: So is there, for Affer manum. To them, that with Saint Thomas, in a feeling of the defect of their faith, or of any other spiritual grace, cast themselves down, and cry, My Lord, and my God, Affer manum to them: I set them free, I give them a discharge from this Noli me tangere. But, for them that are but at Rabboni, and scarce so far; bold guests with him; bafe in conceit, and homely in behaviour: to them, and to them properly, belongs this Noli me tangere: More properly, then ever it did to her. And so, that point reconciled. Thus far for Saint Chrysostome, and his taking.

To hasten the Message.
S. Gregories

There is a second, and it is Saint Gregorie's: That the Vade & dic, was the cause of Noli me, &c. and that all was but to save time, that she was not permitted it. Christ was not willing to spend time in these Complements (it was no other;) but, to dispatch her away, upon an errand, better pleasing to him, that required more haste. As if he should have said: Let us have no touching now; there is a matter in hand, would be done out of hand, and therefore for this time hands off, Touch me not.

And the reason will follow well, so: Nondum enim ascendi. You need not be so hastie, or eager to touch me; I am not yet, ascended: though I be upon going, yet I am not gone. You may do this, at some other time, at some other meeting: & quod differitur non aufertur, at better leisure, you may have your desire: forbear it now.

Why, what hast was there of doing this errand? Might she not have *touch*ed him, and done it time enough? Peradventure, she might think so: She, knew Christ was risen; She, was well. But, they that sate in fear and sorrow, that knew not so much; they would not think so: Not, to them. To them Nihil satis festinatur, No hast was too much; all delay too long.

Nor to Christ neither. Who was (we see) so desirous to have notice given with all speed, that he would not take so much time from it, as wherein Mary Magdalen might have had but a touch at him. So careful, they might receive comfort with the first, that he saith, Go your wayes with all speed; Get ye to them, the first thing you do: It will do them more good to hear of my rising, then it will do you, to stand and touch me.

Yet, a touch and away would not have taken up so much time. True: but he easily foresaw, in the terms she stood, if he suffered her to touch, that would not serve the turn; she would have taken hold too. And, if she had taken hold once, nor that neither: She would have come to a Non dimittam, with her in the Canticles, Tenui Eum & non dimittam: She would not have let him go; or been long, yet she had: So, much time spent in impertinences, which neither he nor she the better for. So, she to let her touching alone, and put it off till another time, being to be employed in a business of more haste, and importance.

To wean her
touching.
S. Augustines

The third place is Saint Augustine; That, Christ in these words, had a further meaning; to wean her from all sensual and fleshy touching, and teach her, a new and a true touch; truer than that, she was about. This sense groweth out of Christ's reason: Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended; as if, till he were ascended, he would not be *touch*ed; and, then, he would. As much to say: Care not to touch me, here. Stand not upon it: Touch me not, till I be ascended; stay till then, and then do. That, is the true touch; that is it, will do you all the good.

And, there is reason for this sense. For the touch of his body, which she so much desired; that, could last but forty dayes in all, while he in his body were among them. And, what should all, since, and we now, have been the better? He was to take her out a lesson, and to teach her another touch, that might serve for all, to the worlds end; that might serve, when the body and bodily touch were taken from us.

Christ himself *touch*ed upon this point (in the sixth Chap. at the 62. ver.) When at Capernaum they stumbled at the speech of eating his flesh; What (saith he) find you this strange, now? How will you find it; then, when you shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before? How then? And yet, then you must eat, or else there is no life in you.

So, it is a plain Item to her, that there may be a sensual touching of him here: but that is not it: not the right: it avails little. It was her error, this; She was all for the corporal presence; for the touch with the fingers. So, were his Disciples, all of them, too much addicted to it. From which they were now to be weaned: That if they had, before, known Christ, or *touch*ed him after the flesh; yet now from henceforth, they were to do so no more, but learn a new touch; to touch him, being now ascended. Such a touching there is; or else his reason holds not: And, best touching him, so; Better far than this of hers, she was so eager on.

Do but ask the Church of Rome; Even, with them it is not the bodily touch, in the Sacrament that doth the good. Wicked men, very Reprobates, have that touch, and remain reprobates, as before. Nay, I will go further: It is not that, that *touch*eth Christ at all Example, the multitude that thronged and thrust him; yet for all that, as if none of them all had *touch*ed him, he asks, Quis me tetigit? So that, one may rudely thrust him, and yet not touch him, though: Not, to any purpose, so.

Job 6. 63.

Christ resolves the point, in that very place The flesh, the touching, the eating it, profits nothing. The words he spake were spirit: So, the touching, the eating, to be spiritual. And Saint Thomas, and Mary Magdalen or whosoever *touch*ed him here on earth, nisi falicus fide quam man tetigissent, if they had not been more happy to touch him with their faith, than their fingers end, they had had no part in Him

Him; no good by it at all. It was found better with it, to touch the hem of his Garment; than, without it, to touch any part of his body. Mat. 9. 20

Now, if faith be to touch, that will touch him no less in heaven than here: One, that is in Heaven may be touched so. No ascending can hinder that touch. Faith will elevate it self, that ascending in spirit, we shall touch him, and take hold of him. Mitte fidem & tenuisti: It is Saint Augustine. It is a touch, to which there is never a Noli: fear it not.

So, do we then: Send up our faith, and that shall touch him, and there will verine come from Him: and it shall take such hold on him, as it shall raise us up, to where He is; bring us to the end of the verse, and to the end of all our desires; to Ascendo ad Patrem, a joyful ascension to our Father and His, and to Himself, and to the Unity of the Blessed Spirit. To whom, in the Trinity of Persons, &c.

AT
WHITE-HALL,

On the Twenty first of Aprill, being Easter-Day,
An. Dom. 1618.

JOHN. Chap. XX. Ver. XVII.

Dicit ei Iesus, &c.

Iesus saith to her, Touch me not: For, I am not yet ascended to my Father: But, goe to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God.

Noli me tangere the former part, you have formerly heard. Mary Magdalen might not touch: at least-wise, not, as thus; not, as now.

The reason: 1. On her part, she forgot her self a little in her touch, as in her terms, toward him, who, though nondum, He were not yet, was presently to ascend, and be taken up into heaven, and would be touched in some better manner. And, till she had learned, so to touch, Noli me tangere.

2. On Christs part. She need not be so eager; Nondum enim Ascendi: that is, though He were going, yet he was not gone. Some other time might serve her, to touch him in. Now, he had matter of more haste, to send her about, and would have no time taken from it. And so, for saving of time. Noli me tangere.

3. On the touch it self. He was not yet ascended: And to touch Him before he were so, was not the true touch; not the touch that would doe her, or us, any good. For these all or some of these, Noli me tangere, no touching, now.

Heb. 6. 10.

But what, shall she be quite cast off in the mean time? Denied touching; denied it, graunted nothing for it? That were hard. Nothing to comfort her, in lieu of it? Yes: Christ is not unrighteous, that he should forget the work and labour of her love, which she, this day, made, so many waies to appear. Somewhat he deviseth to comfort her, somewhat: in that he will have her doe somewhat for Him. So, the old rule was: quem non honoro non onero. He will imploy her in a message; and such a message, as was to the present joy of them, it was sent to, and should be to the generall joy and good, not of them onely, but of us all.

Now

Now then, this must needs be reckoned as a special favour shewed her by our blessed Saviour. For, otherwise, he could as easily, himself have appeared to them he sent her; as, to her, he did; but that, his will was, to vouchsafe her the honour of the first bearing of these so joyful tidings, to them, and in and by them, to the whole world. When time was, she broke her box of precious ointment, and John 12. 3. the sent of it filled the whole house: The breaking of this box now, of the tidings of Christ, and his 2 Cor. 1. 16. rising, with the sweet savour of life into life hath filled, and still filleth the whole world, from one end to the other.

The sum of the Text is; A dispatch of Mary Magdalen by Christ, to deliver a message to his Disciples. The Summe. It is in effect, as if he should have said: You know, I am risen, now; you are well for your part: There be others, that know not so much; and, because they know it not, sit in sorrow, heavy and half dead at home. It would comfort them much, revive them, put life into them again, to know what you know. Now you are well, think upon them that are not. Remember, what was your own case but even now. You cannot do a better deed, than carry comfort to the comfortless. I would they knew it; I wish them well: They be my brethren, however they forgate themselves when time was.

But, this is not all; that they might know of it: but, they must know of it with all speed. For, that she may the sooner go tell them, she must not touch. For, if you mark it, It is not vade & dic; but Sed vade & dic: It is not barely, Go and tell them; It is, Touch me not, But, go and tell them. That is, in stead of touching, she must be gone in all hast to tell them. As if he should say; Go to, let us have no touching now: Get you to them, the first thing you do, and tell them of it. It will do them more good to be told of this, then it will do you to stay here and touch me never so oft.

This so great hast of the carrying it, is much for the credit of the message: Much for it; I cannot but note it. That Christ thought the notice of it so necessary, the bearing of it so every way important, as (we see) he is careful no time be taken from it: but with all possible speed, with the very first, they acquainted with it. So careful, as he would not take so much (or rather so little) time from it, as wherein Mary Magdalen might have had but a touch at him; but takes her off, and sends her away in all hast. As if, some matter had lien in it, if they should not have heard of his rising, before the Sun-rising.

Much for the honour of the Feast, on which it was done. That he would for ever have a Feast celebrated in memory of this Day, whereon these tidings came to the world first.

Most of all, for his own honour; Who sheweth himself so desirous, that they that are in heaviness may receive comfort, as he thinketh no hast too much, no hast enough, till they hear of it, till they hear of his Psa. 143. 8. loving kindness betimes in the morning.

To take the Text in sunder. The parts be two: 1. A Commission to carry a message; 2. And the Message itself. The Division.

1. The Commission: Vade ad fratres meos & dic eis. 2. The Message: Ascendo ad Patrem meum, &c.

In the Commission, again, there are two, 1. The Parties first: 2. And then, the Charge. 1. The Parties, Fratres meos: 2. The Charge, Vade & dic eis.

In the Message, two, likewise: 1. First, that he is upon ascending: 2. Then, the party, to whom. That Party, to whom is but one; yet represented here, under two names, 1. Father, and, 2. God. And (that which, to us, is the capital point of all, and which we to lay hold of specially) his Father, but ours, with all: and His God, but ours, as well as his. The last and best part of the message: For, in it lyeth the joy that cometh to us this morning.

On which four, 1. My Father, and 2. your Father, and 3. My God, and 4. your God, as it were so many wheels, is his ascendo drawn: Upon the same, is ours likewise to be, and is therefore the Consummatum est of the Text, and of the Feast, and of this, yea, (I dare add) of the whole Gospel.

And, let not this move you a whit, that His Father and our Father, His God and our God (who are the end to which we ascend) are made the Chariot by which we ascend. This is no strange thing in Divinity. Ad Christum non intr, nisi per Christum (saith Saint Augustine) and so neither ad Deum, nisi per Deum. With us nothing is more certain, then that the end of our way, which we come unto, is also the way it self, whereby we come thither. One and the same ad quem, and per quem ascenditur.

We shall make four stands. 1. One, at fratres meos, the Parties. 2. Another, at Dic eis, the Commission. 3. The third, at Ascendo, the Motion. 4. And the last, at My Father and your Father, my God and your God, the Terminus ad quem, which giveth the perfection to all our motions, and so, to this, the last end of all our motions; For, after ascendo, we shall move no more, but rest for ever.

V Ad fratres meos, Go to my brethren. Our first stand is to be at fratres meos, my brethren, the Parties he sent to. I. Fratres meos. The Parties. Who be they? They she went to. To whom went she? To his Disciples ((in the next verse:) They then the Parties, He meant: They, his brethren.

Psal. 59. 16.

A strange term to begin with, considering how they had dealt with him, scarce like brethren, not long before. We shall therein do the work of the Sabbath, which is to tell of his loving kindness betimes in the morning; and this morning, more then ever any.

1 King. 20. 32, 33.

Yet then vve go any further, let us touch a little at this term, he gives them. It is no noli me tangere (this) It is a word to be touched and taken hold of: It was so, when time was, by Benhadads servants, this very word. Is Benhadad alive (saith the King of Israel) Frater meus est. He is my brother: which they presently caught hold of, yea, thy brother Benhadad is yet living. So they.

And so we, Frater meus. Let us not let this word fall to the ground, but say (with Bernard) Salvum sit verbum Domini mei. God save this word; blessed be the lips that spoke it. Yea thy brethren, Good Lord, if so thou wilt vouchsafe to call them.

Out of it first I note, here is nothing that favours of any displeasure, of remembering any old grudge. Not so much as an harsh term in all the message; no mention they had fled from him, forsook him, forswore him (full un-brotherly.) He hath forgotten it all, all is out of his mind: Casts not them off, as they did him, but sends to them; and, by the name of brethren, sends to them: They be my brethren, and I theirs, and by that name commend me to them. Nothing, here, that favours of any anger.

Heb. 1. 11.

Not nothing, that favours of any pride. But, even as Joseph in the top of his honour; So he, in this, the day of his glorious exalting from the dead, claims kindred of them, a sort of poor forlorn men: and (as the Apostle expresseth it) non est confusum vocare, is not a whit ashamed of them that were ashamed of him. Disdains not, poor as they were, unkind as they were, but vouchsafes to call them brethren for all that.

Which word [Brethren] implies two things: 1. First, Identity of nature. His nature is not changed by death. The nature he dyed in, in the same he rises again. Thereby lyes a matter. For, if he rose, as man, then man also may rise: If one be risen, there is hope for others: If the nature be risen, the person, in it, may. So it was with the first Adam. In his person was our nature; and, in him, it dyed; and we, in it. So is it in the second. In his person our nature is risen; In our nature, we all. This first: Risen in the same nature, he had before: Not changed it.

Job. 15. 15.

2. And second, Risen with the same love and affection, he had before: Not changed it, neither. Yes, changed it, (I said not well in that;) but, changed it for the better. Before this, when he said most, he said but, I will call you my friends: The highest term he came to, before. But here, being risen, he riseth (we see) higher, as high as Love can rise, to count them and stile them frater meus. And so much for that, Go to my brethren.

II.
Disc. The Commission.

Well, when she comes to his brethren, what then? Et dic eis, and say to them, or tell them. By which words, he gives her a Commission. Vade, is her Mission: Dic eis, her Commission. A Commission, to publish the first news of his rising, and (as it falls out) of his ascending too.

The Fathers say, that, by this word, she was, by Christ, made an Apostle. Nay, Apostolorum Apostata, an Apostle to the Apostles themselves.

Mat. 28. 19.

An Apostle: For, what lacks she? 1. Sent first, immediately from Christ himself: And what is an Apostle but so? 2. Secondly, Sent to declare and make known: And what difference between he pre-dicate, and Vade & dic, but only the number? the thing is the same. 3. And last; what was she to make known? Christ's rising, and ascending: And what are they but Evangelium, the Gospel, yea, the very Gospel of the Gospel?

This day, with Christ's rising begins the Gospel: Not before. Crucified dead and buried, no good news, no Gospel they, in themselves. And them, the Jews believe as well as we. The first Gospel of all, is the Gospel of this day, and the Gospel of this day is this Marie Magdalene's Gospel, near damp-rior, the prime Gospel of all, before any of the other four. That Christ is risen, and upon his ascending, and she the first, that ever brought these glad tidings. At her hands the Apostles themselves received it first: And, from them, we all.

Mat. 16. 13.

Which, as it was a special honour (and wheresoever this Gospel is preached, shall be sold for a memorial of her:) so was it withal, not without some kind of embuiting to them (to the Apostles) for sitting at home, so drooping in a corner, that Christ not finding any of them, is fain to seek him a new Apostle. And finding her, where he should have found them, and did not, to send by the hand of her, that he first found at the Sepulchers side, and to make himself a new Apostle. And send her to them, to enter them (as it were) and catechize them, in the two Articles of the Christian faith, the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ. To her, they and we (both) owe them, them, the first notice of them.

And, by this (lo) the amends (we speak of) is made her for her Noli me tangere: Full amends. For, to be thus sent, to be the messenger of those so blessed tidings, is a higher honour, a more special favour done her, a better good turn, every way better, than if she had been let alone, had her desire, touched Christ, which she so longed for, and so eagerly reached at. Better (sure:) for I reason thus: Christ (we may be sure) would never have enjoyed her to leave the better, to take the worse: To leave to touch him, to go to tell them, if to go to tell them had not been the better.

So that, hence we infer, That to go and carry comfort to them that need it, to tell them of Christ's rising, that do not know it: is better than to tarry and do nothing but stand touching Christ. Touching Christ gives place to reaching Christ. Vade & dic better than mane & tange. Christ (we see) is for Vade & dic. That, if we were in case where we might touch Christ, we were to leave Christ untouched, and even to give out selves a noli me tangere, to go and do this: And to think our selves better employed in telling them, than in touching him.

Will you observe withall how well this agrees with her offer (a little before) of Ego tollam Eum ? She must needs know of the Gardiner, Tell me where you have layd Him, Et ego tollam, and she would take him, and carry Him, that she would. Why, you that would so faine take and carry me, being dead, goe take and carry me now alive : That is ; carry newes, that I am alive : And you shall better please me with this, ego tollam, a great deal : It shall be a better carrying, Ego tollam, in a better sense, than ever was that. Stand not here then touching me : Goe and touch them ; and with the very touch of this report, you shall work, in them, a kind of (that you see in me, a kind of) resurrection from a dolefull and dead, to a cheerefull and lively estate.

Tell them : What ? Tell them that I ascend ; that is, am about to ascend, am upon the point of it, am very shortly to doe it. Quod prope abest, in fiat, habetur pro facto, that that is neere done, we reckon as good as done.

Tell them that I ascend. Why how now, What day is to day ? It is not Ascension day : It is Easter, and but early Easter yet : His ascension is fourty dayes off. This were a Text for that day. Why speaks He of that now ? Why, not rather, Tell them I am risen (more proper for this day ?) vvhay, He needs not tell her that : She could tell that of her self, she saw it. And besides, in saying, I ascend, He implies fully as much. Till He be risen, ascend He cannot : He must ascend out of the grave, yer He can ascend up to heaven. Resurrexit must be past, yer Ascendo can come. Ascendo then puts His resurrection past all peradventure : He needs say no more of that, of his rising. But, as she saw by his rising that He had the keyes of hell and death, had unlocked those doors and come out from thence ; So, by ascendo, He tells her farther, that he hath the Keyes of Heaven gates also, vvhich he would now unlock, and so set open the Kingdome of Heaven to all Believers.

And yet, there is a further matter in ascendo, to shew us vvhath was the end of his rising. Christ did not rise, to rise ; no more must we. The resurrection it self is for an end ; it is not the end : It is but a state yet unperfect, but an entry to a greater good, vvhich unlesse it lead us and bring us to non habetur propositum, it is short, short of that it should be. We must not then set up our rest upon our rising. There is somewhat more required than barely to rise. What is that ? Ascendo : Christ rose to ascend ; so are we to doe. And rising is no rising, no right rising, we rise not on our right sides (as we say) if that follow not upon it, if we ascend not vvithall. For, to rise from the bottom of the grave to the brink of it, to stand upon our feet again, and tread on the grave-stone, and no more, is but half a rising ; is but Lazarus rising.

To rise up, up as high as heaven, that is to rise indeed ; that is Christs rising : and that to be ours. As, to rise is nothing but to ascend out of the grave : So, to ascend is nothing but to rise as high as heaven : And, then we are truly risen, vvhhen so risen. Before, I said there was no Gospel till the Resurrection : I now say, the resurrection it self is no Gospel ; (not of it self) unlesse ascendo follow it. Resurrexit, tell that to all the world : All that die in Adam, shall rise in Christ, Miscreants, Jewes, Turkes and all : No Gospel that, properly. Tell the Christian of more than so : tell him of ascendo too, that goes vvithall, that pertaines to it. You must take that vvith you too, if it be Christs, if it be the right rising, the resurrection to life and not to condemnation.

Mark this well : it is a materiall point. Better lye still in our graves, better never rise, then rise and rising not to ascend. Of them that shall rise, they that see they shall not ascend, shall with themselves in their coffins again : Nay, they shall pray the mountains to fall on them, and the hills to cover them, and bury them quick. So much doth this concerne us, that these two part not ; that ascendo attend us at our rising. And therefore this you shall observe, that, in all this speech or Text, Christ doth not so much as mention, as once name the word rising or resurrection, as if he made no great reckoning of it : But, in this one short verse here, in these few words, he is, at ascendo twice ; speaks of that, mentions that, over and over again. All to teach us, ascendo, is all in all. That resurrexit is nothing, if it be nothing but resurrexit ; nor any account to be made of it, if ascendo goe not with it, but, if ascendo goe with it then it is. And, that it may goe with it, that to be all our care. Never take care for resurrexit ; that will come of it self without any thought taking. Never trouble your selves with that. Take thought for ascendo, set your minds there. Ascendo, look well to that : Resurrexit let that goe.

A third reason there is of ascendo, For, He saw upon these tydings, as she did think, so they would say ; O is he risen, then shall we have his company again, as heretofore we had. But, by sending them word of His ascending, He gives them warning betimes ; He rose not, to make any abode with them, or to converse with them on earth, as formerly he had ; that so, they might have timely notice of it and know what they were to look for. For, this, he knew would be a hard lesson. His rising, they would like well, but his ascending be against : would not abide to hear of that, to lose his company at any hand. It was a conceit, that troubled them much : they were still and ever addicted to his bodily being with them. Here, they would have kept him, built Him a Tabernacle, here ; and by their good will never have let him gone from hence. All for man nobiscum, and for Dominus si tu fuisses hic ; all in Mary Magdalens case, had him here to see Him and to touch Him ; and then, all had been well as they thought.

This was their error : And to rid them of it, of this earthly mind of theirs, thus striving to affixe and keep him here on earth, and that then all should be well, he shewes them that they were quite wrong, and sets them right. That for him to be here below on earth, that is not it : But for them to be with him there above in heaven, that is it : There it is right. And, never shall they, or we, be well, till there we be with him. And thither would he raise them and us, with this his ascendo.

Yet, one more. For, this very point, that Christ risen with ascendo in his mouth ; that no sooner risen, but makes ready for his ascending straight ; this (I say) if there were nothing but this (the so immediate joyning it, so close upon his rising, one hard to the other, no mean between) were of it self, enough to make make the idle dream of the old and new Chiliafts to vanish quite; that phanſie to themſelves I wote not what earthly kingdome here upon earth, ſomewhat like Mahomets Paradise, and will not hear of ascendo, after they be riſen, till a thouſand yeares at leaſt. This is none of Chriſts riſing, I am ſure: So, to be none of ours. As with him, So, with us; riſing and ascendo are to follow ſtraight on upon the other.

Chriſt then doth ascend. And out of what Chriſt did, we learne what we to doe, Seeing, Chriſt ſtayed not here, we not to ſet up our ſtay here neither, not to make earth our heaven, not to place our felicity here below.

Col. 3. 1.

The Gospell is (we ſee) when Chriſt was riſen, his minde was upon ascendo preſently. The Epistle is framed fit for it, That if we be riſen with Chriſt, we would ſet our mindes and ſeek the things above where Chriſt is: that is, if we be riſen with him, make no more adoe but ascend with him alſo.

All things in heaven and earth doe ſo; riſing, they ascend preſently. In heaven, the ſtarres they be no ſooner riſen above the horizon, but they are in their ascendant, eo ipſo, and never leave ascending, till they be in the higheſt point, over our heads, in the very top of the ſkie. In earth; the little ſpires that peep out of the ground, now at this time (nature's time of her yearly reſurrection) they be no ſooner out, but up they ſhoot, and never leave to aſpire, till they have attained the full pitch of their higheſt growth, they can ascend to. In our ſelves, though (I know) for earthly men to have earthly minds it is not ſtrange πυλον ἔχοντες πατέρα having clay to our father, and παρ πατέρα σου duſt to our Sire, we ſhould have χαμερηνου our ſoules ſhould cleave to the duſt, as Nazianzen excellently ſaith. Not ſtrange (I ſay) that, ſo it is with us, yet, ſo it ſhould not be. The very Heathen ſaw, that, though we be made of the earth, yet we are not made for the earth: That the heavenly ſoul was not put into the earthly body, to the end, the earthly body, ſhould draw it downe to the earth; but rather, to the end, the ſoul ſhould liſt it up to heaven. And ſo much they gathered out of our O ſublime, and vultus ad ſydera, the very frame of our body that beares up thitherward, and bodes (as it were) a kinde of ascending whither it lookes, and gives naturally. Nature doth teach this.

Apo. 20. 5:

But grace by Chriſt's example much better. If Chriſt riſe, that we riſe with Chriſt, Not, in body yet; but to compe our ſelves dead to ſinne, and riſe from that, and live to God (the firſt reſurrection,) And if Chriſt ascend, welikewiſe to ascend: not to part with him, but to follow him as we may. Not yet in body; it cannot be ſurſum corpora yet: it may be ſurſum corda, we may liſt up our hearts thither, though. There our treasure is; if Chriſt be our treasure: there, our hearts to be; there we in heart to be at leaſt, which is the firſt ascenſion, the μεναις δυν of it, the praludium, ſo.

Pſal. 84. 5:

There are two words in the Text, 1. Nondum ascendi, I am not yet ascended; and, 2. ascendo, yet I ascend though: which will very well fit us, if, while we are not at ascendi yet (that is, in body ascended) we be, for all that at ascendo (that is, ascend in mind) even as Chriſt here did. And Bleſſed is the man (ſaith the Pſalme) cui in corde ascenſiones, that hath the ascenſion in his heart, or his heart on it; That, while it is nondum ascendi with him, yet at times it is ascendo, liſts up his eyes, ſends up his ſighes, exalts his thoughts otherwhyle, repreſents (as Chriſt doth) anticipates the ascenſion Voto & deſiderio in will and deſire, before the time it ſelf come of the laſt and finall ascenſion. Thus much for ascendo.

IV.

Ad Patrem
meum:
The Ad quem.

Ascendo is a motion. Every motion hath an Unde, and a quò; a whence and a whither; a terminus à quo, and a terminus ad quem. The ad quem is (here) ad Patrem.

Chap. 19. 30.

To ascend is, to Chriſt, his naturall motion: Heaven is his naturall place. Thence he came, Thither he is to goe again. Specially, his worke being done, he came for. That was conſummatus eſt, with us, three dayes ſince. But, till he be in heaven againe, it is not conſummatus eſt, with him. So, the motion is naturall.

Chap. 14. 28

And the Ad quem, ad Patrem, no leſſe. Seeing, for the Sonne, to goe to the Father, is very kindly too; we may not be againſt it. Chriſt ſaid, If you loved me, you would verily rejoyce, becauſe I ſaid, I goe to the Father. For very love to Chriſt, we cannot but rejoyce vvith him. In the ad quem, all is well if we conſider that. But, ſo, is not, in the à quo. For, vvhen all is ſaid, make the beſt of it we can, ascendo is diſcedo, to goe up is to goe from; from them: And this is no good nevvies. For him, no ſooner to come, but gone againe, and leave them to the vvide vvorld, it might trouble them, for all Tell my Brethren. For, by Brethren he might mean falſe, brethren, that had left him; and ſo vvould he them, novv: and peradventure doe their errand in heaven to his father, and make them have but little thanks for it, at His hands. So that, this ascendo implying a nolo manere (in a manner) vvias as evill to them, as noli me tangere vvias to her.

What is then become of the Gospell we ſpake of? where, or what is their comfort, or ours, in this tyding? To deal plainly: when we ſeek it in ascendo, we find it not: Nor, in ad Patrem. Nor, in ad Patrem meum. None of theſe is it. But, in His & ad Patrem veſtrum, there, we find it; there it is. There was (you will ſay) as much as this comes to, in fratres meos. It is true; it implied no leſſe. But, Chriſt would not deliver this implicite by way of implying, but explicite, as explicate and plainly, as he could. And not once but twice. And it is a happy turn for us, he did ſo: For, this point can never be too plainly ſpoken to, too often repeated, too much ſtood upon. All the joy of the morning is in this veſtrum. Tell them, I goe to the Father, that is not all: Tell them this too, As I goe to the Father, ſo the Father I go to, is their father; as well as mine; Not mine alone, but theirs alſo. And tell them again, that, if Patrem meum be the cauſe of my ascending (as here is none other ſet down;) If I goe to him thus, becauſe He is my Father; becauſe He is theirs alſo, they alſo ſhall come after me, the ſame way, to the ſame place, upon the ſame reaſon.

And he doth expreſſe here the terminus ad quem by the Party to whom, rather then by the Place to which, becauſe the Party will ſoon bring us to the Place, and to ſomewhat beſides. To the Place: For, you you shall see, what will follow of this ; that his house, that heaven is now become Paterna domus to us, as our father's house ; And who shall keep us from our father's house ? No more strangers now ; but of the household of God. And, in the Household, not servants but children ; and have thereto as good right and title, shall be as welcome thither every way, as any child to his own father's house here useth to be. God, through him, standing no otherwise affected to us, then as a father to his child, as well disposed, as willing, as ready to receive us. Christ his beloved Sonne, in whom he is so absolutely well pleased as he alwaies heares him, hath prayed to him and obtained of him, that where He is, we may be also, and in due time ascend up, whither he is now ascended, Pandens iter coram nobis, opening the passage for us to follow him. Mat. 3. 17.

Mic. 1. 13.

But, I told you, there was somewhat in the Person, more then in the Place. For, by vertue of this Patrem vestrum, while we are here, if we cry Abba father (as now we may) He is ready to receive our prayers : Rom. 8. 15. and when we goe hence, ready to receive our persons. While we are here, if at any time we repent, and say Ibo ad Patrem (with the child in the Gospel) ready to receive us to grace : And, when we goe hence, we may say with Christ, Vado ad Patrem, ready to receive us to glorie. So, of ad Patrem vestrum there is use here and there, both. Luk. 15. 18.

And, all this by meanes of Christ's resurrection : besides the generall vertue whereof, to make all men rise (all, in the second Adam that die in the first) there is further a second speciall vertue for us Christians, to make us rise, not onely from the grave, but rise higher then so, even as high as to heaven itself. And that we may have good right so to do, to make His Father ours, and his Father's house ours, that there we may dwell together fratres in unum. On which dependeth, and from whence riseth all our hope of happiness for ever. And this is the joy of the Feast we celebrate, the loving kindnesse of this morning, the glad tyding of Marie Magdalen's Gospel. It is evangelium parvum (so they call it) but a little one, but it hat in it, in these few words conched, much matter both of high mysterie and of heavenly comfort.

There be of the Fathers, that, telling the words of the Message (which are fifteen in number make them as so many steps or rungs (as it were) of Jacob's Ladder, which we to ascend by. There be others, that more properly and to the Text more agreeable observe these four, 1. Patrem meum, 2. Patrem vestrum, 3. Deum meum, 4. Deum vestrum, as so many wheeles, as it were, of Elias his chariot, in which he was carried up to heaven. Ascendo the chariot ; these, the four wheeles of it.

The truth is, there lie faire before us in it, four paires or combinations, by which four, ascendo is here drawn in the Text. 1. Two single : Patrem and Deum, one : 2. Meum and vestrum, the other. Two double ; 3. Patrem meum and Patrem vestrum, one : and 4. Deum meum, Deum vestrum ; the other. I will but touch them briefly. 2 King. 2.

Father and God at large first, without any pronounes put to them at all. It was not so, Stylo veteri. There, in the Law, it was Dominus Deus. To change this, and to make it Stylo novo, Pater Deus ; in place of Dominus putting Pater, making of God a Lord, God a Father ; is worth the while. It mends the terme, and it mends the matter much ; as much as a Father is better than a Lord. Bonus Pater, bonus transitus : and we bound to our blessed Saviour, for making this Passover, for working but this change or alteration in God's style. 1.
Patrem Deum :
The first part.
Exod. 20. 1.

A Father : How a Father ? For, a Father in a sense (we know) he may be said, and is, to all things whatsoever. Father of the raine, and of the drops of dew (in Job) But, of us men, of man kinde, more specially, in that we bear his Image. But, that is not it neither, that here is meant. That, is here meant, is ascendo ad Patrem, a Father to ascend to. Not for our prayers onely, but even also for our persons to ascend to. So a Father he is to none, but to Christ, and to the true Christians. Job 38. 28.

And this now, a Father to ascend to, is it that puts the difference betweene Him and all other fathers beside Him. Father to ascend to, such fathers there are none : None such here. Our fathers here, we descend to, go down to them ; down, down to the grave. Him, and him onely, we goe up to, up to heaven, up even where Christ is sitting at the right hand of God ; and he, to that end, a father, even to make us ascend thither to him. Heb. 10. 12.

Why would not Father suffice ? Why is God added ? Father is a name of much good will : But many a good father wants good means to his good will. God, is added, that he may not be defective that way ; have means to his meaning. For, if he be a Father, first it is the voice of a father to his sonne (in the Gospel) omnia mea tua sunt. Now then, if this Father be also God, and all his be ours ; what can we desire more than all God hath, all that ever God is worth ; able to satisfie never so vaile a desire (this.) For so, if heaven and the joyes of it be his, they be ours too ; and then there lacks nothing but ascendo, to go up and take possession of them : and here (lo) it is, Ascendo ad patrem. Luke 15. 32.

Bound to him for this first, Patrem Deum. No whit lesse bound for the second, for putting to these pronounes possessives, Meum, and vestrum (which is the second single combination.) For, all they came, till they in this wise were put to ; Meum was meum, and Vestrum was vestrum ; His was his, and Ours was ours : his ; his owne ; and ours, to our selves, and there an end. No relation either to other ; no interest either in other. But, now, Meum is made vestrum ; and vestrum, meum. His, ours ; and ours his, enterechangeably. A blessed change may we say : His great Meum for our little vestrum : Little ours for great his. Every one will see the odds between these. That (indeed) we are as much bound for meum and vestrum, as for Patrem and Deum. Nay, more. For, as there is no comfort in heaven, without God ; nor in God, without a Father : So, is there not any either in Father, Heaven, or God, without [ours] to give us a property in them. This then for the second single. Now to the two double. 2.
Meum, vestrum.
paire.

Patrem meum. Patrem meum stands first, and is first every way. But Patrem meum will do us no good. That which must do us the good, is the second in place; but (to us) the first. Patrem vestrum, that will serve; that alone will serve us, we need no more. Ostende nobis Patrem & sufficit (saith Saint Philip.) But, how that should be compassed, and His meum should be our vestrum, that He should be ours, hic labor est, that is all the matter.

This leads us to the other, the last combination of all, of Deum meum and vestrum. For, that His Father may be our Father, no remedy, but our God must first be his God. So, this fetches in that, One would not serve: there behooved to be twaine: else the chariot will not goe.

It will be best, ante omnia, to set forth, in these termes, what is proper, and what not; what Christ's and what ours. Much light we shall receive thereby.

Christ, on his part, saith My Father: and he saith also, My God. For him to say, My Father, is proper; we see reason for it. But for him, to say, My God, no reason at all, altogether improper. For, how can God have a God?

Christ, on his part, saith Deum vestrum, your God; right and true (that) we are His poore creatures, He our God; so knowne, so acknowledged to be. But He saith further, Patrem vestrum, your Father: how that can be said, we see not. Alas we are but dust and ashes: Our lineage is well set forth by Iob: We must say to rottenesse, Thou art my father; and to the wormes, Ye are my mother; Ye are my sister. Iob 17. 14.

No Father of ours he, not properly.

In exact propriety of speech then, Father here referres to Christ: God to us. His Father, is right; so is, our God. We will never spend a word on them, let them goe. But, his God, no way right; no more than, our Father. These two, it is sure, are improper, both. And if ever they shall be verified one of the other, it must be brought about by some other wayes and means. And, so it is; and by the same way that the one, by the very same the other. His Father, our Father, By his means. Our God, his God, by ours.

To set them in right method, in their true order, Erant novissimi primi; the last is to be first: we to begin at Deum vestrum, the very last word of all, as it were the foot of the ladder, or the two smaller wheels that go before. To make meum vestrum; his, ours; Vestrum is to be made meum, ours to be made his. Our God, to become His God, first, that his Father may become our Father after. Him, that was our God, we to make his God; that him, that was his Father, He may make to be our Father.

That this might proceed, he that doth here ascend, was to descend, Descend, whither? Even to be one of us: and we were creatures; and so, being one of us, He to be a creature as well as we. So he was, and so he is. For, even the soul and body of Christ are in the rank of creatures; and, relation had to them, a creature he is, a God he hath, the same, that we (for there is but one:) and so He may truly say, Deum meum, Our God is his God. That we might ascend to the highest heaven, he was to descend in carnis in vis vis, to the lowest parts of the earth: and so did. Descendo ad matrem with him, that ascendo ad Patrem with us. That we might crie Abba Father, he was content to crie that strange crie Eli, Eli, My God, My God, on the Crosse.

So Christ might then say, and truly say, My God, no lesse than My Father: his Father, as God; his God, as man. As the Sonne of God, a God he hath not; a Father he hath: As the Sonne of man, a Father he hath not; a God he hath. A God (I say) then, he hath; but, never till then; never till He medled with us. But then, he had: and since he hath. He, that was ours, not his; is now his, as well as ours. These two wheels are set right.

We have brought it to this, that Christ may say Deum meum. After we have brought him to Deum meum. After we have brought him to Deum meum, we are half way; Our God is his. But now, how shall we get his Father to have him to be our Father? First, his Father he was from all eternity: he, and none but he can say, and say properly, Patrem meum. But he is content to quit that (none but he) and to take us in; and he being our brother before, to make us his, now. Ours, in our estate of this mortall: His, in his estate of immortall life. For, here (now) rising, and upon his ascending, he adopts us; and, by adopting, makes us; and by making, pronounces us His brethren; and so children to his Father. Us, his children; Him, our Father, witness fratres meos, and patrem vestrum, both from his own mouth. Salvum sit verbum Domini mei, by vertue whereof, it is now Abba Pater with us. Now Vado ad Patrem, we a Father of God (even as Christ that spake it) to pray to, to goe to. Meum and vestrum both now in one. Then we had a Father of him, and since we have: But, till then, a God we had, but not a Father: at least, not such a Father of him as since we have. This, the bonum pascha, the salix transiens, the blessed enter change we spake of.

Who gets by this? Deum meum, His, his God, was his humiliation. He as low as we, nay lower then the lowest of us, when he cried My God, My God. Deum meum, his humiliation, and Patrem vestrum, our exaltation; by it, we are made, in case, as he, to rise, to ascend: to goe whither, to be where he is, for ever: to say, Ibs ad Patrem; to say, Vado ad Patrem; to say with him, Father forgive; and againe, 46. Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit. In Patrem vestrum are all these.

So by this time, we see the necessity of both these combinations, of both paire of wheels; and that to our great comfort.

But we are not so to look to our own comfort, but that withall we be carefull to preserve his honour; that so, both may goe hand in hand together. And there is order taken for that too, by severing of each paire; that it is not nostrum in one word ours: but meum, and vestrum (in two words) mine, and yours: Yet, otherwise his, and otherwise ours; Both, as Father, and as God.

As Father. His, by nature, by very generation: Ours, by grace, by meere adoption: As God (and there we are before Him) our God, by nature. His no otherwise, then as He took upon Him our nature.

But, his honour thus set safe, by this partition kept on foot, then let the wheels run, pursue the rest, as farre as you please, make of it the most you can, for your best avile. That one and the same is both His and ours. One Father, one God, to Him and us both. Father, to Him; God, to us; God to Him; Father, to us. If we, a God; He one. If He, a Father; we, one. Our God, Christ's God, Christ's Father, our Father. There is ascendo your chariot, and these are the four wheels on which it moveth, and is carried up to Heaven.

But, where is Easter-day, what is become of it all this while? For, me thinks, all the time, we are thus about Father and Sonne, and taking our nature and becoming one of us, it should be Christmas by this, and not Easter (as it is) that this a meeter Text (one would think) for that Feast; and that (now) it comes out of season.

Not a whit. It is Christ that speaketh, and He never speaketh but in season; never, but to the purpose; never, but on the right Day.

A brother-hood (we grant) was begun then, at Christmas, by his birth, as upon that Day, for loe then was he borne. But, so was he now also, at Easter: born then, too: and after a better manner born. His Resurrection was a second birth, Easter a second Christmas. Hodie genui te, as true of this day, as of that. The Church appointeth, for the first Psalm, this day, the second Psalm, the Psalm, of hodie genui te. The Apostle saith expressly (Acts 13. 33.) When he rose from the dead, then was hodie genui te, fulfilled in him, verified of him. Then he was primogenitus à mortuis; Gods first begotten from the dead. And upon this latter birth doth the brother-hood of this day depend.

There was then a new begetting, this day. And if a new begetting, a new Paternity, and fraternity, both. By the hodie genui te of Christmas, how soon He was born of the Virgins wombe, he became our brother (finne except) subject to all our infirmities; so, to mortality, and even to death itself. And, by death, that brother-hood had been dissolved, but for this dayes rising. By the hodie genui te of Easter, as soone as he was born again of the womb of the grave, he begins a new brother-hood, founds a new fraternity straight; adopts us (we see) anew againe, by his fratres meos; and thereby, hee that was primogenitus à mortuis, becomes primogenitus inter multos fratres: When the first begotten from the dead, then, the first begotten in this respect, among many brethren. Before, he was ours: now, we are His. That was by the mothers side; so, he ours: This is by Patrem vestrum, the Fathers side: So, we his. But half-brothers before; Never, of whole bloud, till now. Now, by Father and Mother both, fratres germani, fratres fraterrimi, we cannot be more.

To shut all up in a word: That of Christmas was the fraternity rising out of Deum meum, Deum vestrum; So, then, brethren. This of Easter, adopting us to his Father, was the fraternity of Patrem meum, Patrem vestrum: So, brethren, now.

This dayes is the better birth, the better brother-hood by farre: the fore-wheel, are the lesse, the hinder, the larger, ever. For, first, that of ours was when he was mortall: But, his adoption he deferred, he would not make it, while he was mortall: reserved it, till he was risen again, and was even upon his ascending, and then he made it. So, mortall he was, when he ours: But, now (when we his) he is immortall, and we brethren to him, in that state, the state of immortality. Brethren, before; but not to ascendo: now, to ascendo and all. Death was in danger, to have dissolved that: But, death hath now no power on him, or on this, this shall never be in danger of being dislo'ved any more. That, without this, is nothing.

But we shall not need to stand in termes of comparison: since, then, it was but one of these; now, it is both, His Father is now become Our Father, to make us joyne-heires with him of his heavenly Kingdome: His God likewise, become our God, to make us partakers, with them both, of the Divine Nature. Patrem meum and Patrem vestrum, Deum meum, and Deum vestrum run both merrily together, and ascendo upon them both.

Whereof (I mean, of the partaking of his divine Nature) to give us full and perfect assurance, as he took our flesh, and became our brother, flesh of our flesh then; so He gives us his flesh; that we may become His brethren, flesh of His flesh, now: And gives it us now upon this day, the very day of our Adoption into this fraternity. By taking our flesh; so begun His: By giving His flesh; so, begins ours. For requisite it was, that since we drew our death from the first Adam, by partaking his substance; semblably and in like fort, we should partake the substance of the Second Adam, that so we might draw our life from Him; Should be ingrafted into him, as the branches into the vine, that wee might receive his sap, (which is His Similitude:) Should be flesh of his flesh, not he of ours, as before, but we of his now: that we might be vegetate with his Spirit, even with his Divine Spirit. For, now in him, the Spirits are so united, as partake one, and partake the other withall.

And

And it hath been, and it is therefore an ordinance in the Church for ever, that, as upon this day, at the turning of it continually, his flesh and blood should be, in Sacrament exhibited to us; As to make a yearly solemn renewing of this fraternity, so likewise to seal to us the fruit of it, our rising; and not rising only, but, for rising as ascendo go withal. A badge of the one, a pledge of the other. For which cause, as it is called the living bread, for that, it shall restore us to life, and raise us up in the last day: So is it also, the bread that came down from heaven; came down from thence, to make us go up thither, and in the strength of it to ascend into Gods holy hill, and there rest with him in his Tabernacle for ever. That so, the truth of the Feast, and of the Text both, may be fulfilled in us everlastingly, with God (Patrem vestrum) our Father: and with Christ (fratres Meos) our Brother: and with the blessed Spirit, the Love of them both one to the other, and of them both to us.

A SER.

S E R M O N

Preached before the

Kings Majesty,

AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XIII. of April, A. D. MDCXXIII, being EASTER-DAY.

ESAY, Chap. LXIII. Ver. I, II, III.

Quis est iste qui venit de Edom, &c.

Who is this that cometh from Edom, with red garments from Bozra? He is glorious in his apparel, and walketh in great strength: I speak in righteousness, and am mighty to save.

Wherefore is thine apparel red, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-press.

I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of all the people there was none with me: for, I will tread them in mine anger, and tread them under foot in my wrath, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my rayment.

Ver when we read, or hear read any Text or passage out of this Prophet, the Prophet Esay, it brings to our minde the Noble-man, Act. VIII. that sitting in his Chariot, read another like passage out of this same Prophet. Brings him to minde: and with him, his question, Of whom doth the Prophet speak this? of himself, or of some other? Not of himself, that's once: It cannot be Himself. It is he, that asks the question. Some other then it must needs be, of whom it is; and we to aske who that other was.

Act. 8. 34.

The tenour of Scripture, that Noble-man then read, was out of the LIII. Chapter, and this of ours out of the LXIII. Ten Chapters between. But, if Saint Philip had found him reading of this here, as he did, of that: he would likewise have begun at this same Scripture, as at that he did, and preached to him CHRIST: Onely with this difference: out of that, CHRIST'S Passion; out of this, His Resurrection. For, He that was led as a sheep to be slain, and so was slain there; He it is, and no other, that rises and comes here back like a Lion, from Bozra, imbrued with blood, the blood of His enemies.

Esay 53. 7.

I have (before I was aware) disclosed, who this party is. It was not amisse, I so should; not to hold you long in suspense, but to give you a little light at the first, whom it would fall on. CHRIST it is.

Two things there are that make, it can be no other but He. One is without the text, in the end of the Chapter next before: There is a Proclamation, Behold, here comes your SAVIOUR, and immediately, He that comes, is this Partie here, from Edom. He is our SAVIOUR, and besides Him there is none. Even CHRIST the LORD. 2 The other is in the Text it self, in these words: Torcular calcavi solus, I have trod the wine-press alone. Words, so proper to CHRIST, so everywhere ascribed to Him, and to Him only, as you shall not read them any where applied to any other: no, not by the Jemes themselves. So as, if there were no more but these two, they shew it plainly enough, it is, it can be none but CHRIST.

And CHRIST, when? Even this day, of all dayes. His coming here from Edom, will fall out to be His rising from the dead. His return from Bozra nothing but His vanquishing of Hell. We may use His words in applying it, Thou hast not left my soul in Hell, but brought me back from the deep of the earth again. Nothing but the act of His rising again. So that, this very morning was this Scripture fulfilled in our ears.

20.

I

The whole text entire is a dialogue between two, 1 the Prophet; and 2 CHRIST. There are in it two Questions; and to the two questions two Answers. 1 The Prophets first question is touching the Party Himself, who he is; in these words, Who is this? To which, the Party Himself answers, in the same verse, these words, that am I, one that, &c.

II

The Prophets second question is about his colours, why He was all in red (in the second verse: Wherefore then is thy apparel, &c. The answer to that is (in the third verse) in these: I have trodden, &c. For I will tread them down.

Of CHRIST: Of His rising or coming back: of his colours: of the wine-press, that gave Him this tincture, or rather of the two wine-presses: 1 the wine-press of Redemption, first; 2 and then, of the other wine-press of Vengeance.

I
The first Question touching the Party: who it is.
Psal. 60. 6.

THE Prophets use to speak of things to come, as if they saw them present before their eyes. That makes their Prophecies be called Visions. In his vision here, the Prophet being taken up in spirit, sees one coming. Coming, whence? From the Land or Countrey of Idumaea or Edom. From what place there? From Bozra the chief City in the Land, the place of greatest strength. Who will lead me into the strong City? That is Bozra: Who will bring me into Edom? He that can do the first, can do the latter. Win Bozra, and Edom is won.

There was a crie in the end of the Chapter before: Behold, here comes your SAVIOUR. He looked, and saw one coming. Two things he descries in this Party. 1 One, His habit, that he was formosus in stola, very richly arrayed. 2 The other, His gate: that He came stoutly marching, or pacing the ground very strongly. Two good familiar notes, to describe a stranger by. His apparel, whether rich or mean; which the world, most commonly takes notice of men, by. His Gate: for, weak men have but a feeble gate. Valiant strong men tread upon the ground so, as, by it, you may discern their strength.

Now, this Party He came so goodly in His apparel, so stately in His March, as if, by all likelihood, He had made some conquest in Edom (the place He came from:) had had a victory in Bozra (the City where he had been.) And the truth is, so He had. He saith it in the third verse, He had trodden down his enemies, had trampled upon them, made the blood even start out of them; which blood of theirs had all to stained His garments. This was no evil newes, for Esaies Countreymen, the people of God; Edom was the worst enemy they had.

With joy then: but, not without admiration, such a Party sees the Prophet come toward him. Sees Him; but knows Him not: thinks Him worthy the knowing: so thinking, and not knowing, is desirous to be instructed, concerning him. Out of this desire, asks, quis est? Not, of himself, (he durst not be so bold) Who are you? but of some stander by, Whom have we here? Can you tell, who this might be? The first question.

What is meant
1 By Edom.
Mat. 2. 14.

Apoc. 9. 10.

But before we come to the question, a word or two of the place where he had been, and whence He came: Edom, and Bozra what is meant by them? For, if this Party be CHRIST; CHRIST was in Egypt a Child: but never in Edom, that we read; never at Bozra in all his life. So as here, we are to leave the letter. Some other it might be the letter might mean: we will not much stand to look after Him. For however possibly some such there was, yet it will plainly appear by the sequel, that the testimony of JE S U S, as it is of each other, so it is the spirit of this prophesie.

Go we then to the Kernel, and let the husk lie: let go the dead letter, and take we to us the spiritual meaning that hath some life in it. For, what care we for the literal Edom or Bozra, what became of them: what are they to us? Let us compare spirituall things with spiritual things: that is it must do us good.

Apoc. 11. 3.

I will give you a key to this, and such like Scriptures. Familiar it is in the Prophets (nothing more, than) to speak to their People, in their own language; than to exresse their ghostly enemies, the both mortal and immortal enemies of their souls, under the termes and titles of those Nations and Cities, as were the known sworn enemies of the Common-wealth of Israel. As, of Egypt where they were in bondage: as of Babylon, where, in captivity: elsewhere as of Edom here, who maliced them more than both those. If the Angel tell us right, Rev. XI. there is a Spiritual Sodom and Egypt, where our LORD was crucified: and, if they, why not a spiritual Edom too, whence our LORD rose again? Put all three together, Egypt, Babel, Edom: all their enmities, all are nothing to the hatred, that Hell bears us. But

But yet, if you ask, of the three which was the worst? That, was Edom. To shew, the Prophet, here, made good choice of his place: Edom upon earth, comes nearest to the kingdom of darknesse in Hell, of all the rest. And that, in these respects:

First, they were the wickedest people under the Sunne. If there were any Divels upon earth, it was they: if the Divil, of any Countrey, he would choose to be an Edomite. No place on earth, that resembled Hell neerer: next to Hell on earth, was Edom, for all that nought was. Malachi calls Edom, the border of all wickednesse; a people with whom God was angry for ever. In which very points, no enemies so fitly expresse the enemies of our soul, against whom the anger of God is eternal, and the smoke of whose torments shall ascend for ever. Hell, for all that nought is. That, if the power of darknesse, and Hell it self, if they be to be expressed by any place on earth, they cannot be better expressed than in these, Edom and Bozra.

Apoc. 14. 11.

I will give you another. The Edomites were the posterity of Esau: the same is Edom. So, they were the nearest of kinne to the Jewes, of all Nations; so, should have been their best friends. The Jewes and they came of two brethren: Edom was the elder: that was the grief, that the people of Israel coming of Jacob the younger brother, had enlarged their border; got them a better seat and Countrey by farre, than they (the Edomites) had: Hence grew envie: and an enemy out of envie, is ever the worst. So were they: the most cankred enemies that Israel had. The case is so between us and the evil spirits. Angels they were (we know) and so, in a sort, elder brethren to us. Of the two intellectual natures, they the first created. Our case (now) CHRIST be thanked, is much better than theirs, which is that enraged them against us, as much and more, than ever any Edomite against Israel. Hell, for rancor and envie.

Gen. 36. 11.

Yet one more: they were ready to do Gods people all the mischief, they were able; and, when they were not able of themselves, they shewed their good wills, though; set on others. And when they had won Jerusalem, cryed Down with it, down with it, even to the ground: no lesse would serve. And when it was on the ground, insulted and rejoyced above measure: Remember the children of Edom; this is right the Divels property quarto modo. He that hath but the heart of a man, will even rue, to see his enemy lying in extreme misery. None but very Divels, or Divels incarnate will do so: corrupt their passion, cast off all pitie; rejoyce, insult, take delight at ones destruction. Hell for their δυναμεία, insulting over men in misery.

Psal. 137. 7.

But will ye go even to the letter? None did ever so much mischief to David, as did Doeg: he was an Edomite. Nor none so much to the Son of David, CHRIST; none bore more malice to him, first and last, than did Herod; and He was an Edomite. So, which way soever we take it, next the kingdom of darknesse was Edom upon earth. And Christ coming from thence, may well be said to come from Edom.

1 Sam. 22. 9.

But, what say you to Bozra? This: that if the Countrey of Edom, do well set before us the whole kingdom of darknesse, or region of death; Bozra may well stand for Hell it self. Bozra, was the strongest hold of that kingdom; Hell, is so of this. The whole Countrey of Idumea was called and known by the name of Uz, that is of strength; And, what of such strength, as death? all the sons of men stoop to him. Bozra was called the strong City: Hell is as strong as it every way. They write it was ironed with huge high rocks on all sides: onely one cleft to come to it, by. And, when you were in, there must you perish: no getting out again. For all the world like to Hell, as Abraham describes it to him that was in it, They that would go from this place to you cannot possibly; neither can they come from thence to us; the gulf is so great, no getting out. No Habeas corpus, from death; No habeas animam out of Hell, you must let that alone for ever.

2. By Bozra.

Psal. 60. 9.

Luk. 16. 26.

Psal. 49. 8.

Now then, have we the Prophets true Edom; his very Bozra, indeed. By this, we understand what they mean. Edom, the kingdom of darknesse and death: Bozra, the seat of the Prince of darknesse (that is) Hell it self. From both which CHRIST, this day, returned. His soul was not left in Hell: His flesh saw not (but rose from) corruption.

Psal. 16. 10.

For, over Edom, strong it was, yet David cast his shoe over it, (that is, after the Hebrew phrase) set his foot upon it, and trod it downe. And Bozra, as impregnable a hold as it was holden, yet David won it was led into the strong City: led into it, and came thence again. So did the Son of David; this day from his Edom, death, how strong soever, yet swallowed up in victorie, this day. And, from Hell His Bozra: how hard soever, it held (as he that was in it, found there was no getting thence) CHRIST is got forth, we see. How many souls soever there were left, His was not left there.

Psal. 108. 9.

1 Cor. 15. 54.

And, when did He this? when, solutus doloribus inferni, He loosed the pains of Hell; trod upon the Serpents head, and all to bruised it; took from death his sting; from Hell his victorie (that is) his Standard, alluding to the Roman Standard that had in it the Image of the goddess Victorie. Seized upon the Chirographum contra nos, the Rag-man roll, that made so much against us; took it, rent it, and so rent, nailed it to His Crosse, made His Banner of it (of the Law cancelled) hanging at it Banner-wise. And having thus spoiled principalities and Powers, He made an open shew of them, triumphed over them in semetipso, in His own person: (All three are in Col. 2.) and triumphantly came thence with the keyes of Edom and Bozra both, of Hell and of death, both at His girdle, as He shewes himself, Apoc. 1. And when was this? if ever, on this very day: On which, having made a full and perfect conquest of death, and of him that hath the power of death, that is, the Divil (Heb. 2.) He rose and returned thence, this morning, as a mighty Conqueror, saying as Deborah did in her song, O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength, thou hast marched valiantly.

Aet. 2. 24.

1 Cor. 15. 55.

Col. 2. 14.

Coloss. 2. 15.

Heb. 2. 14.

Jud. 5. 21.

And coming back thus, from the debellation of the spiritual Edom, and the breaking up of the true Bozra indeed, it is wondrous, who it should be: Note this: that no body knew CHRIST at His rising; neither Mary Magdalen, nor they that went to Emmans. No more doth the Prophet here.

John 20. 14.
Luke 24. 16.

Now, there was reason to ask this question, for none would ever think it to be CHRIST. There is great odds; it cannot be He. 1. Not He: He was put to death, and put into His grave, and a great stone upon Him, not three dayes since. This Party is alive, and alives like. His Ghost is cannot be: He glides not (as Ghosts, say they, do) but paces the ground very strongly.

2. Not He: He had His apparel shared among the Souldier.; was left all naked. This Party hath gotten Him on glorious apparel, rich scarlet.

3. Not He: for, if He come, He must come in white, in the linnen, He was lapped in, and laid in His grave. This Party comes in quite another colour, all in red. So the colours suit not.

4. To be short, not He: for He was put to a foile, to a foule foile, as ever was any: they did to Him even what they lifted; scorned, insulted upon Him. It was then the hour and power of darkness. This Party, whatsoever He is, hath gotten the upper hand, won the field; marches stately, Conquerour-like. His, the day sure.

Luke 22. 53.

The first ans^r,
That Party is Christ.

Well; yet CHRIST it is. His answer gives Him for no other. To his answer then, the Party (it seems) over-heard the Prophets asking, and is pleased to give an answer to it Himself: we are much bound to him for it. No man can tell, so well as He Himself, who He is. Some other might mistake him, and mis-inform us of Him: Now, we are sure we are right. No error persona.

1 Pet. 2. 22.
60. 13.

His Name indeed, He tells not, but describes Himself by two such Notes, as can agree to none properly but to CHRIST. Of none can these two be so affirmed, as of Him they may. That, by these two, we know, this is CHRIST, as plainly, as if His Name had been spelled to us. 1. Speaking righteousness; and righteousness referred to speech, signifieth truth ever. No guile to be found in His mouth: and, omnis homo is, you know what. 2. Mighty to save: and, Vana salus hominis, vain is the help of man. Whomsoever spake so right as He spake? Or whoeever was so Mighty to save as He? And this is His answer to quis est iste.

That am I. One that spake righteousness, and am mighty to save. Righteous in speaking, mighty in saving, whose word is truth: whose work is salvation. Just and True of my word and promise; Powerful and Mighty in performance of both. The best description (say I) that can be of any man: by his word and deed both.

1. His Natures.
Matth. 1. 21.

And see how well they fit. Speaking is most proper; that, refers to Him, as the Word: (in the beginning was the Word:) to His Divine Nature. Saving, that refers to His very Name JESUS, given Him by the Angel, as man, for that He should save His People from their sins: from which none have power to save, but He. There have you His two Natures.

2. His Office.
Malach. 2. 7.
Dan. 9. 15.

Speaking refers to His Office of Priest: the Priests lips to preserve knowledge: the Law of righteousness to be required at his mouth. Saving, (and that, mightily) pertains to him as a King, is the Office (as Daniel calls Him) of Messiah the Captain. Righteousness He spake by His preaching. Saving, that belongs first to his miraculous suffering; It being far a greater miracle for the Deity to suffer any the least injury, than to create a new World, yea many. But, secondly (which is proper to the Text and Time) in His mighty subduing and treading down Hell and Death, and all the power of Satan. Prophetiza nobis (they said, at His Passion) speak who hit you, there; and Ave Rex, they said too: Both in scorn, but most true, both.

Matth. 27. 24.

3. The Benefits.

You may refer these two, if you please; to His two main benefits redounding to us from these two. Two things there are that undo us: Error and Sin. From His Speaking we receive knowledge of His truth against error. From His Saving, we receive the power of grace, against sin, and so, are saved from sins sequele. Edom and Bozra both. This is His description; and this is enough. A full description of His Person, in His Natures, Offices, Benefits; in Word and in Deed. He it is, and can be none but He. To reflect a little on these two.

speaking.

You will observe, that His Speaking is set down simply, but in His Saving, He is said to be Mighty, or (as the word is) multus ad servandum. So, mark where the multus is. He is not multus ad loquendum, one that saith much; and paucus ad servandum, and then does little, as the manner of the World is. Multus is not there, at His speech. It is put to servandum; There, He is much, and His Might much, Much of might to save.

But, in saving.
Esay 55. 7.

That His Might is not put, in treading down or destroying. No, but multus ad ignoscendum, in the fifty five Chapter before: and multus ad servandum, here. Mighty to shew mercy, and to save. Yet, mighty He is too, to destroy and tread down: Else had He not achieved this victory in the Text, Mighty to save, implieth ever mighty to subdue; to subdue, them, whom He saves us from. Yet, of the twain, He chooseth rather the term of saving (though both be true) because saving is with Him prima intentionis: So of the twain, in that He would have His Might appear rather. Mighty to destroy, He will not have mentioned or come in his style: but Mighty to save, that is his title; that, the quality, He takes delight in: delights to describe himself, and to be described by.

Yet he teacheth too: and that first.

You will yet mark also, as the coupling of these two in the description of CHRIST (for, not either of these, alone will serve; but between them both, they make it up) so, that they go together, these two, ever. He saves not any, but those he teaches. And note, the order of them too. For, that that that stands first, he doth first; first teaches. Mighty to save he is; but whom to save? whom he speaks righteousness to, and they hear him, and return not again to their former folly. There is no phantying to our selves, we can dispense with one of these; never care, whether we deal with the former, or no; whether we hear him speak at all: but take hold of the latter, and be saved with a good will. No: you cannot; but if you hear Him speak first. He saith so, and sets them so Himself.

And put this to it, and I have done this point. That, such as is Himself, such, if we hear Him, will He make us to be. And the more true and soothfast any of us is of His word, the more given to do good and save, the liker to Him, and the liker to have our parts in His rising. We know, quis est iste now. This for the first part.

Now, the Prophet hearing Him answer so gently, takes to him a little courage, to ask Him one question more, about His colours: He was a little troubled with them. If You be so Mighty to save, as You say, how comes it then, what ailes Your Garments to be so red? and addes, what kind of red? and he cannot tell, what to liken them better to, than as if He had newly come out of some Wine-press; had been treading Grapes, and pressing out Wine, there. He calls it Wine; but the truth is, it was no Wine: It was very blood. New Wine, in shew; blood indeed; that upon His Garments. So much appeareth in the next verse following. Where He saith Himself plainly, that Blood it was, that was sprinkled upon His Cloaths, and had stained them all over. We know well, our reason leads us, there could be no Vintage, at this time of the year, the season serves not: Blood it was.

But because the Prophet made mention of a Wine-press, had hit on that Simile; taking occasion, upon the naming it, He shapes Him an answer according: That (indeed) He had been in a Wine-press. And, so He had. The truth is, He had been in one: Nay, in two then. In one He had been, before this here. A double Wine-press (we lose nothing by this) we find; CHRIST was in both. We cannot well take notice of the one, but we must needs touch upon the other. But, thus they are distinguished. In that former, it was in torculari calcatus sum solus: In this latter, it is Torcular calcavi solus. In the former, He was Himself trodden and pressed: He was the Grapes and Clusters Himself: In this latter here, He that was trodden on before, gets up again, and doth here tread upon, and here tread down, calcere and conculcare (both words are in the verse) upon some others (as it might be the Edomites) The Press He was trodden in, was His Cross and Passion. This, which He came out of, this day, was in His Descent and Resurrection: Both, proper to this Feast; One to Good-friday, the other, to Easter-day.

To pursue this of the Wine-press a little. The Press, the treading in it, is to make Wine: Calcatus sum is properly of Grapes, the Fruit of the Vine. CHRIST is the true Vine, He saith it Himself. To make Wine of Him, He, and the Clusters, He bare, must be pressed. So He was. Three shrewd streins they gave Him. One in Gethsemane, that made Him sweat blood: The Wine, or Blood (all is one) came forth at all parts of Him. Another, in the Judgement Hall, Gabbatha; which made the blood run forth at His Head, with the Thorns; out of His whole body, with the Scourges; out of His Hands and Feet, with the Nails. The last strein, at Golgotha: where, He was so pressed, that they pressed the very Soul out of His Body, and out ran Blood and Water both. Hac sunt Ecclesie gemina Sacramenta (saith St. Augustine) out came both Sacraments, the twine Sacraments of the Church.

Out of these pressures ran the blood of the Grapes of the true Vine; the fruit whereof (as it is said Judg. 9.) cheereth both GOD and man. GOD as a libamen, or drink-offering to Him. Man as the Cup of salvation to them. But to make this Wine, His Clusters were to be cut; cut, and cast in; cast in, and trodden on; trodden and pressed out: all these, before he came to be Wine in the Cup. As likewise, when he calls Himself, Gratum frumenti, the Wheat Corn, these four, the sickle, the flail, the millstone, the oven, He passed thorow: All went over Him, before He was made bread: The Shew-bread to GOD; to us, the Bread of life.

But, to return to the Wine-press, to tell you the occasion or reason, why thus it behoved to be. It was not idly done; What need then was there of it, this first pressing? we find (1 Cor. 10.) Calix Domini: The Devil hath a Cup. Adam must needs be sipping of it: Eritis sicut Dei, went down sweetly, but poisoned him: turned his nature quite. For Adam was by GOD; planted a natural Vine, a true Root; but thereby, by that Cup degenerated into a wilde strange Vine, which, instead of good Grapes, brought forth Labruscas, Wild Grapes, Grapes of Gall: bitter Clusters, Moses calls them: Coloquintida, the Prophet, Mors in olla, and mors in calice: by which is meant, the deadly fruit of our deadly sins.

But, (as it is in the fifth Chapter of this Prophecie) where GOD planted this Vine first, He made a Wine-press in it: So, the Grapes that came of this strange Vine were cut and cast into the Press, there of came a deadly Wine; of which (saith the Psalmist) In the hand of the LORD there is a Cup; the Wine is red, it is full mixt, and He powres out of it; and the sinners of the Earth are to drink it, dreggs and all. Those sinners were our fathers, and we. It came to Bibite ex hoc omnes: They and we, were to drink of it, all one after another round. Good reason, to drink as we had brewed; to drink the fruit of our own inventions, our own words and works, we had brought forth.

We to be like Him in both.

II.
The second question.
Why His apparel is red?

Eſay 53. 12.
Mat. 20. 39.

About, the cup went: all ſtrained at it. At laſt, to Chriſt it came: He was none of the ſinners, but was found among them. By His goodwill, He would have had it paſs, Tranſeat a me calix iſte; you know who that was. Yet, rather than we, than any of us ſhould take it (it would be our bane, He knew) He took it; off it went, dregs and all. Alas, the myrrhe they gave Him at the beginning, the vinegar at the ending of His Paſſion, were but poor reſemblances of this cup, ſuch as they were. That, another manner draught. We ſee it caſt Him into ſo unnatural a ſweat of blood all over; as, if He had been wrung and cruſhed in a wine-preſs, it could not have been more. This (loz) was the firſt wine-preſs, and Chriſt in it, three dayes agoe; and, what with the ſcourges, nails, and ſpears, beſides, ſo preſſed, as forth it ran (blood or wine, call it what you will,) in ſuch, ſo great quantity, as never ran it more plenteouſly out of any wine-preſs of them all. Here is CHRISTUS in torculari, CHRISTUS calcatus ſum.

Luk. 22. 20.
Gen. 49. 11.

Of which wine ſo preſſed then out of Him, came our Cup, the Cup of this day, the Cup of the New Teſtament in His blood, repreſented by the blood of the grape. Wherein long before, old Jacob foretold, Shilo, ſhould waſh his robe; as, full well He might have done, there came enough to have waſhed it over and over againe. So, you ſee now, how the caſe ſtands. That former, our cup due to us, and no way to Him; He drank for us, that it might paſs from us, and we not drink it. Ours did He drink, that we might drink of His. He, the cup of wrath, that we, the cup of bleſſing: ſet firſt, before God as a Libamen, at the ſight or ſenſe whereof He ſmelleth a favour of reſt, and is appeaſed. After, reached to us, as a ſoveraign reſtorative to recover us of the Devils poiſon (for we alſo have been ſipping at calix demoniorum more or leſs, wo to us for it; and no way but chriſto cure us of it.)

Eſay 51. 22.
1 Cor. 10. 16.

By this time you ſee the need of the firſt preſs; and of His being in it. Into which, He was content to be thrown and there trodden on; all, to ſatiſſie His Father, out of His Juſtice, requiring the drinking up of that cup, by us, or by ſome for us: and it came to His lot. And never was there Lamb ſo meek before the ſhearer, nor Worme ſo eaſie to be trodden on; never cluster lay ſo quiet and ſtill to be bruſed, as did CHRIST in the Preſs of His Paſſion. Ever He be bleſſed for it.

wine-preſs.
CHRISTUS
1 Calcavi.

Now come we to the other of this day in the Text. This is not that we have touched, but another: Wherein the ſtile is altered: no more calcatus ſum, but calcavi and conculcavi too. Up (it ſeems) He gat; and down went they, and upon them He trod. His enemies of Edom lay like ſo many clusters under His feet; and He caſt His ſhooe over them, ſet His foot on them, and paſſed them to pieces.

Pſal. 108. 9.

If it had meant His Paſſion, it had been His own blood: but, this was none of His now; but the blood of His enemies. For, when the year of Redemption was paſt, then came the Day of Vengeance; then, came the time for that, and not before.

Mar. 3. 15.
Eſay 51. 9.

For, after the conſummation eſt of His own preſſure, (ſic oportuit impleri omnem juſticiam) and that all the righteouſneſs He ſpake had been fulfilled: then riſe up, riſe thou arme of the LORD (ſaith the Prophet) and ſhew thy ſelf mighty to ſave: He took Him to His ſecond attribute, to be avenged of thoſe that had been the ruine of us all, the ruine everlaſting, but for Him. To Edom, the Kingdome of death, He went, whither we were to be led Captives: yea, even to Bozra, to Hell it ſelf, and there brake the gates of braſs, and made the Iron barres ſlie in ſunder. He that was weak to ſuffer, became mighty to ſave. Of calcatus, He became Calcator. He that was thrown Him ſelf, threw them now another while, into the Preſs, trod them down, trampled upon them, as upon grapes in a fat, till He made the blood ſpring out of them, and all to ſprinkle His garments, as if He had come forth of a wine-preſs indeed. And we, before, mercifully, rather than mightily, by His Paſſion; now mightily alſo ſaved, by His glorious Reſurrection.

Eſay 45. 2.

Thus have you two ſeveral vines; the natural and the ſtrange vine: the ſweet and the wilde: two Preſſes, that in Jury, that in Edom: two Cups, the curſed Cup, and the Cup of bleſſing: Of Wine or Blood. His own, His enemies blood: One sanguis agni, the blood of the Lamb ſlaine: the other sanguis Draconis, the blood of the Dragon, the red Dragon (Apoc. 12.) trod upon. One of His Paſſion, three dayes ſince: the other of His victory, as to day. Between His burial and His riſing, ſome doing there had been, ſomewhat had been done; ſomewhere He had been; in ſome New Wine-Preſſe, in Bozra, that had given a New tincture of Red to His rayment all over.

Apoc. 5. 6.

Both theſe ſhall you finde together ſet down in one and the ſame Chapter, in two verſes ſtanding cloſe one to the other. Apoc. V. 1 CHRIST repreſented firſt, as a Lamb, a Lamb ſlaine, died in His own blood: this is the firſt Preſs. 2 And immediately, (in the very next verſe) ſtraight repreſented again in a new ſhape, as a Lion, all be-bloody with the blood of His prey: A Lion of the Tribe of Juda; which comes home to this here. For Juda (it is ſaid) he ſhould waſh His robe in the blood of the grape. And ſo much for Torcular Calcavi.

Gen. 49. 9. 11.

We muſt not leave our ſolus in any wiſe: that both theſe He did alone; ſo alone, as not any man in the world with Him in either.

2 Solus, alone.

Mar. 26. 56.
27. 46.

Nor in the firſt; there, preſſed He was alone. All forſook Him: His Diſciples firſt, alone for them. Yet, then, He was not alone; His Father was ſtill with Him: but after, Father and all: as appears by His cry, Why haſt thou forſaken me? Then, was He all alone indeed.

Verſ. 9.

Nor in the ſecond neither. The very next verſe, He complains, how that He looked about Him round, and could not ſee any would once offer to help Him. Out of Bozra He got alone; from death He roſe, conquered, triumphed in ſemetiſo, Himſelf alone. The Angel indeed rolled away the ſtone: but, He was riſen firſt, and the ſtone rolled away after.

Ac.

Accordingly, we to reckon of Him: that since in both these Presses He was for us, He, and none but He: that His, and none but His be the glory of both. That seeing neither we for our selves, nor any for us, could bring this to pass, but He and He only; He and He only might have the whole honor of both; have no partner in that which is only His due, and no creatures else at all, either in heaven or earth.

And, is Christ come from Bozra? then, be sure of this, that He returning thus in triumph (as it is in the LXVIII. Psalme, the Psalme of the Resurrection) He will not leave us behind, for whom He did all this, but His own will he bring againe, as He did from Basan: as from Basan, so from Bozra: as from the deep pit of the Sea, so from the deep pit of Hell. He that raised Iesus, shall by Iesus raise us up also from the Aduma of Edom, the red mould of the earth, the power of the grave: and from the Bozra of Hell too, the gulf whence there is no escaping out. Will make us in Him (saith the Apostle) more than conquerors, and tread down Satan under our feet.

Psal. 68. 22.
2 Cor. 4. 14.
Rom. 8. 37.

You see, how Christ's garments came to be red. Of the wine-press that made them so, we have spoken; but not of the colour it self. A word of that too. It was His colour at His Passion. They put Him in purple: then it was His weed in derision: and so was it in earnest. Both red it was it self, and so, He made it more with the dye of His own blood. And the same colour He is now in again, at His Rising. Not with His own, now; but, with the blood of the wounded Edomites; whom treading under His feet, their blood bettained Him and His apparel. So; one and the same colour at both: Dying and Rising, in red; but, with difference, as much as is between His own, and his enemies blood.

The Spouse in the Canticles, asked of her Beloved's colours, saith of him; My Beloved is white and red; white, of his own proper: So he was, when he shewed himself in kind; transfigured in the Mount; His apparel then so white, no Fuller in the earth could come neare it. White of himself: how comes He red then? Not of Himself, that, but for us. That is our natural colour, we are borne polluted in our own blood. It is sinnes colour, that: for shame is the colour of sinne. Our sinnes, (saith Esaie, Chap. 1.) are as crimson, of as deep dye as any purple. This, the true tincture of our sinnes: the Edomites colour right: for Edom is red. The tincture (I say) of our sin; original, died in the wool; and then againe of our sinnes actual, died in the cloth too. Twice died: so was Christ twice. Once in His own: againe in His enemies: right dibaphus, a perfect full colour; a true purple, of a double dye, His too. So was it meet for crimson sinners, to have a crimson Saviour: a Saviour of such a colour it behoved us to have. Coming then to save us, off went His white; on went our red: laid by His own righteousness to be clothed with our sinne. He to wear our colours; that we, His. He, in our red, that we, in His white. So we finde (Apoc. 7.) our robes are not only washed clean, but dyed a pure white in the blood of the Lamb. Yea, He dyed and rose againe both, in our colours; that we might dye and rise too, in His. We fall now again upon the same point in the colours, we did before, in the cups. He to drink the soure vinegar of our wilde grapes, that we might drink His sweet in the cup of blessing. O cup of blessing, may we say of this cup! O stolam formosam, of that colour! Illi gloriosam, nobis fructuosam: glorious to Him, no less fruitful to us. He, in mount Golgotha, like to us; that we, in Mount Tabor, like to Him. This is the substance of our rejoycing in this colour.

One more: how well this colour fits Him, in respect of His two Titles, Loquens iustitiam, and Multus ad servandum! Loquens iustitiam, is to weare red: Potens ad servandum is so too. The first. To whom is this colour given? Scarlet is allowed the degree of Doctors. Why? for their speaking righteousness to us, the righteousness of God, that which Christ spake. Nay; even they which speak but the righteousness of mans Law, they are honored with it to. But Christ spake so as never man spake, and so, call ye none on earth Doctor, but one: none in comparison of Him. So, of all, He to wear it. This ye shall observe; in the Revelation, at the first appearing of the Lamb, there was a Book with seven seales. No man would meddle with it: the Lamb took it, opened the seales, read it, read out of it a Lecture of Righteousnesse to the whole world, the righteousness of God, that shall make us so before Him. Let Him be arrayed in scarlet, it is His due: His Doctors weed.

Rev. 5. 6.

This is no new thing. The Heathen King propounded it for a reward to any that could read the hand-writing on the wall. Daniel did it, and had it. Sed ecce major Daniele hic. Thus was it in the Law. This colour was the ground of the Ephod; a principal ingredient into the Priests vesture. Why? For, his lips were to preserve knowledge; all to require the Law from his mouth. And indeed, the very lips then selves, that we speak righteousness with, are of the same colour. In the Canticles it is said, His lips are like a scarlet thread. And the fruit of the lips hath God created peace: and the fruit of peace is sown in righteousness: and, till that be sown and spoken, never any hope of true peace.

Cant. 41. 3.

Enough for speaking. What say you to the other, Potens ad servandum? which (of the twain) seems the more proper to this time and place? I say, that way, it fits Him too, this colour. Men of warre, great Captains, mighty to save us from the enemies, they take it to themselves, and their colour it is, of right. A plain Text for it, Nah. II. Their valiant men (or Captains) are in scarlet. And I told you, Christ, by Daniel, is called Captain Messias; and so well might. So, in His late conflict with Edom, He shewed himself: fought for us, even to blood. Many a bloody wound it cost him, but returned with the spoil of his enemies, stained with their blood: And, who so is able ble so to do, is worthy to wear it. So, in this respect also, so in both, his colours become him well.

Shall I put you in mind, that there is in these two, in either of them, a kind of wine-press? In mighty to save, it is evident: Trodden in one press, treading in another. Not so evident in the speaking of righteousness. Yet even in that also, there is a press going. For, when we read, what do we but gather grapes here and there? and when we study what we have gathered, then are we even in torculari, and press them we do, and press out of them that which daily you taste of. I know there is great odds in the liquors so pressed, and that a cluster of Ephraim is worth a whole vintage of Abiezer: but, for that, every man as he may. Nay, it may be further said, and that truly, that even this great title, [Mighty to save] comes under loquens justitiam. There is in the word of righteousness a saving power. Take the word (saith St. James) graff it in you, it is able to save your souls: even that, wherein we of this calling, in a sort, participate with CHRIST, while, by attending to reading and doctrine, we save both our selves and them that hear us; we tread down sin, and save sinners from seeking death in the error of their life.

But though there be in the Word a saving power; yet is not all saving power in that, nor in that only: there is a press beside. For, this press is going continually among us; but, there is another that goes but at times. But, in that, it goes at such times, as it falls in fit with the wine-press here. Nay, falls in most fit of all the rest. For, of it comes very wine indeed, the blood of the grapes of the true vine, which in the blessed Sacrament is reached to us; and with it, is given us that, for which it was given, even Remission of sins. Not only represented therein, but even exhibited to us. Both which when we partake, then have we a full and perfect communion with CHRIST, this day: of His speaking righteousness in the Word preached: of His power to save in the holy Eucharist ministered. Both presses run for us; and we to partake them both.

I may not end, till I tell you, there remaineth yet another, a third wine-press: that you may take heed of it. I will but point you to it: it may serve as source herbs to eat our Paschal Lamb with. The Sun (they say) danced this morning at CHRIST'S Resurrection: the earth trembled then (I am sure) there was an earthquake at CHRIST'S rising. So, there is trembling to our joy: Exultate in tremore, as the Psalmist will us. The vintage of the earth, when the time of that is come, and when the grapes be ripe and ready for it, One there is, that cryeth to him with the sharp sickle in his hand (Apoc. 14.) to thrust it in, cut off the clusters, and cast them into the great Wine-press of the wrath of God. A dismal day, that: a pitiful slaughter, then. It is there said, the blood shall come up to the horse-bridles by the space of a thousand six hundred furlongs. Keep you out; take heed of coming in that press.

We have a kind Item given us of this, here in the Text, in the last verse. There be two acts of CHRIST: one, of being trodden, the other of treading down. The first is, for His chosen: the other against His enemies. One is called, the Year of Redemption: The other, the Day of Vengeance. The Year of Redemption is already come, and is now; we are in it: during which time, the two former wine-presses run, of the Word: and Sacrament. The Day of Vengeance is not yet come: It is but in his heart; so the Text is: that is, but in His purpose, and intent yet. But certainly, come it will, that day; and with that day, comes the last wine-press with the blood to the bridles: yea it come, and during our year of redemption, that years allowance, we are to endeavor to keep our selves out of it; for, that is the day of vengeance, of ira ventura, GOD'S wrath for ever. So as, all we have to study is, how we may be in at the first two, out at the last press: and the due Christian use of the first, will keep us from the last.

While then it is with us the year of Redemption; and before that day come, while it is yet time of speaking righteousness, that is, to day if ye will hear his voice: while the cup of blessing is held out, if we will take it; lay hold on both. That so, we may be accounted worthy to escape in that day, from that day and the vengeance of it: and may feel the fulness of his saving power in the Word ingrafted, which is able to save our souls; and in the cup of salvation which is joyned with it; and that, to our endless joy. The year of Redemption is last in the verse: with that the Prophet ends: With that, let us end also; and to that end, may all that hath been spoken arrive and bring us.

HEBR. Chap. XIII.

Deus autem pacis, &c.

Ver. 20. The God of peace, that brought again from the dead, our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the Shæp, through the blood of the everlasting Testament.

21. Make you perfect in all good works, to do his will, working in you that which is pleasant in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise for ever and ever, Amen.

These words [who hath brought CHRIST again from the dead] make this a Text proper for this Day. For, as this day, was CHRIST brought againe from thence.

And these words [the blood of the everlasting Testament] make it as proper every way for a Communion. For, there, at a Communion, we are made to drink of that blood. Put these together: 1 The bringing of CHRIST from the dead, 2 and the blood of the Testament, and they will serve well for a Text, at a Communion on Easter-Day.

I will touch in a word, 1 the Nature of the Text, 2 the Summe, and 3 the partition of it.

For the Nature: It is a Benediction. The use, the Church doth make of it and such other like, is to pronounce them over the Congregation, by way of a blessing. For not only the power to pray, to preach, to make and to give the Sacrament, but the power also to bless you, that are Gods people, is annexed, and is a branch of ours, of the Priests Office. You may plainly read the power committed, the act injoyed, and the very form of words prescribed, all in the 6. of Numbers. There God saith, Thus shall you bless the people, (that is) do it you shall; and, thus you shall do it, in hæc verba. Neither was the act Levitical, or then first taken up: It was long before: While Levi was yet in the loines of Abraham; even then it was a part of Melchizedechs Priest-hood, and (if the bread and wine were no more but a refreshing) the only part, that we read of, to say Benedictus over Abraham, as great a Patriarch as he was. There is nothing else mentioned, to shew he was a Priest, but that.

This blessing they used first and last: but rather last. For (lightly) then, the people were altogether. They be not so, at first: but only a few, then. And here (you see) the Apostle makes it his farewell. With this he shuts up his Epistle, and with some other such, all the rest. And that, by CHRISTs example. The last thing that CHRIST did in this world, was: He lift up His hands, to bless His Disciples, and so went away to heaven. And so you shall find it was the manner in the Primitive Church: at the end of the Liturgie, ever to dismiss the assembly with a blessing. Which blessing, they were so conceited of, they would not offer to stirre (nor a man of them) till bowing down their heads heads they had the blessing pronounced over them. As if some great matter had lyen in the missing of it: as if they had been of Jacobs mind, Non dimittam te nisi benedixeris mihi: they would neither let the Priest depart, nor depart themselves, till they had their blessing with them: Such a verme they held in it. The blessing pronounced, they had then leave to go with λαὸν ἀποῦν, in the Greek; Missa est fidelibus, in the Latine Church; and none went away before.

An evil custom hath prevailed with our people: Away they go without blessing, without leave, without care of either. Mark if they run not out, before any blessing; as if it were not worth the taking with them.

Verf. 17.
Mat. 25. 34.

I marvell, how they will be Inheritors of the blessing, that seem to set so little by it. If they meant to hear Come ye blessed, they should (methinks) love it better than by their running from it, they seem to do.

This would be amended. We are herein departed from the Primitive Christians, with whom it was in more regard. Sure, there is more in the neglect of it, than we are aware of.

This blessing could not be delivered in better terms, than in those, that came from the Apostles themselves: which accordingly have been fought up here and there in their writings: and, by the Church, sorted to several dayes, which they seemed best to agree with. As this here, having Easter-day in it, was made an Easter-day benediction. For, the special mention in it of CHRIST brought again from the dead, doth in a manner appropriate it to this Feast, Utter it but thus: The God of peace, who did now, as upon this day, bring again Christ from the dead: do but utter it thus, and it will appear most plainly how well they suit, the Time, and the Text.

The Summe.

For the Sum. It is no more in effect, but shortly this. That GOD would so blefs them, and us, as to make us fit for, and perfect in all good works. A good wish, at any time. But, why at this time specially, upon mention of CHRIST's rising He should wish it, is not seen at first. Yet there is some matter in it; that, at CHRIST's rising, He doth not wish our faith increased, or our hope strengthened, or any other grace or virtue revived: but only, that good works might be perfected in us, and we in them. Surely, this sorting them thus together, seems to imply, as if CHRIST's Resurrection had some more peculiar interest in good works: as (indeed) it hath. And, there hath ever been, and still are more of them done now, at this time, than at any other time of the year.

A general Reason may be given. That what time CHRIST doth for us some principal great work (as, at all the Feasts, He doth some: and now at this time sensibly;) we to take occasion by it, at that time, to do somewhat more than ordinary, in memory and honour of it. More particularly, some such, as may in some sort suit with, and resemble the act of CHRIST then done. As it might be, when CHRIST died, sin to die in us: when CHRIST rose again, good works to rise together with Him. CHRIST's Passion, to be, Sins passion: CHRIST's Resurrection, good works Resurrection. Good-friday is for sin: Easter for good works: Good-friday, to bring sin to death: Easter, to bring good works from the dead. And we, that were dead before to good works, by occasion of this, to revive again to the doing of them: And not (as the manner is with us) sin to have an Easter, to rise, and live again; and good works to be crucified, lie dead, and have no Resurrection.

The Division.

For the Partition. Two verses there are, and two Parts accordingly. 1 The Premises, and 2 the Sequels. The Premises are GOD; and the Sequels, good works. The former verse is nothing but GOD, with his style or addition: The God of peace, who hath brought again, &c. The latter is all for good works, Make you perfect, &c. We may consider them thus. Of the two, 1 One a thing done for us, in the former verse. 2 The other a thing to be done by us, in the latter verse. The bringing back CHRIST, the benefit done us by GOD: The applying good works, our duty to be done to Him for it.

I. The thing done is an act (that is) a bringing back. Which act is but one, but implieth another precedent necessarily. For, ἀναγαγών (which is a bringing back) implieth ἀγαγών, (which is a bringing thither.)

1. To this act there is a concurrence of two Agents. 1 One, the Party, that brought: 2 The other, the Party that is brought. The Party that brought, is GOD, under the name or title of the GOD of peace. The Party, that was brought, is CHRIST; set forth here under the Metaphor of a Shepherd, the great Shepherd of the Sheep.

2. The GOD of peace did bring again this Shepherd; from whence? and how? 3 From whence? From the dead. Then, among the dead He was, first. First, brought thither: 4 How from thence? by what means? By the blood of a Testament everlasting. All which is nothing else, but the Resurrection of CHRIST extended at large through all these points.

3. The thing to be done. That GOD would so blefs them, as to make them, 1 First, fit to do; 2 and then to do good works. 1 Fit to do, in the word κατατίθει. To do: Wherein we consider two things: 1 The doing, to which doing there is a concurrence of two Agents, 1 εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι ὑμῶν, what we to do. 2 And ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, what he to do. 2 And then the work it self expressed in two words, 1 ἐλάνθω, and 2 ἐυαρεσεν: Εὐαρεσεν (that is) his Will: ἐυαρεσεν that which is well-pleasing in his sight. These two be holden for two degrees: and the latter of the twain to have the more in it.

III.

And last of all, the Sequels. Where is to be shewed, how these two hang together, and follow one upon the other. First, the GOD of peace, and the bringing of CHRIST from death. Then how how the bringing of CHRIST from death concerns our bringing forth good works. Which being shewed; what this Feast of Easter hath to do with good works, will fall in of it self. That with CHRIST now rising, they also should now rise: They are thought as good as dead; that there may be a Resurrection of them, at CHRISTs Resurrection.

THE God of peace, &c. Here is a long process. What needs all this setting out his style at length? Why goes he not to the point roundly? And, seeing good works doing is his Errand, why faith he not shortly, God make you given to good works; and no more ado? but tells us a long Tale of Shepherds, and Testaments, and I wote not what (one would think, to small purpose?) But sure, to purpose it is; The Holy Ghost useth to waste words, nor ever speaks but to the point (we may be sure.)

Let us see, and begin with his first title, the God of peace. Gods titles be diverse, as be his Acts: and his Acts are, as his properties be, they proceed from. And (lightly) the Title is taken from the property which best fits the Act it produceth. As, when God proceedeth to punish, He is called the righteous God: when to shew favour, the God of mercy: when to do some great work, the God of power. Now then, this seems not so proper; Should it not rather have been, the God of power which brought again, &c. To bring again from death, seems rather an Act of power, than of peace. One would think so. But being well look't into, it will be found to belong rather to peace. No power of His will be set on working, will ever bring again from death, unless He be first pacified, and made the LORD of peace. Of His power there is no question: Of His peace, there may be some. I shall tell you, why. For, all the Old Testament through, you shall observe, Gods great Title is the Lord of Hosts; which, in the New, you shall never read: but, ever since he rose from the dead, it is instead of it, the God of peace. To the Romanes, Philippians, Thessalonians, &c. and now here to the Hebrews, and still the God of peace. It is not amiss for us, this change. For, if the Lord of Hosts come to be at peace with us, His Hosts shall be all for us, which were against us, while it was no peace. So as, make but God, the God of peace, and more needs not. For, His peace will command His power straight.

When His Hosts were so about Him, it seemed Hostility: how came He then to lay away that Title of the Lord of Hosts, to become Deus pacis? That did He, by thus doing: He brought again one from the dead; and that bringing brought peace, and made this change, Stylo novo, the God of peace.

This brings us to the other, the second Party: He is not named till all be done; and then He is, in the end of the Verse: our Lord and Saviour JESUS CHRIST. But, at first, He is brought in as a Shepherd. Think never the meaner of Him for that. Moses and David, the Founders of the Monarchy of the Jewes; Cyrus and Romulus, the Founders, one of the Persian, the other of the Roman Monarchy, were taken all from the Sheep-folds. The Heathen Poet calls the great Ruler of the Grecian Monarchy, but ποιμήν λαῶν (that is) the Shepherd of the people. CHRIST gives it to Himself, and God doth not disdain it in the LXXX. Psalme. And the name (howsoever it falls to us of the Clergy now) ab initio non fuit sic. Secular men, Joseph, Joshua, and David, were first so termed, and are more often so termed, in the Bible, than we.

The term of Shepherd is well chosen, as referring to the God of peace. Peace is best for Shepherds, and for Sheep. They love peace: then, they are safe; then, they feed quietly. Yet, not so, but that Shepherds have ventured far, to rescue the Sheep from the Bear, and from the Lyon, as did King David; and as the Son of David here, that ventured further than any, Who is brought in (here) in Sanguine, bleeding, howsoever it comes.

But, this Title was not so much for God, as for us: (Pastorem Ovium) and, in Ovium, are we; there come we in: we hold by that word. For so, there is a mutual Relation between Him and us: that we thereby may be assured, by this very term Relative, whither, and whensoever He was brought; all He did or suffered, it was not for Himself. For then, an absolute name of His own would have been put. All was for His Correlative, for Ovium (that is) for us. He is no wayes considered, in all this, as absolutely put, or severed from us, His Flock; but still with Reference and Relation unto us.

But, because others Enter-common in this and other His Names with Him, He bears it with a difference; Pastor Magnus, the Great Shepherd. Not (as Diphilus said to Pompeius Magnus) nostra miseria Magnus es; Great, by making others little: but Misericordia sua Magnus; by making Himself little, to make us great.

The gradual points of His greatness, in respect of others are these. Great first, For, Totum is parte majus, Greater is He that feeds the whole, than they, that but certain parcels of the Flock. All else feed but peeces: So, they be but Petty Shepherds to Him. But He, the whole, main intire Flock: He, and none but He. So, He the Great Shepherd of the Great Flock.

Again, Greater is He that owes the Sheep He feeds, than they that feed the Sheep they owe not. All others feed His Sheep: None can say, Pasces Oves meas. His they be: and reason. For, He made them, they be the Sheep of His Hands: He feeds them, so the Sheep of His Hands, and of His Pasture both.

1 John 3. 1.

But, this is not the greatness here meant. But Ecce quantam charitatem, see the great love to His sheep! Others sell and kill theirs: He is so far from selling, or killing, as He (this Shepherd) was sold and slain for them, though they were His own. Paid for them, bought them again; and then He brought them again. It may be, there were others had ventured their lives; but not lost them, and so lost them, as He did. Which makes Him not only Great, but Prima Magnitudinis (that is) simply the Greatest that ever was.

Of which Greatness two great proofs there are, in the two words, 1 Sanguis, and 2 Testamentum. Sanguis, a great Price; Testamentum, a great Legacy. Sanguis, what He suffered; Testamentum, what He did for them.

In sanguine,
blood.

The next word is in sanguine, a Shepherd, in His blood. So, this Shepherd sweat blood, yet He could bring them back. It was no easie matter; it cost blood: and, not any blood, (such as he could well spare) but, it cost Him His life-blood. It could not be the blood of the Testament, but there must be a Testament: and, a Testament there cannot be, but the Testator must dye. So, He died, He was brought to the dead, for it. This blood brought Him to His Testament, which is further than blood.

The two Acts.

We find there were two Acts: 1 One exprest, brought Him thence, ἀναγαγὼν. 2 The other implied, brought Him thither, ἀγαγὼν: But first, brought thither, before brought thence. We will touch them both. 1 Why brought thither, and how? 2 and why brought thence, and how?

Brought thither.

If, when He was brought thence, it was peace: when He was brought thither, it was none. How came it, there was none? What made this separation? That did sinne: sinne brake the peace.

2 Cor. 5. 22.

Why, sin touched not Him, He knew no sin. True: it was not for Himself, nor for any sin of His. Whose then? Here are but two, 1 Pastor, 2 and Ovium: Pastor, He; Ovium, we. If not the Shepherds, then the Sheeps sin: if not His, ours. And so it was: Peccata vestra (saith God, in Esey) and speaks it to us. No quarrel He had to the Shepherd: nothing to say to CHRIST, as CHRIST. But he would needs be dealing with Sheep, and His Sheep fell to straying; and light into the Wolves Den: And thither He must go, to fetch them, if He will have them.

Esey 53. 6.

For Ovium then, is all this ado; and that is for us. For, all we (as Sheep) had gone astray. I may say farther; all we (as Sheep) were appointed to the slaughter. So it was, we should have been carried thither, and the Lord laid upon Him the transgressions of us all; and so, he was carried for us: This Pastor became tanquam Ovis, as a Sheep, for His Sheep; and was brought thither, and the wolves did to him whatsoever they would.

John 18. 8.

As if God had said: away with these Sheep: Incident in Lupos, quia nolunt regi à Pastore, to the Wolves with them, seeing they will be kept in no Fold. But, that, the Shepherd indured not: but rather then they should, He would. When it came to this, who shall go thither, Pastor, or Ovium, the Sheep, or the Shepherd? Sinite hos abire (they be his own words) Let them go their way; let the Sheep go, and smite the Shepherd; sentence him to be carried thither. The Sheep were to be, they should have been: but, the Shepherd was. In sanguine nostro, it should have been; In sanguine suo, His blood, it was. So, to spare ours, he spilt His own.

thence.

Thither now He is brought. Brought thither, by His own blood-shedding. We can understand that, well: but not, how He should be brought thence by His blood. Yet, the Text is plain, how He was brought again, in sanguine, by His blood.

Chap. 9. 22.

First then, let us make God, the God of peace: and, when He is so, you soon see Him bring Him back again. That, which broke the peace (as we said) the very thing that carried Him to the Cross, took Him down thence dead, carried Him to His Grave, and there lodged him among the dead, was sin. Away with sin then, that so there may be peace. But, there is no taking away sin, but by shedding of blood; the blood, either of Pastor, or of Ovium, one of them.

3.
In sanguine, By the blood.
Ephes. 2. 14.
Col. 1. 20.

Why then, here is blood; even the Shepherds blood: and shed it is; and, by the shedding of it, sin is taken away, and with sin Gods displeasure. It is the Apostles own word (Ephes. 2. 16.) Hatred was slain; and so, hatred being slain, peace followed of her own accord. He was our peace (saith the Apostle) in one place: He made our peace, or pacified all by His blood, in another.

1. 88. 5.

Now then, upon this peace, He, that was before carried away, was brought back again: And so, well might be. For, all being discharged, He was then to be inter mortuos liber, no longer bound, but free from the dead: not to be kept in prison any longer, but, to come forth again. And, by His very blood, to come forth again. For, it was of the nature of a Ransome; which being laid down, the Prisoner, that was brought thither, is to go thence, whither he will. For, a Ransome hath Potestatem Eduktivam or Reductivam, a power to bring forth, or bring back again from any captivity.

1 Sam. 2. 6.

In both these bringings, God had His Hand: God bringeth to death, and bringeth back again. True (if ever) in this Shepherd. Brought Him to the dead, as the Lord of Hosts. Brought Him from the dead, as being now pacified, and the God of peace. Out of His justice, God smit the Shepherd; out of His love to His Sheep, the Shepherd was smitten. But, Quem deduxit iratus, reduxit placatus; whom, of His just wrath against sin, He brought thither; now having fulfilled all righteousness, transfers, he was to bring thence again. And so, brought back he was; and, the same way that he was carried thither. Carried, the way of justice, to satisfy for them, he had undertaken for. And having fully satisfied for them, was in very justice to be brought back again. And so he was: God accepted his passion in full satisfaction, gave present order, for his raising again.

And, let not this phrase, of Gods bringing back, or of CHRIST's coming back; of Gods raising him, or of CHRIST's rising, any thing trouble you. The Resurrection is one entire Act of two joyn't Agents, that both had their hands in it. Ascribed one while to CHRIST himself, that he rose, that he came back, to shew, that he had power to lay down his life; and power to take it again. Another while, to God; that he raised him, that he brought him back: to shew, that God was fully satisfied and well pleased with it; reach him his hand (as it were) to bring him thence againe.

Joh. 10. 18.

To shew you the benefit that riseth to us, by this his rising. Brought thither he was, to the dead: so, it lay us upon: if he had not, we should. We were even carrying thither; and that we might not, He was. Brought thence He was, from the dead: So, it stood us in hand: if He had not been brought thence, we should never have come thence, but been left to have lien there World without end. Brought thither He would be: He, and not we: He without us. So careful He was, not to spare Himself, that we might be spared. Brought thence He would not be; not without His sheep we may be sure: He would bring us thence too, or He would not be brought thence without us. You may see Him, in the Parable, coming with His lost sheep on His shoulders. That one sheep is the image of us all. So careful He was, as He laid Him on his own neck, to be sure: which is the true portraiture or representation of His ἀναγών. That, if the God of peace bring Him back, He must bring them also: For He will not come back without them. Upon His bringing back from death, is ours founded: in Him, all His were brought back. In His person, our Nature: in our Nature we all.

Luk. 15. 3.

Think you, after the payment of such a price; He will come back Himself alone, He will let the sheep be carried thither, and not see them brought back again? He did not suffer all this (we may be sure) to come away thence, and leave them behind Him. It was never seen, that any that paid after so high a rate for any, be it what it will, that when he had done, would not see it brought away, but lose all his labour and cost. No: as sure as himself was brought, so sure he will bring them, whom he would not part from; (He will die first.) Nothing shall part them now. Pastor and Ovium, sheep and Shepherd now, or no bargain. He with his flock, and His flock with Him; it with him, and He with it: He and they, or not he himself, both together, or nor at all. Will you hear himself say as much? Father, my will is, that whither I go, whence I come, where I am, thither, thence, and there, these be also.

But when he had brought us thence, what shall become of us (trow?) Will he leave us at random, to wander in the Mountaines? No: but, Ubi desinit Pastor, ibi incipit Testator, where the Shepherd goes out, the Testator comes in; which we find plainly in the word Testament. For (though peace be a fur blessing in itself, if no more but it; and bringing back be worth the while; yet) here is now a greater matter than so. There is more in the blood than we are aware of. This is also meant: that there is the blood of a Testament, which bodeth some further matter. There should need no Testament, if it were for nothing but to make peace. A Covenant would serve for that: My Covenant of peace would I make with thee (saith God.) Sanguis fœderis would have done that, if there had been no more but so. But here, it is the blood of a Testament.

Sanguine Testamenti, the blood of the Testament

It is Sanguis cum Testamento annexo; Blood, with a Testament annexed. Beside the pacification and back-bringing, this Scripture offereth more grace; even a Testamentarie matter to be administered for our farther behoof.

Ezek. 37. 26.

For, I ask. Every drop of this blood is more worth than many worlds: Shall this blood then so precious, of so great a Person, as the Sonne of God, be spent, to bring forth nothing but pardon and peace? Being of so great a value, shall it produce but so poor an effect? Pity it should be shed, to bring forth nothing, but a few sheep from death. There is enough in it, to serve further, to make a purchase; which he may dispose of to them, he will vouchsafe to bring again from the dead. For, when he hath brought them thence, how he will dispose them, that would be thought on too.

I find then ascribed to his blood, a price: not only of ἀπολύτρωσις (that is) a Redemption or Ransome; but also ἀντίληψις (that is) of Perquisition, or Purchase. And I find them both in one vers. (Ephes. 1. 14.) So that, this blood availed, as to pay our debt; so, over and above, to make a purchase: Served, not only to procure our peace, but, to state us in a condition better than ever we were before. Not only brought us, but bought us: Nay, not only bought us, and brought us back; but bought for us further an everlasting inheritance, and brought us to it.

Two powers were in it: 1. as sanguis fœderis, the Blood of the Covenant, the Covenant of peace: for, in blood, were the Covenants made; that, with Abraham, in Gen. 15. that with Moses, in Exod. 24. in blood both: And among the Heathen men, never any Covenant of peace, but in blood. Now, for peace, this were enough. But, it is sanguis Testamenti too, the blood of a Testament: which is founded upon better promises, bequeaths legacies, disposeth of estates. Matter far of a higher nature, than bare peace. As the blood of the Covenant, so it pacifieth and appeaseth: As the blood of the Testament, so it passeth over, and conveyeth besides.

Gen. 15. 9.
Exod. 24. 8.

But

But say, it did not; it were for nothing else, but our peace: Yet, it is much better for us, that our peace go by Testament, rather than by a Covenant. Leagues, Covenants, Edicts of Pacification have oft been, and are (we see) daily broken. Small hold of them: A stronger hold than so, behoved us. A stronger hold there is not, than that of a Testament. That is holden inviolable, never to be reversed. Nothing in rebus humanis is held more sacred. So as, peace by a Testament, is far the surer of the twain.

Testament eterni, Of the everlasting Testament.
Mic. 5. 2.

Of which Testament, and the greatness of it, there is much to be said. For, it is not as other Testaments, to be fully administred: This shall never be so; it is Everlasting. Everlasting: For, so is he that made it: His goings out are from Everlasting. Everlasting: For, so is the Testament it self: Though it be executed in time, it was made ab eterno, and lay by him all the while. Everlasting: For, so is the Blood wherewith it is sealed: the vertue and vigour thereof doth still continue as a fountaine in-exhaust, never dry; but flowing still as fresh, as the very first day, his side was first opened. We, that now live, come to it, of even-hand with the Apostles themselves, that were then at the opening. And they that come after us, shall not come too late, but to full as good a match, as either they or we. Everlasting: For, the legacies of it are so. Nor, as with us, of things temporal: Nor as of the former Testament of the land of Canaan, now grown a barren Wilderness: but of eternal life, and joy, and blis; of eternity it self. And lastly, Everlasting: That we may look for no more: Our Gospel is Evangelium aeternum (Rev. 14.) None to come after it. This is the last: and so to last for ever.

Revel. 14. 6.

Now lay these together and tell me: Was he not the Great Shepherd indeed, that endured this carrying thither, whence this day he came? that paid this great Ransome; purchased this great estate, made this great Will; disposed these great Legacies, even his heavenly Kingdom to his little flock? was he not every way as good, as great (which is the true greatness: εὐ καὶ μέγεθος) here with us, men be good, because they be great: with God they be great, because they be Good: For this his great Love, his great Price, his great Testament, was he not worthy to wear his title of Pastor magnus, of Pastor, and of Testator, both? For so, both he was: And we, not only his Sheep, but his Legataries: both, in his Pastor-ship, and in his Testator-ship: in his bringing forward, and in his bringing backward: No ways to be severed from us. He procured no peace, shed no Blood, made no Testament; was neither brought to the dead, nor from the dead for himself, but for his flock: for us still. All he did, all he suffered, all he bequeathed, all he was, he was for us.

And now, when all is done, then now (lo) he is the LORD JESUS CHRIST. Till then, a Shepherd wholly and solely: The more are we beholden to him. Then (lo) he tells us his name, that he is the great Shepherd, he that was brought back: the blood, his; his, the Testament. Truly called the Testament: There can no Inventorie be made of this. It hath not entred in the heart of man to conceive, what things God hath prepared for those, that have their part in this Testament: above all that we can desire or imagine. Upon earth, there is no greater thing than a Kingdom: and, no less than a Kingdom, it is his Father's will to dispose unto us. But, a Kingdom eternal, all glorious and blessed: far above these here.

Luk. 12. 32.

II.
The thing to be done by us, 1 The fitting or doing.

All this is a good hearing. Hitherto we have heard nothing, but pleaseth us well. God at peace: The Shepherd brought to death, that we might not: and brought from death, that we also might be brought from thence: and not brought, and left to the wide world; but further, to receive those good things which are comprized in His Testament. This is done: done by Him for us. Now, to that which is to be done; to be done by us. Not, for Him: (I should not do well to say so) but indeed, for our selves. For so, for us, in the end, it will prove. Both what He did, and what we do our selves.

That, which, on our part, the Apostle wisheth us, is, that we may be so happy, as that God would in effect do the same for us, He did for Him: (that is) bring us back; back from our sinful course of life, to a new, given to do good works.

The Resurrection is here termed ἀναγωγή, a bringing back. So that, any bringing back from the worse to the better, carryeth the Type, is a kind of a Resurrection, referres to that of CHRIST: who died, and rose, that sinne might die, and that good works might rise in us. Both the Time and the Text lay upon us this duty, to see, if good works that seem to be dead and gone, we can bring life to them, and make them to rise again.

The rule of reason is: Unumquodque propter operationem suam; every thing is, and hath his being, for the work, it is to do. And, these are the works; which we were born, and came into the world to do. The Apostle speaks it plainly: we were created for good works, to walk in them (Ephes. II. X.) And again: That we were redeemed, to be a people zealously given to good works (Titus II. XIV.) So, they come doubly commended to us, as the end of our Creation and Redemption, both.

In this Text (we see) it is Gods will, it is His good pleasure, we do them: if we any thing regard either His will, or pleasure.

In this Text, the Apostle prayes, that we may be made perfect, in them. So, unperfect we are, without them: unperfect we, and our faith both. For, by works is our faith made perfect (Jam. 2.) even as Abrahams faith was. And, the faith, that is without them, it is not only unperfect, but stark dead: so as, that faith needs a Resurrection, to be brought from the dead again.

James 2. 22.

And,

And, whatsoever become of the rest, in this Text it is, that He hath not left them out, nor unremembered in His Testament. They are in it: and divers good Legacies to us for them. Which, if we mean to be Legataries, we must have a care of. For, as His Blood serveth for the taking away of evil works; So doth His Testament, for the bringing again of good. And, as it is good Philosophy: Unumquodque propter operationem suam. So, this is sure; it is found Divinity; Vnus quisque recipit et secundum operationem suam. At our coming back from the dead (whence we all shall come) we shall be disposed of according to them: Receive we shall, every man according to his works. And, when it comes to going, they that have done good works, shall go into everlasting life; and they (not, that have done evil, but they) that have not done good, shall go, you know, whither. Let no man deceive you: the Root of Immortality, the same is the Root of Virtue: But one, and the same Root, both. When all is said, that can be: Naturally, and by very course of kind, good works (you see) do rise out of CHRIST'S Resurrection.

Mar. 16. 27

Make you perfect (so we read it:) which shewes, We are (as indeed we are) in state of imperfection, till we do them. Nay, if that be all, we will never stick for that Cognoscimus imperfectum nostrum, we yield our selves for such, for unperfect: And, that is well. But, we must so find and feel our imperfection, that as the Apostle tells us (in the VI. Chapter before) we strive to be carried forward to perfection, all we may. Else, all our Cognoscimus imperfectum, will stand us in small stead.

Karaptisai
To make perfect.
Psal. 51. 4.
Chap. 6. 1.

Why, is there any perfection in this life? There is: Else, how should the Apostles Exhortation there, or his Blessing (here) take place. I wot well, Absolute, compleat, consummate perfection, in this life there is none: It is agreed of all hands: None may be out of it. Non puto me comprehensisse (saith Saint Paul) I count not my self to have attained: No more must we; not attained. What then? But, this I do (saith he, and so must we;) I forget that which is behind, and endeavour my self to make forward still, to that which is before. Which is the perfection of Travellers, of way-faring men: the further onward on their journey, the nearer their journey end, the more perfect: which is the perfection of this life: For, this life is a journey.

Phil. 3. 13

Now, good works are, as so many steps onward. The Apostle calls them so; the steps of the faith of our Father Abraham, who went that way, and we to follow him in it. And the more of them we do, the more steps do we make, the further still shall we find our selves to depart from iniquity, the nearer still to approach unto GOD in the Land of the living: whither to attain, is the total, or Consummatum est of our perfection.

Phil. 4. 12

But not to keep from you the truth, as it is: The nature of the Apostles word [Karaptisai] is rather to make fit, than to make perfect. Wherein, this he seems to say; That to the doing of good works, there is first requisite a fitness to do them, before we can do them: Karaptisai, and mosai are both in the Text. Fit to do them, yet we can do them. We may not think to do them hand-over-head, at the first dash. In an unfit and indisposed Subject, no Agent can work: Not GOD Himself but by Miracle. Fit then we must be.

Karaptisai
To make fit or even.

Now of our selves, as of our selves, we are not fit so much as to think a good thought, It is 2 Cor. 3. 5. Not so much as to will: For, it is GOD, that worketh in us to will (Phil. 2. 13.) if not these two, 1 Neither think, 2 Not will: then, not to work. No more we are. Neither to begin, (Phil. 1. 4.) nor having begun to go forward, and bring it to an end. Fit, to none of these. Then, made fit we must be. And, who to reduce us to fitness, but this GOD of peace, here, that brought again CHRIST from the dead!

Now, if I shall tell you, what manner of fitness it is, the Apostles word Karaptisai (here) doth import: It is (properly) the fitness, which is, in setting that in, which was out of joynt: in doing the part of a good Bone-setter. This is the very true and native sense of the word; Set you in joynt, to do good works. For the Apostle (Ephes. 4. and Colos. 2.) tells us, that the Church and things Spiritual go by joynts and sinews, whereof they are compact, and by which they have their action and motion. And, where there are joynts, there may be (and other-whiles, there is) a disjoynting or dislocation: no less in things spiritual, than in the natural body. And that is when things are mis-forted, or put out of their right places.

Karaptisai
To set in joynt

Eph. 4. 16.
Col. 2. 19.

Now, that our Nature is not right in joynt, is so evident, that the very Heathen men have seen and confessed it.

And, by a fall things come out of joynt: and (indeed) so they did: Adams fall we call it, and we call it right. Sin, which before broke the peace; which made the going from or departure; which needed the bringing back; the same sin, here now again, put all out of joynt. And, things out of joynt are never quiet, never at peace and rest, till they be set right again. But when all is in frame, all is in peace: and so it refers well, to the GOD of peace, who is to do it.

And mark again. The putting in joynt, is nothing, but a bringing back again to the right place, whence it slipped: That still there is good coherence with that which went before: The peace-maker, the bringer back, the bone-setter are all one.

The force or fulness of the Apostles Simile (out of joynt) you shall never fully conceive, till you make in hand some good work of some moment: and then you shall for certain. For, do but mark me then, how many Rubs, Lets, Impediments there will be, as it were so many puttings out of joynt, yet it can be brought to pass. This wants, or that wants: one thing or other frames not. A sinew thrinks, a bone bone is out, somewhat is awry : and what ado there is, yet we can get it aright ? Either the will is averfe, and we have no mind to it ; or the power is shrunk, and the means fail us ; or the time serves not ; or the place is not meet, or the parties to be dealt with, we find them undisposed. And the misery is, when one is got in, the other is out again. That, the wit of man could not have devised a fitter term, to have expressed it in. This for the disease.

Verse 21.

What way doth God take, to set us right ? First, by our Ministry and Means. For, it is a part of our profession under God, this same καταρτισμός, to set the Church in, and every Member that is out of joynt. (You may read it, in this very term (Ephes. 4. 12.) οἱς καταρτιζόμεν) And that we do, by applying outwardly this Testament, and the blood of it : Two special Splints (as it were) to keep all straight. Out of the Testament, by the Word of Exhortation (as, in the next Verse he calls it) praying us to suffer the Splinting. For, it may sometimes pinch them, and put them to some pain, that are not well in joynt, by pressing it, and putting it home. But both by denouncing, one while the threats of the Old Testament, another while by laying forth the promises of the New, it by any means, we may get them right again. This, by the Testament, which is one outward means. The blood is another inward means. By it, we are made fit and perfect (choose you whether :) and that so, as at no time of all our life, we are so well in joynt, or come so near the state of perfectness, as when we come new from the drinking of that blood. And thus are we made fit.

Ἔς τὸ ποιῆσαι.
The first Agent.

Psal. 143. 10.

Provided, that καταρτισμός do end (as here it doth) in ποιῆσαι and ἐν ἔργῳ : that, all this fit making do end, in doing, and in a work : that some work be done. For, in doing it is to end, if it end aright, if it end, as the Apostle (here) would have it. For, this fitting, is not to hear, learn or know ; but to do His will. We have been long at Teach me thy will, at that Lesson : There is another (in Psal. 143.) Teach me to do thy will ; we must take out that also. Teach me thy will ; and Teach me to do thy will, are two distinct Lessons. We are all our life long about the first ; and never come to the second, to ἔς τὸ ποιῆσαι. It is required, we should come now to the second ἔς τὸ ποιῆσαι. We are not made fit (when we are so) to do never a whit the more : καταρτισμός is to end in ποιῆσαι (which is) doing : and in ἔργον (that is) in a work.

Ἐν παντί ἐν ἔργῳ.
In all good works.

In work, and in every good work. We must not slip the Collar there, neither. For, if we be able to stir our hand but one way, and not another, it is a sign, it is not well set in. His, that is well set, he can move it to and fro, up and down, forward and backward ; every way, and to every work. There be that are all for some one work, that single some one piece of God's Service ; wholly addicted to that, but cannot skill of the rest. That is no good sign. To be for every one, for all sorts of good works, for every part of God's Worship alike : for no one more than another : that (sure) is the right. So choose your Religion ; so practise your Worship of God. It is not safe, to do otherwise ; nor to serve God by Synecdoche : but ἐν παντί, to take all before us.

Ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν.
The second Agent.

Esay 26. 12.

1 Cor. 15. 10.

But in the doing of all or any, beside our part (ἔς τὸ ποιῆσαι) here is also ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, a Worker besides. For, when God hath fitted us by the outward means, there is not all. He leaves not us to our selves for the rest : but to that outward application of ours, joyns His ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, an inward operation of His own inspiring, His Grace ; which is nothing but the breath of the Holy Ghost. Thereby enlightning our minds, inclining our wills, working on our affections, making us Homines bona voluntatis : that when we have done well, we may say with the Prophet ; Domine, universa opera nostra operatus es in nobis : LORD, all our good works Thou hast wrought in us. Our works they be ; yet, of thy working. And with the Apostle : We did them ; yet not we, but the grace of God that was with us. Both ways, it is true : what He worketh by us, He works in us ; and what He works in us, He works by us. For, συνεργῶν, συνεργῶν, take not away one the other, but stand well together. This for the doing.

Chap. 12. 28.

Now for the work. In every good work we do His will : yet (it seemeth) degrees there are. For, here is mention of θέλημα. His will, and besides it, of εὐαρίστης, His good pleasure, and this latter sounds, as if it did import more than a single will. Ones good pleasure, is more, than His bare will. So, in the Chapter before, He wisheth λατρίους εὐαρίστας, (that is) we may serve and please : (that is) may so serve, as that we may please. Acceptable service then, is more than any, such as it is. There is no question, but that, as of evil works some displease God more than other ; so, of good works, there are some better pleasing, and that He takes a more special delight in.

Phil. 4. 12.

And, if you would know, what they be : above, at the XVI. verse, it is said, that, to do good, and to distribute, (that is) distributive doing good. It is more than an ordinary service : it is a sacrifice, every such work. It is of the highest kind of service, and that with that kind εὐαρίστου (our word here) God is highly pleased. So doth Saint Paul call the bounteous supplying of his wants from the Philippians, δοῦσαν δικαίῳ, a Sacrifice right acceptable and pleasing to God, and δοῦσαν ὁσμῆς, a most delightful sweet savour. And, that you may still see, He looks to the Resurrection, He saith : the Philippians had lieu dead, and dry a great while, as in Winter Trees do use. But, when that work of bounty came from them, they did ἀναβλάσκειν (that is) shoot forth, wax fresh, grow green again, as now at this season plants do. That so, the very vertue of CHRIST'S Resurrection did shew forth it self in them. So fitting Natures Resurrection time (the time of bringing things,

(as it were) from the dead again) with this of CHRIST. Which time is therefore the most pleasing time, the time of the greatest pleasure of all the times of the year. So, we know, how to do that, is pleasing in His sight.

Yet, even this pleasing, and all else, is to conclude (as here it doth) with through JESUS CHRIST our LORD: He is in, here too. In, at the doing: In, at the making them to please God, Ut faciat quisque per Christum, quod placeat per Christum, that what by CHRIST is done, by CHRIST may please when it is done. In, at the doing, infundendo gratiam, gratiam activam, by infusing or dropping in His Grace active; making us able and fit to do, and so to do them. In, at the pleasing, affundendo gratiam, gratiam passivam, by pouring on His good grace and favour passive, as it might be some drops of His blood, whereby it pleaseth being done. Gracing His work (as we use to say) in GODS fight, that so, He of His Grace may crown it.

We have gone through with both points. Now comes the hardest point of all, the sequels, to couple them, and make them hang well together.

First then, they be ascribed to the GOD of peace. There are but three things to be done in the Text, and peace doth them all. And, if peace; then GOD, by no other title than the GOD of peace. ¹ Peace bringeth from death: For, War (I am sure) bringeth to death many a worthy man. There is little question to be made of this: that the GOD of peace doth the one, but the Devil of Discord doth the other.

Secondly, Peace sets in joyn, War brings all out of joyn: War is not good for the joyns, as we see daily. Peace doth them no hurt.

Thirdly, Peace makes us fit for good: War, for all manner of evil works (saith St. James in the III. Chap. Ver. XVI.) Therefore the God of peace, say we. (And, if He take it from us for a time, that He bring it quickly back to us again.) For when He was first brought into the World, among the living, at His birth, Janus was shut: the Angels, they sung Peace upon Earth. And, when He was brought again from the dead, this day, He was no sooner risen, but the first news was, the Soldiers ran all away: A sign of peace. And indeed, when he had slain hatred, it was most kindly then, to bring peace. As, this Evening, with His own mouth, He spake it once and twice, Pax vobis, over and over again: Which is the Apostles Benediction here. So, Resurrection and Peace, they accord well.

Now for the sequels of good works upon CHRISTs bringing from the dead. Being to infer good works; He would never put in all this, of CHRISTs bringing back again from the dead, if there had not been some special operative force to or toward them, in CHRISTs Resurrection. If CHRISTs rising made not for them, had not some special reference to them, some peculiar interest in them, all this had not been ad idem, but idle, and beside the point quite. We must take heed of this Error, to think, the Passion, or Resurrection of CHRIST (though it be actus transiens, that with the doing passeth away) that it hath not a vertue and force permanent; that it left not behind it a vertue and force permanent to work continually some grace in us; as, in us; as, to think, His Resurrection to be actus suspensus, an act to have his effect at the latter day, and in the mean time to serve for nothing, but to hang in nubibus (as they say.) But that, this day, it hath an efficacy continuing, that sheweth forth it self: And as the Rule is, in the soul, before it doth on the body. We will leave the Heathen to their Habits, and Habitualities: But, with us Christians, this is sure: Whatsoever, in us, or by us is wrought, that is pleasing to GOD; it is so wrought by the vertue of CHRISTs Resurrection. We have not thought of it perhaps, but, most certain it is, it is so. So GOD hath ordain'd it. Whatsoever evil is truly mortified in us, it is so, by the power of CHRISTs death; and thither to be referred properly. And, whatsoever good is revived or brought again anew from us, it is all from the vertue of Christs rising again. All do rise, and are raised, thence. The same power, that did create at first, the same it is, that makes a new creature. The same power, that raised Lazarus the brother, from his Grave of stone: the same raised Mary Magdalen the sinner, from her grave of sin. From one, and the same power both. Which keepeth this method: Worketh first, to the raising of the soul, from the death of sin; and after, in the due time, to the raising of the body, from the dust of death. Else, what hath the Apostle said, all this while?

Now, this power is inherent in the Spirit, as the proper subject of it: even the Eternal Spirit, whereby Christ offered first Himself unto GOD, and after raised Himself from the dead. Now, as in the texture of the natural body, ever there goes the Spirit with the blood: ever, with a vein (the vessel of the one) there runs along an Artery (the vessel of the other:) So is it in Christ, His blood, and His Spirit, alwayes go together. In the Spirit is the power: in the power, virtually, every good work it produceth, which it was ordained for. If we get the Spirit, we cannot fail of the power. And, the Spirit, that ever goes with the blood, which never is without it.

This carries us now to the blood. The very shedding whereof upon the Cross, Primum & ante omnia was the nature of a price. A price: first, of our Ransome from death due to our sin, through that His satisfaction. A price again, of the purchase He made for us, through the Vale of His merit, which by His Testament, is by Him passed over to us.

Now then, His blood, after it had, by the very pouring it out, wrought these two effects, it ran not waste, but divided into two streams. 1. One into the Laver of the new Birth (our Baptism) applied to us outwardly, to take away the spots of our sin. 2. The other, into the Cup of the New Testament in His blood, which inwardly administred, serveth, as to purge and cleanse the conscience from dead works, that so live works may grow up in the place: So, to indue us with the Spirit, that shall enable us with the power to bring them forth, Hac sunt Ecclesia gemina Sacramenta: these are (not two of the Sacraments, but) the two Twin-Sacraments of the Church (saith St. Augustine.) And with us there

2. To draw to an end, If this power be in the Spirit, and the blood be the vehiculum of the Spirit; how may we partake this blood? It shall be offered you straight, in the Cup of blessing, which we bless in His Name. For, Is not the Cup of blessing which we bless, the communion of the blood of Christ (saith St. Paul)? Is there any doubt of that? In which blood of Christ is the Spirit of Christ. In which Spirit is all spiritual power: and namely this power, that frameth us fit to the works of the Spirit. Which Spirit we are all made, there, to drink of.

1 Cor. 10. 36.

And what time shall we do this? What time is best? What time better than that day, in which it first shewed forth the force and power, it had in making peace, in bringing back Christ, that brought peace back with Him, that made the Testament, that sealed it with His blood; that dyed upou it, that it might stand firm for ever? All which were, as upon this day. This day then, somewhat would be done: somewhat more than ordinary, more than every day. Let every day, be for every good work, to do His will: But, this day, to do something more than so, something that may be well-pleasing in His sight. So, it will be kindly: So we shall keep the degrees in the Text: So, we shall give proof that we have our part and fellowship in CHRIST, in CHRIST'S Resurrection, in the virtue of CHRIST'S Resurrection: Grace rising in us; works of grace rising from it. That so, there may be a Resurrection of virtue, and good works, at Christ's Resurrection. That as there is a reviving, anadulā, in the Earth, when all and every herbs and flowers are brought again from the dead: So, among men good works may come up too, that we be not found fruitless, at our bringing back from the dead, in the great Resurrection: But have out parts, as here now, in the blood, so there then in the Testament, and the Legacies thereof; which are glory, joy and bliss for ever and ever.

ACTS Chap. II. Ver. I, II, III, IV.

And when the Day of Pentecost was come, (or, when the fifty days were fulfilled) they were all with one accord, in one place.

And there came suddenly from heaven the sound of a mighty VVind; and it filled the place where they sate.

And there appeared tongues cleauen, as they had been of fire, and sate upon each of them.

And they were all filled with the HOLY GHOST, and they began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

WE are this day (beside our weekly due of the Sabbath) to renew, and to celebrate the yearly memory, of the sending down the HOLY GHOST. One of the Magnalia Dei (as they be termed after in the XI. Verse;) One of the great and wonderful benefits of God; Indeed, a Benefit, so great and so wonderful, as there were not tongues enow, upon earth, to celebrate it withall, but there were saine to be more sent from heaven, to help to sound it out thoroughly: Even a new supply of tongues from heaven. For all the tongues, in earth, were not sufficient to magnifie God for His goodness, in sending down to men the gift of the HOLY GHOST.

Verse 13

This we may make a several benefit by it self, from those of CHRISTs. And so the Apostle seemeth to do. Gal. 4. First, GOD sent His Son, in one verse, and then after GOD sent the Spirit of His Son, in another.

Gal. 4. 46

Or we may hold our continuation still, and make this the last of CHRISTs Benefits: For Ascendit in altum, is not the last; there is one still remaining, which is Dona dedit hominibus. And that is this dayes peculiar; wherein were given to men, many and manifold, both graces and gifts, and all in one gift, the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Plal. 88. 18

Howsoever we make it, sure it is, that all the rest, all the Feasts hitherto, in the return of the year, from His Incarnation, to the very last of His Ascension, though all of them be great, and worthy of all honour in themselves: yet, to us, they are as nothing, any of them, or all of them (even all the Feasts in the Calendar) without this Day, the Feast, which now we hold Holy to the sending of the Holy Ghost.

CHRIST.

CHRIST is the Word; and all, of Him, but words spoken, or words written; there is no seal put to, till this day: The Holy Ghost is the Seal or Signature, In quo signati estis (Ephes. 4. 30.) A Testament we have and therein many fair Legacies; but, till this day, nothing administered. The administrations are the Spirits, (1 Cor. 12. 4.) In all these of CHRISTs, there is but the purchase made, and paid for; and, (as they say) ius ad rem acquired: But ius in re, Missio in possessionem, Liverie, and Seizin; that is reserved till this day: For the Spirit is the Arrah, the earnest of the investiture of all, that CHRIST hath done for us.

These if we should compare them, it would not be easie to determine, whether the greater of these two; 1 That of the Prophet, Filius datus est nobis; 2 Or that of the Apostle, Spiritus datus est nobis: The ascending of our flesh, or the descending of His Spirit: Incarnatio Dei, or Inspiratio hominis; The mystery of His Incarnation, or the mystery of our inspiration. For, Mysteries they are both, and great Mysteries of Godliness both: and, in both of them, GOD manifest in the flesh: 1 In the former, by the union of His Son: 2 In the latter, by the communion of His blessed Spirit.

But we will not compare them: they are both above all comparison. Yet, this we may safely say of them: without either of them, we are not compleat, we have not our accomplishment: But, by both, we have; and that fully, even by this dayes royal exchange. Whereby, as before, He of ours, so now, we of His are made partakers. He, clothed with our flesh, and we invested with His Spirit. The great Promise of the old Testament accomplished: That He should partake our humane nature: and the great and precious Promise of the New, That we should be Consortes Divinae naturae; partake His divine nature: Both are, this day, accomplished. That the Text well beginneth with Dum compleveruntur. For, it is our Complement indeed: and not only ours, but the very Gospel to. It is Tertullian's: Christus, Legis; Spiritus Sanctus, Evangelij Complementum. The coming of CHRIST was the fulfilling of the Law: The coming of the HOLY GHOST, is the fulfilling of the Gospel.

Of which coming of the HOLY GHOST the report is here set down by Saint Luke; both of the 1 time, and the 2 manner of it. 1. The Time, in the first words: When the day of Pentecost was come.

2. The Manner, in all the rest of the four Verses.

And the Manner, first on their parts, to whom He came: Of the preparation for His coming in the first verse. And then, the manner of His coming in the other three.

On their parts, to whom He came, how they stood prepared, how they were found framed and fitted to receive Him when He came, in these three: 1. They were all of one accord. 2. They were all in one place. 3 And both these (dum compleveruntur) even so long, till the fifty dayes were fulfilled.

On His part, the manner of His coming to them thus prepared. 1 First, as it is propounded in Type or Figure, in the second and third verses. 2 And then, as it is expounded in truth and in deed, in the fourth.

1. In type or figure Symbolicè; and that is two ways, agreeable to the two chief senses, 1 the hearing, and 2 the sight. 1 To the Hearing, by a sound, in the second verse. 2 To the sight, by a shew, in the third.

1 To the hearing by a sound, in the second. A sound of a wind; A wind; 1 sudden, 2 vehement, 3 that came from heaven, and 4 filled that place where they sate.

2 To the sight, by a shew in the third: There appeared, 1 Tongues; 2 cloven; 3 as it were of fire, 4 which sate upon each of them. Thus far, the Figure.

2 Then in the fourth, followeth the thing itself. Which verse is (as it were) a Commentary of the two former. 1. Of the Wind inward, in the first part of it, and these words: They were all filled with the HOLY GHOST. 2. Of the Tongues outward, in the latter, and these words: They began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

The one, to represent the inward operation. The other, the outward manifestation of the Spirit. Thus standeth the Order; These are the Parts.

I.
The Time.
When the day of Pentecost was come.

THE first point is the Time of His coming (that is) The day of Pentecost.

1. Why that day? The day of Pentecost was a great Feast under the Law: And meet it was, this Coming should be at some great Feast. 1 The first Dedication of CHRISTs Catholique Church on earth; 2 The first publishing the Gospel; 3 The first proclaiming the Apostles Commission, were so great matters, as it was not meet, they should be obscurely carried, stola as it were, or done in a corner. Much lay upon them: and fit it was, they should be done in as great an Assembly as might be. And so they were; even in a Concourse (as in the V. Verse it is) of every Nation under heaven; That so, notice might be taken of it, and by them carried all over the world, even to the most corners of the earth. Saint Paul said well to King Agrippa: This is well enough known; This was not done in a corner.

Act. 26. 26.

2. At

2. At a great Feast, it was meet : but, there were many great Feasts; why at this Feast, the Feast of Pentecost?

It is agreed by all Interpreters old and new, (* Cyprian is the first, we find it in) That it was to hold harmony, to keep correspondency between the two Testaments, the Old and the New. So it was, at CHRIST'S Death (we see.) He was slain, not only, as the Lamb was; but even, when the Lamb was slain too: On the Feast of the Pascheover, then was CHRIST our Pascheover offered for us.

Now, from that Feast of the Pascheover, reckoning fifty dayes, they came to Sinai: And there on that day (the day of Pentecost) received they the Law: (a memorable day with them, a high feast, even for so great a Benefit: and is therefore by them called the Feast of the Law.)

And, even the very same day (reckoning from CHRIST our Pascheover, fifty dayes) that the Law was given in Sinai, The very same day doth the new Law here go out of Sion (as the Prophet Esay foretold, Exibit de Sion Lex,) which is nothing else, but the promulgation of the Gospel, The Royal Law (as Saint James calleth it) as given by CHRIST our King: The other, but by Moses, a servant: And favoureth therefore of the Spirit of bondage, the fear of Servants; As this doth, of the Princely Spirit, the Spirit of ingennity, and Adoption, the Love of Children.

On the Feast of Pentecost then; because then, was given the Law of CHRIST written in our hearts by the HOLY GHOST.

To this doth Chrysostom joyn a second harmony. That as, under the Law, at this Feast, they first put their sickle to the Corn; (Harvest, in that Climate, beginning with them in this Month:) the first fruits whereof they offered at Easter; and was called therefore by them Festum messis: in like sort we see, that this very day (the LORD of the Harvest so disposing it; who not long before lifting up His eyes Cujus, and looking on the regions round about, saw them white and ready to the Harvest) His first Work-men, the Apostles, did put in their first sickle into the great Harvest; ager est mundus, whereof the world is the field; and the several furrows of it, all the Nations under heaven. On the Feast of Pentecost, then second, because then began the great Spiritual Harvest.

To these two doth * Saint Augustine adde a third, taken out of the number in the very name of Pentecost, and that is fifty. Which, being all along the Law, the number of the Jubilee (which was the time of forgiving of debts, and restoring men to their first estates) it falleth fit with the proclaiming of the Gospel, (done presently here in the 38. Verse of this Chapter) which is an Act of GOD'S most gracious general free pardon of all the sins, of all the sinners in the world.

And no less fit falleth it for our Restitution, whereunto Cyril applieth excellently the XXX. Verse of the CIV. Psalme, Emitte Spiritum tuum & creabuntur, & renovabis faciem terra. Shewing, there was first an emission of the Spirit into man, at his Creation; Which, being since choaked with sin, and so come to nothing: this day, there is here a second emission of the same Spirit into man, fully to restore, and renew him, and in him the whole Mass of the Creation. On the day of Pentecost last, because therein, is the true number and force of the true Jubilee. This for the choice of the time.

The Number thus settled, we descend to the second point, of the Manner. And first on their parts on whom the HOLY GHOST came: how He found them framed, and fit to receive such a Guest. It is called by the Fathers, Parasceve SPIRITUS, The preparation (as there was one for the Pascheover, so here) for Pentecost.

It is truly said by the Philosopher, That Actus activorum sunt in patiente disposito; if the patient be prepared aright, the Agent will have his work, both the sooner and the better. And so consequently, the Spirit, in His coming; if the parties to whom He cometh, be made perspirabile.

And this is three-fold, set down in these words, 1. They were all with one accord. 2. They were all in one place. A double Unity: 1. Unity of mind (so is ἑνωμασις, ἑνωσις;) or of hearts (so is accord, cordium.) 2. And secondly, unity of place. 3. And thirdly, these two, dum complerentur: Patiently expecting, while the fifty dayes were accomplished.

Unity is the first: unity of minde. And for it, take but any Spirit, that is to give life to a natural body; Can any spirit animate or give life to members dismembred; unless they be first united and compact together? It cannot: Unity must prepare the way to any Spirit, though but natural. A fair example we have, in EZEKIEL, Chap. XXXVII. A sort of scattered dead bones there lay: They were to be revived. First, the bones came together; every bone to his bone; then, the sinewes grew and knit them: then the flesh and skin, and covered them: and then, when they were thus united, then and not before, called He for the Spirit from the four winds, to enter into them and to give them life. No Spirit, not the ordinary, natural spirit will come, but where there is a way made and prepared by accord and unity of the body.

Now then take the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of all spirits, the third person in Trinity: He is the very essential Unity, Love, and Love-knot of the two Persons, the Father and the Sonne, even of GOD with GOD. And He is sent to be the Union, Love and Love-knot of the two Natures united in CHRIST; even of GOD with man. And can we imagine, that He will enter Essential (unity) but where there is unity? The spirit of unity, but where there is unity of spirit? Verily there is not, there cannot possibly be a more proper and peculiar, a more true and certain disposition, to make us meet for Him, than that quality in us, that is likest His nature and essence, that is unanimity. Faith, to the word; and Love to the Spirit, are the true Preparatives. And there is not a greater bar, a more fatal or forcible opposition to His entry, than discord, and dis-united minds, and such as are in the gall of bitterness: They can neither give nor receive the HOLY GHOST. Divisum est cor eorum, jam jam interibant (saith the Prophet) their heart is divided, their accord is gone, that Cordis untwisted; they cannot live; the Spirit is gone too.

And do we marvel, that the Spirit doth scarcely pant in us: that we sing and say, Come HOLY GHOST, and yet He cometh no faster? Why, The day of Pentecost is come, and we are not all of one accord. Accord is wanting: The very first point is wanting, to make us meet for His coming. Sure, His after-coming will be like to His first: to them, that are (and, not to any, but them that are) of one accord.

And who shall make us of one accord? High shall be his reward in heaven, and happy his remembrance on earth, that shall be the means to restore this accord to the Church: that once we may keep a true and perfect Pentecost, like this here, Erant omnes unanimiter. I pass to the second.

2 In one place.

Eph. 4. 3.
Heb. 10. 39.
Heb. 10. 25.
Psal. 68. 6.

But suppose we were of one accord; is not that enough? May we not spare this other, of one place? If our minde be one, for the place it skills not: it is but a circumstance or ceremony, what should we stand at it? Yes sure; seeing the HOLY GHOST hath thought it so needful, as to enter it, we may not pass it over, or leave it out. Not only, of one minde (that is) unanimity: but also, in one place too (that is, uniformity.) Both, in the unity of this Spirit, that is inward; and in the bond of peace too, that is, outward. An Item, for those, whom the Apostle calleth Filiij substructionis, that forsake the Congregation (as, even then, in the Apostles Times, the manner of some was) and do withdraw themselves; to their perdition; to no less matter. Gods will is, we should be, as upon one foundation, so under one roof: That, is His doing. Qui facit unanimes, &c. He that maketh men of one minde to dwell in one house. Therefore it is expressly noted, of this Company here (in the Text) where they prayed, they prayed all together (Chap. 4. 24.) When they heard, they heard all together (Chap. 8. 6.) When they brake bread, they did it all together (Verse 46.) All together, ever: not, in one place, some; and some in another: but, all omnes all in one and the self-same place. For, say what they will, Division of places will not long be without division of minds. This must be our ground: The same Spirit, that loveth unanimity, loveth uniformity; unity even in matter of circumstance, in matter of place. Thus the Church was begun; thus it must be continued.

Joh. 14. 16.

To these, do the Fathers joyn a third: which they raise out of the word, Dum compleverunt. A disposition in them, whereby they held out, and stirred not, even till the fifty days were fulfilled. That former unanimity; this latter, longanimity. There is in us, a hot hasty spirit, impatient of any delay: what we would have, we would have out of hand: and these same Dum and Donec, and such like words we love them not. This Spirit was even in these here (the Apostles themselves) at the first, as we may see in the last Chap. Vers. 6. where they shew it: Domine jamne vis? LOR D wilt thou now? even now? by and by? But that Spirit He cast out, with Non est vestrum, &c. Manete vos, dum. After which charge given, though at the instant of His ascending, He promised He would send them the HOLY GHOST; yet they did not look for Him, the same afternoon; nor stayed but till the morrow after Ascension Day; nor (as the Bethulians stint was) four or five days, at the farthest, and then waxed weary, and would wait no longer: But, as He willed them to wait, so they did wait; not five days, but five, and five: And so continued waiting, even usque dum compleverunt, till they were accomplished: And then brake not up neither, to keep Holy-day, but held on their waiting, Holy-days, and all.

We say before, this Feast had divers names: 1 The Feast of the Law, 2 The Feast of harvest, 3 The Feast of Pentecost: We may put to a fourth (out of Deut. 16. 9.) It is there called 4 the Feast of Weeks. It is not houres will serve the turn, nor yet dayes: it must be weeks, and as many weeks as be days in a week, to make it Pentecost (that is) fifty days. Thus long they sate by it (as it is in the next verse) and tarried patiently the LOR Ds leasure, till He came unto them, Qui crediderit ne festinet (saith the Prophet Esay) He that believeth, let him not be hasty: And, si moram fecerit, expecta Eum (saith Abacuk) If He happen to stay, stay for Him. And so we shall, if we call to mind this, that He hath waited for us and our conversion, more years, than we do dayes for Him. And this withal, veniendo veniet, stay He may for a time, but if we wait, come He will certainly; and when He cometh, Manebit vobis in aeternum, He will never forsake us, but continue with us for ever. Dum compleverunt shall have His accomplishment.

And in this manner doth the Scripture bear witness of them, they were prepared, and that they sped of the Spirit; and let us of like preparing, look for like success.

The Manner,
On His part.
1 His coming in type.
Joh. 9. 11.
Ch. 10. ver. 24.

And now we come to the Manner, of His coming. And that, first in type sensibly; thus described, 1 There came a sound; 2 There were seen tongues, which is a sensible kind of Coming.

And that is a coming rare, and nothing usual with the HOLY GHOST; which as an invisible Spirit, cometh (for the most part) invisibly. So saith Job: He cometh to me, and I see Him not; He passeth hard by me, and I perceive Him not. It was thus here, for this once: But after, (we see in the tenth Chapter) He came upon Cornelius and his company; And after that, upon the Twelve at Ephesus Ephesus (in the 9. th Chap.) But on neither, that ought could be seen or heard: Only discerned by some effect, He wrought in them, He that best knew the Spirit (CHRIST) sets us down the manner of His coming, Spiritus spirat, sed nescis unde aut quo, He doth come and inspire, but how or which way, that know you not. Yet here, in this present case, for this once, it was meet, He should thus come in state, and that there should be a solemn, sensible descending of it.

Chap. 9. 6.

John 3. 8.

1. Meet: that no less honour be done to this Law of Zion, than to that of Sinai, which was publick, and full of Majesty; and so was this to be.

2. Meet: That having once before been, and never but once, upon CHRIST the Head: it should be so once more, on the Church too, the Body. It pleased Him to vouchsafe to grace the Church His Queen with like solemn inauguration to that of His own, when the HOLY GHOST descended on him in likeness of a Dove; that she might no less, that He Himself, receive from Heaven like solemn attestation.

3. Lastly, Meet it was, it should remain to the Memory of all Ages testified, that a day there was, when even apparently to sense, Mankind was visited from on high: And that this wind here, and these Tongues came not for nought, at so high a Feast, in so great an Assembly.

This Coming then of His, thus in State, is such, as it was both to be heard and seen. To the ear and the eye both. So saith Saint Peter of it after (Verse 33.) Being thus exalted (saith he of CHRIST) and having received the promise of the Father, He hath shed forth this, which you now both see and hear. And with good reason, both: To both senses is the HOLY GHOST presented. To the ear, which is the sense of faith: To the eye, which is the sense of love. The ear, that is the ground of the Word, which is audible: the eye, which is the ground of the Sacraments, which are visible.

To the ear, in a noise; To the eye, in a shew: A noise, of a mighty Wind; A shew, of fiery Tongues. The noise, serving as a Trumpet, to awake the World, and give them warning. He was come. The fiery Tongues, as so many Lights, to shew them, and to let them see the day of that their visitation.

To begin with the first: There came a sound. Which very sound, is to shew, that the Spirit, whereof it is the fore-runner, is no dumb spirit but vocal. And so it is: the sound thereof is not only gone into all Lands: but hath been heard, in all Ages, before the Flood it sounded in ^a Enoch a Prophet, and ^b Noe a Preacher of righteousness. All the Law long, it sounded in them, by whom ^c Moses was preached every Sabbath day. The very beginning of the Gospel, was with a sound, ^d Vox clamantis: and but for this sound Saint Paul knoweth not, how we should do; ^e How should they believe (saith he) in Him, of whom they have not heard? and without a sound, there is no hearing. But, we shall come to this again in the apprehension of the tongues.

There came a sound.

There came a sound: and not any sound; it will not be amiss, to weigh what kind of sound is expressed in the word here used [ἦχος] you know, what sound an Echo is: a sound at the second hand, a sound at the rebound. Verbum DOMINI venit ad nos; The Word of the LORD cometh to us: there is the first sound, To us: and ours is but the Echo, the reflection of it to you. GODS first, and then ours second. For, if it come from us directly, and not from Him to us first, and from us then to you (echo-wise) it is to be suspected. A sound it may be; the HOLY GHOST, cometh not with it: His fore-runner it is not; for that is ἦχος.

A sound, Echo-wise.

There came a sound, and it was the sound of a wind: and this too, very fitly. For, the wind, which is here the type of the HOLY GHOST, of all the Creatures, doth best express it.

A sound of a wind.

1. For first, of all bodily things, it is the least bodily, and cometh nearest to the nature of a spirit: invisible as it is.

2. And secondly, quick and active, as the Spirit is. Of the wind it is said, Usque adeo agit, ut nisi agat non sit: so active it is, as no stirring the Aire, no action, no wind: even so, no operation, no Spirit. So like, as both have but one name: nay, all three but one: 1 The wind in the wide world, 2 the breath in our bodies, 3 and the Spirit in the Mystical Body, (the Church:) and much ado we have, to distinguish them in many places; they be taken so one for another.

Now, this wind that came and made this sound, is here described with four properties. 1 It fell suddenly: 2 It was mighty or violent: 3 It came from heaven; 4 It filled that place where they sate; that place, and no other. Of which, the two first are ordinary, and (like the wind) common, 1 To be sudden, 2 and to be violent. The other two, not so, but dislike: 3 To come from Heaven, 4 and to keep it self within one place; and that of no great compals.

1. It came suddenly.

It fell suddenly, et non cognovit: so doth the wind. It riseth oftentimes in the midst of a calme; giveth no warning, but rusheth up of a sudden; and even so doth the Spirit: For, that ^a cometh not by observation neither (saith our SAVIOUR;) you can make no set Rules of it; you must wait for it, as well when it cometh not, as when it comes. ^b Many times it is found of them that seek it not; and therefore little account make of it; and therefore little deserve it; ^c Cecidit super eum Spiritus, is so common in both the Old, and New Testament, as we can make no doubt of this. Which sheweth, it falls suddenly; it creeps not: Serpentis est serpere. Commonly, motions that come from the Serpent, creep upon us: but, Nescit tarda molimina Spiritus sancti gratia (saith Ambrose.) ^d Velociter currit Sermo Eius, this Word runneth very swiftly, and ^e His Spirit cometh with the wings of the wind. And therefore sudden (saith Gregory) because things, if they be not sudden, awake us not, affect us not; but, Repentina valde mutant, sudden things start us, and make us look up. And, therefore sudden (saith he again) that men may learn, not to despise present motions of grace, though suddenly rising in them; and though they can give no certain reason of them: but take the wind while it bloweth, and the water, while the Angel moveth it; as not knowing, when it will, or whether ever it will blow again, or stirre any more. It is deus puerum, it fell on a sudden.

2. A vehement Wind.

It was a mighty or vehement wind. The wind is so; and the Spirit is so: both in this well sorted together.

f Psal. 48. 7.
g 1 Reg. 19. 11.

Of the wind, it is a common observation, that being nothing else but a puffle of Aire, the thinnest, the poorest, and (to our seeming) of the least force of all creatures, yet groweth it to that violence, and gathereth such strength, as it rattles together the great ships of Tharsis, as it rents and rives in funder Mountains and Rocks: pulls up Trees; blowes down huge Piles of building: hath most strange and wonderful effects, which our eyes have often seen: and all this but a little thin Aire.

h 2 Cor. 10. 4.
i 1 John 5. 4.

And surely, no less observable, or admirable (nay, much more) have been, and are the operations of the Spirit. Even presently after this, this Spirit, in a few poor, weak and simple instruments (God knoweth) waxed so full and forcible, as it cast down strong holds, brought into captivity many an exalting thought, made a conquest of the whole world, even then, when it was bent fully in main opposition against it: as it hath set all men in a maze to consider, how so poor a beginning should grow to such Might, that, Wisdom, and Learning, and Might, and Majesty, and all have stooped unto it: and all was but God's little finger; all the breath of His Mouth. Verily, the wind was never so vehement as the Spirit hath been and is, in His proceeding.

k Luk. 11. 10.
l 2 Thess. 2. 8.

These two are common with the wind; and for these two, it might have been no more, but even a common wind. The other two are not so; but shew it to be more than a wind: 3 The coming from Heaven, 4 the filling but of that one place. In these two, it is dislike; as in the former two, like the ordinary wind that bloweth.

n Psal. 135. 7.

Winds (naturally) come not from thence, but out of the Caves and Holes of the Earth: they blow not downward, but move laterally from one Coast or Climate to another. To come directly down, not only de sursum, from above (so it may be, from the middle Region of the Aire) but de Caelo, from Heaven it self; that, is supernatural, sure, that, is a wind out of God's own Treasury indeed: that points us plainly to Him, that is ascended up into Heaven, and now sendeth it down from thence.

o It filled that place only.

And therefore sendeth it from Heaven, that it may fill us with the breath of Heaven. For, as the wind is, so are the blasts, so is the breath of it: and, as is the Spirit, so are the motions, it useth, the Reasons, it is carried by.

p Col. 3. 1.
r Matth. 21. 15.

To distinguish this wind from others, is no hard matter. If our motions come from above, if we fetch our grounds there, de Caelo, from Heaven, from Religion, from the Sanctuary, it is this wind: but those, that come from earthly respects, we know their cave; and that there is nothing but natural in them. This wind came thence, to make us heavenly-minded, sapere quæ sursum, to set our affections on things heavenly, and to frame the Rules of our Conversation agreeable unto Heaven. So we shall know, what wind blowes; whether it be de Caelo, or de Hominibus: whether it be Defluxus Cæli, or Exhalatio Terræ; from Heaven, or of Men, a breath from Heaven, or a Terrene Exhalation.

s It filled that place only.

And like to this is the fourth: It filled that place where they sate. That place, where they: That place, not the places about. That place it filled: the other felt it not. And this is another plain dissimily, To blow but in one place: and sheweth it to be more than ordinary. The common wind, all places within his Circuit, it aireth all alike; one as well as another, indifferently. This here seemeth to blow Elusive; as if there were sense in it, or it blew by discretion. For, it blew upon none of the Neighbour-houses; none of the places adjacent, where these men were not. That, and only that Room it filled, where they were sitting.

t John 3. 8.

And this [of blowing upon one certain place] is a property very well fitting the Spirit; Ubi vult spirat. To blow in certain places, where it felt will; and upon certain persons, and they shall plainly feel it, and others about them, not a whit. There shall be an hundred or more in an Auditory; one sound is heard, one breath doth blow: at that instant, one or two and no more; one here, another there; they shall feel the Spirit, shall be affected, and touched with it sensibly: Twenty on this side them, and forty on that, shall nor feel it; but sit all becalmed, and go their way no more moved than they came. Ubi vult spirat, is most true.

v Eccles. 1. 6.

And that Ubi is not anywhere, but where these men sate; that is, it is a peculiar wind, and appropriate to that place where the Apostles are, that is, the Church: elsewhere to seek it, is but folly: The place, it bloweth in, is Sion: and, in Sion, where men be so disposed, as we shewed ere-while; that is, where there is concord and unity, the dew of Sion, Ibi mandavit Dominus benedictionem. There, God sendeth this wind; and there He sendeth His blessing with this wind, which never leaveth us till it bringeth us to life for evermore, to eternal life. So doth Salomon describe the nature of the wind: That it goeth forth, and that it compasseth round about, and then last, That it returneth, per circuitus suos: So doth this, it cometh from heaven, and it bloweth into the Church, and thorow, and thorow it, to fill it with the breath of Heaven: and as it came from Heaven to the Church, so it shall shall return from the Church, into Heaven again, per circuitus suos: and whose sails it hath filled with that wind, it shall carry with it along per circuitus suos; even to see the goodness of the LORD in the Land of the living, there to live with Him and His Holy Spirit for ever.

So we have briefly the four properties of this wind, and of the Spirit whose Type it is: 1 That it is sudden, in the first coming; 2 That it is mighty in proceeding; 3 That it cometh from Heaven; 4 That it cometh into the Church; to fill it with the Spirit of Heaven, and to carry it thither whence it self cometh. Thus much for the second, The first Type.

This wind brought down with it tongues, even imbrem linguarum, a whole showre of them, which is the next point, Of the show which appeared. By which appearing, it appeareth plainly, that the wind came not for themselves only, but for others too beside: In that here is not only sent a wind, which serveth for their own inspiration, but there be also sent tongues with it, which serve for elocution (that is) to impart the benefit to more than themselves.

It sheweth, that the HOLY GHOST cometh, and is given here, rather as gratia gratis data, to do others good; than as gratia gratum faciens, to benefit themselves. Charitas diffusa in corde would serve them, Charity poured into their hearts, but gratia diffusa in labiis, Grace poured into their lips, that is not needful for themselves, but needful to make others, beside them, partakers of the benefit. The wind alone, that is to breath withall; the grace of the HOLY GHOST whereby our selves live: but, the wind and tongues, that is to speak withall; the grace of the HOLY GHOST, whereby we make others live, and partake of the same knowledge to life. An union of the wind and tongue here on Earth, expressing the unity of the Spirit and Word in Heaven: that, as the wind or breath in us is to serve the tongue; so is the Spirit given, to set forth the Word, and the HOLY GHOST to spread abroad the knowledge of CHRIST.

Where, it is not unworthy your observing neither, that as in the natural body, one and the same breath of our's, is Organon both vita and vocis, is the instrument both of life and voice; the same that we live by, is the same that we speak by: Even the very like is in the body Mystical; and both the vital breath, and the vocal, come both (as we here see) from the HOLY GHOST.

This also standeth of four parts, as did the former. For, there appeared, 1 Tongues, 2 Cloven, 3 as it were of fire, 4 sitting upon each of them.

The tongue is the substantive, and subject of all the rest. It is so: and GOD can send from Heaven no better thing; nor the Devil from Hell no worse thing, than it. The best Member, we have (saith the Prophet;) The worst Member, we have (saith the Apostle:) Both, as it is imployed.

The best, if it be of GOD'S Cleaving; if it be of His Lightning with the fire of Heaven; if it be one that will sit still, if cause be. The worst, if it come from the Devils hands. For, he, as in many other, so in the sending of tongues, striveth to be like GOD: as knowing well, they are every way as fit instruments, to work mischief by, as to do good with. There be tongues of Angels (in 1 Cor. 13. 1.) and if of good Angels, I make no doubt but of evil; and so, the Devil hath his tongues.

And he hath the Art of Cleaving. He shewed it in the beginning, when he made the Serpent; Lingvam Bisulcam, a Forked Tongue, to speak that, which was contrary to his knowledge and meaning, They should not dye; and as he did the Serpents, so he can do others.

There is fire in Hell, as well as in Heaven; that, we all know.

Only, in this, they agree not, but are unlike; his tongues cannot sit still, but flie up and down all over the World, and spare neither Minister, nor Magistrate, no nor GOD Himself.

But if we shall say to our tongue, as David did to his, Awake up my glory (that is) make it the glory of all the rest of our Members; it can have no greater glory than this, to be the Organ of the HOLY GHOST: to set forth, and found abroad the knowledge of CHRIST, to the glory of GOD the Father. And, so used, it is heavenly; no time, so heavenly as then; in no service, so heavenly as in that.

Not to enlarge this point further, there is no new matter in it. This here (of the tongues) is as that before of the sound; both are to no other end, but to admonish them of their office, whereto they here received Ordination: even to be tongues, to be trumpets of the Counsel of GOD, and of His love to mankind, in sending His Son to save them.

Here is wind to serve for breath; and here are tongues now; and what should let them to do it? That which before they received in charge audibly, Ite, Pradicate; the very same they here received visibly, in this apparition, which is after expounded thus; Ceperunt loqui, by vertue of these tongues they began to speak.

Tongues and cloven tongues. And that very cleaving, of right necessary use, to the business intended. For, that of their's was but one whole entire tongue, that could speak but one poor language; the Syrian they were bred in. There was not a cleft in it. So, could they speak their mind to none but Syrians; and by that means, should the Gospel have been shut up, in one corner of the World.

ἡ ἀγαθὴ εὐαγγελία is the goodness of all that is good; even the imparting it to the good of the common. To the end then, this great good of the knowledge of the Gospel, might be dispersed to many Nations, even to every Nation under Heaven; To that end, Clove He their tongues: to make many tongues, in one tongue; to make one man to be able to speak to many men; of many Countries, to every one in his own language; If there must be a calling of the Gentiles, they must have the tongues of the Gentiles, wherewith to call them. If they were debtors, not only to the Jews; but to the Grecians; nay, not only to the Grecians, but to the Barbarians too, then must they have the tongues not only of the Jews, but of the Grecians, and of the Barbarians too, to pay this debt, to discharge the duty of Ite, Pradicate, to all.

And this was a special favour from GOD, for the propagation of His Gospel far and wide, this division of tongues: and it is by the Ancient Writers (all) reckoned a plain reversing of the curse of Babel, by this blessing of Sion: since they account it all one (and so it is) either, as at the first, for all men to speak one language; or, as here, one man speak all. That is here recovered, that there was lost; and they enabled for the building up of Sion in every Nation, to speak so, as all might understand them of every Nation.

But this withall we are to take with us: that, with their many tongues, they spake, one thing, and that Univocè. With one mouth (Rom. 15. 6.) With one voice (Chap. 4. 24.)

With diverse tongues to utter one and the same sense, that is GOD's cloven tongue; that, is the division of Sion, serving to edification.

With one tongue, equivocè, to utter diverse senses, diverse meanings; that, is none of GODS; it is the Serpent forked tongue, the very division of Babel, and tendeth to nothing but confusion.

Exod. 3. 2.

Tongues cloven, and as they had been of fire. As they had been: to keep a difference in these (as before, in the wind;) and to shew, that they were not of our Elementary fire. For, it is added, fate upon them: which they could not have done, without some hurt; without scorching them, at least, if it had been such fire, as it is in our Chimneys. But it was good, as it were ours: (that is) in shew, earthly; in deed, celestial: And as the wind, so the fire from Heaven; of the nature of that (in the III. of Exod.) which made the bush burn, and yet consumed it not.

Ephes. 1. 23.

Where first we are to observe again, the conjunction of the tongue and fire. The seat of the tongue is in the head; and the head of the Church is CHRIST. The native place of heat (the quality, in us, answering to this fire) is the heart: and the heart of the Church is the HOLY GHOST. These two joyn, to this work: CHRIST, to give the tongue; the HOLY GHOST, to put fire into it. For, as in the body natural, the next, the immediate instrument of the soul, is heat, it worketh all the Members over; even so, in the Mystical body, a vigour there is, like that of heat, which we are willed to cherish, to be a fervent in the Spirit, to stir, and to blow it up: which is it, that giveth efficacy to all the spiritual operations.

a Rom. 12. 11.
b 1 Thess. 5. 19.
c 2 Tim. 1. 6.

To express this quality, it appeareth in the likeness of this Element; even to shew, there should be an efficacy, or vigour, in their Doctrine, resembling it; Quod igneus est illis vigor, that the force of fire should shew forth itself in their words: both in the splendor; which is the light of knowledge to clear the mist of their darkned understanding; and in fervour, which is the force of spiritual efficacy, to quicken the dulness of their cold and dead affections.

Esay 6. 6.

And indeed, the World was then so overwhelmed with ignorance and error; and so over-grown with dross, and other bad matter, by Paganism, it long had been, that their tips did need, to be touched with a Coal from the Altar. Tongues of flesh would not serve the turn, nor words of Aire: but there must be fire put into the tongue, and spirit and life into the words, they spake; a force more than natural (that is) the force of the Spirit: even to speak sparks of fire instead of words, to drive away the darkness, and to refine the dross of their Heathenish Conversation so long continued.

Mark 9. 49.

Our SAVIOUR CHRIST saw this, and said: Every sacrifice then had need to be seasoned with fire: but there was no fire to do it with. Therefore He addeth, in another place: I came to send fire upon Earth; and, this day, He was as good as His word, and sent it.

Luke 12. 49.

Luke 24 33.

And with such a tongue, spake He Himself, when they said of Him, Did not our hearts burn within us, while He spake unto us by the way? With such a tongue Saine Peter, here in this Chapter: for sure, there fell from Him something like fire on their hearts, when they were pricked with it, and cried, Men and Brethren, what shall we do?

Verf. 37.

And even to this day yet; in them, that move the dead and dull hearts of their hearers, and make them to have a lively apprehension of things pertaining to GOD, there is a remainder of that, which this day was sent; and they shew plainly, that yet this fire is not clean gone out.

1 John 2. 27.
Match. 12 20.

But this is not alwayes, nor in all, with us; no more was it with them; but, in those of their hearers, which had some of the anointing, and that will easily take the fire; in them good will be done: Or at least, where there was some smoking flax, some remainder of the Spirit, which without any great ado will be kindled anew. Them, it doth good: the rest, it did not. This for the fire.

4. And fate on each of them.
Verse 2.
Verse 3.
Psal. 78. 57.

These fate upon each of them. In which sitting, is set down unto us, their last quality, of continuance and constancy. The vertue is æternitas, fiery tongues sitting: the vice oppositè inconstancia, fiery tongues flitting. They did not light and touch, and away, after the manner of Butterflies; but both they fate themselves (in the former Verse;) the tongues fate on them (that is) they abode still, and continued stay'd and stiddy, without stirring or starting aside (saith the Psalmist) like a swarming Bee.

Of our SAVIOUR CHRIST Himself, how to know Him, GOD Himself gave St. John Baptist a privy sign; and it was this: On whomsoever thou seest the Spirit lighting, and abiding on Him; That is He: Lighting is not it, though it be the HOLY GHOST: but, lighting and abiding; that is the true sign. John 1.33

The same our SAVIOUR is, this day, said: That ascending on high, He gave gifts unto men; and to what end? that the LORD their GOD might dwell among them. Mark that, Dwell: not might stay and lodge for a night, as in an Inne, or Hospice, and then be gone in the Morning; but, Dwell: (that is) have His habitation, take up His residence among them. Psal. 68.18.19

The GOD, or that Person of the Deity, He there saith, shall dwell, is the HOLY GHOST: One of whose chief Attributes (in the Psalme) is, that He is רוח קדוש a constant Spirit: (and, if Sanctus come of Sancio, there is as much said in the Latine word, as in the Hebrew:) Constant, not Desultory: and His fire not like the foolish Meteor, now in, now out, but permanent still, like the fire on the Altar. Psal. 51.10. Levitic. 1.12

So in vigour, as His vigour, is not brunts only; or starts, impetus; but, habitus, that it holdeth our habit-wise. Not only like the sparks, before, which will make a man stir for the present; but, leaving an impression, such an one as iron red but leaveth in Vessels of wood; a fire-mark never to be got out more. Such doth the HOLY GHOST leave in the memories: In eternum non obliviscar, I shall never forget it. Psal. 119.93

And such did it leave in the hearts of the first Christians, that could never be got out of their hearts by their persecutors, till they plucked out hearts and all.

With this salt, as well as with that fire (saith CHRIST) must every Sacrifice be seasoned: Not only with that fire, to stir it up; but with this salt, to preserve it; By this virtue (in the former verse) they were disposed to the Spirit: and now here, you see again, by the Spirit, they are disposed to this virtue: And not only disposed to it, but rooted, and more and more confirmed in it, that we may learn to esteem of it accordingly. Mark 9.49

And thus have we (as before, heard what the sound, so now) seen, what the sight can shew us, even all four: 1. Tongues, that they might preach: 2. Cloven, that they might preach to many: 3. Fire, that they might do it effectually: 4. And sitting, that so effectually as not flittingly, but that it might be an efficacy, constant, abiding, and staying still with them: So forcible, that continual.

Now are we to know, what all this amounts to; what is the signatum, or thing signified of both these signs: What was wrought in them, by inward concurrence with this outward Resemblance. And that followeth in the fourth verse; wherein, there is a Commentary of this wind, and a gloss of these tongues. Of the wind, in the fore-part: They were all filled with the HOLY GHOST. Of the tongues, in the latter; they began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

But, the time being already spent, I will not so far presume, as to enter into it: It would ask too long a treaty.

It remaineth now, that first we offer up our due praise and unfeigned hearty thanks, giving to Him that is ascended upon high, for sending, this day, this blessing upon that His Church, the Mother of us all. The fruit whereof, even of this wind, and of these tongues, in the effect of them both (the blowing of the one, and the speaking of the other) we all feel to this day, so far as Christendom is wide. It is the duty of the day.

First then this: and then withall secondly, to endeavour that we may have this day some feeling of this dayes benefit, our selves; and some way find our selves visited with the same Spirit.

I told you, after this first, there is no more visible coming to be looked for: but that, after His accustomed usual manner, invisibly He ceaseth not to come still, nor will not to the Worlds end.

Even in this Book, after this time here, three several times (in the fourth, tenth, and nineteenth Chapters;) and at three several places (Jerusalem, Caesarea, Ephesus) The same Spirit came upon the faithful people, and yet nothing heard nor seen; only discerned after, by the impression, it left behind it. And this coming is still usual with Him; and this we may hope for; hope for, and have, if we labour and dispose our selves for it.

And we may direct our selves, how to do this, by those three places, I even now alledged. 1. In the fourth Chapter, 31. Verse. As they prayed, the Spirit came upon them: 2. In the tenth, Verse 44. While Peter yet spake, the Spirit fell upon them: 3. In the nineteenth Chapter, Verse 6. As they received the Sacrament, the Spirit was sent on them. In which three, are plainly set down to us, these three means to procure the Spirits coming: 1. Prayer, 2. The Word, 3. The Sacraments.

I know well, it was the Sacrament of Baptisme in the place last alledged: but that is all one. In one Verse, doth the Apostle name them both, as of equal power (both) for the purpose; (1 Cor. 12. 13.) Uno Spiritu baptizati estis; (and, before he ends the verse) & uno Spiritu poti. Baptized in the Spirit; There is their's at Ephesus; but made drink of the same Spirit, that is this of ours here. For, ex similibus sumus & alimur. Ours here (I say) where we do drink of the Spirit, if aright we receive it; in which respect he calleth it the spiritual drink (1 Cor. 10. 3.) because we do even drink the Spirit with it.

And even in this very Chapter before the end, it is noted by St. Luke as a special means, whereby they invited the Spirit to them again and again; Their continuing in the Temple with one accord, and breaking of bread. Of one accord, we spake at the first, as an effectual disposition thereto: And this Sacrament of breaking of bread is the Sacrament of accord; as that, which representeth unto us perfect unity in the many grains kneaded into one loaf; and the many Grapes pressed into one Cup; and what it representeth lively, it worketh as effectually. How: 1 Cor. 10. 17

Howsoever it be, if these three, 1. Prayer, 2. The Word, 3. The Sacraments be every one of them as an Artery, to convey the Spirit into us; well may we hope, if we use them all three, we shall be in a good way to speed of our desires. For, many times we miss, when we use, this one, or that one, alone; where it may well be, G O D hath appointed us to give it by neither, but by the third. It is not for us, to limit or appoint him, how, or by what way, He shall come unto us, and visit us; but, to offer up our obedience, in using them all; and using them all, He will not fail but come unto us, either as a wind, to allay in us some unnatural heat of some disemper'd desire in us to evil; or as a fire to kindle in us some luke-warm, or some key-cold affection in us to good: Come unto us, either as the Spirit of truth, lighting us with some new knowledge; or as the Spirit of holiness, reviving in us some virtue or grace; or as the Comforter, ministering to us some inward contentment, or joy in the HOLY GHOST; or, in one or other certainly He will come. For, a compleat obedience on our part, in the use of all His prescribed means, never did go away empty from Him, or without a blessing: Never did, nor never shall.

Never: but not on this day, of all dayes; the day, wherein Dona dedit hominibus, He gave gifts unto men. It is Dies donorum, His giving day, His day of Donatives: Some gift He will give, either from the wind, inward; or from the tongue, outward; some gift He will give.

There be nine of them set down, Nine manifestations of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12.) some of them nine. There be nine more set down, nine fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5.) some of them nine: Some gift He will give.

1 Cor. 12. 8.
Gal. 5. 22.

Only let us dispose our selves by the use, not of this one, or that one, or two, but of all the means, to receive it by. Inwardly, by unity, and patient waiting His leisure, as these here: Outwardly, by frequenting those holy duties, and offices, all which (we see) succeeded with those there in the three places remembred.

And, in these, the blessed Spirit to dispose us, and in them so bless us, as we may not only by outward celebration, but by inward participation, feel and find in our selves, that we have kept to Him, this day, a true Feast of the coming of His Spirit, of the sending down the Holy Ghost: Which Almighty G O D grant, &c.

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

AT GREENWICH,

On the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCVII,

being WHIT-SUNDAY.

Acts Chap. II. Ver. IV.

Et repleti sunt omnes SPIRITU SANCTO, & cœperunt loqui variis linguis, prout SPIRITUS SANCTUS dabat eloqui illis.

And they were all filled with the HOLY GHOST, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

HIS day hold we holy to the HOLY GHOST, by whom all holy dayes, persons, and things are made holy. And with good reason, hold we it: He that maketh all holy dayes, it is meet should be allowed one, Himself. And if we yield this honour, to this and that Saint, much more to the Saint-maker; to Him, that is the only true Canonizer of all the Saints in the Calendar.

2. This honour were we bound to yield Him, if there were nothing besides: but, seldome shall ye find a Feast, wherein, with his honour, there is not joyned the remembrance of some memorable benefite then vouchsafed us; as (here) this Feast is not to the HOLY GHOST simply; but, to the sending or coming of the HOLY GHOST: to the HOLY GHOST sent.

3. Sent: not, as in former times, qualified or by measure, but even in plenitudine; in plenteous manner, fully. In is said, They were filled with the Holy Ghost.

4. Filled: not to hold, but to set over. For, so many tongues, so many pipes to derive it to others, that, by preaching, they might impart the Spirit they received: preaching being nothing else (as the Fathers observe out of the 11. of Numb.) but the taking of the Spirit of the Preacher, and putting it on the hearer: or to express it by the type of fire) the lighting of one torch by another; that so, it might pass from man to man, till all were lighted.

For

For this holy Spirit, thus sent, plenteously sent, sent to them, and by them, to all and to us, are we here met to render our thanks to GOD: even to imitate Him; to send, this day, tongues into heaven, there to laud and magnifie Him, who as this day sent these tongues into earth.

* At Pentecost
A. D. 1606.

The Summe.

Now, of this benefit, (so far as the two types in the former verses) * hath formerly been treated: and we are now to supply what was then left in remainder.

This fourth verse then, is nothing else but a Commentary of the former; what in them was set forth in figure, is here expressed in plain terms. The types were of two sorts, according to the two chief senses; 1 Audible to the ear, in the sound of, winde; 2 Visible to the eye, in the shew of tongues. These two are expounded in the two moities of this Verse. The former, the Commentary of the wind, in these words: They were filled with the holy Ghost. The latter, the gloss of the tongues, in these: And they began to speak with tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

The Division.

3. 4.

For the first. The place was filled with a winde from heaven. The filling of the place was a sign of the filling the persons in the place; the winde was a sign of the Spirit; the wind from heaven, of the holy Spirit: which Spirit filled the Persons, no less than did the winde, the room they sate in. Two points there be in it: 1 One of the Gift it self, in Spiritu sancto. 2 The other of the measure of the gift, in Repleti sunt.

For the latter: four things were in the type, 1 Tongues, 2 cloven, 3 sitting, 4 of fire; all four here expressed, and suited. 1 Tongues: they began to speak. 2 Cloven: with other tongues. 3 Sitting: as the Spirit gave them. 4 Fire: ὑποτίθηται, (utterance, it is turned; it is more.) These are the Heads. But, for that there is no speaking of the spirit, without the spirit, no hearing neither; to the end that speaking and hearing of Him, He may help our infirmities, &c.

The Commentary of the Winde.
Of both parts joynly. Spirit and speech
both.
a 1 Cor. 13. 1.
b Luke 11. 14.
But Spirit first
in order.

He truth answering the type, per omnia, as there were in that, two; 1 the Winde, and 2 Tongues: so are there here, two; 1 the spirit, 2 and speech. Spirit, because speech without spirit, is but a dead sound like the sinckling of a Cymball. Speech, because spirit without speech, is but as the spirit that CHRIST cast forth, and illud erat mutum, a dumb spirit; none the better for it. Which made the HOLY GHOST come in spirit and speech: not in spirit only, but in spirit and speech.

But in spirit first, and then speech. So is the order. The HOLY GHOST begins within, a centro, and worketh outward: alters the minde, before it change the speech: giveth another heart, before another tongue: works on the spirit, before on the phrase or utterance: ever, so. It is preposterous, and all out of order, to have the tongues come, before the winde; where they do, it commonly falls out in such, all their Religion is in common phrases and terms well got by heart, and nothing else. This for their joyning, and for their order.

I.
Of the parts severally.
I.
The Gift.
1 It was a Spirit.
A spirit, not An humour.

Now of either, apart. Of the spirit first, which they were filled with; After, of their filling, that is, 1 first of the Gift it self; 2 then of the Measure. That, they were filled with, is set down in two words; 1 spiritu and 2 sancto. First, that it was spirit; then, that that spirit was holy. A spirit; for, men may be filled, and not with the spirit: Holy, for, there is a spiritu without sancto. We must needs put the difference; spirit and holy, are the two diverse things.

With the spirit: for men may be filled, and not with the Spirit. That which enforceth this note, is, a speech at the 13. verse, there they stick not (some,) this, that was the spirit indeed, to reproach with the term of new wine, These men are full, (say they,) full, they grant: but, with wine, a liquor though full of spirit, yet no spirit though. It was false as it fell out: yet, this it worketh, that if the spirit may be taken for a humour, why not a humour for the spirit likewise? And not the humour of the wine only: but, the Philosopher (in his Problemes) tells us, that look what soever operation wine hath, the same have some humours in our bodies, with a little fermenting. The Prophet Esay seemeth to say the same in two places: that men may be drunk, and not with wine; their own humour will do it as well.

11. 52.

I wish, it were not true, this: that humours were not sometimes mistaken, and mis-termed the spirit. A hot humour flowing from the gall, taken for this fire here, and termed (though untruly) the spirit of zeale. Another windy humour proceeding from the spleene, supposed to be this winde here, and they that filled with it, (if no body will give it them) taking to themselves the style of the godly brethren. I wish, it were not needful, to make this observation. But, you shall easily know it, for an humour: Non continetur terminis suis: Its own limits will not hold it: They are ever mending Churches, States, Superiors; mending all, save themselves: alieno, non suo, is the note to distinguish an humour.

2 The Holy Spirit.
Not our Own
spirit.

With the Spirit; yet, not every spirit. I told you, there was a spiritu without sancto; and I mean not the wicked spirit (away with him, we will not once mention him;) but, two other: 1 There is a spirit in a man (saith Elisha) that is, our own spirit; and many there be, qui se quuntur spiritum suum, that follow their own ghost, instead of the Holy Ghost: for, even that ghost taketh upon it, to inspire, c and flesh and blood (we know) have their Revelations.

a Job 31. 8.
b Ezek. 13. 13.
c Mat. 16. 2.
2 Not the world's spirit.
d 1 Cor. 2. 12.
e Eccl. 3. 11.

The other is, that the Apostle calleth d spiritu mundi, the world's spirit (or worldly spirit) c qui posuit mundum in corde suo (saith Salomon) hath set up and shrin'd the world in his heart: thence thence rise all his reasons, by them he frames and measures Religion. Up shall the golden calves, to uphold the present estate: down shall Christ, ne veniant Romani, that the Romans come not, and carry us all away. Either of these is peradventure Sacer spiritus, as the Poet calleth auri sacra famas; but neither is sanctus. ES. Peter opposeth the first (of private Resolution) to the Holy Ghost: 4S. Paul the second (of worldly wisdom) to the spirit of God. The winde (before) had four qualities: two of them (1 suddenness, and 2 vehemency) are passed by. Every winde, every spirit hath them. And commonly, other spirits are more violent, and make a greater noise, than the true spirit. The other two, 1 of coming from heaven, 2 coming for the Church; from the holy Heaven, to the holy Church; are both, in sancto, and sapere quæ sursum, being wise from thence, and regard to Religion and the Church; are the two best Characters to discern the Holy Spirit by.

Now ye will understand of your selves (I shall not need to tell you,) when we speak of the holy spirit, as it filleth us, we mean not the Essence or Person of the Holy Ghost that filleth heaven and earth (saith the Prophet;) and there is no going from it, (saith the Psalmist:) but only certain impressions of the spirit. The Psalmist calleth them Gifts (Psal. LXVIII. XVIII.) The Apostle, Graces (I Cor. XII. VII.) which carry the name of their Cause: so that (in the Dialect or Idiom of the Scriptures) to be filled with them, is to be filled with the Spirit. To shew this, otherwise they be joyned: the spirit and power of Elias (that is) the power of the spirit; the wisdom and spirit of STEPHEN, (that is) the wisdom of the spirit.

And, because these Gifts and Graces be of many points (more points of this Wind than there be of the Compass) and as it were many spirits in one, fix, (saith Esay) seven, (saith Saint John:) they are all recapitulate under these two. 1. Under the wind is represented the saving grace, which all are to have (so to serve God, that they may please Him;) as necessary to all, and without which, we can be no more, in our spiritual life, than we can, without our breath, in our natural. This is general to all. It is said repleti sunt omnes: the hearer must have it, as well as the speaker. It must aire and dry up the superfluity of our nature; else, the fire will not kindle in us, but turn all to smok. Of this Spirit are those nine points (Gal. 5. 22.) 2. The other, (represented in the Tongues,) set forth unto us another kind of Grace, principally meant and sent for the benefit of others: given therefore in Tongues, which serve to teach; and in fire, which serveth to warm others: to shew they are given and received, for the good of others, rather than of themselves. And of this Spirit are the points reckoned up, (I Cor. 12. 7.)

And now we know, what it was they were filled with, let us come to the measure, Repleti sunt. It was not spiritus transiens, but implens: a wind, not that blew thorow them, (as it doth thorow many of us, I know not how oft) but, that filled them: they were the fuller for it. Which word [of filling] wanteth not his special force: refer we it to their estate now, compared with what it was before, Repleti sunt; or to their estate in this point, compared with other since, and namely with our selves, Repleti sunt illi.

With their own estate first. For, there is no question, they were not empty or void of the Spirit, before this coming. They had not been baptized by CHRIST; He had not breathed on them, and bid them receive the HOLY GHOST, in vain: If, before this, they had dyed, none would have doubted of the estate of their souls. This filling then (first) sheweth us, there be divers measures of the Spirit: some single, some double portions, as appeareth by ELISHA's petition: not all of one size or scantling. That, as there are degrees in the wind, Aura, ventus, procella; a breath, a blast, a stiffe gale: so are there in the spirit. One thing; to receive the spirit, as on Easter-day; another, as on Whit-sunday. Then, but a breath: now, a mighty winde: then, but received it; now, filled with it. Sprinkled before, as with a few drops, Ezekiels stillabo spiritum, but, now comes Joels Effundam spiritum (which very Text is alledged at the XXVIII. Verse after by Saint Peter) poured out plentifully, and they baptized (that is) plunged in it. Imbuti spiritu, covered with some part of it; so were they before: here now, they be induti spiritu, cloathed all over with power from above, as CHRIST promised (Luke XXIV. XLIX.) To conclude: the HOLY GHOST came here (saith Leo) cumulans, non inchoans; nec novus opere, sed dives la girate: rather by way of augmenting the old, than beginning a new. Though (to say the truth) both ways He came here. The rule of the Father is (Hierome and Cyril have it) Where the HOLY GHOST was before, and is said to come again, it is to be understood, one of these ways: 1 Either of an increase of the former, which before was had; 2 or of some new not had before, but sent now for some new effect. Breath they had before: breath and winde are both of one kind: differ only secundum magis & minus: to be filled is but to receive only in a greater measure: therefore greater, because their work was now greater. Before but to the lost sheep of Israel: now to all the stray sheep in all the mountains of the whole earth.

But, beside that increase, here is a new form too. Which is a sign of a new gift, utterly wanting in them before, and herewith now, and never till now, they were furnished, to speak to all Nations, of all tongues under heaven. Thus far, compared with themselves.

Now, repleti sunt illi. Illi, with reference to others since, and (if you will) to our selves. They, in the succeeding ages, and we, to this day, receive the spirit too, or else it is wrong with us. But, both they before us, short of the Apostles; and we short of them, by much. It fareth herein, as it doth in the pouring forth of an ointment, (the Psalme so likeneth it :) No ointment at the skirts, or edges of a garment, doth run so fresh, and full, as on the head, and beard, where it was first shed: ever, the further it goeth, the thinner and thinner the streams be. Therefore it is said, Repleti sunt illi; and even illi wants not his force, they were filled, they. We, but a Hin, to their Epha; but an handful, to their heap; but a ramisme, to their Baptisme. They filled: had as much, as they could hold: We have our measure, such as it is; but, full we are not. None of us so full, but we could hold more.

1 Reason.
Psa. 68. 18.
Eph. 4. 8.

And, two reasons there are rendred: 1 One, such a Pentecost, as this, never was but this; never the like before, nor since. It was CHRIST'S Coronation day, the day of placing him in his Throne; when He gave these gifts unto men. That day, all magnificence was shewed, the like not to be looked for ever after.

2 Reason.

Then again, to say truth, our task-work is not so great, that we need require such a filling. We have to deal with but a handful of men, in comparison; and those brought up in Religion; and (as it were) broken to our hands. They, with the fulness of the Gentiles, all mankind; wild as then, and enraged; filled full of malice against them; and their doctrine by the evil spirit: that they needed the good spirit, to fill, to encounter such opposition. The case (you see) differs much. It was happy for the World, they had this overflowing fulness of the spirit. It is enough for us, we have the measure spoken of, 2 Cor, 12. 9. Sufficit tibi gratia, grace sufficient for us: and let that content us. And thus much for the commentary of the wind; Now, to the gloss of the tongues.

the tongues.
And they spake.
* Psa 39. 3.

They were filled; and, in sign they were filled, it is added, they ranne over. The * fire was kindled in them, by this winde; and in sign thereof, they spake with their tongue. Indeed, pity they should be thus full, and have no means to vent it: have a spirit to fill, and not a tongue to empty, or impart it. Therefore, the tongues were requisite. The winde would have served them, if they had been to be Christians only: But, they were to be Apostles (that is, Ambassadors) and such must have tongues, needs. But, two imperfections were in their tongues: 1 They were but single: He cleft them, and made them able to deal with many. 2 Their tongues were waterish and weak: He gave them the force and operation of fire; to kindle such a light, as should burn to the worlds end. In a word: where they knew neither how, nor what to speak, He gave them both: both sicut, how; and et uos dicite, what: He gave them both, and so made them perfect Apostles. These four, 1 courage, 2 language, 3 discretion, and 4 learning.

First, a word of the dependance of Repleti, and locuti: They were filled, and then they began to speak. It is well they began not before; but were filled first, and then spake after. This, is the right order. Somewhere, some fall a speaking, I will not say before they be full, or half-full; but while they be little better than empty, if not empty quite. There, is not repleti sunt, & caeperunt loqui: caeperunt loqui begins the verse with them; Repleti sunt is skipped over. Ever, emptying presupposeth filling: Repleti hath reference to the cisterne; Locuti to the cock. The cisterne would be first looked to, that it have water store, before we be too busie, to ply the cock. Else, follow we not the Holy Ghost's method: Else, it may be caeperunt loqui, but not sicut dedit spiritus: He giveth leave to none, to speak empty.

It is but a Grammer note (that of Hieromes) but it is to the purpose, upon the word quem docebo scientiam (Esay 28.) that doceo, if it have his right, would have a double Accusative: not only quem, whom (that is) an auditory, but scientiam, what (that is) knowledge. So as, he that hath not scientiam, should not have quem; and they that get themselves whom to teach, and have not scientiam, what to teach, go they never so oft into the Pulpit, it is not sicut dedit Spiritus, the HOLY GHOST gave them neither Mission nor Commission. He ever taketh order for repleti, before He giveth licence for caeperunt loqui.

1 Caeperunt loqui. Their courage.

Mat. 26. 69.

And thus for their skill. But, he that reads the Fathers Writings, shall find they refer this caeperunt loqui, no less to their boldness, than to their hability: began, not only, posse, to be able, in respect of their skill, but audere, to dare, in regard of their courage. Before, neither courage, nor skill; now, both: that any man might see, there was a new spirit come into them. In saying [they began] it is, as if before they had been tongue-tyed; had never spoken. No more they had: never as they spoke now; never, with that confidence. Before, they did not speak out, they durst not; they spake between the teeth, hoarsly, as if they had lost their voice. A poor Damofel did but ask St. Peter a question, he falkered presently, could not speak a right word. Every thing, then, rook away their voice. But, after this mighty Wind, had filled them and blowen up the fire, and they warmed with it; then (saith Augustine) In omni pretorio, in omni Consistorio, in every Judgement-place, in every Consistory, then, they spake what they had heard and seen, even before Kings, and were not abashed. It confirmed them; it gavethem sides, and strength. Which so sudden change, from so great pusillanimity, to so great courage and constancy, was sure mutatio dextera Excelsi, a change wrought by the hand of the most High. No other hand could, work it.

Psa. 77. 10.

2 Linguis, &c.
Their language.

And (that we may know, that not only the tongues wrought in them, but even the clearing also had his effect, they began, not only to speak; but, with other tongues: other, than ever they had learn.

learned. For, look what tongue soever it was, beside the Syriack, it was another tongue, it was not theirs: they had but one till now; any other they could not skill of. But now, on a sudden, Greek, Latine, Arabick, Persian, Parthian, none came amiss: yet, never were they taught them; but came to them, as it were with a cleft only. A great miracle, in it self: And a great enabling to them. For, by this means, every Apostle, look how many tongues he would speak, so many Apostles was he, as serving for so many sundry men, as must else have been used for the speaking so many sundry tongues, to so many sundry Nations. Whereby, as the line of the Creator is said to have gone in to all Lands, (Psal. 19. 4.) so is the sound of the Apostles said likewise to have gone as far (Rom. 10.) The one, to proclaim the creation; the other, the redemption of the world. And so, by speaking all tongues, they have gathered a Church, that speaketh all tongues; a thing much tending to the glory of GOD. For, being now converted to CHRIST, they send up daily to Heaven, so many tongues; there to praise His name: as He, this day, sent down to earth, to convert them withall to His truth. And indeed, it was not meet, one tongue only should be employed that way, as (before) but one was: It was too poor and slender, like the musick of a monochord. Far more meet was it, that many tongues; yea, that all tongues should do it; which (as a consort of many instruments) might yield a full harmony. In which, we behold the mighty work of GOD: that the same means of divers tongues, which was the destroying of Babel, the very same is here made to work the building of Sion: that means, that scattered them, from the Tower of Confusion; the very same, to reduce them, to the fold of unity: that so, the curse might be taken away, and a blessing come in place, the confused tongues being united into GOD'S glory; and there being neither speech nor language, but His praise is heard among them. The Nations being once converted to the faith (most of them) this gift is ceased: ceased so far, as by immediate inspiration: though, in part to attain it, by our endeavours, and GOD'S blessing upon them, is found still of good use. For, even to this day, it is holden for requisite, there be one cleft (at least) in the tongue; and we able to speak one tongue more, than our mothers taught us. Better yet, if the cleft, which GOD hath made in His Word, in the tongues of the Old and New Testament, be in our tongues too. That hath still a necessary service; and maimed are we, without it: For, we must (else) receive the embassage from GOD, by an Interpreter, which is not so convenient. But, enough of the cleft of the tongues.

Rom. 10. 13.

Gen. 11. 7.

Now, that this might not prove to vain-glory (as it did after, in some at Corinth) it is well added, Sicut dedit Spiritus, which is the third: that they began to speak, not, as their own vanity carried them, but as the HOLY GHOST directeth them. Their tongue was but the pen; i.e. the writer. His wind blew the fire, flaked it, and made it more or less, as need was. The tongues were on them, and He in the tongues, holding (as it were) the reins in His hand; guiding and moderating their speech; making them keep time, measure, and manner: time, when; measure, how much; manner, how to speak. Which sicut is the gift of discretion; many times as much worth as dedit, the Gift it self. Sure, these are two: 1 Dedit is one thing, the Gift; 2 Sicut another, the use of the gift. To many is given to speak, but not with the right Sicut. Two distinct things be they: and howsoever we do with the one, we shall find a needful use of prayer to obtain the other. We may begin to speak, when we please: but, who shall give us our Sicut? Sure, none but the Spirit: Of Him we must receive this, or else we shall never have. Let that suffice.

3. Their discretion. Sicut dedit Spiritus.
Psal. 45. 1.

Last then, that we mistake not, what it was He gave them to speak; (for, all this while, it is not said, what.) That they began to speak is said; and wherewith, with other tongues; and how, as the Spirit gave them utterance. Lest therefore we might mistake, it was quicquid in buccam, any thing that took them in the head, it skilled not what: he tells us, when it was, in the last word, that He gave them utterance, we read; it is of larger contents, a more pregnant word, and more full of significancy.

4. Their learning: As the Spirit gave them utterance.

They began to speak as the Spirit gave them. Why not there stay, what needed any more? Yes: more (it seems) needed; there goeth more unto it, than so, Speaking will not serve the turn: else, λαλῆσαι had been enough, and not any word more put to it. He foresaw, that to speak, and only to speak, would be enough for some. So we go up for an hour and speak, be it to the purpose or no, it is all one. For the common man it skills not, it contents him well enough: But, the HOLY GHOST is not content with λαλῆσαι: It is not every speaking; but, a kind of speaking it must be, and that kind is ὑποδείγματι.

The Word, I wish well weighed. Chrysostome, Occumenius, the Interpreters (all) weigh it, and assure us, it is no flight, or light word, but verbum talenti, a word of weight, of a talent weight. To tell you, what it was: You have heard of Apophthegmes; (So do both Greeks, and Latines, call wise and weighty sententious speeches:) that word [Apophthegmes] is the true and proper derivative, of this ὑποδείγματι here. Such the Spirit gave them to utter. Not the crudities of their own brain, idle, loose, undigested geer (GOD knoweth:) No, but pithy and wise sentences: those be sicut dedit Spiritus, such as the HOLY GHOST gave them. It is after said in (the 11. verse) that by virtue of this, when they spoke, they spoke Magnalia: Magnalia, great and high points, not Trivialia, base and vulgar stuffe, not worth the time it wasteth, and taketh from the hearer. Yet now, all is quite turned: and we are come to this, that this kind of speaking, is only from the Spirit of GOD: and the other (said here to be given by the HOLY GHOST) is study or affectation, or I wot not what; but, Spiritus non dedit, that is certain.

Tit. 1. 9.
1 Pet. 4. 11.
Elay 6. 7.
50. 4.

Well, Saint Luke saith ῥητορικὴ is that, the Spirit giveth. So saith Saint Paul, ῥητορικὴ, Speech according to learning: so Saint Peter, such speech as may seem or besem the very oracles of GOD: as may work light in the understanding, or fervour in the affection: those two shew it fire. The fire of the Old Testament, the burning coale wherewith the Seraphim touched Esay's mouth, and gave him (as he saith) linguam eruditam, a learned tongue; not only a tongue, but a learned tongue. As the fire of the Old; so, of the New. So (I am sure) was our SAVIOUR'S promise, Dabo vobis os & sapientiam, He would give them a mouth and wisdom. Not a mouth only, but, a mouth and wisdom. Put these two together, a mouth and wisdom, and a learned tongue, and you know, what is ῥητορικὴ, and you know what is meant by a tongue of fire. For, fire cannot speak chaff, it consumes it (we see,) therefore, if it be chaff, it is no fiery tongue that speaks it.

Luk 21. 15.

Ecclef. 12. 11.

And where it is required, that not only the tongue have this fire, but that it sit and bide by us, sure it is, that volubility of utterance, earnestness of action, straining the voice in a passionate delivery, Phrases and Figures, these all have their heat, but they be but blazes. It is the evidence of the Spirit, in the soundness of the sense, that leaves the true impression: that, is the tongue, that will sit by us; that, the fire, that will keep still alive. The rest comes in passion; move for the present, make us a little sermon-warmer for the while; but, after, they flit and vanish, and go their way, true mark leave they none. It is only verba sapientum clavi (saith the Wise-man) the wisdom of the speech, that is the naile, the naile red-hot, that leaveth a mark behind, that will never be got out. Enough (I trust) to serve them that do λαλῶσι, as their own spirit; from them that do ῥητορικῶς, as the spirit of GOD giveth them: and to stop their mouths for ever, that call it not speaking by the Spirit, unless never a wise word be spoken. So have we the Glass of the tongues: 1 The tongues themselves in καπεραντὸν loqui: 2 Cloven, in linguis aliis: 3 Sitting, in the Spirits sicut: 4 Fire, in ῥητορικῶς: the truth answering the type, in every point: shewing us, what was in them; and what they should be that hold their places: able to speak more tongues than one; to speak discreetly, and to speak learnedly.

Zach. 11. 12.

And now, to draw to an end. Let us return to our Pentecost-duty, to glorifie GOD, for the HOLY GHOST thus sent, these two ways: 1 As the Spirit (within) filling; 2 As the tongues (without) uttering. The tongues, they are a peculiar to one kind of men, though all now invade them, and talk even too much. Of them first. Where the Apostle expoundeth that of the Psalm Going up on high, He gave gifts unto men; he tells us what those Gifts were: He gave some Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists: and he stays not there, but tells us, that part of that Gift were Pastors, and Teachers, whereof there were none at CHRIST'S Ascension, but they were ordained after, for the succeeding ages. Intending (as it seemeth) a part of our Pentecostal duty should be, not only to give thanks for them, He first sent, on the very day; but even for those, He sent ever since; and for those, He still sendeth, even in these days of ours. To thank Him, for the Apostles; thank Him for the ancient Doctors, and Fathers; thank Him for those we have, if we have any so much worth. And are these the Gifts, which CHRIST sent from on high? was St. Paul well advised? Must we keep our Pentecost in thanksgiving for these? Are they worth so much, trow? we would be loth to have the Prophets way taken with us (Zach. 11,) that it should be said to us, as there it is: If you so reckon of them indeed, let us see the wages you value them at; and when we shall see, it is but eight pound a yeare; and having once so much, never to be capable of more; may not then the Prophets speech there well be taken up: A goodly price these high Gifts are valued at by you! And may not He justly (instead of Zachary, and such as he is) send us a sort of foolish shepherds; and send us this senselesseness withall, that, speak they never so fondly, so they speak, all is well; it shall serve our turn as well as the best of them all? Sure, if this be a part of our duty, this day, to praise GOD for them, it is to be a part of our care too, they may be such, as we may justly praise GOD for: Which, whether we shall be likely to effect, by some courses as of late have been offered; that leave I to the weighing of your wise considerations.

But leaving this, which is peculiar but to some; let us return to the HOLY SPIRIT common to all, and how to be filled with it. A point which importeth every one of us: this day especially; when first, certain it is, we are not to content our selves (as Bernard well saith) quibusvis angustis, with every small beginning, and there to stick still; to think, if we have never so small a breath of it, and that but once in all our life, that, that is enough; we may sit us down securely, and take no more thought, but rely upon that, for that will do it: but to aspire still, as we may, nearer and nearer, to this measure here; and know, that repleti sunt was not said for nothing. Which how to do, we may take some light from the Text. The two types, He came in, being bodily, serve to teach us, we are not to seek after means meetly spiritual, for attaining it: but trust, as here He visited these, so will He us, and that per signa corporea (saith Chrysostome.) For had we been spirit, and nothing else, GOD could and would immediately have inspired us that way: but consisting of bodies also (as we do) it hath seemed to His Wisdom most agreeable, to make bodily signes, the means of conveying the graces of His Spirit Spirit into us. And that, now the rather, ever since the Holy One Himself and Fountain of all holiness (CHRIST, the Son of God) partaketh of both Body and Spirit; is both Word and flesh. Thus it is: that, by the Word we are sanctified; & per linguam verbi patrem (saith Chrysostome) even by those tongues here, John 17. 17. But no less; by His flesh and body, Heb. 10. 10. And indeed, this best answereth the term filling, which is proper to food; & Spiritus est ultimum alimentum, the uttermost perfection of nourishment. In which respect He instituted Escam spiritualement, spiritual food; to that end: so called spiritual; not so much for that it is received spiritually; as for that, being so received, it maketh us, together with it, to receive the Spirit, even potare Spiritum (it is the Apostles own word.)

1 Tim. 4. 4.
1 Cor. 10. 3.
Joh. 6. 63.
1 Cor. 12. 13.

In a word: our Pentecost is to be, as these types here were. They were for both senses: 1 The ear, which is the sense of the Word; 2 and the eye, which is the sense of the Sacrament, visibile verbum, so it is called. Meant thereby, that both these should ever go together, as this day; and as the type was, so the truth should be. And, for our example, we have themselves and their practice in this very Chapter: who, on this Feast, joyned together the Word (at the 14.) and the breaking of bread (at the 42. verse.) And so let us too: and trust, that by filling up the measure of both types, we shall set our selves in a good way, to partake the fulfilling of His promise, which is, to be indued with power from above, as they were: at least, in such sort, as He knoweth meet for us. Which Almighty God grant we may.

Preached before the
Kings Majesty,
At WHITEHALL,
On the XXVII. of May, A.D. MDCX.
being WHITSUNDAY.

I O H N, Chap. XIV. Ver. XV, XVI.

Si diligitis Me, mandata mea servate,

Et ego rogabo Patrem, & alium Paracletum dabit vobis, ut maneat vobiscum in æternum.

If ye love Me, keep my Commandments,

And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever.

THEY are CHRIST'S words to His Apostles, they touch the coming of the Holy Ghost; of whose coming this Text is a promise: A promise of a prayer to procure the Comforter sent them. Which Comforter, who it is, is told us, Ver. 26. the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost. Let this be said to the honour of it. An Angel served to annunciate Christ's coming: No Angel would serve for this Annunciation; Christ Himself did it: thought not Himself too good to do it. A special high benefit therefore it is, we may be sure. And this Comforter (the Holy Ghost) was by the Father sent, and by them received; and so, the prayer heard, and the promise performed all as this day. Which day we yearly hold holy in thankful remembrance of the HOLY GHOST promised to be sent, and sent.

The Holy Ghost is the Alpha and Omega of all our Solemnities. In His coming down, all the Feasts begin; at His Annunciation, when he descended on the blessed Virgin: whereby the SON of GOD did take our nature, the nature of man. And, in the Holy Ghost's coming they end, even in His descending this day upon the sons of men; whereby they actually become partakers in quoniam, of His Nature, the Nature of GOD. Of which His last and great coming, in this Text is the promise, and at this time the performance: that, as promise and performance, so the Text and Time agree.

Every promise is glad tydings; but every promise is not Gospel: nor is it good to make a Text of it, while it is in suspense: But, when it is dixit & factum est, so said, and so done, then it is a Gospel, and may be preached on. Being then made good this day, the Church hath made it the Gospel of this day; it being Festum solutionis, the Feast whereon it was to be, and whereon it was paid.

This

This promise grew thus. They were to be deprived of CHRIST'S presence: He to be gone. They were troubled with: troubled at the very heart. In that state, they needed comfort. A Comforter He promiseth them. His promise is in manner of a Deed; not absolute, but as it were with Articles on both parts per modum Syngraphæ. A Covenant on His part; A condition on theirs. He covenants two things: the one supposed, love: If ye love me. The other imposed, Then keep my Commandments. These two on their part well and truly performed and kept, He stands bound to pray, and praying to procure them a Comforter, another in His stead: And, that they might not be every other while to seek for a new, one that should not leave them, as He did, but abide with them for ever.

Many are the benefits that come to us by the Holy Ghost; and so, His titles many: He is here expressed in the title of a Comforter. Comfort never comes amiss: but it's most welcome to men in their estate (here) troubled in mind. It may be, our estate is not yet, as theirs was; and we have our terrenas consolatiunculas, which yet serve our turn well enough. But, there is none of us, but the day will come, when we shall need Him and His comfort. It will be good to look after Him: and the sooner, the better. He came here (we see) before the third hour of the day, that is, nine in the Morning: let us not put Him off, till nine at Night. It will be too late, to seek for our oyle, when the Bridegroom is coming.

Matth. 25.

Those Articles were here drawn, for them: but, he that liketh the same conditions, may have title to the same Covenant to the Worlds end. For, to the Worlds end, this Covenant here holdeth; and the Holy Ghost offered to be sent (though not in visible manner, as this day; it was meet, it should be, with some Solemnity at his first coming for the more credit, yet) sensibly to them that receive Him. No day excepted: yet, this day pleadeth a special interest.

It will then not be amiss, if we take instructions, what is required on both parts, so many as are desirous to be partakers of His heavenly comfort, which (I trust) is the desire of us all, that so with comfort we may celebrate this Festum Paracleti, this Feast of the Comforter.

Thus, they will rise to be treated of. 1. The condition first. 1 Their Love, 2 Their looking to His Commandments keeping. 2. Then the Covenant: 3 CHRIST'S Intercession. 4 His Fathers giving: 5 Giving the Comforter: 6 Another Comforter. Where, both will come to be touched: but, His diversity. 7 At last His perpetuity, or abode with them for ever.

The division.
I.
II.

THE Condition stands first, as first commended to our care. For of our part we had need have care: On His, we need not. And, let me say this of it: No condition could have been devised more proper and fit for this Feast: Both parts of it.

I.
The condition.

First, If you love me, Love; and this is Festum Charitatis, the Feast of Love; and He, whose the Feast is (the Holy Ghost) Love it self, the essential Love and Love-knot of the two persons of the God-head, Father and son. The same the Love-knot between God and Man; and yet more specially between CHRIST and His Church. Properly, as Faith referreth to Christ the Word; So doth Love, to the Spirit, and comfort to love. It is the Apostle: Si quod solatium Charitatis, If there be any comfort, it is in love. What condition could be more fit?

II.
Their Love.

And the second is like to it; as fit every way: Keep my Commandments. For ye shall read in Exodus, that, at this Feast of Pentecost, the Commandments were given. The very Feast it self instituted, in remembrance of the Law then given: then very meet they be remembered of them at this Feast. And the Holy Ghost sent, inter alia, that they may be written not in stone, but in their hearts; not with the letter, but, with the Spirit: and the Spirit not of fear, but love; as, by whom the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts. Which love is the fulfilling of the Commandments, and they all abridged in this one word Diliges. So, whether we regard the Feast, or the Person, or the Office of Him to whom we hold the Feast, the Condition is well chosen.

Phil. 2. 1.
Rom. 31. 10.

To begin then with the first: If ye love me. Love is not so fit here, as If is unfitting. For, If, is as if there were some if, some doubt in the matter, whereof GOD forbid there should be any. It would be without if. Thus rather: Forasmuch as you love Me, Keep my, &c. That they and we love Him, I trust shall not need to be put in Hypothesis — Et erat tum dignus amari: seeing He is so well worthy of our love, that we too blame, if we endure any if, any question to be made of it.

III.
Love.

It grieves me to stand long in this condition; to make an If of it, at Pentecost. Take the Feasts all along, and see, if by every one of them, it be not put past If. Christmas-day; for us, and for our love, He became flesh, that we might love Him, because, like us He took our nature on Him. New-years-day: knowing no sin, He was made sin for us; sealed the Bond with the first drops of His blood; wherewith the debt of our sin light upon Him. Candlemas-day; He was presented in the Temple, offered as a live Oblation for us, that to the obedience of His whole life might be ours. Good-friday, made a slain Sacrifice on the Cross that we might be redeemed by the benefit of His death. Easter-day; day, opened us the Gate of Life, as the first-fruits of them that rise again. Ascension-day; opened us the Gate of Heaven; thither, as our Fore-runner entered, to prepare a place for us. And this day seals up all by giving us feisin of all that He hath done for us, by his Spirit sent down upon Earth. And after all this, come ye in with If ye love Me? Shall we not out with Si, strike out (If) and make the condition absolute? Shall we not to St. Pauls If, If any man love not the LORD JESUS, let him be Anathema Maranatha, Allsay, Lethim be so?

If we love them that love us, what singular thing do we, since the very Publicans do the like? That, if our love be but as the Publicans, there would be no If made of it, for He loved us.

And not because we loved Him, but He loved us first. Et nulla major ad amorem provocatio quam praevenire amando: Nimis enim durus est, qui amorem etsi nolebat impendere, nolit rependere. No more kindly attractive of love, than in loving to prevent: For, too hard metal is he of, that though he like not to love first, will not requite it and love again, either first or second.

1 John 3. 7.
John 15. 13.

Rom 5. 10.
Esay 54. 4.

Specially, since His love was not little, but such as St. John makes an Ecce quantam Charitatem of, see how great love! How great? So, as none greater; For, greater love hath no man, than this, to give his life for his friends. No man greater, but He: For His was beyond. To give His life, is but to dye any sort of death; But Morte Crucis, to dye as He dyed, that is more. And, for such as were His friends, is much: But, Cum inimici essemus, is a great deal more. And yet is it If? Put it to the Prophets question, Quid debuit facere? And add to it (if ye will) Quid debuit pati? What should He have done, and what suffered? If He did it not, if He suffered not, make an If of His love: but if He did both, out with it.

But the Publican will be the Publican, and the World the World: their love is mercenary sale Ware; si nihil attuleris, no profit, no love. To take away that If, even thither He will follow us, and apply Himself to that. And if we will make port-sale of our love, and let it go by who gives more; He will out-bid all. All, by the last word, In eternum. For, whatsoever we may have here, if it were a Kingdom, it is not for ever. But this Comforter that shall abide with us, is but a pledge of that Bliss and Kingdom of His wherein we shall abide with Him eternally. Let any offer more for our love, and carry it.

Verily, Bonum, si non amatur, non cognoscitur, said the Heathen. But more true of CHRIST, If we love Him not, we know Him not. If we did but know, what He is in Himself; what, to us: what He hath already done, what He is ready to do for us still, we would take it evil, a case should be put, and yield to it without more ado.

Why so we do: take it evil, an if is made: yield to it, we love Him all. Yet great reason there was, we shall see, CHRIST should so put it, being to infer the second. For, at that, there will be some sticking: which would not be, if we were not defective in this former; of love. If our love were not light, His Commandments would not be heavy. If love were as it should be, nothing is heavy to it; Amor erubescit nomen difficultatis, Love indures not the name of difficulty, but shames to confesse any thing too hard for it. De internis affirmare tutum (saith the Heathen) It is safe affirming of any thing within us, where no man can convince us; for, none is privy to it but our selves. How many shall we hear say, I have ever affected, wished you well, born you good will, and never a word true? Forasmuch then, as there be two loves (saith St. John) one in word and tongue, and that is feigned; and another in deed and truth, and that is right: and that CHRIST conditioneth not, If ye say ye love me; but if ye love me indeed: We must come to St. James assay, Ostende mihi, Shew me thy Faith: and as well, shew me thy love, by some offensive sign. So did CHRIST to us. Ecce quantam Charitatem ostendit! Behold how great love (not, He verbally protested, but) really shewed! and so, they to do the like; to shew it.

1 John 4. 20.

James 2. 18.

1 John 3. 1.

Why, thus they shew it: He is going away, and they be very sad for it: which sheweth, they love Him, and would keep him still. But, that may be a sign, they love themselves, in that they are to have some good by His stay with them.

their keeping His Commandments.

That may deceive you. But, will you have a sign infallible? Take this: His Commandments. His Word. He that keeps it, loves Him: true in the affirmative. He that keeps it not, loves Him not: true in the negative. This then is the second condition: If ye love Me (not, keep Me still, but) Keep My Commandments. Let your heart be troubled, not, if ye keep not Me; but, if you keep not them: Not, if not Me; Me, that is, My flesh; but, not Me; Me, that is, My Word, whereof the Commandments are an abstract. The Word is the better part of Me, better than My flesh: strive to keep that; be troubled, for not keeping that; and then, your love is past If, true indeed.

And is this the other part of the condition? This somewhat troubleth us: for who can do this, Keep the Commandments? as good condition with us, to flie or walk on the Sea. We are even as well able to do the one, as the other. So upon the matter, all this promise falls out to prove nothing: the Condition cannot be kept, and so the Covenant void. No HOLY GHOST, or Comforter to be hoped for, or had: we are but deluded.

Deluded! God forbid: CHRIST loves us too well, to delude us. He will never do it. A Melius inquirendum would be had, to look a little better into it, and not so lightly lose our interest in such a gift as the Holy Ghost. It stands us so in hand to get the condition made good: else we forfeit our estate in the promise.

If we be to be relieved, it is, by the word Mea; that they be His. And some alteration there is plainly in them, by Him, and His coming. It is not said, for nought (and that, by way of opposition) that the Law came by Moses, but grace came by Him, and grace for grace; that is, not only grace active which we receive, which relieveth us in the keeping them; but grace passive too, which we find with Him, which relieves in abating the rigour, when we are called to accompt about them. You shall find an alteration, in this very point. The Apostles would not press the Gentiles to be circumcised: being circumcised, St. Paul testifieth, they become debtors, to keep the whole Law: A yoke (saith St. Peter) that neither they (the Apostles) nor their fathers were able to bear, it was so heavy. This, as they came by Moses. But after CHRIST, with His grace, came; and His grace with Him; when they came to be His, Mandata Ejus (saith St. John) gravia non sunt, they are not heavy. And Himself, that best knew the price of it, saith plainly of His yoke, that it is easy, and it were hard to gain-say Him.

John 1. 17, 16

Gal. 3. 3.
Acts 15. 10.

1 John 5. 3.

Gal. 3. 19.

This qualifying then groweth two wayes: 1. One, that the Law, at the very giving it by Angels, was (saith St. Paul) ordinata in manu Mediatoris, ordained to be in the Mediators hand (that is, CHRIST) whose hands are not so heavy, as Moses were. 2. The other, that Pater omne judicium dedit Filio (saith Himself) His Father hath made Him Judge of the keeping or not keeping them. All judicial power and proceeding concerning them, is committed over to Him.

By the first, that they are ordained to be in His hand, He may take them into His hands when He will; and having them in His hands, order them and ease them as pleaseth Him. Lex in manu Mediatoris, is it we must hold by. If a bruise in the Reed, Moses would break it quite. If the flax smok, and flame not out, he would quench it strait. So will not He: His hand will not break the one: nor His foot tread on the other. To Mary Magdalen, He ordained, that fecit quod poterit should serve, and he would require no more. Credo Domine, adjuva incredulitatem meam, I believe Lord, help my unbelief; a belief mixed with unbelief, would never have indured Moses assay: In Manu Mediatoris, it did well enough. Thus He ordained; he that neither doth them, nor prepareth himself, Non fecit, neque preparavit (Luke 12.) he shall be punished: But if he prepare, stir up himself, have a care, a respect unto them, that (it seemeth) in Manu Mediatoris, will be taken. That if there be (saith the Apostle) prompta voluntas, a ready will; a man shall be accepted according to that, he hath; and not according to that, he hath not. For, the Mediator is Man, and hath had experience of mans infirmities: He knoweth our metal and our mould, and what our condition will bear. He knoweth, there is that conflict in us, we cannot do what we would. And indeed, why should concupiscence to evil be reputed sin, on the worse part; and a like desire (concupivi desiderare mandata tua) not be as well reckoned, forasmuch on the better part, though it be not full out according to the purification of the Sanctuary? Thus, as, in His Hands ordained.

2 Cor. 8. 12.

Hebr. 4. 15.

Psal. 119 40.

Then again, as, in His Court, to be judged. For the Court may alter the matter much, as with us here it doth. Sedens in solo iustitiae (as, to some) in His Tribunal seat of strict justice, there sitting, sentence will proceed otherwise, than Si ad eam Thronum gratiae, if we have access to Him in His Throne of grace, where we may obtain mercy and find grace. And St. James brings us good tidings, that Super-exaltat, &c. The Throne of grace is the Higher Court; and so an Appeal lieth thither, to whom He will admit. To cruel men (saith He) there shall be judgement without mercy: which sheweth, judgment with mercy shall be to some other, to whom He will vouchsafe it.

James 2. 13.

And thus, it must stand upon Mea, and Manu Mediatoris, and the Throne of grace, or else, even those here (the Apostles) it will go wrong with them, they will hardly be relieved in their claim of a Comforter. For, within twenty four houres and less, it came indeed to an If, their love: They loved Him not so well, but they loved their own safety better: fell away, and fled away, and denied Him; even he, that said, he loved Him best.

Mat. 26. 33, 69.

And what, kept they His Commandments? Sinned they not? In multis, omnes (saith Saint James) in many things, all: and if they should say otherwise (saith Saint John) that they had no sin (not, they were somewhat proud, and there were no humility, but) they were very liars, and there were no truth in them. So that, keeping the Commandments, and having of sin, must stand together, or else they kept them not.

James 3. 2.

1 John 1. 8.

But, this they kept (and so may we too,) they were troubled, their hearts were troubled for not keeping them: and at the Throne of grace, that was accepted; and the not keeping not reckoned a breach of the Commandment, if we be troubled for it.

Again, (as, well saith Saint Augustine) Amongst His Commandments this is one, which we must not fail duly to keep; and that is, the Commandment of daily praying Dimitte nobis, forgive us our not keeping, which helps all the rest. We keep (Lord) help our not keeping, as well as I believe (Lord) help my unbelief. A true indeavour with an humble repentance (for so he resolves) and then Omnia mandata facta deputantur, quando quod non fit ignoratur: All are accounted as kept, when what is not, is pardoned out of His mercy; and so the rest rewarded out of His bounty, that alloweth a dayes wages for an houres work, as to them that came at the eleventh houre to the Vineyard, that is, at five of the Clock after-noon. Thus will it be with us in hope: Thus was it with them. For, the Covenant held, and the Prayer went forward, and the Comforter came notwithstanding.

The Covenant.

give. And there is nothing more effectually sheweth, they were short in their Condition, than these two words, 1 Rogabo, and 2 Dabit. The Father shall give: It is His free gift, not due debt, upon desert of the former. And Dabit roganti, give it to Christs prayer, rather for Rogation weeks sake with Him, than for any work of Supererogation with them. But, it cometh from Gods bounty, and CHRISTS intreaty; without which, our love and commandment-keeping would not carry it: They are not sufficient to weigh it down pondere meriti; it must come rogatu Christi, or not at all. Then, not to lean on them: CHRIST it is, and His intercession, we take to. Nor, you shall love, and keep my Commandments, and then My Father shall be bound; but, and then CHRIST shall pray, and the Father will give, if Christ pray; and not otherwise.

But, a doubt here ariseth: May we love Christ, or keep His Commandments, before we have the Holy Ghost, without whom first had, it is certain, we can do neither? How shall we love Christ or keep His Commandments, that we may receive the Holy Ghost, when unless we first receive, we can neither love Him, nor keep them, nay not so much as say, Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost? Nay, not so much as think that, or any other thought that is good? How saith He then, Keep, and I will give, when He must give, or we cannot keep?

This scruple will soon be removed by Habenti dabitur. A promise may be made iam habenti, quam non habenti, as well to him that hath a thing already, as to him that hath it not at all. To him that hath it already, in a lower or less; may be promised to have it in a more ample measure, or more high degree, than yet he hath: or to him, that hath it in one kind, that he may have it in some other. To all (save Christ) the Spirit is given in measure: Where there is measure, there are degrees: where there be degrees and more or less, the more may well be promised to him, that hath the less. To him that hath it in the degree of warm breath, it may well be promised in tongues of fire. To him that hath it as the first fruits, which is but an handful, it may well be promised as in the whole sheaf, which filleth the bolome. But (that which is more agreeable to this Text here) we consider the Spirit (as Saint Peter) multiformem; the Spirit, in his graces; or the graces of the Spirit, as of many kinds. Of many kinds; for, our wants and defects are many. Not to go out of the Chapter: In the very words, He is called the Spirit of truth: and that is one kind of grace, to cure us of Error. In the 26. verse after, the Spirit of holiness, which is his common name, which serveth to reduce us from a moral honest life, to a holy, and wherein the power of Religion doth appear. And here he is termed the Comforter, and that is against heaviness and trouble of mind. To him that hath Him as the Spirit of truth, which is one grace, He may be promised as the Spirit of holiness, or comfort, which is another. It is well known, many partake him, as the Spirit of truth in knowledge, which may well be promised them (for sure, yet they have Him not) as the Sanctifying Spirit. And both these wayes may be had of some, who yet are subject to the Apostles disease here, heavy and cast down, and no cheerful spirit within them. So, they were not clean destitute of the Spirit at his promise making, but had him; and so well might love Him, and in some sort keep His Commandments, and yet remain capable of the promise of a Comforter for all that. So that CHRIST may proceed to His prayer, that His Father would send them the Comforter.

Where we begin with matter of Faith. For, we have here the Article offered to us, and set down in the three Persons, 1 Ego, 2 Ille, and 3 Alium: 1 I, 2 He, and 3 Another. 1 I will pray the Father, that is CHRIST the Son. 2 And He shall give it, that is, the Father, (His person is named.) 3 Alium, another third Person besides, that is, Paracletum, the HOLY GHOST. 1 One praying; 2 the other prayed to; 3 the third prayed for. 1 Filius orans; 2 Pater donans; 3 Spiritus consolans. The Son praying; the Father granting; the Spirit comforting: A plain distinction.

And CHRISTS prayer sets us to seek His other nature. For here He intreats, as inferiour to His Father, in state of Man: but (in the twenty sixth verse) as equal to His Father, in the nature of GOD, joyns in giving with like Authority. Rogabo, as Man: Dabo, as GOD.

Finding the Father giving here, and the Son giving there, we have the proceeding of the Holy Ghost from both; quem mittet Pater, whom the Father shall send, in the twenty sixth of this; quem ego mittam, whom I will send, in the twenty sixth of the next. Called therefore the Spirit of the Father, Mat. 10. 12. and again, called the Spirit of the Son (Gal. 4. 6.) the Spirit of both, as sent and proceeding from both.

And last the equality of the Holy Ghost. For sending and procuring, He must send and procure them one equal to Himself; as good every way; or else, they had changed for the worse, and so pray Him to let His prayer alone; they were better as they were; they shall be at loss.

CHRIST will pray: and if He pray, great likelihood there is, He will speed. He that is sued to, is easie to intreat; He is a Father: and He that doth sue is gracious to prevail, He is a Son. Pater à Filio rogatus, great oddes, the suit is half obtained, yer begun. Specially His Suit being not faint or cold, but earnest and instant, as it was. He sued by word, and it was clamore valido, with strong crying in an high key: & lachrymis, and He added tears (saith the Apostle) and they have their voice. And yet staid not there, but His blood speaks too; cries higher, and speaks better things than the blood of Abel. And the effect of His prayer, was not only Pater condona, Father forgive them; but Pater dona, Father give them the Holy Spirit to teach, sanctifie and comfort them (Chap. 17. 17.) This was His prayer, and His prayer prevailed: as good as His word He was. His Father should send, He said; and His Father did send, and the Holy Ghost came: witness this day.

And came in that sort, He undertook : even in that kind, whereof they had most need : (most welcome to them, as their case then stood :) under the term of Paracletus a Comforter. If we ask, Why under that term ? To shew the peculiar end for which He was sent, agreeable to the want of their private Estate, to whom He was sent.

Comforter.

If they had been perplexed, He would have prayed for the Spirit of truth. If in any pollution of sin, for the Sanctifying Spirit. But they were (as Orphans) cast down and comfortless : Tristitia implevit cor eorum, their hearts full of heaviness : no time, to teach them now, or frame their manners : they were now to be put in heart. The Spirit of truth or holiness would have done them small pleasure. It was comfort, they wanted ; a Comforter to them was worth all.

Many good blessings come to us by the Holy Ghosts coming : and the Spirit in any form, of truth or holiness (or what we will) by all means worthy to be received, even all His gifts : but a gift in season goes beyond all ; carrieth away the name from all the rest. Every gift then, in His time, When troubled with Erroneous opinions, then the Spirit of truth : when assaulted with temptations, then the Spirit of holiness : but, when oppressed with fear or sorrow, then is the time of the Holy Ghost the Comforter. Sorrow doth chill, and make the spirits congeal : therefore He appeareth in fire, to give them warmth ; and in a tongue the instrument of comfort, by ministering a word in due season ; and cloven, that it might meet with dismayes of all sorts, and comfort them against all.

And so did it : and that apparently. For, immediately upon the receiving it, they were thought to be full of new wine. That was but an Errour ; but so comforted they were, as before being exceeding fearful, they grew exceeding full of Courage and Spirit ; so as, even when they were scourged piteously, Ibant gaudentes, they went away, not patiently induring, but even sensibly rejoicing ; not as men evil intreated, but as persons dignified, having got a new dignity, to be counted worthy to suffer for CHRIST'S Name.

Acts 5. 41.

A Comforter then : and two things are added : 1 Alium, and 2 qui manebit in aeternum. 1 Another Comforter, and 2 that shall abide with them for ever. Both which are verified of Him, even in regard of CHRIST : but much more in regard of other earthly, fleshly, worldly Comforts and Comforters whatsoever. Another : which word presupposes one besides : so that two there be. 3 One they have already : and now another they shall have (which is no evil news.) For thus instead of a single, they find a double comfort. But both they needed.

Another Comforter.

This sets us on work to find the first : and we shall not need to seek far for Him. Speak to them of a Comforter, and they understood it not, but of CHRIST : all their comfort in Him : lose Him and lose all. Indeed, CHRIST was one : was and is still. And the very term of Paracletus is given Him by St. John : and though it there be turned an Advocate, upon good reason ; yet the word is the same in both. CHRIST had been their Comforter, while He was their Bridegroom, and they the children of the Bride-chamber. But, expedient it was, He should go, for, expedient it was, they had one in Heaven : and expedient withall, they had one in Earth, and so another in His stead.

1 John 2. 1.

Mat. 9. 15.

For the first : even now absent, He is our Comforter still, that way, we named right now : that is, our Advocate, to appear for us before GOD, there to answer the slanderous allegations of him that is the accuser of us and our Brethren. And a Comfort it is, and a great Comfort, to have a good Advocate there, in our absence : For, then we be sure, our cause shall take no harm.

Apoc. 12. 10.

But secondly, If as an Advocate, He cannot defend us, because the accusation oft falleth out to be true, if Moses accuse us to ; yet a second Comfort there is, that as a High Priest for ever, He is entered into the holy places made without hands, there by His intercession, to make atonement for them as sinners, whose innocence, as an Advocate, He cannot defend.

2.
John 5. 45.
Hebr. 7. 17.
9. 11.

And to both these, He addeth a third, at the beginning of this Chapter. That His leaving them, is but to take up a place for them, to be seized of it in their names, whom He will certainly come again, and receive to it ; there, to be for ever with Him.

3.
Ver. 2.

And in the mean time, He will take order, we shall have supply of another : in absence of His Body, the supply of His Spirit. That if we look up, we have a Comforter in Heaven, even Himself ; and if we look down, we have a Comforter on Earth, His Spirit : and so are at an Anchor in both.

For, as He doth in Heaven, for us : So doth the Spirit on Earth in us, frame our petitions, and make intercession for us, with sighs that cannot be expressed. And, as CHRIST is our Witness in Heaven ; so is the Spirit here on Earth, witnessing with our spirits that we pertain to the Adoption, and are the Children of GOD. Evermore in the midst of the sorrowes that are in our hearts, with His comforts refreshing our souls ; Yet not filling them with false comforts ; but (as CHRIST'S Advocate here on Earth) soliciting us daily, and calling upon us, to look to His Commandments, and keep them ; wherein standeth much of our comfort, even in the testimony of a good conscience. And thus these two ; this one, and this other ; this second, and that first, yield plentiful supply to all our wants.

Rom. 8. 26, 27.
Rom. 8. 16.

A second Note of difference, is in the tenure they shall have of this other ; that He shall stay with them still, which, of CHRIST they had not. For, this is the grief ; when we have one that is our comfort, that we cannot hold Him : and this their fear, that when they have, another, still they shall be changing, and never at any certainty. Christ, as Man, they could not keep. Given He was by the Father ; but, given for term of years ; that term expired, He was to return. Therefore His abode is (Chapter 1. verse 14.) expressed by the word tabernaculum, the setting up of a Tent, or Tabernacle to be taken down again, and removed within a short time : No dwelling of continuance. But, the HOLY GHOST shall continue with us still, and therefore He is allowed a Temple, which is permanent, and never to be taken down. We have in Him, a state of perpetuity, to our endless comfort.

Howbeit, it may well be thought, Alium and manebis in eternum, are not put so much, for Christ, to make a difference from Him; as for these same other Terrena consolatiuncula, petty poor comforts, and solaces of the World: which GOD hath given us, and we may use; but we must look after Paracletum aliud, another, and another manner Comforter, when all is done. For, of these, it may be, we shall feel some comfort, while we be in health, and meetly good estate, and in case not much to need it. But, let us come into their cases here, the heart troubled, the mind oppressed, the Spirit wounded; and then, what earthly thing will there be, can minister any sound comfort to us? It will not be: we must needs seek for this Paracletum aliud here, at any hand. What speak I of the mind? If but ache come into a joynt, we know, we have tried them and found them, they are not able to drive away the least pain from the least part. And how then, when sickness cometh, and sorrow, and the pangs of death, what comfort in these? Comfort! Nay, shall we not find discomfort in the bitter remembrance of our intemperate using them, and little regard of the true Comforter? Shall we not find them (as Job found his friends) like winter-brooks, full of Rain in Winter, when no need of it, when it rains continually; but, in Summer, when need is, not a drop in them. So, when our state of body and mind is, that we can sustain our selves without it, then (perhaps) some they yield: but, when sorrow seizeth on the heart, then none at all. In the end, we shall say to them as he did, miserable comforters are ye all. Wherefore another comforter we are to seek, that may give us ease in our dis-ease of the mind, and in the midst of all our sorrows and sufferings make us ire gaudentes, go away rejoicing. No other will do it but this; that, when we have Him, we need look no further.

Job 16. 2.

The other is likewise a difference: of Staying with us for ever. For ever? the weak poor comfort we have by the Creatures here (such as it is) we have no hold of it: it stayes not, not for ever, nay, not for any long time. There be two degrees in it: 1 Non in eternum, that is too plain. 2 Nay, not manent nobiscum, they stay not with us: fugiant a nobis, they flee from us many times in a moment; as Salomons fire of thorns, a blaze, and out straight.

Numb. 11. 6.

Nay, if they would tarry with us, would they not tire us? Even Manna it self, did it not grow loathsome? Do we not find, that when we are ready to starve for hunger, and have meat to drive it away; if we use it any while, the meat is as irksome as the hunger was, and we are as hungry for hunger, as ever we were for meat? That we may not be cloyed, we change them; and even those, we change them for, within a while, cloy us as fast. What shall we do? where shall we find comfort a right? Ever per quod fastidio occurritur, fastidium incurritur: so that, if they would tarry, we must put them away: the not tarrying of them with us, that is, the change of them, is it, that makes us able to endure them.

Well then; comfort us they cannot, when we need it: we must pray for Alium. If they could, they cannot stay: not, for any space; much less, for ever. If they could, their very stay would prove fastidious, and yield us but discomfort. Seeing then, we cannot intreat them to stay with us; and if we could, in the evil day, they could not stand us; but, then fail us soonest when our need is greatest; Let us seek for another, that through sickness, age and death, may abide with us to all Eternity, and make us abide with Him in endless joy and comfort.

The Application to the Sacrament.

Such is this here, which CHRIST promised, and His Father sent this day: and which He will send, if CHRIST will ask: and CHRIST will ask, if (now we know the Covenant, and see the Condition) we will seal to the Deed.

Luke 22. 19.

To a Covenant there is nothing more requisite, than to put to the Seal. And we know the Sacrament is the Seal of the New Covenant, as it was of the Old. Thus, by undertaking the duty He requireth, we are intitled to the comfort which here He promiseth. And, do this, He would have us, as is plain by His Hoc facite.

And sure, of all the times in our life, when we settle our selves to prepare thitherwards, we are in best terms of disposition to Covenant with Him. For, if ever we be in state of love toward Him, or toward one another; then, it is. If ever troubled in spirit, that we have not kept His Commandments better; then, it is. If ever in a vowed purpose and preparation, better to look to it; then, it is. Then therefore of all times most likely to gain interest in the promise, when we are best in case, and come nearest to be able to plead the condition.

Hebr. 12. 24.

Besides, it was one special end, why the Sacrament it self was ordained, our comfort; the Church so telleth us; we so hear it read, every time to us: He hath ordained these Mysteries, as pledges of His love and favour, to our great and endlesse comfort. The Father shall give you the Comforter: why He giveth Him, we see: How, He giveth Him, we see not. The means, for which, He giveth Him, is Christ: His intreaty by His Word, in prayer; by His flesh and blood in Sacrifice: For, His blood speaks; not, His voice only. These, the means for which: And the very same, the means, by which, He giveth the Comforter: by CHRIST the Word; and by *CHRIST*s body and blood, both. In tongues, it came: but the tongue is not the instrument of speech only, but of taste, we all know. And, even that Note hath not escaped the Ancient Divines; to shew, there is not only comfort by hearing the Word, but we may also taste of His goodness, how gracious He is, and be made drink of the Spirit. That not only by the letter we read, and the Word we hear; but by the flesh we eat, and the blood we drink at His Table, we be made partakers of His Spirit, and of the comfort of it. By no more kindly way, passeth His Spirit than by His flesh and blood, which are Vehicula Spiritus, the proper carriages to convey it. Corpus aptavit sibi, ut Spiritum aptaret tibi: CHRIST fitted our body to Him, that He might fit fit His Spirit to us. For, so is the Spirit best fitted, made remeable, and best exhibited to us, who consist of both.

This is sure: where His flesh and blood are, they are not exanimæ; spirit-less, they are not, or without life; His Spirit is with them. Therefore was it ordained, in those very Elements which have both of them a comfortable operation in the heart of man. One of them (bread) serving to strengthen it, or make it strong: and comfort cometh of confortare, which is to make strong. And the other (wine) to make it chearful or glad: and is therefore to be ministr'd to them that mourn, and are oppress'd with grief. And all this, to shew that the same effect is wrought in the inward man, by the holy Mysteres, that is, in the outward, by the Elements: that there, the heart is established by grace, and our soul endued with strength, and our conscience made light and chearful, that it faint not, but evermore rejoyce in His holy comfort.

To conclude: where shall we find it, if not here, where, under one, we find CHRIST our Passover offered for us, and the Spirit our Pentecost thus offered to us? Nothing remaineth, but the Father Himself: And of Him we are sure too. Filium in pretium dedit, Spiritum in solatium: Se servat in pramium. His Son He gave, to be our price; His Spirit to be our comfort: Himself He keepeth to be our everlasting reward. Of which reward there, and comfort here, this day and ever may we be partakers, for him that was the price of both, Jesus Christ.

JOHN, Chap. XVI. Ver. VII.

Sed Ego veritatem dico vobis : Expedit vobis, ut Ego vadam : Si enim non abiero, Paracletus non veniet ad vos ; si autem abiero, mittam Eum ad vos.

Yet I tell you the truth : It is expedient for you, that I go away : For, if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you ; but, if I depart, I will send Him unto you.

UT if I go, I will send Him unto you. And He did go, and He did send Him ; and, this day He did send Him. So that, between this Text and this Feast, there is that mutual reference and reciprocation, that is between promissio missionis, and missio promissionis ; the promise of the sending, and the sending of the promise : The promise of the sending, the substance of the Text ; and the sending of the promise the substance of the Solemnity : It being the Solemnity of mittam, and veniet (both in the Text) the sending and coming of the Holy Ghost.

CHRISTS words they be : and all is nothing else, but a setting forth, or demonstration of the non veniet : Of non veniet, the not coming, and of Expedit, the Expediency of CHRISTS going, and consequently of this Feast.

There seemsto be a question here, whether best, the Comforter come, or not come : that is, whether any Whit-suntide, or no ? The question of His coming grew out of another, of CHRISTS going ; whether best CHRIST go, or not go : That is, whether any Ascension-day, or no. The Apostles were all mainly against His going, and so opposed hard against the Ascension. But CHRIST here resolveth the point thus : If they were against the Ascension, they lost Festum Paracleti, a Feast, which they might not miss out of their Kalendar : and so with promising them, this perswades them, to bear with that, to yield to the Ascension, in hope of Whit-suntide.

Which two Feasts are both in the Text, and the two main points of it : Here is an abeam, a going, and here is a veniet, a coming : CHRISTS going, that is the Ascension ; the Holy Ghosts coming, that that is Pentecost (the day which we now celebrate) as it were ἀντὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, one to make amends for the other. And ye shall observe, it is usual. Anon after Christmas-day, and the poor estate of Christs birth, there cometh the Epiphany with a starre, and great mens oblations, as by way of compensation. Presently after Good-friday, and the sorrow of His Passion, Easter-day followeth straight, the day of His triumph, to revive us again. And even so here, upon His Ascension, or going from us, there ensueth Whitsunday, the mends together withall. No impedit, without an expedit: no abeam, but a mittam: no going away, to bring a loss; but a coming too, to make a supply.

The truth is: Ascension-day, though to Him it were a day of glory; yet, to them it could not be, but a day of sorrow. It was a going to His Father; but, it was a going, from them. Going from them, they were to lose Him; and loss breeds sorrow; and a great loss (as this was) great sorrow. It did so; the very next words before these are, Your hearts are full of sorrow. And good reason: 1. To part with, to forgo any friend, is a grief. Not without some grief, doth the Apostle recount, that even Demas was fallen off, and had forsaken Him. 2. And if any friend, how much more of such a friend, as CHRIST was to them? It was a Festival, all the while, and they the Children of the Bride-chamber, so long as He was with them. To forgo such an one, must fill up the measure, a good way.

Ver. 8.

2 Tim. 4. 10.

Mat. 9. 15.

3. But to fill it full, if to part with such an one be grievous, at any time; then, to part with Him; then, He to leave us, and we Him, when we have most need of Him, when troubles are at hand is above measure grievous. And at hand they were (ver. 2) persecutions to rise, and they to be in that case, that they that cut their throats, should think they did God good service. If needs He would leave them, He should stay, till faire weather: Now, a tempest is toward; then, to be left, is the worst time that may be.

Now, joyne all these, 1 of a friend; 2 of such a friend; 3 at such a time, to be deprived; and tell me, if there were not great reason, ut tristitia impleret cor eorum, their hearts should be full of sorrow, For His going: Non expedit ut abeat. This for them.

Now for CHRIST: we shall see, quàm incerta providentia nostra. It falleth out many times, men are grieved with that, which is for their good: and earnestly are set on that, which is not expedient for them. It was their case, in desiring, CHRIST might not go. All was out of mistaking. Therefore CHRIST begins: But I tell you the truth: (as much to say) you are in an error all this while: your hearts be full of sorrow, because your heads are full of error. You conceive of my stay as beneficial to you, but falsely: I tell you true, it is so far from that, as, impediat, it will hinder you, turn to your loss. You apprehend my going, as an hindrance; but erre. 1. I tell you true, expedit vobis, it shall be your gaine. 2. This gain, and loss, are set down both: 1 The loss, in the not coming: 2 the gaine, in the coming of the Comforter, this day. 3. This coming, or not coming, depends upon Christs going, or His stay. Non veniet nisi, if Christ go not, He cometh not: veniet si, if CHRIST go, He cometh. Seeing then, ye shall be losers by my stay, and gainers by my going, be not for my stay: My stay will deprive you of Him: non veniet. Be not against My going, my absence will procure you Him: Mittam. I love you not so evil, as to stay with you for your hurt. Be not you grieved; be not against that, which is for your good.

The manner, of this answer is, 1 First retorquendo (holden ever to be the best.) You think, it will hinder you: I say συμψηφει, it will benefit you, that I go. 2 Then, to prove it, He proceeds, abducendo ad absurdum. For why, if I go not, there will follow a main inconvenience, which by no means is to be admitted, and that is, Non veniet Paracletus. The expedience of veniet, we deduce out of the inconvenience of non veniet.

This inconvenience, if He go not. What if He go? He will come certainly: For, He will be sure to send Him. Now choose, whether I shall go, and you have Him: or stay, and you want Him. The answer is clear: have Him ye must; want Him ye may not. So, if this be the case; If no Ascension, no Pentecost: we yield, Ascendat Christus, ut descendat Paracletus.

Where we have to consider of these: 1. Of the reason: It is expedient, expedient for you, I

Then, of the two. 1 The inconvenience of non veniet, the HOLY GHOST not coming: 2 And of the necessity of si non abiero, that CHRIST must go, that He may come.

And last, of Veniet and Mittam, His coming and Christs sending. Where we are to Treat, 1 of Paracletus, His name and nature first; 2 and then of the time, and manner of His sending.

Here is no act of our Saviour Christs, but ever at the first view, there sheweth forth, no speech, but ever at the first hearing, there soundeth some vertue in it. As here, in this, that vertue which the Apostle (2 Cor. 1. 10.) calleth consolatio, His mildnest and equity; the beams of that vertue brake forth in this. 1 Herein is equity: This very first, that He would yield to yield them a reason of His departure: Not use His authority (as well He might) come, and go at His pleasure, who could ask Him why? but even condescends to render them (though far His inferiors) a reason of His going and coming; which (sure) He was no way bound to do.

2. And what reason? that is next. It is not Licet, what is lawful for Him; but Expedi, what is expedient or meet to do.

3. And thirdly, His expedit is not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis: meet or expedient, not for Himself, but for them, to whom He renders it.

A reason given.
1 Sam. 2. 16.

There was, amongst the heathen, one, that would have His will stand for reason. And was there none such, among the people of God? Yes: we find (1 Sam. 2.) one, of whom it was said: Thus it must be, for Hophni will not have it so, but thus. His reason is, for, he will not: And God grant, none such be found among Christians.

Not licet;
but expedi.
1 Cor. 6. 12.
10. 23.

But, among Christians, there were, that stood with Saint Paul, upon licet: what they might do, this was lawful for them, and who should abridge them of it; St. Paul may well seem to have had relation there, to his Masters reason here, where He teacheth them a better rule, if they could hit of it: That licet is not it; expedit is CHRIST, and is the true Christians reason.

3.
Not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis.
Chap. 11. 30.

Heb. 13. 17.

And not expedit, at large. For so, we know not whom it refers to. It may be to Himself, expedit mihi; as, all the worlds reasons tread inward. No: but expedit vobis, for them, their profit and benefit, rather than His own. We find one before, in this Gospel Chap. 11.) and He was the High Priest, that made His, from expedit; but, it was expedit nobis: so reasons Caiaphas, there. But, CHRIST our High Priest taketh it the other way. I do it, because it is expedient for you, that I do it. And, the Apostle followeth Him in that too: Heb. 13. Use your Rulers (your spiritual Rulers) so as they may do their office with joy, not with grief; ANNO TIAS, for that is not good for you: not for you (hear you) and let them go. Well, certainly herein is equity; herein is mildness, in these two first words. It was, to his Father, and to His glory He went: He would not do it, but acquaint them with the reason of it: and that reason was, He would not do it, but that it was for their good. I have enough, from these three, if we learn to avoid 1 Hophnies non vult enim, to make our vult our enim; And the 2 Corinthians standing with him, upon his licet; 3 And frame our Rule, by expedit: and that, not Caiaphas expedit nobis, but CHRIST expedit vobis for you, it is good; you the Disciples: and make that the rule of our going out and coming in. This for Expedi vobis.

II.
The inconvenience of non veniet.

Apoc. 22. 20.

Luk. 24. 29.

If it be good, and good for them, they will not hinder it; Nemo impedit, quod expedit: That lesson will soon be learned, to yield to that, which is for our behoof. All the matter will be, to bring [expedit vobis] and [ut ego abeam] together: to understand that good: how [Ego abeam] can be expedient for them. Indeed it is hard to conceive. This we can well conceive: Expedi vobis, ut ego veniam, expedient it is, that I come; and say with the Apostle, etiam veni, yea, come Lord, come quickly. And this we can also Expedi vobis, ut ego maneam, expedient it is, that I tarry, and say with them (Luke 24.) mane nobiscum Domine; yea, tarry with us good Lord. It is more than expedient, for thee, so to do. But Expedi vobis ut ego abeam, expedient, I go my way, and leave you, Durus est hic sermo, it is a hard saying and who can endure it, That it should be good for them, or for any, to have Christ, go from them or forsake them?

And sure, the proposition is not so hard, but the reason that induced it is as hard, and more, if more may be: The Comforter will not come. Be it so: let Him not come; stay you. In te satis nobis, we are well enough, we desire no other Comforter. And the other moveth not neither, unless I go: why, may He not stay, and he come notwithstanding? What hinders it, but we may enjoy both together? Two difficulties, which must be cleared, or we cannot proceed.

Non veniet, that may be answered with, Ne veniat. But, He is a Comforter. No comforter to CHRIST; no loss so great, as to lose Him: if we may keep Him, we care not: Ne veniat. Stay His Ascension, we fear not Pentecost. But, He is in earnest, and tells us for a truth, It is altogether expedient, the HOLY GHOST come: So expedient, Ut expedit, ut ego abeam, potius quam ille ne veniat: Better I go than he not come; of the twain, better I spared than he. So it must be, else he such nothing: else the balance hang even; one, as good as the other, they may take which they will; say, they were well enough, as they are. But weigh the Feasts together, Ascension, and Pentecost; the expedience of Ego abeam, and the expedience of Ille veniet; better CHRIST depart, than the HOLY GHOST stay from us. This sets before us and shews us the greatness of this Days benefit: consequently, the highness of this Feast: not only, that it is equal, to any of those precedent; (that the HOLY GHOST is equal to Christ, else should we be at an after-deal, and change for our loss: No, Saint Augustine prayeth well, Domine da mihi alium te, aliqui non dimittam te, give us another as good as your self, or we will never leave that, or consent that you leave us.) But, that some inequality there is; else they might stand, as they are, seeing they should be never the better: but sure, as the case standeth, more for their behoof, than Christ Himself.

I.
The inconve-
veniet.

We shall never see it in kind, the experience of veniat, the absolute necessity of His coming, till we see the inconvenience of non veniet; that it by no means may be admitted; we cannot be without Him. First then, absolute necessity it is; in both the main principal works of the Deity, all all three persons co-operate, and have their concurrence. As, in the beginning of the creation, not only dixit Deus was required, which was the Word; but crebatur Spiritus, the motion of the Spirit, to give the Spirit of life, the life of Nature. As, in the Genesis, so in the Palingenesis of the world, a like necessity: not only the Word should take flesh; but flesh also receive the Spirit, to give life, even the life of grace to the New Creature. It was the counsel of GOD, that every person of the Trinity, should have his part in both; in one work, no less than the other, and we therefore baptized into all three.

Gen. i. 3.
Gen. i. 2.

Joh. i. 14.

Gal. 6. 15.

But I add secondly, more than expedient it is, the work of our salvation be not left half undone, but be brought to the full perfection; which, with non veniet, cannot be: if the Holy Ghost come not, *CHRIST*s coming can do us no good; when all is done, nothing is done. No, said not He Consummatum est? Yes: and said it truly in respect of the work it self; but quoad nos, in regard of us and making it ours, non consummatum est, if the HOLY GHOST come not too. Shall I follow the Apostle, and humanum dicere, speak after the manner of men, because of our infirmities: GOD himselfe hath so expressed it: A word is of no force, thought written (which we call a deed) til the seal be added: that, maketh it authentical, GOD hath borrowed those very termes from us: CHRIST is the word; the HOLY GHOST the Seal, in quo signati estis, Ephes. IV. XXX. Nisi veniat, if the Seal come not to, nothing is done.

Joh. 19 30.

Rom. 6. 19.

2 Yea, the very will of a Testator, when it is Sealed, is still in suspense, till administration be granted: Christ is the Testator of the New Testament: The administration is the Spirits, 1 Cor. XII. If that come not, the Testament is to final purpose.

Heb. 9. 17.

114

3 Take CHRIST as a Purchaser: the purchase is made, the price is paid; yet is not the state perfect, unless there be investiture, or (as we call it) livery and seisin: that maketh it complete. Perquisitio, that very word is *CHRIST*s: but, the investiture is by the Spirit, 11 Cor. V. V. If He come not, we lack that: that, we may not lack; and so not lack Him. What will ye, that I say? Unless we be joyned to Him, as well as He to us; as He to us, by our flesh, so we, to Him by His Spirit: nothing is done. The exchange is not perfect, unless, as He taketh our flesh, so He give us His Spirit: as He carrieth up that to heaven, so He send this down into earth. Ye know, it is the first question the Apostle asked: Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? If not, all else is to no purpose: without it, we are still (as Jude calleth us) animales, Spiritum non habentes, natural men, but without the Spirit. And this is a certain rule, Qui non habet, He that hath not His Spirit, is none of His; Christ profiteth him no thing.

Act. 19. 5.

Rom. 8. 9.

Shall I let you see one inconvenience more, of non veniet? As nothing is done for us, so nothing can be done by us, if He come not. No means on our part, avail us ought. 1 Not Baptisme, for nisi ex Spiritu, if He come not, well may it wash soile from our skin, but no stain from our soul: no Laver of regeneration, without renewing of the Holy Ghost. 2 No Preaching, neither, for, that is but a letter that killeth, except the Spirit come too, and quicken it. 3 No Sacrament, we have a plain Text for it: The flesh profiteth nothing, if the Lord and giver of life (the Spirit) be away. 4 To conclude, no prayer: for nisi, unless the Spirit help our infirmity, and make intercession with us, we neither know how, nor what to pray. So, the Spirit must come to all: and it goeth through; neither can ought be done for us, or by us without it. Away then with ne veniat: we cannot say it; we may not think it: We cannot spare this first. Another veniat there must be; a second Advent, besides *CHRIST*s. *CHRIST*s Advent begins all: this, ends all our solemnities. Come He must: and we must all agree, to say, Veni Creator Spiritus: the inconvenience of non veniet we cannot endure.

1 Cor. 3. 6.

Joh. 6. 63.

Rom. 8 28.

But then, there ariseth a new difficulty upon Si non abiero. We see a necessity of His coming: but, we see no necessity of *CHRIST*s going. Why not Christ stay, and yet He come? Why may not CHRIST send for Him, as well as send Him? Or, if He go, come again with Him? Before, it was, Ne veniat ille, mane tu: now, it is, Veniat ille, et mane tu. Why not? Are they like two buckets; one cannot go down, unless the other go up? If it be so expedient, He come, CHRIST (I trust) is not impediend, but He may come.

The necessity of Si non abiero.

CHRIST (sure) and He are not adversum, incompatible: they may be, and abide together well enough. We believe, He was conceived by the HOLY GHOST: then, no antipathy between them. At His Baptisme, He was known by this, that the Spirit rested and stayed upon Him: why not now, as well? We see not, how this holdeth: If I go not, He will not come. It cannot be denied, they two can stay together, well enough; and the time shall come, we shall enjoy them both together, and the Father with them. That time is not yet: now, it is otherwise. Not for any let in themselves; that is not all: but, for some further matter and considerations noted by the Fathers, for which, it was expedient, CHRIST should go, that the Holy Ghost might come.

John 1. 34.

First, for veniet. The HOLY GHOST cannot come, as He should, He should come as GOD. The stay of CHRIST would have been a let of the manifestation of His God-head. To manifest His God-head, being to shew great Signes, and work great Wonders, if CHRIST had still remained and not gone His way, they would not well have been distinguished; and great odds have been ascribed to Christ. So, the Holy Ghost have wanted that honor and estimation due to Him: an impeachment it would have been, to his Divinity. But Christ ascending; all such imaginations cease.

1 On the Holy Ghosts part.

2 On Christs.

From mittam Eum: a little impeachment it would have been, to Christs equality with His Father. For, He not going to send Him, but staying still here, the sending of the Spirit would have been ascribed to the Father alone, as His sole Act. This would have been the most: that the Father, for His sake; had sent Him; but He, as God, had had no honour of the sending. Being ascended and glorified, mittam will straight be conceived: Quem mittet Pater, & quem mittam a Patre: that with the Father, He sends Him equally, and we alike beholden to them both.

John 14.26.
15.26.3 On theirs, as their case was to be.

A third is in vobis, on their part also. As their case was to be, it was (so) meet, even in regard of them. They were to be sent abroad into all coasts; to be scattered all over the earth to preach the Gospel, and not to stay together still, in one place. His corporal presence would have stood them in small stead: He could have been resident but in one place, to have comforted some one of them; St. James at Jerusalem; as for John at Ephesus, or Thomas in India, or Peter at Babylon; as good (for them) in heaven as in earth; all one. The Spirit, that was to succeed, was much more fit for men dispersed. He could be, and was present with them all, and with every one, by Himself, filling the compass of the whole world.

4 On theirs, as their case was then.1 For His bodily presence.

This as their case was to be. But, the Fathers rather pitch upon their estate as presently it was: Vobis, that is, vobis sic dispositis: for you, that is, you so disposed, as I find, you are. So, it is ad homines: to them affected in such sort, as then they were. Whereby he giveth us to understand; some are in that case; as it is expedient, Christ withdraw Himself from them. And is there any vobis, can any man be in that case, it should be good for Christ to depart for him? It seemeth so. We see oftentimes, the case so standeth, even in regard of this life; that, from some, it is good their meat be taken, and yet is meat the stay of their life; that, from some, it is good their blood be taken, yet blood is natures treasure, and that holdeth us in life; that, from some, light be taken, in some disease of the eyes, yet is light the comfort of this life. All this we conceive, Expedi, ut cibus, ut sanguis, ut lux abeat; and all this better, than expedi ut Christus abeat; we may spare them all, better than Him.

Joh. 11.21.

Mat. 17.14.

Yet CHRIST it is, that telleth it us, and telleth it us for a matter of great truth: these were: (and whose case is better than these?) But, if these, some there are, in that case, it may be said to them truly, It is expedient I be gone. And what case may that be? Even that case, that maketh the mother many times withdraw her self, from her young child, whom (yet) she loveth full tenderly, when the child groweth foolishly fond of her: which grew to be their case just. Christs flesh, and His fleshy presence, that, and none but that. So strangely fond they grew of that, as they could not endure He should go out of their sight: Nothing, but his carnal presence, would quiet them. We know, who said: If thou hadst been here Lord: as if, absent, He had not been, as able to do it, by His Spirit, as present by His Body. And a Tabuernacle they would needs build Him, to keep Him on earth still; and ever and anon they were still dreaming of an earthly kingdom, and of the chief Seats there, as if their consummation should have been in the flesh. These phantasies (indeed, errors) they fell into, about the flesh: they had need have it taken from them. The Spirit was gone quite: they had more need, to have Him sent. This was, at no hand, to be cherished in them: they were not to be held as children still, but to grow to mans estate, to perfect age and strength; and so consequently to be weaned from the corporal presence of His flesh; nor to hang all by sense, to which (it is too true) they were too much addicted. The corporal therefore to be removed, that the spiritual might take place: the visible, that the invisible: and they, not in sight or sense, as hitherto; but, in spirit and truth, henceforth to cleave unto Him. To say (with the Apostle) If we have known CHRIST after the flesh, yet now henceforth we know Him so no more. This was for them: And we should have been no better, as now we are; the flesh will but hinder the spirit, even the best.

1 Cor. 7.16.

2 For His spiritual presence.

This, for His Bodily presence. But, the Fathers go yet further; and inquire, whether this also be not true, in His spiritual presence: and resolve, that, even in regard of that, it is no less true. To some vobis, it is expedient, that, even after that manner also, CHRIST go from them. And who are they?

As grown faint.

Cant. 3.1.

1. One Vobis; when men grow faint in seeking, and careless in keeping Him (as in Cant. 3.) lie in bed, and seek Him. Gone He was; and meet, He should so be, to teach them to rise and seek; to watch and keep Him better.

As overweening.

Pla. 30.7.

Mat. 20.33.

2. Another Vobis, when men grow high-conceited and overweening of themselves, and their own strength; and say (with David) non movebor, as if they had CHRIST pinned to them; and (with Peter) Etsi omnes, non ega. It is more than time, CHRIST be gone from such; to teach them to see and know themselves better.

Psa. 119.67.

But, if CHRIST leave us, if He withdraw His spiritual presence, we fall into sin; and that cannot be expedient for any. Good, that I have been in trouble; for before I was troubled, I went wrong: but, not good for any, to fall into sin. Yes indeed: Audeo dicere (saith Saint Augustine) I dare avow it, Expedi superbo, ut incidat in peccatum (these are the very terms) it is expedient they fall into some notorious sin (as David, as Peter did) that their faces may be filled with shame, and they, by that confusion, learn to walk with more humility. The Messenger of Satan, that was sent the Apostle, to buffet him, was of this nature, and to no other end sent, but to prevent this malady. In a word: CHRIST must withdraw (no remedy) that we may grow humble, and being humble, the HOLY GHOST may come: for He cometh

2 Cor. 12.7.

meets to none, rests on none, giveth grace to none, but the humble. So we see, Christ may be, and is, even according to His spiritual presence, withdrawn from some persons, and for their good. Christus abiit, ut Paracletus veniat: and that many ways meet it is, it so should be. This makes us say, Go Lord, Set up thy self above the heavens, and thy glory, over all the earth.

1 Pet. 5. 5.

Psal. 108. 6.

If He go not, the Holy Ghost will not come. But, if CHRIST go, will He come? shall we not be left to the wide world, without both? will the Comforter come? He will: for, CHRIST will not fail but send Him. If He take His body from our eyes, He will send His Spirit into our hearts. But, sent He shall be; here is mittam Eum, And so He did. CHRIST sent Him, and He came; and in memory of this Veniet & mittam, hold we this Day. He did, to them: but, will He also to us? He will. And, shall we see fiery tongues? That, is not Christ's promise, to send fiery tongues; but illum, Him, the Comforter. And, Comfort it is, we seek. It is not the tongues, or fire, we care for, or will do us good. We conceive (I trust) after two manners, He came, as this day: 1 One visible, in tongues of fire that sat upon their heads: 2 The other invisible, by inward graces, whereby He possessed their hearts: The former was but for Ceremony at first; the other is it, the real matter, illum, Him. And Him, this day as well as that, this day and ever, He will not fail to send. Always, we are to think, His promise and His prayer were not for these only, but for all that should believe on Him, by their word, to the worlds end.

III.

Of Mittam Eum.

1 Eum the Person.

Now this last point (these two, 1 Mittam, 2 illum) we are specially to look to. CHRIST is gone, once for all. We have no hold now, but of this promise, I will send Him. That we take heed, we forgo not Him, and lose our part in the promise too. A great part of the world is (sure) in this case: CHRIST is gone, and the Comforter is not sent. Not this: for I speak not of the worlds comfort, the rich mans (Luk. 16.) qui habeat hic consolationem, who had his comfort, here in good fare and bravery, and all manner delights of the flesh; flesh-comforts: but, this here is Paracletus qui est Spiritus.

1 illum, that is, Spiritus sanctus.

Luke 16. 25.

And because all Religions promise a Spiritual comfort; it is said further, Paracletus qui est spiritus veritatis: No Spirit of error, but the spirit of truth. And because all Christians (though counterfeit) claim an interest in Spiritus veritatis; yet further, it is added, Paracletus qui est Spiritus sanctus: He is no unclean Spirit, but one sanctifying, and leading us into an holy and cleane life. This is the true Comforter (and none other) that Christ promiseth to send.

2 Paracletus.

Christ will send Him. But (that we mistake Him not) not, unless we call for Him, and be ready to entertain Him: For [clatus] is in Paracletus; Of which let me tell you, these three things: It is the chief word of the Text, and chief thing of the Feast. It is translated Comforter: that translation is but ad homines, for their turn, to whom He speaks; for, as their case was, they needed that office of His, most. But, the true force of the word Paracletus is Advocatus (not the Noun, but the Participle) one called to, sent for, invited to come, upon what occasion, or for what end soever it be. For what end soever it be, the person sent for, is Paracletus (properly) pro eâ vice; for that time and turn, Advocatus. But, because the spirit of the world, ruleth in this world, the worldly affairs come thickest, our affections in that kind so many and oft; it is come to pass, that the Lawyer hath carried away the name of Advocatus from the rest; and they grown to be the Paracleti of this world, called for even from the Prince to the Peasant, and consulted with, none so often. The Physician, he hath his time and turn of advocation, to be a Paracletus too; but nothing so oft: for Barnabas (which is interpreted the son of consolation) never, till both Zenas the Lawyer, and Luke the Physician have given us over; never called for, but when it is too late.

Act. 4. 35.

But first, from mittam Paracletum, this we have. Mittam, Christ will send: but Paracletum, if you send for Him. Veniet, come He will, but not come, unless called: nor sent, but sent for. If we call Him, veniet, He will come: if we send for Him, He will send Him. That, is our duty; but what is our practice? We miss in this first, we call not for Him. We find no time for Him, He is fain to call for us, to Ring a Bell for us, to send about to get us, and then are we Advocati, not He. When we send for Him, He is Paracletus: when He, for us, then we are, and not He: (if we be that, if we be Advocati, and not rather advocati; every trifling occasion being enough, to call us away.) Thus we stumble at the very threshold: and do we yet marvel, if Christ, send Him not, nor He come?

1 Our duty; to call for Him for Comfort.

Men are sent for, for some end: and divers are the ends, thereafter as our need is. We send not for them, only when we are in heaviness, to comfort us; but when we are in doubt, to resolve us: which is the second signification, and so [Paracletus] is turned advocate, or counsellor (1 John 2. 1.) And the Holy Ghost looketh to be sent for, for both: for counsel, as well as for consolation: for both; he is good for both. Yea, many are His uses: and therefore He thinketh much to be sent for, but for one, as if He were good for nothing else. If we be in doubt, He is able to resolve us: if perplexed, to advise and to guide: if we know not how, to frame our petition for us: If we know not, to teach; if we forget, to remember us : And not only one use (as we phantasie) if we be out of heart , to comfort us.

c Joh. 3. 8.
d Joh. 2. 20.
e Joh. 15. 26.
f Eley 11. 2.

And, because his uses be many , His types are so. ^a Water sometimes , sometimes ^b fire : One while ^c winde , one while ^d oymment : and according to our several wants we to send to Him, for fire , to warme ; for winde , to coole ; for water , to cleanse us ; for oyle , to supple us. And, as His Types , so His names : the ^e Spirit of truth , the ^f Spirit of counsel , the Spirit of holiness , the Spirit of comfort : And according to His several faculties , we to invoke (or call for) Him, by that name , that is most for our use or present occasion. For all these , He looks , we should send for Him.

Verse 8.

Our error is , as if He were only for one use or office , for comfort alone : so , in all others , we let Him alone ; and if never in heaviness , never look after Him , or care once to hear of Him. But , He is for advice , and direction also. No less Paracletus , a Counsellour , than Paracletus , a Comforter : He is not sent by CHRIST , to comfort only. Ye may see , by the very next words : the first thing He doth , when He cometh , is , He shall reprove ; which is farre from Comforting. But sent He is , as well to mediate with us , for GOD : as , with GOD , for us. GODS Paracletus , His Solicitor , to call on us for our duty , as our Paracletus , or Comforter , to minister us comfort , in time of need.

Our manner is , we love to be left to our selves , in our consultations to advise with flesh and blood ; thence to take our direction , all our life : and , when we must part , then send for Him , for a little comfort , and there is all the use , we have of Him. But , he that will have comfort from Him , must also take counsel of Him ; have use of Him as well against error and sinful life , as against heaviness of minde. If not , here is your doom : where you have had your counsel , there seek your comfort : he that hath been your Counsellour , all the time of your life , let him be your Comforter , at the hour of your death. And good reason : He will not be Paracletus at halves ; to stand by at all else , and only to be sent for in our infirmity.

Base it is , to send for Him , never but when in extream need : but , even otherwise extra casum necessitatis , for entertaining of acquaintance and to grow familiar , as we use to do those , we delight in. The word [ἑταῖρος] giveth as much : He should be near us , by us , one ordinary ; not a stranger , to call or tend for a great way off. It is so expedient , that He may know us thoroughly , and we Him : the best and nearest way to find sure comfort , when most we shall need it. For he that should minister it soundly indeed , had need be familiarly acquainted with the state of our souls , that he may be ready and ripe , then. To go to a Lawyers reading , and not hear it , serves us not for our worldly doubts : nor to hear the Physick Lecture , for the complaints of our bodies. No : we make them Paracletos , we call them to us , we question with them in particular , we have private conference , about our estates. Only , for our souls affaires , it is enough to take our directions in open Churches , and there delivered in gross : private conference we endure not ; a Paracletus there , we need not. One we must have , to know thoroughly the state of our lands or goods : One we must have , entirely acquainted with the state of our body : In our souls , it holdeth not. I say no more : it were good it did. We make him a stranger , all our life long ; He is Paracletus (as they were wont to pronounce him ;) truly Paracletus , one whom we declined , and looked over our shoulders at : And then , in our extremity , suddenly He is Paracletus ; we seek , and send for Him , we would come a little acquainted with Him. But , take we heed of Nescio vos ; It is a true answer : We take too little a time , to breed acquaintance in. Nescio vos (I fear) they find , that so seek Him : Paracletus , they do not ; Paracletus , rather.

Mat. 25. 12 :

His sending :
1 The Time.
Mittam.

Act. 1. 5.

Ecclef. 12.

This , of Paracletus. Now , of Mittam , the 1 time and the 2 manner : both are to the purpose. The time , that when He sends , we make ready for Him. The time of the year was this time , in the Spring , the fairest and best part of it. The time of the moneth , the third day : (so they deduce , from the fifteenth day , the day of the Passeeover , and so fifty days , it will so fall out by calculation :) that is , the beginning of the moneth. The time of the day , it was before the third houre (that is , nine of the clock in the morning plainly.) So it was still prime. These teach us , it would be in our prime , the time of health and strength , when we lay the grounds of our comfort ; not to tarry , till the frost and snow of our life ; till the evil dayes come , and the yeares approach , whereof we shall say , We have no pleasure in them , He , in the Spring : we in the end of the year. He , in the beginning of the moneth : we , in the last quarter ; nay , even pridie calendas. He , before nine in the morning : we , not till after nine at Night. If we will keep time with Him , we know what His time is of sending.

2 The manner.
Per Paracletum.

1 Cor. 10. 3. 4.

The manner is best : and it is in the body of the word. As the Spirit of truth , by preaching : as the Holy Ghost , by prayer ; the Paracletus (we know , what He meaneth) per paraclesin , by invitation. As the Dove to baptisme , the Winde to Prayer (Aperui os & attraxi Spiritum , Psal. 119. 131.) the tongue , to a Sermon ; the Paracletus , to Paraclesis , as it were a refreshing : (so , friends meet and nourish love and amity one with another.) And , even humannum dicere , after natural men , when our spirits are spent and we wax faint , to recover them (of (or never) in the natural man, it is done, no way more kindly, than by nourishment: specially, such as is apt to breed them (as, one kind is more apt than other.) There is a spiritual meat, and a spiritual drink (saith the Apostle:) in which kind, there is none so apt to procreate the Spirit in us, as that flesh and blood, which was it self conceived and procreate by the Spirit, and therefore full of spirit and life, to them that partake it. It is sure, to invite and allure the Spirit to come, there is no more effectual way; none, whether CHRIST will send Him, or whether He will come, more willingly, than to the presence of the most holy Mysteries. And namely, at this feast; concerning which, our Saviour Christs voice is to sound in our ears, Si quis sitiat; veniat ad me: If any thirst, let him come to me and drink: Which he meant and spake (saith St. John) of the Spirit, which was to be given at that time especially, when He was newly glorified. De meo accipiet (saith Christ of Him:) and it is nowhere more truly fulfilled, that he shall take of Christs, and give it us, than it is done, of that, which is His most intrinsically. That was, this very day; and no better opportunity, no fitter time, to receive the Spirit, than the day of the Spirit; the day of CHRISTS sending, and of His coming. When shall He be sent or come; if then, He do not? But, keeping the time, and observing the manner, we trust in His promise, and call upon Him, that so He will send Him; and upon the Holy Ghost, that so He will come. And as we be His Paracleti, His guests, so He will be ours, dwelling with us with His assistance, and being in us by His graces, to life eternal. Which Almighty God grant, &c.

KINGS MAJESTY,

At WHITE-HALL,

On the XXXI. of May, A. D. MDCXII.

being WHITSUNDAY.

ACTS Chap. XIX. Ver. I, II, III.

And it came to pass, &c. That Paul came to Ephesus, and found there, certain Disciples,

And said unto them, Have ye received the HOLY GHOST, since ye believed?

And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard, whether there be an HOLY GHOST.

And He said unto them, Unto what were ye then baptized? And they said, Unto Johns Baptisme.

Here is a question, Have ye received the Holy Ghost? And here is an answer to it: Nay not so much as heard, whether any Holy Ghost, or no. There is no fitter time, to ask and resolve this question of His receiving, than this day, the day, He was received visibly: nor to amend this answer (Not, whether any or no,) than this day, on which He declared Himself to the world, when it was both heard and seen, that there was an Holy Ghost.

The Narrative is thus, briefly. Saint Paul came to Ephesus, and there he found certain Disciples. At the first meeting, the very first question he asks, is Si recepistis, Whether they had received the Holy Ghost? Mark it well. It is the first point, he thinks meet to be enquired of, or to inform himself concerning.

The Apostle (no doubt) hoped for an answer affirmative from them: That they had received Him. Theirs is a strange negative: That, not only they had not received Him; Sed neque, But were so far from that, as they had not so much as heard, whether there were any to receive: whether, there were any, at all. Whom they should have received, Him they had not heard of. This was a great rudeness. And yet Disciples they were, and Disciples that had believed, and believed a good while since. And they were twelve (it is said at the seventh verse) that is, a full jury; and yet put the Holy Ghost upon their Verdict, that, they return, is an Ignoramus.

The Apostle, little looked for such rudeness, at Ephesus, the most civil place of all Asia. This answer almost posed him; yet, he gives them not over. Nay, he must not leave them thus. Whether one, or no: This answer (of force) begets another question, to find where the error was. Disciples they were, and and therefore baptized; baptized, and yet had not heard of the Holy Ghost? He muses how, or into what they had been baptized, and asks them that. They tell him, into John's baptism, and further they had not gone. Of John's Baptism I will not now stand to enlarge; This is certaine, a Baptism it was, wherein (it seemes) there was no mention, nor no hearing of the Holy Ghost.

Now by this time, their rudenesse, that seemed strange at the first, is not now strange when the reason of it is knowne. And it might seeme in some sort to excuse them, in that, they were but at John's Baptism: and so it did. But, yet to accuse them withall, that they were but at John's Baptism: (for it was now more than twenty yeares since John was dead) that, all this while, they were no further, that (as He saith to the Hebrewes) considering the time, whereas they might have been Teachers, they had need to be catechised, in the very rudiments of Religion.

Yet * quencheth he not this flux, though it did but smock; beares with them; rates them not, but teacheth them; first, that as John was to CHRIST; so was John's baptism to Christ's baptism, in manner of a Parate viam, or introduction, in venturum, to one that was to come, and they, no otherwise to conceive of it.

It was Apollo's case (in the Chapter before; Verse 25.) He knew not but John's baptism neither, at the first. And these (it may well be) were His Disciples. But as Aquila, there taught, Him: So doth the Apostle these here, the way of truth more exactly. And so, being taught they were baptized with a baptism, where, they both heard of, and received the Holy Ghost.

Thus doth end the Narrative part: And therein, he gives us an example in himself, of his owne rule to Timothy. If we meet with such, as these at Ephesus, raw and evil catechised Christians, that we grow not abrupt, but exercise our office, in all long-suffering and doctrine: not in doctrine alone, but in long-suffering and doctrine. For without suffering, and suffering long other whiles, all our doctrine will do but little good.

Out of all this, we gather these points. First, the necessity of Receiving the Holy Ghost: in that, it is his first care; his first question he asks. Of the other Persons in the God-Head, it is enough we hear of them and believe in them: Of the Holy Ghost it is not so. To hear of Him, or believe in Him, will not serve, but we are to receive Him to. To know not onely Quod sit, that He is; but to certifie our selves, Quod insit, that He is in us: For He shall remaine with you and shall be in you (it is CHRIST.) But then, receive we cannot, unlesse first we heare: heare, that there is one to receive, or ever we receive Him. First, notice of His being, and then sense of His receiving. And indeed, the hearing of Him is a way to His receiving: For, though, not every one that heares, receives: yet none receives, but he heares first. So, that ground must first be layd.

And to lay that ground, no better way than the Apostle here directs us to, by his second question; get us to our baptism. Ask, into what we were baptized? There we shall not faile, but resolve our selves, that one there is, receive Him after, as we may.

Now, but that the Apostle had a better conceit of these, here, than there was cause, and so erred of charitie, supposing these Disciples better Schollers than they were; Hee would have begun with the latter, and first asked them, If ever they heard of Him: and then after, if they had received Him. For, this is first in nature, An sit, then An insit.

There then let us begin. I am forrie and ashamed, that we shall need deale with An sit: Yet (I know not how) as these dayes of ours grow from evill to worse, and from worse to worst of all: it is no more than needs. Not that I doubt of any such, who (as these here at Ephesus) have not heard of the HOLY GHOST: For (no doubt) long yer this, His sound is gone out into all lands: but rather, such other (as Saint Paul found at Ephesus too) I can tell them no better, than he doth, Beasts in the shape of men. That have heard, and yet take to themselves, (a Christian libertie (they call it) and that forsooth; humbly, simply, and modestly; but in deed) an unchristian licentiousness, proudly, loudly, and malapertly; to call in question what they list: and, to make Quere's of that which the Christian world hath long since resolved, and ever since believed, concerning GOD, CHRIST and the Blessed Spirit: no lesse matters.

So then, to these two parts, we reduce all: The Hearing of him first: Then the Receiving of Him. 1. The Hearing, and therein, 1. Where we shall hear of Him? and 2. What we shall hear of Him? Where we shall hear of Him? At our Baptism: 2. And what we shall hear of Him there: That one there is (at least) and I trust, somewhat else besides.

2. Then, the Receiving of Him; And in it, three points: 1. First, that this question must be answered to, and so we bound to receive him; And that, either affirmatively, or Negatively. We have, or we have not. 2. Then, Have we received Him? How to know, if we have. 3. Have we not received Him? How to procure, if we have not. In the former, of Hearing: is matter of faith. In the latter, of Receiving: matter of moral duty. Both, meet to be intreated of, at all times, but at no time so fit, and so proper, as at this Feast,

1 Cor. 13. 2.

1 Cor. 13. 13.

THere is no receiving of Him that is not. Therefore, no talk of receiving: no place, for the first question, Have ye received? till the latter be first resolved, Is there one to receive? For resolution whereof, He might have sent them, to the very beginning of Genesis, where they should have heard, the Spirit of GOD moved on the face of the waters. Or to the Law; where the same Spirit came down upon the seventy Elders. Or to the Psalmes; where they should have heard David say of Him, Emitte Spiritum & creabuntur, Send forth thy Spirit, and all shall be made. And Spiritus Sanctum ne auferas, Take not thy Holy Spirit from me. Or, to the Prophets: The Prophet Esay: CHRIST'S first Text; Luke 4. The Spirit of GOD is upon me. The Prophet Joel: Saint Peters Text this day, I will powre My Spirit upon all flesh.

Or if ever they had heard of our SAVIOUR CHRIST, Saint Paul might have sent them, to His Conception: Where they should have heard the Angel, say, Spiritus Sanctus superueniet in te, to the Blessed Virgin. To Christs Baptisme, where, He came upon Christ in a visible shape. To his promise so often iterate, of Sending them, the Holy Ghost. To his Caveat, Not to sinne against the Holy Ghost in any wise, it was a high and heinous offence, it could not be remitted.

Or, if they had heard of the Apostles: Of Christs breathing on them, and willing them to receive the Holy Ghost. Or but of this day, and in what sort He was visibly sent downe, like fire tongues, upon each of them. Or of their solemn meeting and Council at Jerusalem, and Decrees there, the tenor whereof was, It seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and us. Or but of the strange end, that hapned to Ananias, they could not chuse, but have heard his offence told Him by St. Peter, He had lyed to the HOLY GHOST: and straight upon it; he had not lyed to man, but to GOD directly.

All this, he might; yet, this he did not, but takes a plaine course, sends them to their Baptisme, (still supposing it, to be CHRIST'S Baptisme, they were baptized with, the only true Baptisme.) And, seeing the Apostle, upon good advice, took that for the best way; we cannot follow a better direction: and so, let us take it. We mean not (I trust) to renounce our Baptisme. By it, we are, that we are. And, at it, we shall not fail, but heare, There is a Holy Ghost. Express mention of Him, is directly given in charge, in the set form of Baptisme, prescribed by our SAVIOUR: That all should be (as we all are) baptized, in the name of the Father, the Sonne and the Holy Ghost.

Yea, I adde further: He could no better refer them; than to Baptisme. For, a special prerogative hath the Holy Ghost, in our Baptisme, above the other two Persons. That Laver, is His Laver properly; where, we are not only to be baptized into Him (as into the other two) but also even to be baptized with Him: which is proper, to him alone. For, besides the Water, we are there, to be born anew of the Holy Ghost also, else is there no entering for us into the kingdome of God.

This for Baptisme. But let me also tell you a saying: It is St. Basile, and well worth your remembring. He beginneth with, In hoc baptizamus, and proceedeth three degrees further, all rising from thence naturally: they be but the train of Baptisme.

1. First. Et quomodo baptizamus, ita & credimus. As we are baptized, so we beleeve. As is our Baptisme, so is our belief. And our beleeve, is there (at our Baptisme) repeated from point to point. A point whereof, is, I beleeve in the Holy Ghost. And, we desire to be baptized in that faith. There He is now again, at our Baptisme.

Yea, before we come so farre: even, at Christs conceiving, there we heare of Him first, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost. So, three several times, we there hear of Him. 1 Which was conceived by the Holy Ghost. 2 I beleeve in the Holy Ghost. and 3 In the name of the Holy Ghost. At our Baptisme, all three. And in the mouth of three witnesses, is every point sufficiently established.

2. Saint Basile proceeds, Et quomodo credimus, ita & glorificamus. As from Baptisme, to Beleeve: So from beleeving, to giving glory. And there, he flatly avoweth (which all the Christian world knew to be true, nor was there ever Heretik found, so bold as to deny it). That the δοξολογια (as they call it) that is, the use of saying, Glory be to the Father, and the Sonne and the Holy Ghost; this form of concluding Psalmes, and Hymnes, and thanksgivings, was ever received, and retained in the Church, from the beginning; as with us, still it is. So was Baptisme, so was thanks for the baptized party (the new member of the Church,) so, all concluded. So that way, we hear of Him there, again.

3. Yet one more, and it is His last. Et quomodo glorificamus, sic & benedicimus. As we glorifie GOD so we blesse men: As we give glory to Him: so we receive blessing from Him. How? the form is often heard, and well known, it is the Apostles: The grace of Christ our Lord, the Love of GOD His Father; Communio, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, to be with us. So, after Baptisme; So, after Sermon; So, is the congregation ever dismissed. Then, there we glorifie Him. And

And in Him we there are blessed. And so, we hear of Him, once more, quod sit, that a Holy Ghost there is.

Upon the matter: no Baptisme, no Belief, GOD, no glory, men no blessing, but still we hear of Him. So as, if any but see baptisme, hear but the Creed, be at the daily Service, hear the Church rendring glory to GOD, receiving blessing from the Bishop or Priest: by some of these, or all of these, they cannot choose but hear of the Holy Ghost. There is then no saying, for us, Sed neque audivimus: Away with that, And say with Saint Basil, In hoc baptizamur, there we begin, Et quomodo baptizamur sic credimus, Et quomodo credimus sic glorificamus, Et quomodo glorificamus sic benedicimus. So, we are baptized, in Him; and as we are baptized, so we believe; and as we believe, so glorify we God; and as we glorify God, so bless we men; bless, and are blessed. These four, they are all here, and they are not far set, they have no curious speculation in them, they will serve for any honest or good hearted Christian, to rest in, and they need go no further, than In quo ergo baptizati estis.

Thus, we are referred, and we know, where we are sure to hear of Him. But, if we stay a little upon [In quo baptizati] and look better into it, this is not all, but we shall find further, not only that such an one there is, but take more perfect notice of Him. And first, that He is GOD. And by no other, but by the same steps we went before.

GOD, first. For that, we cannot be baptized into any name, but GOD alone, the Apostle disputes it at large, 1 Cor. 1. that it cannot be, that it is not lawful, to be baptized into S. Peters name, or into his, or into any name else, but GOD's only. But, in His name, we are baptized: even in the name of the Holy Ghost, that, proves Him GOD.

GOD, secondly. For we believe in Him. We there profess it. Et nemini Christianorum unquam dubium fuit, nos in Deum, non in Creaturam, credere (saith Athanasius ad Episcopos Afric.) Never any Christian doubted of this, that we believe not in any Creature, but in GOD alone; Believing then in Him, we acknowledge Him to be GOD;

GOD, thirdly. For, we ascribe to Him glory. And glory is proper to GOD only: So proper, that He saith expressly, Alteri non dabo, He will not part with it, to any other. But we render Him glory, and with the Father and the Son, pariter together, He is worshipped and glorified: Therefore, GOD with them, even in that respect.

Lastly, GOD, from blessing also: for, that is one of GOD's peculiars: To bless in His name: by putting His name, upon children, old and young, and upon the Congregation, to bless them. But, with His name, we bless, no less, than with the rest. Therefore, as they, so He; GOD above all, as to bless, so to be blessed for ever.

And upon these four we rest. These four, 1 To be baptized into Him, 2 To believe in Him, 3 To ascribe glory to Him, 4 To bless by Him, or in His name, They are acts, such acts, as cannot be given to any, but to GOD only; and so evidently, we there hear of Him, that He is GOD also. And such are the two acts, in the Creed of Constantinople, To be Lord and giver of life, and To speak by the Prophets. Such are many other attributes, and works (that cannot agree to any, but GOD) ascribed to the Holy Ghost; which might be, and which elsewhere have been alledged: But now we are to keep us to our Baptisme, and go no further.

And if we will stay yet, but a little, at our Baptisme; and hearken well: as we hear that He is GOD, so shall we, that, He is GOD in unity. For there, we hear but, In nomine, but, of one name. Now as the Apostle reasoneth (Gal. 3. 16.) Abrahe dicta sunt promissiones, & semini ejus. Non dicit Seminibus, quasi in multis; sed tanquam in uno, Semini ejus. To Abraham and his seed, we the promises made. He saith not, To the seeds, as of many; but to his seed, as of one. So we, are baptized, Non in nominibus, quasi multis, sed, in nomine, quasi uno: not in the names, as of many; but in the Name, as of one. One name, and one nature, or essence. Unum sumus (saith CHRIST) of two of them: Unum sunt, saith Saint John, of all three. This we hear there!

Unum sunt; but not unus. For, as from the name, we reduce the unity: So, from the number (Three) do we, the Trinity. One in name and nature: yet distinct between themselves. Distinct in number, as in our baptisme. The Father, Sonne, Holy Ghost. And that number, distinct to the sense, as at Christ's Baptism, the Father in the voice, the Sonne in the flood, the Holy Ghost in the shape of a Dove. And that shewed to be, a distinction of persons, in Christ's promise. 1 Ego, the Person of Christ: 2 Patrem, the Person of the Father, 3 and Paracletum, the Person of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost (I say) distinct from the Father, The Lord and His Spirit hath sent me, Esay 48. 16. From the Sonne Paracletum alium, by alium, the Sonne one, He another. And distinct, as a Person: For (to omit other personal acts, which properly agree to none but a reasonable nature determined: As a To be the Lord, b To speak, c teach, d reprove, e comfort, f be a witness, g place Bishops, h make Decrees in council:) That which we hear of at our Baptisme, ascribed to Him, to conceive the humane nature of Christ, is an act so personal, as, in propriety of speech, can agree to none, or be affirmed of none, but of an intire Person. This we hear.

A person then, distinct by Himself, yet (as a person) not, of or from Himself. And, this we hear, from the very term it self [of Spiritus.] For even as filius alicujus, so Spiritus, alicujus, est, ab aliquo: proceed from Him, whose Son, or Spirit they are, So the Son of God, and Spirit

And Non à semetipso loquetur, sed de meo accipiet, sheweth fully as much. Briefly. Sent by the Father, John 14. 26. Filioque, and by the Sonne too, John 15. 26. And so, the Spirit of the Father, Matth. 10. 30. Filioque, and by the Sonne too, Gal. 4. 6.

Pla. 104. 30.

Proceeding from them; and not by way of generation : (That is Christ's proper; He is often termed, the Only Begotten, and so, none but He) but by way of, Emitte Spiritum, Emission, sending it forth : that is (out of the very body of the word spirit) by spiration, or breathing. One breathing, yet from both : even as the breath (which carrieth the name and resemblance of it) is one, yet from both the nostrils, in the body natural.

Rom. 5. 5.

All these are expressed, or implied, in our Baptisme. And now lastly (to return home to our purpose) proceeds from them, to come to us : is breathed from them, to inspire us : Sent, by them, to be given us : Per Spiritum sanctum qui datus est nobis, by the Holy Ghost which is given us : given to receive, and so, to be received of us. Which openeth the way, and maketh the passage over, to the second question, Si recepistis, Have ye received? And so, (as we see) the two parts, follow well and kindly, one upon the other. For, this now, is the last thing to be heard of Him; that, it is not enough, to hear of Him : but, that we are to receive Him also : and to give account to St. Paul, that we have so done.

So then, we have now cleared the first question, at our Baptism : and have heard. 1. That such a one there is. 2. And that He is GOD. 3. GOD, in unity of name. 4. Yet, in number, distinct; and distinct as a Person by Himself. 5. A person by Himself, yet not of Himself, but proceeding. 6. Proceeding from both Persons; that stand before Him, the Father and the Son. 7. And that breath-wife. And so, we have done with that. But yet, we have not done, though. For, the other question must be answered too; no remedy, it imports us. For, as good not hear of Him at all, as hear, and not receive Him.

II.
The second part.

Thither then, I come. Si Recepistis? Have ye received the Holy Ghost? Wherein these three points. 1. That we are liable to this question, and to the affirmative part of it, that we have, and so are bound to receive Him : For so, si, presupposeth. 2. If we so have, how to know it. 3. If we have not, how to compass it.

I.
The necessity.

How much it importeth us, to receive Him, we may esteem, by this, that S. Paul makes it his article of Imprimis, begins with it, at the first, as the most needful point.

I.
Of receiving.

Two things are in it. First, that receive we must. Secondly, that it must be the Holy Ghost, we are to receive.

Heb. 12. 24.

Receive? What need we receive any Spirit, or receive at all? May we not, out of our selves, work that, will serve our turns? No : For holy we must be, if ever we shall rest in His holy Hill : for without holiness, none shall ever see GOD. But holy we cannot be, by any habit moral, or acquisite. There is none such in all moral philosophy. As, we have our faith, by illumination : so, have we our holiness, by inspiration : receive both; both from without.

To a habit the Philosophers came, and so Christians may : but that will not serve, they are to go farther. Our habits acquisite will lift us no farther, than they did the Heathen men : no farther than the place, where they grow, that is, earth and nature. They cannot work beyond their kind (nothing can,) nor rise higher, than their spring. It is not therefore Si habitum acquisistis : but, si Spiritum recepistis, we must go by.

1 Pet. 1. 4.

But then, why recepistis Spiritum. Sanctum, the Holy Ghost? No receiving will serve, but of Him? The reason is, it is nothing here below, that we seek : but, to heaven we aspire. Then, if to heaven we shall, something from heaven, must thither exalt us. If Partakers of the divine nature, we hope to be (as, great and precious promises we have that we shall be) that can be no otherwise, than by receiving one, in whom the divine nature is. He being received, imparts it to us, and so makes us confortes divina natura; and that is the HOLY GHOST.

1 Cor. 15. 45.

For as an absolute necessity there is, that we receive the Spirit, else can we not live the life of grace; and so consequently, never come to the life of glory. Recepistis Spiritum gives the life natural. Recepistis Spiritum Sanctum, gives the life spiritual.

1. There holdeth a correspondence, between the natural and the Spiritual. The same way the world was made, in the beginning, by the Spirit moving upon the waters of the deep: the very same, was the world new made, (the Christian world, or Church) by the same Spirit moving on the waters of baptism.

2. And look, how in the first Adam, we come to this present life, by sending the breath of life, into our bodies. So, in the second, come we to our hold, in the other life, by sending the Holy Ghost into our souls.

3. By that Spirit, which CHRIST was conceived by; by the same Spirit the Christian also must be. Not to be avoided, absolutely necessary all these; it cannot be otherwise.

And

Another necessity of His receiving. For, ^a The house will not stand empty long. One Spirit or other, holy, or unholy, will enter and take it up. We see, the greatest part of the world by far, are entered upon, and held, some by the ^b spirit of slumber; that pass their time (as it were in a sleep) without any sense of God, or Religion at all. Others by the ^c spirit of giddiness; that reel to and fro, and every year are of a new Religion. Others, by ^d the spirit of error; given over to believe eyes through strong illusion. And they that seem to know the truth, some with the ^e unclean spirit, some with ^f the spirit of envy, or some such (for they are many:) that, a kind of necessity there is to entertain and receive the good spirit; that some or other evil spirit, from God, seize not upon us. From which God deliver us.

A third necessity there is, we receive Him: for that, with Him, we shall receive, whatever we want, or need to receive, for our souls good. And here, fall in all His Offices. By Him, ^g we are regenerate at the first, in our baptism. By Him after ^h confirmed, in the imposition of hands. By Him after ⁱ renewed to repentance, when we fall away, by a second imposition of hands. By Him, ^k taught all our life long, that we know not; ^l put in minde of what we forget; ^m stirred up in what we are dull; ⁿ helped in our prayers; ^o relieved in our infirmities, comforted in our heaviness: in a word, ^p sealed to the day of our Redemption, and ^q raised up again in the last day. Go all along; even from our Baptism, to our very Resurrection, and we cannot miss Him, but receive Him we must.

And on the other side, Si non recepistis, without Him received, receive what we will, nothing will do us good: Receive the Word, it is but ^r a killing letter; receive Baptism, it is but ^s Johns Baptism; but a ^t barren clement; receive His flesh, ^u it profiteth nothing; receive CHRIST, it will not do; for ^v Qui non habet Spiritum CHRISTI, hic non est ejus; He that hath not His Spirit is none of His. So, CHRIST renounces him, He hath no part in him. To receive CHRIST, and not the HOLY GHOST, is to no purpose. To conclude, if we receive not Him, we be but ^x animales, Spiritum non habentes; only men of soul, having not the Spirit; ^y Et animalis homo, the natural man that never received the Spirit; neither perceiveth, nor receiveth the things of God, hath nothing to do with them. So that, Spiritum non habentes, is enough, and there needs no more (but only that) to condemn us. All this, laid together, we see, Recepistis spiritum, is no more than needs; and it must needs have an answer.

The next point is, how to certify our selves, whether we have received this Spirit or no. I say ¹ Whether the Spirit, first: ² And then, whether that Spirit be the Holy Ghost, after.

Of the Spirit the signs are familiar. For if it be in us, (as the natural Spirit doth) At the heart it will beat: At the mouth, it will breathe; At the pulse it will be felt. Some one of these may; but all these will not deceive us.

At the heart we begin; for that is first, ^a Dabo vobis cor novum, & spiritum novum. A new heart and a new spirit we shall find. ^b We shall be renewed in the spirit of our mind. Sane novum supervenisse Spiritum, nova desideria demonstrant (such Bernard:) That a new spirit is received, no better way, to know, than by new thoughts, and desires. That he that watches well, the current of his desires and thoughts, may know; whether, and what spirit it is, he is led by, old or new. Therefore our SAVIOUR CHRIST breathed into them, when he first gave them the HOLY GHOST, that they might receive Him, there within, even ^c in visceribus, in the inward parts. ^d A timore tuo Domine concepimus spiritum salutis: We shall know the Spirit is conceived, by the fear of God in our hearts; it is, as the systole or drawing in to restrain us from evil. And we shall know it, by ^e Charitas Dei diffusa est in cordibus nostris, the love of God there shed abroad in our hearts. Which is, as the diastole or dilating it out, to all, that good is.

But then, this every one may say; All is well within; and their word must be taken, we cannot gain-say them. For no man knows, in so saying, whether they say true or no. Therefore we go yet further, and say: Item est vita & vocis organum; the breath that serves us for life; or to live by; the same serves us also for the voice, or to speak by. So, that way ye shall know it. For if ^f in ore ipsorum non est spiritus; no breath be to be perceived in their mouths; if they ^g speak not through their throats, they are but Idols and no better. Will ye see it at the Mouth? ^h Credidi, propter quod locutus sum, said he: And habentes eundem Spiritum, if we have the same spirit, (saith the Apostle) we shall do no less. This we know for certain, that upon this day, the Holy Ghost came in the shape of tongues, and they are for speech. And this likewise, that, upon the receiving the Holy Ghost, these here (in the Text) and generally all other, speak, and that with new tongues, not such as they spake with before. The miracle is ceased: but the moral, holdeth still; where the Holy Ghost is received, there is ever a change in the dialect, a change from ⁱ cursed, unclean, corrupt communication, unto ^j such as becometh Saints.

But then again, because even birds may be, and are sometimes taught, to speak, (and that holily phrases for a need;) therefore further yet to the pulse we go, and touch it. To the hand, to the work, and enquire of that. The Holy Ghost was first given and received by the ^k breath inward, for the heart. Then, by ^l fiery tongues, for the speech. But ever after, and here in this place, the Holy Ghost (we know) was given and received, by ^m laying on of hands: and that, to admonish us, that by imposita, and by admota manus, by lifting up, and laying to our hands, we may know, we have received Him: we have had laying on of hands, if we use laying or putting our hands to any good work.

As for what is in the heart; Quis cognoscit illud? who knows it? not we our selves: our own hearts, oft deceive us. And there is a verbis confitentur, confess at the mouth, with a factis negant, deny with the deeds: and that deceives too. But there is opus fidei, the work of faith, from fides qua operatur, faith that worketh, that is, Saint Pauls faith; that can shew it self by his working, that is, Saint James faith: and there, may well be the Spirit. But without works, there, it may not be. For without works, S. James is flat, it is but "a dead faith, the carcass of faith, and there is no Spirit in it. No Spirit, if no work, For usq; adeo proprium est, operari Spiritui, ut nisi operetur, nec sit: so kindly it is, for the Spirit to be working, et si it work not, it is not. There is none, to work: Spectrum est, non Spiritus, a flying shadow it is, a Spirit it is not, it work it do not.

Verf. 10. 12.

And yet I cannot deny, works there may be and motion, and yet no Spirit: as, in artificial Engines, Watches, and Jacks, and such like. And a certain artificial thing there is in Religion (we call it Hypocrisie) that by certain pins and gins, makes shew of certain works and motions, as if there were Spirit, but surely Spirit there is none in them. Vain men they are, that boast of the Spirit without the work: Hypocrites they are, that counterfeits the work, without the Spirit. You shall easily discover these works, that they come not from the Spirit, by the two signs, in Psalm 51. נר ונר and נר ונר, constant, and free. They that come from cunning, and not from the Spirit, ye shall know them by this, they be every foot out; they are not constant, they continue not uniform long, and when the barrel is about, or the plummets down, they stay. But howsoever, long they will not hold, but vanish like the cloud, dry away like the dew of the morning, נר ונר no constancy.

Hesai 6. 4.

And ye shall know them again, by the other note נר ונר which makes the difference, between the Creatures, and the Spirit. For the Creatures are produced from without: The Spirit doth emanare, proceed from within. So these, they have principium motus ab extra, that that makes them go, is something, some Engine without; they flow not freely, they come not kindly, as from within נר ונר no natural motion, Ingenious but not ingenuous. Ingenuity and constancy, the free proceeding, the constant continuing of them, will soon disclose, whether they come from a Spirit or no; will soon shew they come from the art of Hypocrisie, not from the Spirit of truth.

2 Whether received the Holy Ghost.

And these will serve, to know whether from a Spirit. Now, whether that Spirit be Holy or no. For divers times doth the Apostle distinguish, and say: We have not received this Spirit, but that; as Rom. 8. 15. 2 Tim. 1. 7. and namely, 1 Cor. 2. 12. that we have not received the spirit of the world, but the holy spirit which is of God. This same spirit of the world, it is sacer spiritus (for there is no touching it) but not sanctus. Sacer, as he is called sacra flames: for sancta flames he could never have called it. That spirit of the world, be it from policy, or be it from Philosophy, both are res sacra (and sancta also may be, as they may be used) but of themselves secular they are, and from men: Holy, or from heaven they are not. But this Spirit, this Wind must blow from heaven, not from our caves here beneath. And so you shall soon discern it. Do but mark the coasts, whence and whither it bloweth, the motive and the mark, and you shall distinguish it straight. For if, from a secular reason; if, to an end beneath; virtus ab imo it may be, virtus ab alto it is not.

Luk. 24. 49.
Mic. 6. 16.

For example, I do forbear to sinne: what is my motive? Because (as Micah saith) it is against Omri's statutes, some penal law; I shall incur such a penalty, be liable to such an Action, if I do not: It is well; but all this, is but the spirit of the world: E pratorio, non sanctuario, bloweth out of Westminster-Hall, not out of the Sanctuary.

C. Verf. 9.

I go further, to a better Spirit; Though there were no penal Law, I forbear to sinne, because it is a brutish thing, and so against reason: and ignominious, and so against my credit and reputation. Nay then, further yet; because, I shall thereby endanger my soul, for that it will bar me of heaven, or be a means to bring me to hell (for the Heathen men took notice of both these places:) all this while this is no more, than the spirit of the Philosophy schooles will teach: no more than might be taught in the School of Tyrannus, before Saint Paul ever came in it. It bloweth (this wind) out of Aristotles Gallery, not out of the Sanctuary yet: E Lycenio, non sanctuario. But, if with eye to God, I forbear: because in so doing, I shall offend Him, and do evil, against the rule of his Justice, the reverence and Majesty of His Presence, the awful regard of His Power, the kind respect of His Bounty and Goodness; This now, cometh from the sanctuary, this wind bloweth from heaven; this is right sanctus indeed.

Verse 25.
Gen. 11. 9.

This is the Line. Again, look to the Level. If it be Demetrius's end, here in the Chapter, Is hinc est acquisitio nobis, by this we have our advantage. If it be theirs, paremus nobis nomen, so I shall make my name famous upon earth, or any of that level, it is but of the world: sacer spiritus, not sanctus. But, if of our well doing, God His will be the center, and His glory the circumference: we do it, not that our will, but His be done; not, our name, but his be hallowed: the act is holy; and the spirit is of the same kind. Otherwise, philosophical, politick, moral it may be: theological, religious, holy it is not. Our line and our level, or inducements, or impediments to our doings, mark them, what coast they come from, and whether they bend, ye shall easily conclude; as before, whether receptis spiritum; so here, whether receptis sanctum or no.

And

And thus we know, whether we have received. But, if we have not, how then? How may we (by the grace of God) so dispose our selves, as we may receive Him. And now we are come to the day of the day: For this, is the day of His receiving.

The ways are two: 1. One, that we lay no bars to keep Him from us. 2. The other, that we use all good means to allure Him to us.

First, that we fall not into Saint Stephens challenge, that we * resist not the Holy Ghost, and His Coming. And resist Him we do, if we lay any impediments in His way; nay, if we remove them not: As the manner is, as they do, that draw the Curtains, or open the Casements, that would take in breath.

Of these, I find three of note: quit they must be all, or no receiving Him.

One, and a chief one, is Pride. For the HOLY GHOST will not ^a rest, but upon the lowly, saith Esay: nor God, give grace, but to the humble ^b (saith Solomon.) That we therefore pray to Him, that giveth grace to the humble, to give us the grace to be humble, that so we may be meet to receive Him. For, at His first coming He came as a Dove; and did ^c light upon Him, that was Himself, humble and meek, like a Dove, and willeth us to learn that lesson of Him, as that which will make us meet to receive the Dove which He received; whose qualities are like His; of a meek and quiet Spirit; which howsoever the world reckon of it, is with God a thing much set by.

In the beginning, the Spirit moved upon the waters and at Baptism; it doth so: And our SAVIOUR CHRIST speaking of the graces of the Spirit, doth it in terms of water: and water (we know) will ever to the lowest place. Pride then is a bar, and humility a disposing means, to the prime receiving of the HOLY GHOST.

Another impediment is Carnality. For spiritual, and carnal, are flat opposites. Quod sanctum est, mundum est, ever: No holiness without cleanness. So that, the neclean Spirit must be cast out, yer the HOLY GHOST received. A clean box it must be, that is to hold this Ointment. The Dove lights on no carrion. Into our Bodies, as a Temple, He is to come: as into a flower, he will not. And that which we said right now, of water, we here repeat again. The Spirit in the beginning moved there, and at Baptism came thither again; and his gifts are as streames of water; and water (we know) is a cleanser. To keep our selves clean, is a means; to pour our selves out into riot and excess, is a bar, keeps Him far away from us.

But the third is ex tota substantia, against the HOLY GHOST: and that is, the Spirit in us, that (as Saint James saith) lusteth after envy; after envy, or malice, or whatsoever savoureth of the gall of bitterness; in which whosoever are, S. Peter saith plainly, they have no part or fellowship, either in giving, or receiving of the HOLY GHOST. The HOLY GHOST, as, in the body, He expresseth by the breath, and in that form given by CHRIST: so in the soul, by mutual and reciprocal love, which is (as it were) the lives-breath of the soul. So is His Nature; and so is His Sign: the Dove brought an Olive branch, and that is the sign of love and amity: and so is His Office, to shed abroad love in our hearts: And how can that be received, if malice be not first of all voided out? They are as opposite; as S. Lukes fire from heaven, and S. James fire from hell: one must be quenched, or the other will not burn.

Now these being removed, 1. Pride, 2. Lust, and 3. Malice, and so a place made; we are to invite the Spirit, by all good means he loveth; and as it were to gather wind as much as we can. To that end to get us to the place, and to visit it oft, where this aire breatheth: and, that is (as we find, (Numb. XI. XVI.) The door of the Sanctuary. If any be stirring, if any be to be found, there it is. No place on earth which the Holy Spirit more frequenteth, hath duer commerce with, than the Holy places, where the remembrance of His name is put; for thither He will come to us and bless us with His blessing.

Being there, it is but an easie lesson, yet David thinks meet to teach it us, by his example; Os meum aperui, & Spiritum attraxi, To open our mouth and draw it in. And that opening is by prayer. Zachary calleth it Spiritum precum; the spirit, that is, the active inspiration or attraction of it, where we express our desire to draw him in. Which very attraction or desire hath a promise, by the mouth of our Saviour Christ Himself, that His heavenly Father will give the Holy Ghost aiōnō aiōnō to them that will make petition, seek and sue, open their mouth, and pray for it.

Then secondly, look, how the Breath and the Voice in naturalibus go together; even so do the Spirit and the Word in the practice of Religion. The HOLY GHOST is Christs Spirit; and Christ is the Word. And of that Word, the Word ^c that is preached to us, is an abstract. There must then needs be a nearness, and alliance, between the one and the other. And indeed (but by our default) The Word and the Spirit (saith Esay) shall never faile, or ever part; but one be received, when the other is. We have a plain example of it this day, in S. Peters auditory (Acts. 2.) and another, in Cornelius and his family (Acts. 10.) even in the Sermon time, the Holy Ghost fell upon them, and they received Him.

Yea, we may see it by this, that, in the hearing of the Word, where He is not received, yet He maketh proffers, and worketh somewhat onward. Upon Felix, took him with a shaking, and further would have gone; but that he put it over to a convenient time, which convenient time never came. And upon Agrippa likewise, somewhat it did move him, and more it would, but that he was content to be a Christian, ἐν δαίμῳ, to take his Religion, by a little (as it were upon a knives-point) and was afraid to be a Christian in multo, too much a Christian.

That we see not this effect, that with the Word the Spirit is not received as it would be, the reason is, it is no sooner gotten, than it is lost. We should find this effect, if after we had heard the Word, we could get us a little out of the noise about us, and withdraw our selves some whither, where we might be by ourselves, That when we have heard Him speak to us, we might hear what He would speak in us. When we have heard the voice before us, we might hear the other behind us, hec est via. When, the voice that soundeth; the other of Job, vocem audiui in silentio: there, hear Him, reprove, teach, comfort us, within. Upon which Texts are grounded the siliquies, the communing with our own spirits, which are much praised by the Ancients, to this purpose: for, in meditatione exardescit ignis, by a little musing or meditation, the fire would kindle and be kept alive, which otherwise will dye. And certain it is, that many sparkles kindled, for want of this, go out again straight: for, as fast as it is written in our hearts, it is wiped out again: as fast as the seed is sown, it is picked up by the fowles again, and so our receiving is in vain, the Word and the Spirit are severed, which else would keep altogether.

Lastly, is the Word and the Spirit; so the Flesh and the Spirit go together. Not all flesh, but this flesh, the flesh that was conceived by the Holy Ghost, this is never without the Holy Ghost, by whom it was conceived: so that, receive one, and receive both. Ever with this blood there runneth still an artery, with plenty of Spirit in it: which maketh, that we eat there escam spiritualem, a spiritual meat, and that in that Cup, we be made drink of the Spirit. There is not only impositio manuum, but after it, positio in manus; putting on of the hands, but putting it into our hands. Impositio manuum, putting on of hands, in Accipit panem & calicem: And positio in manus, putting it into our hands, in Accipite, edite, bibite. And so, we in case, to receive body, blood, Spirit and all, if our selves be not in fault.

Now then if we will invite the spirit indeed; and if each of these, by it self in severall, be thus effectual to procure it: put them all, and bind them all together, Accipite verba; take to your words, Hosces words, words of earnest invocation. Insipite infitum verbum, receive or take to you the Word (S. James word) grafted into you, by the Office of Preaching. Accipite corpus, accipite sanguinem, take the holy mysteries of His body and blood, and the same, the holy arteries of His blessed Spirit. Take all these in one, (the attractive of Prayer; the Word, which is Spirit and life; the bread of life, and the cup of Salvation:) and is there not great hope, we shall answer S. Pauls question, as he would have it answered, affirmative? Have ye received? Yes; we have received him. Yes sure. Then, if ever, thus, if by any way. For on earth, there is no surer way, than to joyn all these: and He so to be received, if at all.

So, we began with hearing outward, and we end with receiving inward. We began with one Sacrament, Baptism; we end with the other, the Eucharist. We began with that, where we heard of him; and we end with this other, where we may and shall (I trust) receive him. And Almighty God grant, we so may receive Him at this good time; as in His good time, we may be received by Him, thither, whence He this day came of purpose to bring us, even to the holy places made without hands, which is His heavenly kingdom, with God the Father who prepared it, and God the Son who purchased it for us. To whom, three Persons, &c.

EPHES. Chap. IV. Ver. XXX.

Nolite contristari, &c.

And grieve not (or, be not willing to grieve,) the Holy Spirit of God ; by whom ye are sealed unto the day of Redemption.

His Request; or Counsel, or Caution, or Precept (or what ye will call it) of the Apostles, is sure very reasonable : The Holy Ghost, by whom we are sealed to the day of Redemption, that we would not grieve Him.

Not the HOLY GHOST. He is the Spirit of the Great and High God : And so, for His Dignities sake. Not Him again, as by whose means we have our signature against the great Day of Redemption : And so, even for His benefits sake. These two, 1 for His Greatness, or 2 for His Goodness ; Greatness in Himself, Goodness to us : For either of these, or for both of these, we would be so respective of Him, as not to grieve Him.

Not to grieve Him. He might well, and (as one would think) should rather have said yield him all cause of joy and contentment : It had been but reason, so. Now, that He doth not move ; only this, that we would not minister unto Him any cause of grievance : And what could He say less ? To such a Person, and for such a Benefit, it is but even a small pleasure. If not rejoice him, yet Grieve him not. And it is so reasonable, I see not how well it can be Denied Him.

Now then as we see it is but reasonable (this Request,) So is it exceeding fit for this time. It is for the Holy Ghost : And this is the Holy Ghost's Feast. It mentioneth His Sealing (for a reason :) And this is (as I may call it) His first Sealing-day : this the day, on which the Spirit of God first set His Seal upon the Fathers of our faith, the blessed Apostles. On which He then did, and on which He ever will, though not in like manner, yet in like effect (it being His own day) visit us from on high, if by some grievance or other, we disappoint Him not, and so drive Him away.

So, what easier request than this, Nolite contristari ? And what fitter time to move for the Holy Ghost, than upon His own Feast, and upon His Sealing-day ? And this is the Summe,

The

The division.

The parts fall out evidently two, ¹ The Party, for whom this Request is preferred: ² And a Duty, or (it is not worth making a duty) rather a common ordinary Courtesie to be done Him. 1. The Party, The Holy Spirit of GOD, by whom we are sealed to the Day of Redemption. 2. The Duty (or what ye will call it) Nolite contristari.

- I. In the Party, two Motives there be: ¹ His Person, and ² His Benefit. 1. His Person in these: The Holy Spirit of GOD. 2. His Benefit in these: By whom ye are sealed to the Day of Redemption. His Person set forth in the original, with very great energy: such, as our tongue is not able to express it fully enough. For it is not πνεῦμα ἅγιον θεοῦ, but with greater emphasis; but three words, and three Articles, every word his several Article by it self, τὸ πνεῦμα, τὸ ἅγιον, τοῦ θεοῦ. The Spirit, not a Spirit; and not Holy, but The Holy; nor of GOD, θεοῦ; but of ἰσθ, The GOD, that is, the only, living and true GOD. All, The's; never an A among them.

2. Then, His Bounty or Benefit vouchsafed us: By whom, we have our sealing to the Day of Redemption. Wherein, these four points come to be weighed: 1. Of Redemption. First, What and how it is. 2. Then, that it hath a Day; the Day of our Redemption. 3. That, against that Day, we are to be Sealed. 4. That, the Holy Ghost keepeth that Seal; and His Office, it is to pass it to us. This is the Benefit.

Now, either of these is a Motive of it self. ¹ His Person: Grieve not the holy Spirit of GOD, and there stay: for, that, of it self, is reason enough: ² Or, leave out His Person, let that by, and say, but even, Him, Who seals unto you, so great a favour, as to save you, at the great Day: Him (be He what He will, GOD, or Man, Spirit or flesh, holy or common) grieve Him not. This is reason enough too: Grieve Him not, for His own: If not for His own, yet not, for His Seals sake.

- II. The Duty followeth. To this Person great, and of great bounty beside (to speak as Naaman's Servants did to him) Si rem grandem dixisset Apostolus; if the Apostle had enjoined us some great piece of service, we ought not to have thought much of it. How much more then, when he saith, but this, Do not grieve Him (and there is all?) which is no positive, or actual piece of service, of pains, or of peril; only a privative, of dis-service (as they call it) which is ever as little as can be required: Non contristari.

1. Non contristari: or at least, Nolite contristari; for, there be two degrees: 1. That we do it not. 2. That willingly we do it not. That we have a will not to do it. Which reading, offers more grace. For, much depends upon our willingness, or not willingness to it.

In both which, we have ¹ first to weigh, whether we can grieve Him, or He be grieved: (that so we may understand the phrase, and take it right.) ² Then, how it is, we do it, and what those grievances be; that so, we may take notice of them, and be careful to avoid them.

3. Last of all, the fitting it to the Time and shewing it seasonable. For, by occasion of the Person, His Feast; and by occasion of the day of Redemption, the Day of Sealing also will fall in; and the intended action, with it. Which (as we shall shew) is it self a kind of Signature. Do it not; This time, do it not: It is His own Feast, now; It is His Sealing-day, this; Now then, Nolite contristari. Thus lie the Parts. Of which, that what shall be spoken, &c.

I. Grieve not.

Two sorts of persons there be, that (if we be well advised) we would be loth to grieve: ¹ Great Persons; ² and such as carry the reputation of being Good. Not Great, in regard of their power: They may do us a displeasure: The motive of fear. Not good, in regard of their bounty: Others are, and we may be, the better for them: the motive of hope. If He be Great, though He Seal us nothing, no wisdom, to offend Him. If He be to seal us a favour (though otherwise He be not great) for His favours sake favour Him so much, as grieve Him not. Either of these available; but where they meet, there is vis unita. Specially, if we add, In quo vos; that our parts be in it; and Signati estis, that either He already hath, or is ready to do it for us: The motive of love, and of the greatest love, the love of our selves. Then it comes home indeed. These three meet all in this Party. 1. He is τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τοῦ θεοῦ. 2. Sigillum habet. 3. In quo vos.

I. Not the Spirit of GOD.

I begin with Quantum, how great. He is the Spirit of GOD. And were it but the Spirit of man, our own Spirit; Sins of the greater size, would be forborne, as for other divers, so even for this reason, that they be gravamina spiritus, grievances against our own spirit; which, every one feels, whose conscience is not seared. And if the Apostle had said, Eschew them, for that they breed singulum & scrupulum cordis, the up-braiding or yexing of the heart (as ^a Abigail excellently termeth it,) or (as ^b Solomon) vulnus spiritus, the wound, or gall of the Spirit; or (as ^c Esay) compunctionem, the prick or sting of conscience; or (as our ^d Saviour Himself) a worme, which once bred, never dies, nor, never leaves gnawing: he had said enough. But this, even the Heathen could have said too.

a 1 Sam. 25. 31.
b Prov. 18. 14.
c Esay 29. 10.
d Mar. 9. 44.

The Apostle doth like an Apostle; tels us truly, there is a greater matter longs to it than so. There is a farre higher Spirit than ours, than any in man (our Spirit is nothing to it) the Spirit of GOD: they be grievances against it.

To speak then of the Spirit of GOD: GOD is a Spirit; and GOD hath a Spirit. Hath many, created, in His power, and at His command: but hath one, one above all, uncreated, inimūm substantiæ, of His own substance: Known ever, by the article in, (as S. Basil observeth) the Spirit, the sovereign Spirit: Styled ever, with this addition, His own Spirit; the Spirit not of any Saint, in concreto, or in abstracto, but even of GOD himself.

Our Saviour CHRIST teacheth us, to take notice of Him, as we do of the Wind; By His effect. For the wind: it is a body of ayre, but so thin and subtile, as it is next neighbour to a Spirit. We see foul rule here in the world sometimes, houses blown down, trees blown up by the roots. When we see this, we know straight, this cannot be done without some power. And that power (we are sure) cannot subsist of it self (it is an accident:) must (needs) have his inherence in some substance. That substance, if it be visible, we call it a body: if invisible, a Spirit. So our Saviour tels us, Spiritus est qui spirat; It is the Wind did this, blew all these down.

And even so, of the Spirit of GOD, when (as upon this day) they that could scarce speake one tongue well, on a sudden, were able perfectly to speake to every Nation under heaven, every one in his own tongue: this (we know) could not come to passe but by some power. And sure we are, that power must have for His Subject, some substance: And not any visible or bodily; Then, some Spirit it must be: And no Spirit in the world could effect this: And so the Spirit of GOD.

But the relation of these tongues depends upon S. Lukes credit. There was after, a more strange and famous operation, which in all Stories we find. The Temples of Idols blown down all the world over: yet the world it self blown quite about, turned up-side down (as it were) from Paganisme, and the worship of Heathen gods to the truth of Christ in Religion. And that, maugre the Spirit of the world, which blustered, and bent it self against it, totis viribus. This we find: And for certain, this work and this power could not come from any other Spirit, but the Spirit of GOD only. Thus we take notice of Him by His effects: and of his Greatnesse by the greatnesse of his effects.

The Spirit of GOD; and the Holy Spirit: what needs this? To make Him great (as the world goes) what needed Holy? Or, if a title must be added, to that end, there were other styles many, in the eye of flesh, more magnificent and likely to shew Him for Great, than this of Holinesse. The Spirit of Principality, of Courage, Power, Government; divers other. And all these, are from Him too; He the fountain of all. So the Apostle tels, 1 Cor. 12. And, though the Spirit be all these; yet choyce is made of none of all these, but only of this one [Holy] from among them all, ἐκ τούτων. And His title is not The High and Mighty: nor, The Great and Glorious: but only, The Holy Spirit. Nor, do the Seraphims and Powers of Heaven cry, Magnus, or Celsus, or Fortis, thrice; but Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus; Holy and thrice Holy, to GOD Himself: making choise (I doubt not) of His Sovereign Attribute, to laud and magnifie His glorious Name by. Which teacheth us a lesson (if we would learn it) That, it is the Attribute in GOD, which of all other, He doth, and which of all other, we should most esteeme of. And by vertue of this (if we kept right) Places, and Times, and Persons, and things sacred shoul be in regard accordingly. For this we may be sure of: were there in GOD's titles, a title of higher account, the Spirit of GOD should have been stiled by it. But in GOD, Holy, Holy, is before Lord of Hosts: His Holinesse, first; His Power, after.

Thus, have we two reasons de non gravando: First, were He but the Holy Spirit, for that He would be spured. For, without all question, He is the more to be set by, by reason of that Attribute: It is GOD's cheif, as ye may see in the High Priests forehead; as ye may hear, out of the Angels mouths.

Then again, that He is GOD's; and not a Spirit, but The Spirit of GOD; we will forbear Him somewhat (I trust) for His sake, whose He is. Put these two together.

And to these two for a surplusage joyn that, He is not only Dei, but Deus; Of GOD, but GOD also: and then, we have our full weight for this part, for His Greatnesse.

And this we shewed, last Feist. We are Baptized into Him: We believe in Him: We yield Him equal glorifying: We blese by Him or, in His name: no lesse than of the other two: So, in the Deity, He is: And a Person He is: For, to Seale (which he is said here to do;) to seale, is ever an act personall. Thither then, I now come, even from His Greatnesse to His Goodnesse.

For He is not great, as the Great CHAN: but, He is Good withall. And Great, and Good withall, that carries it ever; If, In quo vos come to it, that this goodnesse reach to us.

And sure, this Party His (Greatnesse set apart) is, to us, the Authour of many a benefit. No person of the three hath so many, so divers denominations as He; And they be all, to shew the manifold diversity of the gifts, He bestoweth on us. They count them, 1. His רוח or agitation, which maketh the vegetable power in the world. 2. His נפש Spirit or soul of life, in the living Creatures. 3. His רוח heavenly Spirit of a double life, in mankind. 4. Then, that in Bezaleel, that gave him excellency of art. 5. That in the LXX. Elders, that gave them excellency of wisdom to govern. 6. That in Balaam and the Sybils, that gave them the word of Prophecy, to foretell things contingent. 7. That of the Apostles (this day) that gave them skill, to speak all tongues. All these are from Him. All these he might, but doth not reckon up any of them. And that, because, though they be from the Holy Spirit of GOD, yet not from Him

Him, as Holy; but, as the Spirit of God only, without eye or reference to this Attribute [Holy] at all.

But from the Holy Spirit (or the Spirit, as He is Holy) cometh the gratum faciens, the gift of gifts, the gift of grace, which He bestoweth on His Saints and servants, and maketh them such, by it. We waive all the former, all the gratis data, and take our selves only to this. And here again, there come in upon us as many more. 1. The grace ^a reproving and checking them within (when they are ready to go astray) Spiritus reflans, the wind against them, ^b not suffering them to go into Asia or Mysia (when they shall do no good there) but making them even wind-bound as it were. 2. Spiritus afflans, the wind with them, ^c guiding them, and giving them a good pass into all truth. 3. The grace ^d teaching them what they knew not, and calling to their minds, that they did know, and have forgot. (And so, Spiritus diffans, blowing away and scattering, as it were, the mists of error and forgetfulness.) 4. The grace ^e quickning them and stirring them up, when they grow dull, and even becalmed. 5. The grace inspiring, and ^f inditing their requests, when they know not what, or how to pray. 6. The Spirit breathing, and ^g shedding abroad His love in their hearts: which makes them ^h go bound in the spirit, and (as it were) with full fil to Jerusalem (when it is for His service.) 7. And last, the Spirit ⁱ sealing them an assurance, of their estates to come: which is the most sovereign of all the seven; as that, which doth sanctifie (that is) sever and set us apart, from the rest of the World, and proprios discere, make us His own peculiar.

ⁱ 1 Cor. 1. 22.

Now, this Benefit we find (here) woven and twisted with another: For, two are mentioned, 1. redeeming, and 2. sealing. We must look to sumus cuique. Both, are not the HOLY GHOST's: One belongs to CHRIST. His, the Office to redeem, and that day (the day of Redemption) His. The other, to the Holy Ghost. The seal is His; and His, the day of sealing. We are to pass both these Offices. To be redeemed, questionless: But, take this withal; it is not enough, that (to be redeemed) if by this seal also, it be not passed to us.

Of these then briefly. 1. Redemption there is. 2. That, hath a day. 3. Against that day, we to be sealed. 4. The Holy Ghost hath that seal: He is to do it; that Office is His.

CHRIST's is first: we must then go a little from the Holy Ghost: we will come to Him again, straight.

1 Redemption.

Of it we have heard; in Redemption, there is emprion (a buying) and Re (that is) back: a buying back of that, which formerly hath been lost, or made away.

Job 2. 4.

It is of two sorts: 1. Real, and 2. Personal. Redemption real, of our estates, lands, or goods: Redemption personal, of our own selves, souls and bodies. This, in the Text, seemeth to be personal: In quo vos, by whom you; you your selves: there is not mention of any possessions. And ever, of the twain, this is the greater. You know, who said skin for skin, all that a man hath, to redeem himself. But indeed, upon the matter; this Redemption, is of both. For, CHRIST's Redemption, is not of one half; but, a total entire Redemption both of Persons and Estates.

Now, mens persons come to need redeeming, by Captivity: And in that case, there must be a ransome. Mens estates, come to need it, upon a sale out-right: and in that, there needs a new Purchase.

We were gone both ways. Both are in the 7. to the Rom. at the 23. Verse, There is a Law in our members leading us captive: when, either we are taken, and carried away by strong hand, with a temptation: or over-wrought by the sleights of the enemy. At the 14. verse: there is a sale, Carnal and sold under sin: when, for some consideration, as we think (but many times, scarce valuable) we make away our estates, by our own voluntary act.

Num. 35. 28.

CHRIST Redeemes us from both. His Ransome ye shall find, 1 Tim. 2. 6. Ἀντίλυτρον. And His Purchase, Chap. 1. 14. Redemptionem redemptionis; that is of Purchase, plain. His purse went not for either, but His Person. His death, as the High Priests, freed us from captivity; His blood, as the blood of the Covenant was the price, that cleared our estate, from all former bargaines and sales.

2 The Day of Redemption.

This Redemption hath a Day. But by this reckoning, that Day should be past. The Day of His Passion, was the Day of that payment, and that is past: How can we be sealed against it, then? But (if ye mark it well) Lightly, there are more dayes, than one, go to a full Redemption: Two, at least: And, till the second come, the Redemption is not complete.

In the Real: there is one day of paying the mony; another, of putting in possession, ever. That (lightly) is not the same day; but sometimes, a good while after.

In the Personal: 1. One day, when concerning a Prisoner, a condemned man, it is graciously said by His Majesty, he shall not dye. 2. Another, when this is put under Seal, and brought to the prison, for his release: And possibly, a good distance, between these.

I know, all is counted as good as done, when the money is paid, or the word spoken: But, the Prisoner lieth by it still; and the possession is out of our hands, till the second day cometh: So, that is the Day of Redemption consummate.

And

And even so, stands it with us. The Ransome was paid down; the sentence reversed, the day of His Passion. The putting us in possession; the perfect setting us free; that hath another day, not yet come. For, out of possession we are as yet; and, in a kind of prison, we are still. The first day, the pay-day, is past; we hold a memory of it; of all dayes, on Good-friday. But Himself tells us, of another day after that (the day of His second appearing) and, when that comes, then He bids us lift up our heads and look up cheerfully; for then our Redemption draws nigh; is even at hand; (that is) our full, perfect, plenary Redemption, indeed. And till that come, for all the first fruits of the Spirit, We groan still, as subject to vanity and corruption (our prison-irons, as it were) and all the creatures together with us, do the like. Thus far Redemption, and the Day of it: And thus far CHRISTS Office.

Luke 21.28.

Rom. 8.23, 23.

Now between these two Redemption-dayes (the first and the second) cometh in the Seal. And, against that second day come (which is in truth, the very Day of full Redemption) it will stand us in hand, to provide, we be sealed; and have this mark of separation. It is exceeding material. No claim of Redemption without it. In vain shall we say, we are redeemed; unless, we then have this seal to shew. Therefore, not to rest upon Redemption with a blank, or the conceit of that: but know, there is a further matter still (even obsignari estis) and look to that. For, when that Day comes, all will go by it. In very deed (upon the point) the Day it self goes by it: for, if sealed, then a Day of Redemption: If otherwise, then no Day of Redemption; but a Day of utter desolation.

3 Ye are sealed against that day.

Ye have a type of this, in the old Testament (Ezek. 9.) Six fellows came forth with Axes, to make havock and destroy. There goes one before, and makes a Tau in the fore-heads of some certain persons: they, and none but they, spared: the rest, hewed in pieces, every mothers Son.

Ezek. 9.4.

The like again, in the New Testament (Apoc. 7.) the four Angels hold the four winds, ready to destroy the earth. But first goeth one with a seal; and a proclamation there is, to make stay, till we have sealed some: and (that done) as for the rest; destroy them and spare not. As much to say: these with the seal, are they, to whom the Redemption shall be applied, and for whom only, it is available. Pass over these: these are mine; I see my seal upon them. Therest, nescio eos; I find not my mark, I know them not. Do with them, what ye will.

Rev. 7.2.

And (because I spake of passing over) in the Pass-over, it was so; both acts, there, The Lamb slain, there is Redemption: the posts stroken with Hyssope dipped in the blood, there is the signature. Answerable to these two, with us; Redemption by the SON of GOD at Easter: and the sealing by the HOLY GHOST at Whitsunide.

Exod. 12.6, 7.

But, further yet: these with the seal, not only save them, destroy them not: but, let them also enter into my rest, my glory, my joy. I did not only ransom their persons; but, I redeemed also their estates: purchased an estate of blis, for them, and in their names. This was prepared by the FATHER, Redeemed by the SON, and now, the conveyance of it sealed by the HOLY GHOST: Let them possess it.

Heb. 4.11.
Mat. 25.21.
Mat. 25.34.

And by this, ye see, how great matters both personal and real, depend upon this Seal: how much it importeth us, not to miss it. What reckoning we now make of it, how light, it skills not: The day will come, if we had the whole world to give, we would to be found with Seal upon us.

This seal (which makes up all, and without which nothing is authentical) is in the dispensing and disposing of the Holy Ghost. We are therefore of necessity to pass His Office also: that so, all the Trinity may co-operate, and every Person have a hand; in the work of our Salvation. Remember, I have told you heretofore, that CHRIST, without the Holy Ghost, is as a Deed, without a seal; as a Testator, without an Executor. It is so: For all he hath done; Redemption, or no Redemption goeth by this seal: all, that CHRIST hath wrought for us; by that, the Holy Spirit doth work in us. And the Apostle, as he saith here, He the party, by whom ye are sealed, to the day of Redemption: So he might have added, and without whom, ye are left blank, for the day of destruction. For, by and from Him we have it: and by and from any other; we have it not.

4 By whom ye are sealed;

And, if it be not to be had, from any other: We may well think it excludeth our selves, and our own spirit. There were (I wot well) in the heathen, and may be in the Christian, other good moral virtues: But, they will not serve, to seal us against the day, here specified. One may have them all, and be never the nearer, at the day of Redemption. That, which is, then, to stand us in stead (let us not deceive our selves) we spin it not out of our selves, as the Spider doth her web: It is of the nature of an aspiration, or of an Impression. It is from without; as breathing; and, as sealing is. And it is the breath of this Spirit (the Spirit of GOD:) and the print of His seal, must do this. From without, it cometh, from the Spirit of GOD, not our own spirit. That we phanise not, we may have it, some other way, from our own selves. It is He, that hath made us, and not we our selves, GOD the Father: It is He, that hath redeemed us, and not we our selves, GOD the Son: and, it is He that hath sealed us, and not we our selves, GOD the Holy Ghost: That the whole glory may redound to the blessed Trinity; and he, that rejoiceth, may joyce in the LORD.

Then to end this point. 1. There is a day in coming. 2. A day of Redemption to some it is; and may prove so, to us. 3. To us it may, if we be found sealed. 4. Found sealed we cannot be, but by the Holy Ghost's means, we must be beholden to Him: He keeps the Seale: He sets it to. 5. To Him we shall be beholden, and He will set it to, if we Grieve Him not. Why then, this brings us directly to the duty, Nolite contristari, Grieve Him not.

II. This Party, whose favour may thus much stand us; and that, against a time we shall so much stand in need of it; what can we say, or do worthy of Him? We (no doubt) will rise straight in our magnificent lofty style, and say, What? Why, work Him all possible joy and jubilee; and all too little. Sure, it were so to be wished. But hear you, Interim, I would (saith the Apostle) we would but do thus much for Him, and not grieve Him. Even as, in another place touching GOD'S Name; we in our rising vein would say, GOD'S Name. What, but glorifie it, make it famous, renowned everywhere? Ye say well, saith He; In the mean time, I would His Name might not be evil spoken of by your means. Let your laudat, and glorificat alone, and but even Nolite contristari. The Apostle pleads but for that; that will content Him: And I would, He might not fail of that, till the other come.

And that (I trust) He shall not fail of, Non contristari. We will never stand with Him for this. It is but a small matter, this, but even rationabile obsequium, a request of great modesty; rather a courtesy, than a duty, Not to grieve.

Not to grieve? Why reason would (saith Solomon) we should not grieve any of our Neighbours, seeing they dwell by us, and do us no hurt. But (as I said) not the great, if there be any wisdom: nor the good, if there be either grace, or good nature in us.

Well, howsoever we deal with men, here (high or low, good or otherwise) in any wise take heed of offering it, to GOD. Why (saith Esay) Is it not enough for you to grieve men, but will ye grieve my GOD also? Provoke we Him (saith the Apostle) Are we stronger than He? As if he should say, that were extream folly.

But yet one step further: I say, and CHRIST saith as much: If God, yet not the Holy Spirit of GOD though; not that Person. Sinnes and grievances against the other two, may and shall; sin against Him, shall never be forgiven. Grieve not Him then, at any hand.

But I ask: Can we grieve the Spirit of God, that is, God? Can He be grieved? Indeed; they be two Questions: 1 Can we? and 2 can He? I should answer somewhat strangely (but truly) to say, we can, and He cannot. For we may (on our parts) grieve; (that is) do what in us lieth, to grieve Him. And with Him, the endeavour, is all; and to do what we can, habetur pro facto, though the effect follow not. This, we can: So badly demean our selves; as, if it were possible by any means in the world, that grief could be made to fall into the divine Essence (let Him look to it) we would do that, should provoke it in Him; that, should even draw it from Him. Let Him thank the high super-eminent perfection of His nature, that is not capable of it: If it were, or any way could be, we would put Him to it.

Now, I find in the Gospel (from our SAVIOUR'S own mouth) he that looketh on a woman with lust after her, hath (on his part) committed adultery with her: (the woman in the mean while, remaining chaste, as never once thinking of any such matter.) Then, if the one party may be an Adulterer, and the other (as I may say) not adulterated: why not, in like sort, one grieve, and yet the other not grieved? Alwayes, this use we may make of it, ad exaggerandum peccati malitiam, to aggravate some sins, and shew the heinousness of some sinners, that do (on their part) all they can, to do it; and that is all one, as if they did it. This is * Tertullians.

How to understand this phrase.

1 Sam. 15. 11.
Gen. 6. 6.
Psa. 10. 11.

But, GOD forbid, it should lie in the power of flesh, to work any grief in God: or, that we should once admit this conceipt, the Deity to be subject to this, or the like perturbations, that we be. And yet, both this passion of grief, and divers other (as, anger, repentance, jealousy) we read them ascribed to God in Scripture: And, as ascribed in one place, so denied as flatly in another. One where it is said, It repented God, He had made Saul King: In the same place by and by after, The strength of Israel is not as man, that He can repent. One, where GOD was touched with grief of heart: Another, There is with Him the fulness of all joy for ever; which excludeth all grief quite.

How is it then? How are we to understand this? Thus: That when they are denied; that is to set out unto us, the perfect steddiess of the Nature divine, no wayes obnoxious to these our imperfections. And that is the true sound Divinity.

Rom 6. 19.

But, when they are ascribed, it is for no other end, but even humanum dicere, for our infirmity, to speak to our own language, and in our own termes: so to work with us the better. Lightly, men do nothing so seriously, as when they do it in passion: Nor indeed any thing thoroughly at all, or (as we say) home, unlesse it be edged with some kind of affection. Consequently, such is our dull capacity, we never sufficiently take impression, God will do this, or that to purpose; except He be so represented unto us, as we use our selves to be, when we go through with a matter. In punishing, we pay not home, unlesse we be angry: When GOD then is to punish, He is presented unto us as angry, to note to us,

He

He will proceed as effectually, as if He were so indeed. We are not carefull enough (we think) of that we love, unlesse there be with our love, some mixture of jealousie : When GOD then, would shew, how chary He is of the entirenesse of our love towards Him, He is said, to be a jealous GOD. We alter not what once we have set down, but when we repent : When GOD then, changeth his course formerly held, he is made, as if He did repent (though, so to do, were ever His purpose.) And so here: we withdraw not our selves, from whom we have conversed with before, but upon some grievance : When the Spirit of GOD then withdraweth himself for a time, and leaves us, He is brought in as grieved. For that if it were otherwise delivered, it would not so affect us, nor make in us the impression, that this way it doth. So that, Grieve Him not, that is (in direct termes) Give Him not cause to do that, which in grief men use to do, to withdraw Himself, and to forsake you. If ye do, believe this; He will as certainly give you over, as if He were grieved in earnest. This is from Saint Augustine.

By this time, we know how to conceive of this phrase aright. Now, how to have use of it. And of this humanum dicit, this use we may have. First, upon these places, where we thus find affections attributed to God, Our rule is ever, to reflect the same affection upon our selves, which is put upon Him; to be jealous over our selves, to be angry, or grieved with our selves, for that, which is said to anger, or to grieve GOD. And that, upon this Soliloquy with our selves, That, how light soever we seem to make of sin, yet in that, it is said, thus to grieve GOD's Holy Spirit, it must needs be some grievous matter certainly. And yet (methinks) it toucheth not the Spirit of GOD though: He shall lose nothing by it. He needs not to grieve at it. Of the twain, it should rather seem to concern us; we may come short of our Redemption, by the means; and (a worse matter than that) be cast into eternal perdition. The loss is like to be ours. And is this said to grieve the Holy Spirit of GOD, and shall it not grieve us, whom it more nearly concerneth? Shall we be said to grieve Him with it, and not our selves be grieved for it? This, or some, to like effect.

Then, it teacheth us (this phrase) withal, what in this case we are to do, when it happeneth. Sure, even that, which we would do, to one grieved by us (whom we make special account of, and would be right loth to lose his favour:) never to leave, but to seek, by all means, to recover him; by shewing our selves sorry, and grieved, for grieving of him; by vowing, never to do the like more; by undertaking any thing, that may win him again. The only way to remedy it, is, to take us to the same affection: As here, that it grieve us to do any thing, may turn Him to grief, or, if we have done it, never cease to be grieved with our selves, till we have recovered Him; His favour, and His grace again.

Now then, were it not well, to take notice of these grievances, that we might avoid, not offer them: and so fulfill the Apostles Nolite Contristari? Divers there be. But one of them, we cannot but take notice of (This verse is so hemmed in with it, on both sides.) Our verse begins with [And] which couples it, to the former. And the very same that is in the former, is repeated over again, in the next after. And this it is: To set a seal upon our lips, from fool language, bitterness, cursing, swearing without any sense at all. That these, come not out of our mouths. That we leave these in any case; and then, follows our verse, And grieve not the Holy Spirit: as if He pointed us to these, and said, These are such, whereby we grieve the Spirit of God, and all good men, that hear them. (And that is one special way to grieve the Spirit, to grieve good men, in whom it is.) His very coming (this day) in shape of tongues, sheweth, He would have the print of His seal upon that part, upon the tongue: and His fire from heaven, breath; not this fire from hell, thus sparkle from it. S. James makes short work: If any would be holden for religious, and refrain not his tongue from these, that mans religion is (to be prized) as little worth. This, from [And] the first word, the Copulative to the bordering verse, which I could not avoid.

But I choose rather to hold my self to the point of sealing, within the Text; and the grievances against it: which I reduce to these two: 1 Either, Before when we are not yet sealed, but are to be; when He offers to do it: 2 Or, After, when we are already past his hand, and his seal upon us. There are grievances, both ways.

First, the Spirit of God doth come, and offer to seal us: our part were to invite Him to come if He did not; but if He come, to be glad of it; but in any wise, to be willing, withal. Otherwise, Ipsum nolle, contristari est. For if we be not willing, but refuse and shift Him off still, is it not justum gravamen? But, even as there were, that, when Christ set His foot on land, and offered to come to them, intreated Him, He would be gone again: So when the Holy Ghost makes the like proffer, He hath his Gereges too, that can spare Him and His seal both. Men are (I know not how) even loth and (as it were) afraid; think it a disgrace to them, many (and, that would be called men of spirit) that any seal or mark of holiness, should be set, or seen upon them. Content with a Label, without any seal to it, all their life long. And of those Label-Christians, we have meetly good store. As the Spirit of God, they like Him well enough to have their breath, and life, and moving from Him: yea, arts and tongues too, if He will: But, as the Holy Spirit, not once to be acquainted with Him. And what is this plain, but their speech, Cause the holy one to cease from us? But yet I do not say [not at all:] For, if He will come and seal them, some quarter of an hour before they dye; for that, they will not stand with him. But they desire to wear the Signature of the flesh, or of the world, of pride, or of lust, as long as they are able to stand on their legs. Animales, all their life: and spiritum habentes, at the hour of their death. Clinici Christiani,

And grieve not.

James 3. 8.
James 1. 26.

How in the act of Sealing.

1 Before it is.

Mat. 8. 34.

Eph. 30. 11.

Jud. 19.

stiani, beddered Christians, (as the Primitive Church calleth them) when the flesh leaves them, let the spirit take them and seal them: Then the seal (and ye will;) but, not before. But, this is an indignity, and cannot be well taken. He will not endure, thus to be trifled with and shifted off, when He would: and if, then He seals us not; when we would, we have our mends in our own hands.

But secondly, say we be willing He come: Is it not our part, against He comes, to dispose our selves, and be ready wrought, to receive the figure of His seal? Then, if either He find us so indurate, in malice and desire of revenge, or sins of that sort; that, as good offer him a flint to seal, which will take no print: Or, on the other side, find us so dissolved (as it were) and even molten in the sins of the flesh, that, as good offer Him a dish of water to Seal, that will hold no figure: Both come to one: 1 Not to suffer Him, to do it; and 2 not to be in case, to receive it: 1 Not disposed to it; Or, 2 indisposed for it. And can be choose, but reckon this as a second gravamen, and go His way, and leave us as He found us?

These two, before we be: Two more, when we be sealed. For, when we have well and orderly received it; then doth it behove us, carefully to keep the signature from defacing or bruising: If we do not, but carry it so loosely, as if we cared not what became of it; and, where we are signati to be close and fast, suffer every trifling occasion to break us up; have our souls lie so open, as all manner of thoughts may pass and repass through them: Is not this a third? When one shall see a poor Country-man, how solicitous he is, if it be but a bond of no great value, to keep the seal fair and whole: But if it be of higher nature, as a Patent, then to have his box, and leaves and wool, and all care used, it take not the least hurt: And on the other side, on our parts, how light reckoning we make of the Holy Ghosts seal; vouchsafe it not that care, do not so much, for it, as he, for his Bond of five Nobles, the matter being of such consequence: This contempt, must it not amount to a grievance? Yes, and that to a grave gravamen, a grievous one. For this is even Margaritas porcis right.

But yet further: If having received this seal upon us, we so far forget our selves as we be brought, to let His amulus, the fiend, the evil spirit, (whom He can by no means endure) even to Super-signillare, set his mark over it, seal upon seal; put his print, with his image and Superscription, above and upon the HOLY GHOSTS: This is so foul a disgrace, as He can never brook it. And shall we once conceive, but, upon so bad usage as this, He will do, what men grieved use to do, say presently, migremus hinc, away, here is no place to stay, and so leave us, with our new image upon us?

Luk. 11. 26.

And if so, a worse matter, than all yet. For, He no sooner gone, but in His place another will come, and, as he hath sealed us, so seize on us: and, not alone neither, but company with Him, Seven more worse than Himself; and the end of that man, worse than His beginning, a thousand-fold. These they be then, these four: Not to offer these, is Non contristari.

But then, if our hap be so evil, as we do; yet that we remember, Nolite, do it not willingly: Have a will, not to do it. If we fall into any of the former four, 1 neglect to receive Him, when He cometh: 2 dispose not our selves, as we should, against He cometh: Happen to 3 bruise, or marre our seal: Yea 4 admit a sealing upon it (of the world upon God, the flesh upon the Spirit, prophane upon Holy:) yet let not our will be to it: At least, not our whole will; not our full consents. Let it but happen per accidens (as we say) either surprised with the violence, or wearied with the importunity of the temptation; or circumvented with the sleights of the Serpent: but ever carry voluntatem (if it may be,) or else (as in the Schools they call it) velleitatem de non contristando. A great matter depends on this: For, wisfully to do it, that is indeed, to grieve, if it be not more, even to work despite to the Spirit of Grace.

Heb. 10. 29.

Application to the time.

Now, to draw to an end. This request never comes so fit, as on this Day. For there is in the Text, a day of redeeming; and there is by like analogy, a Day of sealing. As that, CHRISTS: so this, the Holy Ghosts Day. Now, if the sealing-day be the Holy Ghosts; then, reciprocè, the Holy Ghosts Day, that is the Day of sealing. And this is the Holy Ghosts Day. And not only, for that originally so it was; but for that it is to be intended, ever, He will do His own chief work, upon His own chief Feast; and opus Diei, the days work, upon the Day it self. So that, now we are come about, to our first grievance, Not to refuse Him: not at any time; but not, at His own time; not then, when He sits in His office, and offers to set His seal on us.

Application to the Sacraments
2 Cor. 5. 5.

And, that, He now doth. For, when we turn our selves every way, we find not (in the Office of the Church) what this Seal should be, but the Sacrament; or what the print of it, but the grace there received, a means to make us, and a pledge, or earnest to assure us, that we are His.

Rom. 4. 12.

The outward seal should be a thing visible, to be shewed: And the Sacrament is the only visible part of Religion, and nothing subject to that sense, but it. This I find, that the School-men, when they numbred seven, those seven were the seven seals: So, for seals, they have been ever reputed. But what doubt we? One of them, is by the Apostle named a seal, in expresse terms: The seal of righteousness. And, if one, then the other: Both are of like nature. Only this difference between them (for which we have great cause, highly to magnifie the goodness of God:) That, where the one seal, (the seal of Baptism) can be set to but once, and never repeated more; this other should supply the defect thereof, as whereby, if we have not preserved the former figure entire and whole, we might be (as it were) new signed over again. And that, not once alone, and no more; but, that it should be iterable: whereby it cometh to pass, that of this sealing, there be many days; many days, to seal us well, and make us sure against that one Day, the Day of Redemption. Go to therein providing for our frailties. As indeed, without it, a great many of us, I know not how we should have done.

A seal of Redemption.

This then, is the Seal. I add further, that it may be rightly called, the seal of our Redemption, as whereby the means of our Redemption is applied unto us: the Body and the Blood, one broken, the other shed, of Him, whom God sealed to that end, even to redeem us.

Joh 6. 27.

And by, and with these, there is grace imparted to us; which grace is the very breath of this Holy Spirit, the true and express Char after of His seal, to the renewing in us, the image of God, whereunto we are created. And with grace, which serveth properly (pro tota substantia) to and for the whole substance of the soul, the two streams of it, one into the understanding part, the other into the seat of the affections. Into the understanding part, the assurance of faith and hope: Into the part affective, the renewing of charity, the offensive part of this seal, In quo cognoscunt omnes, by which all men may know, and sine quo cognoscet nemo, without it no man, that we are sealed aright, and are truly His. This grace we are thus to receive there: Only, that we ^areceive it not in vain: ^bbe not wanting to it, after: ^cneglect it not: ^dQuench it not: ^efall not from it: but ^fstand fast, and continue in it: Be careful to ^gstir it up: Yea, ^hto grow and increase in it, more and more, even to the consummation of it, which is glory. Glory, being nothing else, but grace consummate: the figure of this stamp, in His full perfection.

Resolve then, not to send Him away (on His own Day) and nothing done; but, to receive His Seal, and to dispose our selves, as pliable and fit to receive it. And, that shall we but evil do, may not at all, unless it please Him, to take us in hand, and to work us ready for it. To pray Him then, so to do, to give us hearts of wax, that will receive this impression: And, having received it, to give us careful minds withal, well to look to it, that it take as little harm, as our infirmity will permit. That so, we may keep our selves, from this unkind sin, of grieving Him, that hath been and is so good to us. Which, the God of mercy grant us, for His Son, and by His Spirit, to whom, &c.

Preached before the
KINGS MAJESTY,

At GREENWICH,
On the XII. of June, A. D. MDCXIV.
being WHITSUNDAY.

PSAL. LXVIII. Ver. XVIII.

Ascendisti in altum, &c.

*Thou art gone up on high; Thou hast led captivity captive, and received gifts for men: yea, even the rebellious hast Thou led, that the LORD GOD might dwell * there.*

* Or, for thine enemies.
* Or, among men.

HIS is CHRIST (the Prophet here speaketh to.) That He it is, the Apostle is our warrant (Ephes. 4. 8.) There, he applies it to CHRIST: Thou art gone up (saith the Prophet here) in the second person: He is gone up (saith the Apostle there, of Him) in the third.

TO CHRIST then: And to CHRIST gone up, or ascended: and therefore ascended, they be the last words of this Verse; that God, might dwell among us. Which cannot be applied to CHRIST Himself in person, for then, He was not to go up on high, from us: but to stay here still below with us. Therefore, GOD here, is GOD the HOLY GHOST: who this day, came down, after CHRIST was gone up, to be not only among us, but even in us, (saith our Saviour:) To be in us and abide with us for ever. So, the Text begins, with the ascending of CHRIST: and ends, with the descending of the Holy Ghost. And, that was upon this day: And so, we are come to CHRIST's hodie impleta est, This day is this Scripture fulfilled; the best application of every Text.

Joh. 14. 17, 16.

Luk. 4. 21.

The Summe.

Our books tell us, the Scripture will bear four senses: All four be in this, and a kind of ascent there is in them.

1.

First, after the letter, and in due consequence to the word immediately next before this (the last word of the Verse) which is, Sinai. It is a report of Moses's ascending thither. For, he, from the bottom of the red Sea, went up to the top of Sinai, leading with him the people of Israel, that long had been captive to Pharaoh: and there received gifts, the Law, the Priesthood (but above all) the Ark of the Covenant, to be the pledge of God's presence among them. This is the Litteral.

2.

2 Sam 6.

This of Moses, by analogy, doth King David apply to himself. To his going up to Mount Sion, and carrying the Ark up thither. For all agree, this Psalm was set, upon that occasion. The very beginning of it, [Let God arise, &c.] sheweth as much: The acclamation ever to be used, at the Ark's removing, as is is plain by Num. 10. ver. 35. Now, this was done immediately upon His conquest of the Jehusians: whom a little before he had taken Captives, and made tributaries there. What time also, for honor of the solemnity, doma dedit, he dealt bread and wine, to all the people, gift-wise (as we find 1 Chron. 15.) This is the Analogical: as Moses to Sinai, so David to Zion.

1 Sam. 8.
1 Chron. 16. 3

From these two, we arise to the Moral sense: thus. That, as whensoever God's people are carried captive, and made thrall to their enemies; as then, God seemeth to be put down and lie foiled for a time; that one may well say, Exurgat Deus to Him: So, when He takes their cause in hand, and works their deliverance, it may well be said, Ascendit in altum, He is gone up (as it were) to His high throne, or judgement-seat, there to give sentence for them. Ever, the Churches depressing is (as it were) God's own humiliation; and their deliverance (after a sort) His exaltation. For, then He hath the upper hand. And this is the Moral.

3.

Now from this we ascend to the Prophetical sense, to the testimony of Jesus which is the Spirit of all Prophecy. For, if in any Captivity (as of Egypt, of Babylon) God be said to be down: And, in any strange deliverance (such as those were) to be got up on high: in this of Christ, of all other, it is most pregnantly verified. That, the highest up-going; higher than Zion, or Sinai far: That, the most gracious Triumph, that ever was. When the Principalities and powers, that had carried, not Israel, but mankind, all mankind into captivity; they as Captives, were led before His Chariot: attended, as it is in the next verse before, with twenty thousands of Angels. What time also, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost were shed forth plentifully upon men; which was, this very day: and God, not by a wooden Ark, but by His own Spirit came to dwell among them.

Rev. 19. 10.

And, in this sense, the true Prophetical meaning of it, doth the Apostle deliver it to us; and we, to you. That, God, which ever and at all times, doth then, and at that time did most specially shew the valour of His victory, and the bounty of His triumph, when He went up on high, &c.

To put that in other order, which is it self, well ordered already, were but to confound it. The order, as it stands, is very exact. 1 Christ's ascending, first: 2 Then, the Manner. 3 And last, the end of it. 1 The Ascending, in these: Thou art gone up, &c. 2 The Manner, is triumph-wise; and that two ways: 1 Leading His Captives before Him: 2 Scattering His gifts about Him: 3 And then thirdly, all to the end, that God, by His Spirit (the true Ark of His presence indeed) might rest with us for ever. Or, you may (if you please) of these four, make two moities: and give the two former, to Christ's ascending; the two latter, to the Holy Ghost's ascending, in doma dedit hominibus; the peculiar of this Day.

The division,

I.
II.
III.

Thou art gone up, a Motion: and, on high, a Place. Christ, in His ascendent going up; Christ, on high, is a good sight. A better sight to see Him so, tanquam aquila in nubibus, than tanquam vermis in pulvere; an Eagle in the clouds, than a worm in the dust, as a great while we did. To see a cloud to receive him, than a gravestone to cover Him. Better leading Captivity, than Himself led Captive: Better, receiving gifts for men, than receiving wrong from them. Yet, it is strange, S. Paul (Eph. 4.) commenting upon this verse (wherein we shall often have recourse,) as we are looking at His going up on high, pulls us back, and tells us of His being here down below: In that he ascended, what is it (saith He) but that He descended first? A note, out of season, one would think. But, he best knew, what was proper and pertinent; and that is, that Christ's going up, is ascensus post descensum.

I.
Christ's ascending: The motion.
Act. 1. 9.

1 From whence;
Eph. 4. 9.

And this, as it is for His glory: (For, when one hath been down, then to get up, is twice to get up) Far more, for His glory, than if He never had been down. And, the lower He hath been down, the more glorious is His getting up. Bis vincit qui vultus vincit; being overcome, to overcome, is twice to overcome: For so, he overcomes his overcomers, (and that is a double victory) As, for His glory; so, for our good. For, His being above, before He was below, is nothing to us. But being below first, and then, that He went up, that is it we hold by. As the Son of God, he came down: As the son of man, he went up. If, as the son of man; there is hope, that the sons of men may do the like.

But, always remember, there must be a descent before. Ascendit Angelus, & factus est diabolus: Why? He never descended first, and therefore is now in the bottom of Hell. But, He that first descended, and ascended after, is now in the top of heaven. To teach us, this high top must have a deep root. He that is thus high now, was once low enough. We to be as he was, before we be as he is. Descending, by humility; condescending, by charity. For, he that so descends with Hum, he it is, and none other, that shall ascend up after Him. This is Saint Paul, upon Ascendisti, His Motion.

Now, will you hear him upon in altum, on high, the pitch of his motion? On high, is some what a doubtful term: if it be but to some high mountain (as they thought of Elias) it is on high, that. How high then? The Apostle takes the true altitude for us. Neither, to Sam, nor to Samai, set one upon the other, and put one upon the other, it is higher yet. So high (saith St. Luke) whither,

On high.
2 King. 2. 16.

Luke 19.
Ephes. 4. 10.

till a cloud came and took him out of their sight. And what became of him then? That the Apostle supplies: He came superius: super above, superius aloft: superius super superius superius superius above all the heavens, even the very highest of them.

Keeping just correspondence between his high, and his low. That, was ad ima terra, to the lowest parts of the earth, than which none lower, none beneath them. This was ad summa Cæli, the highest top of the heavens, than which none higher, none above them.

Psalms 57. 5.

So, Exurgat Deus, the first verse is not enough: that was but from the lower parts of the earth, to the upper parts of it. Ascendat in altum, Let him go up on high; set up thy self O Lord above the heavens; there is His right place. And so now, He is where he should be. This for in altum.

Acts 1. 11.

But, we must not stand taking altitudes: This is but the gaze of the Ascension. The Angels blamed the Apostles; that blame will fall upon us, if we make but a gaze of it. What is there in it, hominibus, for us men?

First, is He gone up on high? We may be sure then, all is done and dispatched here below. He would not hence re infecta, till his errand were done, He came for. All is dispatched: for look to the Text: He went not up till the battel fought, and the victory gotten. For the next point is, Captivity is led captive. So, no more for Him here to do: Consummatum est. And after it was consummatum est for us, no reason but it should be consummatus sum with Him also.

John 19. 30.
Luke 13. 32.

But though all be done here, all is not there; there above, whither He is gone. There is somewhat still to be done for us. We have our cause thereto be handled, and to be handled against a false and slanderous adversary (so Job found him.) By means of His being there on high, habemus Advocatum, (saith Saint John) we have an Advocate, will see it take no harm. And what were such an one worth in place where?

Job 1. 10.
1. 5.
1 John 2. 1.

But as our case is (for the most part) we rather stand in deed of a good High-Priest, to make intercession; than of a ready Advocate, to put in a plea for us. And he is there likewise to that end: on high within the sanctum sanctorum, as a faithful High-Priest, for ever to appear, and to make an atonement with God for our transgressions. Thus, there, all is well.

Heb. 2. 17.

But how shall we do here, if he be gone up on high from us? Not a whit worse: Ascendor cali, auxiliator, saith Moses, Deut. 33. 26. By being there, He is the better able to help us: to help us against our enemies. For, in that He is on high, He hath the vantage of the high ground; and so able to annoy them, to strike them down, and lay them flat (as Saint Paul found it:) yea, yea, to raine down fire and brimstone, storme and tempest upon them.

Acts 9. 4.
Psal. 11. 6.

1.
Verse 9.

To help us against our wants. Wants, both temporal; (for, from on high, He can send down a gracious raine upon his inheritance to refresh it:) and spiritual; for from on high He did send down the gifts and the graces of the spirit, the dona dedit of this Feast, and of this Text, both. Look to the Text. He is so gone up, that our enemies are His captives: we shall not need to fear, they can go no farther than their chain. And, though He be gone, dona dedit, He is ready to supply us, upon our need, with all gifts requisite. We shall not need to want: for, no good thing will he withhold from them, that have, Ascensiones in corde, that have their hearts upon Him and upon His ascension: that lift up their hearts to Him there.

6.

Psal. 27. 22.

There is yet one, and I keep that (for it shall be the last.) In that He is ascended into heaven, Heaven is to be ascended to: By the new and living way, that is prepared through the veil of His flesh, a passage there lieth thither. They talk of discoveries, and much ado is made of a new passage found out to this or that place: what say you to this discovery in altum, this passage into the land of the living? Sure, it passes all. And this discovery is here: and upon this discovery, there is begun a commerce, or trade of entercourse, between heaven and us. The commodities whereof, are these gifts: (we shall after deal with them) And a kind of agencie: Christ being there, for us; and the spirit here, for God; either Agent for other. It is the happiest news, this, that ever came to mankind. For, hominibus, for mankind it is, He is gone up: far, that is to be repeated to all three, and every of them and words 1 He is gone up on high, for men; 2 Led captivity captive, for men, 3 as well, as received gifts for men.

Heb. 6. 20.

Mica 2. 13.

Matth. 25. 23.

His going up then, is not all for Himself; some part (and that no small) for us. For, thither He is gone, ut præcursor noster (Heb. 6.) as our fore-runner or harbinger, Pandens iter ante nos (saith the Prophet Mica) To make way before us. To prepare a place, and to hold possession of it in our names (saith He Himself.) Till (say the Angels) as He was seen to go up, so shall he likewise be to come down again. Once more to descend (it is his last:) and upon it, His last ascending into His high Tribunal-seat; there, as our favourable Judge, to give us the Ite benedicti, the immediate warrant for our ascensions. And so he shall take our persons thither, where He now is in our person, that where he is, we may be there also. And thus much, for His going up on high.

II.
The manner of His ascending.
In Jubilee.
Psal. 47. 5.
In triumph.

Now, the Manner, how He went. Ascendit Dominus in iubilo, saith the XLVII. Psalm, a proper and peculiar Psalm for this day. For, this is the fiftieth day, and fifty is the number of Jubilees; we must look for a Jubilee ever at Pentecost. He went up in Jubilo. Now, to a Jubilee, there go two acts: 1 The releasing of prisoners, one. 2 And the new giving or granting estates gratis (dona dedit) the other. And both are here.

He went up in triumph, as a Roman victor up to the Capitol; as David, after his conquest, up to Sion: so He, to the Capitol in Heaven, to the Sion that is above, the high and holy places made without hands. Now, two actus triumphales there were: 1 One, Captives led bound before the Chariot: 2 The 1 The other, casting abroad of new coine; or (as they called them) missilia, among the multitude. And these two are in this. This the manner of his going up, like the Jemes Jubilee, like the Heathens triumph. 1 First then, of His valour in his victory, leading his Captivity. 2 Then, of His bounty in his triumph; dispersing His gifts.

Of the first. Here is a Captivity led in Triumph. A triumph is not but after a victory: nor a victory, but upon a battel: and (ever) a battel presupposeth hostility; and that, some quarrel, whereupon it grew. His Ascension is His triumph; His Resurrection His victory; His death His battel; His quarrel is about hominibus, about us men, for another captivity of ours, that had happened before this.

Leading captivity capt. v.

I ask then, what was this Captivity here? Of whom? when taken? when led? (For, taken it must be, before it can be led in triumph.) Some interpret it by Satan; say, it was by him, and the powers of darkness. Some other, that it was Adam and all his progeny: and so, we are in it too. And both say well: they and we are taken together. For, when they were taken Captives, we that then were in their hand and power, as captives to them, were taken together with them. So both were taken; and by CHRIST, both: but not both alike. Both were taken, but not both led. They were taken; and led: we are taken and let go. And not let go barely, but rewarded with gifts, as it is in the Verse. Both these are within the compasse of this Psalme.

To begin with this of the Verse; we find it more particularly set down, Col. 2. There, of the Principalities and powers of hell, it is said, Christ spoiled them, made a shew of them, triumphed over them in His own person.

Col. 2. 19.

With this: He had battel at His death, and then He seemed to lose the field. But, up again He got at His Resurrection: and then got the day, carried the victory clear. For so, as with a trumpeter, the Apostle soundeth the victory, Absorpta mors est in victoria, death is swallowed up in victory.

1 Cor. 15. 44.

But what was the quarrel? That, began about us, hominibus: (In every branch, we must take in that word:) for no other quarrel had He, but that these, whom He leads away captive here, had led us captive away before.

And the quarrel was just: for, we were His: twice his. 1 His once, by creation, the work of His hands. 2 His again now, by redemption, the price of His blood. He had no reason to lose that, was His quite. It stood not with His honour, to see them carried away without all recovery.

Psal. 138. 8.
Esa. 64. 8.
1 Cor. 6. 20.
1 Pet. 1. 18, 19.
Gen. 3. 6.
Rom. 7. 25.
1 Pet. 2. 17.
1 Pet. 2. 19.

But how came we captives? Look to Gen. 3. There we find Lex membrorum, (as Saint Paul callith it,) fleshy lusts (as Saint Peter,) a garrison that lieth in us, even in our loins, and fight against our souls. They surprised Adam (and, of whom one is overcome, his captive he is.) So was he led away captive, and in him all mankind. The effects whereof we see, at CHRIST'S coming. The spirit of error had (in a manner) setled on all the world. And, if Error had taken his thousand, sinne had his ten thousand (we may be sure:) And this was the first captivity, under the power of Satan. For, sinne and error are but leaders under him; take to his use: and so all mankind held captive of him at his pleasure. And, O the thralldom and misery, the poor soul is in, that is thus held and turned under the servitude of sinne and Satan! The Heathens pistrinum, the Turke gallies are nothing to it. If any have felt it, he can understand me, and from the deep of his heart will cry, Turne our captivity O Lord.

Psal. 116. 4.

Will ye then see this Captivity turned away, and those, that took us, taken themselves? Look to His resurrection. Agnus occisus est, is true; like a Lamb he died; but that was, respect had to His Father. To him, he was a Lamb in all meekness; to satisfy his justice, and to pay him the ranfome for us; and for our enlargement; whose prisoners justly we were. That paid, and justice satisfied, the hand-writing of the Law that was against us, was delivered him; and he cancelled it. Then had he good right to us. But death, and he that had the power of death, the Devil, for all that, would not let him go; but detained him still wrongfully. With them, the Lamb would do no good; so, he took the Lion. Died a Lamb, but rose a Lion, and took on like a Lion indeed; broke up the gates of death; and made the gates of brass flie in sunder: trod on the Serpents head and all to bruised it; came upon him, took from him his armour wherein he trusted, and divided his spoiles. (So it is in the Gospel: So, in this Psalme.) Till He had right, He had no might, was a Lamb. But, he had no sooner right, but he made his might appear; was a Lion: Et vicit Leo de tribu Juda. His right was seen in His death; his might, in his Resurrection.

Hosee 13.

Ye see them taken: Now, will ye see them led. Of this victory; this (here) is the triumph. And, if ye will see it more at large, ye may, in the Prophet Hosee 13. and out of him, in the Apostle (1 Cor. 15.) death led captive without His sting; Hell led, as one that had lost the victory: The strength of sinne, (the Law) rent, and fastened to His crosse, ensign-wise: The Serpents head bruised borne before him in triumph; as was Goliaths head by David returning from the victory. And, this was his triumph.

So then, upon the matter, here is a double captivity, a first and a second. 1. A first, and in it captivans; they, and captivata, we. 2. A second, and in it captivans, he, and captivata, they. They took us, and he took them. And this is the Jubilee; that he that was overcome, did overcome; and they that had overcome, were overcome themselves. That captivans is become captivata; and captivata, is brought out of Captivity, and set at liberty. For the leading of this Captivity, was the turning away of ours.

The five Kings, (Gen. XIV.) took Sodom, and carried Lot away prisoner: Comes me Abraham upon on them, takes the five Kings, and Lot in their hands; So Lot, and they (both) became Abrahams captives, The Amalekites (1 Sam. XXX.) took Ziklag, David's town, his wives, children, and all his people. David makes after them, takes Amalek, and with them, his own flock too: and so became master of both. So did the Sonne of Abraham, and the Sonne of David, in this captivity, here.

For all the world, as an English ship takes a Turkish Gallie, wherein are held many Christian captives at the oare. Both are taken, Turks, and Christians, both become prisoners to the English ship. The poor souls in the Gally, when they see the English ship hath got the upper hand, are glad (I dare say) so to be taken: they know, it will turn to their good, and in the end to their letting go. So was it with us, we were the children of this captivity. They to whom we were captives, were taken captive themselves, and we with them. So, both came into Christ's hands: They and we, his prisoners both. But with a great difference. For, they are carried in triumph, to their confusion (as we see) and after condemned to perpetual prison and torments. And we, by this new captivity, rid of our old, and restored to the liberty of the sonnes of God. So that, in very deed, this captivity fell out to prove our felicity: we had been quite undone, utterly perished, if we had not had the good hap, thus to become Christ's prisoners.

Rom. 8. 21.

It is not good (simply) to be taken captive: but thus, it is. For, felix captivitas capi in bonum: He is taken in a good hour, that is taken for so great a good. A happy captivity then, may we say: indeed, so happy, as no man can be happy, if he be not thus taken prisoner by Christ. It is the only way to enjoy true liberty. And this, for this great captivity here led.

Other inferior captivities there be, in this life, and those not lightly to be regarded neither: But, this of Mankind is the maine: the rest, all derived from this, and but pledges of it. We have lived to see, that Ascensor Cæli, was Auxiliator noster, and Dactor Captivitatis nostræ, even this way.

In LXXXVIII. the invincible Navie had swallowed us up quick, and made full accompt to have led us all into captivity. We saw them led, like a sort of poor captives round about this Isle, sunk and cast away, the most part of them, and the rest sent home again with shame. Eight years since, they that had vowed the ruine of us all; and, if that had been, the thralldom of this whole Land: they were led captives in the literal sense, (we saw them) and brought to a wretched end before our eyes. So, He, that here did, still can, and still doth lead captivity captive for the good of his. Take these as remembrances here below, but look up beyond these to our great captivity duxists here: And make this use of both, that we, both these wayes, being delivered, out of the hands of our enemies, and from the slavery of Satan, might serve him, whose service is perfect freedom, in righteousness and holiness before him, all the dayes of our life.

Luke 1. 74. 75.

And this for the first point of Ascendit in Júbilo, (a principal part whereof, was the releasing of captives.) And so much for the triumph of His victory: Now for the bouny of His Triumph. In that, His valour; valour in leading captivity: in this, His magnificence, magnificence in distributing gifts.

Scattering His gifts.

Acceptit dona. All this while there hath been nothing but going up: Here now, there is something coming down, even Love with his handful of gifts, to bestow them on us: which is the second part; even His largeness or bouny, as it were the running of the Conduits with Wine, or the calling abroad of His new come, among the lookers on, on this, the great and last day of the Feast, the conclusion or shutting up of His Triumph. This is the day of dona dedit in kind, and dona dedit, the high honour of this Feast. Always the height of His place, the glory of his triumph, makes Him not forget us, we see by this. He sends these for a token, that He is still mindful of us.

Four points there be in it. 1 Received, first: 2 Then, gifts: 3 Thirdly, for men: 4 And last, an enlargement of this last word men; for such men, as of all men, seemed least likely to get any of them, Even for His enemies.

Acceptit, Dedit.
* Ephes. 4. 8.

Received. The Prophet here saith, Dona accepit; the Apostle he saith, * dona dedit; and both true: Acceptit & dedit; for, accepit ut daret: He did give; what he received: for, He received to give. So, what He received with one hand, he gave with the other. For, He received not for Himself, but for others; Not, to keep, but, to part with them again. And part with them he did, witness this day, the day of the giving.

Joh 36. 17.

Received, from whom? Whosoever the party was, He received them from, he seems to stand well-affected to us. It is the Father. And we see, he said true of him, I go up to my Father, and to your Father; that is, yours as well as mine. Which appeareth, in his Fatherly goodnesse, ready to part with them to us; Yet, not immediately to us; but, by him, to us; that, seeing by whose hands they come, we might know, know and acknowledge both, for whose sake, both he giveth, and we receive them. We, of him: he, of his Father; but, for us, and for our use.

James 4. 6.

Received gifts. Alas poor captives! Never think of any; Tantum libera nos is all, they say. Free us only, and we desire no more. This one gift is enough, will richly content them, even the gift of liberty, we even now speak of. Enough for them; but, not enough, for him; The Scripture offereth greater grace. He will let them go, but not let them go away empty: send them away rewarded, and not with one gift, but plurally, dona; with many. So many, as in the next verse, he saith they be even laden with them. And, not give them again their former estate freely (the Júbilo of the Law;) but, a far a farre better than that was, even in Heaven, which is farre beyond the Laves, and is indeed the fubiler of the Gospel.

To speak of these gifts in particular, one hour-glasse will not serve, they be so many. To recapitulate Dona in Dono, all in one: It is the gift of gifts, the Gift of the Holy Ghost, the proper Gift or Missile of this day. O si scires Donum Dei (saith our Saviour of it) if we but knew this Gift! And God grant, we may know it (that is) that we may receive it; for then we shall, but otherwise we shall never know it: For, Nemo scit nisi qui acceperit; but he that receiveth it, no man knoweth it.

Joh. 4. 10

Rev. 2. 17

But, God it is, this Gift. The Text is direct: This giving is, to the end, God may dwell with us. That cannot be, if He that is given, were not God. So then, Man He carried up to Heaven: God He sent down to Earth: Our flesh is there, with G O D; His Spirit, here, with us. Felix captivitas, we said before; Felix cambium, may we now say: A happy captivity, that, a blessed exchange for us, this.

This is but one: it is expressed plurally; Dona, many: There be many in it. It is, as the Arke of the Covenant: the Arke was not empty, no more is this. The two Tables, that teach the heart; the hidden Manna, that feedeth the soul; the Censer, that periumeth all our prayers; the Rod, which makes us do (as it self did) of withered and dead, to revive and flourish again. Great variety of gifts there are in it, and all are feathers of the Dove mentioned in the Psalm (Ver. 14.) either the silver feathers of her wing; or the golden of her neck; For, all are from her. They are reduced all to two: 1. The gifts (1 Cor. 12.) 2. The Fruits (Gal. 5.) The gifts known by the terme gratis data: the fruits pertaining to gratum faciens. But the gratum faciens being to every man for himself: the gratis data, for the benefit of the Church in common: These latter are ever reckoned the proper, and most principal dona dedit of this day. And indeed, they are all in all. For, by them are the Siens planted, on which the other (the fruits) do grow.

Gal. 5. 22

And so it is. For, what were the true and proper gifts this day sent down, were they not a few tongues? And those tongues had heads, and those heads belonged to men, and those men were the Apostles. Upon the point, these gifts, in the end, will fall out to prove men: The gift ever leading us to the Office, and the office to the Persons, by whom it is born.

Acts 2. 31

In the place (Ephes. 4.) where the Apostle comments upon this Verse, and upon this word gifts: aske him, what the gifts be? He will tell us, Ipse dedit quosdam Apostolos, He gave some Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists: These were of the gifts. These three now are gone, their date is out. But, in the same period, He puts Pastors and Doctors too; and them we have full, and they are all the remains, that are now left, of the dona dedit, of this day. A point, I wish to be well thought on: that, for these gifts, this Feast is holden; that for these, we keep this high holy-day.

Ephes. 4

What, and are these such goodly gifts? Yea, the Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, we grant: For, we love to build Sepulchres, as well as the Pharisees: They must be dead, yet we esteeme them. O if we had lived in the Apostles dayes, we would have made other gates account of them, that we would. We know, how our Fathers then did; we would even have done the same. For those, we have left, it is daily heard and seen, how poor a rate we set on them. This we finde: The Apostles themselves, were fain to magnifie their own Apostleship, and to say: Well they hoped, the day would come, when their peoples faith were as it should be, that they also should be esteemed according to their measure; that is, better than they were. So that, they were undervalued. I will not say the same of these, which are all, that are now left of this dona dedit: that of these Holy-day gifts, there is but a working-day accompt. Yet, these are they, that daily do rescue men and women laden with sinnes, and so captives to Satan, from Satans captivity, and take them prisoners to Christ. These they, by whose means and ministry, are wrought in us those impressions of grace, which we call the fruits of the Spirit, the price whereof is above all worldly gifts whatsoever. And, if God dwell amongst us, these be they, by whose doctrine and exhortation we are edified, (that is) framed and reared up, a meet building for Him.

1 Cor. 10. 17

Truly, if we did but seriously think of Ipse dedit, who gave; of Spiritus Sanctus posuit, who placed them; Nay, if but of the Feast it self we hold; it would be better than it is, if not for theirs, for the very Feasts sake. For, why keep we it? For these dona dedit, plain. And how prize we them? I list not tell, how meanly. This I say then: Either esteeme them otherwise, or what do we keep it? Put down the Feast, wipe the day of Pentecost out of the Kalendar, keep it no more hardly. Never keep so high a feast, for so low a matter. But, if we will keep it, make better reckoning of Dona dedit hominibus, than hitherto we have, or presently we do.

Acts 2. 11

Now, the parties for whom all these: Hominibus. Ascendit, duxit, dedit, all for hominibus, for men. For men, He ascended up on high; For men, He led captivity; For men, He received these gifts. They, the cisterns into which all these three streames do flow. As God, of God, He received them; that, as Man, to man, He might deale them. I will tell you Saint Pauls note upon this word (and indeed, it is the only cause, for which He there bringeth in this verse:) The number, that it is, hominibus, not homini. To men, among them: To every one, some; Not to any one, all. For, no one man is hominibus, and hominibus it is, He deales them to. None, so complear, but he wants some none so bare left, that he wants all. A note (if well digested) which would cause this fastidious chiddaine to cease, we have one of another. The spoiles are divided to them of the household (Verse 12.) come not all to one mans hand:

Hominibus 3

Heb. 2. 4.

hand: They be utroque, (Heb. 2.) By proportion and measure, part and part. So that, any man, though he want this gift or that, have not all, if we have but some to do good, and do good with that some, need not be dismayed. He is within the verge of Christi bounty, of dona de- dit hominibus,

Etiam inimicis

The last, is the enlargement of his largesse of this clause in the Grant: for men; Yea, for some men; some special men (may some say) such as Abraham, and David, Gods friends: but not for His enemies; nor for such, as I. Yes: אֲפֹשְׁרִי even for His enemies; even for His Rebels (so is the nature of the word) even to them, this day, is He willing to part with His gifts. His enemies? why, the Devils themselves are no more, but so, but His enemies: what, for them? No: it is hominibus, etiam inimicis; It is not demonibus: So, they are out-cleare. But, for men, though His enemies, there is hope in this clause. And O the bountyfulness of God, that there is hope even for them, that He so farre enlargeth the gifts of His feast!

Luke 24. 47.

Will ye but hear his Commission given about this point? This it is: that remission of sinnes (the chief gift of all) in His Name, be proclaimed to all Nations, (And, all Nations then (in a manner) were within the Apostles Cum inimici essemus.) But, that is not it, but the last words that follow: that this Proclamation should be made, beginning at Jerusalem. At Jerusalem? why, there all the injuries were done Him, all the indignities offered Him, that could possibly be offered Him, that could possibly be offered by one enemy to another. Begin there?
why the stones were yet moist with His blood, so lately shed, so few dayes before, as scarce dry at the Proclamation-time. Well yet, there begin: this is etiam inimicis indeed. Enough, to shew, He would have His enemies should be the better for this day: festum charitatis, this right.

And now ye will see this put in execution? This very day, soo soone as ever these gifts were come, Saint Peter thus complains, that Holy and Just One, ye have bene the betrayers and murderers of Him: (that is inimicis (trow I) in the highest degree.) Well yet, repent and be baptized, and your sinnes (yea even that sinne also) shall be done away, and ye shall receive the gift of the HOLY GHOST. They, that had laid him full low, past ever ascending (as they thought) even they have their parts in His Ascension. They, that bound him as prisoner, He looses their captivity. They, that did damna dare to him, He doth dona dare to them. All to shew, Etiam inimicis is no more than the truth: and what would we more? Then let no man despise of his part in these gifts, or say I am shut out of the Grant: I have so, lived, so behaved my self, never dwell with God, I! Why, what art thou? A captive? Nay, art thou an enemy? Why, if de hominibus, etiam inimicis; if a man, though an enemy, this Scripture will reach him, if he put it not from him. The words are so plain: for men, yea though His very enemies.

Verse 1.

See then, what difference is between the two Feasts: The Resurrection (the first verse of the Psalm) Let God arise, and let his enemies be scattered; (that is) inimici demonis; or men, that put Him from them. But now, at this, Let God arise, and let his enemies (that were, and would not be) be gathered, and let those that hate him, (and now hate themselves for it) flee unto him. It is the Feast of Pentecost to day. This is the day for etiam inimicis: To day, He hath gifts even for them too. And thus much for the latter part, and so for the whole Triumph.

III.
The end, that God might dwell among men.

The end now, why all this. Hominibus, for men; that God may dwell among men. God, that is the whole Trinity, by this Person of it. Why? dwell He not among men before? He did.
I know not well, whether it may be called dwelling; but sure never so did before, as since these gifts came from Him.

Dwell, not visit.

Did not dwell (they call it visiting) then: went and came, and that was all. But, since, He came to settle Himself, to take His residence, not to visit any longer, but even to dwell among men.

Among men, at large.
Psal. 76. 1.
Gen. 9. 27.
Ephes. 4. 10.

Nor among men, before; but, among some men. He was cooped up (as it were) Nodus in Juda Deus, and there was all. Since, the fulnesse of the Gentiles is come in; aperit into Schems gentis All Nations, His neighbours are interested in Him and his Gifts, alike. Saint Paul upon this verse; He ascended; Ut impleret omnia. Impleret, His: omnia, ours. Filled with His gifts, He: full, all; that is, all the compasse of earth full of his fulnesse.

It is for love, εἰς ἀγάπην, for His love of men, that makes him desire thus to dwell with us.
This is evident; by this captivitas soluta, and these dona distributa; by this Captivity led (that is) by his fighting for it: by these gifts given (that is) by his bidding for it; that all this He doth, and all this He gave, and all for no other end but this: So as, quid requirit Domi- ni? on his part; quid retribuam Domino? on ours; all is but this, ut habiet nobiscum Deus, that the true Arke of his presence (his Holy Spirit) may finde a place of rest with us.

Our duty.
1 Chron. 6. 41.

What shall we do then? Shall we not yeeld to Him thus much; or rather, thus little? If he have a minde to dwell in us, shall we refuse Him? It will be for our benefit: we shall finde a good neighbour of him. Shall we not then say (as they did to the Arke) Arise O Lord into thy resting place.

But

But first, two things would be done. 1 The Place would be meet: 2 And the usage or entertainment according. For the Place, Never look about for a soile, where: The place, are we our selves. He must dwell in us, if ever He dwell among us. In us (I say) not beside us: שוכן is the word, and so it signifieth, Sic inter nos ut in nobis.

And if so, then Locus and Locatum would be suitable. A Dove He is: He will not come but ad secula candida, to no foul or sooty place. Ointment He is: poured He will not be, but into a clean, and sweet, not into a stinking or loathsome phial. To hold us to the word: God he is; and Holy is his title: So would his place be; an holy place; and, for God, a Temple. You know, who saith, Templum Dei estis vos: Know ye not, ye are the Temples of God, if He dwell in you?

But it is not the place (though never so commodious) makes one so willing to dwell, as doth the good usage, or respect of those, in the midst of whom it is. Hore will I dwell, for I have a delight (saith He.) It would be such, as to delight Him (if it might be:) but such, as at no hand to grieve Him. For then, He is gone again; Migremus hinc, straight, and we force Him to it. For, who would dwell, where He cannot dwell, but with continual grief?

And, what is there, will sooner grieve Him, and make Him to quit us, than discord or dis-union? Among divided men, or minds, He will not dwell. Not, but where unity and love is. In vaine, we talk of the Spirit without these. Aarons ointment, and the dew of Hermon (both types of Him) ye know what Psalme they belong to: It begins with habitate fratres in unum. It is in this Psalme before (verse 9.) where men are of one minde in an house, there He delights to be. This very day, they that received Him, were δυνάμει, with one accord, in one place. That δυνάμει, is the Adverb of the Feast. And the Apostle, in his comment on this verse: No better way (saith he) to preserve the unity of the Spirit (or the Spirit of Unity, choose you whether) than in the bond of peace. To say truth, who would be hired to dwell in Mesech, where nothing is but continual jarres and quarrels? Such places, such men, are even as torrida Zona, not habitable by the Spirit, by this Spirit. But for the other spirit, the spirit of division, they are: Ut habitet Daemon inter eos, a fit place for the Devil, to dwell among such. Think of this feriously, and set it down, that at Salem is his Tabernacle: and Salem is peace, and so the Fathers read it, In pace factus est locus Ejus. Make Him that place, and he will say, here is my rest, here will I dwell, for I have delight therein.

We said even now: to dwell among us, He must dwell in us: And, in us, He will dwell, if the fruits of His Spirit be found in us. And, of His fruits, the very first is Love. And the fruit is, as the tree is. For, He himself is love, the essential Love, and Love-knot of the undivided Trinity.

Now, to work love (the undoubted both signe and means of His dwelling) what better way, or how sooner wrought, than by the Sacrament of Love, at the Feast of love, upon the Feast-day of Love, when Love descended with both his hands full of gifts, for very love, to take up His dwelling with us?

You shall observe: there ever was, and will be, a near alliance, between His dona dedit hominibus, and His dona reliquit hominibus; The Gifts He sent, and the Gifts he left us. He left us the gifts of his body and blood. His body broken, and full of the characters of love, all over. His blood shed, every drop whereof is a great drop of love. To those which were sent, these which were left (love, joy, peace) have a special conatural reference, to breed and to maintain each other. His body, the Spirit of strength; his blood, the Spirit of comfort: both, the Spirit of Love.

This Spirit (we said) we are to procure, that it may abide with us, and be in us. And what is more intrinsecal in us, abideth surer, groweth faster to us, than what we eat and drink? Then, if we could get a spiritual meat, or get to drink of the Spirit, there were no way to that. And behold, here they be. For, here is spiritual meat, that is, breeding the Spirit, and here we are all made drink of one Spirit, that there may be but one spirit in us. And we are all made one bread, and one body, kneaded together, and pressed together into one (as the Symbols are, the bread and the wine,) So many as are partakers of one bread, and one cup, the bread of life, and the cup of blessing, the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ. And, in figure of this, even King David dealt these two (bread and wine) in a kinde of resemblance to ours, when the Arke was to be brought home, and seated among them; the Arke in type. And we to do the same, this day, when the Arke in truth did come, and will come to take up His rest in us.

Will ye now hear the end of all? By this means God shall dwell with us (the perfection of this life:) and He dwelling with us, we shall dwell with him (the last and highest perfection of the life to come.) For, with whom God dwelleth here, they shall dwell with him there, certainly. Grace He doth give, that he may dwell with us; and glory he will give, that we may dwell with him. So may he dwell, he wish us: so may we dwell, we wish him, eternally. So, the Text comes about round. It began with an ascension, and it ends with one: begun with Christi: ends with ours. He ascended, that God might dwell with us, that God dwelling with us, we might, in the end ascend and dwell with God. He went up on high, that the Spirit might come down to us below, and, that coming down, make us go the same way, and come to the same place, that he is. Sent him down to us, to bring us up to him.

Where, we shall no lesse truly than joyfully say: This is our rest for ever. To which rest, Ascensor cali, Ductor captivitatis, Largitor donorum, he that is gone up to heaven, the Leader of captivity, the Great Receiver, and Giver of these Gifts, vouchsafe to bring us: That, as this Feast is the period of all the Feasts of the year; So this Text, and the end of it, to dwell with God, may be the end of us all: of our desires, here, of our fruition there. LUKE Chap. III. Ver. XXI. XXII.

Now it came to passe, when all the people were baptized, and that Jesus also was baptized, and did pray, the heaven was opened :

And the Holy Ghost came down upon him, in a bodily shape like a Dove, and there was a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleased.

His is the feast of the HOLY GHOST: And here have we in the Text, a visible descending of the HOLY GHOST.

Another there was, besides this, Acts II. But this hath the vantage of it, three ways: 1 The worthinesse of the Person. Here it descends upon CHRIST, who alone is more worthy than all those there. 2 The priority of Time; This here was first, and that other, the HOLY GHOST but at the second hand. 3 The generality of the good: That other was proper but to one calling (of the Apostles) only. All are not Apostles; all are Christians. This of CHRIST'S concerns all Christians; and so the more general by far.

That it is of baptisme, is no whit impertinent neither; for this is the Feast of Baptisme. There were three thousand, this day baptized by the Apostles (the first Christians that ever were.) In memory of that Baptisme, the Church ever after held a solemne custome of Baptizing at this Feast. And many, all the year, reserved themselves till then; (those except, whom necessity did cause to make more haste.)

But, upon the point, both Baptismes fell upon this day. That, wherewith the Apostles themselves were baptized, of fire. And that, wherewith they baptized the people, of water. So that even this way, it is pertinent also.

To look into the Text, there is no man but at the first blush will conceive there is some great matter in hand. First, by the opening of heaven: for, that opens not, for a small purpose. Then, by the solemne presence of so great estates at it: for, here is the whole Trinity in person. The Sonne in the water, the Holy Ghost in the Dove, the Father in the voice. This was never so before, but once: Never but twice, in all, in all the Bible. Once in the Old Testament, and once in the New. In the Old, at the creation, the beginning of Genesis. There finde we GOD, and the Word with GOD creating, and the Spirit of God moving upon the face of the waters. And now here again, at CHRIST'S chriftening in the New.

The

The faces of the Cherubins are one toward the other: (that is) there is a mutual correspondence between these two. That was at the creation: this, a creation too; if any be in CHRIST, he is a new creature of this new creation. That was the Genesis, (that is) the generation of the World: this, the ἀναγεννησις (the Apostles word) that is, the regeneration, or spiritual new birth, whereby we be born againe the Sonnes of God. And better not born at all, than not so born againe.

This then, being every way as great; (indeed, the greater of the twain) meet it was, they all should present themselves at this; no less than at that; and every one have His part in it (as we see, they have.) All (I say:) seeing the Commission for Baptisme was to run in all their Names, and it self ever to be ministred accordingly.

To lay forth the members of the division: A double Baptisme we have here: Double for the Parties, and double for the Parts.

For the Parties; we have here two Parties. First the People. Then CHRIST.

For the Parts; we have here two parts. For this first (both of CHRIST and the People) was but Johns Baptisme, was but Baptismus fluminis (as they call it) water-baptisme. But, there is another part besides to be had, even Baptismus Flaminis, the Baptisme of the HOLY GHOST.

That second part is set down in a sequele of four:

1 For first, after Johns Baptisme, CHRIST prays. 2 Then, after His prayer, Heaven opens. 3 After heaven open, the HOLY GHOST descends. 4 Lastly, after His descent, comes the voice. And these four make up the other part, and both together a full Baptisme.

Of these then in order. 1. Of the Peoples Baptisme. 2. Of CHRISTs baptisme. CHRISTs by water, and then by the HOLY GHOST. In which, the four: 1 CHRISTs prayer, 2 Heaven open, 3 the Dove, and 4 the Voice.

It came to pass that when, &c. Two Baptismes we have here: 1 The Peoples first, 2 Then CHRISTs. How it should come to pass, the People should be baptized, we see good reason: but not how it should come to pass, that CHRIST also. The People, they came confessing their sinnes; and so needed the baptisme of repentance: so was Johns Baptisme. For, the People nor being βαπτίζονται, baptized, but (to use the Apostles word) καταβαπτίζονται, even souled over head and eares in their sins, in many foolish and noysome lusts, which drown men in perdition, Tanquam sus à volutabro, they had need to be washed from the wallow of their sin, they had long lien in.

And not only for their sinne: even their righteousness (take it at the best) even that, was not so clean, but it needs come to baptisme: Urpote stillantes quotidie super telam justitie, sanism concupiscentie (they be Pope Adrians own words:) As dropping every other while, upon the web of those few good works we do, such stuff, the Prophet resembles it to so homely a thing, as I list not tell you, what it is: but it is pannus menstruatus, english it who will. Reason then, for the People; And not only for sex populi, but even flos populi, to be baptized. It might well come to pass, that.

Yea reason, that even they, who of all the rest, seem least to need it, the Peoples children, ἀπὸ τῆς γενέσεως, the poor new-born babes. For, being conceived of unclean seed (Job) and, warmed in a sinful womb (David;) at their birth, polluted no less in sinne, than in their blood (Ezekiel;) there is not * Infans unius diei super terram (as the Seventy read it) not a child a day old, but needs baptismus lavacri, if it be but for baptismus uteri, the baptism of the Church, if it be but for the baptism it had in the womb. Let the people then be baptized in GODs name, good and bad, men and children and all.

Sed quid facitis Baptizantes Iesum? (As Bernard asks at His Circumcision, Quid facitis circumcidentes puerum hunc? What do you circumcising Him, in whom nothing superfluous? So here) What do you baptizing Him, in whom nothing unclean? What should He do being baptized? How comes that to pass? Go wash your spotted lambs and spare not: this Lamb is immaculate, hath not the least spot upon Him. Qui non fecit peccatum (it is Paul;) Qui non novit peccatum (it is Peter;) Neither did, nor knew sin: He hath none to repent of; what should He do at the baptism of repentance?

One might well ask, Why did not the Baptist repel Him finally? Not say: I have need to be baptized of thee, (that is) Thou hast no need to be baptized of me: that was too faint, that was not enough: But, Thou hast no need to be baptized at all. Yea, one might well ask the water (with the Psalmist;) why it fled not; and Jordan, why it was not driven back, at this Baptisme?

Yet CHRIST was baptized.
It may seem of very humility.
Joh. 13. 15.

Yet the Verse is plain; that, with the People, CHRIST also was baptized.

How came this to pass? Why baptized? Why with the People?

Was it this, though he needed it not, yet for exemplum dedi vobis, He would condescend to it, to give all a good example of humility, as He did at His Manducation, when He washed His Disciples feet?

Indeed, I must needs say, great Humility there was in it; as at His Circumcision, to take on Him the brand of a Malefactor: so here, to submit Himself to the washing proper to sinners only. Then again, not to take it alone, but to take it at the hands of one so far inferior to Him, as he reckoned not himself worthy to stoop and unloose His shoe-latchet. 3 Again, that not baptized only, but baptized with the People. Not, Saint John come and baptize Him, at home; but, with the multitude, the meanest of them: they, and He together. And when? Not upon a Day by Himself, but, when they. And where? not in a basin by Himself, but even in the Common River, with the rest of the mainy. When, and where, they; Then, and there, He.

This (sure) was great Humility; and to it we well might, and gladly we would ascribe it: but that, Himself will not let us so do. For when the Baptist strained courtesy at it, he bade, Let be, Thus it behoved, implere omnem justitiam. Justitiam (mark that:) No courtesy, but Justice, He makes a matter of justice of it; as if justice should not have been done (at least, not all Justice) if He had not been baptized.

Why, what justice had been broken? what piece of it, if He had not? To shew you, how this comes to pass; we are to consider CHRIST, as having two capacities (as they term them.) So are we to consider Him (the second Adam:) For so do we the first Adam: as a person of himself; and, as the Author of a Race, or Head of a Society. And, even so do we, CHRIST: Either as totum integrale, a person entire (they call it a body natural;) or, as pars Communitatis (which they call a body politic) in conjunction, and with reference to others: Which others are His Church; which Church is His body. They His body, and He their Head (so told us often, by the Apostle.) And, as by Himself considered, He is Unigenitus, the only begotten, hath never a brother: so, as together with the people, He is Primogenitus inter multos, the first begotten among many brethren.

To apply this to our purpose. Take CHRIST by Himself, as severed from us; and no reason in the world, to baptize Him. He needed it not. Needed it not? Nay, take Him so; Jordan had more need come to Him, than He to Jordan, to be cleansed. Lavit aquas Ipse, non aqua Ipsum, the waters were baptized by Him, they baptized Him not: He went into them, Ut aqua nos purgatura prius per Ipsum purgaremur (it is Epiphanius) that they which should cleanse us, might by Him first be cleansed. It is certain, so, He received no cleanness, no virtue; but virtue He gave, to Jordan, to the waters, to the Sacrament itself.

But then, take Him the other way, as in conjunction cum populo, they and He one body, and the case is altered. For, if He be cum populo, with them, as He be one of them; as He be, a part of a body with them (a principal Part I grant, yet a part though) reason would, He do as they do, part and part alike. Inasmuch (saith the Apostle) as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, He also took part with them. And so, inasmuch as they baptized, He also took such part as they, both went to baptism together. For (ut pars toti congrua) a kind of justice there is in it, they should so do.

But if we look a little further, then shall we find greater reason yet. A part He is; and parts there be, that in some case undertake for the whole; as the arm, to be let blood, for all the body. And it came to pass, that such a part He was; He undertook for us. For, in His baptism He puts us on; as we put Him on, in ours. Take Him then, not only as cum populo, but as pro populo; not only, as nobiscum, but as pro nobis: Put Him in the case, the Prophet doth, Posuit super Ipsum iniquitates omnium nostrarum, put upon Him the transgressions of us all: Put Him as the Apostle puts Him; Factus est peccatum pro nobis, make Him sinne, for us; put all our sinnes upon Him; and then, it will come to pass, He will need baptizing: He will need that, for me and thee, that for Himself He needed not, and baptism in that case, may well be ministered unto Him.

Nay then, as in another case the Prophet saith, that all Lebanon was little enough to find wood for a Sacrifice: So may we in this, that all Jordan is little enough to find water to His baptism. A whole River too little, in that case. For, being first baptized (as I may say) in so many millions of sins, of so many millions of sinners (in so foul a puddle;) well might He then be baptized, if it were but to wash away that His former foule baptism. Well might it come to pass then.

One only scruple remains: How Jordan or any water could do this; wash away sinne? To clear it shortly; the truth is, it could not. It is no water-work, without somewhat put to it, to help it scoure. But, nothing on Earth: Not, if you put to it Nitre, much Sope, Fullers earth, the herb borith (say the Prophets) all will not do; it will not off, so. Therefore, this of His in Jordan did not, could not do the feat, otherwise, than in the virtue of another to follow. For, after this was past, He shaketh of another baptism, He was to be baptized with. And that was it indeed: That, the fountain, that was opened to the house of Israel, for sin and for uncleanness: that was baptismus sanguinis. For, without blood, without the mixture of that, there is no doing away sin.

Specially, the speare: There, met the two streams of ^dwater and blood, the true Jordan, the bath or laver, wherein we are ^epurged from all our sinnes. No sinne of so deep a die, but this will command it, and fetch it out. This in Jordan, here, now, was but an undertaking of that, then; and in verue of that, doth all our water-baptisme work. And therefore, are we baptized into it: not into His water-baptisme, but into His Cross-baptisme; not into His baptism, but into His death. To take our leave of this point. This may be said: If it be Justice, that CHRIST come to baptism: much more, that the People. And how then comes it to pass, that there is such sacrilegious pride in some of the people, that (as if no such thing were) set so light by it as they do? and that, not Johns (as this was;) but CHRISTs own baptism? Before of this, if CHRIST did thus, to countenance and credit Johns baptism, because it was the ordinance of GOD: much more his mind is, to give countenance, and to have countenance given, to his own, which is GODs ordinance, of a far higher nature.

Our duty out of Christs baptism.

Chap. 7. 28.

And, if the LORD thought not much to come to the baptism of his servant: He will think much, if the servant come not to the baptism of his LORD. This of his then is but a lesson to us; to invite us thereto: and we to take it as the voice, that spake to S. Paul (Act. 22. 16.) Et nunc quid moraris? Surge, ablue peccata tua: And now, why stay you? why protract you the time? Up, wash away your sinnes, with all the speed you may. For, if when the people was baptized, CHRIST was so: much more strongly it holds; when CHRIST himself is so, that then, the people should and ought to be baptized.

NOW CHRIST is baptized. And no sooner is he so: but, he falls to his prayers, Indigentia mater orationis (we say) Want begets Prayer. Therefore, yet there wants somewhat. A part, and that a chief part of baptism is still behind.

The second part of Christs baptism.

There goes more to baptism, if it be as it should be, than baptismus fluminis: yea (I may boldly say) there goes more to it, if it be as it should, than baptismus sanguinis: Christ came in water and blood; not in water only, but in water and blood: that is not enough; except the Spirit also bear witness. So baptismus Flaminis is to come too. There is to be a Trinity beneath, 1 water, 2 blood, and 3 the Spirit, to answer to that above: but (the Spirit's baptism coming too) in the mouth of all three, all is made sure, all established thoroughly. This is it; he prays for as man.

1. Christs prayer for somewhat yet wanting.
1 Joh. 5. 6.
For the baptism of the Holy Ghost.
1 Joh. 5. 7. 8.
Deut. 19. 15.
The baptism of blood we are quit of.
Esay 63. 23.

For, the baptism of blood, that was due to every one of us (and each of us to have been baptized in his own blood; to have had three such immersions;) that, hath Christ quit us off. When he was asked by the Prophet, How his robes came so red? He sayes, He had been in the wine-press; but, there he had been, and that He had trod alone: Et vir de gentibus non fuit mecum, And not one of the people with him, none but he, there; in that: spares us, in that.

But the other two parts he sets down precisely to Nicodemus (and in him, to us all;) 1 Water, 2 and the Holy Ghost: Now, the Holy Ghost we yet lack. So doth S. Paul, baptized in the Sea; and in the Cloud: by the Sea, meaning the elementary part; by the Cloud, the celestial part of baptism. Now, that of the Cloud, we have not yet. So doth S. Peter; the doing away the soile of the flesh (that, Jordan can do) but that, wherewith the conscience (or soul) should be presented before GOD; that is still wanting. And the baptism of the body, is but the body of baptism; the soul of baptism, is the baptism of the soul. Of the soul, with the blood of Christ, by the hand of the Holy Ghost: as, of the body, with water, by the hand of the Baptist: without which, it is but a naked, a poor, and a dead element.

But not, either of water, or of the Holy Ghost.
Joh. 3. 5.
1 Cor. 10. 2.
2 Per. 3. 21.

S. Paul tells us (Col. 2.) that besides the Circumcision, that was the manufacture, there was another, made without hands: There is so, in baptism, besides the hand seen, that casts on the water; the vertue of the Holy Ghost is there, working without hands, what here was wrought.

Gal. 4. 9.

Col. 2. 11.

And for this, Christ prays: that then it might, might then, and might ever, be joynd to that of the water. Not in his baptism only, but in the peoples; and (as he afterwards enlarges his Prayer) in all others, that should ever after believe in his Name. That, what in his (here) was, in all theirs might be; what in this first, in all following; what in Christs, in all Christians: Heaven might open, the Holy Ghost come down, the Father be pleased to say over the same words, toties, quoties, so oft, as any Christian mans child is brought to his Baptisme. Christ hath Prayed, now.

CHRISTS prayer for the Holy Ghost.
Joh. 17. 10.

See the force of his Prayer. Before it, Heaven was mured up, no Dove to be seen, no voice to be heard, Altum silentium. But straight upon it (as if they had but waited the last word of his Prayer) all of them follow immediately.

2. The opening of heaven.
Chap. 4. 29.
Jam. 5. 18.
For the bringing down the much

Heaven opens first. For, if when the lower heaven was shut up three yeares, Elias was able with his Prayer to open it (it is our Saviour, in the next Chapter following) and bring down rain: The Prayer of Christ (who is more of might, than many such as Elias) shall it not be waters above

the heavens.
Joh. 7. 39.

much more of force, to enter the Heaven of heavens, the highest of them all, and to bring down thence, the waters above the heavens, even the heavenly graces of the Holy Spirit.

For so, when our Saviour cried (John 7.) If any be athirst, let him come to me, and I will give him of the waters of life: This (saith S. John) He spake of the Spirit. For, the Spirit and his graces are the very supercelestial water: one drop whereof, infused into the waters of Jordan, will give them an admirable power, to pierce even into the innermost parts of the soul: and to baptize it; (that is) not only take out the stains of it, and make it clean, but further give it a tincture, lustre, or gloss: for, so is baptism properly, of βαπτισμα, taken from the Dyers fat, and is a dying or giving a fresh colour, and not a bare washing only.

Always, the opening of heaven opens unto us, that no baptism without heaven open: and so, that baptism is de caelo, non ab hominibus, from heaven, not of men. So was it here: So is it to be holden for ever. 2. And from heaven: not clanculum (as Prometheus is said to get his fire) but ανορθωσια, orderly, by a fair door set open; in the view of much people: for, that all were present, saw the impression in the skie. Which door was not mured up again: For, we find it still open, Apoc. 4. and we find, that keyes were made, and given of it, after this. 3. And all this; that, there might not only be a passag: for these down: but for us up. For, heaven gate, ab hoc exemplo, doth ever open at baptism; in sign, he that new cometh from the Font, hath then right of entrance in thither. Then (I say) when by baptism he is cleansed: For before, Nihil inquinatum, Nothing defiled can enter there.

Out of heaven now open, somewhat is seen, and somewhat heard. 1 Seen: a Dove descend; the Apparition. 2 Heard; Tu es filius meus; the voice. Under one, the testimony Vifus & Vocis, of hearing and sight both: that, Sicut audivimus, sic & vidimus, that, as we see, we heare, and back againe, as we heare, see: which is, as much as can be, to make full faith.

1. The Apparition. Wherein the points are six: 1. The Holy Ghost.] First, that person: For, the Person, by whom CHRIST was conceived; by the same, it was most convenient, Christians should also be. But to go higher: The Person, that was Author of Genesis the generation, meetest to be Author likewise of regeneration. The same person, and in the same element: The element, whereof all were made, and wherewith all were destroyed after; that, with the same, all should be saved again: the water it self, now becoming the Ark; the drowning water, the saving Ark, as S. Peter noteth. That, as then by His moving on the waters, he put into them a life and heat to bring forth: so now, by his coming down upon them, he should impregnate them to a better birth. That, as his title is, the Lord and giver of life, he might be the Giver of true life (that is) eternal life: whereto this life of ours is but a passage or entry; and not otherwise, to be accounted of.

2. The Holy Ghost came down:] that is to say, in his sign or symbole, the Dove. Otherwise, the Spirit of God neither goes up, nor comes down: it is everywhere; beneath, as well as above: but (by a familiar phrase in Scripture) what the Dove did, that represented him; that, is he said, to do.

3. Came down upon Him:] which is a degree yet further, than in Genesis. There, he did but move or flutter over the waters (enough, for that effect, then:) here, he cometh nearer, lights and abides upon him: (which argues a greater work in hand.) And which argues too, a greater familiarity to grow, between the Spirit and our nature: For, a bird (we know) is familiar, when it doth so, light upon one, and stay too. But, all this he doth, not to make him to be ought; but to shew him only to be. Upon us when he comes, it is to confer something: Not so, upon him: from the first minute of his conception, he had the Spirit without measure. To confer nothing; only to declare, that this was He, that to Johns water-baptisme, should have power to add the Holy Ghost, and so make it his own for ever after.

4. Upon him in a bodily shape.] For, his coming being to bear witness to John, and to all, that this was he: Convenient it was, he should appear, and so have a bodily shape, to come into the face of the Court, and there to be seen, and taken notice of, as witnesses use to be. And one end it was, why his baptism was set, at the time when all the peoples was; that so, all the people might see, and so take notice of the Holy Ghost, and indeed of the whole Trinity.

5. What shape then? of what creature? All things quick in motion, as Angels, as the Wind (whereto he is elsewhere compared) are set forth with wings: the wings of the wind. Of one with wings then; as most apt, to express the swiftness of his operation, in all his works; but specially, in this. None of the other kind of creatures, though never so light of foot, can sufficiently set forth the quickness of his working. He goes not: he flies, he: Nescit tarda molimina; that he doth, he is not long in doing: therefore, in specie volatilis, in the shape of a thing flying.

6. And among those of that kind, in the shape of a Dove, as fittest for the purpose in hand. Not so much, for that it is noted to love the waters well (specially clear waters, as these now be, after Christ hath purified them;) That is not all: But indeed, special choice is made of it, to set forth to us the nature and properties of the Holy Ghost: which have many wayes resemblance with those of this creature.

And I will not go to Pliny for them, nor to any heathen Writer of them all. For the Word of God, the Word of God hath sufficient. To that, we will hold us.

There

There the first Dove we find, is Noah's Dove with the Olive-branch in her bill, a sign of peace, peace, which is the very first-fruits of the Spirit. It is Tertullian's note, this: That, as after the deluge (the world's baptism, as it were) the first messenger of peace, was the Dove: So is it here again just; after Christ's baptism, the deluge or drowning of that which indeed drowned the world (that is) of sinne, the very same apparition of the Dove, and with another manner of peace than that; but, with peace, in both.

2. Next have you David's Dove, for the colour: Pennis Columbae de-argenteae, with feathers silver-white: to note candor columbinus, white as a Dove, not speckled as a bird of divers colours. And (to the same effect) Solomon's Spouse, for the eye: three several times, there said to have, oculus columbarum, eyes single and direct as a Dove; not leering as a Fox, and looking divers ways: Oculos Columbinos, not Vulpinos.

3. Then Esay's Dove, for the voice: Gemebat ut Columba, in patience mourning; not in impatience murmuring or repining: For, carmen amatorium, her voice. And no other voice to be heard, from the first Church. Now, they are ashamed of that voice: it is not gemebat ut columba, but rugiebant ut ursi; to groyn they begin like Bears, but not mourn any more like Doves. No such voice to be heard now: that, put to silence.

4. At last our Saviour Christ's own, that is, innocent as Doves: harmless, both for bill and claw: not bloody or mischievous. Who ever heard of a Dove, that drew blood, or did any mischief to any?

Now, qualis species, talis Spiritus, such as the shape was, such is the Spirit: and these all four properties of it, in the Holy Ghost. 1 He a Spirit, that loves quodquodque men of one accord (as was seen this day.) 2 Et qui fugit fictum, cannot abide these new tricks, meer fictions indeed, feined by feined Christians; party propositions, half in the mouth, and half in the mind. 3 And when He speaketh, speaketh for us with sighs not to be expressed, such is His Love, and so earnest. 4 And hurts none: when he is a Dove (as here:) No nor, when he was fire; but innoxius ignis; even then.

2. Even as these in the Spirit, that came down: so the very same, in CHRIST, upon Whom He came down. The Spirit a Dove, and CHRIST a Lamb, like natur'd both; what the one, in the kind of Beasts; the other, in the kind of Fowles: that we may see, the Holy Ghost lighted right. Super quem? upon whom shall my Spirit rest? saith GOD in Esay: and he answers, super humilem, On the humble and meek. Humble and meek? Why, Discite a me; Learn both those of Me (saith CHRIST) For I am both, and a Master professed in them both. 1 The Spirit of the olive-branch (that is) peace, on Him: For ipse est pax nostra; He is our peace. 3 The Spirit that loves omni fitione carentes (that is) all that hate equivocations, on Him: For, never was there guile found in His mouth. 4 And lastly, the harmless Spirit, on Him: for, He was so, too; would not break a bruised reed (He) nor quench flax, though it did but smoke, Do no hurt at all.

3. Thirdly, what He is in himself: and what He is, on whom He descended: that, the very same, such for all the world, doth He make His Church, homogenea cum hominibus, like nature, like properties, per omnia. And, it is not so much (all this) to shew His nature, as to shew His operation: Not, what he found in CHRIST, as what he works in Christians: Qua anima animet, quos spiritus spirat, what soul He puts into them, what manner Spirit he makes them of: That he even endues them, with these qualities of the bird, whose shape he made choice of to present himself in. Qua specie, in him: shews quo spirant, in us. To wit, It makes them peaceable, to love singleness in meaning, speaking, and dealing, to suffer harm, but to do none.

Peace, sincerity, patience, and innocency, these be the silver-feathers of this Dove: They be virtues, and (which is more) virtutes baptismales, the very virtues of our baptism: No Christian, to be without them: to be found in all, where the humidum radicale of baptism, is not clean dried up.

The Holy Ghost is a Dove, and he makes CHRIST'S Spouse (the Church) a Dove: a term, so oft iterate in the Canonicles, and so much stood on, by S. Augustine and the Fathers, as they make no question, no Dove, no Church. Yea, let me add this: S. Peter, when the keys were promised, never but then, but then (I know not how) he is called by a new name, and never but there, Bar-jona, that is, Filius columbae. But so he must be, if ever he will have them. And his Successors, if they claim, by any other fowle; painted keys they may have, true keys they have none; For sure I am, Extra Columbam out of that Church, that is, such and so qualified, non est columba, there is no Holy Ghost; and so no remission of sinnes. For they go together, Receive the Holy Ghost; whose sinnes ye remit, they are remitted.

And, what shall we say then, to them, that will be Christians (that they will) and yet have nihil Columbae, nothing in them of the Dove; quit these qualities quite, neither bill, nor eye, nor voice, nor colour: what shall we say? This; that fesutes they may be: but Christians (sure) they be none. No Doves eyes; Fox-eyed they: Not silver-white feathers, but particoloured; No geminae Columbae, but rugosae Ursi: not the bill or foot of a Dove, but the beak and claws of a Vulture: No Spirit of the Olive-branch, but the spirit of the bramble, from whose root went out fire to set all the Forrest on a flame.

Ye may see, what they are, that even seek and do all, that in them lies, to chase away this Dove, the Holy Ghost. The dove (they tell us) that was, for the baby-Church; for them, to be humble, and meek, suffer and mourn, like a Dove: Now, as if with Montanus, they had yet, Paracletum album, another Holy Ghost to look for, in another shape, of another fashion quite, with other qualities; they hold, these be no qualities for Christians, now: Where indeed (they grant) for the baby-Christians: for the shree thousand thousand first Christians, this day; (poor men) they did all in simplicitate Cordis. And so, to Plinius time: harmless people they were (the Christians) as he writes, did no body hurt. And so, to Tertullian's, who tells us plainly, what hurt they could have done, and yet would do none. And so, all along the Primitive Churches time, even down to Gregory, who in any wise, would have no hand in any mans blood. But the Date of these meek and patient Christians is worne out; long since expired: and now, we must have Christians of a new edition, of another, a new fashion'd Holy Ghosts making; Gregory the seventh (Saint Gregory the seventh forsooth) who indeed, was the first, that instead of the dove, hatched this new misshapen Holy Ghost, and sent him into the world.

For, do they not begin to tell us in good earnest (and speak it in such assemblies and places, as we must take it for their Tenet) that they are simple men, that think, Christians were to continue so still: they were to be so, but for a time; till their beaks and talons were grown, till their strength was come to them, and they able to make their party good: and then, this dove here, might take her wings, flie whither she would, and take her ease: then, a new Holy Ghost to come down upon them, that would not take it, as the other did: but take arms, depose, deprive, blow up: instead of an Olive-branch, have a match-light, in her beak, or a bloody knife.

Pla. 55. 6.

As calling into question of this shape of a Dove.

Methinks, if this World go on, it will grow a question problematike, In what shape it was most convenient, for the Holy Ghost to have come down? Whether as he did, in the meek shape of a dove? Or whether, it had not been much better, he had come in some other shape, in the shape of the Roman Eagle, or some other fierce fowle, de vulturino genere.

Sure, one of the two they must do: either call us down a new fashion'd Holy Ghost, and institute us a new baptism (and if both these new; I see not, why not a new CHRIST too:) or else, make a strange Metamorphosis of the old; clap Him on a crooked beak, and slick him full of Eagles feathers, and force Him, to do contrary to that He was wont, and to that, his nature is.

1 Cor. 12. 4.

But lying men may change; may, and do; but the Holy Ghost is unus idemque Spiritus (saith the Apostle) changes not, casts not his bill, mouts not his feathers: His qualities at the first, do last still, and still shall last to the end, and no other notes of a true Christian, but they.

As concerning of this baptism.

1 Sam. 15. 23.

It is rather like to prove true, that Samuel long since said, Rebellion is as the sinne of witchcraft: For Witches (they say) begin, are initiated, with renouncing of their baptism. And sure, these prick preely towards it: For, (say what they will) they be in the way to it, when they plainly disclaim, and renounce his qualities, that was the Author of it. For these baptismal vertues, they, that take them away, do what in them lieth, to take away Holy Ghost, and baptism and all.

I know they will flie to the fire (of this day) and say, he came in another shape. True, but for another purpose. It was to make Apostles, that, not, Christians as this here. Christians are made in a cooler element. And, we have no Apostles to make now: GOD send us to make good Christians; yield no worse souls to GOD, than this Dove here did, so many hundred years together, till new Jesuits came up, and old Christians went down.

Acts 1. 4.

Acts 3. 2. 9.
Esay 59. 11.

But, give them their fire: it will do them small pleasure, it will not light them a match, nor give fire to their train. When it came (that) and did no hurt; It sate upon them all, but not so much as singled any one of them. Let them shew, this fire, ever blew up any. True, it gave them courage (they needed it, they were to undertake the whole world) but within bounds of modesty, still (we ought to obey GOD rather than man:) Not in laicy and trayterous terms, of old bats or rotten figs: non est vox columbae hac; ragitus urfi, rather.

Luke 9. 44. 15.
Gen. 8. 7.

In a word, this was none of Elia's fire: and you remember, they that harped upon that string, who said to them, You know not what Spirit you are of; Not, what shape appeared at your baptism: Not Noahs Raven, that delights in dead carcases; but his Dove. That shape came down upon Christ: the same, comes down upon all that are baptized, with His baptism; and are inspired, with the same Spirit, that He was. This for the apparition.

Now to the voice. Accedat verbum, ad elementum. The Dove was but a dumb shew, and shews, what is done in us: The Voice, that speaks plainly, and declares, what is done for us, in our baptism. The Dove, what the Spirit makes us. The Voice, from whom the Father takes us.

We saw CHRISTs humility before, in yielding to be baptized. This heaven oracle here, pronounced of Him, is in a sort, a reward of his former humility. There He was among a rabble of sinners, even in the midst of them. One that had seen Him so, would have taken Him, for none other. This Dove, and this voice from heaven, testifying so great things of Him (no sinner, no servant, but the very Son of GOD, His Love, His Joy, the In quo, for whom we all fare the better) this so honourable anology, makes full amends, for that. He lost nothing by his humility. No more did the Baptist, by his Non sum dignus neither. That hand, which he held not worthy to touch his shoe; was dignified, to touch His head, and to pour water on it. Thus they both of them fulfilled righteousness: and both of them had a glorious reward for it.

First the Holy Ghosts coming, then the voice.
Gen. 1. 3. 4.

The Voice, not for Christ, but for us.
Joh. 12. 30.

But first mark. Till the Spirit is come, the Voice comes not: all depends, on this dayes work (the Holy Ghosts coming.) He is the medius terminus: between Christ in Jordan, and the Father in heaven. He it is, that makes the Father speak, Tu (that is) Tu, super quem Spiritus, Tu es Filius. Thou (that is) Thou, on whom the Spirit in this shape comes down, Thou art my Son: that, to go before. So was it in Genesis: The Spirit moved upon the face of the waters, and then Et dixit Deus: but, no dixit Deus, before the Spirit be there first.

Then, that non propter Me vox ista (as Christ elsewhere saith) This voice came not for Him, but for us. Spoken to Him indeed; but, to Him, not in His own, but sustaining our persons. It were were fond, to imagine otherwise: that this Voice, or any of the rest, he needed for Himself. Either to have heaven opened to him: it was no time shut. Or the Holy Ghost sent down to him: as God, the Holy Ghost proceeded from Him; as Man, He proceeded from the Holy Ghost, they never parted company. Least of all the Voice, Tu es Filius: who knew not that? It was said, and sung, long before, in the Psalm, Thou art my Son. So, all were for us; Father, and all. Indeed, His whole Supremacy, is not so much His, as ours.

The meaning is, Thou (Christ) in their persons, art this: Thou art; and for thy sake, all that are in thee, all, that by baptism have put thee on, all and every of them, are to me, as thou thy self art: Filius dilecti, complacentes.

Will ye see what is in them? In Filius first.

1. Enemies we were, Rom. V. Now are we no enemies: but in league with Him, in the new league (or covenant) never to be altered, as the former was. 1 So may we be; and yet strangers still: Nay: no strangers, but naturalized now, and of the Commonwealth of Israel. And, this may we be too, and yet foreigners though, and no Citizens; without the Franchise: Yes, now enfranchised also, and Citizens with the Saints. Well, though of the City; not of the summit though: Yes, a Domestic Dear, of His very Household, now. Of His Household? So we may, and yet be but servants there: Nay, no servants now, but Sonnes, by virtue of this Tu es Filius. So many degrees do we pass, yet we come to this Filius. Go forward now. All sinners are not degraded, Cham was not; Sonnes and beloved Sonnes, a new degree, a sixth. 7 And yet again, all we love, we take not pleasure in. Even beloved Sonnes, offend sometime, and so please not. The Father (in the XV. Chapter after) loved his wilde riotous sonne, but too well; yet, small pleasure took he, in him, or his courses. But Complacitum est (the seventh) that makes up all: a son, a beloved son, his Fathers delight and joy; there is no degree higher. And such are we, by baptism, made to God in Christ, through the renewing of the Holy Ghost.

Filius. This is a new Tenour now; the old stile is altered. The Voice, that came last from heaven before, ran thus; Ego sum DOMINUS, and that inferres, Tu es Servus (that is the best, that can be made of it.) But here now, it is Tu es Filius, and that necessarily inferres, Ego sum Pater: For hac vox Patrem sonat, this is a Fathers voice to his Childe. A great Change: Even from the state of servants (as by creation and generation we were; and so still, under the law) into the state of Sonnes, as now we are, being new Creatures in Christ, regenerate and translated into the state of Grace, wherein we stand.

And not only a great Change, but a great Rise also. At the first, we were but washed from our sinnes, (there was all:) but here, from a baptized sinner, to an adopted Sonne, is a great ascent. He came not down, so low; but we go up, as high for it. For, if Sonnes, then Heires (saith the Apostle) so goes the tenour in heaven: Heires and joynt heires of heaven, with Christ (that is) for the possession and fruit of it, full every way as Himself; and this He brings us to, before He leaves us.

We speak much of adoption: would you know, when it was, where, and by what words? Why, now; Here it is: These, the very adopting words; by them, the act of adoption, actually executed. This, the very Feast of Adoption. A feast therefore, to be held in high account with us; as high as we hold this, (to be the adopted children of God.)

But we must remember, not only that we are, but in quo, all this: to whom we owe it all (that is) to Christ (the natural Son.) In Him it is, and out of Him, it proceeds to come to us.

The Fathers do ponder this (In quo) to good purpose: that is not, Qui placet, who pleases me well, or (which is all one) With whom, I am well pleased: (yet so He might have said) but In whom. And, that is more, than both. Who pleases me, or With whom I am pleased, goeth no further than himself, His own person: But, In whom (that is) for whose sake, with others. To whom, I bear such favour, as not only Himself pleaseth me: but in Him, and for Him, others please me also.

Again: If it had been Qui, it had shewed, but what, by nature He is: But this In quo, sheweth to what end; He was sent; to be, the In quo, to bring all this about; Even, that in Him (the Sonne beloved, and well pleasing:) we, that neither were sonnes, but servants, (and those but bad ones neither:) Nor beloved, but full unlovely: and in whom no pleasure at all, displeasure rather: that, in Him we might be received to grace, and made by adoption, what He Himself is.

The In quo, what we are in Him, we best conceive, by the fine quo, what we are without Him. For fine quo, but that He, with the People; none of all these, had come to them. Heaven shut still: no Dove seen: No Tu es Filius ever heard: we had rotted away in our sinnes without Baptism: the evil spirit had seized on us, instead of the Holy Ghost: No Sonnes, but cast out, with the evil servant, into utter darkness.

But In quo, God so highly well pleased with Him, as, at the very contemplation of Him, but turning to Him, and beholding Him, He layes down all His displeasure, and is pleased to accept us, and our poor and weak obedience; and further, to be so pleased with it, as even to reward it also, In quo complacitum est.

Complacitum est; and here Baptism leaves us, and would God, there we might hold us; and it might never be, but complacitum est. But, when we fall into sin, specially some kind of sin, we put it in hazard:

hazard: for He is not: He cannot then, be well pleased with us. How then? His favor we may not finally lose; and, to baptism we may not come again. To keep this Text in life: Complacitum est, It hath pleased the Holy Ghost, as He applied Christ's blood to us in baptism, one way: so out of it, to apply it to us, another way: as it were, in supplement of baptism. In one verse, they be both set down, by the Apostle, In uno Spiritu baptizati, In uno Spiritu potati. And whom He receiveth so to His Table, to eat and to drink with Him, (and every one that is well prepared, He so receiveth) with them, He is well pleased again, certainly. On this day of the Spirit, every benefit of the Spirit is set forth and offered us, and we shall please Him well, in making benefit of all. Specially of this, the only means, to renew His complacency, and to restore us thither, where our baptism left us.

I end; only this: This voice, it came once more. Two several times, it came: 1. Once here at His baptism: 2. and again, after, at His transfiguration in the Mount: Where He was not only said to be, but then and there, shewed to be, in glory, as the Son of God indeed; His face like the Sunne, His rayment like the lightning. And both of these, pertain to us likewise: the first is spoken of us: when by baptism we are received into Him, for the possibility and hope, we have of it, thereby: But time will come, when this second shall be spoken, and verified of us, likewise. What time, He shall change our vile bodies, and make them like to His glorious body, as then it was, and as now it is: the heaven shall open, and He receive both them, and us, to eternal bliss: where we in Him, and He in us, shall have a perfect complacency for ever, &c.

JOHN Chap. XX. Ver. XXII.

Hæc cum dixisset, insufflavit; & dixit eis: Accipite SPIRITUM SANCTUM.

And when He had said that, he breathed on them; and said unto them: Receive the HOLY GHOST.

VER, as upon this day, somewhat we are to speak of the HOLY GHOST, and of His coming. And this also, here, is a coming of the HOLY GHOST. And, not a coming only, but a coming in a Type, or form, by the sense to be perceived. And so, suits well with the coming of this Day. For, so, this Day He came.

Three such comings there were in all. Once did our Saviour receive the HOLY GHOST, and twice did He give it. Give it on earth in the Text, and after, from heaven, on the day. So, three in all. At CHRIST'S Baptisme, it came upon him, in the shape of a Dove (Luke III.) At this Feast, it came upon His Apostles, in the likeness of tongues of fire (Acts II.) And here now, in this, comes breath-wise, having breath for the Symbolum to represent it. The tongues have been heard speak: the Dove hath had his flight: And now this, third of breath falleth to be treated of.

It is the middle (this) of the three. That of Baptisme went before it: That serves to make Christians. This of breath comes after it: This serves to make them (as I may say) Christian-makers: such, whose ministry CHRIST would use, to make Christians: make them; and keep them: make them so, by baptism, and keep them so, by the power of the keys, here given them (in the next words) for the remission of sins.

And as it follows well after that of baptism, So it goes well before the other of tongues: For, first there must be breath, before there be tongues, wherewith the speech is to be framed. The tongue, but fashion the breath into certain sounds, which without breath they cannot, and when that fails, their office is at an end. So, first breath; then, tongues. And another reason yet. It is said in the VII. Chapter, the Spirit was not to be given them till CHRIST was glorified: and glorified He was in part, at His Resurrection. Then therefore given in part, as here we see. But much more glorious, after, by His Ascension: Given therefore then, in full measure. Here, but a breath; there, a mighty winde. Here, but afflatus, breathed in; there, effusus, poured out: The Spirit proceeding gradually. For, by degrees they were brought on, went through them all, all three. Baptized, and so made Christians: breathed into, and so made what we are, had the tongues set on them, and so made Apostles properly so called.

But three things may be said of this here 21: That, of all the three comings (first) it is the most proper. For, most kindly it is for the Spirit, to be inspired; to come, per modum spirationis, in manner of breath: inasmuch as it hath the name a spirando; and is (indeed) it self, flamen the very breath (as it were) proceeding a Patre filioque. So, one breath by another.

2 Then, the most effectual it is. For, in both the other (the Dove, and the tongues) the Spirit did but come, but light upon them. In this, it comes (not upon them, but) even into them, intrinsically. It is insufflavir, it went into their inward parts, and so made them in deed monstris men inspired by GOD, and that within.

3. And last, it is of the greatest use. Both the other were but for once, Baptisme, but once for every one: the tongues but once, for all. This is toties quoties; so oft as we sin (and that is oft enough) we need it: look how oft that, so oft have we use of this breath here breathed (as the next verse sheweth) for peccata remiseritis, the remission of sins.

The Sum.

Now, what is here to do, what business is in hand, we cannot but know, if ever we have been at the giving of Holy Orders. For, by these words are they given, Receive the Holy Ghost: whose sins ye remit, &c. were, to them; and are, to us, even to this day, by these and by no other words. Which words, had not the Church of Rome retained in their ordinations, it might well have been doubted (for all their Accipe potestatem sacrificandi pro vivis & mortuis) whether they had any Priests at all, or no. But, as GOD would, they retained them, and so saved themselves. For, these are the very operative words, for the conferring this power, for the performing of this act.

Which act is here performed, somewhat after the manner of a Sacrament. For here is an outward Ceremony (of breathing) inftar elementis; and here is a Word coming to it, receive ye the Holy Ghost. That some have therefore yielded to give that name or title to Holy Orders. As (indeed) the word [Sacrament] hath been sometime drawn out wider, and so Orders taken in: and other some, plucked in narrower, and so they left out, as it hath pleased both the old and the later Writers. And, if the Grace here given had been gratum faciens (as, in a Sacrament, it should:) and not (as it is) gratis data, but in office or function: And again, if the outward Ceremony of breathing had not been changed (as it hath plainly) it had been somewhat. But, being changed after into laying on of hands, it may well be questioned. For we all agree, there is no Sacrament but of CHRIST'S own institution: And that, neither matter nor form, He hath instituted, may be changed.

The division.

I.

Yet two parts there be evidently: 1 Insufflavir; and 2 Dixit: 1 He breathed, and 2 He said: Of these two then, first jointly, and then severally. From them jointly, two points. Of the God-head of our SAVIOUR first: and then, of the proceeding of the Holy Ghost from Him.

II.

Then severally. First insufflavir: And in it three points: 1. Of the breath, and, the symbolizing of it with the Holy Ghost: 2. Secondly, of the parties: ^a He that breathed, Christ: ^b They, that breathed into, the Apostles. 3. And last, of the act it self: ^a insufflavir, breathing, ^b insufflat, breathing into them. After of dixit, the Word said: 1 Accipite, of the receiving. 2 Then, of the thing received, which is ^a Spiritus, the Spirit. ^b And not every, or any spirit, but Sanctum the Holy Ghost. ^c And (because that may be received many ways) which way of them, it is here received.

I.
Of the two parts jointly.
1 The Godhead of Christ:
Dixit.

WE proceed first jointly out of both, and begin with matter of faith. Two Articles of it: 1 The God-head of CHRIST; 2 the Proceeding of the Holy Ghost from the second Person.

The first, rising out of the two main parts: For, as insufflavir argues His Manhood: So, dixit doth His Godhead: His saying, Receive the Holy Ghost: For, hec vox hominem non sonat: No man, of himself, can so say, Verus, Homo, qui spirare; True Man, by His breathing. Verus Deus, qui Spiritum donare: True GOD, by his bidding them take, and so giving them the Holy Ghost. To give that gift, to breath such a breath, is beyond the power of men, or Angels: Is more, than any can do, save GOD only.

For, that we say them also, in our Ordering; the case is far different. We say them not, as in our own, but as in His Person. We bid them, from him receive it; not, from our selves. This point will again fall in afterwards.

1 The proceeding of the Holy Ghost.

Next, we argue for the Holy Ghost proceeding from Him; and that evidently. For, as He gave of His breath: so did He of the Spirit. The breath, from His humanity: the Spirit from His Deity. The breath into their bodies: the spirit, into their souls. The outward act teaches visibly without, what is invisibly done within.

Luke 3:22.

Thrice was the Holy Ghost sent, and in three forms, 1 of a Dove, 2 of breath: 3 of Cloven Tongues. From the Father, as a Dove, from the Son, as breath, from both, as Cloven Tongues. The very cleft shewing, they came, from two. At Christ's Baptisme, the Father sent Him from heaven, in shape of a dove. So, from the Father he proceedeth. After (at his rising here) CHRIST, by a breath, sends Him into the Apostles. So, from the Son he proceedeth. After, being received up into the glory of his Father, he, together with the Father, the Father and he both, sent Him this day down, in tongues of fire. So, from both, he proceedeth. Proceeding from the Father totidem verbis (Chap. 15. 26.) And proceeding (here) from the Son, ad oculum, really. Not, in words only: we may believe our eyes: we see him so proceed. Enough, to clear the joint, a Patre filioque.

Acts 1:3.

This

This proceeding, as it holds each other-where, so specially, in this of quorum remisistis, the remission of sinnes, for which, it is here given. For, in that, of all other, the Holy Ghost proceeds from CHRIST, most properly. For, inasmuch as the remission of sinnes came from and by CHRIST, very meet it was, He should have the dispensing of His own benefit; and the Remitter of sinnes, proceed from Him also. One, by the blood out of His veines; The other, by the Spirit out of his arteries; and He, as bleed the one, so breath the other. He, that should seale the acquittance, from Him that laid down the money. That (howsoever in other respects, in this sure) from Him and none but Him, the Holy Ghost to proceed.

With referenced to quorum remisistis.

Proceed: and proceed by way of Breath, rather than any other way: that, to be the ceremonie, or symbolum, of it.

I proceed now to the second Combination, of breath, and the HOLY GHOST. It is required in a signe, that choice be made of such a one (as near as may be) as may best sute and serve to expresse that, is conferred by it. Now, no earthly thing comes so near, hath such alliance, is so like, so proper for it, as the breath. I make two stands of it: 1 Breath and the Spirit: 2 CHRISTs breath and the Holy Spirit.

It. Of the parts severally.
1. Of insufflation: The breath.

First, breath is aire; and aire, the most subtile and (as I may say) the most bodilesse body that is, approaching nearest to the nature of a spirit, which is quite devoid of all corporiety. So, in that, it sutes well.

1. The Symbolizing of breath with the spirit.

But we have all, save only the two peculiars of the HOLY GHOST set down in the Nicene Creed. 1 One, the Lord and giver of life; 2 the other, who spake by the Prophets.

For first, the Spirit giveth life: and breath is the immediate next means subordinate to the Spirit, for the giving it: for the giving it, and for the keeping it, both Giving; for the first, GOD breathed into Adam, spiraculum vite, and straight factus est in animam viventem, he became a living soul. Keeping, for, if the breath go away, away goes the life too: both come, both go together.

Gen. 2. 7.

And as the Spirit it is, that quickneth: so, it is the Spirit, that speaketh, evidently. Dead men be dumb; all. And, the same breath, that is organum vite, is organum vocis, too. That, we live by, we speak by also. For, what is the voice, but verbum spiritu vestitum, the inward word (or concept) clothed with breath or aire, and so presented to the sense of hearing? So vehiculum Spiritus it is in both.

2. Of Christ's breath with the Holy Ghost.

And, as the breath, and the Spirit: So CHRISTs breath, and the Holy Spirit. Accipite Spiritum gives to man the life of nature: Accipite Spiritum Sanctum to the Christian man the life of grace.

And the speech of grace too. For, this breath of CHRIST was it, by which the cloven tongues (after) had their utterance. He spake by the Prophets: and the Apostles, they were but as Trumpets, or Pneumatical Wind-instruments; they were to be winded. Without breath they could not; no breath on earth able so to wind, that their sound might go into all lands, be heard to the uttermost parts of the earth. None but CHRISTs, so farre; So, that was to be given them. This breath hath in it (you see) to make a good Symbole for the Spirit: And CHRISTs breath, for the Holy Spirit.

Rom. 10. 18.

It may be, at large, all this: but, how, for the purpose, it is here given for (remission of sinnes?) What hath breath to do with sinne? Not nothing. For, if you be advised, per asslatum spiritus nequam it came; by an evil breath: and per sufflatum Spiritus Sancti, it must be had away. The breathing, the pestilent breath of the Serpent, that blew upon our first parents, infected, poysoned them at the first: CHRISTs breath entring, cures it: and (as ever his manner is) by the same way it was taken, cures it, breath by breath.

For the better conceiving of the manner, how; Ye may call to minde that the Scriptures speak of sinne sometime, as of a frost: otherwhile, as of a mist, or fog that men are lost in, to be dissolved and so blown away. For, as there be two proceedings in the wind, and according to them, two powers (observed by Elihu, Job 37.) forth of the South, a wind to melt and dissolve: out of the North, a wind to dispel and drive away. And, as in the wind of our breath, there is status, a blast, which is a colour, and which blows away: and halitus, a breath, that is warme, and by the temperate, moist heat, dissolves: Answerable to these, there is in this breath of CHRIST, a double power conferred; and both, for the remission of sinnes: and that, in two senses, set down by Saint John: 1 The one of Ne peccetis, astringent, to keep men from sinne, and so remissio peccandi: 2 The other Siquis autem peccaverit: but if any do sinne, to loose men from it, and so remissio peccati. Shewing them the way, and ayding them with the means to clear their conscience of it (being done,) remitting that is past, making the more remisse, that is to come: As it were to resolve the frost first, and turne it into a vapour: and, after it is so, then to blow it away.

Esay 44. 33.

Job 37. 9.

And, other reasons there be assigned (why thus, in breath) apt and good: 1 One, to shew the absolute necessity, the great need we have of this Power: how evil we may be without it: As evil as we can be without our breath, so evil can we be without a means for the remission of our sinnes; ὡς ἂν ὁ ἀνθρώπος χωρὶς ἀέρος. It is Saint Basil. The Christian man he lives not by the aire that he breaths, more than he doth by it. Our own breath not more needful, than this breath of Christs: His loving kindnesse in it, better than the life it self, and we no longer to draw our breath, than to give Him thanks for it. This for the necessity.

cells (which some would think perhaps, more meet) to carry all before it. They know not the Holy Ghost, that so think: they remember not the Dove. Violence, in his work, He could never skill of; His course had ever been otherwise. And, not his only, but theirs, whom he proceeds from.

1 King. 19. 11.
12. Let them but go to Elias's vision, and inform themselves of this point. There came first a boisterous whirl-wind such an one, as they wish for) but no GOD there. After it, a ratling earth-quake: And after it, crackling flashes of fire: GOD was in none of them all. Then came a soft still voice: There comes GOD. GOD was in it; and by it, you may know where to find Him.

Psal. 72. 6. And as GOD, so CHRIST: How comes He? He shall come down like the dew in a fleece of wool; and that is scarce to be heard. He, He shall not roar nor cry, nor his voice be heard out in-Esay 42. 2. to the street. How unlike them, and their Novices, that will needs bear his Name!

And how the Holy Ghost comes here, we see. None of all the three persons, but in gentle mild manner.

It is against them (this) that take delight in these blustering Spirits, and think them the only men; cannot skill of another. No river they, but the great Euphrates, that runs with a huge noise. The Esay 8. 6. waters of Silo, run too soft for them. Well, the waters of Silo (though) the Prophets commend to us: and to them Christ sends us, and it is they, when all is done, whose streames shall make glad the City of Psal. 64. 4. GOD. This is sure; no spiritual grace is ever so truly wrought by these spirits, that take so on, till they be out of breath. The aire they beat, the heart they pierce not. The quiet calme breath shall

Ecd. 7. 8. do it to better purpose, than these that crackle like thornes under a pot. This breath will thither, to the heart directly: and sin, never so kindly dissolved, as by audiui vocem in silentio (that way.) Tell

Job 4. 16. me not of the mighty winds and the fire; that, was for Apostles. We are none; three degrees lower. And that wind they used very seldom (though:) once or twice perhaps: but, this they used continually. I report me to their Acts, and to their Epistles. For, the wind comes but at times; but, the breath is continually at all times. And this is sure, when the mighty wind and the fire came, it may be, Saint Peter used it once or twice, and Saint Paul as oft: but, this of the breath, they used more, nay most of all, and by it did more good, than by the other.

For as for this, let it not trouble you, that it is but breath; and breath, but aire, and so (one would think) too feeble. (As indeed what feebler thing is there in man, than it?) the more feeble, the more fit to manifest His strength by. For, as weak in appearance as it is, by it were great things brought to passe. By this puffe of breath, was the world blown round about. About came the Philosophers, the Orators, the Emperors. Away went the mist of error, down went the Idols, and their Temples, before it.

2. Which gives us a good passage from the Breath to the Breather, Him that is the Nominative case to insufflavir. For, we are not to look to the breath altogether, but somewhat too, from whose mouth it comes, whose breath it is. And Christ's it is. He it is, that gives the vigour and vertue to it. The touch of His finger, the breath of His mouth, verue goes from it, sinne cannot stand fore it, it sends it going, blows it away like a little dust.

Take this with you too. It is not CHRIST's breath, any breath of his, but his breath now, after his rising, and so His immortal breath. A mortal he had, which he breathed out, quando emisit Spiritum, when He gave up the Ghost upon the Crosse. All the while he was mortal, he held his breath. Till it was more than so, he breathed it not; till it had in it, the vigour and power of immortality: which neither sinne can endure, but scatters straight, nor the man of sinne, for he also shall be consumed with the breath of his mouth. Otherwise, unlesse it be this of Christ's, there is nothing in our breath to work this effect: not in any mans, to thaw a frost, or to scatter a mist. The soyle of sin is so baked on men, they so hard frozen in the dreggs of it, our winde cannot dissolve it. Hear the Prophet, after he had been long blowing at the sinnes of the people: The bellows (saith he) are burnt, the iron of them consumed, the Founder melts in vaine; for all his blowing, the drosse will not away (Jer. 6. 29.) But I (saith God) let me take it in hand, let me but blow with my winde, and I scatter thy transgressions as a mist; and make thy sinnes like a morning cloud to vanish away. Turne we then to him, whose divine power, whose immortal breath can do it: do it by himself, and if by himself, by others also, into whom he will inspire it; whom in that regard, the Prophets calleth GOD's mouth, to separate the precious from the vile.

2 Thef. 2. 8. Which being of his breath immortal, doth farther shew, both that there is nothing in this power, but pertains rather to a better life, than to this mortal of ours (even to that, which is the life of the world to come:) and that it shall never die (this power) but hold, as long as there is any sinne to be forgiven. Had it been his mortal breath, we might have feared the failing, now shall it never faile, so long as there is any, to open his mouth to receive it: It is His immortal breath.

2 The Parties
to whom. This for the Party from whom. Now for the in eos, those into whom it came. Much bound we are to our Blessed Saviour, for thus sending; and to the Holy Ghost for being thus sent, for seeing us furnished, with a power, we so much stand in need of. For, sinning as we do, and even running our selves out of breath in it, and the wages of that being eternal death: what case were we in, but for this breath? I see not how we should do without it. To say therefore with them in the Gospel, Benedictus Deus qui dedit talem potestatem, blessed be GOD, for sending such a power, for sending it at all.

Rom. 6. 23. But then secondly, qui dedit talem potestatem hominibus, that he gave it to men: For, as the Sonne of man, he gave it; and as man, to men he gave it; To the Sons of men upon earth, that we need not send up and down, and cast, Who shall go up to heaven for us and fetch it thence? That if an Angel should come to us, as to Cornelius there did; he hath not this power to impart, he can but bid us send to Joppa for Peter: He hath it, men have it, Angels have it not.

Acts 10. 32.

In eos, is more yet: to men, and to such men, such simple men (for so they were G O D wot) a full infit and indisposed matter to receive it. Ideots (it is Saint Lukes word, men utterly unlearned: And of no spirit or courage at all (the breath but of a Damoſel, quailed the best of them.) Probatur Deus per Apostolos (ſay the Schoolmen) if there were nothing else, his very Apostles were enough to prove him to be G O D; For O Lord our Saviour, how excellent is thy name in all the world! Those, that out of the mouths of those that were little better than babes, haſt ordained thy praise, and filled thine enemies, and put them all to ſilence.

2 In eos, to simple men.

Acts 4. 13.

Pſal. 8. 12.

But, there is a worſe matter than that. Not only Simple; but (which is farther off yet) ſinful men they were. Take their own confeſſions. Saint Peters: Go forth from me O Lord, for I am a ſinful man; Saint Pauls, Sinners, whereſ I am the chiefſt. Saint James, In many things we offend all; put himſelf in the number of them that offended many times. Saint Johns, If we (I for one) ſay we have no ſinne (what then, we are proud, there is no humility? No; but) we are liars, and there is no truth in us. Even to ſuch, to ſinners, this power given to forgive ſinnes: to them, that for ſinne, were in fear themſelves to be condemned.

3 To ſinful men.

Luke 5. 8.

1 Tim. 1. 5.

James 3. 2.

1 John 1. 8.

Nay (which is not lightly to be paſſed by) all this done, even at the very time, when they were ſcarce crept out of their ſinne, but three dayes before committed, in ſo wretchedly forſaking Him: and ſome more than ſo, and after would ſcarce beleve, He was riſen, when they ſaw Him: and even then, did he thus breathe on them, and made them, that he did. Now bleſſed be G O D, that at all gave ſuch power to men, to ſuch men, ſuch ſimple, ſuch ſinful men, inſufflav it in eos. To ſecure us, be the men what they will, that have received it, No ſinne of man, ſhall make the power of G O D of none effect. This, for in eos.

To the Act now, It is firſt inſufflav it, breathed; and that was, to keep correſpondence with His Father at the firſt. By breathing into Adam, the Father gave the ſoul; the Author of the life natural: Ad idem exemplum, the Sonne (here) by breathing gives the Holy Ghoſt, the Author of the life ſpiritual, the ſame paſſage, and the ſame ceremony held by both.

3. Of the Act, a inſufflav it.

But inſufflav it is more; breathed in it, into them. This (in) ſhews, it pertains within, to the inward parts, to the very conſcience, this act. His breath goeth (ſaith Solomon) ad interiora ventris, and his word with it (ſaith the Apoſtle) through, to the diſpoſition of the ſoul and Spirit: Thither goeth this breath: and thither, is farther than man can go. For, howſoever the acts and exerciſes of outward Jurisdiction may be diſpoſable, and are diſpoſed by humane authority, yet, this not ſo, of forum internum: Somewhat there is ſtill that comes from CHRIST, and none but CHRIST; ſomewhat, that aſit comes higher, ſo it goes deeper, than any earthly power whatſoever. This inward inſpiring, brings us to CHRISTs Deity again. The Kings of the Nations, ſend they can, and give power they can, but aſpire they cannot. Array whom they will (as Aſſuerus) with rich attire; arme them at all points, indure, in that ſenſe, but not endue the ſoul with gifts and graces within, not arme their minds with valour and vertue; at leaſtwiſe, not with virtus ex alto: Only G O D, whom he calls, he gives the inward talents to; and CHRIST, whom he ſends, he ſends his Spirit into. This argueth G O D plainly, and ſo CHRIST to be G O D.

b Inſufflav it.

Prov. 18. 9.

Heb. 4. 12.

Alwayes this inſufflav it ſhews, as wherewith he would do it (the Spirit;) ſo, what it is he would work, work upon, and renew. For, if we be renewed in the Spirit of our minds, the whole man will be ſo, ſtraight upon it. There is no indication to that: for, the change of the whole man is a certaine ſigne, the Spirit is come into us. As of Saul, it is written, when the Spirit came into him, he was changed into quite another man; no more the ſame Saul, he was before: A new, another Saul then. Which holds, not onely in particular men, but even in the whole world. For, when this breath came into it, in interiora, it was caſt in a new mold preſently, and did even wonder at it ſelf, how it was become Chriſtian. For, the outward rigorous means of fire, imprifonment; of the whip, of the terror of the Magiſtrates ſword: Pilates, Have not I power to crucifie thee, and power to looſe thee? Theſe daunt men, make them aſtoniſhed, make metum peccati, fear to commit the outward act of ſin. But, odium oportet peccandi, non metum facias, if ſinne ſhall ever truly be left, it muſt come of hatred, not of feare. So, it goes away indeed. And there it is, ſinne muſt be met with; if ever it ſhall rightly be put away, the Spirit to be ſearched, and inward hearty compunction wrought there. And that is, by this breath of Chriſt, piercing thither or not at all. So much for the [in.]

Ephel. 4. 3.

John 19. 21.

And now to, & dixit. The words be three, the points according, three, too, 1 Accipite, it is to be received: 2 Spiritum, a Spirit it is, that is to be received. 3 Sanctum, and that Spirit is the Holy Ghoſt. 4 Whereto we adde, the Holy Ghoſt after what manner; for there be more than one.

Et dixit.

1. Accipite.

Accipite, agrees well with breathe. For, that is received, we open our mouths and draw it in, our Syſtole, to meet with His Diaſtole.

For this Accipite: it is certain, that at the breathing of this breath the Spirit was given. He gave them what he bade them take, he mocked them not. They received the Holy Ghoſt then, and (if ye will) really. Yet was not the ſubſtance of His breath tranſubſtantiated into that of the HOLY GHOſT: None hath ever imagined that: yet ſaid He truly, Accipite Spiritum, and no leſſe truly in another place, Accipite Corpus. Truly ſaid, by Him, and received by them, in both. And no more need, the bread ſhould be changed into His body, in that; than, His breath into the HOLY GHOſT in this: No, though it be a Sacrament (for, with them both aſo) yet, as all confeſſe, both truly ſaid, truly given, and truly received, and in the ſame ſenſe, without any difference at all. This for them.

For

1 Accipite, not concupite.
Plal. 90. 9.

For us, Accipite sheweth first, it comes from without; it grows not within us; a breath inspired, not a vapour ascending; not educta è, but inducta in. It is not meditati sumus sicut aranea, we spin it not out of our selves, as the Spider doth her web. It is not concupite, but accipite: Receive it we do; Conceive it we do not. It were too fond to conceive (seeing our breath is made of ayre, and that is without us) that the Spirit should be made of any thing that is within us.

2 Accipite, not assumite.
Heb. 5. 4.

We say again: it is accipite, not assumite. Assumit, qui nemine dante accipit, He assumes, that takes that, is not given. But nemo assumit honorem hunc, This honour no man takes unto him, or upon him, till it be given him. As, quod accipitur non habetur, in the laist; So, quod accipitur, datur, in this. And both these are against the Voluntaries of our age, with their taken-on callings. That have no mitto vos; unsent, set out of themselves. No accipite, no receiving; take it up of their own accords, make themselves what they are: Sprinkle their own heads with water; lay their own hands on their own heads; and so take that to them, which none ever gave them. They be Hypocrites; So doth Saint Paul well term them as it were the mock-Apostles.) And the term comes home to them, for υἱοὶ καταβολῆς, they be Filii subtractionis right: work all to subtraction, to withdraw poor souls, to make them forsake the fellowship (as even then, the manner was.) This brand hath the Apostle set on them, that we might know them and avoid them.

Heb. 10. 30.

We may be sure CHRIST could have given the Spirit without any ceremony; held his breath, and yet sent the Spirit into them without any more ado: He would not: An outward ceremony He would adde; for, an outward calling He would have. For, if nothing outward had been in His, we should have had nothing but Enthusiasts (as them we have notwithstanding:) But then we should have had no rule with them: All by divine revelation: Into that they resolve. For, sending, breathing, laying on of hands have they none. But if they be of CHRIST, some must say mitto vos; sent by some, not run of their own heads. Some say accipite; receive it, from some; not finde it about themselves, have an outward calling, and an outward Accipite, a testimony of it. This for accipite.

2 Spiritum.
The Spirit.
John 6. 63.
2 Cor. 3. 6.
Jude 19.
Ephes. 4. 23.
1 Not the flesh.

Spiritum. A Spirit it is, that is to be received, and much is said in this word (Spirit) it stands as opposed to many. 1 The spirit and flesh (CHRIST, John 6.) 2 The Spirit and the Letter. S. Paul, 2 Cor. 3.) 3 The Spirit and the Soul (S. Jude.) 4 The Spirit and the minde (Ephes. 4.) 5 The Spirit and a habit. 6 The Spirit and a Sprite, Spiritus and spectrum. 7 The Spirit and Hero's Pneumatica, that is some artificial motion or peece of work with gins within it. To all these.

2. Not the letter
Jer. 23. 18.

1. Not the flesh (saith our SAVIOUR:) and if not the flesh, not any humour, for they are of the flesh. Neither they, nor their revelations profit ought to this work.

3. Not the soul.

2. Not the Letter (saith S. Paul:) not the husk or chaffe: we have too much of them every day. Quid palea ad triticum? they rather take away life than give it: A handful of good grain were better than ten load of such stuffe.

4 Not the mind

3. Nor animales Spiritum non habentes (saith Jude) men that have souls only; and they serve them; but as salt to keep them, that they rot not. They to have no part or fellowship in this businesse, meere natural men; no spirit in them at all. Somewhat there is to be in us, more than a natural soul: quous is one thing: quous is another. Some inspiring needs, somewhat of Accipite.

5. Not an habit.

4. Nay, saith S. Paul, be ye renewed in the Spirit of your minds. For, the minde is not all: Nor men to think so, if they once have got true positions, true Maximes in their minde, then all is well. If the Spirit be not also renewed, it is nothing.

6. Not a Sprite.

5. The Spirit, not an habite gotten with practice, and lost again with dis-use (as are the Arts and moral vertues) against the Philosophers. For, though this be vertue, yet it is not virtus ex alto (this.) No habitual, but a spiritual vertue this.

Gen. 1. 2.

6. Spiritus, non spectrum: for that is a flying shadow void of action; doth nothing. But the Spirit, the first thing we read of it, it did hover and hatch, and make fruitful the waters, and fit to bring forth something of substance.

7. Not Hero's Pneumatica.

7. And last (which is by writers thought to be chiefly intended) CHRIST'S Spirit, not Hero's Pneumatica; not with some spring or device, though within, yet from without; artificial, not natural: but the very principium motus to be within. Of our selves, to move: not wrought to it, by any gin, or vice, or skrew made by Art: Else, we shall move but while we are wound up, for a certain till the plummets be at the ground, and then our motion will cease straight. All which (but these last specially) are against the automata, the spectra, the puppets of religion, Hypocrites. With some spring within, their eyes are made to rowle, and their lips to wag, and their breast to give a job: all is but Hero's Pneumatica; a vizor, not a very face; an outward shew of godlinesse, but no inward power of it at all. It is not Accipite Spiritum.

2 Tim. 3. 5.

b Spiritum Sanctum.

Thirdly, I say it would be known farther, what Spirit: For, Accipite it may be: somewhat they may have taken; it may be, a spirit. But, whatsoever it is, it is not yet home, unlesse sanctum come too. Sanctum it would be, if it be right. To be a man of spirit (as we call them, that be active and stirring in the world) will not serve here, if that be all. I have formerly told you, there is a spiritum without sanctum; spirit and holy are two things. Two other spirits there be besides: and they well accepted of, and in great request. 1 One which S. Peter calls the private spirit: 2 The other, that S. Paul calls the spirit of the world: Which two will consort well together, for their owo turnes, and for some worldly end: but neither of them with this. For, they are opposed to the Holy Ghost both.

2 Pe. 1. 20.
1 Cor. 2. 12.

1. Not Spiritum
sanctum.

The private spirit first. And are there not in the world somewhere, some such as will receive none, admit of at no hand no other Holy Ghost but their own ghost, and the idol of their own conceit, the vision of their own heads, the motions of their own spirits; and if you hit not on that, that is there in their their hearts, reject it, be it what it will : that makes their breasts the Sanctuary; (in effect) say with the old Donatists, Quod volumus sanctum est, that they will have holy, is holy, and nothing else? Men (as the Apostle speaks of them) causeless puffed up with their fleshy minde? His word is to be marked: quoniam, there; quoniam, here: inflati, they; afflati, these: They puffed up, these inspired. If it make to swell, then is it but wind; the Spirit doth it not; inspirat, non inflat. The word is insufflavir, a [sub] that beareth downward, and carries not up. So Spiritus sanctum, is not Spiritus suum.

Col. 2. 18.

Nor Spiritus mundi is not Spiritus CHRISTI. Else doth Saint Paul wrong to oppose them. It is too sure, such a spirit there is as the spirit of the world; and that the greatest part of the world live and breathe, and move by it; and that it doth well sometimes, but without any reference to GOD, or CHRIST, or HOLY GHOST. For, even the acts they do of Religion, are out of worldly reasons and respects: Herods reason, Videns quia placeret populo; saw, the world would that way: Demetrius reason, Periclitatur portio nostra, It may prove dangerous to their worldly estate. The Sichemites, Oh set forward that point of Divinity; for then, all they have is ours. See we not, whence this wind blows, from what spirit this breath comes? and from Spiritus mundi, plainly. And I know not how, but as if CHRIST's mouth were stopped, and His breath like to fail Him, the world begins to fare, as if they had got a new month, to draw breath from; to govern the Church, as if Spiritus pratorii would do things, better than Spiritus Sanctuarii, and mans law become the best means to teach the fear of GOD, and to guide Religion by. In vain then is all this act of Christs; He might have kept his breath to himself. But, it will not so be. When all is done, the Spirit must come from the Word, and the Holy Ghost from CHRIST's mouth, that must do this, govern the Church. Thither we must for Sanctum, even to the Sanctuary, and to no other place.

2. Not Spiritum mundi.

Acts 12. 3. 19.

27.

Gen. 34. 234

And, a certain note it is (this) to discern the Holy Spirit of GOD, from the spirit of what you will. From CHRIST it comes, if it be true: He breathes it. It cannot but be true, if it come from him, for he is the Truth. And as the Truth, so the Wisdom of GOD: that, if it favour of falsehood, or folly, it came not from him; he breathed it not. But, his Breath shall not fail; shall ever be able to serve his Church, without all the Idia Sanctum, of the private Spirit, and without all the additaments of Spiritus mundi. And if we gape after them, we make this Accipere more than needs: And if we do so, I know not what shall become of us.

John 14. 8.

1 Cor. 1. 3.

But, the Holy Ghost may be received more wayes than one. He hath many Spiramina: Holus, in many manners, he comes: And multiformis gratia, he comes with. He and they carry the name of their cause: and to receive them, is to receive the spirit. There is a gratum faciens, the saving grace of the Spirit, for one to save himself by, received by each, without respect to others: and there is a gratis data (whatever become of us) serving to save others by, without respect to our selves. And there is gratia, the Grace of a holy calling: For it is a grace, to be a conduit of grace any way. All these, and all from one and the same Spirit.

Which way it is received.

1 Pet. 4. 10.

1 Cor. 8. 4.

That, was here conferred, was not the saving grace of inward Sanctimonie: they were not breathed on, to that end. The Church to this day, gives this still in her Ordinations, but the saving grace the Church cannot give: none but GOD can give that. Nor, the gratis data it is not. That came by the tongues, both the gift of speaking divers languages, and the gift of σοφισμα, speaking wisely, and to the purpose: And (we know) none is either the holier, or the learner, by his Ordination.

Ephes. 2. 7. 8.

Yet a grace it is. For, the very Office it self is a grace: Mihi data est hac gratia (saith the Apostle in more places than one; and speaks of his Office and nothing else.) The Apostle-ship was a grace, yet no saving grace. Else, should Judas have been saved. Clearly then, it is the grace of their Calling (this) whereby they were sacred, and made persons publick, and their acts authenticall; and they enabled to do somewhat about the remission of sinnes, that is not (of like avail) done by others, though perhaps more learned and vertuous than they, in that they have not the like mitto vas, nor the same Accipere that these have. To speak with the least: As the act of one that is a publick Notary, is of more validity, than of another that is none, though (it may be) he writes a much fairer hand. And this (loe) was the grace here, by breathing conferred to them: of Spiritum, a Spiritual; of Sanctum, an holy Calling, and deriv'd from them to us, and from us to others, to the worlds end.

But take heed, we suck no error out of this word Holy; No more than we do out of the word Anointed. When time was, it was shewed, the anointing was no inward holiness, or ability to govern by, but the right of ruling only. So, here, it is no internal quality infused, but the grace only of their spiritual and sacred function. Good it were, and much to be wished, they were holy and learned all; but if they be not, their Office holds good though. He that is a sinner himself, may remit sinnes for all that, and save others he may, though himself be not saved. For, it was not propter se, he received this power, to absolve himself; but (as the next word is) quorumcumque, any others whosoever.

Some ado we have to pluck this out: but out it must. For, an error it is, an old worn error of the Donatists: and but new dressed over by some fanatical spirits, in our dayes, that teach in corners. One, that is not himself inwardly holy, cannot be the means of holiness to another. And where they dare too, that: One, that is not in state of grace, can have no right to any possession or place. For they of right belong to none, but to the true children of GOD: that is, to none but to themselves.

Fond ignorant men! For hath not the Church long since defined it positively, that the Baptisme, Peter gave, was no better than that which Judas: and exemplified it, that a scale of iron will give as perfect a stamp, as one of gold? That as the Carpenters that built the Arke, wherein Noah was saved, were themselves drowned in the Flood: that as the water of baptisme, that sends the child to Heaven, is it self cast down the kennel: Semblably is it with these: and they that by the Word, the Sacraments, the Keys, are unto other the conduits of grace, to make them fructifie in all good works; may well so be, though them themselves remain unfruitful, as do the pipes of wood or lead, that by transmitting the water, make the garden to bear both herbs and flowers, though themselves never bear any. And let that content us, that what is here received, for us it is received, that what is given them, is given them for us; and is given us, by them. Sever the Office, from the men: leave the men to God, to whom they stand or fall: let the Ordinance of God stand fast. This breath, though not into them for themselves, yet goeth into and through every act of their Office or ministry, and by them conveyeth His saving grace into us all.

But lest we grow discontent, that some do receive it, and that we all do not so (for, this being the Feast of the Holy Ghost, and of receiving it, it may grieve any of us, to go his way and not receive it:) I will shew, it is not so. For, though as this breath, we cannot all; and, as the fiery Tongues, much lesse: (these are but for some set persons:) yet will I shew you a way, how to say Accipite Spiritum to all, and how all may receive it.

Matth. 26. 26.

And that is by accipite corpus meum. For, Accipite corpus, upon the matter, is Accipite Spiritum, inasmuch as they two never part, nor possible to sever them one minute. Thus, when or to whom we say Accipite Corpus, we may safely say with the same breath, Accipite Spiritum; and as truly every way. For, that Body is never without this Spirit; he that receives the one, receives the other; he that, the body, together with it, the Spirit also.

1 Cor. 10. 4.
John 15. 5.

And receiving it thus, it is to better purpose than here in the Text it is. Better (I say) for us. For, in the Text it is received, for the good of others; whereas (here) we shall receive it, for our own good. Now, whether is the better, remission of sinnes, to be able to remit to others, or to have our own remitted? To have our own, no doubt. And that is hereto be had. To the establishing of our hearts with grace, to the cleansing and quieting our consciences. Which spiritual grace we receive in this spiritual food, and are made to drink (I will not say of the spiritual Rock, but) of the spiritual Vine that followeth us, which Vine is CHRIST.

Matth. 26. 28.

To that then let us apply our selves. Both are received, both are body, both co-operate to the remission of sinnes. The body: Matth. 26. The Spirit here evidently. And there is no better way of celebrating the Feast of the receiving the HOLY GHOST, than so to do, with receiving the same body that came of it at his birth, and that came from it now at His rising again.

And so receiving it, He that breathed, and He that was breathed, both of them vouchsafe to breath into those holy Mysteries a divine power and vertue; And make them to us the bread of life, and the Cup of Salvation. God the Father also sending His blessing upon them, that they may be His blessed means of this thrice blessed effect. To whom all, three Persons, &c.

SERMON

PREACHED

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At Haly-Rud House, in Edinburgh,

On the VIII. of June, A. D. MDCXVII.

being WHIT-SUNDAY.

Luke, Chap. IV. Ver. XVIII, XIX.

SPIRITUS DOMINI, super Me, &c.

The SPIRIT of the LORD is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me, that I should preach the Gospel to the poor: He hath sent Me, that I should heal the broken-hearted, that I should preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, and that I should set at liberty them that are bruised.

And, that I should preach the acceptable year of the LORD.

We are fallen here upon CHRIST'S first Sermon, preached at Nazareth: and upon his very Text. This I have read you, was his Text, taken out of the Prophet Esay, 61. Chapter, Verse 1. There was no fear, CHRIST would have ranged far from his matter, if he had taken none; yet, he took a Text, to teach us thereby, to do the like. To keep us within; not to fly out, or preach much, either without, or besides the book.

And he took his Text for the Day, as is plain, by his application (verse 21.)

This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears. This Day this Scripture

Our Masters Scripture was for the Day: So would ours be.

For the day: and for the present occasion. For, among the Writers, it is generally received, that when our Saviour made this Sermon, that year, it was with the Jews, the year of Jubilee. And that therefore, He told them, It was fulfilled in their ears, they might hear the Trumpets sound to it. If it were so, this Text of the acceptable year, was as apposite, as could be chosen. That (it seems). He turned the book purposely to find it: Out of it, to speak to them of the true Jubilee.

Nnn

And

And if it were so (the year of Jubilee) it was the last, that ever they held. For, before fifty years came about again, they were swept away: Tempus, Sacrifice, Jubilee, People, and all. The Jubilees of the Law then failing, being come to their period, comes Christ with His; with a new Jubilee of the Gospel, the true one (as, whereof those of theirs were but shadows only:) which Jubilee of the Gospel, was the acceptable year, which Esay here meant.

The Sum.

Will ye then give me leave now, to say of this Text of our Saviours, The Scripture suits well with this day: is fulfilled in it three ways? In the coming of the Spirit: 2 the end for which; To send to proclaim; 3 the matter which; to proclaim a Jubilee: 4 And a fourth I will add, of a present occasion, as fit every way.

I.

First, it is of the coming of the Spirit. And, this day, the Spirit came. And the coming of the Spirit, in the Text here upon Christ, was the cause of the coming of the Spirit, this day, upon the Apostles. From this coming upon Him, came the coming upon them: Super Petrum, super Jacobum, super all the rest, upon them, and upon us all, from this super me. All our anointings are but drops from His anointing: All our missions, and commissions, but quills (as we say) out of this Commission (here) misit Me. Sicut misit Me, Ego mitto vos: He sent Me; As He sent Me, I send you. By that, and by no other Commission, did they or do we, or shall ever any come.

That first, and this second: the Misit, and the Ad. Why came the Spirit on Christ? To send Him: send Him, to what? Ad evangelizandum. And why came the Spirit on the twelve, this day, but for the very same end? And it came therefore, for the purpose, in the shape of tongues. It is the office of the tongue, to be a Trumpet to proclaim. It serves for no other end.

3.

To proclaim, what? the acceptable year of the Lord, that is, the Jubilee. Now fifty is the number of the Jubilee, which number agreeth well with this Feast, the Feast of Pentecost. What the one, in years; the other, in days. So that, this is the Jubilee (as it were) of the year (or the yearly memory of the year of Jubilee) that, the Pentecost of years; this, the Jubilee of days. These three for the Day.

And may we not add a fourth, from the present occasion? I take it, we may; and that not unfit neither, as peculiar to this very Year, rather than to any other. There falleth out (lightly) but one Jubilee in a mans age. 1 And this present year is (yet) the Jubilee-year of Your Majesties Life and Reign. 2 And this day is the Jubilee-day of that year. 3 And yet further, if we take not Jubilee for the time, but for the joy, (for the word Jubilee is taken, as for the time of the joy, so for the joy of the time,) and so refer it to the late great joy and Jubilee, at Your Majesties receiving hither to Your Nazareth (the country where You were brought up) which then was fulfilled in your eares: Our eares (I am sure) were filled full with it. So that first and last the Text suits with the day, and both suit well, with the present occasion.

To return to our Saviour: Who standing now with His loynes girt, ready to go about the errand, He came for; (as the manner is) He was first to read His Commission. This it is (the words I have read) drawn and ready penned for Him, long before, by the Prophet Esay here, who had the honour to be the Register of this, and divers other instruments, touching Christs Nature, Person, and Offices. And upon the reading of this, He entered in His Office.

II.

You may plainly know, it was his Inauguration (this,) or first entering on His Office, by the proclamation following, of opening the Goale, and setting the Prisoners go free: So is (ever) the fashion of Princes, to make the joy general, of their coming to their Kingdomes; to release those, that stand committed; to grant free and general pardons to all, that will sue for them; to be at the charge of missilia, certain new pieces of coine, to be cast abroad among the people.

Acts 7. 52.

Accordingly, were there this day of the Spirits coming, by one Sermon of S. Peters three thousand set at liberty, that had been captives before, under Satan. A largess of new tongues (as it were missilia) cast down from heaven. A general pardon proclaimed, even for them that had been the betrayers, and murderers of the Son of God, if they would come in. That it was indeed a right day of Jubilee. And this is the Sum of all.

The division.

I.

The parts as they lie, are these: 1 First, of the Spirits being on Christ: 2 Anointing Him: 3 Sending Him. These three.

II.

2. Then, where to He was so anointed and sent; to preach the Gospel, or glad tidings (glad tidings or Gospel, both are one) and that even to the poor.

III.

3. Thirdly, where of the tidings is: of an excellent Physician: a Physician of the heart, one that can cure a broken heart.

IV.

4. Of these hearts. How they came broken first, and there are three ways here set down. 1 By being Captives: 2 by being in a dark dungeon, where their sight was even taken from them: 3 by being there in irons, so as they were even bruised with them. Three, able (I think) to break any mans heart alive.

2. Then, how they came cured. And that is by good news. Two proclamations, (for anpo Eau to proclaim, is twice repeated.) 1 One containing a particular remedy of those three several maladies: 1 Of a patty, one with a Ransome, or Redemption for the captives: 2 with an engine, or people to knock off their irons : 3 with the keys of the prison, to let them out. And this to begin with, 2 Then (to conclude with) a second Proclamation, that makes up all ; of a year of Jubilee ; and so, of restitution of them to their former forfeited estates, by GODS accepting them to favour, this acceptable time.

This, is the Summe of Christs Commission here read. And indeed, a brief of His Offices all three. 1 In preaching the glad newes of the Gospel, of his Prophecie : 2 In granting pardon, and enlarging prisoners, of His Kingdom. 3 In proclaiming a Jubilee, of His Priest-hood (for, that, the peculiar of the Priests Office.) So, all are in, that pertain to Christ. And all, that, to Jesus too : Who sheweth Himself Jesus, in nothing so much, as in being the Physician of a broken contrite heart.

WE cannot better begin, than with the Blessed Trinity. In the three first words, the three Persons reasonable clear. 1 The Spirit, 2 He, whose the spirit (Domini.) 3 on whom the Spirit, super Me.

The Spirit, that is, the Holy Ghost. He, whose the spirit, God the Father. He, on whom the spirit, our Saviour Christ. He, the super quem (here.)

These three distinct : 1 the spirit, from the 2 Lord, whose the spirit is : the spirit, that was upon, 3 from him, it was upon. Yet, all three in one joynt concurrence, to one and the same work, the Jubilee of the Gospel.

Upon Me, is Christs Person. But, His person only according to one of His Natures ; His humane. The spirit was not upon Him, but as He was man. These three, 1 To be sent, 2 to be anointed, 3 to have a super eum, favour of inferiority (all) to the Sender, Anointer, superiour. And so (indeed) for us, He became lower than, in Himself, was. In the similitude of sinful flesh, had a spirit, to anoint Him In forma servi had a LORD, to send Him about the message here.

But that CHRIST suffer not in His honour, we supply : that the Spirit, who is here said to be Spiritus Domini, is else-where said to be Spiritus Christi (a Rom. 8.) b The spirit of the Father (Matth. 10.) And the spirit, of the Sonne, both Gal. 4.) The spirit that sent Him here, sent by Him else-where, d Whom I will send (John 15.) This sets him up right again. As the one shews Him to be Man ; so the other, to be God. And, as God, He hath no superiour : No Lord, to own Him : No spirit, to anoint Him.

And if I mistake not) a kind of inckling of thus much, is even in the very words. The word [LORD] in Esay, is Plural ; and so, more persons than one, whose the spirit is, and from whom He proceeds. And if you would know how many ; In Esay the words be two : so not a single proceeding, from one : but, a double, from two, as the word is double. Saint Basil saith it short, ὡς δίδω, ὡς ἀνδρα, ὡς πατρὶς. As GOD, He sends it ; as MAN, He receives it. Upon Him, as MAN, from Him, as GOD.

Of Him then, as MAN, three things here are said, the spirit 1 was upon Him : 2 anointed Him, 3 sent Him. But it is said : the spirit is upon Me, because He hath anointed me : So as, the anointing is set, as the ἵκεται, or cause, why He was upon Him. And then, that, (His anointing) as the cause, is first in nature. But it cannot be conceived, but the spirit must be also upon him, to anoint Him, the spirit is the Unction : the spirit then was upon Him, two several times, for two several ends. 1 To anoint Him : And, after He was anointed, to send Him, the second. Of this anointing we are to touch, 1 when it was : 2 with what it was : 3 and how it comes to be termed anointing.

When was he thus anointed ? Not now, or here, first : but long before ; even from the very time of His conceiving. When the Word became flesh, the flesh, with the Word and (by means of it) with the whole Deity, was anointed all over ; and by vertue thereof, filled with the fulnesse of all grace. For, this we are to hold : that Christ was ever Christ (that is) ever anointed, from the very first instant of all, He was never unanointed, no t one moment.

Anointed with what ? I have already told you, with the Deity, by vertue of the Personal union of the second Person of the Deity. Why then is the Holy Ghost called the Unction ? Why is Christ expressly said to be anointed with the Holy Ghost ? Why not, with the Father as well ?

Why not : To retain to each Person, His own peculiar, His proper act, in this common work of them all : or (as the Hebrews speak) to keep every word upon his right wheele.

Father, is a terme of nature. So, to the Father we ascribe, what the Son hath by nature. For, that He is the Son, is of nature, not of grace.

But, that the Man-hood is taken into GOD, that was not of nature, but of grace. And, what is of grace, is ever properly ascribed to the Spirit. There are diversities of graces, all from the same spirit. And the proceeding of grace from it, not as by nature, but ubi vult, blows where it lists freely. All then, of grace, proceeding from the spirit : Accordingly, the Conception of Christs flesh, and the sending it with the fulnesse of grace (or anointing it) is ascribed to the Spirit.

But, this enduing with grace, how comes it to be called anointing ? For nothing, but for the resemblance it hath, with an ointment. An ointment is a composition (we know :) the ingredients of it, oil and sweet odours. By vertue of the oil, it soaks even into the bones (saith the Psalme :) but, it works upon the joynts add sinews, sensibly ; makes them supple and lithe, and so the more fresh and active active to bestir themselves. By vertue of the sweet odours mixt with it, it works upon the spirit and senses; cheeres him, and makes him glad, that is anointed with it. And not him alone, but all that are about and near him, qui in odore unguentorum, that take delight in his company, to go and to run with him, and all for the fragrant sweet sent they feele to come from him.

Of which two, the oile represents the vertue of the power of the Spirit, piercing shorow (but gently) like Oyle. The Odours, the sweet comfort of the graces, that proceed from the HOLY GHOST. Nothing more like. And this for his Anointing.

Luke 3. 22.

Now the same spirit, that was thus upon Him, at His Conception, to anoint Him; was even now upon Him again, to manifest, and to send Him. When? At His Baptisme (a little before.) Not secretly, as then at His conception, but in a visible shape upon Him, before a great concourse of people: (to shew: there ought to be an outward Calling) what time, the Dove laid that, which in it, is answerable to our hands, upon Him.

Not, to endue Him with ought: (that was done before, long:) but, to manifest to all, this was He, this the Party, before anointed, and now sent, that they might take heed to Him. It was the Holy Ghost's first Epiphany (this:) He was never seen before: But, Christ's second Epiphany. The other, at His birth, or coming into the world: This now, at His calling, or sending into the world. That first, To enable him, to his Office: This, to designe him to it. By that, furnished for it: by this sent, severed, and set about the work, He came for.

But, before we come to the work, let us first reflect a little upon these: they serve our turn; are for our direction. These (both) were done to Christ, to the end He might teach the Church, that the same were to be on them, who in Christ's stead are employed in the same business, ad Evangelizandum. The Holy Ghost to be upon them; upon them, to anoint them, and to send them, both: but, first, to anoint; then, to send them. To be, and in this order to be. Unless they be first anointed, not to be sent; and, though never so anointed, not to start out of themselves, but to stay till they be sent.

The spirit to be upon them; the same, that upon Christ, though not in the same, but in a broad and a large difference or degree of being. Upon Him without measure; Not so, on us: but, on some, lesse (the measure of the Hin;) on some, more (the measure of the Epha;) but every one, his Omer at least. Some Feathers of the Dove (as it were) though not the Dove it self, not the whole spirit entire, as upon Him.

On His head, the whole box of ointment was broken, which from Him ran down upon the Apostles, somewhat more fresh and full; and (ever) the farther the thinner, as the nature of things liquid is: but, some small streams trickle down even to us, and to our times still.

This on-being, shews it self first, in that which stands first (the Anointing.)

I shall not need tell you, the Spirit comes not upon us now, at our conception in the womb, to anoint us there. No: we behove to light our lamps oft, and to spend much oyle at our studies, yer we can attain it. This way, come we to our anointing, now, by books: This Book chiefly; but, in a good part also, by the books of the Ancient Fathers, and Lights of the Church, in whom the scent of this ointment was fresh, and the temper true; on whose writings it lyeth thick, and we thence strike it off, and gather it safely.

You will mark; the anointing is set, for the cause; the spirit is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me. Then, sublata causa, and a sensu contrario, the spirit is not upon me, because He hath not anointed Me. Again, because he hath anointed Me, he hath sent me. And then it follows, because He hath not anointed Me, He hath not sent me. No speaking of the spirit's on-being; no talk of sent by Him, without it. Where be they then, that say; the lesse anointing, the more of the spirit? Indeed, the more blinde, the more bold; and so, the fitter to go on some other errand (perhaps) but not this.

Pfal. 45. 8.

No no: the Spirit makes none of these dry missions; sends none of these same inuncti, such as have never a feather of the Doves wing, nor any spark of the fire of this day, nor so much as a drop of this ointment. You shall smell them straight, that have it; the Myrthe, Aloes, and Cassia will make you glad. And you shall even as soone finde the others. Either they want odour: Anointed, I cannot say, but besmeered with some unctious stuffe (go to, be it oile;) that gives a glibnesse to the tongue to talk much and long, but no more sent in it, than in a dry stick; no odour in it at all. Either odours they want (stay:) or, their odours are not laid in oile. For, if in oile, you shall not swell them so for a few set forms; if they be anointed, not perfumed or washed (for, such Divines we have.) If it be some sweet water, but of a casting bottle, the sent will away soone; water-colours, or water-odours will not last. But, if laid in oile thoroughly, they will: fear them not. To them that are stuffed (I know) all is one: they that have their senses about them, will soone put a difference.

John 9. 7.

Heb. 3. 1.

John 9. 7.

But what? If He be anointed, then turn Him off hardly with no more ado, without stay for any sending at all? Nay, we see here, only anointing served not Christ himself: He was sent, and outwardly sent besides. Messiah he was, in regard of his anointing: Shilo, He was too, in regard of his sending. If you love your eyes, wash them in the water of Shilo, that is by interpretation, Sent. Or (to speak in the title of the Text) as he was Christ for his anointing; So was he an Apostle, for His sending, so is he called (Heb. 3.) the Apostle of our profession, with plain reference to anointed here, the word in the Text.

Heb. 3. 4.

Unction then is to go before, but not to go alone; mission is to follow: and no man, though never so perunctus, co ipse, to stir, nisi qui vocatus erit sicut Aaron, Unless he be called as was Aaron; unless he be sent as Christ here was; for fear of Curriebant & non mittebant eos, in the Prophet; Or of,

of, How shall they unless they be sent, in the Apostle. For his life, he knew not (if neither Ad- ron, nor CHRIST) how any might step up, without calling, sending, ordaining, laying on of hands: all are one.

And mark well this, that the Holy Ghost came upon Christ alike for both: that there is the Holy Ghost no lesse in this sending, than in the anointing. The very calling it self, is a grace expressly so called, Rom. 12. Ephes. 3. and in divers places else. Every grace is of the Holy Ghost; and goeth ever, and is termed by the name of the Holy Ghost usually. And in this sense, the Holy Ghost is given and received in holy Orders, and we do well avow that, we say, Receive the Holy Ghost.

But, we have not all, when we have both these; for, shall we so dwell upon anointing and sending, as we passe by the super me, the first of all the three, and (sure) not the last to be looked after. A plain note it is, but not without use, this situation of the Spirit; that he is super. For if he be super, we be sub. That we be careful then to preserve him in his super, to keep him in his due place (that is) above. In signe whereof, the Dove hovered aloft over Christ; and came down upon him: And in signe thereof, we submit our heads, in anointing to have the oile poured upon;
we submit our heads in ordaining, to have hands laid upon them. So, submit we do in signe that submit we must: That, not only mission, but submission is a signe of one truly called, to this business.
Somewhat of the Dove there must be (needs:) meeknesse, bawblesse of minde.

But lightly you shall finde it, that those that be neque uncti neque luti, neither anointed nor scarce well washed; the lesse ointment, the worse sending, the farther from this submissive humble minde.
That above? Nay, any above? Nay, they inferiour to none. That above, and they under? Nay under no Spirit: no super, they. Of all Prepositions, they endure not that, nor super: all equal, all even at least. Their spirit not subject to the spirit of the Prophets, nor of the Apostles neither (if they were now alive:) but bear themselves so high, do tam altum spirare, as if this Spirit were their underling, and their ghost above the Holy Ghost. There may be a sprite in them, there is no Spirit upon them, that endure no super, none above them. So, now we have all, we should: Unction, out of un- cti; mission, out of misit; submission, out of Super me.

Forward now. Upon me. How know we that? Because He hath anointed me: Anointed; to what end? To send: Send, whereto? That follows now. Both whereto, and whom to. Whereto?

To bring good tydings: Whom to? To the poor.
1. Whereto? If the spirit sent Christ, He will send Him with the best sending: and the best, sending, is to be sent with a message of good newes: the best, and the best welcome. We all strive to bear them; we all love to have them brought. The Gospel is nothing else, but a message of good tydings. And Christ, as in regard of His sending, an Apostle, the Arch-Apostle;
So in regard of that he is sent with, an Evangelist, the Arch-Evangelist. Christ is to anoint; this is a kind of anointing: and no Ointment so precious, no Oile so supple, no Odor so pleasing, as the knowledge of it; called therefore by the Apostle, Odor vite, the Savour of life unto life, in them that receive it.

2. Send with this, and to whom? To the poor. You may know, it is the spirit of God by this.
That spirit it is: and they that are anointed with it, take care of the poor. The spirit of the world, and they that are anointed with it, take little heed to evangelize any such, any poor souls. But in the tydings of the Gospel, they are not left out: taken in by name (we see.) In sending those tydings, there is none excluded. No respect of persons with God: None of Nations, to every Nation, Gentile and Jew.
None of Conditions, to every condition, poor and rich. To them, that of all other are the least likely.
They are not troubled with much worldly good newes: Seldome come there any Posts to them with such. But the good newes of the Gospel, reacheth even to the meanest. And reaching to them, it must needs be general (this newes:) If to them, that of all other least likely, then certainly to all. E- nam pauperibus is (as if He had said) even to poor and all, by way of extent, ampliando. But, no wayes to ingrosse it, or appropriate it to them only. The tydings of the Gospel are as well for a Lydia the purple-seller; as for Simon the tanner: For the Areopagite, the Judge at Athens, as for the Jay- lour at Philippos: for the Elect Lady, as for widow Dorcas: For the Lord Treasurer of Ethiopia, as for the Beggar at the beautiful gate of the Temple: for the household of Cesar, as for the household of Stephanas; yea and (if he will) for King Agrippa too.

But if you will have pauperibus a restraining, you may; but then, you must take it for poor in spirit, with whom our Saviour begins His Beatitudes in the Mount: the poverty to be found in all. As indeed, I know none so rich, but needs these tydings: all to feel the want of them in their spirits. No Dices quia dives sum, as few sparks of a Pharisee as may be, in them, that will be interested in it.

Well, we see to whom: what may these newes be? Newes of a new Physician, Magistros, Medicos condis, one that can give Physick to heal a broken heart. And newes, of such an one is good newes indeed. They that can cure parts lesse principal, broken armes or legs, or limbs out of joynt, are much made of, and sent for far and near: What say you to one, that is good at a broken heart? make that whole, set that in joynt again, if it happen to be out? So they understood it plainly, by their speech to him after, Medice cura te ipsum.

The heart (sure) is the part of all other, we would most gladly have well. Give me any grief, to the grief of the heart (saith one that knew what he said:) Quia custodi custodi cor (saith Salomon) keep thy heart above all: if that be down, all is down: look to that in any wife. Now it is most proper for the Spirit to deale with that part: it is the fountain of the springs of life, and whither (indeed) none

none can come, but the spirit, to do any cure to purpose: that, if Christ, if the spirit take it not in hand, all cures else are but palliative; they may drive it away for a while, it will come again worse than ever. Now then, to Medice cura (as Christ after faith) to this new cure.

In every cure our rule, is first to look to de causis morborum, how the heart can be broken; then after, de methodo medendi, the way here to help it.

IV.
Of the hearts.
1 How they came broken.

How comes the heart broken? The common hammer that breaks them, is some bodily or worldly crosse, such as we commonly call heart-breakings. There be here in the Text, three strokes of this hammer, able (I think) to break any heart in the world.

1 By being captives.
Psal 137. 2.

1. Captivity. They be captives first; and captives and caitives, in our speech sound much upon one. It is (sure) a condition able to make any man Hang up his Harpe, and sit weeping by the waters of Babylon. There, is one stroke.

2. In a dark dungeon.

2. There follows another worse yet. For, in Babylon though they were captives, yet went they abroad, had their liberty. These here are in Prison: And in some blinde hole there, as it might be in the dungeon, where they see nothing. That (I take it) is meant by blinde here in the text: Blinde, for want of light; not for want of sight, though those both come to one, are convertible. They that be blinde, say they are dark: and they that be in the dark, for the time are deprived of sight, have no manner use of it at all, no more than a blinde man. Now, they that row in the Gallies, yet this comfort they have, they see the light: and if a man see nothing else, the light of it self is comfortable. And a greack stroke of the hammer it is, not to have so much as that poor comfort left them.

Ecclef. 11. 7.

3 And bruised with irons
there.

3. But yet are not we at the worst; One stroke more. For, one may be in the dungeon and yet have his limmes at large, his hands and feet at liberty. But so have not those in the text, but are in irons; and those so heavie and so pinching, as they are even bruised and hurt with them. See now their case. 1 Captives; and not only that, but 2 in prison. In prison, not above, but in the dungeon, the deepest, darkest, the blindest hole there; no light, no sight at all: 3 And, in the hole, with as many irons upon them, that they are even bruised and sore with them. And tell me now, if these three together be not enough to break Manasses, or any mans heart, and to make him have cor contritum indeed.

They be: but what is this to us? This is no mans case here. No more was it any of theirs, that were at Christ's Sermon: yet Christ spake to the purpose, we may be sure. We may not then take it literally, as meant by the body: Christ, meant no such captivity, dungeon or irons. That He meant not such, is plain. He saith, He was sent to free Captives, to open prisons: But, He never set any captive free, in His life; nor opened any goale, (in that sense) to let any prisoner forth. Another sense then, we are to seek. Remember ye not, we began with the Spirit? the businessse, the Spirit comes about, is spiritual, not secular. So, all these spiritually to be understood. As (indeed) they are all three applicable to the case of the Spirit; and a plain description of all our states, out of Christ, and before He take us in hand.

Rom. 7. 24.

1. There is captivity there, wherein men are held in slavery under sinne and Satan, worse than that we now speak of. Saint Paul knew it: speaks of it, Rom. 7. and when he hath so, crieth out, Wretched man that I am, who shall rid me of it! Verily, there is no Turk so hurries men, puts them to so base services, as sinne doth her captives: Give me one that hath been in her captivity, and is got out of it, & scit quod dico, he can tell, it is true I say.

Psal. 88. 8.

Psal. 142. 7.

Mar. 4. 16.

Act. 8. 23.

2. There is a prison too: not Manasses prison. But aske David, who never came in any goale, what he meant, when he said, I am so fast in prison, as I know not how to get out. And that you may know what prison that was, he cries, O bring my soul out of prison! A prison there is then, of the soul no lesse than of the body. In which prison were some of those that Christ preached here to: Saint Matthew saith, they sate in darknesse and in the shadow of death, even as men in the dungeon do.

Psal. 105. 18.

There are chaines too, that is also the sinners case; He is even tied with chaines of his own sinnes (saith Solomon) with the bonds of iniquity (Saint Peter) which bands are they, David thanks God for breaking in sunder. There need no other bonds, we will say, if once we come to feel them, The gals, that sin makes in the conscience, are the entering of the iron into our soul.

But you will say, we feele not these neither, no more than the former. No do? Take this for a rule: If CHRIST heale them; that be broken-hearted; broken-hearted we behove to be, yet He can heale us: He is medicus cordis indeed; but it is cordis contriti. It is a condition ever annexed (this) to make us the more capable; and likewise a disposition it is, to make us the more curable. The same pauperibus (before) and this contriti now, they limit Christ's cure; his cure, and his Commission both: and unless they be, or until they be, this Scripture is not, nor cannot be fulfilled in us: In our eyes, it may be, but in our hearts, never.

Psal. 119. 70.

That, as such as come to be healed by his Majesty, are first searched, and after either put by, or admitted as cause is: so there would be a Scrutiny of such, as make toward CHRIST. What, are you poor? poor in spirit? (for the poor it skills not :) No, but dicis quia dives, in good case: CHRIST is not for you then; He is sent to the poor. What, is your heart broken? No, but heart-whole, a heart as brave: then are you not for this cure. In all Christ's Dispensatory, there is not a medicine, for such a heart; a heart like brave (that is) hard and un-yielding.

Verse 25.

CHRIST himself seemes to give this Irem, when He applies it after: Many Widows, Many Lepers (saith He :) and so many sinners: Elias sent to none, but the poor Widow of Serepta; Elise- was healed none, but only Naaman, after his spirit came down, was broken. No more doth Christ, but such as are of a contrite heart.

Verily, the case as before we see it set down, is the sinners case; feel he it, feel he it not. But if any be so benumbed, as he is not sensible of this; so blinde, as duncheon or no duncheon, all is one to him; if any have this Scirrhum cordis, that makes him past feeling, it is no good signe: but it may be, our hour is not yet come, our cure is yet behind. But, if it should so continue, and never be otherwise, then were it a very evil signe. For what is such a ones case, but (as Solomon saith) as the Ox that is led to the slaughter without any sense, or the foole that goes laughing when he is carried to be well whipped? What case is more pitiful?

Prov. 7. 22

You will say: we have no hammer, no worldly Crosse to break our hearts. It may be. That, is Manasses hammer, the common hammer (indeed:) but, that is not King Davids hammer, which I rather commend to you; the right hammer to do the feat, to work contrition in kinde. The right, is the sight of our own sins. And, I will say this for it: that I never in my life saw any man brought so low with any worldly calamity, as I have, with this sight. And these, I speak of, were not of the common sort, but men of spirit and valour, that durst have looked death in the face. Yet when God opened their eyes, to see this sight; their hearts were broken, yea, even ground to powder with it, contrite indeed.

And this is sure; if a man be not humbled with the sight of his sins, It is not all the crosses or losses in the world will humble him aright.

This is the right. And without any worldly crosse, this we might have, if we loved not so to absent our selves from our selves, to be even fugitivi cordis, to run away from our own hearts; be ever abroad, never within: if we would but sometimes redire ad cor; return home thither, and descend into our selves; sadly and seriously to be think us of them, and the danger we are in, by them; this might be had: And this would be had, if it might be. If not, in default of this (no remedy) the common hammer must come; and God send us Manasses hammer, to break it; some bodily sickness; some worldly affliction, to send us home into our selves. But sure the Angel must come down and the water be stirred; else we may preach long enough to uncontrite hearts; but no good will be done, till then.

Esay 45. 8.

John. 3. 4.

I have been too long in the Cause: but, the knowledge of the Cause, in every disease, we reckon half the cure. To the healing, now.

The word for heale, in Esay (where this Text is) signifies to bind up. The cure begins with ligature, the most proper cure, for fractures, or ought that is broken. Nay, in wounds and all, as appeareth by the Samaritan. The flux is so stayed, which if it continue running on us still, in vaine talk we of any healing. It is not begun till that stay and run no longer. The sin that Christ cures, He binds up, He stayes (to begin with.) If He cover sinne, it is with a plaister. He covers and cures together, both under one.

Luke 10. 34.

This word [broken-hearted] the Hebrews take not, as we do, we, broken for sin, they, broken of, or from sinne. And we have the same phrase with us; To break one of the evil fashions, or inclinacions, he hath been given to. So, to break the heart. And so must it be broken, or ever it be whole. Both senses: either of them doth well; but both together best of all.

This done, now to the healing part. The Heathen observed long since: ἡ ψυχὴ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐκ τῶν λόγων, the souls cure is by words: and the Angel saith to Cornelius, of Saint Peter, He shall speak to thee words by which thou and thy household shall be saved.

How they are cured.
Acts 10. 6.
By good tydings

And by no words sooner, than by the sound of good tydings. Good newes, is good physick sure (such the disease may be:) and a good message, a good medicine. There is power in it both wayes. Good newes, hath healed; evil newes, hath killed many. The good newes of Josephs welfare, we see, how it even revived old Jacob: And, the evil of the Arke of God taken, it cost Eli his life. Nothing works upon the heart more forcibly, either way.

Gen. 45. 27.
i Sam. 4. 18.

What are these newes, and first how come they? By κηρυγμα they come: no secret whispered newes from man to man, in a corner: No flying newes. They be proclaimed, these, so authenticall. Proclaimed: And so they had need; for if our sinnes once appear in their right forme, there is evil newes certainly: Let the Diel alone with that, to proclaime them, to preach damnation to us. Contraria curantur Contrariis, we had need have some good proclaimed, to cure those of his.

Proclaimed.

Two Proclamations here are, one in the neck of another. Of which the former, in the three branches of it, applieth in particular, a remedy to the three former maladies; Is the Topique medicine (as it were:) the later is the Panacea, makes them all perfectly whole and sound.

The first Proclamation. To the Captive first, that there is one at hand with a ransom, to redeem him. This will make him a whole man.

1 The first proclamation.

2. To them in the dungeon; of one to draw them forth thence, and make them ἐλευθέρους, see the light again.

3. To them in chains; of one to strike off their bolts and loose them, to open the prison-doore, and let them go: ἀπολύει, to make Apostles of them, and send them abroad into the wide world. It is the fruit of Christs ἐκτίσας, this ἀπολύει: Christs Apostleship was, and is, to make such Apostles.

Now

Revel. 1. 18.

Now, this is nothing but the very summe of the Gospel: 1 Of one coming with a ransome in one hand, to lay down for us the price of our redemption from Satans captivity. 2 And with the keyes of hell and death in the other. Keyes of two sorts: 3 One, to undo their fetters and loose them; the other, to open the dungeon and prison-door (both the dungeon of despaire, and the prison of the Law) and let them out of both. There can be no better newes, nor kindlier physick in the world, 1 than word of redemption to captives: 2 than to see the light again, to them in the Limbo: 3 than of enlargement, to them in bands: but specially, than of a dismission, from prison, dungeon, irons and all. And this is proclaimed here, and published by Christ in his Sermon at Nazareth: and was after performed and accomplished by him, at his Passion in Jerusalem.

2 The second proclamation.

This is good newes indeed: but here comes better. It is seconded with another Proclamation, that makes up all. For in very deed; they that by the first proclamation were so released, for all that; and after all that; what were they, but a sort of poor snakes, turned out of the Goale, but have nothing to take to? Coming thither, they were turned out of all that ever they had. That, their case, though it be lesse miserable, yet is miserable still: the langnor morbi still hangs upon them.

We lack some restorative for that. Here comes (now) physick, to cure that and make them perfectly well. A second anpuēau, that they shall be restored, to all that ever they had. How so? For harke: here is the acceptable year, that is, a Jubilee proclaimed. And then, even of course they are (by force of the Jubilee) so to be. The nature of the Jubilee was so, you know. Then not only all bond set free; all prisons (for debt) set open; but beside, all were restored then, to their former mortgaged, forfeited, or any wayes aliened estates, in as ample manner, as ever they had, or held them at any time before.

A restitution in integrum; a re-investing them in what they were born to or were any wayes possessed of: that, if they had sold themselves out of all, and lay in execution for huge summes (as it might be ten thousand talents;) then, all was quit; they came to all again; in as good case, as ever they were in all their lives. There can be no more joyfull newes, no more cordial physicke, than this. The year of Jubilee? why, that time, so acceptable, so joyful, as it hath even given a denomination to joy it selfe. The height of joy is Jubilee; the highest terme to expresse it, is Jubilare: that goes beyond all the words of joy whatsoever.

And this comes well now: for, the Jubilee of the Law drawing to an end, and this very year being now the last, Christs Jubilee, (the Jubilee of the Gospel) came fitly to succeed. Wherein, the primitive estate, we had in Paradise, we are re-seised of anew. Not the same, in specie, but as good, nay better. For, if for the terrestrial Paradise by the flood destroyed, we have a celestial, we have our own again, (I trow) with advantage.

A year it is called (to keep the terme still on foot, that formerly it went by.) Only this difference: the year (there) was a definite time; but here, a definite is put for an indefinite. This year is more than twelve moneths. In this acceptable year, the Zodiaque goes never about. On this day of Salvation the Sunne never goes down. For in this, the Jubilee of the Gospel passeth that of the Law: that, held but for a year, and no longer: But, this is continual, lasts still. Which is plaine: in that, divers years after that of Christs, the Apostle speaks of it, as still in esse: Even then, makes this proclamation still, Behold this is the day, Behold, now is the acceptable time. Whereby we are given to understand, that Christs Jubilee, though it began, when Christ first preached this Sermon, yet it ended not with the end of that year (as did Aarons) but was Evangelium eternum: As also perpetui jubilai; Everlasting good newes of a perpetual Jubilee, that doth last, and shall last, as long as the Gospel shall be preached, by Himself, or others sent by Him to the end of the world, the time of restoring all things.

2 Cor. 6. 2.

Revel. 4. 6.

Acts 3. 21.

It is called acceptable, by the terme of the benefit, that hapned on it, which was, our acceptation. For then, we and all mankind were made (not deus, that is, acceptable, but as the word is) deus, that is, actually accepted, or received by God: Out of whose presence we were before cast. And being by him so received, we did our selves receive again, the earnest of our inheritance, from which by means of the transgression we were before fallen.

Ephes. 1. 4.

There is much in this terme [accepting]. For, when is one said to be accepted? Not, when his ransome is paid, or the prison set open; not when he is pardoned his fault, or reconciled, or become friends: but when he is received with armes spread; as was the lost child in the Gospel; ad solam primam (as the terme is, out of that place.) Three degrees there are in it; 1 Accepted to pardon, that is συγχορησις: 2 Accepted to reconciliation, that is ἰλιγισμος: and further, 3 Accepted to repropitiation, that is ἰλασμος, so as good grace and favour as ever, even in the very fulnesse of it. They shew it, by three distinct degrees in Abssaloms receiving: 1 Pardoned he was, while he was yet in Geshur: 2 Reconciled, when he had leave to come home to his own house: 3 Repropitiate, when he was admitted to the Kings presence and kissed him. That made up all, then he had all again. And that is our very case.

2 Sam. 13. 39. 14. 23.

Nay indeed, that is not all. It is more than so: deus (here) is in the Text of Esay 17: and that imparts more. For, that word, is ever turned by εὐδοκία, and that is Christs own acceptation (in whom I am well pleased) and the very terme of it. And he that is so accepted, I know not what he would have more.

Match. 17. 5.

This is the benefit that fell at this time: and for this, that fell on the time, the time it self, it fell on, is, and cannot be but acceptable; even eo nomine, that at such a time, such a benefit hapned to us. And in this respect it ever hath, and ever shall be an acceptable welcome time, this; and holden as an high Feast: like as the benefit is high, that befell us on it. Festum, a feast, for the pardon: Festum duplex, for for the reconciliation: Festum magis duplex, for the being perfectly accepted to the favour of God, and by it reaccepting again our prime estate.

Nay (last) it is called not only Annus acceptus, but Annus Domini acceptus, or acceptus Domino: not only, the acceptable year; but, of the Lord, or to the Lord; (for so the Hebrew reads it, with the sign of the Dative; as if to GOD Himself it were so.) And, to Him, so it is; and to His holy Angels in heaven, so it is. For, if the receiving any one contrite sinner, by repentance, be matter of joy to the whole Court of Heaven; if the receiving of but one; what shall we think of the general receiving of the whole masse, which this day was effected? Luke 15. 10.

Now, if to heaven, if to God himself it be so; To earth, to us, shall it not be much more, whom much more it concerneth (I am sure?) God getteth nothing by it; we do: He is not the better for it, we are: Ever, the receiver, then the giver. The giver, more glory; but the receiver more joy. That if it be the joy of heaven, it cannot be but the Jubilee of the earth, even of the whole earth: Jubilare Deo omnis terra.

Psal 66. 1.

The Jubilee (ever) it began with no other sound, but even of a Cornet, made of the horns of a Ram. Of which horns they give no other reason, but that it was so, in reference to the horns of that Ram, that in the thicket was caught by the horns, and sacrificed in Isaacs stead, even as Christ was, in ours. To shew, that all our Jubilee hath relation to that special sacrifice, so plainly prefiguring that of Christs. Which feast of Jubilee began ever, after the High Priest had offered his sacrifice, and had been in the Sancta Sanctorum. As this Jubilee of Christ also took place, from His entering into the holy places made without hands, after His propitiatory Sacrifice offered up for the quick and the dead, and for all yet unborne, at Easter. And, it was the tenth day, that: and this (now) is the tenth day since.

Levit. 25. 9.

Joth. 6. 4.

Gen. 22. 13.

Heb. 9. 11.

The memorial, or mystery of which sacrifice of Christs, in our stead, is ever Caput latitiae, the top of our mirth, and the ignition of the joy of our Jubilee. Like as accipiam calicem salutaris, our taking the cup of Salvation, is the memorial of our being accepted, or received and taken again to Salvation. Wherewith let us also crown this Jubilee of ours. That so all the benefits of it, may take hold of us: specially the red-integration of the favour of God, and the assurance or pledge of our restitution to those joyes, and that Jubilee, that only can give content to all our desires when the time shall come of the restoring of all things.

Psal. 116. 13.

A
 BEFORE THE
Kings Majesty,
AT GREENWICH,
 On the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCXVIII.
 being WHITSUNDAY.

ACTS Chap. II.

Sed hoc est, quod dictum est, &c.

Verse 16. But this is that, which was spoken by the Prophet Joel.

17. And it shall be in the last days (saith God) I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesie, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dreame dreames.

18. And on my servants, and on mine hand-maids, I will pour out of my Spirit, and they shall prophesie.

19. And I will shew wonders in heaven above, and tokens in the earth beneath, blood, and fire, and the vapour of smoke.

20. The Sun shall be turned into darknesse, and the Moone into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come.

21. And it shall be, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be saved.

These words may well serve for a Sermon, this day: they were a part of a Sermon, preached as this day. The first Whitsun-sermon, that ever was: the first Whitsunday, that ever was: Saint Peter preached it. And this was his Text, out of the second Chapter of the Prophet Joel. As Christ, the last year, out of Esay: so Peter, this, out of Joel. Both took Texts: both, for the day, and for the present occasion.

The occasion of this here, was a lewd surmise given out by some, touching the gift of tongues, this day sent from heaven.

It shall be my first note. That look, how soone God from heaven had sent His fiery tongues upon His Apostles: the Divel from hell presently sent for his fiery tongues, and put them in the mouths of his Apostles, to disgrace and scoffe at those of Gods sending.

Ye may hear them speak (at the thirteenth verse:) Well fare this same good new wine; these good fellows fellows have been at it, and now they can speak nothing but outlandish: some little broken Greek or Latine they had, and now out it comes.

Thus, that which was indeed grande miraculum, they turned into grande ludibrium. Of the great Mystery of this day, they made a meere mockery. Those, that were baptized with the Holy Ghost, they traduced, as if they had souled themselves in hem wine. Here is the Holy Ghosts welcome into the world: This use doth the Devil make of some mens wits and tongues, to pour contempt on that, which God poureth forth, all that ever they can, even to work despite to the Spirit of Grace.

Math. 3. 11.

Being to make an apology for himself, and the rest, (and indeed, for the Holy Ghost) Saint Peter first prayes audience (at the 14. verse.) Then tells them soberly, they misse the matter quite (at the 15.) It was too early day, to fasten any such suspicion, upon any such men as they were (to be gone, before nine in the morning.) But, this he stands not on, as not worth the answering.

Heb. 10. 29.
The summe.

Here (at this Verse) he tells them, it was no liquor, this specially, no such as they furnished. If it were any, if they would needs have it one, it was the Prophet Joel, and none other, Something poured on, nothing poured in. Nothing, but the effusion of the Holy Ghost. This is it that was spoken by the Prophet Joel.

So, habemus firmiorem sermonem propheticum: and this, which seemed to happen thus on the sudden, it was long since foretold; and he alledges for it this text of the Prophet, that such a thing there should come to passe, an effusion of the Spirit, and that a strange one. And this they would finde it to be, this Prophecie (of the Spirit poured) this day fulfilled in their eares.

2 Pet. 1. 19.

Of which Text, the special points be two: 1 Of the Spirit pouring: 2 Of the end whereto.

The Division.
I.

The first I reduce to these four. 1 The Thing: 2 the Act: 3 the Party by whom: 4 the Parties upon whom. 1 De Spiritu meo, is the thing. 2 Effundam, the act. 3 Dicit Dominus, the party by whom. 4 Super omnem carnem, the parties upon whom it is poured.

Then the end whereto. And in that four more. The last end of all in the last word of all, salvabitur. That is the very end: and a blessed end, if by any means we may attain to it. Then are there three other conducting to this. Two main ones, and one accessory, but yet as necessary as the other. 1 Close to it, in the end, there is calling on the Name of the Lord: He that calleth on the Name of the Lord, shall be saved. 2 And farthest from it at the beginning, there is prophesying, to call upon us to that end: And my servants shall prophesie. 3 And, between both these, there is a Memorandum of the Great Day of the Lord. Which is not from the matter neither, nor more than needs. For then (at that day) we shall stand more in need of saving: if we perish then, we perish for ever. And the mention and memory of that Day, will make us not despise prophesying, nor forget invocation, but be both more attentive in hearing of prophesie, and more devout in calling on the Name of the Lord. So, it may well go for a third conducting means to our salvation.

Now to bring this to the Day. This (it is said) shall be in the last dayes. Which with S. Peter here, and with S. Paul (Heb. 1. 1.) yea and with the Rabbins themselves, are the dayes of the Messiah, So, of our Messiah CHRIST (to us) and of none others. Of whose dayes, this is the very last. For, having done His errand, He was to go up again, and to send His Spirit down, to do His, another while: which is the work of this day. As His first then, the raking of our flesh, so His last, the giving of His Spirit: the giving it abundantly, which is the effundam here.

It remaineth, that we pray to Him, who thus, of His Spirit poured forth this day, that He would vouchsafe on the same day to pour of it on us here: that we may so hold this Feast (the memory of it) and so hear the words of this Prophecie, as may be to his good acceptance, and our own saving in the great Day, the Day of the Lord.

Of the thing poured first. De spiritu meo, the Spirit of God. First of Him, to give Him the honour of His own Day.

I.
Of the Spirit pouring.
De Spiritu

The Spirit, is of Himself Author of life, and here is brought in, as Author of Prophecie. They both are in the Nicene Creed, 1 the Lord, and Giver of life, 2 and who spake by the Prophets. Life and speech have but one instrument, the spirit or breath both. Of it, these four.

1. Prophecie can come from no nature but Rational: The Spirit then, is natura rationalis. And determine it is, distinct plainly here two ways: 1 The Spirit, from Him whose the Spirit is; Him that sayes, de Spiritu meo. 2 That which is poured, from Him, that poureth it; Fusus à Fusore. Being then natura rationalis determinata, He is a Person (for a person is so defined.)

2. Secondly, effusion is a plain proceeding of that, which is poured: as spiration is so too, in the very body of the word spirit. So, a Person proceeding.

3. Thirdly, being a Person, and yet being poured out, He behoves to be God. No Person, Angel or Spirit, can be poured out, can be so participate. Not at all: but not upon all flesh, not dilated so farre. God only can be that. So, the Person, the proceeding, the Divinity of the Holy Ghost (all) in these words. And not a word of all this mine: but thus deduced, by S. Ambrose, and before, by Dysidimus Alexandrinus, S. Hieromes Master:

4. But fourthly, you will mark: It is not my Spirit, but of my Spirit. The whole Spirit, flesh could not hold: not all flesh. And parts it hath none. 1. Understand then, of my Spirit, that is, of the gifts and graces of the Spirit. Beames of this light: streames of this pouring. Otherwhere, others: here, the gift of prophecy and tongues.

Luke 4. 18.
The Text of the last year.

2. Which de Spiritu is also said, to keep the difference between CHRIST and us. Upon him the Spirit was: The Spirit of God upon me, last year. Upon us, not the Spirit: but, de Spiritu, of my Spirit only, this year.

2.
The Act, Effundam.

Cap. 1. 5.

John 7. 39.

The next is the act, effundam: In it four more: 1 The quality, in that it is compared to a thing liquid, fulsil, poured out; This seemes not proper. Pouring is, as it had been water; He came in fire. It would have been kindled, rather than poured. True, Saint Peter in proper termes makes his answer referre to their slander: and that was, that it was nothing but new wine, a liquor. Their objection being in a thing liquid, his answer behoved to be accordingly. And well it might, so: CHRIST had so expressed it: both lately in His promise, Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost within few dayes: And formerly, under the termes of waters of life (John 7.) where Saint Johns exposition is, This he spake of the spirit. Not (then) given, but to be given, straight upon CHRISTs glorifying, which is now this very day. The Holy Ghost then, is not all fire.

Deut. 32. 2.

And this quality falls well within the two graces, of 1 prophecie, and 2 invocation, here given. 1 Prophecie: Moses (the great Prophet) likened into the dew falling upon the herbs, or the raine poured on the grasse (Deut. 32.) And that likening is so usual, as [מורה Morah] the word in Hebrew for raine, is so for a Preacher too; that it poseth the Translators, which way to turn it: and even in that very Chapter of Joel, whence this Text is taken.

2 And, invocation is so too; a pouring out of prayer, and of the very heart in prayer.

3 And the third of the latter day may be taken in too. Then there shall be a pouring forth also of all the Phials of the wrath of God.

Psal. 103. 7.

Luke 22. 37.

Esay 6. 8.

2. The quality then first: the quantity, no lesse. For, pouring is a signe of plenty: effundam, not aspergam (the first prerogative of this day.) For, the Spirit had been given before this time: but never with such a largesse, sprinkled, but not poured. Never till now, in that bounty, that now. This was reserved for Christ. For, when there was copiosa sanguinis effusio on His part, there was likewise to be copiosa Flaminis effusio, on the Holy Ghosts. He, as liberal of his grace; as Christ of his blood. That there might be to us copiosa redemptio, betweene them both, it is effundam copiose in both.

3. Effundam tells us farther, the Spirit came not of himself: nor till He was thus poured out. It is no effluet, but effundam. Sic oportet implere, that so, order might be kept, in Him (in the very Spirit) and we by Him taught to keep it. Not to start out, till we be sent; nor to go on our own heads, but to stay till we be called. Not to leake out, or to run over; but to stay till we be poured out in like sort: Seeing CHRIST would not go unsent, Adiisec me, last year: Nor the HOLY GHOST run unpoured, this year: it may well become us to keep in, till we be poured and sent any year. And yet, the Spirit is no lesse ready to run, than God is to pour. One of these is no barre to the other. Ecce ego, mitte me. Ecce ego, Behold I am ready (saith Esay,) and yet, mitte me, Send me, for all that. Effluence, and Effusion, Influence, and infusion will stand together well enough.

4. Lastly, effundam is not, as the running of a spout. To pour, is the voluntary act of a voluntary Agent, who hath the vessel in his hand, and may pour little, or much; and may chuse whether He will pour out any at all, or no. As shut the heaven from raining: So, refrain the Spirit from falling on us.

1 Cor. 12.

Matth. 25. 15.

1 Cor. 12. 11.

2. And when He pours, He strikes not out the head of the vessel, and lets all go: but moderates His pouring, and dispenses His gifts. Pours not all, upon every one, nay, not upon any one, all: but upon some in this manner, upon some in that: Not to each, the same. And to whom the same, not in the same measure though: but, to some, five; to some two, to some but one talent. The Text is plain for this. There are diverse assignations in it: 1 To diverse parties, sonnes, servants, old men, and young men: 2 Of diverse gifts, prophecies, visions, and dreames. 3 And them, of diverse degrees: one clearer than the other; the vision, than the dreames. Singulis prout vult, at the Poursers discretion; to each as pleaseth Him best.

The party pouring.
Dicit Dominus.
Psal. 110. 1.

Rev. 22. 1.

The Party pouring is Dicit Dominus, the Lord that said. But, Dixit Dominus Domino meo: The Lord said to my Lord: Which of these? The later (Domino meo) My Lord, Davids Lord, and ours Dominum nostrum, in our Creed (that is) CHRIST. How appears that? directly at the thirty third verse after, He being now exalted by the right hand of God, and having received the promise of the HOLY GHOST from the Father, He hath poured out this that we now see and hear. CHRIST then. And not the Father? Yes, he too: For, of Him, Christ is said to receive it. Not only Dixit Dominus Domino meo; but, dedid Dominus Domino meo. And so, as in the nineteenth of Genesis, pluit Dominus a Domino: From the Lord, the Lord poured it. And but one effundam, with but one effusio on both; and with one spiration, He came from both. Both, with one effusio pour him: Both, with one spiration breath Him. It is expressly so set down, Revelation Chap. 22. The fountain of the water of life issued from the seat of God and of the Lamb. So have you here the whole Trinity: 1 Quis, 2 Quid, 3 a Quo; the Father, by the Sonne; or the Sonne from the Father, pouring out the Holy Ghost.

2. And may we not also finde the two natures of Christ here? Effundam is fundam ex. I will pour out: Out of what? what the cisterne into which it first comes, and out of which it is after derived ved to us? That is the flesh or humane nature of Christ: On which it was poured at his conception, fully to endow it, For in Him the fulnesse of the Godhead dwelteth bodily (mark that, bodily.) And it was given to him without measure, and of all his fulnesse we all receive. From this Cisterne, this day, issued the Spirit, by so many quills, or pipes (as it were) as there are several divisions, of the graces of the Holy Ghost. And so now we have both a Quo, and ex Quo. The Divinity, into this Humanity, pouring the Spirit, which from His flesh, was poured down, this day, super omnem carnem, upon all flesh. Which fitly brings in the next, Super omnem carnem.

Col. 2. 9.
John 1. 10.

On whom this pouring is (which is the last point:) Super omnem carnem. In which there are three doings, as the words are three: 1. Carnem first (that is) men. For doth God take care for Oxen (saith the Apostle) or for any flesh, but ours? No, not for any flesh; but the flesh which the Word did take. And, for that He doth.

The parties
upon whom.
*Super omnem
carnem*.
1 Cor. 9. 9.

But, we are Spirit too, as well as flesh: and, in reason, Spirit on Spirit, were more kindly. There is nearer alliance between them.

Yet you shall finde the other part (flesh) is still chosen.

1. First, to magnifie His mercy the more, that part is singled out, that seemeth farther removed, nay, that is indeed quite opposite to the Spirit of God here poured out. For, what is flesh? It is proclaimed (40. of Esay) It is grasse. And not gramen, but fanum, that is grasse withering, and fit for the Sithe. Is that the worst? I would it were: But caro peccati, sinful flesh sets it farther off, yet. Upon sinful flesh, He should have poured somewhat else, than His Spirit.

Super carnem.

So, two oppositions: 1. Flesh and Spirit absolutely in themselves. 2. Then, sinful flesh, and the Holy Spirit. All which commends His love the more, thus to combine things so much opposite. This first.

And withal (that, which right now I touched) to shew the introduction to this conjunction of these so farre in opposition either to other, even Verbum caro factum, that made this symbolisme. By which, a gate of hope was opened to us (by His incarnation) in spem, of our inspiration, which this day came in rem. For, His flesh exalted to the right hand of God, remembreth us, that were flesh of his flesh, and derived down this fountain of living water to it; saluens in vitam aeternam; Springing, and raising us with it, whence it came (for water will ever rise as high as the place from whence it came) that is, up to heaven, up to eternal life.

Hos. 2. 15.

Verse 33.

John 4. 14.

2. Super, upon it, Upon it, is without, on the outside of it. Had not fundam in, been better than fundam super: Into them, than upon them? Not a whit.

Super.

Indeed, both wayes, I finde the Spirit given. At CHRISTS baptism, the Dove came upon him. At His resurrection, insufflav, He breathed into them. And so hath He parted His Sacraments: Baptism is effundam super, upon us; from without: the Holy Eucharist, that is comedite, that goeth in. Upon the matter, both come to one. If it be poured on, it jokes in, pierces to the very centre of the soul (as, in Baptism, sume is washed thence, by it.) If it be breathed in, it is no sooner at the heart, but it works forth, out it comes again: Out at the nostrils in breath; out at the wrist in the beating of the pulse. So both (in effect) are one.

Luke 3. 23.
John 20. 22.

1. But it is Super here, for these reasons: First, that we may know, the graces of the Spirit; they are super, from without. In us, that is, in our flesh, they grow not: neither they nor any good thing, else. And not only super, from without; but Saint James his eyes, too, from above, from the Father of lights. Both these are in super: and but for these we might fall into a phanisie, they grew within us, and sprung from us, which God knoweth they do not.

James 1. 17

2. Another reason is, for that [upon] is the Proposition proper to initiation, into any new office. So is the manner, by some such outward ceremony upon, to initiate. By anointing, or pouring oyle upon. By induing [induemini] putting some robe or other ensigne upon. By imposition or laying hands upon. All upon Baptism (which is the Sacrament of our initiation) is therefore so done. So, the Dove came upon CHRIST. The tongues (here) upon these, to enter them, either, into their new offices.

Verse 31.

A third (last but not least) to enure them to this Proposition super, which many can but evil brook. No super, no superiority they; all even, all equal, fellowes and fellowes. The right hand, of fellowship, if you will, but not so much, as imposition of hands, super. For if super, then sub follows: if upon, then we under: if above, then we beneath. But no sub with some: submit neither head nor spirit to any. Yet, super Me, said CHRIST last year; and it may become any that became Him; it may well become super carnem. Super then must stand, and be stood upon: Confusion will come, if it be not.

Gal. 2. 9

Super carnem, super omnem carnem. Upon flesh, and upon all flesh. Not, some one: not Jewes flesh alone: In regard of whom this omnem is here specially put in. For, they had in a manner ingrossed the Spirit before, by a non valiter omni. And yet, upon them too; for, upon their sonnes, and their daughters (as it followeth:.) but upon them, now, no more than upon any other. This is a second prerogative of this Day. The first, effundam, that is. Before, sparingly sprinkled; now, plentifully poured. 2. Now again, super omnem: Before, upon but some; now indifferently, upon all.

*Super omnem
carnem*.

Psal. 147. 10

For so, when we say all, we mean, none is excluded, but now may have it. He hath put no difference between them and us (saith Saint Peter.) Non est distinctio (saith Saint Paul.) The partition is thrown down now. Go but to the letter of the Text. All flesh. 1. No Sex barren, upon sons and upon daughters: to either Sex. 2. No age: upon young men and upon old: The one, visum; the other, dreams.

Verse 18.

Acts 2. 5.

Psal. 76. 1. 67. 2

dreames. 3 No condition: on servants, as well as sonnes; on handmaids, no lesse than daughters. 4 No Nation: for (if ye mark) the Spirit is poured twice: upon their sonnes, in this; and again, upon His servants, in the next verse. His servants, whether they be their sonnes or not; whose sonnes soever they be: though the sonnes of them, that are (perhaps) strangers to the first covenant, (And yet, even then, God had ever his servants, as well, out of that Nation, as in it.)

Now, in signe that thus [upon all flesh,] they heard them speak the tongues of all flesh, even of every Nation under heaven. That, where before, a few in Jurie, now many, all the world over: No longer now, Notus in Judaea Deus: His way should be known upon earth, his saving health among all Nations.

Yet not promiscue though, without all manner limitation. No: the Text limits it. I must again put you in mind, of the two pourings mentioned in it. One, the super omnem carnem, in the 15. verse. The other, the second; super servos meos, in the next (the 18.) And super servos meos is the qualifying, of super omnem carnem. Upon all flesh (that is) all such as will be my servants; as will give in their names to that end; as will call upon me: Quicumque invocaverit, so concludes Joel. As will believe and be baptized; so concludes Saint Peter, here, his Sermon. This gives them the capacity, makes them vessels meet to receive this effusion. By which, all Turks, Jewes, Infidels, are out of the omnem: and counterfeit Christians, too; that professe to serve Him, but all the world sees whom they serve. And by this, much flesh is cut off from omnem carnem. But so with this qualifying, upon all. For, any other, I know not. And this for the pouring.

II.
The end where-
to.
Salvabitur.

And now, Uiquid effusio hac? To what end, all this? For it is not to be imagined this pouring was casual, as the turning over of a tub: nor, that the Spirit did run waste: then it were, iniquid perditio hac? An end it had. And that follows now: And your sonnes, &c. The Spirit is given to many ends; many middle, but one last; and that last in the last word, salvabitur; the end then of this pouring, is the salvation of mankind. Mankind was upon the point to perish, and the Spirit was poured, as a precious balm or water, to recover and to save it. So, the end of all is (and mark it well) that the Spirit may save the flesh, by the spiritualizing it. Not the flesh destroy the Spirit, by carnalizing it. Not the flesh weigh down the spirit, to earth, thither: but the spirit lift up the flesh, thither, to heaven, whence it came.

Means to that end.
1 Prophecies.
2 Prayer.

To this last, here are three middle conducting ends more. 1 Prophecies first: 2 Invocation last: both which are well here represented; three ways: 1 In the tongues (the symbols of the Holy Ghost, this day :) The one, Prophecies, being Gods tongues to us: the other, Invocation, being our tongue to God: 2 In the Spirit (both being acts of the Spirit, or breath :) Prophecies breathes it into us: Prayer breathes it out again. 3 In the pouring: Both pourings (after a sort :) that, which Prophecies doth infuse, pour in at the ears; Invocation doth resoundere, or pour forth back again in prayer, out of the heart.

Memory of the latter day.

And beside these two, a third there is, which is wedged in between them both, as stirring us, first and last, both to hear Prophecies more attentively, and to practice invocation more devoutly (which I wish may never depart out of our minds) the memory of the latter day.

Thus they stand, subordinate. That men may be saved, they are to call upon the Name of the Lord (that at least.) That they may so call to purpose, they are to be called on to it, and directed in it, by Prophecies. And that they might perform this, to all flesh, they were to speak with the tongues of all flesh; which was the gift (here) of this day (without just cause scoffed at) but, tongues are but as the cask, wherein Prophecies (as the liquor) is contained: I will set by the empty cask, and deale with Prophecies, the liquor in it only.

1 Prophecies.
Prov. 29. 23.
Esa. 32. 14. 15

Prophecies stands first in the Text, without which (saith Solomon) the people must needs perish. That saying (of the Prophet Esa.) is much used by the Fathers; Tenebra & palatio, donec effunderetur super nos spiritus de excelso. All is dark: men do but grope, till the Spirit be poured on us from above, to give us light, by this gift of Prophecies.

This terme is kept by Joel, as well when he speaks of Gods servants (that is) of us, as when of them and their sonnes: And ever after, in the New Testament, it is retained still as an usual terme, by the Apostles to the Corinthians; Ephesians, Thessalonians; all his Epistles through.

But not in the sense of foretelling things to come. For, so can it be verified only upon Agabus, Saint Philip daughters; and upon Saint John: which are too few, for so great an effusion, as this. That (indeed) was the chief sense of it, in the Old Testament: And well, while CHRIST was yet to come. CHRIST He was the top of all Propheticall predictions. Then, it had his place, that. But now, and ever since Christ is come, it hath in a manner lost that sense (at least, in a great part) and is not so taken in the New.

1 Cor. 10. 13. 14

The sense, it is there taken in (to expound this place of Peter, by another of Paul, citing this very same Text of the Prophet, Rom. 10.) is & propheticall (here) by quomodo predicabunt there, prophesying (that is preaching.) Whereby, after a new manner, we do prophesie (as it were) the meaning of ancient Prophecies: not make any new, but interpret the old, well; take off the vail of Moses face. Finde CHRIST, finde the My of the Gospel, under the types of the Law; apply the old prophecies, so as it may appear, the spirit of prophecies is the testimony of Jesus: And, he the best Prophet now, that can do this, best.

Exod. 34. 33.
2 Cor. 3. 13.
Revel. 19. 10.

Verse 31.
Psal. 116. 10.
Verse 34.

This sense, we prove by these in the Text. The Spirit was poured on them, and they did prophesie. What did they? How prophesied Saint Peter? He foretold nothing: All he did, was, he applied this place of the Prophet, to this Text. And a little beneath, the passage of the 16. Psalm to Christs resurre-resurrection. And, after that, the place of another Psalm to His ascension.

Psalm 110. 1.
Verse 11.

And the rest (on whom it was poured too) how prophesied they? All (we read) they did, was laquebantur Magnalia Dei, they uttered forth the wonderful things of God, but forecast not any thing, that we hide. So as, to prophesie (now) is to search out, and disclose the hidden things of the Oracles of God, and not to tell before-hand, what shall after come to passe.

But, what say you to Visions and dreams here? Little: they pertain not to us. The Text saith it not. You remember the two pourings: 1. One upon their sonnes: 2. The other upon his servants. This later, is it by which we come in. We are not of their sonnes; we claim not by that, God make us His servants; for, by that word, we hold.

Now, in this later pouring, on his servants (which only concerns us) visions and dreams are left out quite. If any pretend them now, we say with Jeremy (Cap. 23. Verse) 28. Let a dream go for a dream, and let my word (saith the Lord) be spoken as my word: Quid palea ad triticum, What mingle you chaffe and wheat? We are to lay no point of Religion upon them, now: Prophecie, preaching is it, we to hold our selves unto now. As for visions and dreams, transient, let them go.

But then, for prophecie in this sense of opening or interpreting Scriptures, is the spirit poured upon all flesh, so? Is this of Joel a proclamation for liberty of preaching, that all, young and old, men-servants, and maid servants, may fall to it? Nay: the free-stee, Saint Paul took order, for that betimes; cut them off, with his Nota mulieres. But what for the rest? may they? For, to this sense hath this Scripture beene wrested by the Enthusiasts of former ages; and still is, by the Anabaptists now. And by mistaking of it, way given to a foul error, as if all were let loose, all might claim, and take upon them (for sooth) to prophesie.

1 Cor. 14. 34

Nothing else this, but a malicious device of the Diuel, to pour contempt upon this gift. For, (indeed) bring it to this once, and what was this day falsely surmised, will then be justly affirmed, multo pleni (or cerebro vacui, whether you will; but multo pleni) drunken Prophets then, indeed; howbeit not with wine (as Esay saith) but with another as heady a humour, and that doth intoxicate the brain as much as any muste or new wine: Even of self-conceited ignorance, whereof the world grows too full. But it was no part of Joels meaning, nor Saint Peters neither, to give way to this phrensie.

Esay 1. 21

No? it it not plain? the Spirit is poured upon all flesh. True, but not upon all, to prophesie though. The Text warrants no such thing. In the one place it is: And, your sonnes shall: In the other, And my servants shall: But, neither is it, all their sonnes: nor all his servants shall. Neither (indeed) can it be. There must be some sonnes, and some servants, to prophesie too: to whom these Prophets may be sent: to whom this prophecie may come. All flesh may not be cut out into tongues; some left for eares: some auditors needs. Else a Cyclopian Church will grow upon us, where all were speakers, no body heard another.

Acts 1. 26
1 Cor. 14. 34

How then, shall the spirit be poured upon all flesh? well enough. The Spirit of prophecie, is not all Gods spirit; he hath more beside. If the spirit or grace of prophecie upon some: the spirit of grace and prayer (in Zachary) upon the rest. So, between them both, the spirit will be upon all flesh, and the proposition hold true: Prophetabunt must not make us forget invocaverit. All the spirit goes not away in prophesying, some left for that too: and there is the Quicumque (Quicumque invocaverit) and no where else.

Zach. 12. 10

But if Saint Peter will not serve, Saint Paul shall: He is plain, Ye may all prophesie one by one: What, the skippers of Holland and all? I know not. But (all) there, is plain. All, that is, all the Prophets. And, I wish, with all my heart (as did Moses) that all Gods people were Prophets: but till they be so, I wish they may not prophesie, no more would Moses neither. Now, in the same Epistle, Saint Paul holds it for a great absurdity, to hold, all are Prophets. With a kind of indignation he takes it, what are all Prophets? No more than all Apostles; as much one as another. Then if all be not Prophets: all may not prophesie (sure.) For, with the Apostle in the same place, the operation (that is, the act of prophesying) the administration (that is, the office or calling) and the grace (that is, the enabling gift) these three, are ever to go together. No act in the Church lawfully done, without them all. Then the Apostles [you all may] is, all you may that have the gift.

1 Cor. 14. 31

Num. 11. 29

1 Cor. 12. 29

And not, you that have it neither (the gift) unless you have the calling too: For, as God sent gifts, He gave men also, some Apostle, some Prophets. Men for gifts; as well, as gifts for men. Misit, in Christ, as well as unxit (last year.) And, in His servants, vocavit, as well as Talenta dedit. Not to be parted, these.

1 Cor. 12. 28:
Marth. 25. 14

I conclude then. Et prophetabunt: but such as have been at the door of the Tabernacle, as have been the sonnes of the Prophets; men set apart for that end. And yet even they also, so as they take not themselves at liberty, to prophesie whatsoever takes them in the tongue; the dreams of their own heads, or the visions of their own hearts; but remember their super, and know, there be spirits also, to whom their spirits be subject. So much for the seventeenth and eighteenth Verses.

1 Cor. 14. 32

But how now come we thus suddenly, to the signes of the later day, and to the day it self? For they follow close (you see.) It is somewhat strange, that from Et prophetabunt, he is straight at Domus-day, without more ado.

The meane between both:
The later day;

The reasons which I finde, the Father render of it, are these: First the close joyning of them, is to meet with another dream that hath troubled the Church much. And that is, that it may be, there will be another pouring yet, after this, and more Prophets rise still. Every other while, some such upstart spirits there are, would fain make us so believe. Here is a discharge for them.

No (saith Joel) look for no more such dayes as this, after this: Therefore to this day, he joynes immediatemediatly; from this day, He goes presently to the later day, (as if He said, you have all you shall have.) When this pouring hath run so farre as it will, then cometh the end; when this is done, the world is done; no new spirit, no new effusion; this is the last. From CHRIST'S departure, till His return again; from this day of Pentecost (a great day and a notable) till the last great and notable day of all, between these two dayes, no more such day. Therefore, in the beginning of the Text, He called them the last dayes, because no dayes to come after them. No pouring to be looked for from this first day, of those last. No other but this, till dies novissimus novissimorum, the very last day of all; till He pour down fire to consume all flesh, that, by the fire this day kindled by these fiery tongues, shall not be brought to know Him, and call upon His Name.

A second is, being to speak by and by of salvabitur, that we should be saved, He would let us see, what it is we should be saved from. That helpeth much, to make us esteem of our saving. Saved then from what? From blood, and fire, and the smolder of smoke; that is, from the heavy figures here: And from that (which is after these, and beyond all these is the great and terrible day of the Lord. This sight of unde, from whence, will make us apprise our saving at a higher rate, and think it worth our care, then, in that day to be saved.

2 Cor. 5. 11.

And last, it is set here, per modum stimuli, to quicken us, Ut scientes terrorem hunc, saith Saint Paul, that entering into a sad and sober consideration of it, and the terror of it, we might stir up our selves by it, to prepare for it. And set it is between both, to dispose us the better to both. To that which is past (& prophetabunt) to awake our attention to that: and to that which follows (invocaverit) to kindle our devotion in that, and so by both, to make sure our salvation.

The day of the Lord, the Prophet calls it (Dies Domini), as it were opposing it, to dies serui, to our dayes here. As if he said, these are your dayes, and you use them (indeed) as if they were your own. You pour out your selves into all riot; and know no other pouring out but that: you see not any great use of prophesying; think it might well enough be spared: you speak your pleasures of it, and say, multo pleni, or to like effect, when you list; These are your dayes. But, know this, when you are done, God hath His day too, and His day will come at last; and it will come terribly when it comes.

Jer. 5. 31.

When that day comes, how then? Quid fiet in novissimo, the Prophets ordinary question, what will ye do at the last? How will you be saved, in die illo, in that Day?

We speak sometime of great dayes here; alas, small in respect of this. There is matter of fear sometime in these of ours: Nothing to the terror of this: Great it is, and notable, as much for the fear, as for any thing else in it. This, a terrible one indeed, & quis potest sustinere? who can abide it? saith Joel in this very chapter. Look to it then. On whom He poureth not His Spirit here, on them He will pour somewhat else there, even the Phials of his wrath: possibly before, some; but then all, certainly.

And that you may not only hear of this day, but see somewhat to put you in mind of it, Ecce Signa: terrible signes shall come upon earth, sword and fire: from the sword pouring out of blood; from fire, a choaking vapour of smoke, or (as the Hebrew is) a pillar of smoke: which then doth palmizare, goeth up straight like a pillar or a palm-tree, when the fire increaseth more and more: for when it abateth, it boweth the head and decayeth, which this shall never do.

Nay farther, wonders in heaven. For these tongues of heaven thus despised, heaven shall shew it self displeased; too; the lights of heaven (as it were) for a time put out, for contempt of the heavenly light, this day kindled. The Sunne dark, as if he hid his face: the Moone red as blood, as if she blushed, at our great want of regard, in this, a point so nearly concerning us.

For (indeed) these Eclipses, though they have their causes in nature, as the rain-bow also hath: Yet, what hinders, but as the rain-bow, so they may be signes too, and have their meaning in Scripture, assigned; and even this meaning here? This I see, that all flesh are smitten with a kind of horror and heaviness, when they happen to fall out: as if they portended somewhat, as if that they portended, were not good: for dies atri, they have been and are reckoned, all the world over.

Matth. 13. 8.

But these are but the beginnings of evils, scarce the dawning of that day: But, when the day it self cometh, the great day, then it will pour down, and who (saith Joel) may abide it? A fair Item for them, that despise Prophecies; and so doing, make void the Counsel of God, against their own souls.

I have much marvelled, why on this Sunday (Whit-sunday, as we call it) the day of the White Sun, the Prophet should present the Black Sun thus, unto us. But the Prophet did nothing, but as inspired by the HOLY GHOST: which makes me think, he thought the fire of that day, would make the fire of this burn the clearer: and, that pouring down make this pouring passe the readier: that he thought that day, a good meditation for this, and for such I commend it to you, and so leave it: And come to invocaverit, the only means left us now, to escape it.

Quicunque invocaverit.

I dare not end with Prophetabunt, or with this; I dare not omit, but joyn invocaverit to them. For what? From Prophetabunt, come we to Salvabitur straight, without any medium between? No, we must take Invocaverit in our way: no passing to salvation, but by and through it. For what, is the pouring of the spirit, to end in preaching; and preaching to end in it self (as it doth with us, a circle of preaching, and in effect nothing else) but poure in prophesying enough, and then all is safe? No: there is another yet, as needful, nay more needful to be called on (as the current of our Age runs) and that is, Calling on the Name of the Lord.

This, it grieveth me to see, how light it is set; nay, to see how busie the Devil hath been, to pour contempt contempt on it, to bring it in disgrace with disgraceful termes : to make nothing of Divine Service, as if it might be well spared, and invocaverit (here) be stricken out.

But mark this Text well, and this invocation we make so slight account of, sticks close, is so locked fast to Salvabitur : closer and faster, than we are aware of.

Two errors there be, and I wish them reformed : One, as if prophefying were all we had to do, we might dispense with invocation, let it go, leave it to the Queere. That is an error : Prophefying is not all ; Invocaverit is to come in too : we to joyn them, and joynly to observe them, to make a conscience of both : It is the Oratory of prayer poured out of our hearts, shall save us, no lesse than the Oratory of preaching, poured in at our eares.

The other is, of them that do not wholly reject it, yet so depresse it, as if incomparison of prophefying, it were little worth. Yet (we see) by the frame of this Text, it is the higher end : the calling on us by propheticie, is but that we should call on the Name of the LORD. All prophefying, all preaching, is but to this end. And indeed Propheticie is but gratia gratis data : and (ever) gratus data is for gratum faciens ; a part and a special part wherof is invocation. There is then, as a conscience to be made of both ; so a like conscience to be made of both : not to set up the one, and magnifie it, and to turn our back on the other, and vilifie it. For, howsoever we give good words of invocation ; yet what our conceit is, our deeds shew.

I love not to dath one religious duty against another ; or (as it were) to send challenges between them. But, as much as the Text saith, so much may I say : and that is, that it hath three special prerogatives, by this verse of the Prophet.

First, it is effundam (ours) properly ; and effundam spiritum meum, the pouring out of our spirit (to answer that of God's Spirit in the Text.) Prophetabunt is not ours, none of our act, but the act of another. The stream of our times tends all to this. To make Religion nothing, but an auricular profession, a matter of ease, a meer sedentary thing : and our selves, meerly passive in it ; sit still, and hear a Sermon, and two Anthems, and be saved : as if, by the act of the Queere, or of the Preacher, we should so be (for, these be their acts) and we do nothing our selves, but sit and suffer : without so much as any thing done by us, any effundam on our parts at all ; not so much as this, of calling on the Name of the Lord.

2. The second : This hath the quicunque. We would fain have it, quicunque prophetiam audiverit, he that hears so many Sermons a week, cannot choose but be saved : But it will not be. No : here stand we preaching, and hearing Sermons ; and neither they that hear prophefying, nay, nor they that prophesie themselves, can make a quicunque of either. Witnesse, Domine, in nomine tuo prophetavimus, and LORD thou hast preached in our streets, and yet it would do them no good : Nescio vos, was their answer for all that.

Math. 7. 22.
Luke 13. 26.

And yet how fain would some be a prophefying ? It would not save them, though they were : and is it not a preposterous desire ? we love to meddle with that pertains not to us, and will do us no good : that, which is our duty, and would do us good, that care we not for.

Tongues were given for propheticie. True : but, no quicunque there, for all that : but to whom none are given to propheticie, to them yet are there given to invoke. And there comes it in, the quicunque lies there : De Spiritu meo super omnem carnem, here it comes in ; at invocation, not at the other. Let it suffice ; it is not quicunque prophetaverit here, Quicunque invocaverit it is. The Prophet saith it, the Apostles say it both, na: & iav : Peter, here ; Paul, Rom. 10. 13.

Last, this is sure ; invocaverit is ἐξουδυνωσται, it stands nearest, it joynes closest to salvabitur : Both one breath, one sentence : the words touch, there is nothing between them. Salvabitur is not joyned hard to prophetabunt ; it is removed farther off, To invocaverit it is, a degree nearer at least, Nay, the very next of all.

The Text shews this (in a fort) but the thing it self more : for when all comes to all, when we are even at last cast, salvabitur or no salvabitur, then, as if there were some special vertue in invocaverit, we are called upon, to use a few words or signes to this end, and so sent out of the world with invocaverit in our mouths. Dying, we call upon men for it ; living, we suffer them to neglect it. It was not for nothing, it stands so close, it even touches salvation : It is (we see) the very immediate act next before it.

And yet I would not leave you in any error concerning it : To end this point ; shall invocaverit servethen ? needs there nothing but it ? no faith, no life ? Saint Paul answers this home : He is direct Rom. 10. How can they call upon him unlesse they believe ? So, invocation presupposeth faith. And as peremptory he is, 2 Tim. 2. Let every one that calleth on (nay, that but nameth) the name of the Lord, depart from iniquity : so, it presupposeth life too. For, if we incline to wickednesse in our hearts, God will not hear us. No invocation (that) not truly so called ; a provocation rather. But put these two, faith and recedit ab iniquitate to it, and so, who so calleth upon him, I will put him in good Sureties, one Prophet, and two Apostles, both to assure him, he shall be saved.

Rom. 10. 14.
2 Tim. 2. 19.

Psal. 66. 18.

And that is it, we all desire, to be saved. Saved, indefinitely. Apply it to any dangers, not in the Day of the Lord only, but even in this our Day : For, some terrible dayes we have even here. I will set you of one ; The signes here tell down, bring it to my mind : A day we were saved from (the Day of the Powder-treason) which may seeme here in a fort to be described, blood and fire, and the vapour or smoke : a terrible day sure, but nothing to the Day of the Lord.

From that we were saved : but we all stand in danger, we all need saving, from this. When this day comes, another manner of fire, another manner of smoke. That fire never burnt ; that smoke never never rose : but, this fire shall burn and never be quenched; this smoke shall not vanish, but ascend for ever. I say no more, but, in that, in this, in all, Qui invocaverit, salvus erit; Invocation rightly used, is the way to be safe.

This then I commend to you. And of all invocations, that which King David doth commend most, and betake himself to, as the most effectual and surest of all : and that is, Accipiam calicem salutaris, & nomen Domini invocabo : To call on his Name, with the cup of salvation taken in our hands. No invocation, to that. That, I may be bold to adde (which is all that can be added) Quicumque calicem salutaris accipiens, nomen Domini invocaverit, salvus erit. Another effundam yet, this.

1. Why, what vertue is there in the taking it, to help invocation? A double. For whether we respect our sins, they have a voice, a cry, and an ascending cry, in Scripture assigned them, they invoke too, they call for somewhat; even for some fearful judgement to be poured down on us : and I doubt, our own voices are not strong enough, to be heard above theirs.

But blood, that also hath a voice : especially innocent blood, the blood of Abel, that cries loud in God's ears : but nothing so loud as the blood whereof this cup of blessing is the communion; the voice of it will be heard above all : the cry of it will down any cry else. And, as it cries higher : so it differs in this, that it cries in a far other key; for far better things than that of Abel : not for revenge, but for remission of sins; for that, whereof it is itself the price and purchase, for our salvation in that great and terrible day of the Lord, when nothing else will save us, and when it will most import us; when if we had the whole world to give, we would give it for these four syllables, salvabitur, shall be saved.

2. But it was not so much for sin, David took this cup; as to yield God thanks for all his benefits. In that case also, there is special use of it : and both fit us. As the former, of drowning of our sins cry; so this also. For, to this end, are we here now met to render publicly and in solemn manner, our thanksgiving; for His great favour this day vouchsafed us, in pouring out His Spirit; and with it, His saving health upon all flesh, all that call upon him : then, to take place, when we shall have special use of it, in the Great Day, the Day of the Lord. And very agreeable it is, per hunc sanguinem, pro hoc Spiritu, for the pouring out of this his Spirit, to render Him thanks with the blood, that was poured out to procure it [And this is our last effundam, and a real effundam too :] For this effusion, of both, the one and of the other, and for the hope of our salvation, the work both of the one, and of the other.

To the final attainment whereof, by His holy word of Prophecy, by calling on his Name, by this Sacrament of His blood poured out, and of His Spirit poured out with it, He brings us, &c.

SERMON PREACHED

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At GREENWICH,

On the XVI. of May, A. D. MDCXIX.

being WHIT-SUNDAY.

A c t s, Chap. X. Ver. XXXIV, XXXV.

Apetiens autem Petrus os suum, dixit: In veritate comperi, quia non est personarum acceptor Deus:

Sed in omni gente, qui timet Eum, et operatur iustitiam, acceptus est illi.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said: Of a truth I perceive, that God is not acceptor of persons:

But in every Nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him.

Forgot not, that we celebrate, to day, the coming of the Holy Ghost: and I go not from it. You shall find in the next Chapter, at the fiftenth, that, in this Text, belongeth a Coming of the Holy Ghost.

For, at the uttering of these very words, as Saint Peter began to speak them, the Holy Ghost fell upon all that heard them. It (is indeed) the second solemn coming of the Holy Ghost: That, in the second chapter, was the first; and this, the second that ever was.

Of which twain, this is the Coming that comes home to us: and that, two ways: 1. One, in respect of the Parties, on whom: 2. The other, in respect of the Time, when. The Parties: For, those, whom the Holy Ghost came on before, were Gentiles, indeed, but yet Profelytes, that is, half Jewes: Out of every Nation under heaven: but that came to Jerusalem to worship: and the same was the case of the Eunuch in the eighth Chapter, and not a right Gentile among them: But here now, are a sort of very Gentiles, indeed, in paris naturalibus, such as we and our Fathers were: No Profelytes, ever. This Centurion, the Ante-signanus, the Standard-bearer to us, and to all that were meere Heathen men indeed; and this coming, our coming properly. Never, is kinde, never, to very Gentiles indeed, till now.

Verse 1.

It is well sorted (you see:) On the Jewes and Profelytes, at Jerusalem, their City; On the Gentiles, at Casarea, Casars City, and of the Cities in Palestine, fitting the Gentiles best.

1.
Jon. 1.3.
Verse 5.

Well observed it is about the calling of the Gentiles, That that, in the Old, and this in the New Testament, they came (both) from one place; from Joppe, both. Thence, loosed Jonas to Ninive: Thence, set out Peter to Casarea.

2.
Esay 36. 13.
Luke 2. 1.

Secondly: that, Casarea is the Ninive (as it were) of the New Testament. Ninive, was the City of the great King of the Gentiles, at that time: Casarea Casars City, as great a King over the Gentiles, as this; from whom went a commandment, that the world should be taxed.

3.
Mat. 16. 17, 13.
Acts 11. 13.

Thirdly: that, was performed, by Jonas; this by Bar-jonas: So, is Saint Peter called by our Saviour, when he made his confession, that CHRIST was the Sonne of GOD: and that was at Casarea. Where, what he confessed, then, he comes to preach, now. That of Jonas, an Omen (as it were) of this (here) of Saint Peter. Jonas and Bar-jonas from Joppe they went both: Both from one place; both to one end; both, to convert the Gentiles; to shew, that GOD had given them also repentance to life.

Jonas 3. 4.

Alway, this, the better. For Jonas at Ninive, he ends with Ninive shall be destroyed. Bar-jonas, at Casarea, with Acceptus est illi: that, the end of the Text. Or, if you will go to the end of the Sermon, the ends, shall obtain remission of sins, as good is it, every way.

So the Parties fit well: The Time, as well. The Holy Ghost here came upon them, as they were at a Sermon, even as we now are. Peter opened his mouth, they stood attentive; the HOLY GHOST came down. That, to be here, is a disposition to receive the HOLY GHOST. And, it may please GOD, the like may befall us, being occupied now, as they then were.

The Summe.

Of that Sermon, these are the first words. Of which words, what can be said more to their praise, than that which the Angel saith of them, the next Chapter at the fourteenth verse? That Peter being sent for, should at his coming, speak words to Cornelius, by which both he, and his household should be saved. Those words, the Angel there spake of, that Peter should speak, are these, I have read: GOD of his goodnesse send them the same effect.

In veritate comperi, shews, they are a comperitum est, and that is authenticall with a Teste: So is this Teste Cornelio & tota familia; witness he and his whole family and friends. Such are most praised; for they are animata exemplo, have a soul put into them by example. Specially, when they be so reduced to a singular, as that singular afterward is reduced to a general: Both which are in this. Best preaching of a Text, when the Commentary stands before it; as here: For, what is in the Text propounded, was fulfilled in the auditory, yea they went.

As fulfilled in them in particular, so extended to all in general: for it hath an omni gente put to it: that nothing was done to him there, but the same shall be done to any other. Any, of any Nation, that shall be found in like sort disposed, as (we find) he was: that is, whose prayers and almes shall come up into remembrance before GOD. GOD shall not be wanting to them, but provide them of farther means requisite to their salvation.

Psal. 147. 9.
Matth. 10. 29.

It is a thing well besitting the providence of GOD; all His creatures, when he hath made them, to see them provided of such things, as are needful for them. As He doth (saith the Psalme) for the young ravens; (saith the Gospel) for the poor sparrows valued, two of them, at a farthing: Naturæ rerum minimarum non destituit DEUS, the smallest things that be, he leaves them not destitute?

Jon. 4. 10, 11.

.. If not them, His half-farthing creatures, much lesse men (as He is pleased to speak with the least) more worth than many sparrows. So, GOD argues with Jonas; if he made such ado for his gourd, which sprung up in one night, and withered in another, should not GOD spare Ninive, wherein there was so many thousands, that knew not their right hand from their left, Gentiles though they were.

Matth. 5. 45.

Mal. 4. 2.

And, if his care extend to all men, and He make His raine to fall, and His Sonne to shine upon the evil and unkind, shall He not bring the raine of His Word, (as Moses calls it, Deut. 32.) to fall on them, and make His Sun of righteousness (as Malachi calls it) to arise upon them that fear him? A view whereof we may take in this family here: even of the Sun of righteousness, the white Sun, rising upon one that feared GOD, with all his household, gave much almes, and prayed to GOD daily.

Not written by him, this: but not written for him only, that it was Whit-sunday with him; but for us also, so whom it shall likewise be, if we be of gente Cornelia, expresse and follow him in that, which was accepted of him.

The Division.

Two points we have to proceed on: 1 The first, here is a point newly perceived by Saint Peter. 2 The second, what that was. A point newly perceived in these, 1 In veritate comperi of a truth I perceive. 2 What the point was in these, that in every Nation, &c.

I.

In that Saint Peter saith, Truly I now perceive, as if before he had not, (as indeed he had not: For he was in the mind before, that but in una gente; but now he perceives, that in omni gente is the truer revelation.) That, even to Saint Peter, there were some things incomperta, something not perceived at first, that came to be perceived after.

II.

Then, an instance: What that was. And it was, about GOD's accepting, Both wayes: Præteritum, what GOD accepts not; Positivum, what He accepts. Accepts not persons, that is once: But accepts of such as fear him, and work righteousness, of what Nation soever (be he an Italian;) of what condition soever (be he a Centurion;) All is one.

Of which two, the one [fear] is an affection within, of the heart. The other [worketh righteousness] is an action without, of the hand. Cornelius's heart, and Cornelius's hand: these they be. Whence we shall shall learn three points more : 1 One, how we may be accepted to God, if we be, as Corinthia here was ; and I would, we so were : 2 The other, that, when all is done, all is but accepting though Except He could, to our fear and works both, and so, is not bound ; but accept He will though, of His grace and goodnesse, and (as it follows immediately the next verse) for His words sake which he sent, preaching peace, by Iesus, who is Lord over all.

The last, whereunto accepted : and that (as appeareth in the XLVII. verse) was to the Sacrament, and by it, to the remission of sins, and to the receiving the Holy Ghost in a more ample measure. Opus dici, the proper of this Day.

III

Of a truth I perceive. He that saith, Of a truth I perceive now, in effect (as it were) saith before, He did not so. For, I perceive now, is the speech of one that is come to perceiving of that, which before he perceived not.

On this we pitch first. That so great an Apostle, for all Tu es Petrus, and Rogavi pro te, and Pasce oves meas, dorth ingenuously confesse, that (now) he had found that, which till now he had not. For, since the beginning of the Chapter, he had not. So that all his comperi's were not yet come in. By like, his chaire was not yet made, or he had not yet taken hanfel of it. But how it comes to passe after, at Rome, I know not : at Casarea, we see, it was not so. And they, that in the next Chapter, called him coram, to answer this Sermon : Sure they seeme (as then) not to have been fully perswaded, that S. Peter could perceive all things, and not misse in any.

Job though in misery, yet in scorn saith to some in his time, Indeed you, you are the only men, you perceive all. Moses did not so : there was a case, wherein he was nesciens quid de eo facere deberet, Moses knew not what he should do, Numb. 15. There was a case, whereof Elisha was faine to say, Et dominus non nuntiavit mihi, God had not shewed it him (2 Reg. 4.) But when God did, might not Moses and he both have said, as Peter doth here, Of a truth, before I did not, but now I do perceive ? Yea, but this is Old Testament.

And, was it not in the New ? There Caiaphas he saith, Tu scis, you perceive nothing : He perceived all. But Cephas he saith, he perceived not all : For, here he now saith, he perceiveth something, and all his comperi's came not at once. So saith Peter ; and so Paul, All our knowledge is in part, and so is all our prophesying too, and put himself in the number.

Of a truth then we perceive, Saint Peter comes nothing near his Successor (that would be.) He perceives all that is to be perceived : at once : can have nothing added to his knowledge, from the first instant, he is set down in Cathedra ; can have no new comperi, his comperi's come in all together, gets Caiaphas's knowledge by sitting in Cephas's chaire.

(They begin to scorne this themselves, now, and pray him to get a good General Counsel about him, and he shall perceive things never the worse.)

But, it is not this only, they differ in : In something beside. For, Peter took Cornelius up from the ground. His Successor let Cornelius's Lord and Master, lye still hardly. Not a Captain of Casarea, he ; but even Cesar himself. Of a truth we may perceive nothing like Cephas in this neither.

The woman at the Well-side, said, the Messias when he comes he will tell us all. Yet, when he came, he told them not all at once. Even to Tu es Petrus, He said Tu nescis modum, scis autem post hac, and of those Post hac's, this here was one. As they should be able to bear (for, all, they were not then able :) And as it should be for them, for, it was not for them to know all, nor the times and the seasons, and such other things as the Father had put in his own power.

I speak it for this, that even some, that are farre enough from Rome, yet with their new perspective, they think, they perceive all. Gods secret decrees, the number and order of them clearly ; are indeed too bold, and too busie with them. Luther said well, that every one of us hath by nature a Pope in his belly, and thinks he perceives great matters. Even they, that beleve it not of Rome, are easily brought to believe it of themselves. And out they come with their Comperi's, with their great confidence propound them. But, Comperi is one thing : but in veritate comperi, another comperi, they may say, and that may be doubted of : but, but in veritate comperi, that is it.

We may take up the Text a point further. In veritate comperi will bear two senses. 1 One I perceive that, I did not, before : 2 The other, I perceive that, the contrary whereof, I did conceive before. Not to perceive, is but to be ignorant : But Saint Peter, in this, had not only been ignorant, but had positively held the quite contrary, ad oppositum, Quod non ex omni gente at any hand. At the fourteenth verse before, for the Jewish meats (we see) he contests with God : Not I Lord, No heathens meat ; I never eat any. And at the twenty eighth, no lesse unlawful to eat with Heathen men.

Ignorance is but privative : this, is positive, and so, an error. An error in the great Mystery of godlinesse, a part whereof was preached unto the Gentiles ; that they also had their part in Christ. And, this is not his error alone : The Apostles and Brethren seeme to have been in the same ; they convinced him for his new Comperi, and he was faine to answer for it. That for the time, generally it was (this error) (and (for ought we know) Saint Stephen, that was stoned before this, departed the world, in the opinion of In una, not omni gente : for, then (sure) this word was not perceived, not received publicly.

Did not the High Priest offer, as well for the errors, as for the transgressions of the people? And is not Christ made to us, by God, wisdome, against the one, as well as righteousnesse against the other? It was Saint Peters case here.

Phil. 3. 12.

This only we are to look to; that with Saint Peter, we be not wilful, if there come a clear comperi: but as ready to relent in the one, as to repent of the other. That, when we be shewed our error, we open our eyes to perceive it; and when we perceive it with Saint Pettr here, we open our mouths to confesse it. And that we do it with an open mouth, and not between the teeth, but acknowledge it plainly, it was otherwise than we thought. I verily thought (saith Saint Paul) I ought to do, that which now, all the world should not make me to do. This is Saint Pauls; I now comprehend, or rather am comprehended (for καταμαρτυρομαι will bear both) of which before I could not. This is Saint Peters retraction. Conclude then, if we happen to be in some points otherwise minded, God will bring us to the knowledge, even of them. Only in those whereto we are come, and whereof we are agreed on all sides, that we proceed by one rule, make a conscience of the practice of such truths, as we agree of; and those we do not, shall soon be revealed unto us, and we shall say even of them, In veritate comperi.

II.
What that Point is P.
vatic.
1 God is no acceptor of persons
What is meant by person.
1 Sam. 16. 6.

What was this, that Saint Peter formerly had not, but now did perceive? That God is no acceptor of persons. Let us take with us, what is meant by Persons. For, he that feareth God is a person; Cornelius was a person; so were all the persons in his household. The word in all the three tongues, is taken as we take it, when we set personal against Real, oppose the cause to the person: under it comprehending whatsoever is beside the matter or cause. The Greek and Hebrew properly signifie the face; that (we know) shews it self first, and if it shew it self well, is munda commendatio, carries us, though it say never a word; as in Eliab, the goodlinesse of his person moved even Samuel. Under the face then, we understand, (as I may say, and as we use to call it in apparel) the facing: under the person, all by respects that do personate, attire or mask any, to make him personable; such as are the Countrey, Condition, Birth, Riches, Honour, and the like. And this person thus taken, of a truth we daily perceive, that in omni gente men accept of this, and in a manner, of nothing else but this: all goes by it. Well, with God, it is otherwise, and with men it should be: God accepts them not, nor of any men, for them. This is the comperi.

Deut. 10. 17.
Job 34. 19.
1 Sam. 16. 7.
2 Chron. 19. 7.

And is this it? Why, this was no news. Was Peter ignorant of this? It is not possible; I will never believe, but he had read the five books of Moses: why there it is expressly set down (Deut. 10.) totidem verbis. Why, by the very light of nature Eliab saw it, and set it down too, Job 34. No not the person of Princes. In Samuels choise of David, there it is, 1 Sam. 16. And King Jehosaphat gave it in his charge. 2 Chron. 19. and in other places beside: and how could he but know this?

You will say: Saint Peter knew it before; but not with a comperi, as now he doth. And (indeed) many things we know, by book, by speculation (as we say) and in grosse, which when we come to the particular experience of, we use to say, yea, I know it indeed, as if we had not known it, at least not so known it before. The experimental knowledge, is the true comperi in veritate, when all is done. Was this it?

Psalm 113. 7.

No: for, had he not experience of this, and lay away his book? Have not all experience daily? That God, in dealing his gifts of nature: Outward, Beauty, Stature, Strength, Activenessse: inward, Wit to apprehend, Memory to retain, Judgement to discern, Speech to deliver: that He puts no difference; but without all respect of persons, beflows them on the child of the mean, as soon, as of the mighty? So is it in wealth and worldly preferment, He lifts the poor out of the dust; Nay (you will bear with it, it is the Holy Ghosts own terme) the dinghil, to set him with Princes. So is it, in his judgements; which light as heavie, yet more hevie otherwise, on the great, than on the small; and shew that that way and every way, there is with him no respect of persons. And, no man hath better experience of this, than he that spake it, than Peter himself, that without any respect, of a poor Fisher-man, was accepted to be an Apostle, the chief of the Apostles. Saint Paul saith well: What they were in times past, it makes no matter, God accepts no mans person: This they are now.

Gal. 2. 2.
Gal. 2. 6.

What shall we say then? That, though he could not but know the general truth of this; yet was he once of the mind, that this general truth might admit of some exceptions; one at the least. Not, of persons, true: but Nations are not Persons; it held not in them. Of one Nation, God accepted before others, and that Nation was the Jewes. You only have I known of all the Nations of the earth (saith God in Amos.) And Non taliter fecit omni Nationi: which non taliter, they took to be of the nature of an entail, to Abrahams seed; that God was tied to them, and so to accept of In una gente, before and more than of all the rest.

Amos 3. 2.
Psalm 148. 10.

This had runne in Saint Peters head, and more than this. But now, here comes a new Comperi: He perceives, he was wrong: And if you aske, how he perceived it? By relation of Cornelius's vision of the Angel; and by conferring it with his own. He saw, his vision was now come to passe: Moses's unclean birds and beasts are become clean all; all, to be eaten; now: and the Gentiles whom he held for no lesse unclean, to be eaten with, and to be gone in unto. All in one great beet, omni gente and all. That the Nation also comes to be understood under the word person, no lesse than the rest; and none to be respected or accepted of God, for being in one corner of the beet, (that is, of one countrey) more than of another; that in CHRIST, neither Jew nor Gentile; all is one: and the black^a Ethiopian, or the ^bwhite Italian, ^cthe Arospagite in his long robe; or the Centurion in his short mantle of military habit; all conditions, all Nations, are in all persons. God hath shut up all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. And good reason for it, if it be but that of the Apostles own framing (Gal. 3. 17.) If the Law which came four hundred years after, could not disannul the Covenant made with Abraham so long before; by the same way, by a better consequence, neither could the Covenant with Abraham make the promise of God of none effect; the promise, that was made in Paradise, more than four times four hundred years before that of Abrahams, to the woman, and to her whole seed.

^b Verse 2.
^c Acts 17. 34.
Rom. 12. 33.

The vision, Saint Peter saw, was at Joppe: he was gone as farre from Jewrie, as there was any land, hard to the Sea-side, to the very parting place, where they loosed usually, when they went to the lands of the Gentiles. Jonas loosed thence. And, in a Tanners house it was: That, as to Simon the Tanner it was all one, he made leather indifferently, of the Badger, as well as of the sheep skin; as the skins were to Simon the Tanner, so the meat should be to Simon the Apostle. And it was a linnen sheet; which very linnen shewed, they were all clean: For, in linnen the Jews wrapped the first-borne of their cleane beasts, if any hapned to die before they came to be offered, and so buried it: but, at no hand, any unclean beasts ever in linnen. But now, in linnen, all: that, if one cleane, all: And so, no person, Calling, Country excepted to, or accepted of, more than another.

Well then, no person. But, we like not this destructive Divinity, that tells us what He doth not, and tells us not, what He doth accept. If not the person, nor the persons Nation, What? Accepts He nothing? Yes: In every Nation, if any person there be that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, He that brings these with him, is (to God) a person acceptable; Such, He will not let lye, but take them up, and lye them up, where ever he finds them.

Whom God accepteth,
In every Nation
he that feareth
God.
Eccles. 12. 13.

Solomon in effect, said as much long before, at the end of his long Sermon, the book of the Preacher. Will ye (saith he) hear the Summe of all Sermons? Fear God (there is he that fears Him) and keep his Commandments (that is, he that worketh righteousness) hoc est totum hominis (read some) there is all man hath, that God will accept of; Or, Hoc est omnis homo (read other, and inferre, Si hoc est omnis homo, manifestum, quod sine hoc nihil est omnis homo:) This, is man, all that he is. For, whatsoever besides this, he is, is as if it were not: This is all things, for without this, with all his person and personableness, he is nothing in Gods sight. This preached Solomon, at Jerusalem, to the Jew; and this, Peter, at Casarea, to the Gentiles: hoc est omnis homo, this is all for men, saith Solomon, Omnis genus, for every Nation, saith Peter.

That feareth God, and worketh righteousness: Both these, and not the one without the other. Neither fear, which is dull and works not; for, of such He accepts not: Nor works, if they come not from within, from our hearts, from His true fear in our hearts, but be personate only, as were those of the Pharisees. We begin then there, within: For, any thing that is personate in Religion, and proceeds not from thence (supposes, Saint Pauls mask or vizard of godlinesse, Saint Peters εὐαγγελισμὸς, cloak of Christian liberty) God plucks them off: He is so farre from accepting them, as he casts them from Him, He cannot abide them.

Feareth and

ly.

1 Pet. 2. 16.

I forgot to tell you, why not the person: God Himself tells Samuel, that He looks not as man looks; Man looks upon the outside, the face and the facing; God looks to that which is farthest from the person; to that which is within, at the center (that is) the heart. The inwards were Gods part, in every sacrifice, reserved ever to Him alone. By reserving them, He shews what it is, He chiefly accepts of. We must then look to that, first. He first looks at the heart, and in the heart, to the affection; (for, the heart is the seat of affections) and of all affections, that of fear; and, of all fears, to the fear of God.

1 Sam. 16. 2.

Of God; why, how comes God to be feared? Fear is not, but of some evil; and, evil, in God, there is none. Not, for any evil in Him; but for some evil; we may expect from him, if we fear not to offend Him, by doing that which is evil in His sight. Which punishment yet, is not evil of itself; for punishment, is the work of justice: but, we call it, as we feel it, malum poena: And, it were fear, and Him, for it; or any that can inflict it.

Power and Justice are of themselves, fearful: Power, to all men; Justice, to evil men. But, Justice, armed with power, that, keeps all in awe. Now, in God, there is power: Gods power is manifest even to Heathen men. It is a part of the δυναμις τοῦ θεοῦ, that which may be known of God (His Power) and go no farther but to the work of Creation, saith the Apostle (Rom. 1. 20.) Every man fears the mighty: for, what He will do, we know not; what He can do, we know, and that ever presents it self first.

And, in God, there is Justice, and the voice of justice, if thou do evil, fear. Which Justice of God, is manifest likewise without Scriptures, by the Law written in our hearts, the hearts even of the Heathen themselves, saith the same Apostle (Rom. 2. 15.) whereby they are either a law to themselves (the better sort of them, Cornelius, here) or, if not, their own thoughts accuse them for it; and their consciences bear witness against them, and at a Sessions holden in their hearts, they condemn themselves. Which Sessions is a forerunner of the great general Sessions that is to ensue.

Rom. 13. 4.

Scienter igitur terrorem hunc (saith Saint Paul still, 2 Cor. 5.) Knowing then this fearful judgement, we persuade men, and men are persuaded, either to eschew evil yet undone, or to leave it if it be undone, that it be not found in our hands, not taken about us.

2 Cor. 5. 11.

This fear, to suffer evil for sin (malum poena) makes men fear to do the evil of sin (malum culpae: what they fear to suffer for, they fear to do. Keeps them from doing evil at all, makes them avoid it; or keeps them from doing evil still, makes them forsake it. It prevailed not only with Job in the the old; but with the Nimivites: It prevailed not only with Cornelius, in the New, but even with Felix; made him tremble, though it had not his full work, for he was not so happy, as to hear Paul out, but put it off till another time, which time never came.

Fear first.
He that feareth
Him.
Gen. 3. 10.

First fear: and why fear first? Because it is first. It is called (and truly, for so truly it is) the beginning of our wisdom, when we begin to be truly wise. In Adam, it was so. The first passion we read of, that was raised in him, that wrought upon him after his fall was, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid. There began his Wisdom, in his fear. There began he to play the wise-man, and to fore-think him of his folly committed. Fear is quod est timor (as it is well called) of the nature of a bridle to our nature, to hold us in to refrain from evil, if it may be: if not, to check us and turne us about, and make us turn from it. Therefore, Fear God, and depart from evil (lightly) go together, as the cause, and the effect; you shall seldom find them parted. So they, because it is first, it is to stand first, and first to be regarded.

Prov 5. 7.

Another reason, is because it is most general. For, it goes through all, heathen and all. It goes to omni gente; there is qui timet. For, that they have to much faith, as to fear, appears by the Nimivites plainly. Nay, it goes not only to omni gente, but even to omni animale too, to beasts and all; yea, to the dullest beast of all, to Baalams beast: he could not get her (smite her, spur her, do what he could to her) to run upon the point of the Angels sword: that they are in worse case than beasts that are void of it. So, first it riseth of all, and farthest it reacheth of all.

Num. 22. 23.

And, this fear, I would not have men think meanly of it. It is (we see) the beginning of wisdom, and so, both Father and Sonne, David and Solomon call it. But, if it have his full work, to make us depart from evil, it is wisdom complete, and that from God's own mouth, Job 28. Therefore Esaie bids us make a treasure of it, and Blessed is the man, that is ever thus wise, that feareth alwayes: It is Solomon, Prov. 28. For, howsoever the world go, this I am sure of, (saith he) it shall go well with him that feareth God, and carrieth himself reverently in His presence.

Esay 11. 2.

And, care not for them, that talk, they know not what, of the spirit of bondage. Of the seven spirits, which are the divisions of one and the same Spirit, this day here sent down, the last the chiefest of all, is the Spirit of the fear of God, Esay 11. So it is, the Alpha and Omega, first and last, beginning and end. First and last (I am sure) there is sovereign use of it.

Nor regard them not, that say, it pertains not to the New Testament; phansying to themselves, nothing must be done, but out of pure love. For, even there it abideth, and two sovereign uses there are still of it, those two which before we named; ¹ One, to begin; ² the other, to preserve.

Mal. 4. 2.

1. To begin: We set it here as an introduction, as the dawning is to the day. For on them, that are in this dawning, that fear His name, on them shall the Sunne of righteousness arise. It is Malachi saith it: it is Cornelius here sheweth it. As the base Court, to the Temple: Not into the Temple at first step, but, come through the Court first. As the needle, to the thread (it is Saint Augustine;) that, first enters, and draws after it the thread; and that sewes all fast together.

Where there happens a strange effect, that, not to fear, the next way is to fear. The kind work of fear, is to make us cease from sin. Ceasing from sin brings with it a good life; a good life, that ever carries with it a good conscience; and a good conscience calls out fear. So that, upon the matter, the way not to fear, is to fear: and, that God, that brings light out of darknesse, and glory out of humility, He it is, that also brings confidence out of fear.

c Rom. 11. 20.

Phil. 2. 12.

1 Pet. 1. 17.

Mit. 10. 28.

2. This, for the introduction. And ever after, when faith is entred and all, it is a sovereign means to preserve them also. There is (as I have told you) a composition in the soul, much after that of the body. The heart, in the body, is so full of heat, it would stifle it self and us soone, were it not, God hath provided the lungs, to give it coole ayre, to keep it from stifling. Semblably in the soul, faith is full of Spirit, ready enough of it self to take an unkind heat, save that fear is by God ordained, to coole it and keep it in temper, to awake our care still, and see, it sleep not in security. It is good against saying in ones heart, Non movebor (with the Psal.) Good against Et si omnes, non ego: Saint Peter found it so. Good (saith Saint Paul against Noli altum sapere. And these would marre all, for the humble fear of God: by that all is kept right.

Wherefore, when the Gospel was at the highest, work out your salvation with fear and trembling (saith Saint Paul) Pass the time of your dwelling here in fear (saith Saint Peter.) Yea, our Saviour himself (as noteth Saint Augustine) when he had taken away one fear, Ne timeate, Fear not them, that can kill the body, and when they have done that, have done all, and can do no more; in place of that fear, puts another, but fear Him, that when he hath slain the body, can cast soul and it into hell fire: and when He had so said once, come over again with it to strike it home, Etiam dico vobis; Fear, I say unto you, fear Him.

So then, this of fear, is not Moses's song only, it is the song of Moses and the Lamb both. Made of the harmony of the one, as well as other. A special straine, in that song of Moses and the Lamb, Apoc. 15, you shall finde this: Who will not fear thee O Lord? He that will not, may sibi canere, make himself musick; he is out of their queer, yea the Lamb's queer; indeed, out of both.

This have I little stood on; for that, methinks, the world begins to grow from fear too fast: we strive to blow this Spirit quite away; for fear of carnificina conscientia, we seek to benumme it, and to make it past feeling. For these causes, fear is, with God a thing acceptable, we hear: And, that the Holy Ghost came down, where this fear was, we see. So it is, Saint Peter affirms it, For certaine, of a truth: So it is, Saint Peter protests it, Let no man beguile you, to make you think otherwise: No, no; but, Fac, fac vel timore pieno, si nondum potest, amore justitie: Do it man, I tell thee, do it, though it be be for fear of punishment, if you cannot yet get your self to do it for love of righteousness. One will bring on the other. A timore Domini concepimus Spiritum salutis (It is Esay.) By it, we shall conceive that, which shall save us. These very words shall save us, said the Angel, and so they did: Here, in Cornelius, we have a fair president for it. And so, now I come to the other.

Esay 26. 18.
Verse 6.

For, I aske, Is God all for within: accepts He of nothing without? Yes, that He doth. Of a good righteous work too, if it proceed, from His fear in our hearts. Fear is not all then: No, for it is but the beginning (as we have heard,) God will have us begin, but not end there. We have begun with qui timet eum: we must end with operatur iustitiam, and then comes acceptus est illi, and not before. For, neither fear, if it be fear alone: nor faith, if it be faith alone, is accepted of Him; but timet and operatur (here) with Peter; and fides qua operatur (there with Paul:) fear and faith (both) that worketh, and none else. If it be true fear, if such as God will accept, it is not timor piger, a dull lazie fear: His fear that feared his Lord and went and digged his talent into the ground, did nothing with it; Away with his fear and him into utter darknesse. God will have his talent turned, have it above ground. He will not have his Religion invisible within. No: shew me thy faith (saith Saint James,) thy fear (saith Saint Peter here) by some works of righteousness: Else, talk not of it. He will have it made appear, that men may see it, and glorifie him for it that hath such good and faithful servants.

But works withal: And worketh righte-ousnesse.

Gal. 5. 6.

James 2. 18.

And they observe, that it is not [that doth] but [that worketh righteousness:] Nor facit, but operatur. And, what manner of work? Saint Peters word is εργαζομαι here: and for εργαζομαι, εργον will not serve; it must be επαγία, which is a plain trade. Discite bene agere (saith Esay) learn it, as one would learn an handicraft, to live by: Learn it, and be occupied in it; make an επαγία, that is, even an occupation of it, CHRISTs own occupation, who (as Saint Peter tells us straight after) pertransiit bene faciendo, Went up and down, went about doing good, practising it, and nothing else: for that is εργαζομαι.

Esay 1. 17.

Verse 38.

Worketh righteousness. This righteousness, to know what it is, (beside the common duties of our calling; either as Christians in general: or particular, as every mans vocation lies) we cannot better informe our selves of it, than from this party, he speaks of (from Cornelius) and what the works were, he did. And they are set down at the second verse: where, after Saint Luke had said, he feared God, to shew his works of righteousness he addes, 1 he gave much almes, and 2 prayed to God continually, and at the 3^o verse, that he was found 3 fasting at the ninth hour (that is) three, at after-noon. In these three, 1 Almes, 2 Prayer, and 3 Fasting, stood his works of righteousness: In these three; for besides these we finde not any other. They be the same, and in the same order, as they were figured in the three Oblations of the Magi, first fruits of the Gentiles, there in the Gospel, as the Fathers also them: 1 Gold, that is, for Almes; 2 Incense, that is Prayer; and 3 Myrrhe, bitter myrrhe, for works of Mortification, as Fasting and such like; as bitter to the flesh, as myrrhe to the taste: both bitter, but whole some, both. But (without all figure) they are the same three, and stand just in the same order, that here they do, where our Saviour reacheth them literally, and that under the name of Righteousnesse (Mat. 6.) 1 Almes, first: that he begins with at the first verse, and so here, it is first: 2 then, to Prayer next, at the fifth verse: 3 and after that, to fasting, even as it is here too. *Cornelius*s works were these three: 1 gave almes, 2 Prayed duly, 3 was found at his fast by the Angel. This is all we finde; more we finde not specified: and these are enow; these would serve, if we would do them. These, in him, were; the same, in us, will be accepted.

Matth. 6. 1.

3.

And now, of Gods acceptation. Accepting is but a quaint terme borrowed from the Latine. It is no more than receiving or taking. First then, cleave it is, He will take them; but, where they be to take: But where they are not, take them He cannot. In vain shall we look for acceptation of that, which is not. We are then to see, there be some given; some, for Him to take. Take us He cannot, if there be not *Cornelius*s hand to take us by: 3 Come up in remembrance they cannot, if none were done to remember: For, memoria est prae teritum, and all ours are yet to come (I fear) in phantasia rather than in memoria. Our almes, alas they are shrunk up pitifully; Prayer, swallowed up with hearing Lectures: and for the third, feast (if you will) continually; but, fast, as little as may be; and, of most I might say, not at all. The want of these, the bane of our Age. He stretcheth out his hand to receive almes; he boweth down His eare to receive Prayer; He beholdeth with His eyes, to take us fasting: There is none to give them, and so He cannot receive them. But, by this, acceptus est (here) we see, how we might be accepti.

II.
Of Gods accep-tation.
He, &c. is accepted.

It is beside the Text; yet if ye aske, Here is fear, and here are works; where is faith all this while, without which it is impossible to please God, or to be accepted of him? Had he no faith? Yes, he would not have spent his goods, or chastened his body, without some faith: at least, call upon God he could not, on whom he believed not.

Heb. 11. 6.

Rom. 10.

Therefore he believed, sure: The Gentiles Creed at least, That a God there is; that sought he will be; that, he will not faile them that seek him, but both regard and reward them.

The Ninivites Creed at least: in whose fear, there was faith and hope too: Quis scit, Who can tell, whether God may not turn and spare, and accept of a poor Gentile? There is nothing known to the contrary, and there be presidents for it.

And so he turned, and for himself to seek God, by the three wayes we remembred. And thou Lord never failest them that seek thee, but acceptest them, not according to that they have not, but according to that they have, though it be but a willing minde, they have. God forbid, but concupiscence should be of equal power to good, that it is to evil. If you will reach it farther, to faith in Christ: living in garrison among the Jewes, he could not choose but have heard somewhat of Him, to move him, to throw himself down before Him, and he took him up, Acceptus est illi.

Psal. 9. 10.

2 Cor. 8. 12.

Esa. 41. 3.

The flaxe did but smoke, Christ quenched it not. Cracks there were in the read, but He brake it not though; but kindled the one, and bound up the other: and in that little strength he had, took him, as He found him, and took order, thus to bring him nearer the wayes of his salvation.

And, but accepted.

But now lest one error beget another, and the last prove worse than the first, take this with you. When all is said that can be said, all is but accepting for all this. That he was, and we shall be accepted; that gives us some heart: And, that is but accepted, that takes away all self-conceit of our selves. For, I know not how, if we be but accepted, we take upon us straight, and fall into a phansie, that well worthy we were, or else we should not. Altum sapere comes, and we swell straight, inso much as we cannot be gotten to accept of this acceptus est, to accept of any acceptation, but grow to a higher straine of merit and condignity, and I wot not what. To prick this bladder, all is shut up with this And. Out of which word, we are to take notice of this: it is neither our fear, nor our works, all is but Gods gracious acceptation.

And it is not, as they well observe, Acceptus, but Acceptus: not Acceptus, acceptandus, is to be accepted of Him; as if God could neither will nor choose: No, it is Acceptus, only, that is, but acceptabilis, at most, but a capacity that He may be; layes no necessity, that He must be accepted.

The Schoolmen expresse it well, at times, By, non deerit Deus, God will not be wanting to such, will accept them: But, non tenetur Deus, He is not so bound, but, if He would, He might refuse, and that He doth not, it is but of his meere goodnesse: All are but accepted.

The Fathers, thus; (I name Saint Augustine for the Latine:) Hoc habet, non pondus humani meriti, sed ordo consilii divini: That thus it is, it is no weight or worth of mans merit; it is but the very order and course of Gods dealing: His favourable dealing, that and nothing else, that there is any accepting at all. (The Greek Fathers, thus; (I name Chrysostome for them:) It is Amelioris, not dignitas, (that is) dignatio, not dignitas: dignatio Acceptantis, not dignitas operantis. Digni habebuntur, saith the Gospel, and the Epistle both; the Gospel, Luke 20: the Epistle, 2 Thes. 1. God accounts them worthy, and His so counting makes them worthy: makes them so, for so they are not of themselves, or without it; but, by it, so they are. His taking our works of righteousness well in worth, is their worth.

Luke 20. 35.

2 Th. 1. 2. 5.

There was another Centurion (beside this in the Apostle) the Centurion in the Gospel; the Elders of the Jewes were at dignus est, about him; dignified him highly; but, he indignified himself as fast, was at his non sum dignus twice; neither worthy that CHRIST should come to him, nor that he to CHRIST. And even thus it was ever with all from the beginning: Job (another timens Deum, his like was not upon earth, yet thus be) Etsi justus fuero, non levabo caput, All were he just; he would down with his crest for all that; and what? Eti deprecabor judicem meum, and plead nothing, stand upon no termes, but deals only by way of supplication; and that is the safest way. And why so? For Verbar omnia opera mea (saith he) he durst not trust any of them. And why not? For the continual dropping of our corruption, upon the web of our well-doing, stains it so, as if he would stand steining them, he that now doth accept them, might justly except to them; for many exceptions there lye against them. He that takes them might let them lie, as not worth the taking up; For, if he should ransack them they would scarce prove worth the taking up; but yet take them up he doth, and reward them; Both, for the praise of the glory of his grace: To the glory of the praise of which grace be all this spoken.

All which tends to this (for our work is this, our labour this, this is all in all, to get men to do well, and yet not weine well of their well-doing:) To joyne first timet and operatur, to fear, and yet to do good; and when we have done good, yet to fear, with Job, for Dauids reason, cognoscimus imperfectum nostrum. Then to joyne again Operatur, and acceptus est. For, that is it if we could hit on it we cannot; but, that is it, though. For think you, we can get men to this? No? do we evil, we will not know it; we excuse, we lessen it. Do we well, we know it straight; Nay, we over-know and over-prise it. No remedy, merit it must be, and hire it must be: Reward, we cannot skill of; Acceptus est is nothing, Accepted will not serve: we will know, how we shall be accepted, of merit or of grace. Fond men! so we be accepted, though of grace, are we not well?

Rom. 10. 3.

Luke 8. 11, 14.

What desire we more, but to be taken and not refused? The Law that saith: Say not, it is for my righteousness: The Prophets say, it is not for your sakes: The Apostle saith, if you seek to establish your own righteousness, you are gone. Yea, Christ himself saith, if you talk much of it (with the Pharisee) Lord this I am, and this I do; there is not the poorest Publican that goes by the way, but he shall be justified before you. And therefore be entreated, I pray you, to accept of acceptus est: that sets all safe; that, brings all to God, and there leaves it.

Eph. 1. 6.

For, if this fearer, this worker be accepted and not in himself, in whom then? who is it? The Apostle tels us directly, He hath made us accepted in his beloved, His beloved Sonne: So Paul. And Saint Peter immediately in the very next words (that follow upon these) you know the word, that was in the beginning and made all; and that in the fulnesse of time was sent and healed all; Missi Verbum & sanavit eos. In Him and through Him all are accepted that have had, or shall have the honour and happiness ever soto be. In whom then, we are accepted, we see.

Psal. 107. 17.

Now

Now lastly, to what, and so an end. That being so accepted or received (whether you will: both are one) you may receive, what? plain it is, it follows, the Sacrament. But they to receive the first Sacrament, that of Baptisme; for they were yet in their Paganisme, un-baptized. But they that are Christians already, and past the first, there remaineth for them to receive, none but the second. And that then, is it. And, that, bound they are to receive. For, though by special priviledge some are aspersi Spiritu quos aqua mystica non tetigit, sprinkled with the Holy Ghost, before they had the sprinkling of water; of which number was Cornelius, and these in the Text: though, while they were at the Sermon, the Holy Ghost came upon them; yet, to the Sacrament they came though, we see. That, was to them, and is, to us all, the seal of Gods acceptation. That first, was theirs; but the chief and last, is this of ours.

To what end accepted.

For, this is indeed the true receiving, when one is received to the table, to eat and drink, to take his repast there: yea, ad accipendum in quo acceptus est, to take, and to take into Him, that body, by the oblation whereof, we are all sanctified, and that blood in which, we have all remission of sins. In that, ended they: in this, let us end.

And thus accepting we desire of God: and desiring it in an acceptable time, He will hear us; and, this is that acceptable time. For, if the year of Pentecost, the fiftieth year, where the acceptable yeare, as Luke 4. 21. then, the day of Pentecost the fiftieth day, this day, is the acceptable day for the same reason. Truly acceptable, as the day, whereon the Holy Ghost was first received; and whereon we may receive him now again: Whereon, acceptus est is fulfilled both wayes: we, of Him received to grace; and He of us, His flesh and blood, and with them, His Spirit He receiveth us to grace; and we receive of Him grace, and with it, the influence of His Holy Spirit, which shall still follow us, and never leave us, till we be accepti indeed, that is, received up to Him, in His kingdom of glory. Whither, blessed are they that shall be received.

Ephes. 1. 7.

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,
AT WHITE-HALL,

On the IV. of June, A. D. MDCXX. being WHITSUNDAY.

I JOHN, Chap. V. Ver. VI.

Hic est, qui venit per aquam & sanguinem, JESUS CHRISTUS: non in aqua solum, sed in aqua & sanguine. Et Spiritus est, qui testificatur, quoniam Spiritus est veritas.

This is that JESUS CHRIST, that came by water and blood: not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness: for, the Spirit is truth.

THIS is JESUS CHRIST; and it is the Spirit. So, the verse (you see) linketh CHRIST and the Spirit together; is a passage, from the one to the other. Linketh them, and so (consequently) linketh this Feast of the Spirit present, with those of CHRIST that are gone before; and under one, sheweth the convenience of having the Spirit, an Article in our Creed; and of having this day, a feast, in our Calendar.

For, though CHRIST have done all, that He had to do; all is not done, that is to do, till the Spirit come too. We have nothing to shew; we want our teste; a special part of our evidence is lacking: that when all is done, if this be not; nothing is done. Christ without water, water without blood; His water and blood; and He, without the Spirit, availe us nothing. The Spirit we are to have; and, this day we have it: and, for the having it this day, we keep a Feast. As those hitherto, for Christ, complementum legis; so this, for the Holy Ghost, complementum Evangelii, which was not complete, donec complerentur dies Pentecostes, till the dayes of Pentecost were fulfilled: till this day was come and gone.

Saint John is every where all for love. Here, in this Chapter (I know not how) he is hit upon faith. Which, with him, is rare: so, the more to be made of. Specially in this age, wherein it is grown the vertue of chief request. And indeed ἡ χάρις τῆς πίστεως ἐστὶν, ἐν αὐτῇ ἡ, an excellent vertue is faith, if it be faith. For, as there is (saith Saint Paul) γνῶσις ἡ δὲ δόρυμνος, a knowledge falsely so called, so is there a faith: for faith is it self but a kind of knowledge.

How shall we then make faith, of our faith? Of it self, it is but a bare act (faith) a thing indifferent:

rent: the vertue, and the value of it is, from the object it believeth in; if that be right, all is right. And, that is right, if it have for this object, not Iesus Christ barely; but (as Saint John speaketh) That Iesus Christ. That Iesus Christ, is somewhat a strange speech, as if there were another. Is there so? Yes, (2 Cor. 11. 5.) ye have aliud Iesum, and (Gal. 1. 7.) aliud Evangelium; Not that, but another Iesus: Not this, but, another Gospel.

And as, not that, but another Iesus; So Christ Himself tells us, you shall have, not that, but another Christ. Another, nay many other: yet there is but one true, Matth. 24. 24. Lo here is Christ; to there He is. Go into the desert, there you shall have Him: Get you to such a conventicle, and there you shall not misse of Him. Go but to one City, I could name, you shall have Christs enough; and scarce a true one, among them all.

Well then, what shall we do, to sever the precious from the vile, That Iesus Christ, from others; set the Hic est ille, upon the right Christ? This (saith Saint John;) These two wayes: 1 That Iesus Christ, that comes in water and blood joynly; not, in either alone, Hic est ille: If, but in one, he is another Iesus. 2 That Iesus that hath the Spirit to bear him witnesse, is the true; this Witnesse if He want, Hic non est ille. Under one, we shall learn Christ aright. For, as one may learn a false Christ, so may he be the true Christ falsly. You have not so learned Christ, saith the Apostle (Ephes. 4. 20.) that is, not amisse, you have not; meaning, some other had. And, as learn Christ aright, so learn to do the Spirit his right: not to shoot him off, but know, he is to have a chief Holy day, in our *Fa*sti, as He hath a part, and a principal part, in the Teste of whosoever shall be saved.

The Summe is, three Items we have: 1. That we take not *Pse*do Christum pro Christo: the false Christ for the true; that is, one that comes in His name, but is not He. The Summe; 3

2. Neither, when we have the true one, that we take not Semi Christum pro Christo: a moiety, or part of Christ, for the whole.

3. When we have the whole, that we take Him not, without His Teste (and that is the Spirit;) For, as good not take him at all.

Three parts I would lay forth: 1 There is Christs part. 2 There is the Spirits part. 3 There is the Sacraments part. Christs part, His double coming, in 1 water, and 2 blood. In it, these: 1 That Christ was so to come. 2 That Christ did so come. 3 Not only did, but doth so come daily to us. 4 As He comes to us in both, so we to come to him for both; and (ever) to take heed of the error, of either alone, of turning non solum, into solum.

Then the Spirits part. 1 Of His witnesse. Of the truth of it. 1. Of His witnesse. 1 That a witnesse there is to be. 2 That a witnesse there is. 3 Nay, not one, but three. 4 Of which, the Spirit is one and the chief witnesse: His witnesse to 1 Iesus, 2 Christ that came; 3 to the water, to the 4 blood, He came in. This, of His witnesse. Then, of the Truth of it; and withal, how to discern the Spirit, that is, the Truth.

And last, the reverfal to this. That, as not these, without the Spirit; So, not the Spirit, without these (that is) not without the Sacraments, which are the monuments and pledges of these. And so, that we endeavour, that the Spirit on this day (the day of the Spirit) may come to us, and give His witnesse, that CHRIST is come to us, and come to us in them; in them both, to our comfort both here, and eternally.

Thus it is written, and thus it behoved, that He that was to come, Iesus the Saviour of the world, when He came, should come in water and blood. His name was so called (Iesus) saith the Angel, to shew He should save His people from their sinnes, To save us from them, by taking them away: For, Hic est omnis fructus (saith Esay, and it is a ground with us,) All the fruit we have, is the taking away of our sinnes. Take that away, the rest will follow of it self: that (indeed) is all in all.

To take away sinne, two things are to be taken away. For in sinne, are these two: 1 Reatus, and 2 Macula (as all Divines agree) the guilt, and the soyle or spot. The guilt to which Punishment is due: The Spot, whereby we grow loathsome in Gods eyes, and even in mens too. For, even before them, Shame and Reproach follow sin. Take these two away, and sinne is gone. And there is no people, under heaven, but have sense of these two; and no religion is, or ever was, but laboured to remove them both.

To take away soyle, water is most fit: To take away guilt, blood. No punishment, for any guilt, goes farther than blood. Therefore had the heathen their lustrations, for the soyle; which were ever by water (—donec me flumine vivo Abluero;) and their expiations, for the guilt, by shedding of blood ever (languine plasctis;) without which they hold no remission of sins.

The Jewes they likewise had their sprinkling water for the uncleannesse: had their slaine sacrifice; the blood whereof done on their posts, the destroyer passed by them, the guilt by it being first taken away.

But the Prophet tells us, No water (no, not snow-water, and put to it mire and borish and fullers sope, never so much) can enter into the foul, and take away the steines of it. And the Apostle he tells us, It was impossible, the blood of bulls and goats should satisfie for the sinnes of men. The water had not the vertue to get out those spots: nor the blood, the value, to make satisfaction to God, for mans trespasses.

Gen. 49. 10.

Donec veniat qui venturus erat, Till He came that was to come; Shilo, with a blood, and a water, which (because it was the blood and water of the Sonne of God; and so of God) by his divine power, infused into both, gave the water such a piercing force, and gave the blood so inestimable high a value, as was able to work both: to put an end to that which never the washings, nor offerings of nature, or of the Law could rid us of. Thus in water and blood was He to come, that was to take sin away.

That he did so come.

Mat. 26. 36.
John 19. 13. 17

Thus was He to come, and thus did He come: did come diverse wayes. In blood, the blood of His Circumcision; In water, the water of His Baptisme. Began so, and so ended: In water, the water of his strong crying and teares, whereby He made supplication to God for us; in blood, the blood of His passion, the blood of Gerssemane, His bloody sweat; the blood of Gabbatha, of the scourges and thornes; the blood of Golgotha, of His hands and feet digged. Thus came He.

John 19. 34.
Zach. 13. 1.

Yet is it none of these, Saint John pointeth to: (these were at severall times;) but, he points to His coming in both together at once. This place of the Epistle, refers to that place of the Gospel, where at once, with one blow, His side being opened, there came forth blood and water, both. Blood, Sanguis testamenti (saith Zach. 9. the Blood of His Testament, whereby He set His guilty prisoners free. Water (saith the same Zachary 13.) fons Domus Israel; a fountain which he opened to the house of Israel, for sinne, and for uncleanness. The one, blood, the λυτρον, the ranfome or price of the taking away the guilt; the other, water, the λυτρον, laver of our new birth, from our original corruption.

Hæc sunt Ecclesie gemina sacramenta (saith Augustine.) These are (not two of the Sacraments: so there might be more, but) the twin-sacraments of the Church. So, but two of that kinde; two famous memorials left us; in Baptisme, of the water; in the Cup, of the New Testament, of the blood, He then came in.

That he comes so still.
Heb. 13. 20.

Thus did CHRIST come: did and doth still. For the word is not ἐλάλουν, referring to the time past, but ἐλάλουν, which respecteth even the present also. Came not once, but still and ever cometh so. The water still runs; for He opened a fountain never to be drawn dry; And His massa sanguinis is not spent neither; For, it is sanguis æterni fœderis, and so æternum: of the everlasting Covenant; and so, it self lasting for ever.

John 19. 34.

And that, this His coming to us, he means, the order sheweth. For, when it came from him, it came in another order; blood came first, and then water: see the Gospel. But here in the Epistle, when He comes to us; water is first, and then blood. Blood and water, the order quoad se: Water and Blood, quoad nos. Ever to us, in water first.

Marth. 29. 6.

But what means this, not in water only, but in water and blood? To say [in water and blood] was plain enough one would think. Our rule is in Logick, Non sufficit alterum, oportet utrumque fieri in copulationis. Our rule in Divinity, what God hath joyned, let no man presume to sever. Yet, when He had said, in water and blood, He comes over with them again, with his non inquit solum, Not in water only, but in water and blood. What means this, but to make it yet more plain, that there might be no mistaking, no slipping off the collar; that one of them will not serve the turn; but, as once He came, so still and ever we is to come in them both.

That we are to come to Him for both.

Apoc. 1. 14.

And as He to come to us, so we to come to Him. He to us in both, we to Him for both. He not to us, in either alone; we not to Him, for either alone. For, if for either alone, we make superfluous His coming in the other; we question his wisdom, as if He came in more than needed, as if any thing He came in might well enough be spared. No, we need both, we have use of both, and so to come to Him for them both.

Among the profunda Satanae, this was one; when he could not κατανυ keep Him out; by a new stratagem, he fought ἀνέν τῷ 'ιν(ν), solvere Jesum (as the Fathers read the verse of the Chapter next before) that is, to take Him in pieces. When he could not prevail in setting up a false, he set some on work, to take in funder the true.

Was it not thus? Did they not solvere dissolve, take in funder His Natures: made Him come as only man; as Samosatenus: made Him come as only God, as Sabellius? Dissolved they not His person; made Him come in two, as Nestorius? And is not this (here) a plain dissolving also? He coming intirely in both, to take Him by his loes, take of Him what they list, what they think will serve their turnes, and leave the other and let it lie? So take pars pro toto, a piece of Jesus for the whole, as if they meant to be saved by Synecdoche.

Which very taking Him in pieces, makes him, that he is not the true. For if the coming in both twain, make Him Hic est ille: the taking away of either, turnes Him into alium Jesum; and so, Hic non est ille. This you may call Jesus Christ, but this is not that Jesus Christ, Saint John his ἀνέντις, ταυθους. There was a sort of Hereticks, in the Primitive Church, were so all for water, cared so little for His coming in blood, as they ministred the Communion in nothing but water, and are therefore called Hydropocistarae, or Aquarii. There were others: But it were a world to rake up old errors: what need we? Have we not now, that frame to themselves a Christ without water, or a Christ without blood, and so seeme to hold aqua sola, or solus sanguis, against Saint Johns, non in sola (flat.)

Ephes. 4. 29.

See you some, that pour out themselves into all riot, and follow uncleanness even with greedinesse? CHRIST in water would do well for such; and they care least for it; by their good will would have none come upon them; would not be clean, would be as they are, as swine in their wallow all their life long. No water, they; but blood, as much as you will. Frame to themselves a CHRIST without water, all in blood.

This is that CHRIST, that cometh: How comes He? what brings He? Comes He in blood, brings He good store of that, that we may strike off the guilt of our old score? He is welcome coming so. But He

He comes with water too. Nay, they can spare that (with the Gergesites, to pray Him to be gone, to depart from their coasts) they love blood without water, are all for comfort (as they call it) nothing for cleanness of life. In solo Sanguine, these.

Marth. 8. 34

See you some other (not many, but some) carefull to their weak power, to containe themselves, yet through humane frailty overtaken otherwhile? CHRIST in blood comes for these, for these in speciall, and alas they dare not come near it (not His blood) as utterly unworthy of it. These are but few, in comparison of those other, the soli-sanguines. Yet, some such there are, and for them hath S. John directed the letter of this Text in this order which it stands, that CHRIST came not in water alone, but came in blood, too.

Timorous trembling consciences think, they have never water enough: if they find about them any unclean thing, they are quite cast down, utterly dejected straight: as if that CHRIST were John Baptist, that came in water alone: nay, were turned into Moses, that had his name of being taken out of the water; as if He came all in water, nay were all water, had not a drop of blood in Him. These seem to hold in aqua sola; whereas CHRIST hath both water and blood, of each alike much, no lesse of the one, than of the other: Came in blood, and came in it for them, and to them doth most readily apply it, that make most spare of it.

But, the greater number by farre, are those, in the other extreme, that are nothing timorous, farre enough from that, dissolute, and care not how many foul blotches they have, so they may have the guilt and punishment taken away: hear, there is remission of sinnes in His blood; so lie at His veins continually like horse-leeches, so as if it were possible, they would not leave a drop of blood in Him. As for his water, they have no use of it, nor desire not to have any, let that run waste; are all for blood, would not care, if all the water were drained from Him, nay if (as the waters of Egypt) all His were turned into blood. Forgiven, that they would be; Cleane, they care not to be: as much blood, as little water as you will. Both these would be looked to, but this later more, as the predominant error of our age, wherein the water is even at the low-water-marke. Now, for these, we return the non solum (as by good warrant we may) both wayes; It is equally true, Not in blood alone (hear you) but in blood and water. Will you have no water? then must you have no CHRIST: For CHRIST came in water. And further adde, that as in water and blood both, so in water first (for so it lieth in the Text) and that which stands first, we to passe through first; water, quoad nos, is the first before blood: There to begin in God's name. Take that with you too.

They then, that have learned CHRIST aright, are to come to Him for both. With the woman of Samaria, LORD give us of this water: with them of Capernaum, LORD, give us of this bread, of this Cup of the New Testament in Thy blood. To come to Him for blood, for the forgiveness of our sinnes through faith in His blood. To come to Him for water aswell, for the taking out of the steines, Yea (even as Esay said) Haurietis aquas cum gaudio de fontibus Salvatoris, even with joy to draw waters from the fountains of our Saviour: with more joy to draw water, than to draw blood from Him.

6. 34.

1 Cor. 11. 25.

Esay 12. 3.

But (indeed) to look well into the matter, they cannot be separate; they are mixt, either is in other. There is a mixture of the blood in the water; there is so, of the water in the blood: we can minister no water without blood: nor blood, without water. In baptisme we are washed with water: That water is not without blood. The blood serves instead of nitre. He hath washed us from our sinnes in His blood (Ap. c. 1. 5.) (washed.) They made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb (Apoc. 7. 14.) No washing, no whitening, by water, without blood. And, in the Eucharist, we are made drink of the blood of the New Testament: but, in that blood, there is water: for the blood of CHRIST purifieth us from our sinnes. Now, to purifie, is a vertue properly belonging to water, which yet is in the blood: and purifying refers to spots, not to guilt, properly. So, either is in other; therefore, the conceit of separation, let it alone for ever.

1 John 1. 7.

To take heed then of dreining Christs water from His blood; or abstracting His blood from His water; of bringing in Restraining (sola) into either. Every one of us, for his own part, thus to do. But howsoever men frame phantasies to themselves (as frame they will, do what we can) that our doctrine be looked to; we are not to teach Jesus Christ, but That Jesus Christ, that thus came in both. That our Divinity then, on the one side, be not waterish, without all heart or comfort; presenting Christ in water only, to make fear, where none is. Nor, on the other, that we frame not our selves a sanguine Divinity, void of fear quite, and bring in Christ all in blood, blood and nothing else, with little water, or none at all, for fear of Ex nimia spe desperatio.

Faith, as it justifieth (saith Saint Paul) there is blood: So it purifieth the heart (saith Saint Peter;) there is water. Hope, as it (saveth saith Saint Paul;) blood: So it cleanseth (saith Saint John,) water. In vaine we flatter our selves, if they do the one and not the other. Do we make grace of none effect? that, we may not (Gal. 2. ult.) Do we make the Law of none effect by faith? that, we may not neither (Rom. 3. 10.) not, this day specially, the Feast of the Law, and Spirit, both: but rather establish it. Best, if it could be set right, the Song of Moses and of the Lamb: it is the harmony of heaven. If we teach Ne peccetis (water,) to teach also (blood) si quis autem peccaverit (with Saint John.) If we say salvus factus est (blood;) to say Noli amplius peccare (water) withall, with Christ Himselfe.

John 4. 14.
John 6. 17.

Well, when Christ is come, and thus come, may we be gone, have we done? Done! we are yet in the midst of the verse; before we make an end of it, it must be Whitsontide. The Spirit is to come too. So, a new qui venit; that comes in both those, and comes in the Spirit, besides. And a new non solum; not in water and blood only, but in the Spirit withall.

Not, that Christ said not truly, Consummatus est, that He hath not done all. Yes, to do that was to be done, CHRIST was enough; needs no supply; The Spirit comes not, to do; comes but to testifie. That inter alia, is one of His Offices.

And a Witness is requisite. There is no matter of weight with us, if it be sped authentically (especially a Testament) but it is with a Teste. And God doth none of His great works but so: of which, this Coming is one, even the greatest of all. Neither of His Testaments, without one. As God in nature left not Himself without witness (saith the Apostle.) So neither Christ, in grace. As then, in the Old Testament, Ad Legem & Testimonium (saith Esay 8.) So, in the New, Ad Evangelium & Testimonium, to the Gospel, to Christ and the testimony, calls S. John here CHRIST also to have his Teste: We to call for it; and if it be called for of us, to be able to shew it.

A witness there needeth then, and a witness there is. One, nay three. In ore duorum; that is, in every matter nothing without two at least. But in this, so many, so high a matter, God would enlarge the number; have it in ore trium, have it full, no fewer than three: three, to His part, three, to ours.

At the ordering of it in heaven, three there were, the 1 Father, the 2 Word, and 3 the Spirit: that the whole Trinity might be equally interested in the accomplishment of the work of our Salvation, and it passe through all their hands. And at the speeding it in earth, three more: 1 The Spirit, and 2 Water, and 3 Blood to answer them, that all might go by a Trinity, that Holy, Holy, Holy, might be thrice repeated. The truth herein answereth to the Type. For under the Law, nothing was held perfectly hallowed, till it passed three, the 1 cleansing water, first; the 2 sprinkling of blood, second; 3 and last, that the holy oyle were upon it too (the holy oyle, the Holy Ghost's type:) but when any thing anointed with all three, then had it His perfect holydome; then it was holy indeed. And even so passe we through three hands all. 1 Gods, as men; 2 Christs, as Christian men; Blood notes the redemption: 3 And the Spirit as Spiritual men, which pertains to all. If any be Spiritual, he knows this: and you that be Spiritual do this (saith the Apostle.) For, Christians that be animales spiritum non habentes; S. Jude tells us, there is no reckoning to be made of them.

To let the other go. The Spirit is a witness, to JESUS CHRIST, that came in water and blood: Witness, to JESUS CHRIST, that came: witness, to His water and blood, He came in. In a witness it is required, he be Testis idoneus: will you see, quam idoneus, how apt, how every way agreeing? The Spirit and Jesus agree: Jesus was conceived by the Spirit. The Spirit and Christ agree: in the word Christ is the Spirit. For [CHRIST] is anointed. Anointed with what? with the Holy Ghost, the true unction, and the truth of all unctions whatsoever. The Spirit and water agree: the Spirit moved on the face of the waters. The Spirit and blood agree: The Spirit of life is in the blood; the vessels of it, the arteries, run along with the texture of the veins, all the body over.

To His coming, this Spirit agreeth also. When He came, as Jesus, the Spirit conceived Him. When He came, as CHRIST, the Spirit anointed Him. When he came, in water, at his Baptisme, the Spirit was there: came down in the shape of a Dove, rested, abode on Him. When He came, in blood, at His Passion, there too: It was the eternal Spirit of God, by which He offered Himself without spot unto God (Heb. 9. 4.) So, the most fit that can be, to bear witness to all; Præsens interfuit, & vidit & audiuit, was present, heard, and saw, was acquainted with all that passed: none can speak to the point so well as He.

The Spirit is a witness, is true every way: But, why is it said, It is the Spirit that beareth witness, seeing they both (water and blood) bear it too? it is water, it is blood that bear witness also. They (indeed) are witnesses: but, it is the Spirit, He it is that is the principal witness, and principally to be regarded, before the rest. Here, He comes in last; but, He is (indeed) first: and so as first, is placed at the eighth verse, where they are orderly reckoned up. And good reason. He is one of the three, both above in heaven; and beneath in earth: third, there above: first, here beneath: a witness, in both Courts, admitted ad ius testis in both, for His special credit in both: the medius terminus (as it were) between heaven and earth, between God and man.

Besides it is said, It is He, He it is that beareth witness. For, it is neither of the other, will do us any good without Him: the whole weight lieth upon him. Not the water without the Spirit, it is but nudum & egenum elementum. Not the blood without the Spirit, no more than the flesh without the Spirit, non prodest quicquam (as said He, whose the flesh and blood was, CHRIST Himself.)

Will you see a proof without it? CHRIST came to Simon Magnus in water, he was baptized: CHRIST came to Judas, in blood, he was a communicant: but Spirit there came none to testify: they were both never the better. The better? nay, the worse: Simon perished in the gall of bitterness, Judas bibit mortem de fonte vite, from the cup of blessing drank down his own bane. All, for want of Et spiritus est. So is it with the word, and with any means else.

But let the testimony of the Spirit come, the water becomes a well, springing up to eternity; the flesh and blood, meat that perisheth not, but endureth to life everlasting.

And even in nature we see this: Water, if it be not aqua viva, have not a Spirit to move it, and make it run, it stands and putrifies: and blood, if no Spirit in it, it congeals and grows corrupt and foul, as the blood of a dead man. The Spirit helpeth this, and upon good reason doth it. For, CHRIST being conceived by the Spirit, it was most meet, all of Christ should be conceived the same way. That which conceived Him, should impregnate his water, should animate His blood, should give the vivificat, the life and and vigour to them both. It is the Spirit then, that giveth the witnesse.

Now, in a witnesse, above all it is required, he be true: the Spirit is so true, as He is the truth itself. The Spirit, the truth? Why CHRIST saith of Himself, I am the truth. All the better: for, Verum vero consonat, one truth will well sort with, will uphold, will make proof one of another, as these two do prove either other reciprocally. The Spirit, CHRIST's proof: CHRIST, the Spirits: Every Spirit that confesseth not CHRIST, is not the true Spirit. The Spirit CHRIST: CHRIST, if He have not the Teste of the Spirit: is not the true CHRIST. Alwayes, the Truth is the best witnesse. And, if He be the Truth, on His Teste, you may bear your self. Not so, on water, or blood: without Him, they may well deceive us, and be falsa and fallacia, as wanting the Truth, if He, if the Spirit be wanting.

It will then much concern us, to be sure, the Spirit, on whose testimony we are thus wholly to rely, that that spirit be the truth. And, it is the main point of all, to be able to discern the Spirit, that is the truth: because, as there is a Spirit of truth, so there a spirit of error abroad in the world; yea, many such spirits: and the Apostle who tells us of alium Jesum, in the same verse tells us of alium spiritum too. We be then to try, which spirit is the truth, that so the spirit on whose witnesse we rest our selves, be the truth. How take we notice of the spirit? How knew they the Angel was come down into the poole of Bethesda, but by the stirring and moving of the water? So by stirring up in us spiritual motions, holy purposes and desires, is the Spirits coming known. Specially, if they do not vanish again. For if they do, then was it some other flatus matter, which will quiver in the veins; (and unskilful people call it the life-blood;) but the Spirit it was not. The Spirits motion, the pulse, is not for a while, and then ceaseth; but is perpetual, holds as long as life holds, though intermittent sometime, for some little space.

Yet hold we it not safe, to lay overmuch weight upon good motions, which may come of diverse causes, and of which (good motions) there are as many in hell, as in heaven. The surest way is to lay it on that, our SAVIOUR and His Apostles so often lay it, that is, on Spiritus vivificat. The life is ever the best indicant signe of the spirit. Novum supervenisse spiritum, nova vita ratio demonstrat, that a new Spirit is come, a new course of life is the best demonstration.

Now, life is best known by vital actions. Three the Scripture counteth: 1 Spiritus ubi vult spirat, by breath: 2 Spiritus manifeste loquitur, by speech: 3 Omnia hac operatur unus idemque spiritus, by the work: (these three.)

1. The nearest and most proper note of the Spirit is spiration, or breathing. In breathing there is a double act: 1 there is a Systole, a drawing in of the ayre (and that is cold) agreeth with Christ in water: there comes a coole breath ever from the water. 2 And there is a Diastole, a sending forth of the the breath; and that (we know) is warme, and agreeth with Christ in blood. For blood is it, that sendeth a warme vapour into all the limmes.

Agreeable to these two, have you the two Spirits, which upon the matter, are but the two acts of one and the same Spirit: 1 Inspired, the Spirit of fear, Esay 11. 2. The fear of GOD. 2 Out-breathed, the spirit of faith, 2 Cor. 4. 12. Faith in Christ. Fear comes in water: so saith Solomon; the fear of GOD is fons vite, the well-spring of life (Prov. 14. 27.) that is water. Faith comes in blood; per fidem in sanguinem Ipsius (Romans 3. 15.) through faith in His blood. So, is every one that is borne of the Spirit. And to blow out faith still, and never draw in fear, is suspicious, is not safe. The true spiration, the breathing aright, consisting of these two, is a signe of the right Spirit.

The next signe in the same verse too: And you hear the noise of it. For, so the Apostle saith, the Spirit speaks evidently: that is, His noise and speech is evidently to be distinguished, from those of other spirits. His coming in tongues this day, sheweth no lesse. Which signe speech doth best and most properly sort here, with a witnesse. For, a witnesse, what he hath to testify, speaks it out vocally.

What noise: then is heard from us (What breathe we? What speaks the Spirit manifestly from our mouths? If cursing, and bitternesse, and many a foul oath, if this noise be heard from us; If we breathe minas & cedes, bluster out threatning and slaying (that noise:) If παρεός λόγος, rotten, corrupt, obscene communication come out of our mouths; we are of Galilee, and our very speech bewrayeth us. This is not the breath of the Spirit; this, He speaks not: evidently He speaks it not. It is not the tongue of heaven, this: Not sicus dedit Spiritus eloqui, no utterance of the Spirits giving. Some of CHRIST's water would do well, to wash these out of our mouths. The speech founding of the Spirit, is a signe of the true Spirit.

The last (but the surest of all) omnia hac operatur spiritus. And the work is as clearly to be distinguished, as the speech. Each Spirit hath his own proper work, and is known by it. No man ever saw the works of the Divel come from the Spirit of GOD. Be not deceived, the works of uncleanness come from no Spirit, but the unclean spirit. The works of Cain, from the spirit of envie: The works of Demas, from the spirit of the world. All the grosse errors of our life from the spirit of error. But this is the Spirit of Truth. And the breath, the speech, the operations of Him, bear witnesse, that He is so. Now, if He will depose, that the water and blood, CHRIST came in, He came in, for us; and we our parts in them: in them, and in them bote: and so deposing, if we feele His breath, hear His speech; see His works according, we may receive His witnesse then: For, His witnesse is true.

Now, that upon this day, the day of the Spirit, the Spirit may come and bear this witnesse, to Christ's water and blood; there is to be water and blood, for the Spirit to bear witnesse to. So was there (ever) as this day, in the Church of Christ. Water: a solemne Baptisme in memory of the first three thousand, this day, baptized by Saint Peter. And blood: never a more frequent Eucharist, than at Pentecost, in honour of this Spirit, to which Saint Paul made such haste with his almes and offerings. Witnesse the

The Reversal. So are we now come to the Reversal, to the last non solum ; and here it is. Not in the Spirit alone, but in water and blood, reciprocal. As not these, without the Spirit : so neither the Spirit without these, that is, without the Sacrament, wherein these be. So have we a perfect circle now. Neither in water, without blood ; nor in blood without water ; nor in them alone without the Spirit ; nor in the Spirit alone without them.

Mar. 14. 13. This day, CHRIST comes to us in blood, in the Sacrament of it (so.) But (as we said before) either is in other : Blood is not ministred, but there is an ingredient of the purifying vertue of water withal in it : So, He comes in water, too. Yea, comes in water first ; so lie they in the Text : water to go before, with us. So did it, at the very institution it self, of this Sacrament. The pitcher of water, and he that carried it, was not in vain given for a signe : went not before them, that were sent to make ready for it, for nothing.

John 13. 10. It had a meaning, that water ; and it had an use. Their feet were washed with it, and their feet being clean, they were clean every whit. Many make ready for it, that see neither water nor pitcher ; it were well, they did : their feet would be washed ; so would their hands, in innocencie, that are to go to his Altar. In innocencie, that is, in a stedfast purpose of keeping our selves clean : so, to come. For, to come, and not with that purpose, better not come at all. To find a feeling of this purpose before, and to mark well the successe and effect, that doth follow after. For, if it faile us continually, Christ did not come. For, when He comes, though it be in blood, yet He comes with water at the same time. Ever in both : never in one alone.

His blood is not only drink, to nourish ; but medicine, to purge. To nourish the new man, which is faint and weak (GOD wor.) but to take down the old, which is rank in most. It is the proper effect of His blood ; it doth cleanse our consciences from dead works, to serve the living God.

Heb. 9. 14. Which if we finde it both, Christ is come to us, as He is to come. And the Spirit is come, and puts His Teste. And if we have His Teste, we may go our way in peace ; we have kept a right Feast to Him, and to the memory of His coming.

Even so come LORD JESUS, and come O blessed Spirit, and bear witness to our Spirit, that CHRIST's water, and His blood, we have our part in both ; both, in the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, and in the blood of the New Testament, the Legacy whereof, is everlasting life in thy Kingdome of glory. Whither CHRIST, that paid the purchase ; and the Spirit, that giveth the seisin, vouchsafe to bring us all.

JAM. Chap. I. Ver. XVI, XVII.

Nolite itaque errare fratres mei dilectissimi:

Omne datum optimum, & omne donum perfectum desursum est, descendens à P A T R E luminum, apud quem non est transmutatio, nec vicissitudinis obumbratio Erre not my dear brethren.

Every good thing, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the F A T H E R of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadowing by turning.

AND, if every good giving, and every perfect gift, what giving so good, or what gift so perfect, as the gift of gifts, this dayes gift, the gift of the Holy Ghost? There are in it, all the points in the Text. It is from above; It descended visibly this day: and from the Father of lights; so many tongues, so many lights; which kindled such a light in the world on this day, as to this day is not put out, nor shall ever be, to the worlds end.

First, the HOLY GHOST is oft styled by this very name or title, of the Gift of God. If ye knew the gift of God, (saith our Saviour) to the woman at the Wells side. What gift was that? It is plain there, the water of life. That water was the Spirit: This He spake of the Spirit

John 4 10.

John 7. 39.

(saith Saint John, who knew his mind best) as then, not yet given; but since (as upon this day) sent in- to the world.

Secondly, This gift is both good and perfect: so good, as it is de bonis optimum, of all goods the best: and of all perfects, the most absolutely perfect: the gift of perfection, or perfection of all the gifts of God. What should I say? Not to be valued (saith Saint Peter) not to be uttered (saith Saint Paul) as if all the tongues that were on earth before, and all that came down this day, were little enough, or indeed were not enough, nor able any way to utter or express it.

Acts 8 10.

2 Cor. 9. 5.

Psal. 68. 18.

Thirdly, nay it is not one gift among many (how compleat soever) but it is many in one, so many tongues, so many gifts; as, so many grapes, in a cluster; so many grains, in a Pomegranate. In this one gift, are all the rest. Ascending up on high, dona dedit, He gave gifts: all these dona were in hoc dono; all those gifts in this gift; every one of them folded up as it were inclusive. The Father, the fountain; the Son, the Cistern; the Holy Ghost, the Conduit-pipe, or pipes rather (for they are many) by and through which, they are derived down to us.

1 Cor. 2. 4.

Fourthly, and lastly, not only in Him, and by Him, but from Him too. For He is the gift and giver both. There is great variety of gifts (saith St. Paul) but it is one and the same Spirit, that maketh distribution of them to every man severally, even as Himself pleaseth. Both the thing given, and the Party that giveth it, all derived to us from Him, wrought in us by Him, and by us to be referred to Him.

At the time of any of Gods gifts sent us by Him, to speak of Scriptures of this nature, cannot seem unreasonable: but, of all other, at the time of this gift, most properly. Dona dedit hominibus: what day was that? even this very day. Dies domum hic; so many tongues, so many gifts. This day (I say) whereto Donum Dei, and Donum Diei fall together so happily. We have brought it to the Day.

The Samar.
1 Joh. 27.

It will not be amiss to touch the end a little, which the Apostle aimeth at in these words. It is the old, it is the new Commandment, Mandatum vetus & novum, to make us love God. The point whereto the Law and the Prophets drive; yea, the Gospel and the Apostles, and all. We cannot love Him well, whom we think not well of: We cannot think well of him, whom we think, evil comes from. Then, to think so well of God, as not to think any evil: not any evil; no, but instead thereof, all good cometh to us, from Him. So thinking, we cannot choose but we must love Him.

Rom 15 30.

And to this end (at the thirteenth verse before (S. James had told us plain, God is not the author of evil: Not tempted Himself, nor tempting any to it. As at that verse, not the Author of evil: So at this, the Author of all, and every good. Men, when their braines are turned with diving into Gods secrets, may conceive as they please: but, when all is said that can be, No man can ever entirely love him, whom he thinks so evil of, as to be the Author of all evil. We are (with S. James) to teach, and you to believe that, will procure you to love God the better, not that, will alien your minds, or make you love him the worse. That therefore, S. James denies peremptorily: No evil, nemo dicat, Let no man speak it, let it not once be spoken. But let this be hardly, That all the good we have or hope for, descends down from Him. And that S. James (here) affirms as earnestly: Erre not my dear brethren. It is to erre, to think otherwise: for that absolutely, Every good giving, and again over, Every perfect gift, there is not one of them all, but from Him they come. And so, we in all duty to love Him, from whom all manner good proceedeth. This is His end, Love; and that falls fit and is proper to this Feast, the Feast of Love. For, Love is the proper effect of the Spirit (Per charitatem Spiritus;) the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghost, this day given unto us.

The Division.
Jan. 3. 11.

The verse, to the Chapter, is a clear and a strict proposition, but hath in it the force or energy, to make a compleat Argument. For, if all good from God, then no evil. S. James layes it for a ground: Salt or bitter water, and sweet, cannot issue both from one fountain; Nor the works of darkness, from the Father of lights, never.

But we take it only as a proposition, with a little Item, at the end of it. If we ask questions of Art concerning it, Qua, Quanta, Qualis? Qua? It is Categorical: Quanta? It is universal: Qualis? First, it is affirmative: then, true, [erre not] goes before it. So true, as to think the contrary is a flat error.

I.

The rules of Logick divides a Proposition to our hands, into the forepart (in Schools, they call it Subjectum:) and into the after-part, which they call predicatum. 1. The Subiectum here is Omne datum, &c. The predicatum, desursum est, &c. The Subject is double, 1 Datum bonum, and 2 Donum perfectum, with an universal note to either: Every good, and every perfect, to be sure, to take in all, to leave out none. 2. The predicatum, that stands of three points: 1 Whence: 2 How: and 3 From whom; from the Father of lights.

II.

Then comes the Item (I told you of) provisionally, to meet with an objection, a thought that might rise in our hearts peradventure: That is, it may be, as the lights of the world, or the children, have their variations, their changes, so the Father also may have them. But that he puts us out of doubt of too, with as peremptory a negative: Be it with the lights as it will; with the Father of lights, with God, there is no variation, no change; No not so much as a shadow of them. In effect, as if he should say: from the Father of lights, which is unchangeable; or from the unchangeable Father of lights: and so it shall be meer affirmative; but that, there is Major vis in negatione, Denial is stronger.

And all these he brings in, with a Nolite errare; and that not without just cause. For, about this verse and the points in it, there are no less than seven sundry errors. I shall note you them as I go, that you may avoid them: Together with such matter of duty as shall incidently fall in from each. Specially, touching the gift of the day, the gift of the Holy Ghost.

To

TO take the Proposition in funder. The subject first: and that is double; ¹ Datum, and ² Donum: and either of them his proper Epithet; ¹ Good, and perfect. Jointly, of both together first: after, severally of either part.

Datum, and Donum, they both come of Do; Given they are both. Where (first) because it is the Feast of Tongues, to set our tongue right. For, the world and the Holy Ghost speak not one language: Not with one tongue both. There should not else have needed any to have been sent down. The world talks of all, as had: the Holy Ghost, as given. Look to the Habendum (saith the world) the having: that is the Spirit of the Worlds. Religion; look to Donum and Datum, the giving: that is His. The Heathen calls His virtue virtus a habitus; that, comes of habendo. The Christian (by Saint James here) donis, signum, datum and donum; all which come of Dando. Thus doth the Holy Ghost frame our Tongues to speak, if we will speak with the tongues of this day. They that do not, they are of Galilee, and their speech bewrayeth them straight.

Will you hear one of them? You know who said, Soul thou hast enough (hast) and you know who spake otherwise, quid habes quod non accepisti? What but that you have received? Receiving and giving (you know) are relatives; which, the other little thought of. You may know each, by their dialect.

From the beginning: Esa he said, Habeo bona plurima frater mi, I have goods enough: that is his phrase of speech; that, the language of Edom. What saith Jacob at the same time? Esa asking him, what were all the droves he met, They be (saith he) the good things that God hath given me. Have (saith Esa): Given me (saith Jacob). Nonne habeo? Have not I power to crucifie thee; and have not I power to deliver thee? You may know it, it is Pilates voice. But our Saviour He tells him: Non haberes potestatem; Power should he have had none, if it had not been given him, and given him from above. St. James his very phrase (here) from CHRIST own mouth. So must we speak if we will speak as CHRIST spake.

This then is the first error. To have our mind run, and our speech run, all upon having. Men are all for having, think and speak of what they have; without mention of whence, or how, or from whom they might receive it, or that it is given them at all. Nolite errare. Be not deceived; for, all that you have, is datum or donum, all; and they both are of free gift; given, all. Thus the tongue that fate this day on S. James's head, taught him to call them. Thus far jointly; now severally.

For there is a cleft in these tongues. The cleft is Datum and Donum. Would not wrap them all up in one word, but expresses them in two. Somewhat there is, in that. We may not admit of any idle Tautologies in Scripture. Two several sorts then they be (these two) not opposite, but differing only in degree, as more and less. Every gift is a giving: Not every giving, a gift: Every perfect, good; not every good, perfect. We are not to think, either all our sinnes, or all our gifts to be of one size. S. Marthews talent is more than S. Lukes pound; Casars penny, than the Widows two mites; yet good money all, in their several values. Of these two, ¹ Datum, and ² Donum; ¹ Bonum, and ² Perfectum; one is greater or less than another.

He begins with the less, Datum. Weigh the word; it is but a Participle: they have tenses, and tenses, time. So, that is only temporal.

But Donum imports no time: so, a more set terme; hath more substance in it, is fixed or permanent. One (as it were) for term of years: The other, of the nature of a perpetuity. A Datum; that which is still in giving; that, perishes with the use, as do things transitory; and be of that sort; that Job spake, God hath given, and God hath taken away. Donum is not so, but of that sort; that CHRIST speaks, in Maries choice, so given, as it should never be taken from her. So, one referres to the things which are seen, which are temporal: the other, to the things not seen, that are eternal. One, to the body, and to this world: the other to the soul rather, and the life of the World to come.

We shall discern it the more clearly, if we weigh the two Adjectives, ¹ Good, and ² perfect: they differ. Every good is not perfect. We know, the Law is good (saith the Apostle): but we know withal, the Law bringeth nothing to perfection; so, not perfect. Nature (qua natura) is good, yet imperfect: and the Law, in the rigour of it, not possible, through the imperfection of it. Nature is not, the Law is not taken away; good both: but grace is added to both, to perfect both: which needed not, if either were perfect. This worlds good; so doth S. John call our Wealth. Nay, bread, fish, and eggs, we give our children, our Saviour Himself calleth good gifts. But what are these? not worthy to be named, if you speak of Donum Dei eternum, and the perfections there.

Before I was aware, I have told you, what is perfect, the glory, the joyes, the crown of heaven. For, when that perfect is come, all this imperfect shall be done away. But S. James seems not to speak of that: he speaks in the present, and of the present, what now is, what perfect in this life. And this (lo) brings us to donum dei, the gift of the Holy Ghost. For, to be partakers of the Divine

The V. Error.

Divine nature, is all the perfection, we can here attain. No higher, here. Now, to be made partakers of the Spirit, is to be made partakers of the Divine nature. That is this days work. Partakers of the Spirit, we are, by receiving grace; which is nothing else but the breath of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of grace, grace into the entire substance of the soul, dividing it self into two streams: 1. One goes to the understanding, the gift of faith; 2. The other to the will, the gift of charity, the very bond of perfection. The tongues, to teach us knowledge; the fire, to kindle our affections. The state of grace is the perfection of this life, to grow still from grace to grace, to profit in it. As to go on still forward, is the perfection of a traveller, to draw still nearer and nearer to his journeys end. To work to day and to morrow, as CHRIST said, and the third day to be perfect, perfectly perfect.

Now, as we are to follow the best gifts (it is S. Pauls counsel) the best, the most perfect: so are we to take notice too of the good, though not all out so perfect, as S. James adviseth us: knowing this, that be it giving, or be it gift; be it good, or be it perfect; He puts an Omne to both; comes over twice, 1 Every good; 2 Every perfect: both we receive, both are given us. Set down that. There was among the Heathen, one that went for wife, that said, To become rich, he would pray and sacrifice to Hercules; but to be virtuous or wise, he would do neither, neither to Hercules, nor to any god of them all; he would be beholden for that, to none but himself. Look in this cleft, he took to himself the more, left God the less. This was a gross error: so gross I will not bid you take heed of it. But there be, that will not stand with God for the greater: but for the less, that they may be bold with, and take those to themselves. This is an error too: Erre not thus. No: datum hath his omne, as well as donum; the good no less than the perfect; given both, one as well as the other. S. Paul puts us to it with Quid habes? that is, nihil habes: What have you? that is, you have nothing, but you have received it, but hath been given you; ἀπο and δόν are relations; one confers the other.

Away then with this second error. He that made the Elephant, made the Ant; He, that the Eagle, the flie: He that the most glorious Angel in Heaven, the poorest worme that creeps on the earth. So, He that will give us the Kingdom of heaven, He it is, that gives us every piece of bread and meat, and puts us to acknowledge it: in one and the same prayer making us to sue, for regnum tuum, and for panem nostrum. Be not deceived to think otherwise. And hear you, you are to begin with datum, Not to despise the day of small things: It is the Prophets counsel: to learn to see God in them. Casars Image, not only in his coin of Gold, but even upon the poor penny. See God in small, or you shall never see him in great; in good, or never in perfect. This for the subject. There is a cleft: all are not of one sort: some less, some greater: Greater or less, both are given. Not less had, and great given, but given both. And every one of both kinds, of the one kind as well as of the other.

We have talked long of good; * Who will shew us any good? there be many that will say, nay there is not any but will say. That will S. James here. And first to shew us, turns our eye to the right place whence it comes. That is ἀνωθεν from above. There are two in this ἀνωθεν: 1 ἀνω, from, 2 and θεν, above. From: that is, from somewhere else, not from our selves: From without; and not out of us, from within. Aliunde ἐξωθεν: and that aliunde is from ἀνω above, not from ῥητω, those lower parts upon the earth.

Erre not then, either of these two ways: 1. First, not to reflect upon our selves, to look like Swans into our own bosomes. It grows not there, out of your selves: It is the gift of God (saith S. Paul). The very giving gives as much. Of our own we have it not.

2. If we look forth, let it not be about us, either on the right hand, or on the left, or any place here below. Look up: turn your eye thither. It is an influence; it is no vapour; an inspiration, no exhalation: thence it comes, hence it rises not: our spirit lusts after envy, and worle matter (James 4. 4.) Why should thoughts arise in your hearts? (saith Christ) If they arise, they are not good; if they be good, then they come down from above. Saint John Baptist is direct: A man can receive nothing, unless it be given him; and given him from above. And, of all other, not the gift of this Day: The Dove, the tongues came from on high both. From our selves, is one error: from any other beneath here, is another. Erre not then, the place is desursum, without and above us.

Next, the manner, how; that it descends: for, even that word wants not his force. Descending is a voluntary motion: it concludes the will and the purpose of him, that so descends. It is no casualty; it falls not down by chance: It comes down, because it so will; a will it hath: Et ubi vult spirat, it blows not, but where it will: and it distributes to every one (the Spirit) but prout vult, as it pleaseth Himself, not otherwise.

And this you may observe: the Scripture maketh choice (ever) of words sounding this way. He gives it, he casts it not about, at all adventure. He opens His hand, it runs not through His fingers. Sinum habet facilem, non perforatum: His bosome is open enough, yet hath no hole in it, to drop through against His will. He sent his word (it came not by hap,) that is, Christ. And I will send you another Comforter, that is, the Holy Ghost. Nor He neither. Of his own will he begat us: they be the words that follow.

It is the fifth error, to ascribe to fortune either datum or donum. Erre not then: as the place is from above, so the manner, descendens, not decidens; they come, they are not let fall.

Whence,

Whence, we see, and how: Now, from whom. The party in a word is GOD. He had said as much before (Verse 5.) If any lack wisdom, let him ask it of God; How comes He (here) to use this somewhat unusual term, the Father of lights? It had been (to our thinking) more proper to have said, from GOD the Author of all good things. No, there is reason for it. For say they are, they came down from above: when we cast up our eyes thither, we can see no further, our sight can reach no higher than the lights; than the lights there above. And so, some you have, that hold, they come from them, de luminibus, from the lights: that such a conjunction or aspect of them, such a constellation, or horoscope, such a position of such and such Planets, produce very much good. This is in Astrology, but not in Theology. Mā māyādi (of which word come the Planets) saith S. James, Wander not after the wandering stars: de luminibus, is not it; de Patre luminum is the right. So, the Father of lights was purposely chosen, to draw us from the lights. That, not they, they are not (not the children;) The Father, he it is, from whom they come, The lights: No, them He made to do service. Nay, the Angels above them, He made to be ministering spirits for our good. Be not deceived, with this neither: To lift up our eyes to the host of Heaven; and no further, but beyond them, to the Father of them all, and then you are where you should be.

1. From whom
A pater luminum.

Why luminum
of light.

Heb. i. 14.
The VL. Arbor.

This may be one reason. But further if you ask, why not rather of all good, as He began; why is He gone from that term, to this of lights? The answer is easie. If we speak of gifts, light it is princeps donorum Dei, the first gift GOD bestowed upon the world, and so will fit well. If of good; the first thing of which it is said, vidit Deus quod bona, was light: and so fit, that way too. If you speak of perfect; so perfect it is, as it is desired for it self, we take comfort in seeing it, we delight to see it, though we see nothing by it, nothing but the light it self (observed by Solomon, Ecclesiast. 11. 5.)

Gen. i. 3, 4.

And for good: such is the nearness of affinity, such (I may say) the con-naturality between light and good, as they would not be one without the other. All that good is, loves the light, would come to the light, would be made manifest, desires no busbel to hide it, but a candlestick, to shew it forth to all the world. That they might be searched with Lanthorns, to have the secrets, the hidden corners of their hearts looked into, that the Father of Lights would grant them so to be.

Joh. 3. 21.
Mat. 5. 15.

For perfect: so perfect a thing is the light, as God Himself is said to be light: 1 Joh. i. 5. His Son our Saviour, to be light of lights, the true light that lighteneth every one that cometh into the world. His Spirit, light; so is our Collect: God which as upon this day hath taught the hearts of thy faithful people, by sending to them the light of thy Holy Spirit. The Angels that be good, be Angels of light. Yea whatsoever here on earth is perfect: the King is called, the Light of Israel; The Apostles called, Luces mundi; and the Saints of God, where ever they be in the World, shine as lights in it. That upon the matter, Father of good, and Father of light, is all one.

Joh. 1. 9.

2 Sam. 21. 17.
Mat. 5. 24.

Pater luminum would have served, if we respect but this; but the nature. What say you to the number? It is luminum: why, of lights in the plural? That is, to give light to what we said before, of the divers degrees of the givings, and of the gifts of God. In the firmament, there is one light of the Sun, another of the Moon, and yet another of the stars: and, in the starres, one differeth from another in glory. Good every one, though not so perfect, one as another. He that made the bright sun in all his glory, He made the dimmest starre; all alike from Him; He like the Father of all.

Why luminum
not lumen.

1 Cor. 13. 48.

Besides, He sets them down in the plural [lights] for that the opposite (tenebra) is a plural word (and indeed hath no singular) for, they are many, and so need many lights: to match them. There is the senses outward darkness, there is the darkness of the inward man; both the darkness of the understanding by ignorance and error, and the darkness of the will and heart by hatred and malice, 1 Joh. 2. 9. There is the darkness of adversity in this world, the higher darkness, there is some little light in it: And there is the blackness of darkness, the utter darkness of the world to come; no manner light at all. Nothing to be seen, but, to be heard; nor to be heard, but weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Jude 13.
Mat. 8. 12.

To match these so many darkneses there behoved to be as many lights; and so, Pater luminum comes in, not lumen. As, to match the many miseries of our nature, there were as many mercies requisite; and so he, Pater misericordiarum, not misericordia (with the Apostle) of many, not of one alone. We need the number, as well as the thing; to have a multitude, a plurality of mercies, to have plenteous redemption, to have χαρὸν πολυμίσχον, great variety of grace, and that over-abundant grace, that we might rest assured, there is enough and enough, in the Father of lights, to master and to over-match any darkness of the Prince of darkness, what or how many soever.

Shall I shew you these lights? Not the visible, of the Sun, Moon, and Starres, nor fire or candle; I pass them. Besides them there is two in us; 1. The light of Nature, for rebelling against which, all that are without CHRIST, suffer condemnation. Solomon calls it the candle of the Lord searching even the very bowels (Proverbs 20.) which though it be dimme and not perfect, yet good it is: though lame, yet (as Mephibosheth) it is Regia proles, of the blood royal. 2. There is the light of God's Law: Lex, Lux (saith Solomon) totidem verbis, Prov. 6. and his Father, a lantern borne to his feet. Nay, in the nineteenth Psalme what he saith at the fourth verse, of the sun at the right he saith the same, of the Law of God; lights, both. 3. The light of prophecy, as of a candle that shineth shineth in a dark place. 4. There is the wonderful light of His Gospel (So Saint Peter calls it :) the proper light of this day. The tongues that descended, so many tongues, so many lights; For, the tongue is a light, and brings to light what was before hid in the heart. 5. And, from these other, is the inward light of grace; whereby, God which commanded the light to shine out of darkness, He it is that shineth in our hearts; by the inward anointing (which is the oyle of this lamp) the light of his holy Spirit, chasing away the darkness both of our hearts and minds. 6. There is the light of comfort of his holy Spirit, a light sown for the righteous here in this life. And 7. there is the light of glory, which they shall reap, the light where God dwelleth, and where we shall dwell with Him: Even the inheritance of the Saints in light, when the righteous shall shine as the Sunne in the Kingdome of their Father, the Father of lights. Moses Candlestick with seven stalks and lights in each of them. Of all which seven lights GOD is the Father, acknowledges them all for His children, and to His children will vouchsafe them all in their order.

Now this only remaineth, why he is not called the Author, but the Father of these? In this is the manner of their descending. And that is, for that, they proceed from Him per modum naturæ, as the child from the Father; per modum emanationis, as the beams from the Sun. So both Father and light, shew the manner of their coming. Proper and natural for Him it is to give good. Good things come from Him as kindly, as do they: therefore said to be, not the Author, the Lord and giver, but even the very Father of them. It is against his nature to do otherwise, to pro-create or send forth ought, but good: His very loines, his bowels are all goodness. Father of darkness He cannot be, being Father of lights, nor of ought that is evil. For they two (dark and evil) are as near of kin, as light and good. This is the message (saith S. John) that we heard of him, and that we declare to you, that GOD is light, and in him is no darkness at all. Neither in Him, nor from Him: nemo dicat, let never any say it; Let it never sink into you: Tempted he is not with evil, Tempt he doth not to evil. Ascribe it not to Pater luminum, but to Princeps tenebrarum; to the Prince of darkness, not to the Father of lights. But ascribe all good, from the smallest spark to the greatest beam, from the least good giving to the best and most perfect gift of all, to Him, to the Father of lights. So we see, 1 why light; 2 why lights; 3 why the Father of lights. So much for the Pradicate and whole Proposition.

And all this may be: and yet all this being (it seems) some reply may be made and stand with the Apostles term of lights well enough. That, what befalls the lights the children, may also befall the Father of them. The great and most perfect light in this world, is the Sunne in the firmament; and two things evidently befall him, the two in the Text: Παρὰ πλάτος variation He admits, declines, and goes down and leave us in the dark; that is His parallaxe, in His motion from East to West. And, turning He admits; turns back, goes from us, and leaves us to long winter nights; that is His ἔμ; in His motion from North to South. One of these he doth every day: the other every year. Successively removing from one hemisphere to the other; when it is light there, it is dark here. Successively turning from one Tropike to another; when the days be long there, they be short here. And, if we shall say any thing of the shadow here, that way we lose Him too in part, by interposing of the clouds, when the day is over-cast. So, the night is His parallaxe: the winter His ἔμ, dark weather His shadow at least. Shadows do but take Him away in part, that is not good. But darkness takes Him away clean; that, is perfectly evil.

That it may be even so with the Father of lights, as with this it is. Good and evil come from Him alternis vicibus, by turn; and as darkness and light successively, from them. That it may fare with Him as with the Heathen Jupiter: who had (say they) in his Entry, two great fats, both full, one of good, the other of evil; and that he served them out into the world, both of the good and of the evil as he saw cause; but commonly for one of good, two of evil at least.

It was more than requisite, he should clear this objection. So doth he; denieth both (all three if you will.) That though of man it be truly said by Job, He never continues in one stay: though the lights of Heaven have their parallaxes: yea, the Angels of heaven; He found not steadfastness in them: Yet, for God, He is subject to none of them. He is Ego sum, qui sum: that is (saith Malachi) Ego Deus & non mutor. We are not what we were awhile since, nor what we shall be; awhile after, scarce what we are: for every moment makes us vary. With God, it is nothing so. He is that He is, He is and changes not. He changes not His tenor, He changes not His tense; keeps not our Grammar rules, hath one by Himself: Not, before Abraham was, I was; but, before Abraham was, I am.

Yet are there varyings and changes, it cannot be denied. We see them daily. True, but the point is per quem, on whom to lay them. Not on God. Seems there any recess? It is we forsake him, not he us. It is the ship that moves, though they that be in it think the land goes from them, not they from it. Seems there any variation, as that of the night? It is umbra terra makes it; the light makes it not. Is there anything resembling a shadow? A vapour rises from us, makes the cloud, which is as a pent-house between, and takes Him from our sight. That vapour is our lust: There, is the apud quem. Is any tempted? it is his own lust doth it; that, entices him to sin, that brings us to the shadow of death. It is not God. No more than He can be tempted, no more can He tempt any. If we find any change, the apud is with us, not Him; we change, He is unchanged. Man walks in a vain shadow: His wayes are the Truth. He cannot deny Himself.

Every evil, the more perfectly evil it is, the more it is from below: Either rises from the steam of our nature corrupted; or (yet lower,) ascends as a gross smoak, from the bottomless pit, from the Prince of darkness, as full of varying and turning into all shapes and shadows, as God is far from both, who is uniform and constant in all His courses.

Shall

Shall we now cast up all into one sum, the errors by them, and the verities by themselves, and oppose each to each? The first error: to be all for having; never speak of it. The verity: that all is giving, or gifts, to be for it. The second error: to think, great matters only are given, the meaner we have of our selves. The verity: perfect, as well as good; and good as perfect, they be given both. The third error: to think, they are from us, not elsewhere from others. The verity: they are given, they grow not in us, we spin them not out of our selves. The fourth error: they be from below; we gather them here. The verity: they be from above, that is above, not here beneath. The fifth error: to think that from thence they fall promiscue, catch who catch may, hap-hazard. The verity: they fall not by chance; they descend by providence, and that regularly. The sixth error; they descend then from the starres or planets. The verity: not from them, or either of them, but from the Father of them. The seventh and last error: to think, that by turns, he sends one while good, otherwhile bad; and so varies and changes. The verity: He doth neither. The lights may varie, He is invariable: they may change, He is unchangeable: constant alwayes, and like Himself. Now our lessons from these.

1. And is it thus? And are they given? Then, quid gloriaris? let us have no boasting. Are they given, why forget you the giver? Let Him be had in memory, He is worthy so to be had. 2. Be the giving, as well as the gift; and the good, as the perfect, of gift, both? Then acknowledge it in both, take the one as the pledge, make the one as a step to the other. 3. Are they from somewhere else, not from our selves? Learn then to say, and to say with feeling, Non nobis Domine, quia non à nobis. 4. Are they from on high? Look not down to the ground then, as Swine to the Acrones, they find lying there, and never once up to the Tree they came from. Look up: the very frame of our body gives that way. It is nature's check to us, to have our head bear upward, and our heart grovel below. 5. Do they descend? Ascribe them then to purpose, not to time or chance. No Table to fortune (saith the Prophet.) 6. Are they from the Father of lights? Then never go to the children: A signis celi nolite timere: Neither fear nor hope for any thing from any light of them all. 7. Are His gifts without repentance? Varies he not? Whom He loves, doth He love to the end? Let our service be so too, not wavering. O that we changed from Him, no more than He from us? Not from the light of grace, to the shadow of sin, as we do full often.

The Day

Psal. 113. 2

Isay 65. 11.
Jer. 10. 2.
Rom. 11. 23.
Joh. 13. 1.

But above all, that which is ex tota substantia, that if we find any want of any giving or gift, good or perfect, this Text gives us light whither to look, to whom to repair for them: To the Father of lights. And even so let us do. Ad Patrem luminum, cum primo lumine. Let the light every day, so soon as we see it, put us in mind to get us to the Father of lights. Ascendat oratio, descendat misratio, let our prayer go up to Him, that His grace may come down to us: so to lighten us in our wayes and works, that we may in the end, come to dwell with Him, in the light which is per ævum ævorum, light whereof there is no even-tide, the Sun whereof never sets, nor knows tropike, the only thing we miss, and wish for in our lights here, primum & ante omnia.

But, if we sue for any, chiefly for the best, the most perfect gift of all, which this day descended and was given. This day was, and any day may be, but chiefly this day will be given to any that will desire, as our Saviour promiseth (Luke 11.) and will be as good as His word.

Luk. 11. 13.
Jam. 4. 5.

Within us there is no Spirit but our own, and that lusts after envy, and other things as bad: from beneath it cannot be had: It is donum cæleste; Simon, if he would give never so largely for it, cannot obtain it. It descended ad oculum this day, it was seen to descend, and so will.

Which descends from on high, from the Father of lights (there in the tongues of light) light on us to give us knowledge, a gift proportioned to light: and to give us comfort, a gift proportioned to light. By faith, to lighten. By grace to stablish our hearts.

I COR. Chap. XII.

Divisiones vero gratiarum, &c.

^{Or Divisions.} Ver. 4. Now there are ^{} Diversities of Gifts, but the same Spirit.

5 And there are diversities of administrations, but the same Lord.

6. And there are diversities of operations, but God is the same, which worketh all in all.

7. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man, to profit withal.

TEXT read at this Feast, of the Churches own choice: who (I will ever presume) best knoweth, what Text will best fit every Feast; and so this. It begins (you see) and it ends in the Spirit, whose proper Feast this is. The Spirit is in the first verse; and again the Spirit is in the last: first, and last, here we find him.

And if we will look well into it, we shall (in effect) find that, which hapned this Day, though in other terms. Here have you in this Text, gifts, as it might be the tongues, which came from Heaven this Day: For, what were those tongues but gifts? And here have you again divisions, as it might be clefts, in the tongues: For what is to cleave, but to divide? And, if you lack fire: here have you in the last verse, manifestation, which is by light. For, the use of light, is to make manifest. So have you the Holy Ghost in cloven tongues of fire, in some more general terms: the gifts, the tongues, the division, the cleft, the manifestation, the fire. Those gifts, first divided, then made manifest, and that by the Spirit, amounting to the substance of the Feast: that there can be no question, but the Text suits to the time, fully.

The Use we have of the whole Text, is; that in all humble thankfulness, we are to acknowledge the great goodness of the whole Deity entire, and of every person in it; So seriously taking to heart the Churches (that is, all our) good, as (we see) they do in a sort meet here, and assemble themselves, all three, each for his part to contribute, one, gifts; another, callings; a third, works. And then commit over the manifestation of all to the Spirit, ad utilitatem, to the profit (that is) to the general good of the Church, in whose good, is the good of us all.

Now albeit, to authorize and to countenance the Feast the more, the whole three Persons do here present themselves, in a joynt concurrence to this work of distribution; yet, (you see) the Holy Ghost hath here a double part, and in that respect a prerogative above the other twain. For, the Spirit is in, at both. In, at the division; and so are the rest. And again, in, at the manifestation; so are none of the rest. But, He there; and He alone. For, the tongues are His; and they are too manifest: So to him alone we owe the manifesting. So, His, and so His the honour of the day, which is Festum linguarum, the Feast of tongues, or (if you will so call it) the Feast of manifestation. In very deed, the Holy Ghosts Epiphany; allowing, as Christ, one, so Him another.

The Sum of all, is: That Christ's errand being done, and he gone up on high, the Spirit this day, visibly came down, for Him and in His name and stead, to take the charge, and to establish an order in the Church: which order or establishment is here set down. And think not, it holds in the Church alone, but that in it is represented unto us a true pattern or mould of every other well composed Government. For, happy is the government, where the Holy Ghost bestoweth the gifts, Christ appoints the places, and God effecteth the work, works all in all.

And as Rectum is index sui & obliqui, A strait rule will discover as well what is crooked, as what is strait, both: So under one have we here, as the lively image of a well ordered Society (for the preserving of three aright, makes all well;) So withal the manifold obliquities and exorbitances in the Church, in the common-wealth every where; which arise from the errors about these three, 1 the gifts not regarded, 2 the places not well filled, 3 the works not workman-like performed. The not looking to of which three, hath brought, and is like more and more, to bring all out of course.

The Text (if ever any) is truly tripartite, as standing evidently of three parts: every one of the three; being a kind of Trinity. 1 Personal, 2 Real, and 3 Actual.

1 Personal, these three; 1 the same Spirit, 2 the same Lord, 3 The same God. 2. Real, these three; 1 Gifts, 2 Administrations, or offices, 3 operations, or works. 3. Actual, these three; 1 Dividing, 2 manifesting, 3 and profiting. Three divisions from three, for three. The three real, they be the ground of all, the 1 gift, 2 offices, and 3 works: The three personal; 1 The Spirit, 2 Lord, and 3 God, are but from whence those come. The three Actual, are but whither they will: 1 Divided, 2 So divided; as made manifest, 3 So made manifest, as not only 1 to make a shew, but 2 to some end; 1 That end to be, not supposed, the hurt or trouble; but 3 The good, not private, of our selves, but common; of all the whole body of the Church.

First, and before all things, we find here, and finding we adore the holy blessed and glorious Trinity: the Spirit in plain terms, the other two in no less plain, if we look to but the VI. verse of the V. Chapter before, where the Apostle saith: To us there is but one God, the Father of whom are all things, and we of Him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him. So, by God is intended the Father, the first Person: by Lord, the Son, the second: by the Spirit, the third, the usual term or title of the Holy Ghost, all the Bible through. These three, as in Trinity of Persons here distinct; So, in Unity of Essence, one and the same. For though to each of these three, there is allowed a [the same;] yet come to the Deity, and they are not three [the same] but one the [same;] one, and the same God-head, to be blessed for ever.

Once before, are these three known thus solemnly to have met; at the creating of the world. Once again, at the Baptism of Christ, the new creating it. And here now the third time, at the Baptism of the Church, with the Holy Ghost. Where, as the manner is at all baptisms, each bestoweth a several gift or largess, on the party baptized (that is) on the Church; for whom, and for whose good, all this dividing and all this manifesting is. Nay, for whom and for whose good, the world it self was created, Christ Himself baptized, and the Holy Ghost this Day visibly sent down.

The Trinity personal I deal with first, that we may know, where and from whom, all the rest issue and proceed. All errors are tolerable, save two; about Alpha, the first letter, and Omega the last; about primum principium, and ultimus finis; the first beginning, whence all flow, and the last end, where-to all tend. We erre against the first, when we derive things amiss: we erre against the second, when we refer them amiss: Divide them right, and refer them right, and all is right. And the right deriving is (as here) to bring all from the blessed Trinity.

From this Trinity personal, comes there here another (as I may call it) a Trinity real, of gifts, 2 administrations, and 3 operations. I will tell you, what is meant by each. 1. By gifts, is meant the inward indowing, enabling, qualifying, whereby one, for his skill is meet and sufficient for ought. A particular whereof to the number of nine, is set down, at the VIII, IX, and X. Verses after.

rer. 2. By administrations, is meant the outward calling, place, function, or office, whereby one is authorised lawfully to deal with ought. Of these likewise you have a list to the number of eight at the XXVIII. verse after. 3. By operations, is meant the effect, or work done, wrought, or executed by the former two (the skill of the gift, and the power of the calling :) But these, are infinite (works :) no setting down of them; only so to be ranged, as every calling to know his own proper work, and so to deal with it.

So have you three quotients from three Divisors: 1 gifts, 2 offices, 3 works, from the 1 Father, 2 Son, and 3 Holy Ghost, referendo singula singulis. 1 Gifts, they from the Spirit: 2 Offices, they from Christ, the Lord: 3 Works, they from God the Father. The Spirit, He gives wherewith: Christ, He appoints wherein: the Father, He works where-about. The Spirit gives all to all: Christ, He appoints all for all: God the Father works all in all.

You are not (here) to think these three so limited; as that all and every of them, every of the three, come not from all and every Person of the Trinity. They come, all, from all. Our rule is the works of the Trinity (all, save those that reflect upon and between themselves inwardly) all outward, to any without them are never divided. What one doth, all do.

James 1. 17.
Ephes. 4. 8.

To make it plain in these. Gifts here are ascribed to the Spirit: But S. James saith, Every one of them comes from above from the Father: and S. Paul, he saith; Christ, when He ascended up on high, he gave gifts unto men. So, the gifts come from the other two Persons, no less than from the Spirit. Offices are here assigned unto the Lord (that is) Christ: yet, by and by (at the XXVIII. verse) it is said of God the Father, that He ordained Apostles, and so goes on there, with other Offices of the Church. And in Acts 20. 28. of the Holy Ghost it is said, Posuit vos Episcopos, that he placed them Bishops: and they are chief Offices. So that, Offices are from the other two, as well as from Christ. Works, they are here appropriate to God (that is) the Father: yet in John V. with one breath Christ saith, My Father worketh hitherto, and so do I work as well as He: and in this Chapter, straight after (at the eleventh verse following) thus we read, All these things worketh one and the same Spirit. So, works as they are from the Father, so are they from the other two. And so all and every of the three Persons, equally interested, in all and every of the three.

Joh. 5. 17.

How is it then? How come they thus to be sorted? Sure rather in a kind of apt congruity than otherwise; only in a fit and convenient reference to the peculiar, and (if I may so call it) the personal attributes, which most properly suits with each Person whence they flow; As thus. The Spirit is the essential love of the Father, and the Son. Love then is his personal property: and love is bounteous; and from bounty come gifts. So, the gifts, they, from the Spirit. Christ, He is the essential wisdom of the Father: and Sapientis est ordinare; that, is Wisdoms Office, saith the Philosopher: So, the ordering of Places, or Offices, falls to him. God, we call Him the Father Almighty; which sheweth, Might or power is His proper Attribute; and power it is, that worketh: So, the work is His peculiar. And thus come they, thus sorted. And so well we may repair to each severally for his several: Yet, with no exclusive to the rest; but to all, for all jointly, for all that. This needs not trouble any.

No more needs their order in standing: The Holy Ghost first; and the Father last; otherwise than in Baptism, or in the Doxologie. The works appropriate to the Father, though they be in execution last, yet are they in intention first. It is (as in a solemn train) novissimi primi, the last go first, and primi novissimi, the first come last: and yet are first in order, though last in place. It is sure, the work is the end of both the rest, and of all. Unumquodque propter operationem suam: Every thing, be it what it will, gift or place, is and hath his being for the work it hath to do. So, the work is the chief of the three, and He the chief, whose the work is, let His standing be where it will.

II.
The Trinity
Real.

To the doing whereof, there he required three things. And where there be more than one required, our books teach us, ever to consider them, first conjunctim, jointly, altogether; then seriatim, each in order, as they stand; and lastly, seorsim, every one afunder by it self.

I.
Of them
jointly.

Jointly then. To the doing of ought there is requisite, 1 hability of the party, 2 authority for the party, 3 and diligence in the party. 1 Meet and sufficient men; 2 they, orderly called, and placed; 3 diligent and painful at their business. To supply these, here are, 1 A gift wherewith, 2 a place wherein, 3 a work whereabout to imploy both: and none to take on him the work, except first in a calling; nor to take on him a calling, except he first have a gift meet for it. The Spirit is free of His gifts; by which, ability: Christ, He invites us to some calling; wherein, authority: God, He calls upon us to be at work: wherein, diligence is to be shewed.

Our duty it shall be to come, to be at these three doles, or divisions; to have our share in them. Out of the first: 1 Every one to get himself furnished with some gift. 2 Out of the second; to see himself bestowed in some calling. 3 Out of the third: having both these, to apply himself to some work; and namely, that work, that belongs to his calling. In a word; every one to find himself with a gift, in a calling, about a work. Not having the gift, not to affect or enter the calling; nor having the calling, not to venture upon the work.

By all means we are to avoid to frustrate this meeting of the Trinity. To do them this honour, to think all the three absolutely needful, and not any of the three more than needs. The wisdom of God, as it is never wanting in any thing that needs; so neither is it lavish in any thing more than needs. And indeed, to hold any of the three superfluous, is (in effect) to call in question, whether some person in the Trinity be not superfluous; namely, that person, whose division we seem to set so light by.

All

All three then are to be had : We cannot miss any of them. If we miss the gift, all will be done unskillfully : if the calling, all disorderly : if the work, all unprofitably, and to no purpose. Then, not to leave out, or to leap over the gift ; that is a contempt of the Spirit : Nor the calling ; that is a trespass against CHRIST : Nor the work, that is an affront to GOD Himself. So much for conjunctim : now for seriatim.

All to be had, and in this order to be had, as here they stand marshalled. The gift first ; then, the calling to authorize ; then, the work to make up all. But the gift, before the calling ; and the calling, after the gift : the gift and calling both, before we be allowed to take any work in hand. The number not abated, the order not inverted. Neither the calling, before the gift ; nor the work, before the calling and gift both be had. But every and each, in his order, and turn. This order kept, the Church will flourish, the Common-Wealth prosper, and all the world be the better. We have done with conjunctim, and seriatim ; and now we fall to seorsim, to the several divisions. And first, to the Spirits, (that is) the gifts, and the nature of them.

The word is χαρίσματα. It is a word of the Christian style ; you shall not read it in any Heathen Author. We turn it, Gifts. Gifts is somewhat too short : χαρίσματα is more than a gift. But first, a gift it is. It is not enough with us Christians, that a thing be had : with the Heathen man, it is : he cares for no more : he calls it εἶναι. Sure he is, he hath it ; and that is all he looks after : The Christian adds further, how he hath it : hath it not of himself, spins not his thread as the Spider doth, out of himself, but hath it of another, and hath it of gift. It is given him : Unicusque datur (it is the 11. verse.) To every one is given. So, instead of Aristotle's word, εἶναι, habere, he puts Saint James's word, δοῦναι or δωρεῖν, it is a gift, with him.

And how a gift ? Not do, ut des ; give him as good a thing for it, and so was well worthy of it : No, but of free gift. And so S. James his word δωρεῖν, which is no more but a gift, he adds S. Paul's here, χαρίσματος, wherein there is χάρις, (that is) grace, and so a grace-gift, or gift of grace. This word, the pride of our nature digests not well : δωρεῖν, and χάρις touch near : Nature is easily puffed or blown up : but, χαρίσματα hath a prick in it for the bladder of our pride : as if either of our selves we had it, and received it not ; or received it, but it was because we earn'd it. No : it is gratis acceptum on our part : and gratis data, on His : freely given of Him, freely received by us ; and that is χαρίσματα right.

Freely given by Him ; Who is that ? The Spirit. The natural man feels, he hath a soul ; and that is all the Spirit he takes notice of, and is therefore called animalis homo (that is) nothing but soul : that is all his Spirit. The Christian takes notice of another Spirit, that is not his own ; (that is) GOD's Spirit, the Holy Ghost : and that he is beholden to Him, who is one and the same Spirit. Else, so many men, so many spirits. But this is but one and the same Spirit.

Which one, and the same Spirit makes also against Paganism. For, they had nine Muses, and three graces, and (I wot not how many) Gods and Goddesses besides. We go but to one. All ours come from one, from the same Spirit. All our multitude is from Unity. All our diversity is from identity. All our divisions from integrity, from one and the same entire Spirit. A free gift from the free Spirit ; a gift of grace from the Spirit of grace. So, from GOD, not from our selves : for CHRIST, not for our selves : by the Spirit, not by either our nature, or industry, not alone : For, without the Spirit, all our nature and industry will vanish, and nought come of them.

Thus it stands. The Heathen man thanks his own wit and study, for his learning ; and we seclude them not : but this we say : When all is done with all our parts naturall, and all our acts habituell, if the Holy Ghost come not with His graces spiritual, no good will come of them. Therefore we to seek after spiritual gifts, and ἐκζητοῦμεν (it is the Apostles word) zealously to seek them. For, though the Spirit give ; yet we must sue and pray for them. Zachary makes but one Spirit of these two, 1 Grace, and 2 Prayer. Prayer, as the breathing out : Grace, as the drawing in : Both make but one breathing. To pray, then : and (more than to pray) to stir them up ; the word is ἀνακαμπτειν, to blow them, and make them burn ; as is used to be done to fire ; and as is to be done to the fiery tongues of this day : Else you will have but a blaze of them ; and all else, but cinders, cold and comfortlesse geer (God knows.) But so all are to be suiters, and to labour, to have a part in this dealing.

From the Spirit then they come : but by way of division. Not, so, as some, all ; some, never a whit ; but by way of division. The nature whereof is, neither all gifts, to one ; nor one gift, to all : But (as it follows) ἐκαστῷ, unicusque, to each some : neither donum hominibus, one gift to all men : not donum homini, all gifts to one man : but donum hominibus, gifts to men : Every one his part of the dividend ; For such is the law of dividing.

Which division is of two sorts : 1 either of the thing it self in kind, 2 or of the measure. 1. The kind ; which the Apostle speaks of in the seventh Chapter, and seventh verse ; To every one is given his special, and proper gift : to one in this kind, to another in that. GOD so tempering, as the natural body, that in it, the eye should not have the gift to go, but to see ; and the foot not to see, but to go ; And as the great body of the world ; In it, Hiram's countrey should yield excellent timber and stone, and Solomons Countrey, good wheat and oyl, which is the ground of all commerce : So, the spiritual body, that in it, Paul should be deep learned, Apollo should be of better speech : one need another ; one supply the need of another ; ones abundance, the others want.

² In measure.

Mat. 25. 15.
Luke 19. 13.

But division is not of the kind only, but of the measure also. Divers measures there be in one and the same kind. Every one (saith the Apostle, Ephes. 4. 7.) according (not to the gift, but) to the measure of the gift of CHRIST. For, to some gave He talents (saith S. Matthew;) To some, but pounds (saith S. Luke;) Great odds. And of either, to one gave He five, to another three, to a third but one: in a different degree sensibly. To each, his portion in a proportion: His Ghomer the law calls it; the Gospel, his dimensum. And remember this well. For, not only the kind will come to be considered, but the measure too, when we come to see, who be in, and who be out at the Spirits division. And so much for the Spirit.

² The Places or calling.

Hcb. 5. 4.

If we have done with the gifts, we come to the places: For where the Spirit ends, CHRIST begins. So as, if no gift, stay here and go no further; never meddle with the calling, or work. But what if we have a gift; may we not fall to work strait? No but a calling is first to be had, yet we put forth our hand to it. Which nemo sibi sumit, No man, to take on him, unless he be called: Though a gift then, though a good gift, not (eo ipso) to think himself sufficiently warranted to fall a working. There goes more to it, than so. We must pass CHRIST's hands too, and not leap over His head. For, after the Holy Ghost hath done with us, CHRIST will appoint every one of us his calling.

Which are divided for order 1 Cor. 14.
40.

Of which division the ground is, that every man is not, hand over head, confusedly to meddle with every matter; but all is to be done κατ' ὃν, orderly. Each to know his own. The very word [division] implieth order. Where we read divisions, some read diversities. But it is not so well (that.) Things, that are diverse, may lie together confusedly on heaps: But each must be sorted to his several rank and place: else are they not divided. So as, division is the better reading: and division is for order.

Zach. 10. 7.

Gen. 1. 2.
והיה בראשית

And order is a thing so highly pleasing to GOD, as the three Persons in Trinity (we see) have put themselves in order, to shew how well they love it. And order is a thing so nearly concerning us, as break order once, and break both your staves (saith GOD in Zachary) both that of Beauty, and that of Bonds. The staff of Beauty: For, no κατασκευασμένη, no manner of decency or comeliness without it; but all out of fashion. The staff of Bonds: For, no στασιμα, no kind of steadiness or constancy, but all loose without it. All falls back to the first Tobu, and Bobu. For, all is Tobu (empty, and void) if the Spirit fill not with His gifts: And all is Bobu (a disordered rude Chaos of confusion, if Christ order it not by His Places and Callings. Every body falls to be doing with every thing, and so nothing done: nothing well done, I am sure. Every man therefore, whatever his gift be, to stay till he have his place and standing by Christ assigned him. It is judged needful (this) even in secular matters. Write one never so fair a hand, if he have not the calling of a publick Notary, his writing is not authenticall. Be one never so deep a Lawyer, if he have not the place of a Judge, he can give no definitive sentence. No remedy then; there must be division of places, of administration, no less than of gifts.

What the places

שׂוֹמְרֵי

Will you know what those places be? Eight of them are reckoned up at the 28. Verse. Not to trouble you with those that were erected, as needful at first, but were not to endure for a time: those that were to endure, are reduced to three, and stand together: 1 Teachers, 2 Helpers, 3 Governours. A threefold division, taught even the heathen by the light of nature, in their Religion. They had them all three in their: 1. διδασκαλοι, their Teachers; 2. βοηθοι, their Helpers; 3. ἐπομνημονευοντες their Governours. The very same prescribed by GOD to His people: 1 their Teachers, the Priests; 2 their Helpers, the Levites; 3 their Governours, the Sons of Aaron, called Nesim, as true and proper Hebrew for Prelates, as Pralati is Latine. The same is known in the Church of Christ through all antiquity: 1 Presbyteri, to teach: 2 Diaconi, to help: 3 Episcopi, to govern: And never any other.

Rom. 13. 4.

Deut. 4. 10.
Hcb. 1. 14.

Rom. 15. 8.

Divided they be; not scattered.

Psal. 75. 6.

All these three here go under the name of διακονα, the proper term of the lowest of the three. We turn it Administration: It is (indeed) ministry or service; and that on foot, and through the dust: For, so is the nature of the word. An ill word for pride; who had rather hear of words sounding of dominion, than of service; specially this service: For, it is but the order of *Deacons*hip; and pride would be at least more than a Deacon. Yet, so we are all stiled here, and no other name for any. The very highest are but so. The King himself, twice made a Deacon (Rom. 13.) Gods Deacon: no other title. The best King that was (David) is said but to have served his time, Act. 13. Served, that was all. The glorious lights of heaven are said (Deut. 4.) to be created in ministerium, but for our service. The Angels of heaven are but ministring spirits, Heb. 1. Nay Christ Himself is stiled no otherwise (Rom. 15.) but that He was a Minister of the Circumcision. He that is LORD of all, and gives all the offices, calls His own but so.

These places, we said before, are divided for order. Now I add further; they are divided, not scattered, or let fall: For, that is casual. Dividing is not so: but (as it is in the 11. ver.) prout vuls, a voluntary act. He that distributes, knows what, and to whom He doth it. Places therefore are to be divided by knowledge: not scattered or scambled for, by hap and hazard. The Wind is to blow no man to preferment (Psal. 75.) It is the LORD, that is to dispose of them.

Jch. 10. 7.

And how to dispose or divide them? According to the former divisions of the Spirit. That these should first take place: the second depend upon those first: none taken to the second, till he have past the first. For, Christ's Places, are for the Holy Ghost's gifts. Without inspiring with the grace, no aspiring to the place there should be. The Holy Ghost is by His gifts, to point out those that should be taken into these administrations. And where Christ placeth, so it is. For He placeth none, but whom the Holy Ghost commends. Christ is the door: of which door the Holy Ghost is Porter. No man passeth through the door, but whom the Porter openeth to. No man to Christ, but by and through the Holy Ghost: nor to the calling, but by and through the gift. They that come not that way (by the door) door) get in by some other back way; per pseudodyrum, by some false pattern: That mirrors all. This, is the true order; Vocavit servos, & talenta dedit: so is the Gospel: whom He calls, He gives talents to. Mar. 25. 15. If he have none given him, he came uncalled; at least by Christ: He call'd him not: He came un-sent, at least by God; he sent him not. Though he answer, Here I am, Christ spoke not to him, Though he came running never so fast, God sent him not. Esay asketh two questions, Quis tu hic? or Quasi quis tu hic? quis, if by Christ; quasi quis, if otherwise. And many a quasi quis, (God wot) have we among us.

What is then to be done, that Christ be not neglected, and his call? That every one betake himself to some calling, or other. In the Ministry, all: All Ministers, Minister, either of the Church, or of the State and Common-wealth: But all Ministers, Those that are not, that dispose not themselves so to be, to be holden for superfluous creatures, for inutilia terra pondera, that cumber but the ground, and keep it barren: with whom the earth is burdened, and even groans under them. Deaf Adders they are, at Christ's call they stop their ears, who calls every one to a Calling to do some service some way.

To be in some Calling: but wistful, to have a gift meet for that calling. But if not at the first (the Spirit) not at the second (Christ:) no gift there, no place here. Can any man devise to speak with more reason, than doth the Apostle (in the 14. Chapter following) If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant; (that is) hold himself for such, and not take on him the place or work of the skillful. It is against Gods will, if he do. Have you refused to gain knowledge? then have I refused you for being any Priest of mine. It is God Himself in Hosea 4. Have you not used the means? Have you mispent the time when you should have laboured for the gift? Christ hath no place for you. Whom the Spirit furnished with gifts, for them it is Christ provideth places: for them, and none else.

1. And yet not every place for every gift, neither: But to have a calling proper to his gift. Proper to it for the kind; not to be mis-sorted into a place no ways meet: his gift lying one way, his place another. But put the right gift in the right place.

2. Proper for the kind, and proper for the measure also. For, as there be measures in gifts, so there be degrees in places, to answer them. And one is not to thrust himself into a place disproportioned to the portion of his gifts (the Apostle calls it Exsuperare: Exsuperare, is to extend, to stretch himself to the full of his measure: Exsuperare, is to stretch himself beyond it; to enter himself far beyond his standing:) But if a mean gift, a mean calling to content him. Durus sermo, for there is none so mean in gift, that he undervalues his gift, for any place, yea even of the best worth. You may see these two: (1 the kind, and 2 the degree:) the kind, in Uzziah: He had no calling to his work of incense, of burning incense; not at all. What became of him? You may read in his forehead. The degree, in Uzziah: he had a calling; was of the Tribe: went only beyond his degree: pressed to touch the Ark, which was more than a Levite might do, and was stricken dead for it by God. God no less angry with him, that went beyond the degree of his calling, than with Uzziah that had no kind of calling at all. None that is in therefore, to over-reach or presume above his degree, but to keep him within compass.

Now the gifts be dealt, and the places fill: the Spirit's gifts put into Christ, (that is) into right places. Now fall we to the third, to Gods division, to set them to work. Everything (we find) hath his being, for the work it is to do. Gifts, calling and all for the work. For, if the work follow not, the gift is idle; you may cast it away; the calling is idle, you may cast it off. A vacation it might be; a vocation it is not. The gift is for the calling: the gift and calling (both) are for the work.

And will you observe the proceeding here of the Spirit first? The Spirit is nearest resembled to breath: Spiro, whence it comes, is to breathe. Breath (you know) is in the nostrils: they be two; through, and from them both, the Spirit proceeds. To answer these, God the Father, CHRIST the Lord, are two; from them both, by way of spiration, comes the Spirit, the sacred Breath of them both.

Now then secondly, as the Father doth beget the Son, and from them both proceeds the Holy Spirit; So, the gift to beget the calling (of right so it should) and they both to produce the work. And as no man cometh to CHRIST, but by the Holy Ghost: So, no man to the calling, but by the gift. And as no man cometh to the Father, but by Christ: so no man to the work, but by the calling.

Not to the work. The very word work (ἔργον) at once condemns three, ἀργον, ἡδονικον, ἀδελφον. 3 The work ἀργον first. Such as are idle bodies; do no work at all: spend their dayes in vanity; consume whole years, in doing just nothing. This (of works) is God's division: who is not (Himself) would not have us, idle. Usque operatur, still He works; still he would have us so to do. Not as Jonas: get us a gourd, and sit under it, and see what will become of Ninive; but stir not a foot to help it. Not to lie soaking in the broth (as Ezekiel laid of the great men in his dayes:) The City is the cauldron, the wealth is the broth, and in the broth they lie soaking, and all is well. Saint Paul calls them the Lolligors of the Land. His word is καταρυσιν; The six dayes, and the seventh, to them both alike; Holy day-Christians The Poet said, Ἀργον αἰὼν ἔργου: Every day is holy day with idle people. Out of this division, out of operations, they.

The next sort, they will not be idle; but it were as good they were. They will be doing, but it is nothing all they do: Nothing to any purpose; from and beside it quite. Opus quo nihil opus, some need- less work; qua nihil arinet, as good let alone: leaving undone, that they should and are to do, and catching at somewhat else, and mightily busying themselves about that; and all to no end. Annus cornu medullarum sunt sicut aranea, saith the Psalm: Very busie they be; but it is about weaving cobcobwebs : no body shall wear them, or be the warmer for them : to no profit in the world.

Not ἀεὶς.

And as these deal with quoniam attinet, So the last (ἀεὶς) with those, qua nihil adeos attinet, that concern not them at all. That will be doing, but it is with that, they have nothing to do. There are divisions of works, and they work out of their division : love to be busie ; to be dealing with any bodies work, save their own. Which is lightly the busie-bodies occupation, condemned by the Apostle, not in men only (2 Theff. 3.) but even in the other sex, too (1 Tim. 5.) For they also will be meddling :

2 Theff. 3. 11.

1 Tim. 5. 13.

πολυπράγμων is of both genders.

1 Pet. 4. 15.

I told you before, the callings were founded upon order, and to keep them, so have their ἑσθίας, limits, or bounds. And they do all ἀτακτως ἀεματεύειν, walk out of order, disorderly break the pales, and over they go ; that leaving their own, become (as Saint Peters word is) ἀνομιανιστοῦντες, Bishops of other mens Dioceses : Do no good in their own, spend their time in finding fault with others. A thing not to be endured by any body. Take the natural body for example, wherein the Spirit, blood, choler, and other humours are to keep and contain themselves, to hold every one in his own proper vessel : as blood in the veins, choler in the gall : And if once they be out of them, the blood out of the veine makes an Apestume : the choler out of the gall makes a Jaundise all over the body. Believe it, this is an evil sickness under the Sun, that the division of works is not kept more strictly. They are divided according to the callings : Every work is not for every calling. For then what needs any dividing ? But as the calling is, so are the works to be : every one to intend his own, wherein (it is presumed) his skill lies, and not to busie himself with others : For, that is ἀεὶς. And these are the three errors about operations.

It will not be amisse, if we look yet a little farther into this word. For, it is ἐνέργημα, which is more than ἔργον. For ἐνέργημα, is not every work : it is an in-wrought work. A work wrought by us so, as in us also. And both, it may be. For ἐνέργεια and κινησις take not away, one the other. So then by our selves, as by some other beside our selves ; and that is God, who is said here to work all in all.

All in all. If we take it at the uttermost extent, it will reach, then we must be well-aware to sever the defect, or deformity of the work from the work it self, as well we may. Moving is the work, halting is the deformity. Moving, that comes from the soul, is wrought by it : halting (the deformity) not from the soul, whence the moving comes ; but that is caused by the crookedness of the leg. So is the evil of the work : the defect, from us ; the work, from God, and that His.

John 15. 5.

Blay 26. 12.

Heb. 13. 21.

But of all our good, all our well-wrought works, of them, we say not only, Sine Me nihil potestis facere, We can do none of them without Him : But farther, we say with the Prophet, Domine, omnia opera nostra operatus es in nobis : In them, He doth not only co-operate with us from without ; but, even from within (as I may say) in-operate them in us ; πῶς ἐν ὑμῖν, working in you. Then, if there go another Workman to them besides our selves, we are not to take them wholly to our selves. But, if that other Workman be God ; we will allow Him for the principal Workman, at the least. That, upon the whole matter, if our ability be but of gift ; if our calling, be but a service ; if our very work, but ἐνέργημα, a thing wrought in us ; cecidit Babylon, pride falls to the ground : these three have laid it flat.

But besides this, there are three points more in ἐνέργημα, I will touch them first. 1. In us they are said to be wrought ; to shew, our works should not be skrewed from us ; wound out of us with some wrinch from without, without which nothing would come from us by our will, if we could otherwise choose : ἐνέργηματα, these properly. But ἐνέργηματα, from within : hath the principium motus, there, and thence : And so, are natural and kindly works.

Psal. 51. 6.

2. Next ; from within : To shew, they are not taken-on-works, done in hypocrisy : So the outside fair, what is within, it skills not. But, that there be truth in the inward parts, that there it be wrought, and that thence it come.

3. And last, if it be an ἐνέργημα, it hath an energie (that is) a workmanship, such as that the gift appears in it. For energie implies, it is not done utcumque, but workman-like done. Else there is an aergie, but no energie in it. And even the very word [of division] comes to as much. Dividing implies skill to hit the joynt, right : For, that, is to divide. To cut at venture, quite beside the joynt, it skills not where, through skin and bones and all ; that, is to chop and mangle, and not to divide. Division hath Art, ever. And this for God's division, the division of works. And so now you have all three.

We have set down the order. Will you now reflect upon it a little, and see the variation of the compasse, and see how these divisions are all put out of order ; and who be in, and who be out at every one of them ? First, whereas the gift and the calling are (and so are to be) Relatives, neither without the other ; There are men of no gifts (to speak of) that may seeme to have come too late, or to have been away quite, at the first of the Spirits dealing : No share they have of it ; yet what do they ? Fairly stride over the gifts ; never care for them ; and step into the calling over the gifts, and so over the Holy Ghosts head. Where they should begin with the gift, the first thing they begin with, is to get them a good place. Let the gift come after, if it will ; or if it do not, it skills not greatly. They are well : they lie soking in the broth, in the mean time. This neglect of the gift, in effect is a plain contempt of the Spirit, as there were no great need of the Holy Ghost.

Thus it should be : As one speeds at the first division, so he should at the second. If no grace from the Spirit ; no place with CHRIST. If some one, but a meane one, let his place be according. He with the two mites, not in the place of him with the five talents : (or as one well exprest it) not little-learned Aurelius, Bishop of great Carthage, and great-learned Saint Augustine, Bishop of little Hippa. This is a trespass sure, against the first division : which respecteth not only the gifts in specie, but in measure sure too. Proportion the places, to the proportion of the gifts: which proportion (we know) is both wayes broken, whether a low gift have a high place, or a rich gift be let lie in a poor place; contrary to the minde of CHRIST, who would have the degree of the place, as near as could be, to the measure of the gift.

There should be but one GOD. In the Text, there is no more. But here is another. The Apostle calls him the God of this world: who hath his ivy, widowes, who works too: and his works tend to disgrace, and damne the Church, all he may.

2 Cor. 4. 4

Nor, there is but one Lord here, to divide places. But by a jure patronatus, other Lords there are, that make divisions, and subdivisions of them: Of whom the poor subdivided places may say (with Esay) O LORD, other Lords besides thee had the disposing of us.

Esay 16. 10

So, there is but one Spirit. But, another Spirit there is abroad in the world. He that carried CHRIST up to the top of the mountain, and talkt of Tibi dabo, as if he had gifts too.

Mar. 4. 9.

I shall be sorry to make any other division of gifts, than those of the Holy Ghost. But, made it must be, which the world hath made, and makes daily; and makes more accompt of them, than of these here in the Text. And indeed, such accompt, as the Holy Ghost may sit still, and keep his gifts undivided well enough. The other Spirit divides other manner gifts, than the Holy Ghost hath any. The gifts of the Holy Ghost are donata peccatoris, came out of the breast: you would think, the others come out of the breast too; but they come but out of the basome. And in speculation we say, the Holy Ghost's gifts are far above these; but, in practice, they are daily found to be far above them in power. For, the Wise-man saith, Dilatant viam hominis, these gifts have a power to make a way through never so thick a prease, power to make any door sic open afore them. They speak of graces: They make any, that come with them, more gracious, than these of Saint Paul. Nay, they will disgrace them, and marre their fashion quite.

Prov. 18. 16

But then those gifts hold not of this Feast, not of Pentecost; but hold of the Feast of Simon and Jude, they. The Church hath joynd these two Saints, in one Feast: and the Devil (in many things else, God's Ape) hath made a like joyning of his too, in imitation of the true. His Simon, is Simon Magus, not Simon Zelotes; and Jude, Judas Iscariot, not Judas the brother of James; No kin to him. Simon, he came off roundly, προσενεγκας, offered frankly, would come to the price. And Judas, he would know what they would give, how thankful they would be; and it was done, and there goeth a bargain. These two are like enough to agree. And thus is the Holy Ghost defeated: bought out; He and His gifts by Simon still. And thus is CHRIST betrayed in His places; and that, by Judas still. This wicked fraternity of Simon and Jude, are the bane of the Church, unto this day. Judas that sold CHRIST, like enough to make sale of CHRIST's places. Simon, that would buy the Holy Ghost, (had He been to be sold) as like to buy out the Holy Ghost's gifts, as the Holy Ghost Himself. And this fault in the first concoction, is never after amended in the second. For, with such as these GOD will never co-operate: never comes there any fruit of such. Enough, if any thing were enough. But thus CHRIST's places go against CHRIST's will.

Acts 8. 18.

Thus have ye a calling without a gift. What say you now to a gift without a calling? Those, are not for the Holy Ghost: These care as little for CHRIST. Some such there are; no man must say, but gifts they have, such as they be: but they care not greatly for troubling themselves with any calling. They are even as well without. Hop up and down as Grasshoppers, hither and thither, but place they will have none; yet their fingers itch, and they cannot hold them; doing they must be: and if they have got but the rag end of a gift, have at the work; be doing they will, of their own heads (uncall'd by any so, that have right to call:) And for default of others, even make no more ado, but call themselves: Lay their own hands upon their own heads; utterly against CHRIST's minde, and rule. And so over CHRIST's head they come, from the gift to the work, without any calling at all.

Well in these two they have somewhat yet: Either a calling without a gift, or a gift without a calling. What say you to them, that have neither; but fetch their run for all that, and leap quite over gift and calling, Christ and the Holy Ghost (both) and chop into the work at the first dash? That put themselves into businesse, which they have neither fitnessse for, nor calling to? Yet no man can keep them, but meddle they will, and in Church-matters specially: there soonest of all; And print us Catechisms, and compose us Treatises; set out Prayers and new Psalmes, as if every forreigner were free, and might set up with us. Good Lord, what the poor Church suffers in this kinde!

Yet have you a fourth, no lesse ill than any of these. And these be such as have gifts and calling both, it cannot be denied; yet fall short at the work: Work not at all. Wrap up their talent; fold it up fairly in a napkin, and lay it by them. Let their calling lie fallow: get them into Jonas gourd, and sit gazing there; or into Ezekiels caldron, and lie soaking there. Work who will, and work GOD in whom He will; in them He shall work nothing: Nothing (so) to any publick good. These have great accompt to make to GOD, for thus treading under their foot His division. Nay, to all three: to Christ also, for the contempt of his calling; and to the Holy Ghost too, for burying his gifts.

Luke 19. 20.

Jonas 4. 9.

Ezek. 11. 3

So have you 1 a calling and no gift; 2 a gift, and no calling; 3 neither gift, nor calling, but work for all that; 4 both gift, and calling, and no work, not for all that. All awry; all in obliquity, for want of observing the order here established. These obliquities to avoid;

It is the will of GOD, that this Trinity Reall should meet, and grow into Unity as the personal it self doth: that so this here, on earth beneath, may grow, and be conformed to that there, in heaven above. The former three divisions, in the former three Verses, all meet in the Unity, and manifestation, in this fourth Verse: which is the Spirit's unity. And so come we now about to the Spirit again. For, all

1 Dividing.
2
Manifesting.

this dividing is not enough : But when the doles and divisions of all three is done, then begins the Spirit anew. For these must not be concealed, but be all manifested. And that must be by the tongues of this day. Which is it, that giveth the Holy Ghost a more special interest than the rest, and makes the Feast to be His. For hitherto, they had as good a part as He.

If you mark it, dividing and giving is a kind of inspiring, or breathing in : uttering and manifesting, a kind of breathing out again of that was inspired. And these two are two natural and kindly acts of the Spirit in us, by breathing in, to receive ; by breathing out, to utter it out, or manifest it.

And it hath good coherence, and follows upon the work well (this manifestation.) For, every mans work is to make him manifest. No better way to take true notice of any, than by it. It is not Legere, it is Operare, ut te videam. Christ saith not auribus or sermonibus ; but operibus credite (that is) oculis credite. For, works be manifest, and may be seene.

It follows well likewise upon division. For, 1. First, division doth make manifest. Things that are propounded in grosse, coarse are obscure ; and are therefore divided, that they may more distinctly, and plainly appear. 2. And second, manifestation it self is nothing but dividing. For, what is divided unto us by the three Persons, it is required, that we should divide unto others ; and our dividing it among others, is that, which here is called manifesting. That which we receive, when we make manifest, we are said to divide, and to distribute that which came unto us from the former three divisions.

1 Pet. 4. 10.

But this is sure without manifesting, all divisions avail nothing, all the manifold variety of the graces are to no purpose, no more than a treasure divided into never so many bags, if it be hidden, and not manifest, is to any profit, or any the better for it. Nay, it holds in all three. 1. In the gifts. We are not to rake them up, but to stir them up, and make them burn. 2. In the calling. We are not to be ashamed of it, but to profess it manifestly, as he did, Non me pudet Evangelii. 3. In the work. We are not to work inward, in a back-room ; but to open our shop, set out our wares and utter them. Divided and not manifested (that is) the tongues are cloven, but they have no fire ; nothing to give light by. And light it is that maketh manifest. Which light is not to be hid under a bushel, but to be set upon a candlestick ; or (as this Feast gives) not to be kept in the shadow, but brought out into the Sun, the bright and White-Sun of this Day.

Rom. 1. 16.

Matth. 5. 15.

3 Profiting.

2 Cor. 6. 1.

Manifested then. And why ? For unshy sun, nothing is to be done in vaine : but in vaine, if to no end. To some end then. For unshy sun is here in the Text. It falls not into a wise man (much less, into the only wise God) to keep all this dividing and manifesting, and all to no end. To know that end then, that we run not in vaine, labour not in vaine, have not the gifts, take not on us the calling, do not the work in vaine, receive not the grace of God in vaine ; nay, receive not your own souls in vaine. Else, we fall upon the other capital error, about Omega, about our ultimus finis. To know our part then. For, Ignoramus quem portum petas, nullus secundus est ventus, He that knows not whither he is bound, no wind in the sky is good for him. To know our end then, whither to refer all. The gift is for the calling, and they both for the work, and they all three are for manifestation.

John 7. 3.

But then take heed of making manifestation, the end of it self, and go no farther. There are that make that their end ; that do it, quasi per se (the Apostles word) to make a fair shew, to spread their feathers is all the use some have of their division. CHRISTS kindred would have made it, CHRISTS end, and shouldred him forward to it : If you can do, as they say you can do, then get you up to Jerusalem, seek to manifest your self there, that you may be known for such : Win credit, and become famous. But CHRIST came to another end. And the Christians rule is, Nothing for vain-glory, either by provoking, by emulation. It is but Omicron, this : it is not Omega.

Wherefore then are we to manifest ? Neque ulla suspensio : here is our part ; this is our end ; to profit withal. Whether Paul, Apollo, or Cephas ; whether gifts, places, or works, all are for this. This, is the end of all.

Prov. 30. 51.

Far they are from this end, that have use of all three. But neque suspensio, not suspensio (that is) not to do good, but to do a show turne withal, now and then. Nay, that will not stick to boast (one there was that did so ; of whom the Psalme, Quid gloriaris ? was made) how they are able to do one a displeasure by their place, and pay him home, if need be. As if officium came of officiendo, of standing in another mans light, of doing other men hurt. Otherwise (I trust) themselves take no hurt by their offices. But take this for a rule, the Apostle gives it two several times : There is no power given to any to destruction, or to do harme ; for edification it is, all that is ; to do good with, and therein to be made manifest. We may not hatch Cockatrice egges to do mischief unto any, as they do to such as eat them.

But all neque ulla suspensio. It is a compound word, and we will take it in pieces. First, neque, which is to bring, to bring in, to bring forth, to bring with. To bring in, what ? What profit is there (saith the Psalme ?) To bring in some profit. To bring forth, what ? What fruit had you (saith the Apostle ?) To bring forth some fruit. To bring with it, what ? That I may receive mine own with advantage (saith he that gave the Talents :) To bring with it some advantage. Away withal (saith Elihu in Job) of which it may be said, it did me no good, no good came of it. These same vana & non profutura, away with them (saith Samuel) never look after them. But what saith God by His Prophet ? Ego sum Deus et non docens te vanis : He teacheth us nothing, but that which will do us good. And what by the Apostle ? These things are good and profitable for men, when he was in the Theme of good works. For, as we are forbidden to hatch Cockatrice egges, things that will do harme : so are we also in the same place, to weave spiders webs, things very finely spun, but for no bodies wearing ; none the better for them. Our instruments must be instruments, works tending to profit with, else are they not the right works.

But neque is not enough. To bring in. Bring in, Bring in, cries the Horse-leeches two daughters, till their skin crack : But it is only for themselves ; and that is not the right. For, it is not singulare commodum.

dum (this profit) our own private gaine. Here is yet another part. Here is συν (that is) con, which ever argues a community; a profit redounding to more than our selves. For, συμποιεω properly is collatium, where there be a great many; bring every one his stock, and lay them together, and make a common bank for them all. Just as do the members in the natural body. Every one confers his several gift, office and work, to the general benefit of the whole. Even as they did in the Law. Some offered gold; and others silk; others, linnen; and some, goats hair; and all to the furniture of the Tabernacle. And semblably we to lay together all the graces, places, worth, that we have, and to imploy them to the advancement of the common faith, and to the setting forward of the common Salvation.

For, the common Salvation is the profit here meant. The Apostle himself saith it plainly; not seeking mine own profit or benefit, but the profit of many. And how? that they may have lands or leases? No. But that they may be saved. Which is the true profit, redounding of all these, and which in the end will prove the best profit: which if any attaine not, What will it profit him, if he win the whole world? To which port we be all bound: to which port, GOD send us.

Mark. 16. 16.

And into this, as into the maine Cisterne, do all these divisions, manifestations and all run and empty themselves. All gifts, offices, works are for this. Yea the blessed Trinity it self, in their dividing, do all aime at this. And, this attained, all will be to Pax in terris, the quiet and peaceable ordering of things here on earth; and to Gloria in excelsis, the high pleasure of Almighty GOD.

So come we about, and return again to the first point, we began with (that is) to the blessed Trinity. From them are these: and if from them, for them; if from their grace, for their glory: the glory of them that gave, ordered, and wrought: Gave the gifts to us; ordered the places for us; wrought the works in us. If we, the profit; they, the praise: the rather, for that even that praise shall redound to our profit also: the highest profit of all, the gaining of our souls, and the gaining of them a rest in the heavenly kingdom, with all the three Persons.

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At RUMSEY;

On the V. of August, A. D. M.DC.VII.

II SAM. Chap. XVII. Ver. XXXII.

Cui respondens CUSHI, &c.

And CUSHI answered, The enemies of my Lord the King, and all that rise against Thee, to do Thee hurt, be as that young man is.

That young man was Absalom: And he was now hanging upon an Oak, with three darts through him. Like him doth Cushi wish, all may be, that do as he did (that is) be the Kings enemies, and rise up against him. For I find in the Text a dangerous Treason plotted against King David: plotted, but defeated; and Absalom the Author of it, brought to a wretched end. Good news thereof brought by Cushi that saw it. And that good news here concluded with this wish, That all the Kings enemies may speed no better; no otherwise than he sped. For all the world, like glad-tydings doth this day afford us, in a like memorable example of Gods just proceeding against a couple of like treacherous wretches. A barbarous and bloody Treason they imagined against our Sovereign. God brought their mischief upon their own heads, Et facti sunt sicut Absalom. And we are here now to renew with joy, the memory of these glad-tydings; and withal, to pray Cushi's prayer, and all to say Amen to it, That the like end may ever come to the like attempts. Last year we changed but one word; David into James: we change no more now, but the number; one into two. The enemies of my Lord, be as that young man, saith Cushi. Say we The enemies of our Lord, be as those two young men were; those two brethren in mischief: I will not do them that honour, to name them; no more than Cushi did him here.

Gen. 49. 5.

The

The words we read, as a prayer; they may also be read as a Prophecy: Either, Let them be, or, They shall be as that young man is (for, the verb is the future tense.) They have no other way, in Hebrew, to express their Optative but so: that hard it is, many times to say whether it be a prayer or a prediction, that so runs in the future, and, for ought I know, it must be left to the discretion of the Translator, to take which he will, since it may be both. As, Psal. 21. either the King shall rejoice, by way of foretelling: or, Let the King rejoice by way of wishing. The sure way is, to take it both ways: so, we shall be sure not to miss Cushi's meaning. And so will we do (for so we may do) even take it both ways; for it is both: both a good prayer, and a true prophecy. And prayer and prophecy sort well together: Ὅτι βέλτεται ὅτι καὶ βέλται (saith the Philosopher;) Affectioes facile faciunt opiniones (saith the Schoolman;) Our wishes we would alwayes have ominous, and our prayer turn into the nature of a prediction; what we pray for rightly, we would gladly perswade our selves shall be certainly.

The Division.

I.

Of this Prophetical prayer then. 1 As a prayer, first; 2 then, as a Prophecy. Prayer is of two sorts: 1 for, or 2 against. As, 1 for good: so, 2 against evil; both, things and persons. This is against, a kind of prayer; indeed, an imprecation. Two things give forth themselves in the prayer: 1 The parties, against whom it is; 2 and the wish itself, what it is. The parties are: 1 first the Kings enemies: 2 then, those that arise up against him (that is) the Kings Rebels. Two divers kinds: neither superfluous. For, there be no tautologies in Scripture: no doubling the point there, but with some advantage ever.

Verse 10.

The wish is, that they may be as Absalom. And two things are in that wish (if we mark them well): 1 Be, as he; (that is) not perish only (that is not all) 2 but perish, and so perish as he did. How was that? Vidi Absalom pendentem; and so hanging yet alive, thrust through with three darts. As he, in his end: as he, in the manner of his end. That the heads that contrive, may hang as high as his: and the hearts that effect, be thrust through as his was: thrice through, though once would serve.

II.

And when we have done with it, as a prayer, then will we begin with it, as a prophecy. That, so he wished: and that as he wished, so he foretold: and as he foretold, so it came to pass. All that rose after, fell as fast as they rose: Et facti sunt sicut puer iste.

III.

Last of all, that this prayer or prophecy, is not pent or shut up in David's dayes: not to end, with him. It reacheth unto these of ours: hath his force and vigour still; hath and shall have, unto the world's end. GOD heard him praying, and inspired him prophesying. As it came to pass in Absalom, so did it in those that rose after him: that rose against David, that rose against many others since David, and namely, against ours. So it hath been hitherto: and so ever may it be. Cushi not only a Priest, to pray that so they be; but a Prophet, to foretell, that so they shall be.

I.
Of the Text as a prayer against or cursing.

James 3.9.
Num 22.6.
Chap. 16.13.

Rom. 12.14.
1 Pet. 2.23.

Fiant sicut Absalom, is a prayer (and which more is) an imprecation. Before we pray it, it will not be amiss, to enquire whether we may lawfully pray any such or no. I move it, because of some so tender-hearted men, that they can by no means brook or endure any imprecation; to wish any so evil, as to pray they may come to an evil end. It is nothing fitting (as well saith S. James) that with the tongue we should bless God, and with the same, wish evil to man. It is Balaam's office, Veni & maledic; and who would succeed him in his office? It is Shimei's practice; and who would be like him? And this is Cushi's prayer, like himself: Some would have him an Ethiopian, but, some black swart fellow, as his name giveth.

Again, these were Jews all; we are Christians: we have a charge given us, by S. Paul, not to do it: not to them, that do us hurt; Bless them that persecute you; bless (I say) and curse not. We have a pattern set us, by S. Peter, of Him, qui cum malediceretur, non, &c. that wished not their evil, that both wished, and did him all the evil they could, both in deed and in word.

And this I know: yet is not all this so peremptory, but that, notwithstanding even all this, against some, in some cases, such prayer hath been, and may be used. May be? nay, ought to be other while. For, such may the persons be, as S. Peter calleth some, maledictionis filii: and their facts so execrable, as God himself commanded Moses, to go up into the Mount Ebal, and there, against twelve sundry sorts of such, pronounce maledictus. Even as we see, the Serpents sin was so exorbitant, as it drew a maledictus, even from Gods own blessed mouth. It is not good then to be nice or tender in this point; nor I would not wish men to be more tender or pitiful, than God: whose doing of it sheweth us it ought to be done. For to begin with the last (of Christians;) He that gave us the charge (S. Paul) for all his charge given, we know what he did to Elymas. And he that set us the pattern (S. Peter) for all his pattern set, we know he used it against Simon Magus. And for the other: it is not Balaam only, but even Moses, as milde a man, as ever the earth bare; you may read, that he came to it though, Numbers 16. Neither was it Shimei only, but David too (though a gracious and gentle Prince, may Shimei well say: yet) what a Psalm of imprecations hath he penned! I mean the CIX. Psalm. It was thought by our Fathers, that there was not a more more heave or bitter curse could be wished to any, than to say Deus Lendum upon him, which is the beginning of that Psalm. Neither was it Cushi with his swart colour only, but an Angel as bright as the Sunne, even the Angel of the Lord, that curseth (himself) and giveth an expresse warrant to curse the inhabitants of Meroz. But what speak we of Saints, or Angels? Christ Himself doth it in the Gospel, as appeareth by his many V's. Yea, God Himself (we see) Gen. 3. against the Serpent and his whole brood. What the Saints, Angels, God Himself have done, may be done, I trust. It may be done then, licet; and ought to be done sometimes, oportet; and in this very case, it ought and must; a necessity lyeth upon us, we cannot choose but do it. For pray we must for the Kings safety; Cushi; and all good subjects; but, for his safety we cannot pray, but we must (withal) for the overthrow of his under-miners, Procludeth Contra; if for him, then against his foes. If with him to rise, and stand upright, then, them to fall and become his foot-stool. So that (if all be well weighed) it is not voluntary; it is even wrung from us.

Judg. 5. 23.
Luk. 11. 43.

Gen. 3. 14.

Psal. 118. 21

And that indeed is the only caveat, that it be not voluntary: that we be drawn to it hardly, and use it not, upon every flight, and trifling occasion, against every thing that crosseth our humour, but when the foulness of the fact seemes to exact it: and that caveat is not amisse. I like well of the Hebrew proverb: (Garizim is the mount where they blessed; Ebal, where they gave the curse:) they say, We must creepe into Ebal, and leap into Garizim (that is) be swift to one, and slow to the other. We are then not to forswear going into mount Ebal utterly; but to be well advised, yer we go into it. To do it, but not to do it, where God blesteth: which Balaam was still itching to do. The cause it is, which maketh the curse fall; otherwise, if it be causelesse, it will not light, but flie over as a bird. Therefore to know well, both men and matter, against whom we let it flye. And we cannot better know them, than if we take our light from God: if we do it, but where, and when, and for what God doth it, we need not be scrupulous; never feare to follow, where he goeth before us. And, by the grace of God, we will be well ware, not to wish ought to any, in this point, but such, as shall have warrant even from Gods owne mouth.

Numb. 22. 3

The speciall point of advice thus being, to know the parties well, against whom we send it forth, it will concerne us (and our next point it must be) to take perfect notice of these men. They offer themselves to us, in two terms: 1 The enemies of the King: 2 They that rise against him: joynd here, and as here, so in sundry other places, Psal. 3. 1. Psal. 59. 1. Psal. 44. 3.

I
The parties
curled.

The word Enemy is by David himself, glossed Psal. 55. It was not an enemy did it to me (meaning, a known, open, professed enemy,) for then (saith he) I could have been provided for him: so may we take it.

1 The enemies of the King.
Psal. 55. 12.
2 Those that rise against him
Gen. 4. 8.
Numb. 16. 2.

The other of rising against, the phrase is first used of Cain (and lightly, the first phrase is the key of the rest) when Abel and he were in the field together walking, it is said Cain rose up against him; and knocked him on the head: So is meint of such as keep their malice secret, to do one a mischief suddenly. And the next time it is used, is of Core, and his Complices: of them, it is said (Numb. 16.) They rise up against Moses. In the former of Cain, it is treachery: in this latter of Core, it is plain Rebellion. In a word: all that rise against, are enemies; but not backward. For, enemies may be such, as stand on even ground, as one King or State, with another, Rising in propriety of speech, is of such, as are of inferiour place, and yet lift themselves up against their lawfull Superiours. In the end, both prove enemies; and do the part of enemies: but, the former hath many times no bond of allegiance; the latter ever have.

We may not Envidus (to use Saint Peters own phrase) think it strange; that both these sorts, Kings, have them; yea though they be good Kings (as was David) yet that they have them: Hear David himself speak: How are mine enemies increased! many are they that rise against me. Neither the place of a King, nor the vertue of a good King, could quit him, but he had both. He had enemies: Isbosheth, Hanun, Hadadseer, the States of the Philistins. He had those that rose against him: Abisalom, Achitophel, Amasa, here: Sheba, Adonia, Joab, afterward, he had both. And let us not Envidus think this strange, since Christ Himself, yea, since God Himself hath them too. For, lo thine enemies O Lord, lo thine enemies, and those that rise up against thee (it is the XCII. Psalm.) That we may cease to marvel, that Kings have them; or think it is; because it is not as it should be. Be they never so, as they should; be they as David; according to Gods own heart; nay, be they as Christ, as God Himself; both these they shall have. Let not this make us stumble; but that we may go forward.

1 Pet. 4. 12.
Psal. 3. 1.

Psal. 92. 9.

1 Sam. 13. 14.

Of these two then; if we shall fit our selves to the present, we shall not need to speak of the one sort, of enemies. The King hath none: No King, nor State, professe themselves for such; nor never may do. The latter it shall not be amisse to stay a little, and look better on, who they be. This dayes peril was; all his peril, both in August, and November, is from them, that (like Cain) rise up against him. A King by nature is Rex Alkam, saith Solomon, Prov. XXX. One, against whom there is no rising: So God would have it. Subjects (saith the Apostle) to lye down before them: rising up against, is cleane contrary to that; and so, contrary to Gods will: He would have no rising. The thought to rise (voluerunt insurgere in Regem) is said of Bigthan and Thares: two of Ahasuerus chamber (mark that voluerunt insurgere) was enough: to attain them: the rising but of the will, to bring them to the gallows. Nor the tongue is not to rise, or lift up it self: Core did but gain-say, his tongue was but up, and he, and all that took his part, perished in their gain-saying; the gain-saying of Core. But chiefly none, either (with Judas) to lift up his heele, to betray; or (with Cain) to lift up the hand, to do violence. No party, no part of any party, to rise against the King. Yet, rise they will, and do: both the thought well, and exurgens e vobis (saith the Apostle) perverse to quemes, yea, and perversa faciantes, lewd speech used, and worse than speech, presumptuous deeds too.

Psal. 12. 4.
Chap. 20. 1.
Luke 19. 14.

Now of these, that thus rise, two sorts there be: For, either they rise against the very state it self of Kings; the very authority, they exercise (that is) would have no Kings at all; saying with them, Quis est Dominus noster, who is Lord over us (as much to say, as by their good will, none.) Or such, as only rise against their persons, as he in the 20. Chapter, that said, We have no part in David; and they in the Gospel, that say, Nolimus hunc, We will not have this man rule. Rule, they would not have quite taken away, but not this person, to rule over them.

Of the first sort of these risers, are the Anabaptists of our age; by whom, all secular jurisdiction is denied. No Law-makers they, but the Evangelists: No courts, but Presbyteries: no punishments, but Church-Censures. These, rise against the very estate of Kings: and that should they find and feel, if they were once grown enough to make a party.

A second sort there be, that are but bustling themselves to rise; not yet risen; at least, not to this step: but in a forwardness they be, proffer at it, that, they do. They that seek to bring parity, not into the Commonwealth by no means, but only into the Church. All Parishes alike, every one absolute, entire of it self. No dependency, or superiority, or subordination. But this once being had, do we not know their second position? Have they not broached it long since? The Church is the house; the Commonwealth, but the hangings. The hangings must be made fit to the house, that is, the Commonwealth fashioned to the Church: not the house to the hangings: No, take heed of that. And when they were taken with it, and charged with it, how slightly in their answer do they slip it over? These, when they are got thus far, may rise one step higher: and as Aaron, now must not; so (perhaps) neither must Moses, then; exalt himself above the Congregation, seeing that All Gods people are holy no less than he.

Chap. 16. 17.

Ester 2. 21.

These two rise against their States. Against their persons, two other sorts of persons both discontented. 1 But the one was, of ambition: as Absalom here, that thought it was wonderful great pity, that all causes were not brought before him, considering how able a man he was for it, and the King being negligent in looking to his subjects grief. But, when he spread a tent aloft, and did you know what, not to be told, and that in the sight of all Israel; Sure, he that could commit that villanous act, in the eyes of all Israel. He that could charge Hushai, as with a foul fault, for forsaking his friend, himself, then being in armour against his own father, was not so very fit a man to do justice. No matter: so he took himself; that was enough, to rise. 2 The other, out of revenge: the case of Bigthan and Thares (and of our two, as is thought.) They were angry at somewhat, it is not said what, nor it skills not what, but, vulnerunt insurgere, rise they would for it (that they would.) These did not with government quite taken away: only the Kings person they heaved at; Him, for some purpose, they must have needs out of the way.

Mat. 14. 31.
G. 3. 14.

By this time we know the parties reasonable well. Be these, they whom God, Angels, and Saints, hold for execrable? They, whom Cushai may pray against, and we with him? These be they. It was Core, one of the crue, against whom Moses prayed, they might be visited with a strange visitation, and not dye the common death of other men. No more he did. It was Achitophel, another of them, against whom David penned the Psalm of bitter imprecations. They of Meroz, whom the Angel giveth warrant, and charge both, to curse; wherefore was it? Because they came not to help the Lord, that is, Debora, the Lords Lieutenant, against the forces of Madian. If to be cursed, because they laid not their hand to help Him; much more (I trow) if they would seek to lay their hands on him, to mischief and make him away. It was Judas, he was one of these against whom CHRIST cryed Va per quem; and it was the serpent, whom God cursed: and why, what was his fault? What, but that he sought to withdraw our parents from due subjection; to rise against God, to be Gods themselves and never acknowledge him, or any, for their superior. These be they (certainly) against whom (God, Angels, and Saints approving it) we may say Cushai his prayer, every syllable of it. May? nay, ought; are even bound to it. Yea, to give full satisfaction; that there be no striving, but that all may say Amen to it, it shall not be amiss, if I may with your good favour, lay before you some reasons, and those so enforcing that we shall hold our selves so bound, as that we cannot avoid, but yield to it. I care not much, if I keep the number of Absaloms darts: they are three.

1 Reg. 21. 13.

First, I hold it for cleer, if we knew any were Gods enemy, we would none of us make any question, but say (with Cushai, we need not, it is set down to our hands) So perish all thine enemies O Lord. So, how? Even as Sisera: little difference in effect, between him and Absalom. Sisera perished with a nail driven into his head: Absalom with a dart thrust through his heart. To the enemies of God, you see, we have warrant. But, they that rise against the King, are Gods enemies: for, God and the King are so in a league, such a knot, so straight between them, as one cannot be enemy to the one, but he must be to the other. This is the knot. They are, by God, of or from God, for or instead of God. Moses rod; Gods Gideons sword, Gods Davids throne, Gods. In his place, they sit; His Person they represent; they are taken into the fellowship of the same name; Ego dixi, he hath said it, and we may be bold to say it, after him; They are Gods: and what, would we more? Then must their enemies be Gods enemies. Let their enemies know then, they have to deal with God, not with them; it is His cause, rather than theirs; they, but His agents. It standeth Him in hand; it toucheth him, in honour. He can no less than maintain them, than hold their enemies for his own. Saint Paul is plain, He that resisteth them, resisteth God: he that, the regal power, the divine ordinance.

The enditement was rightly framed (in judgement of all Writers) though it were mis-applied; Naboth maledixit Deo & Regi; Naboth did neither, therefore it was evil applied; But, if he had done the one, he had done the other: and so it was truly framed. Even as he in the new Testament framed his his confession aright, I have sinned against heaven, and against thee. For no man can trespass against a lawful superior, but withal he must do it against heaven first; and so he must confess, if ever he have his pardon for it. Luk. 15. 18.

But there is no more pregnant reason to prove, Gods enemies they be, these that rise against Kings, than this; ye shall observe still they are called the Sons of Belial, Belial Gods professed enemy. Sheba is so called in expresse terms; in the next Chapter save one, that rose up against David. And indeed, what was the drift of the first temptation, but only to have made Adam and Eve the adopted children of Belial, that is, to be under no yoke? not Gods; much less, mans; to brooke no superior. They are all his, by adoption, that carry such minds. It cannot otherwise be. And if it were the Spirit of God, that fell on Amasa, when he said, Thine are we O David, and on thy side thou son of Isbair: what spirit could it be but of Belial, or whose son Sheba but his that cryed, We have no part in David, nor any portion in the son of Isbair? if it were the finger of God that touched their hearts that went after Saul, their lawful Liege Lord: whose claw must it be, the print whereof was in theirs, who rose and went against him? Whose but Belials? Et qua conventio Christi & Belial? Christ and Belial so out, so at odds, that no hope of ever agreeing them: Now then being the sons of Belial; and they, and Belial their father, Gods enemies, make we any doubt, but we may say after the Holy Ghost, So perish all thine enemies O Lord? Chap. 20. 1.
1 Chro. 12. 18.
2 Cor. 2. 15.

The one might be enough. But there were three darts in Abshaloms heart, one would have served the turn, so, this one would suffice, but I will cast yet a second, and third at them. If then secondly, we knew any that were not only Hostis Dei, but vostis humani generis, would we yet doubt to pray, He might be as Abshalom? I trust not: especially, seeing we should therein but follow Gods own example. He curleth the Serpent, even for this cause, that he was enemy to the woman, and all her seed, and sought the utter ruin of both. Those that are such, well may all men pray against them, for all mens hands they well deserve it. Now thus reasoneth Saint Paul. Rulers not only come from God, but they come from him in particular; Tibi in unum, for thy good, whosoever thou art: Thy good, thou Nobleman, thou Gentleman, thou Church-man, thou Merchant, thou Husbandman, thou Tradesman: Thy good: (that is) for our good they come, and are sent for all our good; for the general good of us all. Us all: nay, even of all mankind. Mankind should be as a Forest (saith Moses) the strong beasts would devour the weak; as a Fish-pool: (saith Habakkuk) the great fish devour the small, were it not for these. Without these mankind would not continue. They then, that are enemies to them, mankinds enemies: and so, of the serpents seed certainly, to be cursed with the serpents curse; conteratur caput eorum. 2 of mankind.
The enemies
Gen. 3. 14. 15.
Rom. 13. 4.
Gen. 10. 9.
Hab. 1. 14.

Now then of this great Monarchy of Mankind, of the whole world, the several Monarchies of the world are eminent parts. What the estate of Kings is, in the whole; that is the person of every particular Prince, in his several sovereignty: David, in his of Jury: Ours, in his of great Britain: the health and safety of the Kingdom, fast linked with the Kings health and safety. The head of the Tribes (so is David called;) The light of Israel; Tu pascis, the Shepherd of the flock; The corner-stone of the building. I will content me with these. If the Head be deadly hurt, I would fain know, what shall become of the body? If the light be put out, is ought but darkness to be looked for in Israel? Smite the Shepherd, must not the flock be in peril? If the Corner-stone be shaken, will not both the walls feel a wrack? Verily, all our weal and wo dependeth on their wel-fare or decay. Therefore bless we them, and they that bless them, be blessed: and they that set themselves against them, accursed even with the capital curse, the serpents, all our enemy; as the first of all, so the chief of all; as from Gods own mouth. 1 Sam. 15. 17.
2 Sam. 21. 17.
Psal. 118. 21.

To these two, I add yet one more, and that by good warrant, both of the Old and New Testament; let them be confounded and turned backward (saith the Prophet) so many as have evil will at Sion; Urinam abscondantur (saith the Apostle) qui vos conturbant. Against them well may we pray, that malign the peace and prosperity of the Church: in which and for which we and all the world to pray; as that, for which, all world and all was made, and is still upholden: for, were the Church once gathered, the world dissolves straight. God is too high (as for any our good, so) for any our evil or enmity to come neer him. He reckoneth of no enemies but His Churches. They, that persecute her, persecute him; they that touch her, touch the apple of His eye. Now they that are enemies to David; are enemies to Sion: so neer neighbour-hood between David and Sion, the King and the Church, as there is between his Palace and the Temple; both stand upon two tops of one and the same hill. The King is Nutritus Ecclesie: If enemies to the Nurse, then to the child, it cannot otherwise be. Experience teacheth it daily, when the child hath a good nurse, to take such a one away, is but to expose the Child, to the evident danger of starving or pining away. I know not, men may entertain what speculations they will; but (sure) in praxi, how much the Churches welfare hath gone by the good and blessed inclination of Kings, it is but too plain. Socrates long since truly observed it in the beginning of the fifth book of his story. Consider me in the Commonwealth of the Jews, these four Kings immediately succeeding each the other; Jorham, Ahaz, Ezekiab, and Manasses: Consider these four Emperors in the Primitive Church, likewise in succession; Constantine, Constantius, Julian, and Jovian: Consider me here at home, the four last Princes before his Majesty, and the waxing and waning; the alteration and alternation of religion, under them, forward, and backward, backward and forward again: and tell me, whether the King and the Church have not reference, as I said; and whether the Church have any greater enemies than such as alien the minds of Kings, and make them heavy friends to their welfare and well-doing. Of such then, safely may we say, Be they confounded, Be they, as the grass up- on the house top, which withereth before hey-time (that is) let them come to untimely ends; let them be as Abshalom; or (as another Psalm wisheth such kind of people) like them that perished at Endor, 3 and became like dung upon the earth. So then being ¹ Gods enemies, ² mankind, and ³ the Churches; against the enemies of any one of these, the prayer were warrantable: how much more against them, that are enemies to all three? One nail served Sisera, in his head: so would one spear Abfalom in his heart, but he had three: not without a meaning. A moral allusion they make of it: three were the faults he made; three the parties he highly offended. ¹ God, ² the State, ³ the Church. Enemy to all three: for every one, a dart. Each, deadly aloes; but he had them all, to shew, he deserved them all: and so they do, that sin Abfaloms sin. The prayer (sure) is good: Cusbi prayed well; are all bound to say Amen to it.

II.
Of the Texts
as a prophecy.

But besides that it is a prayer, Let them be: it is a prophecy too, They shall be. The tenor of the prayer we have heard: Let us see the success of the prophesie, what became of it; whether Cusbi were a true Prophet, or no. So true, as from Moses to Malachy, never any of the Prophets more true, in his foretelling, than he in this. All the enemies, all that rose up against him, erant sicut, were even so indeed.

Jud. 5. 31.
Psal. 92. 9.

Gen. 3. 14. 15.
Psal. 119. 5.

Pity it is, but that a good prayer should be heard, and (as we said) turn into the nature of a prophecy. They were three good prayers we heard; there is none of all the three, but hath a Prophecy (that so it should be) answering to the prayer, that so it might be. Against Gods enemies: the prayer, So perish, &c. The prophecy, For Lo thine enemies O Lord, Lo thine enemies shall perish; as if he saw it with his eyes, called others to see it with him; pointed at it with his finger, Lo, twice, once, and again; (one Lo, not serve) so sure he is that so it shall be. ² Against the enemies of mankind: The wish, Cursed be thou above every beast of the earth, the prophecy followeth in the neck of it, Ipe conter caput, One there is, shall bruise his head all to pieces. ³ Against the maligners of Sion: Let them be confounded, &c. That is the prayer: The Kingdom or Nation, that shall malign Sion shall perish, and utterly be destroyed; there is the prophecy. Now, that that is propheticall, in each of those, is no less verified in the Kings enemies, in whom they all meet.

Chap. 18. 9.

Do but, after this prophecy, enquire what became of them: ask but the question. The King doth (here): in the forefront of the verse: Is Abfalom safe, how doth he? He doth, as he deserveth to do. Ask, how the rest, that after rose against him: within a Chapter, after, Sheba riseth; how did he? Before the end of the Chapter, his head came over the wall. After him, Adoniah was up and spake even broadly, Regnabo: What became of him? His end in blood. And (that which is strange) with him rose Joab: he that took off Sheba's head: he that threw these darts; and he that was the true man here, How sped he? He was even drawn from the Altar (that, is no sanctuary for traitors) and executed by Benaiah. Could not take heed by Abfaloms example, but came to Abfaloms end. They all that fought, that rose to pluck him down, whom God had exalted, they were slain, all the sort of them; were all, as a tottering wall, or as a broken hedge, which every man runs over.

But this judgement of God, was in none more conspicuous, than Abfalom. A strait charge was given by the King himself, to have him saved: It would not serve, he was slain for all that. And slain by Joab: one, before, that had highly favoured him, and been a special means to restore him to grace; even, by him, was he slain notwithstanding the Kings charge; and then slain, when he made full account of the victory. For else he would have been better horrid. He was on his Mule; now he never doubted the event, and yet was slain. Sure Gods hand was in it, to rid the world of a traitor.

Ast. 9. 5.

Neither was this a peculiar prophecy to King David alone. The prayer is said, and the prophecy taketh hold of other, as well before, as since. Ask of Core, he rose against Moses: How sped he? He went to hell quick for it. Ask of Baana and Rechab that rose against their Lord: Look over the pool of Hebron, there, stand their quarters on poles. Ask of Bigshan and Thares, what of them? Fairly hanged at the Court-Gate. Time will not serve, to enquire of all. The short is: all that were as Abfalom, came to his end. Some hanged, and their heart opened being get alive (So was Abfalom): and their bowels plucked out, to make them like Judas. Some their heads stricken off, so was Sheba; Some quartered, and their hands, feet and head set on poles, that the Ravens might pluck out their eyes, as Baana and Rechab; that, upon them might come, all the punishments due to them, that rise with Abfalom. For, all the punishments of traitors, as now they are in use with us, may seem to have been collected and drawn together, from those several examples, that stand in the book of God.

All to shew, that a King is Alkum, no rising against him: Or, if any rise, he had better sit still. For, no sooner rise they up, but our Prophet straight cryeth: Rise up, rise up, and put on strength, thou arm of the Lord, rise up as in old time, in the generations of the world. Art not thou the same that didst smite Abfalom by Joab; and art not thou the same that didst smite Joab by Benaia? That setteth thy self to bring them down, that rise up against Alkum, against whom there is no rising?

For, Kings being from God. (saith Gamaliel) we cannot set our selves against them, but we must be found (even) δυναστεύειν to fight against God. Being ordained of God (saith Gamaliel his Scholler, S. Paul) to resist them, is to resist the ordinance of God; and as good put our selves in the face of all the Ordinance in the Tower of London, as withstand Gods ordinance. None might better say it than he: it was told him from Heaven, when he was about such another business, persecuting Christ in His Church (and Christ is persecuted in his chief members, as well as His inferiour) he was told plainly, in so doing, he did but kick against the prick. His heels might ake and ran of blood, the prick prick not remove, but stand where it did still. Therefore, as here Cushi, in the Old, so S. Paul in the New, falleth to prophecy; they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation, is S. Paul's prophecy. And, a true prophecy, even as was Moses of Core: That they should not die the death of other men, but be visited with some strange extraordinary visitation; but have their end in blood. All, as Cushi prayed they might, and prophesied they should. And his prayer was heard, his prophecy came to pass, not a word of either fell to the ground.

Rom. 13. 11

Numb. 16. 35

Having now dealt with it as a prayer first; and then, as a prophecy; let us now see how it suiteth with the business in hand, and whether the force and vigour of these have reached to us and our times.

And reacheth to our times.

It was with God no new thing (this) to reward such as rise up against Kings. Of that which is with him no new, but old (as old as David; nay, as Moses) He giveth us new examples, every otherwhile, to shew, his ear is still open to this prayer; and that His arm is stretched out to reach them still. Yea, I dare be bold to say, there is no one of his promises hath so many seals hanging at it, by way of confirmation of it, as this hath: No one, so many judgements upon record, as it. In every story of every land, there is still standing some Gibbet or other, and their quarters hanging on it there still, to put us in mind of the truth of Cushi's prophecy.

This very day yieldeth us one of fresh memory (but seven years since) wherein in our Sovereign, God hath given us a memorable example, of the hearing Cushi's prayer, and the accomplishing his prediction, not in one, but in a couple of Abshaloms. A couple of Abshaloms, I may well term them; in many other points like him, but namely in these two: 1. Like in their rising; and 2. like in their fall. For, that Abshalom was a son, and these but subjects; it altereth not the case much: Sons and subjects are both under one commandment, as Pater and Rex, both in one name [Abimalech] the name of the first Kings of Canaan. If under one, then under one curse: If they do but speak evil, under Moses curse, in mount Ebal; if but look upon them with a scornful eye, under Solomon's curse, that the Ravens pick those eyes out: The same, against a father, to reach much more to Abiam, Pater populi: (So did Solan name his nephew.) Abiam, a father of Juda, even as Deborah, was a mother in Israel. In a word: what Noah might wish to a bad son (Cham;) and Elisha wish to a bad servant (Gehazi;) no cause in the world, but Cushi might wish the same to a bad subject. All is one case. This then breeds no unlikeliness; and in all the rest, exceeding like.

The Application on to the day.

2 Kings 5. 27.

As that young man (to keep the words of the Text.) For, those were young men, too. Their years, not many. Not many: nay, so few, so green, as it may well seem strange, that there could such inveterate malice and mischief be hatched, in so young years. As he, in that (first.)

As in years, so in malice; bloody-minded both. Said not Abshalom, to his Assassines, when I give you a sign, see you smile, kill him, fear not, have not I commanded: you said not they the same to him, whom to that end, they had armed, and placed to do that wicked act? In that like, second.

As in this malicious bloody mind; so in raking it up, and keeping it close, divers years together. Not only (as Abshalom in this) to say neither good nor bad: but in this too; to intreat the King, and all his company to their house; to entertain and feast him, and besides promise, and pretend, I know not what, and all to cover and conceal their divellish intent. In this like, thirdly: this young man, and these.

And not in this kind only of outward dissembling; but in a worse kind of religious hypocrisy. He made a religious vow; it lay on his conscience, he could not be quiet, till he had got leave to go pay it, and then, even then, went he about all his villany. And was it not so here? He, so holy; as to a Sermon he must needs; to God's word; no remedy, he might not be from it in any wise: and that, when he trusted, the deadly blow should have been given. In this, like.

And yet fifthly, the same man, like Abshalom, when he was in Gessur. Abshalom in Gessur, and this in Italy, as devout at his Masses then, as he was here zealous for his exercise of the word. Alike at both, as they served his turn. Like in this too.

2 Sam. 15. 4.

And, last of all, in this too: that for all this goodly mask of religion, when he saw his treachery was discovered, as Abshalom blew his trumpet, so he was content to uncase himself, and to rush forth and appear for such as he was. In which act, he perished, as Abshalom: got in his heart, that Abshalom got in his: only that was a dart, and this was a dagger.

Chap. 15. 10.

For (sure) being thus like in their conditions, and in so many circumstances besides, pity but they should be like in their ends too: And they were. And, that so they were, is the matter of the publick gratulation of this day, of the day of the week all the year long; of this, the day it self, specially above all: that the prayer and prophecy of Cushi took place; his prayer heard, his prophecy fulfilled no less in these young men, than in that; no less in the enemies of our King James, than in his Lord King David.

In the treasons, little difference or none: in the delivery, some difference; but, all for the better. For first, in far greater peril was his Majesty, far greater than ever was David. 1. David was but pursued: but he was even caught, and within (I know not how many) locks and doors. 2. David was all the while without the reach of any blow: how near the blow was to his breast, it is able to make any man chill, but to think. 3. David had his Worthies still about him: The King was in torculari solus, in the very press alone, & vir de gentibus, and not one of his people to stand by or assist him. 4. That David was delivered, it must be ascribed to the providence of God; but, in that it was a fought field, his his army must take part of the praise. It was another manner of providence, that was shewed here; of a more near regard, of a more strange operation. I dare confidently affirm it (I may well I am sure :) Gods hand was much more eminent in this, than in that : praised be his name for it. 5. And last of all, David (here) heard of his delivery by Cush. Ours saw it himself : and yet (I cannot tell well, what to say) the danger was so great, and the fear must needs be accordingly, whether it had not been to be wished that some Cush had rather brought tidings of it, than he seen it himself. But since it pleased God, so from Heaven to shew Himself in it (if ever He did, in any) and though with such fear, yet without any harm, dulcis laborum praeursorum memoria:

David heard his; Segnius irritant : Ours saw his, oculis subiecta fidelibus; the impression of joy was the greater, and did work both the stronger and the longer. The stronger, in a votive thanksgiving then undertaken : The longer, in the continual renewing it, not only from year to year, but from week to week all the year long.

And what shall we say then? What but as Abimelech before at the 28. Ver. Blessed be the Lord his God that hath this day given sentence for him, upon those, that rose up against him. And then secondly, with Cush, So be it to all the rest, as it was with these. Though it be to go into mount Ebal, let us not fear, God goeth before us, and faith is before us; let us not make danger, to go after, and to say after him. They be His enemies, so proved : say we boldly, So perish all thine enemies O Lord. They be enemies to mankind, in being enemies to them, by whom order and peace is kept in mankind, and without whom there would in mankind be nought but confusion : The Serpents curse be upon them, and let their heads be trod to pieces. They be Sions malignant enemies : let them be as grass upon the bonse-top, as those that perished at Endor, and became dung for the earth. Let them be as stubble scattered, as wax melted, as smoke driven, no man can tell whither. Let them perish; perish, as Sisera, and Orab, as Absalom. Joels hammer, on their heads; Gideons ax, on their necks; Joabs dart, in their hearts. One, nay three : one, for the enemies of God : another, for the enemies of mankind, a third, for the enemies of Sion. Let Cush be both Priest and Prophet, this his prayer never return empty, this his Prophecy never want success. And let the King ever rejoice in thy strength (O Lord) let him be exceeding glad of thy salvation. Ever thrust thou back his enemies, and tread them down that rise up against him. Let their swords go through their own hearts, and their mischief light upon their own heads. Let His ear still hear His desire upon His enemies, and His eye still see the fall of the wicked that rise up against Him. Be he as David; we, as Cush : they, as Absalom. God by whom this prayer was allowed, receive and grant it : God by whom this prophecy was inspired, make it good, and fulfill it, as this day, so for ever : Even for ever and ever for his Christs sake.

A

PREACHED

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At *HOLDENBIE,*On the V. of August, A.D.M.dc. VII.

I SAM. Chap. XXVI. Ver. VII, IX.

Dixitque Abishai ad David, &c.

Then said Abishai to David : God hath closed thine enemy into thine hand this day : now therefore, I pray thee let me smite him once with a spear to the earth, and I will not smite him again.

And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not : For who can lay his hands on the Lords Anointed, and be guiltless?

Here is some body here in the Text, in danger to be destroyed, and the party is the Lords Anointed, King Saul. The matter is come to hard hold : Destroy him, and destroy him not. Abishai would have it done : David at no hand, he cries Ne perdas. But the end was, Saul was saved. Thus lyeth the case here in the Text.

And was not the very same the case of this day? There was some body in as great danger to be destroyed, this day. It was Christus Domini, Gods Anointed here before us. The case was come to the very same plunge : Perdas ; ne Perdas ; a King, or no King. Some were of Abishai's mind : God was fain to supply Davids ; there was none else. But blessed be God, all ended in Ne perdas. And again, blessed be God who then also verified the latter part of the verse, that None shall seek to lay hands on the Lords Anointed : but they shall be found, and handled, as guilty persons. For, so they were ; and their blood was upon their own heads. Both cases suiting so well, this Text might well serve for this day.

There is, in the former verse, a motion made by Abishai for a blow at Saul, thus : See, &c. There be three perillous motives in it : 1 Inimicum, He is your enemy ; 2 Conclasis, here is an opportunity ; 3 fine I. me, the act shall not be yours, let me alone, I will take it upon me.

There

II.

There is in the latter, Dauids utter dislike of the motion, thus : Destroy not, &c. Wherein, first there is a double charge to the contrary : 1 One ad oculum ; Destroy him not : 2 The other rising out of the reason, yet plain enough. He had said, Destroy him not : Not that ; Quis enim misit manum ? for a less matter than that, you may not do, not lay your hands, not so much : which is (as it were) a surcharge to the former ; or (if I may so say) a second edition of Ne perdas. No talk of destroying : so far from that, as no stirring the hand toward it.

1. Then upon this double charge, followeth a double reason ; two retentives (as it were) against the first motion. 1 He is the Lords Anointed : that, may stay you, if you be a good subject.

2 Be you good subject or no, if that will not, this must ; You shall not be guiltless. If not guiltless, then guilty : and what becomes of them that be guilty, we all know. That is, do it not ; if you do, it will bring you to guilty, or not guilty : if you lay your hand, you shall hold up your hand for it : it is as much as your life is worth.

3 Thirdly, it is not indeed, Non eris insons. For, if it had been so, it might have been thought to have reached to Abisbai, to his particular, and no further. But he chose rather to utter it by Quis ? For, by asking Quis ? Who shall ? He plainly implyeth, Ne quis unquam, that none ever may ; Not he, not Abisbai ; nay, not any. So, there is a double charge : 1 Destroy not, 2 lay not your hand. A double retentive : 1 He is Gods Anointed ; 2 You shall not be guiltless : 3 and a Quis upon all, to bind all, and to shew the charge is general without exception.

1 In all which, there is a protection for Saul the first King, and all after him, not only from perditio, destroying, giving of the blow : but from misso manum, stirring of the hand.

2 There is a neck-verse for Abisbai, and all undertakers in that kind ; they are all cast, they are all found guilty, yea they come to the bar : they are attainted, every one.

3 There is an Euge for David : who sheweth himself through all. 1 In his charge (destroy not) a good subject : 2 In his reason (He is Gods Anointed) a good Divine : 3 In his sentence (Non eris insons) a good Judge : 4 In his challenge (Quis mittet ?) a stout champion, to any that shall maintain the contrary.

4 But for that, besides this reason in the Text (of inimicum tuum.) there have been other reasons framed in our daies to the same end ; and all of them in Saul, the party in the Text : we will make them in too, to rule this case once for all. For Sauls case will be found to have in it, all that can be alledged, why any King should be, if any King might be touched. All (I say) will be found in him : But, he for all them, may not be touched : therefore none may.

5 And this done, we will close (as the duty of the day requireth) to lay these cases, case to case ; ours of the day, to this in the Text. Where we shall see, that we have as great cause ; nay, of the twain, the greater cause of gratulation, for the happy Ne perdas of this day.

I.
Abisbai's Motion.

THis is Abisbai's motion. There be three motives in it : 1 the party is your enemy. 2 God hath sent you opportunity. 3 I will take it upon me. Enmity makes us willing to take revenge : opportunityable ; and if another will do the act, the rather for that ; for then we shall bear no blame : Three shrewd motives, where they meet : and here they meet all in one. Let us weigh them : which I do the more willingly, because all three meet also in this dayes attempt. 1 Enmity, that was the colour, an old wrong : so there were in both, the same pretence. 2 And the same advantage in both. For, the King was shut up indeed, and that literally. 3 And he that was at Church, he should not have done it, nor he : Abisbai should have done it, he in the chamber. Of these motives then.

I
The first motive.
Inimicum tuum
1 A deadly enemy.
Chap. 18. 15.
Chap. 18. 11.
19. 20.
Chap. 19. 1.
19. 15.
2 An enemy without cause.
Psal. 7. 3.
Chap. 16. 23.
Chap. 17. 49.
Chap. 19. 5.

He is an enemy. But not every enemy is to be destroyed, but they that would destroy us. All enmity is not deadly fowd : Sauls was ; nothing would serve him but Dauids life, and many wayes he sought indirectly. 1 By matching him with his own daughter, and laying on him for a dowry, so many for-skins of the Philistines, so he might fall by their hands. 2 That would not do : he went to it directly, 1 at three several times cast his javelin at him, to have nailed him to the wall. 2 When he escaped him so : then gave he express charge openly to all men to kill him, wherever they met him. 3 When that would not be, sent to his house for him ; when word came, he was sick in his bed, bade bring him bed and all, that he might see him slain in his own presence. Was there ever the like ? who would not have been quit of such an enemy ?

It may be, there was cause why : and then it holds not. Nay, no cause. To God he protests, Saul without any cause, was his enemy. For, no cause he gave him to be his enemy, he never hurt him : But great cause to have been his good Lord, he had many wayes done him good service. Not to speak of his Harp (wherewith he had rid him of many a furious fit of melancholy, or a worse matter :) with his sling, it cannot be denied, he did him, and the whole Realm good service, in the overthrow of Goliath, and took away the rebuke from Israel. Yea many times after, put his soul in his hands (as Jonathan pleaded for him) that is, ventured his life to do him service in his wars, and ever with good success ; and yet for all this sought his life. And who would save the life of such an enemy ?

Yes,

Yes, there may be hope to win an enemy, and in that case he would not be destroyed. Nay, no hope of ever winning Saul. He was an enemy out of envy, and they will never be won more. From the time, the fond women made that foolish rime of a thousand and ten thousand he could never abide to look right on him. Envy was the matter; that, is the dangerous enmity, that never will be pacified. Well saith Solomon, Anger is fierce, and hatred is cruel; but who shall stand before envy? As who should say there be means, to satisfy both those: But the enemy from envy, no appeasing him; no hope ever to do it. If ought would, when he saved his life at the cave, and shewed by cutting a sword from his mantle, he might have gone farther if he would; Saul himself confest, it was a great favour: yet that would not win him; he sought his life still: And even after this here, yet he fought it still. There was no hope to appease him. And who then would not make sure of such an enemy? Verily if any enmity might have served, here it was.

But there is yet a worse enmity than all these. Saul was not only an enemy to David; but Saul's life, an enemy to David's rising. David was in reversion (we know :) So, Saul stood in his way. There was not only the sting of revenge, but the edge of ambition, to help this motion forward. It was but occidamus eum; here he is, kill him and the inheritance is ours, all is ours. Any other enemies spare, and spare not; but, these that stand in our light, away with them. It made Abimelech not to spare his own brethren; nor Abisai, his Father; nor Athalia, her children. Sure, he that weighs it well, that at one blow he might have rid himself of such an enemy, and withall have gained the crown, will wonder, he let not the blow proceed. Now, lay them together: 1 An enemy, such an one, so deadly; 2 so without cause; 3 so without all hope of appeasing, 4 such a stop to his fortunes: who would have stayed Abisai's hand.

This is enough to give his appetite an edge: but, we lack opportunity to do it; and want of opportunity saves many an enemies life. Men must deal wisely, and forbear, till they find him handsomely, at some good advantage. Nay, it is now grown to be good Divinity, rebus sic stantibus, to be as gentle as David; and Ne perdas is good doctrine. But; as soon as time serves and strength; if we get him once within locks, penned up, and in our power, then do as we see cause, destroy him and spare not. So that, upon conclusit eum ever stayeth our conclusion. Why here now, conclusit eum. It was night: Saul lay all weary asleep, in a dead sleep, he and all about him. David and Abisai came and went, did what they would; took what they would; none waked or knew of it. It might have been done safely, there was none to resist them: and been carried closely, none to descry them. An opportunity it was, and a fair one.

And (as it might seem) of God's own sending. It was perilously put in (that) of Abisai, Conclusit Deus; that it was God's doing, sure: it was the sleep of God was fallen on them: none awake; all asleep; watch and all. They might stay all the dayes of their life, and God never send the like again. What now?

Though David wanted no courage to be revenged on an enemy, nor wisdom to discern this opportunity; yet, for his reputation, he must not soil his hands: but possibly, if some other would take it upon him, he would not be much against it. Why, it was undertaken by Abisai, that too: he shall go his way, and do nothing to it: Sine me, you shall bear no blame, let that be upon me; you shall go to Church, and sing Psalms, and hear the Sermon, and never appear in it. What now? I know not what can be required more. Thus you see the motives: Now, what saith David?

Nay first, what saith Saul? Can we have a better Judge than him in this case? Et inimici nostri sint iudices, an enemy to be Judge in his own case: If you will know, what he saith; He it is, that (in the XXIV. Chapter, XX.) saith thus. Who shall finde his enemy at such an advantage, and let him goe free? As much to say, Not any; Sure, not he. But if he, of many another had found David, as David did him, in the Cave, he would have cut his skirts so close, as he would have made him have bled in the reins of his back; or if he had taken him (as he did Saul here) asleep, he would have set him out of that sleep into another, a perpetual sleep, and made him sure enough for ever waking more. This is Saul's doom, from his own mouth. And indeed, hac est via hominis, with flesh and blood these motives would have wrought. They did not with David: what saith he? these motives move him not.

For all this, all this notwithstanding, Ne perdas, saith he. And first, mark; he denieth none of his three motives, 1 that Saul was his enemy; 2 or that the time served fitly; 3 or that the colour was good: but, granting all these, for all our enmity, for all this opportunity, for all your colourable offer to save mine honesty; for all this, Destroy him not.

Secondly, Mark, it is not negando, a bare denial, Non est faciendum: but, with an imperative, with authority, Ne feceris; straightly charging and commanding him not to be so hardy, as to do it. Et est efficacior vetandi ratio quam Negandi; by Ne, than by Non: The imperative negative is most effectual.

And thirdly, that this is not the first time: once before, he had done the like: and Iteratio prae-supponit deliberationem. And indeed, there is a mystrie in this same [Sine me] of Abisai. They had had him once before at like advantage, in the Cave; (and will you but observe, how it went then; it is well worthy your observing.) Then they were at David, to have done it himself; Destroy Him you: What was his answer? Who I? God forbid, never move it, I will never do it. Now then, here at this, Abisai, knowing by the former, it was in vain to move him to do it, he offers to be the doer : It shall be none of your act ; Sine me : What answer now ? No, nor you ; See you do it not. Perdas (saith Abisbai) before : Non perdam, saith David, Perdam (saith Abisbai) now : Ne perdas, saith David. So, he will neither do it himself, nor suffer it to be done. The short is : Neither making, as at first ; nor sleeping, as now : neither by day, as in that ; nor by night, as in this : neither by himself, nor by other, will David endure to do it, or to have it done. But, in the one and the other, first and last, still and ever, Ne perdas (saith David :) Saul must not be destroyed.

II. Davids dislike.

I The first charge. Ne perdas.

4. Yea, so far was he after this, from fore-thinking this speech, or wishing it unsaid, that he pleased himself in this Ne perdas so, that not content to have said it, he made a Psalm of it, to sing himself, and all Israel with him ; and by singing it, to sing their duty in this point, into all their minds and memories. A sign, the words were good, he would bestow a dittie and tune upon them, as if he glorified in them. Yea, to make them the more memorable, that they might never be lost, he hath framed divers other Psalms to the same tune. You may turn to the 58. 59. 75. You shall find all their titles, to the tune of Ne perdas ; that so, all that then were, and all that were to come, might know, how good a speech he took it to be, how meet to be said, and sung, of all ages.

5 And what would ye more ? Not these two only, said, and sung ; but in the verse following, takes his oath, and swears to it : As the Lord liveth (saith he) Gods hand may, but mine shall never be upon him : and his day may come ; but, not a day sooner for me. So, that, he said no more in this ; than he meant to swear to.

But now to come to look into the reason : we shall find, he goeth farther than so, than Not destroying. For being to give a reason of Ne perdas, keeping the rule, he should now have gone on with it, as he begun, and said, Quis enim perdidit ? For who ever destroyed a King ? He doth not so : That (as it seemeth) would not serve his turn : he changeth his verb now, and saith, Quis enim manum mittit ? Who hath but put forth his hand ? As if he had given too much scope, in saying no more, but destroy not. Indeed, it was well spied ; it must be stopped, before it come to destroying, if it be come to the deed once, we are all undone ; Ne perdas is not enough. Much mischief may be ; at least much fear, and fright (as this day there was) and yet, no destruction.

To make sure work then, so far is he from perdas, as he will not allow manum mittas. By which denying the latter, the former is put past all doubt. If the hand be stayed, no blow can be given : if order be taken for one, the other will follow of it self. You may not destroy ; for, you may not stir your hand, is a good consequent.

And sure, GOD's care, in this point, is worthy all observation ; it descendeth to such minutes : herein in this place we have two restraints together, 1 Destroy not ; 2 and (which is more) lay no hand. In another place, he goeth yet farther, Touch not mine Anointed ; there needs no hand to that, the finger will serve. And yet farther in another place, Ne surgas, Rise not out of your place ; or (as the Psalm expresth it) lift not up your heel : (that is) stir not hand nor foot, to any such end. Men may stir their foot, and not rise ; and rise, and not touch ; and touch, but lay no hands ; and lay the hands on, and not destroy. But, GOD's meaning is from the first to the last, to restrain all : To have all so far from destroying, as not to lay your hand ; nay, not touch with your finger ; nay, not so much as rise, or stir the foot : but keep every joynt quiet, from any the least quetching in this matter of Ne perdas. To go about to do it, is as much as to do it.

We hear this charge : but all this while we see not the Retentive, that holds him so, that all Abisbai's motives could not move him. He tels us now, what it was : CHRISTUS DOMINI. In which word, is the solution of Abisbai's argument, thus. That his military Maxim (destroying an enemy) which he and many one else in the world, take to be universal, is not so. It admits exceptions divers ; but among the rest, and above the rest, this ; if the party be CHRISTUS DOMINI, it holds not. There is more retentive force in CHRISTUS DOMINI, to keep him alive ; than there is motive in Inimicus tuus, to destroy him. This is his answer. And it is under one, both a solution of Abisbai's argument ; and a new one propounded by David, to conclude his part, thus. The Lords Anointed is not to be touched : (GOD's own exprest words, Touch not mine Anointed :) But Saul, what terms soever he stand in of amity or enmity, GOD's Anointed he is : Therefore, no touching him. And I observe this, that he maketh choice of CHRISTUS DOMINI, for his medius terminus, rather than Dominus Rex, or any other ; rather of GOD's Anointed, than of his Liege-Lord the King. (Yet there is force in them too ; but nothing such, as in this.) To the Sanctuary he goeth, as to the surest place, and from thence fetcheth this term of the Lords Anointed, and so makes the matter surer, as he thinketh. For, when all is done, from that place it cometh, that maketh both their Callings, and Persons sacred, and holy : therefore, not without sacriledge to be violated ; nay, not to be touched. For, such is the nature of holy things, not to be touched ; I say, not by any enemy ; no, not in war. For, so we see, David is displeased with the Philistims, for so dealing with Saul, as if he had not been Anointed with oyl ; as who say, it was their duties to have spared him, even in that respect.

And sure a high term it is, and not slightly to be passed over. In another place he calleth them GOD's ; here, CHRISTUS DOMINI : So, they participate with the name of GOD, and with the name of CHRIST, Anointed ; and if they be Anointed, it is with the HOLY GHOST and power from above. Which all shew a near alliance between GOD and them, between Christ and them, the Holy Ghost, and them, so as, they are not to be harmed the least way, if GOD, or Christ, or the Holy Ghost can keep them from it.

Acts 10. 38.

And this Retentive is strong enough, where there is any sense of Religion. But, it is not to be doubted, Abishai, and some besides him, have no great feeling that way, and so not capable of this. What care they for Samuel or his horn of oil? It must not come out of the Sanctuary, it must come from the Bar and the Bench, that must prevail with them. Tell them of Non eris insons, Guilty or not Guilty, and then you say something. We said before, there is no more effectual way to deny, than to forbid; and it is true, Nec efficacior vetandi ratio, quam pœna proposita, No way of more force to forbid, than set a penalty on it: specially, the great penalty of all, death. And yet death, a Souldier careth not so much for neither, except it be mors sancta, a malefactor's death, and the chief malefactor, the traitor's death, to be drawn and dragged from his place, a Jonah hanged, as b Bigthan; His bowels pulled out, (to suit him to c Judas, whose gush'd out of themselves;) To have his heart opened, yet being alive, as d Absalom; His head chopped off, as e Sheba; and it and his quarters hanged up, as f Baana, and Rechabs were: To have g their lands and livelyhoods seized on, and given to strangers; h Their issue miserable for their fakes: To be damna memoria, their name, and memory as a curse: (which three are set down in the hundredth and ninth Psal, the Psal against treachery.) Tell Abishai of this, and this may perhaps stay him.

And to say truth, this was no more than needful; without it, all that was said, might have been thought to have had but rationem consilii & non præcepti, to have been spoken by way of good honest advice, but to have been no penal or capital Law. Gently said of David, Ne perdas; And well done of Abishai, to forbear; but, no necessity in it. Therefore he tells them, These words [Ne perdas] are a binding precept: and that so, as if they be transgressed, they will bear an action; yea, an enditement; that who so breaketh them, Non eris insons. And Non eris insons are judicial words, and this they import; That, not only they may be arraigned, but, that no Quest can acquit them, or find them not guilty: that by no Book, they can; that by this book, they cannot be saved. But if they stretch forth their hands against the Lords Anointed, their necks must stretch for it; and being found guilty, they must be dealt with as those that are so found; and upon them must come all that is written in this book, which yet while we recounted.

And yet, Non eris insons goeth further. For, suppose some of them should happen not to be brought to the bar, it shall not serve; for all that, Non eris insons, still God will not hold them guiltless. He will not so leave them, but (rather than there should not be holden) hold an Affize Himself, and bring them to the end of guilty persons, all the sort of them, Heaven shall do it by lightning (as Psal 144.) or the earth do it by swallowing up (as b Core;) or their own friend shall do it (as c Jeab;) or their own beast (as d Absalom;) or their own selves hang themselves (as e Achitophel;) or burn themselves (as f Zimri.) If they will not say Ne perdas, to Christus Domini, Christus Domini shall say perdas to them, and send them all to their own place, the pit of perdition, so many as will not say Ne perdas, to the Lords Anointed. It was not for nought, that David said to him (2 Sam. 1.) How wast thou not afraid to do it? There is (sure) matter of fear in it, every way, to stay them: fear of God, in Christus Domini, to move David: fear of the Gallows, in Non eris insons, to move Abishai.

But upon all this, would it not do well, if we had Abishai's own confession, given in evidence against himself? That (I suppose) would take up the matter quite. We have it, 2 Sam. 16. There, in a case only of looseness in the tongue, where Shimei let go certain railing speeches against David, could Abishai say, What shall this foul-mouthed curie thus be suffered to speak against the Lords Anointed? and no remedy, he would needs have gone and fetched his tongue and head and all. Yea, after this return in peace, when King David had, upon Shimei's submission, given him his pardon, Abishai pleaded hard, to have it called back, and would needs have him die for it; and well worthy he was. And all was but for mist linguam: and Abishai himself is here laying hands, violent hands, on the Lords Anointed; a worse matter by far. So that upon the matter, Abishai is judged out of his own mouth, and David justified by him, in his Non eris insons. There are your two Retentives: the first for good subjects; the latter for whomsoever.

Now, lest any might conceive, this is but a case of instance; holds in this particular, but extends not to all; some body, in some case, may do it for all this, therefore is it, he carrieth it along through all, with his Quis? to tell us, his meaning is, That not only Abishai, but that Ne quis perdat, Ne quis manum mittat, that, none at all desire, none lay hands at all: that his Ne is general without exception of any.

And in this, even his manner of denying, his figura dictionis, the tenor of his speech is such, as I dare make a note of it. There be divers wayes of denying, one more full and forcible than another: but of all the way by interrogative is holden the fullest, and most of force. To have said, None did ever attempt it, which was not guilty; this had been a denial, but a calm one. But to say: Whoever went about it, but he was found guilty? there is more life and vigour in it, by a great deal. Indeed, of all Negatives, the strongest, the most peremptory, is by Quis? For it is not a bare Negative, but a Negative with a challenge: sending a challenge to any, if he can for his life, to shew one, that was holden innocent in that case. They call it the triumphant Negative, as bearing it self confident, that none can rise up against it: Who? (that is) shew, if ever any such had peace, if ever any were reputed innocent. As much to say as, never was there any, never. If there were, name him, bring him forth; but that you cannot: therefore Quis fuit insons? maketh the case clear, and past all question. So you see, David told us of Christus Domini, as it were in his Epithet, as a Prophet: Then went he in to his long robe, and told us Non eris insons, as a Judge: And now he is in his armour, as a Challenger, with Quis unquam? to challenge any, that holden the contrary.

Quis cri. in-sons?

And his challenge will be taken; and there be, that hold the contrary, in our age, and that dare step forth, and make a question of it for all this: or rather, make no question at all of it, but can tell David, both who may lay his hand on, to destroy God's Anointed; and who shall acquit, absolve; and make them innocent, that so do.

Who shall? Quis? marry quisquis, any whosoever, being warranted. And who shall warrant him? That shall the High Priest, by his last censure.

These fellows would not stick to tell Abisbai, a clean contrary tale to that of David's destroy not, faith he. Go to, say David what he will, or what he can, we say, destroy him: What, if he be? Yea, though he be the Lords Anointed. You shall be guilty then certainly, faith David. What say they? Say they thus: You shall not be guilty, you may do it, we will absolve you? (that were too much:) No, but you shall merit by it; you ought to do it: we will Saint you for so doing. This is not matter of talk; we know it hath been done.

Quis? who? A Jacobine lay his hand: Yea, hand and knife, and thrust it into the body of God's Anointed: Yea, anointed with the oyle that came down from heaven (as they tell us) sent purposely to anoint the French Kings, and make them God's Anointed et Reges. What, and not guilty? Not guilty: yea, and hardly escaped from being a Saint, if the Cardinals faith had failed as well as the Popes did, and if they had not kept Saint Peter's Successor from erring. Be not we fallen into strange times, wherein David must be driven to recant, and Abisbai prove the Prophet; and in which (as if there were no such verse as this in the Bible) the illusion of error is grown so strong with some, as they will rather themselves be destroyed, than say, the Lords Anointed is not to be destroyed.

Sauls case a ruling case for Ne perdas.

I will do them no wrong: They will say, this Text is enough to condemn this dayes attempt, it cometh full home to that case. It was upon Inimicum tuum: in which case of private revenge, themselves hold it clear, quod non, as well as we. But when they dispense with Ne perdas, it is upon other grounds: upon misgovernment, or (to speak as they do) tyrannie; upon usurping power in matters Ecclesiastical: upon bloody persecution, and that of God's Priests; and these are not in the Text. Yes they are in him in the Text, concerning whom this Ne perdas was given, every one: and yet Ne perdas stands for all that. And this I say, howsoever Abisbai did look upon Saul, but with a foulders eye, and saw nothing in him but an enemy, to move him, to destroy him; if some of these quick and sharp-fighted Abisbais had had the looking into him, they would have spied in him other manner of matter, to have resolved him meet to be made away: they would have found him, not David's enemy only, but an enemy to God, and all goodnesse; and return him culpable of all those faults, which they use to insist on, when they write their books to that end.

And I verily think, God in this first example, of his first King over his own people, hath purposely suffered them all to fall out, and to be found in him, even all that should fall out in any King after him, to enforce their position: that so we might finde them answered to our hands.

Notwithstanding his Misgovernment and tyrannye. Chap. 11. 5.

To touch them in order. They would easily have quarrelled at Saul's misgovernment. Not at the first; he then, was a middle, and a gracious Prince. Never came there from any Princes mouth, a more princely speech, than the first speech, he is recorded to have spoken, Quid populo quid fieri? What ayles the people to complaine? A speech worthy everlasting memory, so they complaine not without cause. But within awhile, he grew so sterne and fierce, as no man might speak to him. Upon every light occasion, nay upon no occasion at all, his Javelin, went straight to naile men to the wall: Not David only, but Jonathan his Sonne and Heire apparent, and no cause why. In the XIII. Chapter it is said, Saul had then been King a year, and reigned two years in Israel: yet it is well known, his reign was forty years: Their own Writers resolve it, thus: how long soever he reigned, he was a King but two years. All the time after, he was somewhat else, or somewhat more than a King. And they let not to tell what, applying to Saul that of the Psalme, Tyrants that have no God before their eyes, seek after my soul. And that: Under thy winges shall be my refuge, till this tyranny be overpast. Yet for all this tyranny, Ne perdas, faith David.

2. Usurping the Priests office. Chap. 15. 17.

Yet for all this he fell not into the sin of all sins, which they stand so much on, Usurping power in things spiritual. Yes, and that would they have found too. Why? did he call himself Head of the Church? indeed no: Samuel did that for him; He it was, that said: when thou wert little in thine own eyes, the Lord made thee Head of the Tribes of Israel (of which, the Tribe of Levi was one) for that, Samuel must answer. But Saul went farther a great deal; yea, farther than Oza: For he took upon him to sacrifice in person himself, to offer burnt-offerings, upon the very Altar, the highest part of all the Priests Office: that is, usurped farther than ever did any. And all this David knew, yet it kept him from saying, Ne perdas.

3. Shedding the Priests blood. Chap. 22. 18.

They never had done with persecuting and shedding Priests blood: was Saul's finger in that too; In that, he passed. He put the High Priest himself and LXXXIV. more, all in one day, to the sword: and all but upon the single accusation, but of Dore, all protesting their innocence, in the fact; and all loyalty to him: and all but for a dozen of bread given to David. This could not but grieve David exceedingly: it was for his sake, yet he saith, Ne perdas though, for all that.

4. Being possessed with an evil spirit. Chap. 16. 14.

And one case more I give in for advantage. It is well known, he was a demoniack, one actually possessed with an evil spirit; which is a case beyond all other cases: Yet destroy him not Abisbai, though. So that, if Abisbai, in stead of inimicum tuum, had said, God hath shut up this Tyrant, this Usurper, this Persecutor, this Possessed party, this what you will, David would have said no other than he did, Ne perdas, still. I would fain know, which of all their destructive cases is here want-wanting: They be all here, all, in Saul, all in him, at the time of this motion: yet, all alter not the case: David saith still, as he said. If then all be in Saul, all incident, all eminent in him, nay, if his case be beyond all, said it must be, that David here saith. Though he be any of these, though he be all these, destroy him not; or destroy him and he destroyed, destroy him, and be the child of perdition.

I would be loth to deceive you: There may seem yet to want one thing. Here was no High Priest to excommunicate him, or give warrant to do it: yes, that there was too. For Abiathar escaped that great massacre of Priests by Saul: and now, he was lawful High Priest. Now he fled to David thence, and brought the Ephod with him. So as by good hap the High Priest was with David now in the Camp, and the Ephod too. There wanted no just cause (you see) to proceed against Saul. There wanted no lawful authority, the High Priest we have. There wanted no good will in Abiathar, ye may be sure, his father and brethren having been murdered by Saul. So here was all, or might have been, for a word speaking. All would not serve, David is still where he was; saith still, Ne perdas: knew no such power in the High Priest's censure, was not willing to abuse it: cannot see Quis, any person to do it; nor any cause, for which it is to be done. Enough to make a ruled case of it for every. That Abiathar may not do it, nor Abiathar give warrant to it. His charge is honest, Ne perdas: His reason good, Christus Dominus: His sentence just, Non eris infans: His challenge unanswerable, Quis mittet manum?

5 There was an High Priest Abiathar.

Chap. 22. last,

Chap. 23. 6.

And, this being cleared, come we now to the principal cause of our coming. Which is, in this publick manner, to render our yearly solemn thanks to Christus Dominus, for the deliverance of our Christus Domini, this day (a deliverance like this in the Text;) even for His Ne perdas, at Perth. For it, and for both points in it. 1 That His Anointed was not destroyed. 2 That they, that put forth their hand to do it, carried it not away, but found the reward due to guilty persons. The two cases, 1 this in the Text: 2 and that of this day: are both like in the maine: if in circumstances, dislike; this of ours hath the advantage. The fact more foul, the deliverance more famous.

The Text and Day compared.

To speak then of malitia dici hujus, the malicious practice of this day. Had the King been an enemy; yea, such an enemy as Saul, it had been no warrant. But, he was no enemy: No, but many wayes, a gracious Prince to them both. I know, pretence there was, of a wrong. Say it had been one; what was done, was done by others, in the Kings minority. And though done by others, yet justly done: and no wrong was it at all, but wrongfully so called.

Secondly, the King was shut up, it is true; but not as in the Text, by God; but by wicked men, who found him not casually (as Saul was) but trained him guilefully to the place, and there shut him up treacherously. It was not sudden, it was a long plot: the malice, the more; the fact, the fouler. And there he was conclusus & derelictus both; shut up by Abishai, forsaken of David.

Thirdly, and it was not night, nor the King asleep, that he might have passed away without any fright or terror. No: it was Demon meridianus, this, a noone-day Devil: He was broad awake, and the fear of death (worse than death it self) I know not how oft and many times, before his eyes.

Fourthly: And as beyond it in these; so, in the Principal beyond it too. Both of them lift up: Abishai, his speare; this, his dagger, to have given the fatal blow Abishai, but once: This, twice. And certainly, nearer it came the King, than David would suffer it to come to Saul: 86, the danger nearer, and the delivery greater. And yet, there was a Ne perdas in this too; and that a strange one: Not by David, no: Judge, if it may not seeme a miracle, that God then shewed. When there was none to say destroy not, else; God opened, his mouth that was there set, himself to be the destroyer, to say once and again, O destroy him not, destroy not the King. The voice was David's; the hands, Abishai's. It calls to my minde, what long since I read in Herodotus: that at the taking of Sardi, when one ran at Crasus the King, to have slain him, that a little boy borne dumb, that had never spoken word in all his life, with the fright and horror of this sight, his tongue loosed, and he broke forth and cried, ο ανθρωπε, &c. O man destroy not the King, and so saved his life. So writeth he, as of a wonder: and see, if this were not like it. But so we see, if there were no body else to say it, they that are born dumb shall say it; yea, the destroyer himself shall say it, rather than Ne perdas shall not be said. This would not serve (though it did to Abishai; but they were worse than Abishai, that were here. That God therefore might have the honour of the day, he passed over to the latter part of the verse; and when there was none else to do it, he took the matter into his own hands; himself held the Assise, found him guilty, gave order for his execution, sent up one to do it; and one, that formerly had been his special friend, and (if I be not deceived) sworn brother, as Joab, to bring Absalom to his end; that destroyed him, for not hearing destroy not.

And yet the goodnesse of God itayed not here, neither; but, where in the Text, in Saul's case, there was but one blow, one danger, one delivery: In this, there were no lesse than three, one after another. First came Abishai; he and his armed man: God delivered him. Then came the other, the Master of the mischief, then bewrayed, (as one bewrayed) desperately set: God again delivered him. Then last of all (and that was worst of all) came the popular tumult, whose rage knows no reason, who, as they Num. 16. called Core and Dathan, the people of the Lord: so these (little better;) and even then also did God by his mighty providence turn away the destruction. This in the Text was soone done; a few words, and away: This of the day, it was long first, and much ado, yer it was done: the longer, and the more, the more is God to be magnified for it.

And when all was done there, he that was saved was but Saul; but here (envie flatters not, but) if envie it self should speak, it would say Major Sauls hic, a greater than Saul any: (For, the territory of of the least of your Kingdoms was greater than that of his :) And Melior Saule hic : a better than Saul was here saved ; better , without all comparifon . So , the beginning was (as they made account) Conclufit Deus inimicum nostrum : The end was , as it proved , Conclufit Deus inimicos Domini Regis . G O D made a conclusion of their wicked premisses and their wretched persons all at once . So , the conclusion was Ne perdas to the King , and Non infans to the children of perdition .

Now , to that G O D , that when You were shut up , forooke You not , but delivered You a malitia dici huius , & a Damone meridiano ; that in the depth of all your danger , when there was no tongue on earth could say Ne perdas , said it from heaven , and said it thrice over : for that his three-fold delivery , render we three-fold thanks and praise , thrice blessed be His holy Name for it . And He grant , that this lesson of David may take deep root in all our hearts , that there may never be a Quis in Israel to lift up his hand , to the like action ; all may be quit , none found guilty ever of so foul a crime . None , on Abisbai 's side , to make any such motion ; all of David 's minde , to mislike it , to say Ne perdas : Ne perdas , though it be Saul . But , for David , Ne perdas is not enough . To Him , and such as He is , let us with one voice cry Hosanna ; not only , not destroy , but Hosanna . LORD save , LORD prosper , LORD adde dayes to his dayes , that his years may be as many ages . And as this day thou didst , so full and full prepare thy loving mercy and truth , that they may preserve Him , even for ever and ever .

BEFORE THE
Kings Majesty,

At HOLDENBIE,

On the V. of August, A.D.M.DC. X.

I CHRON. Chap. XVI. Ver. XXII.

Nolite tangere Christos meos.

Touch not mine Anointed.

Ere is a speech: but we know not whose, nor to whom, nor yet (well) concerning whom; only concerning certain Persons, whom the Speaker (whoever He is) calleth His Anointed. It behoveth us, to know these three, who they be.

The person, whose the speech is, Persona loquens, He that saith Meos, Him we finde at the fourteenth Verse. Ipse est Dominus Deus noster, He is the Lord our GOD: GOD it is, that speaketh here; He, that challengeth them for His, by calling them, Mine.

The persons to whom: in the verse before, Non reliquit hominem, He loveth not a man. So, it is, to all in general: but specially to some, more quick of touch than the rest, whose fingers are never well, till some way or other, they be touching, whom GOD would not have touched.

The persons, concerning whom (whom, He stileth, His Anointed) will fall out to prove, the Princes of the earth. We must not say it, but prove it (say it now, prove it anon.)

Now, as if some body were about to offer them some wrong, here cometh a voice from heaven, staying their hands, and saying, See you touch them not. Quos Deus unxit, homo ne tangat. Whom GOD hath anointed, let no man presume to touch.

Of which, it may well be said, as the Psalmist saith to us, every day, Hodie si vocem: To day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts, and ye may: For, as this day (now ten years) from the same Person, and the same place, a like voice there came, concerning His anointed, in whose presence we stand. That GOD would not have His Anointed touched, this Text is a witnesse, and this Day is a witnesse: the Text, dixit; the Day, factum est.

Touching the same point, when time was, in this place you heard, Ne perdas: you shall hear it again now, but, from an higher person, under a straighter charge, and with a larger compasse.

The person higher: for, that was David: Sed ecce major Davide hic, but behold, a greater than David Referred unto

David is here This, is no voice on earth (neither of Prophet nor Apostle) we now hear: Audivi vocem de caelo, We hear a voice from heaven: And thence, neither of Saint nor Angel, but of GOD Himself. To shew his care of them (His Anointed) He would have none give the charge about them, but Himself; Himself in person; Non aliena vocis organo, sed oraculo sua; from none other, but from His own mouth.

2 The charge stricter: for, there it was, destroy not, the worst that could be: Here it is, Touch not, the least that may be; and so, even that way, amended much.

3 The compass larger: That, was to Abisbai, but one man; and it was, concerning Saul, one King only; and therefore it was in the singular, Ne perdas: This is, Nolite, and Christos: the number altered, of a larger extent far, even to All men, concerning all His Anointed. Nolite in the plural, that is, None of you: Christos in the plural, that is; None of them. Them, not touched, not Any of them; You, not touch, not Any of you. Non reliquit hominem: He leaveth not a man, but forbiddeth All. Now out of this plural, you may deduce any singular; out of Christos, any King: Out of Nolite, any party: Out of Tangere, any hurt: and so, not any man, to any hurt, to any His Anointed.

This Text; the first and great Commandment concerning this point.

A Commandment it is, and I may safely say, Primum & magnum mandatum, The first and great Commandment, touching the safeguard of Princes.

The first: For (as the verses before shew) it was the first given, in this kind, and that before all other, in the Patriarchs time, long before Moses, under the Law of Nature.

The greatest, not only because it is of the greatest in heaven, and concerning the greatest in earth: but for that it is the Original main precept, touching Princes and their safety, or (as the phrase is) the fundamental Law, upon the which all the rest are grounded, unto the which all the rest reduced, and from the which all the rest derived. Dauids destroy not, is but an abstract of this touch not. Ask him what Text He had for his Ne perdas: hither he must come, this must be it, and none other. This nolite tangere is the main wing of protection: Ne perdas, or any other particular, is but a feather of it.

The Division

To see the parts of it. A Precept it is, and negative; and the negative precept is of the nature of a fence, and the fence leadeth us to the thing fenced. First of all then, we take it in sunder, in the midst: meos, whose the fence is; and then nolite tangere, as it were a circle or fence round about them.

I. Christos meos hath in it two things: Not only the parties, whom they should not; but the reason why they should not touch them. Not touch? Whom not touch? His Anointed. And why not touch? Even because, His anointed.

In Christos meos taken together, are the parties non tangenda: Again, in Christos meos taken in sunder, and weighed apart, are two reasons couched, de non tangendo.

Why not touched? first, they be His: and secondly, what of His? His anointed. These two, be two several: His anointed, is more than His: for, all that be His, be not anointed.

1. His alone, were enough; that they be His, they pertain to Him, and so, He to see them safe.

2. But then besides, they be the very choise and chief of His, His anointed, and so, a more special care of them, than the rest.

3. And then (from the nature of the word) not only His anointed, Uncti Ejus: but Christi Ejus, His Christs, which is the Highest degree of His anointed: for higher than that, ye cannot go.

And last, what that is, that maketh them thus, His anointed: to know whether they may be stripped of it, or no.

II. Then come we to the Circle or Fence, and that we may divide too: for, Nolite tangere, is a double fence; 1 from the act, 2 and from the will. Touch not (so we read) where the touch, the act, is forbidden. Nolite tangere (so read the Fathers) where the will to touch is forbidden likewise. Nolite, that is, Have ye not the will, not so much as an inclination to do it. So, both the act and will of touching is restrained: the act, in tangere, the will, in Nolite.

In the former, we are to take the extent, of Tangere, and Christos: 1. To what matters Tangere will reach: 2. In how many points, to Christos. And in the latter, to what persons, in Nolite.

And so, see we the summe of the Text, which is sufficient enough to keep Kings from touching, if it self might be kept untouched: but as the times are, the Text it self is touched, there needs a second nolite tangere for it. To that end then, to see the Text safe and well kept, the three persons in it, all to joyn together: Kings, touching whom; and Subjects, to whom; and GOD Himself, by whom it is given in charge. And if the two former do their parts, GOD will not fail in His.

Let me adde one thing more. That this Text, besides that it is a Commandment, it is also a Thanksgiving; but both have but one errand, the Kings safety.

A Commandment it is from GOD: the very stile, the mood (nolite) giveth it for no lesse.

And a Thanksgiving it is to GOD; for it is a verse of a Psalm, of a Halleluja-Psalm, of the first Halleluja-Psalm: (there be twenty of them in all, this is the first of them all.)

A Commandement it is, for it is proclaimed with sound of Trumper, and that by Benaiah and his company: And a Thanksgiving it is, for it is sung with solemne musick by Asaph, and the Quere, at the sixth and seventh verses before. It is both, and both wayes we to have use of it.

First, as of a Commandement from God, to teach us this duty towards God's Anointed. I trust, we will performe better duties to them than this: but, whatsoever we do besides, what good we do them, ne nocent, not to touch them, to do them no hurt.

And, never so much need of this doctrine as now, when by a late heaue accident, we see, wretches there are, dare attempt it: And other (and they the more wretches of the twaine) that did dare to avow it: Did dare (I say;) for, now they would seem to disavow it: but so poorely, and faintly, as all they say, may hold, and yet another like act be done to morrow.

And then secondly, as a Thanksgiving to God, who hath set the print of this commandement, upon this day; in cutting short this day two wicked Imps, that went about to breake it, by conquering, and more than touching, the LORDS Anointed.

And never were we so much bound to do it, as this yeare. For that, this yeare, upon this fresh occasion, truly we may say, He hath dealt thus with us, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi, He hath not so dealt with all Nations, nor hath every King found Him so gracious. Others, have not in theirs; I speak it with compassion: we have in ours; I speak it to our comfort, and to the praise of God. Both these wayes.

Psal. 147. 20.

Christos Meos.

AN honourable Title to begin with: and begin with it we must: the very Grammar-Rules lead us to it. Anointed, is but an Adjective, we are to seeke the Substantive for it. But besides, we are to finde who they be, whom we are not to touch, lest we touch unawares. And as well, that we may know the right, and do them their right, as that we may discern them from the wrong: for, wrong there be, that call themselves Christos Domini, whom the HOLY GHOST never christned by that name.

Christos meos, who they be.

As, of CHRIST Himselfe, many come and say, Ecce, hic est CHRISTUS, ecce illic, Here is CHRIST, and there is CHRIST, and deceive many: So, of these Christs here likewise, See, here is Christus Domini, and there he is, and no such matter. Our first point then is to know, who they be.

Marke 13. 21.

These in the Text here, were the Patriarchs, it cannot be denied. They be set downe by their names, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, touching whom, prima intentione, this charge is given, that they be not touched.

Patriarchs, Christi Domini.

And let not this seeme strange: For in the first world, the Patriarchs were principal persons, and (as I may safely say) Princes in their generations, and for such, holden and reputed by those, with whom they lived. I may safely say it: for of Abraham it is in expresse termes said by the Hethites, Audi Domine, Princeps Dei es inter nos, Thou art a Prince of God (that is, a mighty Prince) here among us: As indeed, a Prince he shewed himselfe, when he gave battell and overthrow to foure Kings at once. Of Isaac no lesse may be said, who grew so mighty, as the King of Palestine was glad to intreat him to remove farther off, and not dwell so neare him: and then, to go after him in person, and sue to him, there might be a league of amity between them. And the like of Jacob, who by his sword and bow, conquered from the Amorites (the mightiest of all the nations in Canaan) that countrey, which by will he gave to Joseph for his possession; It was near to Sichar, well knowne; you have mention of it, Iohn 4. 5.

Gen. 23. 6.

Gen. 26. 16.

Verse 28.

Gen. 48. 22.

Great men they were certainly, greater than most conceive: but be their greatnesse what it will, this is sure, they were all the Rulers the people of God then had, and besides them, Rulers had they none. And that is it we seeke; Pater was in them, and αρχη too, father-hood and government: and these two made them Patriarchs, & Υψιστος ante unctiōem (saith S. Augustine) Anointed before there was any materiall Anointing at all.

In Psal. 140.

In them then this terme began, and in them it held so long, as they had the government in them. But Patriarchs were not alwaies to governe Gods people; but Kings, in ages following, were to succeed in their places. And so did succeed them; succeed them in the word Pater, and in the word αρχη both, both in the right of their father-hood, and the rule of their government, as Fathers of their Countries, and Governours of their Common-wealths. Where the Patriarchall rule expired, the Regall was to take place, being both one in effect. For, Abraham the Patriarch is termed a Prince, (Gen. 23. 6.) and to make even, David the Prince is termed a Patriarch; Let me speak boldly unto you of the Patriarch David, saith Si Peter (Act. 2. 29.) So that two things we gaue here: 1. That jus Regium cometh out of jus Patrium, the King's right from the Father's, and both hold by one Commandement. Then 2. That this text bindeth, as a Law of nature, being given for such, to the old world, long before the Law came in any Tables.

Princes Christi Domini.

Now, that as in other things, so in this term of Christi Domini Kings do succeed the Patriarchs we have (first) our warrant from the Holy Ghost, applying this term here, after, so a Saul, to b David, to c Salomon, to d Ezekias, to e Josias, f Cyrus: all Secondly, from the Councells, f Elay 45. 2.

Esay 45. 1.

The third generall Councell at Epheſus; the great Council of Toledo, the fourth; the great Western Council at Franckford. Thirdly, from the consent of Fathers. To dispatch them at once, so faith the Council of Franckford, B. Hieronymus & ceteri S. Scriptura tractatores, &c. S. Hierom and the rest of the Writers on Scripture (all) understand it not of others, but of Kings: Yea lastly from their own Writers, Cajetan, and Genebrard, who themselves so apply it, upon this very place.

Nay, Kings, they will grant (they can neither will nor chooſe :) But then, they would hemme in others likewise, to enter common in the title; as the Pope, as the Cardinals, and as any else, save them that be indeed. But that they must do then without book: For in this book warrant have they none. For this term [Christi Domini] here, or ginally ascribed to the Patriarchs, is ever afterward, without variation, continually appropriate to Kings: and to Kings only all the Bible through. The question is, Whether we will speake, as the Holy Ghost doth, or no? If we will, then upon a just surveigh taken of all the places, where the word Christus Domini is to be found in Scripture, three and thirty they be in number. Of which one only is in the New, and that is of our S A V I O U R Himself; the rest, all in the Old. Four times by God, mine Anointed; six times to God, thine Anointed: Ten times of God His Anointed: Twelve times in terms terminant, Gods Anointed: Of which, twice it is said of the Patriarchs; Here, and in the CV. Psalm (which two places are indeed but one.) All the rest are said either of Christ or of Kings, all: and never applyed to any other, but to them only. And here we joyn issue: if to any other the Scripture apply Christus Domini, we yeild: if to none but them, we carrie it. For, what reason have we, if the Scripture appropriate it to them, and none but them; to take it from them, and give it to others, to whom the Holy Ghost never gave it?

Yet have I no meaning to deny, but that others, not only persons, but (if they will) even things too, were anointed under the Law: Persons, as Priests and Prophets: Things as the Tabernacle, and all the vessels of it, even to the very fire-serks, aspans and snuffers. But though they were so, yet none of the things, nay, nor any of the persons, have ever the name given them, of Christus Domini. No Prophet, of all the fellowship of the Prophets; no Priest, no not the High Priest himself, ever so called: It may be anointed, but not the Lords Anointed: i may be Vncti, but not Christi: or in a corner of one chapter of the Maccabees [Christi] once, but not with his full Christendom, not Christi Domini. Still they fall short: and Christus Domini follows the King and him only.

Yea, this ye shall observe in their owne old Translator: that the same word in Hebrew and Greeke, when he speaketh of the Priest, he ever turneth it Vnctus; when of the King, Christus ever: as if of purpose he meant by this word, to make a partition between them. Any will think, there was surely meant them some special prerogative more than the rest: that from the rest it is given them, and ever to them, and to none of the rest.

We may well conclude this point then, with the Apostle: They are made so much the more excellent than the rest, by how much they have obtained a more excellent name than the rest. For unto which of all the rest at any time said be, Thou art mine Anointed? Enough to settle this term upon Kings. The Holy Ghost attributes it to them, and none but them. We to understand it of them, and none but them. It is, and so let it be, their own due stile their proper denomination. Touch not mine Anointed, Who be they? If we go by the book, Princes: Why then, Touch not Princes.

Christos meos, who they be, wee see. But in these words (we said) there are not only the parties; whom they should not; but the reason, why they should not touch them. And not one reason, but two at the least. Now then let us take the words in sunder, and weigh either by it self, seeing either word is a reason, de non tangendo. First whose they be, His meos, Then what of his: his Anointed. And his Anointed is Christi ejus: Which (it may be) will amount to two reasons more. Meos is his claim: Christos, his character, or speciall marke.

Meos, His claim: which word is not slightly to be passed by. It is to the purpose. To claim is to touch. He that saith meos, He that claimes them, toucheth them, toucheth their free-hold (as we say.) He that saith, touch them not; saith claim them not. Some question there is grown, whose they be. Two claimes there are put in and laid to them, besides; Meos, saith the Pope; and meos, say some for the People; but neither say true: God, He saith Christos Meos, and he only hath the right so to say.

Meos saith the Pope. For he, or some by his commission, 'used to anoint the Emperours, and because he was master of the ceremony, he would be master of the substance to: and his they were. The Pope, he was Gods; and they were his Anointed, and of him had their dependance, and he to depose them and to dispose of them, and to do with his own what he list. And this claime is not yet given over. For, he that shall mark the Popes faintnesse, when some Kings are sought to be touched, nay are touched indeed, out of his meos, will easily think, he is well enough content they be touched, though they be Gods Anointed; if they be not his too, Touch not his: Not his, as for others, it skilleth not, touch them, who will.

But this claime by the ceremony is clean marred, by this Text: for when these words (here) were spoken, there was no such ceremony instituted, it was Non ens, no such thing in rerum natura. That came not up, till Moses: Now these here in the Text, were in their graves long before Moses was born. No meos then, no claim by the ceremony.

And after it came up, no Priest went out of Jury to Persia to carry the ceremony to Cyrus: yet of him, saith Esay, Hac dicit Dominus, Cyro Christo meo, Thus saith the Lord, to Cyrus mine Anointed, and yet never came there any oyle upon his head. So that even after it was taken up, yet the ceremony ceremony and the claim by it, would not hold. The truth is, the ceremony doth not any thing, only declareth, what is done. The party was before, as much as he is after it: only by it is declared to be, that he was before, and that which he should have been still, though he had never been declared. The truth may and doth subsist, as with the ceremony, so without it. It may be retained, as with some it is, and with us it is: and it may be spared, as it is with others: Spared, or retained, all is one; no claim groweth that way.

But last of all, where it was used, as by Samuel to Saul, by Sadoc to Solomon: yet they claimed nothing in the parties they anointed, but called them still God's, and never their own anointed. They knew no claim lay by it; Nay, if it had been a Sacrament, as it was but a ceremony: he that ministrerh the Sacrament, hath no interest in the party by it, but God alone; and then much less he, that performeth but a ceremony, is to plead any Meos. So that every way, this claim vanisheth, of Christi Pontificis.

Now then a second claim, another Meos, hath of late begun to be buzzed of as if they were Christi populi, and held of them. And whatsoever the matter is, the Cardinal himself waxeth very earnest for it; (I think, because he seeth the Popes arm groweth short; and loth he is, but that there should be still some hands to touch them;) he will not so much, as give God leave to appoint Saul or David of himself, but he taketh upon him, to suspend them both, until the people with their suffrage come in, and ratifie God's doing.

Meos: the peoples claim.
Bellarmine.

But this claim likewise falleth to the ground, even by this verse: then must we go mend our Text here. For if so, God was properly to have said, Nolite tangere Christos vestros, Touch not your Anointed; for to the people, He speaketh. Of all others, Meos cannot be theirs, unless we will gloss it thus, Meos (id est) non meos; Mine (that is) none of mine, but your own. And then sure, He should have done them some wrong, to have forbid them to touch that, which was their own. The Pope saith, He can make Christum Dominum, Christ the Lord Himself: if he could so do indeed, it were not altogether unlike, he might make Christum Domini. But God help, if the people fall to make Gods, or make Christs, if they shall take Gods verse from Him, and say, Nos diximus, Dii estis, We have said, ye are Gods: yea, and Christs too, and change it, Thou shouldest have no power, unless it were, data de super, Given from above, saith he; They unless it were data de subter, unless it were given you hence from beneath: then, must we go change all our Texts that found that way. Enough to let you see, they both claim that is none of theirs, but Gods.

Psal. 82. 6.
Joh. 19. 11.

To give in evidence now, for Gods right; That his meos is the only true claim, that His only they be. Three times over it is told us by Daniel in one Chapter, that the Kingdoms be Gods, and that He giveth them, to whom he will, as having the sole property of them. And it is said there, that this is Sententia Vigilum, & Sermo Sanctorum. And, if it be Sententia Vigilum, they are scarce well awake, that think otherwise; And if it be Sermo Sanctorum, they talk prophanely, that speak otherwise. And this verily was the divinity of the Primitive Church concerning Kings, which of all, had least cause to favour them. Cujus jussu nascuntur homines, ejus jussu constituuntur Principes; By whose appointment they be born men (and that is, neither by peoples nor by Popes) by His appointment, and no other are they made Princes, saith old Irenaeus. Inde illis potestas, unde spiritus; Thence have they their power, whence they have their breath, saith Tertullian: And that is from neither (I am sure) but from God alone.

Psal. 89. 21.

His they be: for His their Crown, Diadema Regis in manu Dei, Esay LXII. And as if he saw a hand come from heaven with a Crown in it, so speaketh he in the XXI. Psalm. Tu posuisti, Thou hast set a crown of pure gold upon his head. His, their Scepter, or rod: Virga Dei in manibus Ejus, Gods rod in his hand, Exod. XVII. of Moses. His their throne: Sedebat Solomon in throno Dei, Solomon sat upon Gods throne, 1 Chron. 29. Nay, long before, in the law of Nature, saith Job, Reges in folio collocat in perpetuum: He takes them by the hand, and placeth them in the throne, and that in perpetuum, there to sit, in themselves, and their succession for ever. His, their Anointing; Oleo sancto Meo, with mine holy oyl: The Anointing His, therefore the Anointed. And if all these, their Crown, their Scepter, their Throne, their Anointing His; then His they be, Christi Domini. And of Christi Domini, we shall shew twelve fair evidences in expresse terms, Gods Anointed. And ten more we shall bring forth, with an Ejus, a plain reference to Him, His Anointed. Christi Pontificis, Samuels, or Sadocs Anointed: Christi populi, Judas or Israels Anointed, non legitur, we shall not find. His they be then.

Now infer. His: therefore hind off, what have you to do with that, is none of yours? what to claim or to touch, that is His? Nolite tangere meos. This only, and no more but this, in very equity were enough, Touch not mine. This, for meos: Now to Unctos.

His then: but not as all are by a general tenure: but His, as His Anointed, by a more special and peculiar kind of interest. His anointed, is more then His, for all His are not anointed: for if all were anointed, there should be none left to touch them: we might strike out this verse, the charge were in vain, there were none to receive it. If all be Uncti, where should be Tangentes? We must then needs leave a difference between Christiani and Christi. For holding all that are Christians, all Gods people anointed and holy alike; it will follow, why should Moses then, or any take upon him to be their Superior? And so we fall into the old contradiction of Core: which is all one with the new parity and confusion of the Anabaptists, or those that prick fast towards them.

Anointed, Vasii.

Num 16. 3.
Jude 11.

But the very Ceremony it self serveth to shew, somewhat is added to them, by which they be His, after a more peculiar manner than the rest, to whom that is not added. Oyl it self designeth Sovereignty: pour together water, wine, vinegar, what liquor you will, oyl will be uppermost: And that is added by their anointing. Besides then this general claim Mine, here is his special signature, anointed, whereby they are levered from the rest. His hand hath *touch*ed them with his anointing, that no other hand might touch them. Things anointed of our selves we forbear to touch: but specially, if the anointing have the nature of a mark, that we wrong it not: And this hath so, these are so marked, that we might forbear them. And yet more specially, if we have a Caveat, not to do it, as here we have. Nolite tangere unctos, Touch not them that I have anointed.

Anointed, yet not uncti, but Christi, which is more.

This were all, if it were but, anointed: but, there is yet a further matter than all this. For it is not unctos, but Christi meos: We read it, Mine anointed, In the Hebrew, Greek, and Latine, it is more full. In Hebrew, my Messiah's; in Greek and Latine, Christos meos, that is, my Christ, which is far more forcible. Somewhat (we may be sure) was in it, that all the old Writers uniformly forbore to turn it unctos, which is enough for Anointed, and all have agreed to turn it Christos, that is, Christ, which is a great deal more. It seems they meant not to take a grain from this charge, but to give it his full weight. And it cannot but weigh much with all that shall weigh this one point well, that Princes are taken into the society of Gods Name, in the Psalms before; and here now, into the society of Christ's name, in this; and so made Synonymi, both with God, and with Christ: Specially since God Himself it is, that soyleth them; for He flatters not (we are sure.) God himself is a King, King of all the earth, and Christ is his heir of all, as appeareth by his many Crowns on his head, Apoc. 19. 22. Those whom God and CHRIST vouchsafe to take into the charge of any their Kingdoms, them they vouchsafe their own names of God and of CHRIST. They two, the first Kings, to these other the after-Kings ruling under them, and in their names.

Psal. 81. 6.

Psal. 47. 8.

Anointed, not with every oil, but with holy, and so Sacri.
* Psal. 89. 51.

A third gradual reason then there riseth here. All anointed are not Christi: for all anointing is not Chrisme. Chrisme is not every common, but an holy anointing, a sacred signature. * Oleo Sancto meo, with mine holy oil have I anointed them. Meo, to make them His: Sancto, to make them sacred. He might have taken this oil out of the Apothecaries shop, or the Merchants ware-houses: he did not, but from the Sanctuarie it self, to shew their calling is sacred, sacred as any, even the best of them all. From whence the Priests have theirs, thence and from no other place, the King hath his; from the Sanctuarie, both. The anointing is one and the same. All, to shew, that sacred is the Office whereunto they designed, sacred the power wherewith they endued, sacred the persons whereto it applied. And for such were they held, all the Primitive Church thorow. Their Writ, Sacri apices: Their Word, Divalis iussu; their presence Sacra vestigia: (the usual stile of the Councells, when they speak of them.) And when they ceased to know themselves for His (that here saith meos) and to hold of Him, then lost they their holiness: He that took from them the one, took to Himself the other. Now then, will ye infer? Holy they be, their anointing hallowed: therefore Nolite tangere sacros, Touch not mine holies. No more touch Moses, than the holy Mount, which neither man nor beast might touch upon pain of death. No more touch David, than the holy Ark, It is not good touching of holy things. In the 13. Chapter, before, Uzza so found it.

Exod. 19. 12.
Heb. 12. 20.
Vetf. 10.

Anointed, not with every holy oil, but with a special above the rest, and so Christi.
Psal. 45. 8.

And yet still methinks we fall short: for it is not Sanctos neither, it is more than Sanctos, it is Christos: in which word, there is more than in Commune Sanctorum. Omnes Sancti non sunt Christi, at Reges Christi. We cannot say of all Saints they be Christi, of Kings we may. Verily, every degree of holiness, will not make a Synonymy with CHRIST. He was anointed, saith the Psalms, Oleo exultationis supra socios, with an holy oil, or chrism above his fellows. To hold this name then of Christos Domini, it is not every ordinary holiness will serve; but a special and extraordinarie degree of it above the rest, which they are to participate, and so do, from Christ whose Name they bear, eminent above others that carry not that name; as if they did in some kind of measure partake Chrisma Christi, even such a Chrisme as wherewith Christ is anointed. And the inference of this point, and the meaning of this stile of Dii and Christi is, as if He would have us, with a kind of analogie, as careful in a manner to forbear touching them, as we would be to touch God, or the Son of God, Christ Himself. It is not then Meos, nor unctos Meos, nor Sanctos Meos only; but it is Christos meos, mine, and that Anointed, Anointed with holy oil: So Anointed, and with Oil so holy as it raiseth them to the honour of the denomination of the Holy of Holies, Christ Himself. These four degrees, and from them, these four several reasons, are in Christos meos.

What this Anointing is.

One thing more of Christos Meos: For I should do you wrong certainly, if I should slip by it, and not tell you what this Anointing is, and leave a point loose, that needeth most of all to be touched. Upon mis-conceiving of this point, some have fallen into a fancy, His Anointed, may forfeit the tenure, and so cease to be His, and their anointing drie up, or be wiped off, and so Kings be un-Christened, cease to be Christi Domini, and then, who that will, may touch them.

They that have been scribbling about Kings matters of late, and touching them with their pens, have been foully mistaken in this point. Because, anointing, in Scripture, doth otherwhile betoken some Spiritual grace; they pitch upon that, upon that taking of the word: and then, anointing it must needs be some grace; some gratia gratum faciens, making them religious and good Catholics; or some gratia gratis data, making them able or apt for to govern. So that, if he will not hear a Mafs, no Catholic, no Anointed. If after he is anointed, he grow defective (to speak their own language,) prove a Tyrant, fall to favour Hereticks, his anointing may be wiped off, or scraped off; and then, you may write a book De iusta abdicatione, make an holy league, touch him, or blow him up as ye list. This hath cost Christendom dear: It is a dangerous sore, a Noli me tangere; take heed of it, touch it not.

It is no spiritual grace.

Before I tell you what it is, I may safely tell you, that this it is not. It is not Religion, nor virtue, nor any spiritual grace; this Royal anointing. Christus Domini is said not only of Iosias, a King truly truly Religious, by Jeremy; but of Cyrus a meere Heathen, by Esay: not only of David a good King, but of Saul a Tyrant, even then when he was at the worst. Religion then is not it, for then Cyrus had not been; nor virtue is not it (especially the vertue of clemencie) for then Saul had not been Gods Anointed. If it were Religion if that made Kings; then had there been of old no Kings; but those of Juda: and now, no Kings but those that be Christen. But by Cyrus's case we see, one may be Christus Domini, and yet no Christian.

Among Christen, if the Orthodox truth were it: Constantinus, Valens, Valentinian the younger, Anastasi-us, Iustinian, Heraclius, I know not how many had been no Emperours: yet also acknowledged by the Christians of their times.

Then, if Religion make them not, Heresie will not unmake them. What speak I of Heresie? Harder is the case of Apostacie, yea hardest of all: yet, when Julian from a Christian fell away to be a flat Pagan, his anointing held, no Christian ever sought, no Bishop ever taught to touch him. And it was not quia deerant vires, that there hand was too short, it is well knowne, far the greater part of his Army were Christians, and could have done it, as appeared instantly upon his death, by their acclamations to Jovian his Successor, Christiani sumus.

Will ye see it in the Patriarchs? These in the Psalme here, were holy and good men. But twelve Patriarchs there were presently after, of whom, Simon and Levi, were two very Tyrants; Reuben, scarce honest: nor Juda, no better than he should; Issachar, by his blessing, should seem none of the wisest (as it might be Rehoboam:) yet were they numbred with the twelve, and were Patriarchs still, no lesse than the other.

and 49. 14.

And after the Patriarchs, Saul the first King (that there might be no mistaking) with his anointing, there came no grace to him. The Spirit of God came indeed upon him, but he was anointed, and gone from Samuel first: And the same Spirit as it came, so it went, and left him afterward: and Gods Anointed he was, before it came, and Gods Anointed he remained after it was gone again, and that no lesse than before, and is so termed by David ten times at the least.

1 Sam. 10. 9.

1 Sam. 16. 14

Unxit in Regem, Royall unction gives no grace, but a just title only, in Regem, to be King: that is all, and no more. It is the administration to govern, nor the gift to govern well: the right of ruling, nor the ruling right. It includes nothing but a due title, it excludes nothing but usurpation. Who is anointed? On whom the right rests. Who is inunctus? He that hath it not. Suppose Nimrod, who cared for no anointing, thrust himself in, and by violence usurped the throne: came in rather like one steeped in vinegar, than anointed with oyle; rather as a Ranger over a Forrest, than a Father over a family. He was no anointed, nor any that so cometh in. But on the other side, David, or he that first beginneth a Royall race, is as the head, on him is that right of ruling first shed; from him it runs down to the next, and so still, even to the lowest borders of the lawfull issue. Remember Job, Reges in folio collocat in perpetuum. It is for ever. Gods claime never forfeits: His character never to be wiped out, or scraped out, nor Kings lose their right, no more than Patriarchs did their father-hood.

It is just regnandi.

Gen. 10. 9.

Job 36. 7.

Nor, but that it were to be wished, both anointings, might go together, and that there might go, as there doth, a fragrant odour from the precious ointment which is shed upon them, at their Crowning: so a like sent from their vertues, and they no lesse venerable for their qualities, than for their callings, and happie the people qui currunt in odore unguentorum Principis sui, that can trace their Prince by such a favour. This we are to wish for, and pray for daily, and use all good means it may be. But if it be not, ever hold this, Allegiance is not due to him, because he is vertuous, religious, or wise; but because he is Christus Domini. Let this be still in your mind; God saith not, Touch him not, Hee is a good Catholick; or, indued with this vertue or that: Touch him not, he deserveth well, or at the least doth no harm. No these would faile, He saw; or he said to faile though they failed not: We should never then have done, never have been quiet. But, this he saith, He is mine anointed. Mark that well, God giveth no other reason here, nor David after, in as evil a Prince as might be. That is the true reason then; and we to rest in it, and let other phanics go.

Cant. 1. 41

Now by whose appointment they be set, by His Commandment they be fenced: Fenced from touching, and that is the lightest and least, consequently, from whatsoever is greater or worse. What talk you of Non occides, or Ne perdas? I tell you, Ne tangas, Touch them not.

Tangere theact; forbidden.

Yet, are we not so sillily to understand it, as if one might not touch them at all, not for their good: For how can they be anointed, but they must be touched? No, the verse before telleth us, it is for their hurt this touch is forbidden. Non permittit nocere, He suffereth no man to do them hurt, to that end saying, Touch them not. Yea, the very word it self, without any glosse, giveth as much, which is properly plaga, and that is tactus noxius, a hurtful touch, that leaveth a mark behind it, Qui tangit, et angit, as the verse is. For, it is good ye understand, this phrase is taken from the Devil: and good reason: for whose-soever the fingers be, his the touch is, when Gods anointed are touched. He calleth it but touching Job; but touching, when he did him all the mischief he could devise. And his nature, and the nature of hurtful things is well set out by it. Few things are so good, as in transitu proximi, as they only touch, and do good: evil is far more operative, if it but touch and away, if it but blow, or breath upon any, it is found to do mischief enough.

Job 1. 11.
and. 2. 5.

To speak then of this touching, and the extent of it. Where the Scripture distinguisheth not, neither do we: but let the word have its full latitude. Nolite tangere is general, no kind is limited, then not to touch any manner of way.

The extent of Tangere: how many wayes touch.

There is none so simple, as to imagine there is no touch, but that with the fingers end, immediate. The mediate, with a knife, or with a Pistol, that is a touch: if we touch that, whereby they are touched, it is all one.

Again

Again, be the touch so as we feel it, or be it by means unsensible, as of poison, or sorcery, it is a touch still, and these no less guilty: No less? Nay a great deal more, as the more dangerous of the twain. One shall be touched and know not how, when, or by whom. Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbour secretly, saith the Law. His neighbour? much more his Prince, between which two there is as great a distance, as between Non occides, and Non tanges. In a word, as it is the tightest, so it is the largest term He could chuse. For, non est actio, nisi per contactum (saith the Philosopher) Nothing can be done, but a touch there is, some touch, superficial or virtual, immediate or mediate, communis or eminus, open or privie, and all come under tangere. For it is no Nolite sic tangere, touch not this way or that: but nolite tangere, touch not any way at all; let nothing be done at all to do them hurt.

Jer. 18. 18. And is there no touch, but that of the violent hand? The virulent tongue, doth not that touch too? and the pestilent pen as ill as both? Venite percutiamus eum lingua, say they in Jeremy, Come, let us smite him with the tongue. If smite him, then touch him (I am sure.) There is (saith Solomon) that speaketh, (and is not there also, that writeth?) words, like the piercing of a sword. Et qui, quos Deus ungit, eos pungit, cometh not he within the compass of this charge? Yes, they be Satans weapons, both tongues and pens; have their points and their edges: their points, and prick like a sword; their edges, and cut like a razor; both touch, and with the worst touch, that is, tactus dolore cordis, therefore the worst, because of the best part. These, it is GOD'S meaning to restrain: you may see it by the verse before: Non dimisit hominem calumniari, saying, nolite tangere. So that even calumnia is a touch. You may see it exemplarily in the Patriarchs: One of Gods Nolite tangere's was touching Laban to Jacob, and this it was: Vide nequid loquere durius: See you give him no ill language, no foul words, for they touch too: Touch him not so. As well to Shime's tongue, as to Jacobs hand, is this nolite tangere spoken.

Gen. 31. 24. Is this all? What say you to the touch with the foot? the foot of pride upon the necks or Crowns of Emperors (though no crick or bodily pain ensued?) Will not Nolite tangere, reach to Nolite calcare? Yes certainly; This Nolite tangere, was a stronger Text against it, than Super Aspidem & Basiliscum, was a Text for it.

Yea, I go further: by an undecent and over-familiar touch, void of the reverence that is due to them, leditur pietas, duty taketh hurt, and wrong is offered to his Anointed. Mary Magdalen was not about to have done our Saviour any harm, when after his resurrection she offered to touch him; only because she did it as to one mortal (where the case was altered now) and not with the high reverence pertaining to His glorified estate, she heard, and heard justly Noli me tangere. The touch which any way impeacheth the high honour of their Anointing, nolite tangere takes hold of that too.

The extent of Christos, how many ways they touched. Touch them not; not them. And when we say, not them, mean we their persons only, and not their States? Are not they touched, when those are wronged? They that touch their Crown and dignity, their Regalia, shall we say they touch them not? Yes, no less; nay rather, more. For then the Anointed are properly touched, when their Anointing is, and that is their State and Crown, as dear every way, and as precious to them, as their life. Indeed touch one, and touch both. If their State hold not holy, no more will their persons. It hath ever been found if their Crown once go, their life carrieth not long after. And even in this point also, it may safely be said, that the loose and licentious touching their State, with Mary Magdalens touch, without the regard due to it, as if it were a light matter, that might be lifted with every finger, falleth within the reach of this nolite. I list not dilate it, it would be looked to. These light and loose touchings, are but the beginnings of greater evils.

Again, not them. Satans motion was twofold: 1. One, that he might touch that was Jobs: 2. The other, that touch himself: and in either of these, he reckoned that he should touch him home. They are touched, when that is touched, that is theirs. It was so here directly. Pharaoh, one of them, to whom originally, nay the very first of all, to whom this Nolite was spoken, touched not Abraham himself; It was Sarah was wronged: In Sarah was Abraham touched. So God esteemed it, and gave his first Nolite tangere in that point. So, even unto her wrong, doth this touch extend, take in her too, as being the one half, yea, one and the same person with the Lords Anointed.

Not them. One more yet: For two kinds of Anointed, I find in Scripture: Sauls and David's: the one in esse, the other in fore: one in being, the other to be. If David had been touched (Saul yet living) though but Anointed to succeed, I make no doubt this Commandment had been broken: For we are bound by it, to preserve the Anointing, not only upon the head, but even in the streams running down from it: that with a King Himself, the whole race Royal is folded up in this word, every one of them in their order that not one of them is to be touched neither.

Nolite, the will forbidden. This bar then, is set to the touch every way, and to the touch of them, and every of theirs, every way. But there is a further matter yet. For (if we mark it well) it is not, Ne tangite, but Nolite tangere: Nolite (that is) have not so much as the will, once to go about it: So that, not only, tactus, the touch is forbidden, but voluntas tangendi, the very will to do it: For that will is tactus anime, the souls touch, the soul cannot touch no way, but that. And Gods meaning is absolute: neither body nor soul should touch; neither the body by deed, nor the soul by will.

And Nolite standeth first, beginneth the Text: for indeed, with that is the right beginning. The Devil toucheth the will, before the hand ever touch Gods Anointed: He doth mittere in cor, put a will in the heart, before any do mittere manum, put forth their hand to do it. Therefore even velle tangere was to be made a crime, and that a capital crime. And so it is: for, in the attainder of the two Eunuchs (Esther. 2.) there was no more in the inditement, but voluerunt, they would have done it, they would would have touched Ahasuerus: that being proved; was enough; they died; and died justly for the will, though no touch followed. Pity it should be otherwise. He toucheth not alwayes, that hath a will to touch; hath a will to touch the throat, toucheth but a tooth: what though? To break Nolite, voluit is enough; and voluit, he would have touched, at another place.

They that laid the Powder ready, and lighted the match, it was but voluerunt, (as God would) it touched not any: but righteous and just was their execution. To teach them, or others by them, Ne tangite is not it: Nolite tangere is the charge: and, if you break Nolite; only, it is enough, though Tangere and it, never hap to meet.

Of which nolite, I hold it very pertinent to touch the extent also (as I did even now of tangere, the touch it self) and of the persons, to whom it may reach; that we may see it, it is true in the verse before, non reliquit hominem, he leaves not out a man, he exempts not any from it. I will not once speak of Subiects, no question of them: over whom they are Anointed, them it toucheth neere; and bindeth them fast. But this, I say, that even fórrainers, born out of their Allegiance, are within it. The Amalakite was a stranger, none of Sauls Lieges; born out of his dominions; yet died for saying, he had touched Saul: And that sheweth, that even Aliens here sortiuntur forum ratione delicti; and that they are intended, within this Nolite.

Yea, even such Aliens as are in open hostility, even at that time, they are in the Camp, and are in Arms against a King, they are barred by this Nolite, and are to spare him. So saith David in his mourning-song for Sauls death: He blames there the Philistims, as if they had done more than they might, in so touching Saul, considering he was a King with holy oyl anointed, as if they ought even in that respect to have spared him. So that this Nolite is a Law, of Nations, making their persons so sacred, as even in battel they are to be forborn, and their lives saved.

Yea, if we look to the words next before, it is given even to Kings, this Touch not. The parties were Pharaoh King of Egypt, and th two Abimelechs Kings of Gerar, and even they in particular charged, not to touch (for Pharaoh did touch:) not to will to touch (for Abimelech went no further.) Kings not to touch them, none but God to touch them: As if it were another Law of Nations, not one King to touch another; but by vertue of this Nolite, each to spare, and to save the others life.

And the difference in Religion maketh here no let: for, these being Egyptians and Philistims, to whom it was given; there can be no greater difference, than between them and the Patriarchs in the worship of God: for all that not to touch them though. Which is ad erubescendum nostram, to our shame, that Heathen men and Idolaters, were kept from it by this charge, and now (I will not say) Christians, but holy Religious men, Friars, and Priests, yea and Martyrs forsooth, will not be held in by it, but they will be touching.

And last of all this restraint of will and deed, it is not in the singular, Noli, to this or that private man; it is in the plural, Nolite, and so reacheth to whole multitudes. Nolite, will serve even people and Countries, to restrain them also. I wonder at it; It is Gods manner to give his precepts in the singular: Witness the whole Law, and all the ten Commandments in it. How happeneth it, the number is here changed? Somewhat there is in that. He saw multitudes might assy it, as well as single men, and take liberty to themselves, thinking to be privileged by their number. To make sure, he putteth it in a number that incloseth them too. For, be they many, or be they few, Nolite, will take them in, all. So, neither Subiect, nor Alien, nor Enemy, nor King, nor People, nor one Religion, nor other, nor one, nor many; Non reliquit hominem, None left, none exempt, not any to touch them, not any to will to touch them. For, with Nolite, God toucheth the heart: and so many as God toucheth their hearts, will have idem velle, & nolle, make His will, their will, and will obey it. This is the sum of the charge; here is the double Fence I spoke of. Touch not, By which He raiseth (as it were) an high wall about them, that none may reach over to them. And then, with Nolite, diggeth deep, even in profundum cordis, the very depth of the heart; casteth a trench there: and so they be double fenced. Or you may (if you will) call them the Cherubins two wings spread over His Anointed to protect them: Touch not, one wing; Nolite, the other; reaching as the Cherubins wings did, from one wall to the other, covering them from all, and none may come any way to do them hurt. And by this we see the full of this Text. We see it, but we are to feel it also; and see whether the Text be whole, whether it be well kept, and have taken no hurt.

The charge is short, ye see; an Hemistichion, but half a verse, Touch not mine Anointed; four words only, and but six syllables. One would think it might well be carried away, and well be kept. But, as short as it is, we see it is not though; For, the very Text is touched and broken. And, I speak not of inferior touchings, that every tongue is walking, and every pen busie to touch them and their rights which they are to have, and their duties, which they are to do; And if they do not, then I know not what, nor themselves neither. This is too much, but I would it were but this.

Hands have been busie of late, and that in another more dangerous manner. Two fearful examples we have in two great Kings. One, no very long time since; the other very lately made away: not so far from us, but they may, and (I trust do) touch us. What shall I say? I would this were the worst.

Yea, I would this were the worst: For, this hath hapned in former times too. This Psalm, he that indited and set it (David) he living; Ishbosheth his neighbour King was slain upon his bed. The like hath hapned then: broken it hath been, in former ages. But then upon revenge, or ambition, or hope of reward, or some other sinister respect: never upon conscience and Religion, till now. Nolite tangere, was still good divinity, till now. The Text it self never touched, never taken by the throat before, and the

The extent of Nolite, to whom it reacheth.

How this text is observed.

The Text is self touched, and a Nolite given to it.

con-

contradictory of it given in charge, [Touched they may be, touch them notwithstanding:] never books written, to make men willing to Gods Nolite before. Baanah, he upon hope of reward, slew Ishbosheth: Bigshan upon revenge, would have done the like to his Liege-Lord. Zimry, upon ambition slew his Master. But Religion came never forth with a Knife in her hand, till now: a Kings life was never a sacrifice to expiate sin, before.

1 And will ye but consider the great odds betwixt those touchers, and these of late? They ever, yer
2 they went about it, cast how to escape; and when they had done it, fled and hid themselves, as guilty to
3 themselves of evil they had done: these stir not an inch, as if they had done that they might well stand
4 to. Those formerly grew ever contrite at their end, detesting the act, and crying God mercy; these 5 now rejoyce in it, as if by it they had done God a piece of good service. Then yet it was ever a crime,
6 and a grievous crime, and they that did it, were generally upon the first report, ever condemned by all
7 men, none to defend them: Now it is, multis laudantibus (you know the book) it findeth many to 8 justify, nay to praise it; & immortalitate dignum iudicantibus, and think them worthy immortality, 9 for their worthy act. Yea, write they not further? Praclare cum rebus humanis ageretur, si multi;
10 It were a merrie world, if there would many so exercise their fingers, to keep them in ure. And to 11 Kings themselves (Gods Anointed) dare they not say? This is salutaris cogitatio, an wholesome 12 meditation for them next the heart, to think se eâ conditione vivere, they live in that case or condition, 13 ut non solum jure, that they may not only be slain lawfully, sed cum laude & gloria periri possunt; but 14 to the praise and glory of them that shall do it. How now! What is become of our Text? Of Nolite
15 tangere, with these? Are we not fallen into strange times, that men dare thus print and publish, yea even 16 predicare peccatum suum, preach and proclaim their sins, even these sinful, and shameful positions, to 17 the eyes and ears of the whole world? Whereby, Gods Anointed are endangered, mens souls are poi-18 soned, Christian Religion is blasphemed, as a murderer of her own Kings. God in his Charge is 19 openly contradicted, and men made believe they shall go to heaven, for breaking Gods Com- 20 mandments.

The censure upon Marians
idle.

But now, we have all great cause to rejoyce: The book is condemned, if we may believe it. Whether condemned or no, that we know not: this is too sure, eleven years ago, set out it was, and that authorized, and so went eight whole years, by their own confession, and even the whole eleven, for ought that we know. How went it forth so allowed at the first? How went it so long uncontrolled; without an Index expurgatorius at least?

But now lately we have news, that some few years since, it was censured in a privie Provincial Council. But, that was as strange a Censure, as ever was heard of, a Censure sub silentio, kept close, and none knew of it but themselves: fast or loose; Censure, or no Censure, as they pleased. If any such censure were, why made they it not as publick as their approbation? The approbation the world seeth: their Censure we but hear of, and peradventure it is but a tale, neither. Why came it never to light, till the deed was done; and it was too late? Why heard we not Jacobs voice, till we had felt Esaus hands? But this is all they have to say for themselves: after so great a loss, this we must be fain to take for payment.

But, I ask, is it condemned? Indeed no, but the matter so faintly carried, as all they say standing for good, he that will give the like attempt again, may. For, what say they? An Usurper may be deposed, so they all agree. And is it not in the power of Rome, to make an Usurper when it will? If he have no right, he is an Usurper: If he be lawfully deposed, his right is gone: If he but favour Hereticks; nay, though he favour them not, the Pope may depose him; Non hoc tempore, sed cum judicabit expedire: and that done, he hath no right, then is he an Usurper, and ye may touch him, or do with him what ye will.

What say they then further? A private man may not do it, by his own authority. Not by his own, but may be by some other? Belike, some other then there is, whereby he may. Authority than there is, and it may be given, and when it is given him, he may do it. And so we are where we were before. And this is their condemning: indeed the condemnation of the world; if they love darkness so well, as to be deluded by it.

First, they will do it: will do it? Have done it, touched, touched in the highest degree, against Tangere. It may be against their wils; nay voluntary, have dore it wittingly and willingly, against Nolite. But it may be repent themselves; Nor that: For they give a charge against this charge, willing men, and making men willing, to do flat against it, to touch, even the Text, and break it, and spare not: by holding, They may be touched for all it.

The Text it self to be preserved and kept untouched.

What is then to be done of us? The more busie they, to suggest the Devils motion, Mutemur & tange; the more earnest we, to call on Gods charge here, Nolite tangere Christos Ejus. The more resolute they, to be touching; the more careful we to look to their fingers. The more they endeavour to break down this double fence; the more we to labour to strengthen it. How will that be? Our selves not to touch them? I will not speak of that for shame. I trust, God hath so touched all our hearts, as we detest the least though that way. Never was any, truly partaker of the inward Anointing of a Christian man, but he was ever fast and firm to the royal Anointing. That we will do: and that is not all; (I trust) we will do more than so, even provide a Nolite tangere, for the Text too, keep that from touching, and that will keep Gods Anointed untouched: Keep one, keep both.

By the three persons in the Text.

Three persons there be in the Text: 1. Gods Anointed themselves, touching whom it is given. 2. We all, non reliquis hominem, not leaving a man of us out, to whom it is given. 3. And he that faith Meos, God that giveth it. The two first, to do their parts towards it, we to look to ours; and God will come in at His turn, and not fail with His part, we may be sure.

Let

Let me begin with Christos Domini, whom it toucheth: that they would be touched with it, and not lay themselves open to this touch, nor carelessly go where they may be within the reach, or fall into such fingers, as tickle to be touching them: Not to put it upon, what shall be, shall be. Non est bone, & solida fidei, sic omnia ad voluntatem Dei referre, & ita adulari, ad unumquemque discendo, Nihil fieri sine iussione Eius, ut non intelligamus aliquid esse in nobis ipsis. It is Tertullian: and most true it is, that it is neither good nor sound Divinity, in these cases, to put all upon the will of God, every one to flatter himself or others, saying, Nothing can be done without Gods will, but to convey aught, and that there withal there is somewhat that belongs to our part. Therefore subordinately to serve Gods providence, with our own circumspect foresight and care, knowing, that His providence doth not alwayes work by miracle: This day it did: every day it will not do so. That He gives his Angels charge over them that tempt him not, that do not mittere se deorsum, cast themselves wilfully into danger. That Baltazars dayes were numbred, when he forgot his duty, not before. That he hath indeed promised to save his Anointed: but he promised S. Paul also his life, and all theirs with him in the ship, and that by an Angel: for all that, Paul would not let the Mariners go away with the boat, but cut the rope, and said, if these carrie not in the ship, we cannot be saved, for all the Angels promise. Let His Anointed say and do the like, keep your Mariners about you in the name of God, keep your selves with that state and guard, that is meet for the Majesty of Princes: and think God faith to you, Christi mei, nolite tangi, be you willing to keep your selves from being touched, and I for my part, will not be behind.

This way only is now left them. Another way there was, that Gods Anointed, might not be touched, to set lists about them, as about the holy Mount, that is, Laves; whereby (that desperate wretches might not touch Gods Anointed) Gods Anointed might touch them first. I find Abimelech made a Law to strengthen this Law of God, made a list about this very Nolite, a Law upon paine of Morte morietur. And this was wont to keep them from approaching. But, if that which should give strength to the Law, and make it a Law to the conscience, Divinity, if that be corrupted, if it be a matter of the will, as appeareth by Nolite, and the will be made wilful (an horrible sin, being now become an heroical and holy act: (these lists will not hold them, the Law cometh too late. For if men grow wilful, it is well known, Vita aliena Dominus est, quisquis contemptor est sua. And who would not be Contemptor sue, if he may be sure to be Comprehensor eterna? Then do but once perswade them, that for their touching they shall straight go to heaven, and no Anointed shall ever stand before them. Nolite is gone then: take order for tangere how we can.

Our part then is (and to us is spoken) and to us properly doth nolite belong. Every man in his place to do his best. They that are His Priests, by bowing their knees daily, and lifting up their hands to God: They that in the place of Counsel, by all the wayes of wisdom: They that in the seat of justice, by just and due execution: All, by all the means they can, -- hanc talem terris avertere pestem, to devise and procure (if it may be) ne velint, that evil disposed hands would not: but howsoever, ne possint, that they may not be able (if they would) to touch his Anointed. It must be in part, by carrying a continuall eye, and keeping a continuall watch over them; or a shorter way, by removing them far enough off, that are in any likelihood to do it: and those be such, as hold, Gods Anointed be tangibiles, and may be; nay in some case be targendi, and ought to be touched.

God himselfe in Cores case and Dathans: (who went about to touch Moses and Aaron, not in their persons, but estates only) sheweth us the best way: He gave order that a general nolite tangere went out against them and theirs, that no man should come neere them, but all shun them and their company, as having them in a generall detestation. Gods course would be followed; that seeing their consciences are seared, and they feare not Gods voice here from heaven, they might feel the full discovery of his vengeance upon earth, and might assure themselves, upon the least measure of but a will to touch, but a will to do that execrable Act, to incur an universall detestation, to have all rise against them, to have all the hatred of the earth poured upon them and theirs, to be the out-casts of the Common-wealth, and the Maranath's of the Church; yea, they and their names for ever to be an abhorring to all flesh; nothing in this kinde is too much: this way, if no way else to keep them from it: which is lesse than they should suffer, but all that we can do.

The best is, if we faile not in our duty, though neither we, nor the Anointed, can take perfect order against them, the Anointer can; can, and will, as this day He did. And the rather, He will do it in the time to come, if we turne to him, to thank him for that is past. To Him then let us turne, that he may take the matter into his owne hand. If his nolite tangere will not prevaile, his nolo tangi, will: and if He say, Nolo tangi, have they never so bent a will, do what they can, they shall not (for their lives) be able to do them hurt.

Two points there be in this Charge, both expressed in the verse next before, non permisit, He suffered none to attempt it, Sed corripuit, but them that did, He put them to rebuke. Put to rebuke, we turne Corripuit, it is properly to take up short, and that is, by a touch, or rather by a twitch. And so he hath ever done, and so he will ever do: Tangentes tanguntur, or rather tangentes corripuntur, if they touch, they shall be twitched, be taken short, and cut short for it (all the sort of them.) Have beene (I am sure.)

I begin with Corripuit, for that never faileth: for sure, God will not suffer His Anointed, nor Christ, His Synonyma's, those of his Name, to be touched for nought: if not His name it self to be taken, neither those that bear it to be touched in vain. And there is nothing more kindly, than for them that will be touching to be touched themselves, and to be touched home, in the same kind, themselves thought to have touched others. You may see it in the first, in Pharaoh, the very first, that touched the Patriarch Abraham.

Abraham. It is said, God *touch*ed him for it (and it is the very same word which God useth here in willing not to touch;) God *touch*ed him and *touch*ed him, tactibus maximis, with many a grievous touch: we read, plagued him with many plagues. And indeed He *touch*eth them so, that He *plaguet*h them that have beene busie in this kind. Grievous are the touches that are *touch*ed with here on earth; of pincers red-hot, and boiling Lead: but, who knoweth the touches of the place, whether (being unrepentant) they must needs go; which, besides that they are maximi (in another manner of degree than these here) are eterni withall, and not ended in an hour or two, as these are. Tactibus maximis tanguntur, they shall be *touch*ed indeed throughly, as the first was.

Ester 2. 13.

And look, as He began in the Patriarchs, so hath he ever held on in His Anointed, the Kings that ensued. The first that ever *touch*ed his Kings, Baana and Rechab, were *touch*ed for it: and cut shorter, both by the hands, wherewith they *touch*ed, and the feet, wherewith they went about it. Ask the rest, if it were good *touch*ing. Shemei *touch*ed, but with the tongue; his neck was *touch*ed with the sword. Bigthan and Tharez said nothing, did nothing, but onely with their will: their necks were *touch*ed with the halter, tactibus maximis, the greatest touch or twitch that is here. And so (to make short) were all the rest, even to those two that were this day put to a foul rebuke, and cut short in their going about it. Besides the Cherebims wings; then, to protect Kings, here you have, in corripuit, the blade of a sword shaken, to keep the way to them.

By non permisit

But what comfort is it, if corripuit come to the malefactor, if he be cut short, and if the King miscarrie withall? Baana and Rechab, they that killed Ishboseth, were cut short, shorter by the heads, but Ishboseth he died for it. I confesse, there is small comfort in corripuit, unless Non permisit nocere, go withall, in shortning them, without saving His Anointed. And that is our comfort, the comfort of this day, which we meet to give thanks for, that both these went together, Non permisit nocere, and corripuit, both.

The thanksgiving.

You know, at the beginning I told you, besides that it is a Commandement, it is also a Thanksgiving. It is so, in that it is a verse of a Psalme of Halleluja, the first Psalme of Halleluja, of all the twenty.

1

Psal. 112. 54.

Now in that He hath placed this duty, and set it in a Psalme, His will is, men should come to it with pleasure, cheerfully, and as it were singing. When we speak of it, we do it speculatively; when we sing it, that would be with affection.

1 Tim. 2. 1.

In that it is in the first Halleluja of all, it sheweth (as I think) that God's Anointed are the persons, which (saith the Apostle) Ante omnia, before all, we are to pray for: which (saith the Prophet here) before all, we are to praise God for; for them, and their keeping out of evil hands. Their safety we are to put in our first Halleluja.

3

Verse 1.

This Halleluja is a Psalme purposely for the bringing home of the Arke. And that sheweth, His Arke, and His Anointed are allied, and that no sooner is the Arke well come home, but this Commandement goeth forth straight from it, first of all, before all other: That all may know, what account they were to make of this duty; how high regard to have His Anointed in, in that the Arke's welfare and theirs, are so inseparably knit together. And indeed, experience hath taught it, The well setting of the Ark, dependeth much upon the safety of the Prince.

4

Verse 5. 42.

Now this Psalme, as it was sung with all the musick could be invented, of wind, of hand, and of voice, to shew, the preservation of Kings is a benefit extraordinary, that requireth so solempne a thanksgiving.

5

Verse 37.

So besides, it is ordered every day after, to be sung jugitur coram Arca (that is) to be the ordinary Antheme of their daily service: to shew, it is a duty perpetuall, that needs so daily a remembrance, to wit, the care of their preservation.

For last of all, that all the praise and thanks here in the Psalm, are for this Nolite, that all the Psalm was set to come to this verse, it is plain. There be ninety two verses more in the Psalm it selfe (it is the CV. Psalm) But as soone as ever they once come to this verse, all the rest, all the verses following, are cut off, they go no further in the Psalm, than till they come to it; and then break off all those behind, and straight go to another Psalm: (for, this is all of the CV. and the next verse is the first of the XCVI. Psalm.) So that, this verse plainly was the end and up-shot of all the Psalm besides.

Of this Verse then, of His Nolite tangere, and of His Noli tangi, besides of a famous non permisit nocere in this kind, this day is a memoriall to us, and to all our posterity, even to the children yet unborn: In God's Anointed, not *touch*ed I cannot say, for *touch*ed he was, and more than *touch*ed: But, in the touch, there is no great matter (we said) but for the hurt, so that in the end, not hurt, is as good as not *touch*ed. As good, nay better, for a Halleluja. For to be *touch*ed, as he was, and to take no hurt, is a greater delivery farre, than at all not to be *touch*ed. To go through the Red Sea, and not wet a thread: To have been in the furnace, and no sent of the fire; that, is the miracle. So, to have been *touch*ed, and taken by the throat (that the mark was to be seene, many dayes after;) To be thrust at, and thrown downe, as He was, and yet no harme (Hic est potentia) Here was the power, and here was the mercy of God; Here it was certainly, and that so sensibly, ye might even touch it.

I.

And here Halleluja first: and we to praise Him, that when Nolite tangere would not serve in word, made Non permisit nocere, to serve indeed: Came forth, first, with Non permisit nocere, as with His shield, and so shielded him, that he suffered him not to take any hurt at all; Non permisit the shield, made it slippery, their hands slid off, their touch did him no harme. Non permisit was as His shield, that He brought forth to save him. But besides it, He brought forth His sword too, and cut them short : Corripuit eos, was his sword, touched them with it, and twitched them for touching His Anointed, touched them with Pharaoh's tactus maximi, that the marks of it will be seen upon them and theirs, for ever.

For either of these severally, a severall Halleluja : but especially, for not severing them, but letting them meet and go together ; Eripuit, and corripuit, both joyntly arme in arme. Not either alone, this or that. Not permisit nocere, sed corripuit : suffered them todo hurt, but rebuked them : No, but Non permisit & corripuit, both, suffered them not to do any hurt ; and rebuked them, and cut them short too besides.

And this happy conjunction of these both, is it, which maketh the speciall increase of our thanks this yeare, more than the last, or anybefore, For that, since, and very lately, God, that suffered not Him, hath suffered some other King, to be touched, as farre as his life. True : He that did that execrable act, corripuit eum, God touched him, touched him as he did the Mountaines, Tange montes, & fumigabunt, touched him, till he smoked againe. What of that? In the meane time a great Prince is fallen, But permisit nocere, He suffered the King to take hurt : And as for non permisit nocere, God did not Him that favour.

Not him, but Ours he did : And did it, for the manner, not without miracle, if we compare the cases. For, He was then sitting in the midst of divers his Nobles. No likelihood, that any would come near him, to offer but to touch Him : If he did, there was odds, there would have been many a non permisit, he should never have been suffered to do it. One man, for all that, one, and no more, did it; Divers were neare him; None of them, All of them kept him not from his harme. But Ours, was all alone shut up, and so left as one forsaken, not many, nay not any, no helpe at all, reare him. And not one alone, and no more, but three there were to touch him : yet even then, even in that case, God non permisit nocere, suffered not, not any of them, nor all of them, to touch him, so as they did him any hurt.

And even in the manner of the Non permisit, God shewed himselfe more than marvellous : for, it was not, God only suffered him not to be hurt; but miraculously he made, that of them, that came to break His Nolite, even of them, one, that was fer, that was ready armed to have touched, and to have hurt him, he, even that party, Non permisit, would not, did not suffer the other to do him any hurt; sed corripuit, but rebuked him, gave the Noli tangere to the other, spake this very Text, and stayed his hand, that would have done it. This was a Non permisit indeed; worth a Halleluja, and after it, came there at the least three other Non permisit's more. But I have presumed too much already : I will not enter into them, but end.

The more they were, the more are we bound to magnifie God, and to blesse His holy name, yearly, yea weekly, yea daily to sing our Halleluja of praise, and thanks to him for this dayes Non permisit, and for this dayes corripuit, for them both. That what He speaks in this Text, He made good upon this day : Shewed, He would not have his Anointed toucht : Shewed, He was displeased with them that did touch him : kept him without hurt, and cut them short : shortned their armes, they could doe Him no harme, shortened their lives for attempting to do it : scattered them first, in the imaginations of their hearts ; and then after, made them perish in that their wicked enterprise : and hath made this Nolite, this precept, to us, Præceptum Cantabile, a Precept Psalmic-wise, that we may sing it to Him. There is another, in another place, of another dittie or tune, wherein he takes up a dolefull complaint; thus : But thou hast cast off thine Anointed, and art displeased with him. The dayes of his life hast thou shortened, and cast his Crowne downe to the ground. With them indeed it is; Præceptum flebile, but with us, Cantabile. Praise we Him for it.

And withall, pray we also, that as this day He did not, nor hitherto He hath not, so henceforth Malignus ne tangat eum, the malignant wicked one may never touch Him, never may any have the will ; or if have the will, never have the power to do Him hurt : Suffer Him not to be touched; or, if suffer him to be touched, suffer not their touch to do him any harme, no more than this day it did : Make all Nolentes, with his Nolite, if not, come with His Non permisit, that he may ever be safe, and straight after, with his corripuit, that they may ever be taken short, that offer it. This day He suffered them not : nor let Him ever suffer any. This day he cut those short, so may He ever do them all : And ever make this Statute, our Song, all the dayes of our Pilgrimage. This is now the tenth yeare, and so these the Decennalia of it : That as this day it is, so it may still be celebrated, from ten yeares to ten yeares, many ten yeares more; Which God grant, &c.

PREACHED

BEFORE THE

Kings Majesty,

At BURLEIGH near OKEHAM,

On the V. of August, A. D. M. DC. XIV.

PSALM LXXXIX.

Verse 20. I have found David My servant : with My holy oyl have I anointed him.

21. My hand shall hold him fast or stablish him :) and Mine arm shall strengthen him.

22. The enemy shall not be able to do him violence : the Son of wickedness shall not hurt him.

23. But I will smite down his foes before his face : and plague them that hate him.

I have found here a Text, wherein (we see) God found David : and wherein, David found God. God, found David His servant : and David found God, his good and gracious LORD : first to Anoint him, then to deliver him : So to deliver him, as his enemies did him no hurt : Nay so, that the hurt came to themselves. And they, (as we read) were smitten down before him.

And do not this text and this day somewhat resemble one another ? To my thinking they do. For, who is there that hearing in the Psalm this, that violence was offered to David by a son of wickedness ; but withal, he shall think of the wicked attempt of this Day ? Who, that (for all that) they did David no harm : but your Majesties like delivery, will come into his mind ? Who, that Davids enemies were smitten down : but it will lead him straight to the very same end of Yours. And who can doubt, that it was the same hand and arm, and of the same God in both ? And that He that did the one, did the other ?

King David, He is in Scriptures, not persona Regis only, the person of a King, but Persona Regum, a person representing all Kings to come after him ; such specially, as with David serve and worship God in truth. We do safely therefore, what is said to him, apply to them all ; since he is the type of them all.

But most safely, to such a King if any such be) where there is a correspondence of like events between David and him : that, what was Covenanted to the one, is performed to the other. For God Himself is our warrant, and even points us so to apply it.

As here now, I find a prophetic, or a promise. A prophetic of Ethan. (his is the Psalm) or a promise of GOD. And I find this prophetic fulfilled: and this promise made good to your Majesty. What promised to David, made good to You; and made good this Day: What is said in the Text, done on the Day. What doubt we then to apply it to the present? And, since it fell on this day, what better day than this, for me to treat, or You to hear, or for us all to thank GOD for it?

The Sum.

The Text hath the name, from the first word of it, I have found. A finding it is.

Two wayes may a thing be found: One, when a thing is found at first, and never was before: Another, when it is afterward lost, and found again: Both here; David is twice found.

Psal. 78 71.

Found first, and anointed at the first verse. Found again, and delivered at the third. GOD found him first among his ews, took him thence, anointed him, and of a Shepherd made him a King. And being a King, found him after among his enemies, in danger to lose both crown and life: and so, being as good as lost, found him again. It is hard to say, whether of these, is the greater: We will not strive, both are in the Text. And either hath his day (I fought but for one day, but I found two) and both for our turn.

According to which (somewhat strangely, but for our purpose, fitly) I may divide it into the XXIV, or XXV. of July, the day of your first finding for your Anointing or Coronation; and the V. of August, the day of your latter finding, for Your deliverance or preservation.

The Verses are four: the points in them, eight (two in each) of which eight, some be past, some to come in the text: (all past with you.) Past two, 1 Inveni, 2 Unxi, the finding, the anointing. To come, all the other six; all in the future, shall or will. Two shall's, 1 My hand shall, 2 My arm shall. Two Shall not's, 1 The enemy shall not, 2 The son of wickedness shall not. Two will's, 1 I will smite, 2 I will plague. And all six comprised in a League or Covenant, which GOD is pleased to make with David, upon his anointing: and are as so many clauses or articles of it.

Which league is made, pro & contra. Pro, with and for David, in the second: And Contra, against his enemies, in the two last. And that, both defensive, in the third: and offensive, in the fourth. So, a perfect League.

The Division.

We shall pursue it thus: 1. Of his finding, first. 2. Then of his anointing. 3. Thirdly, of GOD's Covenant-making with him. 4. And to this of the Covenant-making, we will add a fourth or the Covenant-keeping. Which, is indeed out of the text, but not out of the day though. And, we preach on the day, as well as on the text. Which keeping of the Covenant, I hold to be a part full as necessary, though it be without, as the making of it, though it be within the Text. That then, be our fourth, and this our order.

I.
1 (that is) God

THE first word, is I, that is, GOD. He, is the speaker, and bespeaker: the finder and the anointer: the fast-holder, and the strengthner: the rescuer and the revenger of David, and in him (as the type) of all Kings. Not one of these, but is within the very letter of the Text. For, this first person [I], goeth clean through to the end, and (as it were) ingrosseth them all to himself. Of the finding first.

The points in it are four. 1. The Person first, GOD it is that found. 2. Then the manner, Inveni: found by seeking. 3. Thirdly, the cause why he found David: for He found him Servum Meum. All these three are inventio. 4. And, having found him lastly, He proclaims it here, cries, supra, I have found, (that is) Inveni predicatio.

God found David.

All Kings, are found by God: But in David, there is somewhat singular. He was not a King only, but a King (as we may say) of the first head. For, before he was found, he was a private man: God found him, and anointed him (that is) of a private person, made Him a King. His seed also, were to succeed him, by virtue of the entail, Verse 4. But, he was the first King of his race: as in every race of Kings, there was such an one, that at first was found out. In him, in such an one, finding is most needful: In them that succeed, there shall need no such seeking, they are found to his hand; Only anoint them, and no more ado.

I

This then, we find first; that Kings were of God's finding at the first. God (we see) takes it to Himself, I have found. They are then, no humane invention, devised or taken up by man: but found by God. They came not out of mans brain: but ex cerebro Jovis, inventum Dei, of God's finding forth.

As of His finding, in this verse: so of His exalting, in the verie next before. I have exalted one, one chosen out of the people. Look you, there comes two at once; exalted and chosen. Neither chosen, nor exalted by the people; but by God, out of the people. Not they, out of themselves: but God, out of them. Mark that point well.

As, for his finding in this, and exalting in that: so (within a verse or two following) of his adopting too. There, God saith; He (that is) the King shall call me, Thou art my Father. Where we see, whereto he was chosen; whither exalted: even, to be the Son of God. And not every son neither: but His heir, His eldest. For, so it followeth, I will make him my first-born. So Filius Dei, he is, primogenitus.

genitus Dei: And what would we more? Then is not David; filius populi, God forbid. Never father him upon them. No adoptive, no founding of theirs. His finding, choosing, exalting, adopting, God takes them all, to Himself.

Shall I let you see it ad oculum, this; that it was none, but God? Not the people, (no colour for them.) Full little knew they, or any of them; not the Elders of Bethlehem: Nor did ever imagine any such thing in hand, when Samuel went about it, when David was first found. 1 Sam. 16. 4.

Nay, nor the Saints found him not neither, till God (as it is in the verse next before) spake to them in a vision, and told them of it. Verse 19.

Nay, nor he, of whom there is most likelihood, the Prophet himself (Samuel) he found him not; he could not find him, till God did it for him, and said to him, This is he. All this is, 1 Sam. 16. Thus, God, in David, would let us see at first, that it was He that found Kings, and none but he. If Samuel the Prophet had been let alone, it had not been King David, but King Eliab: he would have found him. If Abiathar the High Priest had had his will, it had not been King Solomon, but King Adonijah, it is well known. So then, neither People, nor Saints; nor Prophet, nor Priest; but God, it was, of Himself and by Himself. He to have the honour of this invention. 1 Sam. 16. 6. 1 Reg. 1. 7.

And if Kings be the invention of God; then are not their inventions of God, (these I mean that have been broached of late) that find Kings, or found Kings upon any but God: that make Prophet, Priest, or People, King-finders, or King-founders, or ascribe this invention to any, but to him in the Text. This for the person, I have found.

How found (the second) by hap? No, it is inveni: in that word is the manner of it. Every tongue hath a proper word to sever things sought and so found; from things found without seeking: you know -- Tu non inventa, reperta es. David then, was not; Kings are not reperti; hit upon at adventure, or stumbled on by chance: they are not repperit. No, they are inveni: first sought, and so found upon search. Will ye hear it totidem verbis: Quaerui mihi hominem, saith God of David, I have sought me out a man, 1 Sam. 23. 14.

Not, that any is hid from Him, that He need seek Him; It is but in our own phrase to express to our capacities, how God stood affected to the having of Kings. So set to have them, that rather than not have them, He would do as we do, even take the pains to seek them out. Now, the endeavour to seek, is from no velleity, no faint will; No, it is from a desire that fama would find. And that desire, is from no mean conceit (if it come, so it is; if not, no great matter;) but from some special good conceit, we have of that, we seek for, that we hold it worth the time we spend, worth the labour we bestow about it. All is, but to shew us the worth of this invention. For it is no mean thing (we may be sure) that God will seek. Seeking them, He shews, He holds them for such, as He would not be without them Himself; He would not have His people in any wise, be without them. And that He would not have them thought as good lost as found, but esteemed for such by us, as if we had them not, we would (by His example) set our selves to seek them seriously, and never leave, till we have found them. This for the manner.

But then thirdly; seeking, why found He David, rather than any other? We find the reason of that, in Servum meum, because He found Him His servant. For a servant He sought, to whom He might commit the highest point of His service, the care of His people. And He found him so zealous for His flock, to keep them from being a prey to strange beasts, as He thought him meet, to be made of Pastor ovium, Pastor hominum. He found him so devout at his service, that He set him in such a place, as if he were the Servant of God, he might make ten thousand more beside himself. Found him by servant.

These two words then, we may not slip over; the claim of the Covenant (after) lieth by them. And if the Covenant hath not been kept with any, it hath been for default of this, that he hath found him; him, but not him, His Servant.

Yea, if any King be found by God before he do, or by course of nature can do him any service (suppose in his cradle;) yet even to such a one, is not this word, without fruit. It hath his use (this) not only in making them to be found; but in keeping them from being lost. For the same, that was the way to be found at first: the very same, is the way not to be lost ever after. And it concerns David or any, as nearly, not to be lost again, as it doth at first to be found.

Now, if David look well to these two words, and lose them not, God will not lose him (he may be sure) but be at hand still ready to defend him. Unless David lose them, he cannot lose God: and unless he lose God, he cannot be lost. David ever lost them, before his enemies could do him any harm. All Balaam's cursing will do him no hurt; nothing but his wicked counsel, to unmake him his servant, and so to lose God, and so to be lost of God, and so to be lost, utterly lost. Lay up this then; The way to servari a Deo, is to servire Deo. And lay it up well; it is the only Article of Covenant on David's part: Upon these two words depends all that follows (upon Servum meum;) If they be sure, all is sure. And this for inventio. Num. 31. 16.

But, I find here, inveni pradicatio besides. To find is one thing, to cry invenia, inveni, I have found another. One may find, and keep his own counsel: (so men do for the most part.) But God here proclaims His finding; tells all, He hath found. And none do so, but such as are surprized with joy: as the party in the Canticles, Inveni quem quaesivit anima mea, I have found whom my soul sought, and I would the world knew it, I am not a little glad of it. Commonly where there is care in seeking, as before, there is joy in finding. Joy then: and it is not joy alone (for, one may gaudere in finis, keep his joy to himself) but gaudium cum gloria, this. For, he not only joys in his invention, but glories in it, and even boasts of it, that doth inventum pradicare. The word (which he useth) invenia is made famous by Archimedes, who in a great passion between glorying and rejoicing, first cried it, when when he had found the secret of King Hicor's Crown. But no less famous by Saint Andrew, Job. 1. 41. who, upon the finding of CHRIST, came running to his brother Saint Peter, with Archimedes's cry, We have found Him (the Messias) we have found Him. Messias in Hebrew is nothing else but anointed: and, we shall see David anointed straight. And sure, next to the joy of Christ (Christus Dominus) we may place the joy of Christus Domini; and take up our next euphonia for him. Gods word will well become us, to use.

Joy to His Saints by it.

And to whom is this? To his Saints: to them, he telsit (look the last verse before :) As if they, had their part in this finding, so invites he them, to the fellowship of the same joy. Tels them, that such a one He had found; and for them, and for their good He had found him. They, to reap special benefit by it, by this finding; therefore they to take special notice of it, they specially to rejoyce with him for it.

I
Joy of the findings.
Ver. 5.

And what should I say, but as this Psalm saith a little before, Beatus populus qui scit jubilationem, Blessed are the people that can skill of this joy, that can skill of their own good? What it is to have a King, a King, found to their hand, but specially a King, that is God's servant? Verily, if God's joy be our joy: it is to be with us, as with God it was; this euphonia the euphonia of joy. And truly, all this Text, both that which is past (his care in seeking, and his joy in finding) and that which followeth, his honour in anointing, his mercy in making this Covenant, his truth in keeping it: His rescuing them, from; his revenging them, upon their Enemies: All is, but to shew us how much He doth, and (if we will do, as He doth) how much we are to do, even to set by, even to joy, and glory with Him, in Inveni Davidem Servum Meum. And this for his finding. Now no more ado, but proceed to his anointing.

Found to anoint.
God the anointer.

To what end then, found? To anoint. Very many are found, very few so found, scarce one of many millions. But they, that are so found, are eo ipso the greatest persons; and of the highest Calling upon earth. So much is there, in this word anointing. And this also, God takes to Himself: anxi, no less, than the former, inveni. Finds, and anoints both.

The oyl is God's.

And both the Act His, and the oyl His. Unxi, I did it; and eleo meo, My oyl it was I did it with. So finds Kings, and finds oyl, and finds fingers, and all. Nothing goeth to them, but it is God's.

¶ Sam. 16. 13.

It seemeth otherwise. Samuel could not find him indeed: but we find, he did anoint him, though. He did so, but not as of himself: what he did, in the Person of God he did it. And the Law is, what one doth by another, not, that other, but himself is said to do it, to be the Author of the deed. For this must stand true, that God here saith Himself, that whose fingers soever were used, God it was that anointed him. And anointed him with oyl, holy oyl, His holy oyl.

I
with oyl.

Oyl. We can never find Kings in Scripture, but still we find this word with them. We find them in oyl, and oyl is for continuance. The colours of the Crown are not water-colours, to fade by and by; they be laid in oyl, to last and to hold out all weathers. So, in oyl, not it water.

Luke 10. 34.

And in oyl, not in wine. For though the Samaritan have both, and there is use of both, in time and place: Yet here, only with oyl. There is no acrimony, nothing corrosive, in it: it is gentle, smooth, and suppling. All to reach them, a prime quality of their calling, to put in oyl enough; to cherish that vertue, that the streams of it may be seen, and the sent of it may be felt of all. For, that will make David to be David: that is (as his name is) truly beloved.

2

Oyl, and holy oyl. Holy, not only to make their Persons sacred, and so free from touch or violating (all agree of that :) but even their Calling so, also. For, holy unction, holy function.

Now, this holy oyl troubles the Jesuite shrewdly, and all those, that seek to unhallow the Calling of Kings. For, if the holy oyl be upon them, why should they be sequestered quite, from holy things, more than the other two, that have but the same oyl? Indeed (as they say) if they were but to deal with common matters, common oyl would have served well enough (and so, they would fain have it; but this place choaks them: This holy oyl here. And their Calling, by vertue of this, being holy, what should let them, in their kind to deal with those, either persons or matters, that are but as the oyl is, wherewith they are anointed? How fond is it, to imagine them to be anointed with holy oyl, to deal only in unholy matters, and not to meddle with anything that holy is!

oyl.

Holy oyl, and His holy oyl. For, His holy, is more than holy. His, is another manner oyl, than the material, in the Prophet's horn, or in the Priest's phial. His drops immediatly from the true Olive, the Holy Ghost (He the true Olive, as Christ the true Vine.) Samuel's, is but a ceremony: this, the substance of the anointing. It is, in this, as in Baptism: there, John with water; Christ with the Holy Ghost: And, that is the soul of Baptism. So here, Samuel sheds on the oyl of the Tabernacle, God He adds his from heaven; the same, and no other than Christ was anointed with: that oyl is it: that, the anointing indeed. He indeed above his fellows, for He had the Spirit above measure: But He so above them, as He with them, and they with Him, with His, with the same anointing; both.

Joy of the anointing.
Psal. 45. 8.

And, it is not from the purpose, that His oyl, is by the Psalm called the oyl of gladness: That, as we are glad even now, for his finding: so, may we also now, for his anointing. And by and by, glad again, for his delivering. And so, glad in him, God make us, for them all. It is a day of Joy: I would not omit any thing, that might tend to it. And this for the first verse, finding and anointing, and (if ye will) for the twenty ninth of July. Now to the second verse.

Ver. 21.
The League.

Having anointed him, the first thing He doth, is to enter a league with him. And we are glad of that. For, having found him now, we would be glad to keep him. And, there is no surer way for that, than to joyn in him a league, with the mightiest King (by far) of the whole world, the King of Kings, God Himself. And,

And, God Himself is willing with it, offers it. And sure He hath reason so to do. Seeing He hath found him, He will not see him lost. David serves him, He will servare servum. He anointed him, and made him holy, He will not see him used prophanely. But, the eye that found him, shall watch over him: the hand that anointed him shall be at hand, to defend him.

So hitherto, God found David. Now, David finds God, willing to undertake his quarrel: and even to covenant with him, so to do. For, it is not a bare promise, this: it is a Covenant, and so termed expressly, at the 3. and 28. verses. And that, a Covenant solemnly sworn, bound with an oath, at the 4. and 53. verses. And here now manus mea cum eo, He giveth him his hand upon it. His covenant, His oath, and His hand, what can there be more? This Covenant is made as sure, as can be, and as surely kept, we shall see anon.

The first Article of this Covenant, the article of Imprimis, is that: His hand shall hold him fast, or establish: the second, that His arm shall strengthen him: (that is) covenants for the continual presence and assistance of his power, ever to joy with him, and still to be ayding to him.

This power of it self is but one, as God's one: but is set down thus, here and elsewhere, in two words; the hand and the arm, the mighty hand and the out-stretched arm, to set forth two degrees of it: Both great, but one greater. That of the hand is great; as we read 13. verse before, yet but ordinary. That of the arm, is greater, and cometh forth, but upon extraordinary occasion: Every thing we put not to the arms end.

Not that these degrees of difference are in the power it self, which is entire quoad se; but only, to proportion it; and make it answerable to our perils: which are not always alike, but less or more, at one time than another: and so seem to us, to require a degree of power, according. For the less, the hand seems enough: but for the more, the arm; a greater degree of power, as our peril is greater.

No day goeth over our head, but the horse we ride on, the stairs we go up and down by, the very meat we eat, we are in danger, lest it go the wrong way. For, these, for every dayes dangers, we cannot miss the hand; and the hand is enough, if it do but hold us fast.

But this day, the fifth of August, and such another, the fifth of November, the case is altered: then, Rise up, rise up thou arm of the Lord, rise up and stretch out thy self: another manner of jeopardy, then. So, in a word, the hand for all the year: the arm for the fifth of August. Now there is no jeopardy so great, but the arm, if it stretch it self out, will serve to preserve us. And this arm is ever stretched out, when God vouchsafeth some strange miraculous deliverance: as this day He did. For this, was Dies brachii: on it, the arm of the Lord was revealed.

Both these: and either hath his proper attribute: the hand, to establish, and the arm, to strengthen.

To establish: that is, to make steady, that he stand fast, and be not moved. It is in se the passive power, to resist: such, as of the anvil, or of the rock.

To strengthen: (that is) when we are further to encounter our peril actively, and are too weak for it: for, that giveth divines, the active power, that strikes them down: as the sword, or halberd in the hand of the mighty.

Both these: and both necessary, for the performance of this league: Which is both defensive in the next verse, to keep them, that they take no hurt: and offensive, in the last verse, to pay their enemies their due, and to strike them down.

This then is the sum of the two first articles. The hand shall never be off him, but on him all the year long, for every dayes danger. But if further need be, if some very great hazard, if the fifth of August, then out comes the arm. But so, as both; both hand and arm, and every sinew in them, are ready still, and at hand as occasion shall be, to establish or strengthen him. This, for the second verse, the league: And all this is for him: Pro:

Why, what needs all this? this holding, this fortifying? Is there any harm toward? I cannot tell: it was somewhat a suspicious word (in the verse past) of holding him, and holding him fast; as if there were some shoving at him. The Greek is more full, κατακρατειν. For, in that word, there is κατα God holds him: and then κρατειν, as it were, another plucks at him: and then κρατειν, God holds him harder or faster than before. This was but suspicious. But here now, it is past all suspicion: for here, are a couple, making toward him (the enemy, and the son of wickedness:.) It is to be doubted, for no good. Here is now the fifth of August: Here comes God's second finding him. For in his enemies hand now he is, get out how he can.

I told you before, that Kings were God's invention: here now comes the Devils invention. For, as God finds Kings, so the Devil finds Traitors. God finds David, the Devil finds Absalom: God, your Majesty; the Devil, those of this day.

And (as evil ever is more fertile) for one King, there are two, in the Text and there were two, on the day: and I would to God, two were all. But this is to be counted of, Satan the Arch-enemy (so signifies his name) will be sure to find Kings, enemies. The father of wickedness will find his whelps ready ever for so wicked an enterprise.

And now, these are they, contra quos, against whom this league is made: For by virtue of the league, God and David, they have friends and enemies in common. Enemy to one (the King,) and enemy to both (God and the King.) 1. Of the parties first. 2. Then of their attempt. 3. And last of their success.

The parties. Two titles they have in the Text, 1 the enemy, 2 the son of wickedness. Exegitice some take them, both for one : and then the later glosseth the former : and then the meaning is, that Davids enemies are all of them the sons of wickedness. And indeed such they were, and none but such. For God forbid any good man should be Davids enemy. In this sense it is true. For, all of them Qui vias dant ad perdendos Reges, but much more, qui vias docent ; that would have them lost, whom God even now with such joy found ; that seek to deface Gods invention : You may boldly pronounce of them, they be the sons of wickedness all : as flat against God, as perdere is against invenire, perdition against invention ; and their will, against his will. For His will is, Quos Deus invenit, homo ne perdat : and Quos Deus invenit, homo perdat, say they. And this, if both be for one.

But if (as the words give, and the best Writers take them) they stand for a pair, for two distinct : then, by the enemy, is meant he that is so professed : Plain, by the LV. Psalm, It was not an open enemy ; where the word is the same, that here (that is) such an one as Goliath was. But, by the son of wickedness, is meant, the close hollow Traitor, such as was his wicked son.

And it is good, they know their pedigree these fellows, of what lineage they are. That is, wickednesses own sons : as if the other, the enemy, were but allyed to it, in some degree ; but these, the true off-spring, the lively image of the Devil. For, if they be the sons, and he the Father, they be as near of blood, as may be. So, they see their true descent, sons of wickedness.

And it is worth the while to know, of what wickedness. Evil it is, to be wicked upon what pretence soever : But, oderunt me gratis, is worse ; for that is of meer malignity. But mala pro bonis, is worst of all. And such are these, such their wickedness. Sons of חלל : which חלל the Hebrews tell us, is properly the naughtiness of some evil natur'd children, that bite the nipple, which giveth them milk. That is חלל right : (the worst and most wicked wickedness of all others.) To bite and suck, both at once. But such there are, the better they be dealt with, the worse still, ye shall find them.

Now of the twain these are far the more dangerous : as you may see by the very course or standing of them in the Text. For referendo singula singulis (as we use to do :) the hand before (as the former there) properly refers to the enemy (as the former here :) but the arm, the later there, that refers to the sons of wickedness, even by the course of the two verses. As if, for the enemy, the hand were sufficient : but for these, arm and all, were little enough.

And sure, ye shall observe, that David, that the son of David, CHRIST ; that Christus Dominus, and Christus Domini both, hath ever been most in danger of this kind of cattel. David, he was once in danger, and never but once, by Ishbenb, an open enemy. But his great dangers, were by these here, the sons of wickedness, his wicked son Absalom, his wicked Counsellor Achitophel. And indeed all his great, were by this second sort.

And our Saviour Christ His furious enemies, they that would have thrown him headlong down the hill, they that would have stoned him, they did him no hurt : but, that false harlot Judas, that son of wickedness, he did. And I pray to God, he may ; and I beseech David heartily, He would take this to heart, and take heed of these. The danger of these, the sons of wickedness, he did, it was the danger of this day.

Will ye now see their proceedings and practices ? They be in these three words ; 1 Violence, 2 wickedness, 3 Hurt. Violence, they mean, that is their end, and with wickedness they cover it (that is) with one wicked pretence or other, the better to make the way, to do the hurt they intend. Alas, nothing but a vow at Hebron (said wicked Absalom) when he vowed indeed, to deprive King David, both of his Kingdom and life. Not lost the Sermon for anie good (saith he of this day ;) when he had in his heart violence and hurt ; no less hurt, than the loss of your Majesties life. This is the way of them all : Violence wrapped about, with a vow, or a Sermon, or I wot not what ; that before it be seen, it may do the mischief, that is meant. This holy wickedness, is simply the worst of all. O Lord, what dangers are they in, that are in this case ! How neer being lost ! Now, the success.

For, at the name of Violence, at but the mention of hurt, everie good heart is moved, and come running in about David, to see if any hurt. But there is no hurt done (God be blessed) None done : whatsoever meant, none is done. And, he falls (if you mark :) No violence ; nay, not so much, as the least hurt. For they be two, these, violence and hurt : and hurt, is the more large. Any violence done ? Nay, none : Any hurt at all ? Nor that neither. Neither ? all is safe then.

Where ye see, the first use of this hand and arm ; to repel and keep back violence : to bear off the blow that should do them hurt. This is the defensive part. And it is much to their comfort that this hand holds them, and this arm is so over them, as it is still between them and their harms : as it lights on Gods arm and hand, and must hurt them, before it come at David. But them, it cannot hurt, neither violent wickedness, nor wicked violence prevail against them ; And so be they safe, from both. And no way to prevail against Kings, but to bind this hand first, and pinion this arm. Otherwise, evil men there may be, and evil meaning ; but no evil success, for all that.

But, I would pray you, to take good heed, to the Tenor of this Covenant. No promise is here made, but that such he shall have : and shall have of both sorts, open and secret : open, to offer violence ; secret, privily to seek his hurt. No, though he be David (that is,) lovely, or as lovely, as ever was he, yet he shall have those that hate him ; hate him gratis, hate him though favours done them ; though they lie in his lap, and are fed with his milk, yet bite him for all that. No part of the covenant, this, but such he shall have, but such there shall be.

Nor no promise neither, but as they shall be so they shall be doing (as we say :) not fit idle, but be plotting plotting and practising, ever and anon. It is but, non proficiunt (so read the Fathers this verse) the Covenant in the Text: it is not non facient. No, facient, facient quod suum est iniquitatis filii, (saith S. Augustine well;) the sons of wickedness shall be doing, and do their kind, that is wickedly; intend violence, pretend some wicked wile or other. No part of the Covenant, but such there shall be: Nor no part of the Covenant, but thus they shall do. Let it not seem strange: look for it.

But this the Covenant, and this is all. The former part, be they shall, and be doing they shall, sed non proficiunt in eo, they shall do no good on him (in their sense) that is, no evil (in ours.)

And verie fit is the word non proficiunt; that is, though they go to School all their days about it, yet shall they prove but non-proficients, and never proceed so far as to do it. So in the latter part, non apponunt nocere; Nor, non propont. Nor, shall not have the purpose; but, shall not have their purpose. Nor, shall not have the will; but, shall not have the power to do hurt. Proffer they shall, but not profit. Devise, but what they devise, not to be able to perform: Imagine, but be scattered in the imaginations of their hearts. So that, come when they will come, they come a verse too late: David is provided of an hand and arm (in the verse before) that will see him take no hurt: that will be hurt themselves, rather than he take any: that will so fence him, as neither fury shall be able to do him any violence, by force; nor wickedness to do him any hurt, by fraud. Neer lost, as good as lost, he may be: but quite lost he shall not be, God shall find him again. And so to the last verse.

Very well then, David is escaped from their violence and hurt, but shall they escape so? No: there is a farther matter in it. All this, is but the defensive part: But the league (we find) was not only so, but offensive too; as well to offend and annoy them, as to defend and rescue him. And here now is the active power, we spake of before, of the strengthening of the arm. That, there is not only work for the hand to stay him, or hold out a shield, to bear off, that so no hurt to him? but for the arm also, to draw out a sword and lay on, that so all the hurt shall come to themselves. And so their imaginations not only scattered, but returned upon their own heads. For, violence, they intended, and were brought themselves to a violent end. Hurt they meant, and they are hurt themselves, and that, incurably, smitten down and perish.

Three points I touch only, What? smite them down and no harm done? Yea, no matter for that: down with them, though. To lift up an hand, or an heel here, is enough. To offer violence, but to intend hurt, here enough. That there was none done, thanks be to God and the good hand that held them: Bigthan and his fellow, hang them up though. Not, quia nocuerunt, No: upon no other inditement, but quia voluerunt, they would have done the King hurt, though they did him none. That is enough, smite them down.

Again: what? at the very first, smite them down? Yea, these at the very first. With others, he proceeds not so roundly: smites them first before he smite them down; smites them a blow with the hand, in mercy; before he smite them down with the deadly blow of his arm, in rigour. But these, down with them, at the very first. Wot you why? Abisbai he desired; he might have but one blow, as the King, he would never desire a second. Pay him with his own money: let him have but one blow, but the first, and no more.

And what blow is it? to astonish him or to fell him, for the time? No: it is causid, say the Seventy. The nature of which word is, not to fell the stem or the trunk of the tree, but to hew in sunder the very roots; that it never grow again: So to smite them down, as they never rise more. I will smite down.

And as if this were not enough, he follows them yet further. Before, he fell: No violence: nay, not any the least hurt: Here, he rises, smite them, nay, plague them, that is, smite them down with the plague, which is yet more fearful. And it is truly turned, for מַכָּה is properly, the stroke of the plague.

The plague is a death that we would not die of to chuse; if smitten down, not smitten down, with that ax. Not, because it is deadly for the most part, and past recovery: (that is not it:) But, because they that be so smitten, there goeth from them, a pestilent noisom vapour, that makes all shun them, or, (as the Seventies word is) ἐκπορευται, run away, yea fly away from them. And even so, from these, there goeth a sent, as from a plague-sore (you will bear with it, it is the HOLY GHOST's own term) that taints their blood, corrupts their name, makes them and their memorie odious, yet, even an abhorring to all flesh. Say, what they will, this is the plague of plagues when all is done. And, it is GODS own will; GOD Himself would have us, so reckon of them. Of Corch (the first we read of in this kind) GOD callsto Moses, Charge the people all, that they get them from about them. And Moses he cries, Away, away from their Tents, touch not any thing that is theirs: as if he should say, they have the plague, it is infectious. So, GOD would have us think of them: And so (I pray GOD) all may take warning from him, and so think of them, and shun them as persons contagious, that have sores running on them.

Now, this is but their plague on earth (to be plagued in their end, their blood, their name;) but all this is nothing to their plagues in Hell: whither certainly they go, so many as in flagranti crimine, in the very act of treachery, are taken away. No man shall need to wish them, more hurt: They perish and come to a fearful end. It is truly said by them, I will plague them.

Yet one more, that makes up all. For (if ye mark) the person is changed. The last verse it was, they shall do no violence, they shall do no hurt: Consequently, he should have gone on, they shall be smitten, they shall be plagued: that had been enough. It is not so, but in the first person, I will smite, I will plague: as if, God himself would be the doer of it, and do it even αὐτοῦ propriis manibus, with with his own hands. And surely, so sensible hath been the demonstration of the hand of his power, in the fall of these, that (to hold us to the term of plague) God's tokens have been seen upon them: as if He had sent his hand from on high, to plague them indeed. Upon these, this day, upon others since these, God hath from heaven, shewed, how much these attempts displease him, by making even the prints of his hands, to be seen upon the attempters; that men have been forced to acknowledge, it was no humane or earthly, but some supernatural divine power, that brought it to pass; And that, though other hands were in, yet God it was that struck the stroke. This is the end, that in the end, shall come to all these from the Lord, so many as have any hand in the hurt of the Lords Anointed. He that is the founder of Kings, will be the Confounder of all Conspirators. Carry it as closely as they can, His hand shall find them out; find them out and smite them, smite them and plague them, plague them here, and for ever. This is the Covenant here made with David; in the name of Kings.

Application to His Majesty.

And (I promise you) this is, a fair Covenant, and a full: but, might we see some proof of it, how it was kept? For that, is Sal faderis, the proof, the keeping of it. For, many fair Covenants here in the World, take wind, for want of this salt of the Covenant (the true keeping.)

Esay 53.

Of David, there is no doubt, it was kept with him, but the time will not serve. And this time requirereth rather, to shew the proof of the presents in your Majesty; That, this whole Text, (mutato nomine) hath been kept with you, from point to point: and the faithful mercies of David (as Esay calls them) as faithful to you, as ever they were to him. Of that, then.

The twenty ninth of July Found in the Cradle and anointed.

I find then, both these dayes, and on them, both these wayes, you were found by God: found, the twenty ninth of July, and anointed; found, the fifth of August, and delivered.

The twenty ninth of July, and the twenty fifth both twice anointed.

Found first: and that, sooner a great deal than David: for in your cradle: There He found you, and anointed you. David was come to years of discretion first, to do Him service: But you, by his preventing grace found, before you were, or could be in case to do him any. An antecedence even in this.

2 Sam. 2. 4. 5. 3

Found in the womb, and delivered, before ever anointed.

Nay he found you twice, to anoint you. Once, before you did, or could serve him: and after you could, and did, or ce more. Found you, the twenty ninth of July and the twenty fifth both. David was twice anointed too; but he, but of two pieces of one kingdom: but you, of two entire Kingdoms, or (indeed) of three, the least of them greater than that of his, when both pieces were together. So an anointing also, more than he.

Delivered before anointed; Delivered again the fifth of August.

Some difference I find, but with vantage still, on your side. For, in the Text David is first anointed, and after delivered. But you, were delivered, before ever anointed. For, before He found you in your cradle, there to anoint you; He found you in the womb (before ever you came into the world) there to deliver you: Even there, His hand was over you, that, even there, a Son of wickedness did you no hurt. This is more than is in the Text; more, than ever David could sing of.

Anointed the second time 25. of July, and Delivered after it 5. of November.

Application to the fifth of August, the day it fell. Then found and found by God.

But He not only thus delivered you before your birth, and so before your anointing: but after it also, no less: Witness this fifth day of this moneth. So, were you delivered first, and then anointed, and then, delivered again from this day, and from being lost on it. And thus far the Text.

But then, were you anointed again after that, and delivered again after that, from a fifth day too, though of another moneth. For, since of your anointings, have had a famous delivery, to second it. So we double the point here. A deliverance in the womb, an anointing after that deliverance; A deliverance after that anointing; And then, an anointing again; And then, a deliverance again, upon that. So upon the matter, four findings, with you; Twice to anoint, and twice to deliver: beyond David, beyond the Text here. So, the Text, kept with you, over and over again.

But to let the rest go, and to hold us to this day; This day, if days could speak, (and days can speak, saith the nineteenth Psalm) would certify that this covenant was kept with you, in every clause of the six, on this your finding-day.

For, your finding-day well may it be called; well may it be said, you were found on it, and found by God on it. Found, for sure you were lost: And found by God; for men had lost you. They that gladly would, knew not how to find you, or to get to you. Great odds, then, but you had been quite lost. It was God that found you then, and made you to be found of them, not by any skill of their own, or by any direction, but His. By his p, it might seem: but your self do, and we all acknowledge the hand of God in it. His providence, that so guided them; His doing it was, and they did it: So that God it was, that found you then, for we had not now found you here. It may then truly be called your finding day; and God truly say) the second time, ευρηκα, I have, I have found. Of it then, of this day.

No enemy professed, but two Sons of wickedness for it.

We shall fail a little, in the first point. Here is an enemy professed: And you had not then, you never had any, professed. To make amends for that, there is but one son of wickedness, in the Text: You found not one, but two; and they found you.

A Son of wickedness he was.

Sons of wickedness, well might they be called. For, if no Religion, taking Religion upon it, be wickedness (as it is double wickedness) a son of wickedness he was. If witch-craft be wickedness (as it is wickedness in the highest degree) he was a Son of it, it was found about him. If to do evil gratis; to do evil for good, be wickedness (and it is the wretchedest wickedness that can be) you had done them many favours; and, to bite the breast then, that had given them milk, these are they in the Text right, וְאֵיךְ if ever there were any.

Mean violence wickedly covered it.

These then, violence they intended, and with wickedness they covered it. Wickedly they enticed you and drew you along, till they had you fast shut up: And then violent hands they laid on you (the marks were were to be seen many a day after.) And were you not then, within the compass of the Text, of violence and hurt, that is, of hurt by violence? Yes, so neer you was the hurt, that the hurtful point touched your naked breast. Was David ever so neer? Never: He was indeed hard bestead and forced to fly, but he never came in their hands; you did: He never was under lock; you were: He never had the daggers point at his heart; you had: And when you had, all the world then certainly, would have given you lost.

How neer the doing it.

Did they you any harm for all this? Not any (to speak of.) We may take up that before, Fuerunt & fecerunt, sed non profecerunt; so far from that, as non profecerunt. Such here were, and doing they were, but it would not do; for it was not done (the violence they intended.) Proposuerunt nocere, sed non appropinquarunt; a purpose they had, an offer they made; that was all; further they went not: You were not lost, we find you here now, and we find you serving God, safe and well (thanks be to the great finder of Kings) as ever you were.

Yet did it not. Non profecerunt. Non appropinquarunt.

What was it then, that it came so neer you, and yet did you no hurt? It was the good hand of God, His holy arm that was upon you, held you, held you fast: you fast, from taking hurt; and them fast, from doing any.

The cause they did it not. The hand and arm of God to stablish you. The defensive part of the Covenant.

Can any doubt that it was the hand of God? He that stood there armed for that end, when he was so stricken suddenly, as he had neither heart nor hand to do that he came for; was it not the hand of God, that so struck him?

When his hand held the others hand, that was ready to give the deadly blow, ut non apponeret nocere (they be the very words of the Text:) And was it not the hand in the Text then?

That You were so established, as to resist; that You were so strengthened, as to prevail (the two effects, set down in the verse both:) and yet was it not the hand there specified?

The Popular tumult that rose after this, enraged by odious surmises, was it not God's hand that laid the raging of the waves then, that stayed the madness of the People?

Psal. 65. 7.

When the violence was over, the hurt was not: The lewd tongue of Shimei doth hurt, no less than the sword of Abisbai. It would not be believed, that all this was true, there were that slandered the footsteps of his Anointed (Davids case in the end of this Psalm:) was it not God then, that so touched the heart of him, that was escaped unknown, that he had not the power, to be true to himself to keep it in, but was even driven by remorse, to bewray himself (though with evident hazard of his own life) was not this dignitas Dei?

Verf. 51.

And since, that, by a further strange discovery, hath he not set your innocencie in the sight of the Sun? that now the mouth of all wickedness is stopped, so that neither Abisbai's sword, nor Shimei's tongue now, can do you any hurt? And was not the hand and arm of God in this? Yes, the whole arm, and every joint; the whole hand, and all the fingers of it. Yet lack we the last verse.

Psal. 63. 11.

Here was the hand with the shield: but where was the arm with the sword? Here too; and it smit them, smit them down, down it smit them both, both in the verie place where they designed your hurt, and in the verie wickedness of the act: both were smitten down stark dead, and there stark dead you saw them both lie before you (as the verse is) before your face. Non profecerunt: Nay, defecerunt, & in ipso fecere perierunt: their sword went through their own heart, and their blood was upon their own heads. God found you then, and you found Him, certainly. O, let him ever find you His servant, whom you then, found your so gracious good Lord.

The hand and arm to smite them: the offensive part of the Covenant. To smite them down before your face.

But they must be plagued too (to make the Text up full.) So were they: For, as if they had been smitten with some pestilent foul disease; so, from them, from their mention, there goeth an odious sent, odious, and abhorred of all: Yea, the verie house, as if the plague of leproisie had been in it, razed down: and, that there might no infection come from this plague of theirs, their verie name put out, from under heaven. And, all this, so done, and with such circumstances, as all that hear it, must acknowledge, it was Gods doing, and that from heaven came the hand that did it; Factum est, & a Domino factum est, both.

Psal. 37. 15. 1 Reg. 2. 31.

And so, you are found: and they (as the children of perdition should be) are lost. Here are you: And where are they? gone to their own place, to Judas their brother. And (as is most kindly) the sons, to the Father of wickedness; there to be plagued with him, for ever. The same way, may they all go; and to the same place, may they all come: all, that shall ever once offer, to do the like. Thus, to the verie last syllable, of the last verse, is this Text found true in you: and this covenant made good to you. All the six points of it, all of them in futuro, in the Text; shall and shall be, Comes me the day, and puts them all in preterito to you, changeth shall and be, into was and did. That, thus we read it now; His hand did hold you fast, His arm did strengthen you: the enemy was not able to do you any violence, no more was the son of wickedness to hurt you. But he did smite down your foes, and did plague them that hated you. So, the Covenant was fully kept with you, and sealed, even with the blood of them, that brake it.

To plague them. This done by God himself. Psal. 64. 9. Psal. 118. 23. Act. 1. 25.

And now, let all them, that took any joy in the first finding and anointing, here renew their joy afresh, for this second, when you were thus in a manner lost, and found again. When it was just, as in the Gospel, Periit & inventa est. And if he in the Gospel for his sheep; and she, for her goat, called all their friends together, and cried, Congratulamini mihi: how much greater a congratulamini belongs to this? where not a goat, but he that is the Image and superscription of all our goats, yea, all our coin, silver, and gold, is found again.

And what? shall this be all? No I trust: having thus, at the hands of God, found the faithful mercies of David; we shall stay a little, and look out some of the faithful prayers of David, to render him, for this, for such a finding. Let us do so I pray you. And we shall not need to go far, nor any further than our own Psalm, and but even to the verie first words of it, Misericordias Domini in aternum cantabo. Upon another, no less worthy deliverance, I well remember, you took up the like, Misericordia Domini super omnia opera eius. Very fitly that, but this agrees rather with us now; For it is the beginning of the Psalm, wherof the Text is a part: Made, as it were the Antiphon for this Sermon.

Will ye see it agree? There was mercy in making this Covenant; there was truth, in keeping it. See then, how aptly he hath set it: My song shall be alwayes of the mercies of the Lord (that made it;) with my mouth will I be shewing his truth (that kept it) from one generation to another. And shall not we sing of his mercy? And shall not we set forth His truth? Sing of his mercy that made this Covenant: shew forth his truth, that made it good, every article; and suffered not one word of it, to fall to the ground?

But, if we cannot well sing it, for lack of a Quire: He hath taken order for that too. For the very next, the second verse of the Psalm, that he begins with, Ego dixi, I have said: that if we cannot sing it, we may yet say it. And it is but the same over again: I have said, mercy shall be set up for ever: Thy truth shalt thou stablish in the heavens. What truth? It followeth in the third verse, this truth of his Covenant, to David. To sing that, and to say this: to make our songs, on this ground; and our sermons, on this theme. He hath said it, to set up His mercy: He hath done it, to exalt his truth.

Ever to do this, In aeternum: In aeternum is the word of the verse (if our dulness could endure it) all the daies of the year. But, of all the daies in the year, this day not to fail of it. Hodie salu facta est damni huic, Nay Regno huic, Nay Regnis his: This day then, not to fail of it. For, having found this mercy, and felt this truth, this day; shall we not, at the least, this day, thank Him for this day? Shall the Sun of this day arise, and go down upon us, and not see us together, to render him praise, for this so loving mercy, for this so faithful a truth? Shall he find hand and arm, to succour and to save us; and shall not we find mouth and lips, to bless and magnifie Him for it? God forbid.

Let us then, sing that: My song shall be alwayes of the mercies of the Lord (record it, at least) Or for default of it, say this: I have said, mercy shall be set up for ever, thy truth shalt thou stablish in the heavens. Be they never so false upon Earth, thou in heaven shalt stablish it. Say it, per modum concionis; so we have: Say it then, per modum orationis; so let us do, and so an end.

Even so Lord so let it be, Set up this thy mercy for ever, for ever stablish the truth of this thy covenant, with thy Servant our Sovereign, that it never fail Him, as not this day, so not at any other time. Let thine hand be still upon Him, and thine arm about him for ever, between him and his harms. Violence and hurt, never come neer him: The sons of wickedness, be even far from Him. Let them be non-proficiens, all the sort of them, that study or practise this wicked lesson. Never lose thou him, or suffer him to be lost: Ever find him (good Lord) to succour and save him; and let thy right hand find out his enemies to smite and plague them: with the same blows, thou didst smite; and with the same plagues, thou didst poure on these, of this day. The destiny of this day, come on them all.

And, for Him, let his anointing still be fresh on him, and his crown still flourish on his head. Let him, all the day walk in the light of thy countenance, and at night, rest under the covering of thy wings. This day, as once it did, and as ever since it hath, So let it, long and many years, rise prosperous and happy to him. This day, and all daies; That he, that we all may sing thy mercy, and set forth thy truth, all the daies of our life. Hear us, O Lord, and grant it for thy Sons sake, our Saviour, &c.

PREACHED

BEFORE THE
Kings Majesty,

In the Cathedral Church of Salisbury,
 On the V. of August, A.D.M.DC. XV.

PSALM XXI. VER. I, II, III, IV.

The King shall rejoyce in thy strength, O Lord: Exceeding glad shall he be of thy salvation.

Thou hast granted him his hearts desire: And hast not denied him the request of his lips. Selah.

Thou hast prevented him with the blessings of goodness: And hast set a Crown of pure gold upon his head.

He asked life of Thee, and Thou gavest him a long life: Even for ever and ever.

PON a day of Joy, here is a Text of Joy. Upon a day of Joy for the King, a Text, of a King in Joy. For so, we see, there is in the Text, a King: and He joyful and glad. Glad, first, for Strength shewed by God in saving Him: Glad again, for goodness shewed by God, in satisfying (yea, more than satisfying) preventing his desires; and that in the matter of His Crown, and of His Life both.

This King, was King David (no doubt) the very Title of the Psalm sheweth as much: and the son of Syrach (of whom, I reckon as well or better, than of any Commentary) these very words (here) he applies to King David, Chap. 47. ver. 7.

Originally then, he: but neither solely, nor wholly he. His meaning was not, to make this saving, his own case, alone; Nor to engross this Joy, all, to himself: ye may see it, by the very setting it down. It is not (as, of himself) I will rejoyce: But (as of a third person) the King, shall: The King, indefinitely. So, entailing it, rather to His Office, than to His Person: and leaving it at large, applicable to any other, a King; as well as Himself.

To any other King (I say.) Specially any other such King, that should be as strangely saved by Gods strength; as fairly, blessed by his goodness, as ever was he. That should find the like favour that he did: and be vouchsafed the like gracious deliverance, that, he was. Any such King in such wise saved, to be equally interested in this joy with him: And to have this Psalm, serve for a Sermon, or for an Anthem, no less than he.

And,

2 Cor. 11. 10.

And, by this, we hope in God, this rejoicing here, shall not be shut up, against us. For, that, which is here left indefinite, we suppose, we can definitely apply, to a King (in whose presence we stand.) To whom, the same strength, and the same goodness, and of the same Lord, have shewed forth themselves, in saving him, saving both his Crown and Life, no less than Davids.

2 Cor. 6. 2.
Elsay 40. 8.

This, comes well to the Text. But what doth this concern us now, more than any other time? Yes; for, here comes the day, and claims a property, in it: How that? Remember ye, how the Apostle (when he cited the place out of Esay, I have heard thee in an accepted time, in the day of salvation; I have helped thee.) Behold, (saith he) now is the accepted time: Behold, this is the day of salvation. The same (for all the world) saith this day. The King shall be glad of thy salvation: Ecce hodie, dies salutis huius. Behold, this is the day of that salvation. For, so it is, indeed. The very salvation-day it self (this.)

For, this day, was his life fought, and he set on, to have been shamefully made away: and this very day, saved he was; and in virtue, mightily saved; and in virtue Dies, by the mighty hand and help, even of God Himself.

Since then, this blessing fell upon this day, If we will take a time (And a time we will take to rejoice, and to give God thanks for it) that, which the day pleads for, is most reasonable; that you will take this day, rather than another: For, if hodie, dies salutis; If, to day, the day of salvation; No reason in the world, but to day, the day of rejoicing for it.

But I will forbear, to take any notice, or to mention any but David, at the first going over: The Text (that) requireth a survey of course (first) and shall have it. But then, if the day shall pray a review after, I see not how in right, we can deny it.

The Division.

I.
II.

Be these then the two parts: The Survey, and the Review. And in either of these two principal points present themselves.

1. The Joy. 2. And the ground or causes of it. The Joy, in the front of the Text; And the causes, in the sequels of it.

The causes are, as the number of the verses, four: 1 The saving of the King, by the strength of God. 2 The satisfying, yea, the preventing his desire, by the goodness of God. 3 The setting on his Crown, by the hand of God, Tu posuisti. 4 The prolonging his life, by the gift of God. These four.

Now, every of these (the Joy and the Causes, and indeed the whole Text) seems to stand upon Triplicities. In the last verse of the Psalm, God is said to exalt his strength. His strength in exaltation, makes the joy in triplicity.

The triplicity of Joy (first.) The King 1 shall rejoice, 2 shall be glad, 3 exceeding glad shall he be. 1 Latabitur, 2 exultabit, 3 vehementer.

The like, in all the causes: Why glad? (first) for, the King 1 was saved, 2 saved by God, 3 by thy strength (O Lord) 1 Salute, 2 Virtute, and 3 Tuâ Domine.

Upon this, of strength, followeth a new triplicity of goodness. Therein, 1 the desire of his heart, 2 the request of his lips: And besides them, 3 the blessings of goodness. Of these three, the first, granted; the second, not denied; and prevented, with the third.

Of 1 which blessings, there are two set down in particular: 1 His Crown: and 2 His life.

His Crown: and the triplicity of it. 1 Corona, 2 Coronatio, and 3. Coronatus: the 1 Crown, 2 the Coronation, or setting it on by another: 3 And that, other, God: None, but he, Tu posuisti.

His life: and there another (the last) triplicity. 1 Life, 2 long life, and 3 life in seculum, & in seculum seculi. Long life in this world, Life for ever in the Word to come.

And for this strength, in thus saving; and this goodness, in thus satisfying his desire, in the safety both of his Crown, and his Life; is all this Latabitur, and exultabit: All this Joy and Jubilee of the Text.

This Survey done, the day will further pray a Review: trusting, it will fall out (all this) to prove the case of the day just. That all these causes, will coincide into it. 1 Salutem misit, 2 Desiderium concessit, 3 Coronam posuit, and 4 Vitam dedit: And if these; then the Joy too (without fail.)

And that, two ways: Upon two powers, that be in the word (shall.) 1 Shall, the Bond, de presenti, binding us, to accommodate our selves, to the present occasion: to this joyful season of Gods sending: And then (shall) the Tense, which is not the present, but the future: And so (shall) not only, for this present day; but shall, still; still shall, for many dayes, of many Augusts, in many years more; the same latabitur, the same exultabit, still. So we all with, it may.

I.
The survey.
1.
The Joy.

Domine latabitur. We begin with Joy. Auspicium principium, a fair front (onward) a lucky beginning.

In Joy: and that not single, but three in one, a triplicity of it. We will but touch at it, now: We shall come to it again, yea we end; Begin, and end, with Joy, to day: So may we begin, and so end ever.

In this triplicity, two words there be, to express this Joy: 1 latabitur, and 2 exultabit: and one to give it the size, or measure, 3 vehementer.

The two former (1 latabitur, and 2 exultabit) are as it were the body and soul of Joy. The first (latabitur) the soul. For, the nature of that word, and the use, noteth Joy, within: Joy of the bosome (say the Heathen;) Joy of the Spirit (the Scripture;) And my Spirit hath rejoiced. There, in the Spirit, is the Fountain of true Joy. If there it be not, how well soever the countenance counterfeit it, it is but counterfeit, for all that. And no Joy right, if we cannot say the two first words [Domine latabitur] to God; and we cannot say them, to Him, if there it be not, within.

There then, to begin, but not there to end. Latabitur is not all; Exultabit is called for too, which is nothing but an out-let or over-flowing of the inward Joy, into the outward man; of the heart into the flesh: My heart and my flesh, shall rejoice. Not one, without the other. Joy to be seen and read in the Fore-head (the Joy of the Countenance;) To sound forth, and be heard, from the lips (the voice of Joy and Gladness.) This, doth exultabit add. There, is the body and soul of Joy, now.

But it is not every mean degree, will content in these. Not any [glad] but exceeding glad. The Hebrew is, O quam! O Lord, how wonderful is thy name! saith the 8. Psalm, ver. 1. So here, O Lord, how joyful and glad shall he be! The meaning is; to very glad, as he cannot well tell how to express it. Else, asking the question, why doth he not answer it? But that, he cannot. But that he hath never a ram, for this quam: But is even fain to leave it, to be conceived, by us. So do we; but vehementer, exceeding it must be. So say the Translations, all.

Thus have you a Brief of the triplicity of Joy. 1 Joy within, 2 jubilee without, 3 both mensura superfluenta.

And (which is somewhat strange) these, not only permitted, but even enjoined; given in charge: shall rejoice; shall be glad; a necessity laid on him: but, a blessed necessity, to be bound to that, our nature and we (in all our liberty) to well love and like of.

And now, to the Causes. For, exceeding Joy, without a cause somewhat suitable, is but exceeding folly; but as the crackling of Thorns under a Pot: great noise, but no great cause (for, all is but a whin-bush.) If there be an exceeding in the Joy, there would be an exalting in the strength: If it excess in that; no defect in the ground. We take measure still, of one of these by the other.

Have we then a good ground? That have we: four (for failing) every of them suitable, in each respect. For, a triplicity in either of them.

The ground of all (the first) is, salvation, or being saved: and that, is ground sufficient. For who doth not rejoice; is not glad, exceeding glad, that is so, saved? But specially (which was Davids case here) saved, from a sudden and a secret mischief, imagined against him. There is no Joy (when all is done) to the Joy of one, so saved. Be it, who it will; even unus de minimis his: any, any one of the meanest.

But, the Person adds a great weight to the Joy; that, it is Rex in salute: Salus Regia; a Salvation on Royal; for the saving of a King. For he (by the Scriptures own valuation) is set at ten thousand. There be ten thousand salvations in one, when a King is saved. That, as Rex is the person, above all: So Salus Regis, is the Sovereign Salvation, of all.

Saved, then. And secondly, how? In virtute: Sed by strength. For, though it be good being saved, by what means we can; Yet if we might be at our choice, we had rather have it by means of strength, rather so, than by craft, or by running away. For, that is not in virtute. Salus in virtute, is ever, the best saving. And a King (if he have his right) would be saved, no other way: Not by flight, or by slight; but in virtute, Rex.

So have you two, Virtus and Salus, strength and salvation; Note them well: for not virtus without salus; nor salus without virtus, neither without other is full: nor both, without Tua Domine.

In virtute is well: so it have in salute after it. For, no not in strength is there matter of Joy (every way considered.) No, not in Gods strength: No Joy in virtute Dei, if it have not an in salute, behind it. They, in the latter part of the Psalm found Gods strength, but smally to their Joy. This makes it up: that it is not only virtus, strength: but virtus ad salutem, strength to save. Strength, not, as to the Kings Enemies, to smite them down, and plague them: But, strength, as to David himself, to save and deliver him. Strength is indifferent, to both: but in salute following it, determines it to the joyful side.

Now then, turn it the other way. For, as in virtute, if it end with in salute, is just cause of Joy; So (vice versa) in salute, if it go with an in virtute, makes the Joy yet more joyful. I mean, that as it is virtus in salute, strength to save, might to deliver; So, it is salus in virtute, a strong salvation, a mighty deliverance. No petty, common one; but a strong, and mighty one. This reciprocation lets it higher yet: that, not only strength set forth; but strength to save, protect, and preserve: Nor that neither, quovis modo; but mightily to save, strongly to protect, and strangely to preserve: So as the salvation may justly be said, Tua Domine, Gods own saving.

For, yet we are not where we would be. It is much to the matter of Joy, whose the strength is, from whom the salvation, who the party. For, not undeclinque, or abs quoque, yields full Joy: not by every one (hand over head.) The better the party per quem, the more the Joy still. The salvation is made the more precious; by the Author of it. That as it is salus Regia, on his part part that receives it. So it is salus Divina, on his that gives it, that is Tua Domine.

But to this [Domine] there belongs two Tua's. To virtute and salute, either of them, a Tua; virtute tua and salute tua: and this doubling of the point, we shall find concerns the joy much.

1. Virtute tua, not aliena.
Jonas 4. 10.

Psal 107. 8.

Nor sua.

* Psal. 44. 6.
1 Sam 14. 10.
Jonas 4. 7.

For, that it may not be, as Jonas's joy in his Gourd, up one night, down in another, (that is) vanishing and unsure; but sound and permanent; it is best, our Hosannah be in the highest: best, that the Hypostasis or substance of this our rejoycing, be in the strength of the Lord. Not in Chariots and Horses; we see what became of them (the Psalme before.) Hii ceciderunt, Down they went, and down went their joy with them. That, was in virtute aliena.

Nor, in his own bow, or sword, or number of his people (that, proved not well neither;) that, was in virtute sua: In virtute tua (we shall find) is the safer.

Nor, but that, in these humane strengths, we may rejoyce in some sort, with some caution: but that, they be all subject to the worme. Jonas Gourd was (mortal and mutable all;) not so soon had, but as soon lost, and sooner, a great deal: there is no hold of them, quotidie dissolvunt, we find it, daily.

Psal. 36. 7.

Hebr. 13. 8.

Therefore, welfare in virtute Domini, the might of the Almighty. In it, there is the sound joy. O, it is good rejoycing in the strength of the arme, that shall never wicher or wax weak: and in the shadow of those wings, that shall never cast their feathers; in Him, that is not there yesterday, and here to day; but the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever. For, as he is, so shall the joy be. In virtute tua, then: And salute tua too.

2. Salute tua.

Psal. 68. 18.

Luke 1. 47.

Nay, virtus tua, but salus sua; the power, that may be Gods; but the salvation, that is the Kings (one would think.) And, so it is: But he rejoyces not, in it, as it is salus sua. (at least, not so much) as, that it is salus tua, Gods; of and from God, who wrought it, and brought it to pass. Nay, even in salute tua (it self;) not so much in salute, as in tua; in the gift, as in the party that gave it. So doth no worldly man: he goes no further, than in salute (that he hath it, and safe he is;) cares for no more; for no tua, he. But David's joy, and the joy of the godly, is not so much, that he is saved, or had strength so to be; as, that it was God, sensit ferib his strength, so to save him, Nay, nothing so much in salute as in tua; in the salvation, as in God, his Saviour.

And, why so joyful, for this tua Domine, more than the rest? I shall tell you why, For this is the very exaltation, the highest point of the whole triplicity.

There was none of the Emperours (upon such an escape as this) but he took to himself presently, as an high honour, the Title of Θεοῦ υἱός, Preserved by God; and used it ever after, as an addition to his Stile, as glorious, as Alamannicus, or Parthicus, or any Title of them all.

A King thus saved by God, is more, than a King: (I mean) more than another King, not so respected, by God. More I say, than another.

Verse 5.

Psal. 20. 8.

1. More to be set by, in the sight of his own people: tantum speculum propitii Numinis, as a mirror of Gods favour; when they see him, thus taken into Gods special protection. The very next words are, His honor, is great, in thy salvation.

2. As, of his own people: So more esteemed of his Neighbours; when they see, their own, thrust in with Knives, and so cast down and fall; but him, after he was cast down, to rise, and stand upright: Hii ceciderunt, helps it much.

3. And lastly, more feared of his enemies; when they see, the eye of Gods Providence, the shadow of his wings, the strength of his arme, still over him; still, set to save him, and do him good; they will be afraid to plot ought against him, when they see it is in vain, God still defeats them, and upholds him still: when they see, Tua Domine in great letters, upon him.

Phil. 4. 4.

And now, are we come, to the spring-head, to caput letitiae; Tua, Tua, Domine. And when we have brought our joy up thither; up, to him: we turn it loose, let it exceed then: No where else; but, in Him, let it. If it be gaudete in Domin, Nay, then, Ierum dico gaudete (saith the Apostle.) Then, to it, again and again; double it and trebble it, and spare not. Good leave have you.

Now then: for this salus Regia and salus Divina (both) joyn the triplicities; see, if they suit not, this and the first (of joy.) In virtute, Gods strength, the very promise, and hope of it, yields joy within; there is letabitur. But, made apparent in salute, is further matter of exultabit (without.) But, Tua, Tua, Domine, to that, belongs o quam! there is, his place: O, how greatly shall David rejoyce within, triumph without, in the Lord; being saved by Him, so mightily, and so marvelously saved by Him! These two triplicities, are in the first verse (both.)

The II. Cause.
In satisfying the desire
1. Of his heart.
2. Of his lips.

Psal. 145. 9.

There is new joy in the second verse, upon a new ground (the goodness of God.) And strength, and goodness do well together; neither without other saveth. Strength alone, could well; but will not, till goodness come to it. Both, did it, here: For, in this verse, saved by strength: and in the seventh verse, In the mercy of the most High he did not miscarry. By strength; that, by no arme of flesh: By mercy; that, by no merit of his own.

But, His goodness is over all his works, over strength and all. For, it sheweth it self, not in saving only (which is a matter of necessity;) but over and besides that, in satisfying his desires (and that is matter of meer bounty.)

And

And indeed, no way doth His goodness so shew it self, as in sending us our desires: Nor nothing is so properly, the name of joy, as the desire sent. The denying of our desire; nay, the but delaying it, is an abatement to our joy: But the desire accomplished, that, is the Tree of life (saith Solomon:) And the Tree of life, was in the midst of the Garden; the very center of Paradise, and all the joyes there.

Prov. 13. 12.
Gen. 2. 9.

To satisfy, is one thing: and to satisfy by prevention, another. Between them two, they make up a new triplicity. For the former, of satisfying the desire, is set down; either, as conceived in the heart (Desiderium cordis;) or, as expressed with the lips (Prolatio labiorum.) It is much, to satisfy these two; His goodness, gives satisfaction both to the one, and to the other: satisfaction to the heart, by granting the desire: satisfaction to the lips, by not denying the request. And upon these two (in the verse) there is a Sela. For these two (one would think) were able to content any.

But, this Sela, is no Sela to God. He hath a Sela, or an Ela above this Sela. He hath, not only a satisfying, but a satisfying by prevention: not expecting either, but preventing both: granting that, which neither the lips ever mentioned, nor the heart once imagined: never came out of the mouth, nay, never came into the mind. And this, is the prævenisti of His goodness.

As for the heart and the lips, we will not be curious, nor stand scanning their order, which should stand first, the heart, or the lips. I know, though the tongue be the pen of never so ready a writer, the heart can endure faster, by much. But what skills it which is first? Both together (I am sure) can desire more, than either alone; and He will satisfy them both.

Psal. 45. 5.

Satisfie the lips: Petite & dabitur, Speak and speed. Satisfie the heart: Ave & habe, With and have. Not only, open thy mouth: but enlarge thy heart, never so wide, and he will fill it. This, is able, to satisfy David (I think) and to make him sing Sela, which is their damodiv.

Math. 7. 8.
Psal. 81. 10.

This, may satisfy David. But this satisfies not God, in His goodness to David: No satisfy with Him, but satis superans. And indeed, both these (make the best of them you can) are still, but a post-venisti, the heart and the lips go before, and Gods goodness comes after. Nay, till His goodness get before; till it be, a prævenisti; it satisfies Him not. And, that is; not when He stays for us, till we come to Him with our Petitions; Nor till he meet us: He with His mercy, us with our prayers: But, when He prevents us, before we stir a foot: and hears us, not when, but ante-quàm, before we request; and answers us, not while, but yet even we desire: opening, sending and giving; before we seek, knock, or ask: that (lo) is the prævenisti; that the blessing of goodness indeed.

3. In preventing both, with His goodness.

Esay. 30. 15.

Esay 65. 24.
Math. 7. 7.

The blessing of goodness: And as to satisfy, is one thing (quovis modo;) To do it by prevention, another: So, to prevent with goodness, is one; and with the blessing of goodness, another. For, that is (as the fat of the Sacrifice) the best, the most chief, the most choice; the most blessed part of it; blessed it self, and making David blessed, to whom He vouchsafes it.

The blessing of goodness.

Not, but that the other (the granting, the not denying) are good blessings, and very good: but in them, though there be the goodness of God, yet not it alone; there is somewhat of David too; his devotion (at least) in making his request. But in this, Gods goodness, is all alone; David doth nothing, neither speak, nor think. That he never asked, never thought to ask, before any, without any asking, he is prevented with, by this blessed goodness: and without any cause else. The Fathers read it, benedictio dulcedinis, and well: For, while we stand waiting for the post-venisti, our eyes fail many times, our heart pants, we flote between hope and fear: And this relishes not well with us, it is a little bitter. In prævenisti there is none of these. And the cutting off of these, makes it benedictio dulcedinis indeed, as having none of that unpleasant mixture with it. This is benedictio bonitas.

But (all this while) we see not, what need of this preventing? It is more than needs, sure. The other two, the not denying, but granting, might serve our turns well enough. Yes, there is more than need of it, in the matter of saving, many times. The danger comes upon us, and surprizes us so, of a sudden, as we have no time to gather our selves together; the heart no space to think, nor the lips leisure, to frame a request. Both fail us.

And this holds chiefly, in secret plots and practices. No man suspects; or misdoubts them: No man prepares for them: Unawares on a sudden, they break out, and even oppress us, so as they prevent lips and heart, and all. Such was the danger, in the Psalm: Such, the danger of the day. In these, if it should be put to a post-venisti, we were gone. A prevention must be. In these preventing dangers then, is the time; there, is the place, of this preventing goodness of God. Who seeing, what David would do, if he were not taken short: supplieth (of His blessed goodness) that defect, and before either of both, relieves and saves him. This is the blessed goodness, and Blessed be God for this goodness, above all: We all at some times or other, fare the better for it.

Will ye see now, how these three come again exactly to that of the joy? The inward desire of the heart, for that granted; letabitur, the inward joy of the heart: The outward request of the lips, for that not denied; exultabit, the outward voyce of gladness. But thou hast prevented them both, (both mental and vocal Petitions) without suit at all: O how glad shall David be, for the other twain, but for this third especially! For, this is the goodness, o quam! This exceeds all.

The specialities of that goodness.

Well: but all this while, we walk but in generalities: might we see some speciality of this blessing of goodness thus preventing him? Yes, we may. There follow mote; but here in the Text, are two

1. In his Crown.
2. In his Life.

two particulars, both matter of God's prevention, both matter of his desire. For, what would a King desire to have saved, or wherein to be blessed, but in 1 his Crown, and 2 his Life? And here, they be both. And in either of both, a several sort of preventing: Granted, and not asked at all, (as in his Crown:) more granted, than asked (as in his life.)

1. His Crown first.

But first: will ye mark, that here, Corona praevenit vitam, the Crown takes the place of his Life, hath the precedence of it: that his desire, is carried straight, to his Crown first, before to his Life, as to the blessing (of the twain) more to be desired. Thus we find them: and we may not stir them, they are of the Holy Ghosts own marshalling. Thus sets He them down, as if His will were, they should so be apprized: the Crown before Life.

Mark well: Posuit Coronam, and then vitam petiit: with his Crown on; so, he desires life. But Coronam deposuit, take away his Crown, and then vitam non petiit, he will not ask Life; he will not think it worth the asking. If he would ask it, it would not be given him: He, that takes away his Crown, will have his Life not long after. Fond to imagine otherwise: and it is the poorest comfort and conceit, that ever was; to tell them, their Crown they must part with; but be of good cheer, their lives shall be saved, that they shall. No: vivis & regnas, take regnas, and take vivis too; both, or neither here.

2. That Crown,
2. praevenisti in David.
* Psal. 78. 71.
Psal. 131. 2.

This is the Crown. And this Crown in David was a praevenisti, clear: a posuit without any petiit. For when he followed * his Ewes great with young, little dream't he of any Crown. It never came into his lips, it never entred into his heart, his soul (as himself saith) was meaned from any such matters, from so much as once fancying them: The Crown was in him a meer prevention.

And his second Crown.
2 Sam. 1. 10.
2 Sam. 12. 30.

Nay, two Crowns (we read) he came to. First, Sauls Crown, the Amalekite brought him that, and his Bracelets. To shew, it was a praevenisti meely: Not so much as an Israelite, brought it. That was set on, first. Some thirty years after, we find he came to another Crown; the King of Ammons Crown, at the winning of Rabba, a more massy Crown, finer gold, richer stones in it, than his first. That was set on too. This here in the verse, was the second (say all the Interpreters:) and this a praevenisti likewise. If you will but remember what case he stood in, to God-ward, at the coming of this second Crown (it was presently upon the matter of Urias and Bathsabe) you will say, he was rather in case of Miserere mei Deus, than of ought else: that God crowned him then, in mercy and loving-kindness. At this second Crown, it was veniam petiit, and nothing else.

Psal. 51. 7.
Psal. 103. 4.

And at his first Crown it was vitam petiit, and nothing else. All he ask't then, was his Life: it followes straight next verse. And sure, time was in the dayes of his Predecessour, when partly by Sauls own jealousie; but much more, by the wicked suggestions of Doeg, and such like, he needed to ask it. There was often (to use his own words) but a step between him and death. He asked Life, then; and so that might have been assured him, would have strained his prayer no further.

1 Sam. 20. 3.

We must think, when he was cooped up, one while in such a Cave; another in such a Wood; put to flie for his life, to Moab, to Gath (I wote not whither;) in danger still to be made away, by one treachery or another: when, he received every houre the sentence of death, in himself; all his mind ran upon vitam petiit then: then, this Crown, or the gold of it, or the fineness of the allay, never troubled his head, ye may be sure: Life he asked then, and more he asked not, and well had been him, if he might have had but security of that; I say, security of his Life, and let the Crown go.

2 Cor. 1. 9.

Behold then, the blessed goodness of God, that gave him both. Both, that he asked, Life (we come to it, by and by) and the Crown, and another Crown too besides, that he asked not. Satisfied him, in that: prevented him, in this: Nay, prevented him, in both; as ye shall see straight.

3. The Crown set on by God.

But, yer I pass to that; here is a point or two about Crowns, I think good not to pass. 1 The first is, against Usurpers of the Crown, Nemini ponente, nisi seipso; God not setting it on, none setting it on but themselves: That, not ipse sibi, sed Deus ipsi; Not ipse posuit super caput suum, but Deus super caput ipsius. 2 The second, is against Usurpers of a power, to take off that, they never set on (deponendi, quod non posuit) and thereby inruling upon, Tu posuisti.

The imposing Gods only.

1 First (the Crown) he raught not at it, caught it not, and clapt it on himself; it was brought him, he came orderly to it: it was set on, not by himself, but by another. And, that other, was the right Setter, Tu posuisti, God. Who will never set it on a wrong; never, but on the right head, if it be of His setting: and if it be not of His setting, it will never prosper, never flourish (be sure.) Tua Domine, here too; the Crown is in Gods hand, saith Esay; and His hand sets it on Davids, sets it on all their heads, that lawfully wear it. It made the Emperours to stamp their Coyn, with an hand coming out of the Clouds, holding a Crown, and putting it on their heads: and accordingly, to stile themselves, Θεοκρατορες, a Deo coronatos, crowned by God: as well they might (this, Tu posuisti, here, is their warrant.)

Esay 62. 3.

2 Secondly, against usurping of a power, to depose. God alone, is in the posuisti, at the setting it on. None but He, there: God hath set it on. Now what God hath set on, let not any presume to take off. Not any, but he that set it on. What, by Him alone done, by Him alone, to be undone. The Law is; Ad quem institutio, &c. To whom the Institution belongs, to Him and none other, the destination. To whom the imposing, to Him and none other, the deposing: none to interpose himself in that business, but He.

And the deposing.

And now, there comes a Tu interposuisti; and He, will have to do with that, this Tu posuisti, put on. Hath not potestatem ponendi (he confesses, and all the World knows) and yet would have potestatem tollendi, to take up that, he laid not down. But, if no Ponent, no Deponent. If none but God, at the Posuisti, at the setting it on; none, but He then, at the deposuisti, at the taking it off. The Crown, the Coronation, the Coronant (all three) blessings of His goodness: but the last, the chiefest, (the Tua Domine and a Te) the Tenure of it of Him, and Him only. Now

Now then, to joyn these three, to the first three. Allow the Crown a latabitur, and to the Coronation, or setting it on, an exultabit: but o quam! is for Tu posuisti (the Coronant.) To whom, they owe it; of whom, they hold it, without any Tu interposuisti, at all: And now, to his life.

For, what is coronam posuit, without vitam dedit; a Crown, without life to wear it? Here is that then: and that, in a new triplicity, 1 life it self, 2 a long life, and 3 a life for ever.

Vitam petiit. It is not, his first vitam petiit, this (we spake of even now, in Sauls time) it was, after his second Crown was set on; as is evident, by thus standing, after it. And this vitam petiit, bodes no good matter, For by petiit, it should seem (by all likelihoods) he was in case, to ask it, and so in hazard to lose it; it, and Crown, and all (a worse matter, than any yet.) It was not for nothing (the last verse, before this Text) they cry, O Lord save the King; by like the King was in some danger, of perishing. And so he was, as appeareth by the Sequel of the Psalm, and that, by a Mezimma, a secret mischief, imagined against him: were it, that of Absalom, or some other like exigent. But hard bestead he was, when it touched his life.

In that straight, here was the sum of the desire of his heart, of the request of his lips: O let my soul live, O let the soul of thy servant, be precious in thy sight.

And now, upon this Petiit, as upon a ground, follows straight vitam dedit. And herein, first appeared the goodness of God, in granting his desire, in not denying his request. Vitam petiit, and Vitam dedit; life he asked, and life he had: No sooner asked, but obtained. This was satisfying.

But then, he stayed not there; but prevented him further: gave it him, with advantage, with that he asked not. Life He gave him, so far his Petition, so far no prevention: but He gave him, long, too; long was not in the Petition, and so a meer prevention (the second kind of preventing, that before we spake of,) Life, was in the request, long was not; He gave it him, with long too, Dies super dies Regis adjiciendo, Adding dayes to the Kings dayes, till it was length of dayes (that is) a long Life, and a long Reign both. Which very point of (long) makes, that this Text will not fall in fit with every King, unless he have lived and reigned, as long (Davids time, that is, forty years;) for, so he must, ver dedit longam, can be said or sung of him.

But yet, here he stayes not, neither: but heaps upon him more still, and goes on to vitam in seculum seculi. For (to say truth) what is long life, yea, never so long, if it be not St. Hierons long, Nihil longum quod finem habet. If ye speak of long, that is truly long, that shall last for ever, that never shall have end. Our long, is but a short long; which goes, but by comparison, of a shorter. Else, what is it, to live out the full compass of mans uttermost age, if he live not so, in this life, as after this, he may live for ever? The meaning is: what is long life, without it be, a religious life; without it be, with the true fear and worship of God? which only hath the promise of in seculum seculi: without which, a short life is better than a long life; and no life at all (but an unimely death) better than both. Otherwise, the Heathen have hit upon coronam posuit, and vitam dedit, yea, and longam too: they be but latitia Gentium, these. But the life for ever, that is a Non omnibus datum, they among the Heathen never had it: that, is laurificans Davidis; that, the blessing of blessings; the transcendent blessing of all, to have the end of this life, the beginning of another life, that never shall have end: and that by the true service of God, in His Sanctuary.

Reckon this then, in seculum seculi, even worth all, and the very consummationem est, the highest perfection, God can bestow on David, That God gave him, to bring back the Ark, to pitch a Tabernacle for it, to lay up, and leave a great Mass of Treasure for the building of a Temple; himself devoutly to worship, and to make lawes, and set orders for a more solemn and seemly worship of God, than he found: He said himself, this was the joyfullest day, he saw in all his life; that one day worth a thousand. And for this his care of the Sanctuary, came this help to him, out of the Sanctuary (see the second Verse of the Psalm before) that saved him, saved him both his Crown and Life: and that after received him to everlasting Tabernacles, to a Crown and Life, that shall endure for ever. And further than this, we cannot go.

So have we the particular of that was sued for and granted: and of that was granted, and not sued for, by the special privilege of Gods preventing goodness. Himself saved, his Desire satisfied, his Crown fast, his Life assure, here and for ever.

And judge now, whether David had good cause to rejoyce or not. And whether, we may not here again (for a farewell) once more, over with our first triplicity of joy again. Latabitur to go to vitam (if you will;) and (if need be) exultabit to longam: But o quam! to be reserved, for in seculum seculi. There it is in kind. So it was never, before. There it is o quam! indeed. For there is a Crown, Life, and Joy that exceed all that we can desire; and there he shall receive them, and say o quam! indeed.

And what shall we say now of all this? Truly no more, than must needs be said. No more, than the Text it self draws from us. Here is, a fair Major (laid forth to our hands.) A King, that hath in this manner, found the strength of God, shew forth it self in his saving: and felt the goodness of God, in thus preventing his desires, touching both his Crown and his life: Any such King may (for he hath good cause;) Nay, shall and ought (for he is bound) to be exceeding, both joyful and glad. The HOLY GHOST gives His word; sayes, he shall so be.

If this be King David, He: If any other, He too. King Davids we have surveyed (as the time would give us leave.) Shall we now pray a Review, to see, if any other may be found besides, as deep in the causes, as he. For, if as deep in the causes, as deep in the effect: If the same in virtue, and the same in salute, the same latabitur (all will grant.)

And here now, choose, whether we will restrain our lips, and keep back GODS mercy and truth from the great Congregation. If we would so, and hold our peace, the day, even this fifth of August, would not : but would (as the Psalme saith) eructare verbum, break forth and tell us, that such a King there is, and who it is. That if there be, or ever there were a Prince upon Earth, that found, and felt this virtutem and salutem Dei, the mighty hand and help of GOD, in salvum him, saving him miraculously ; Verily, this day saith (not as Nathan, Tu es homo, but) Tu es Rex, You are that King, certainly ; even in all these four, in the Text, from point to point.

Our duty.

1 Reg. 12. 16.

For your saving first, This day, You were like to miscarry ; in danger to perish, so lose Your life ; and (that which to You is dearer than Your life) Your Crown, by some that hated You, and had contrived a Mezzimma, a dangerous practice and plot, against them both. You, being then and there, over-set with strength, came this virtus Dei : You then being upon the point to perish, came this salus Dei, and saved You strangely. There is the first verse.

For your desire satisfying. In that distress, I doubt not, but You might and did lift up Your soul to GOD, in some short Hosanna ; that of Hezekiah, Domine vim pauperum, Lord I am oppressed, succour thou me : Or, that of the Apostle sinking, Help Lord, I perish. If you did so, He granted your desire, He denied not your request : set a Sela then. But if being surprized with the extream suddenness of the assault, you did not, you could not do it : Then did He more, even prevent you, with his goodness : His sweetest, His blessed goodness of all.

And besides your saving (which you had reason to desire) that which you never would have desired ; I dare say ; that gave He you too. Exalted his strength, that you might, your triplicity. And those same Zamzummins, the Contrivers of the mischief, His hand found them, and they found it, He set His strings full against the face of them : destroyed them in His wrath, even in the very place : hath cast them into the fiery Furnace (where even now they fry :) rooted out their fruit from the Earth, and their name from among the children of men. All these, are word for word, every of them in the sequels of this very Psalme. All this, He did : You desired not all this, not their external destruction (I know ;) yet even with this also, He prevented You.

For your Crown : this is, sure, if ever any were prevented with a Crown, he was, that was so, in his Cradle ; had it set on his head there : when he was not, as a weaned Child (morally ;) No, nor a weaned child (literally ;) but indeed a child, not yet weaned (not so much ;) had neither lips to speak, nor heart then, to desire any such thing : he was prevented sure.

Further yet : if any found favour in setting on his Crown, yea, Crown upon Crown : and saving upon saving : After his first Crown, in danger to miscarry, and even thrown down (as upon this day :) And after his second, in danger again to miscarry, and to be blown up (upon another day) and saved in both : He was fairly blessed by His goodness (say I.) Which very saving (upon the matter) was a second crowning : even a new setting on that, that was sliding off. So that, Tu posuisti the second time, may truly be affirmed of this day.

And, what should I say ? If any, that his Crown saved, and his Life saved (under one ;) saved and prolonged both ; so that now these fifteen years together, you have held this day with joy : and (which is worth all the rest) besides length of this life, blessed with Gods holy truth, the pledge of everlasting life, the best of his blessings : Such an one, this Text doth warrant us to say, hath cause ; great cause, exceeding great cause his soul to magnifie the Lord, and his spirit to rejoyce in God his Saviour. Such an one, to perform all the three (here specified :) so many triplicities of favour would have more than a single rejoycing.

And shall not I add this ? As to rejoyce in God, so to seek and set himself, to devise and do somewhat, for which God may rejoyce in him : Somewhat for the Sanctuary, from thence came his help, and from no other place : Somewhat I say, that this joy may be mutual, as of you in God, so of God in you again.

Sure, there is a Bond, an Obligation to it, in latabitur ; the King shall rejoyce, shall be glad, shall do it, shall not be dispensed with, not to do it : Shall not please God, if he do it not.

But, where are we all this while ? excluded from this rejoycing ? The King shall (it is said) what, and none but he ? None is mentioned, but he : We would not let him (I dare say) do it alone ; there may be many thousands of us, that would not stand by looking on, if we had any warrant to rejoyce too. Give me leave then, to look out a warrant for us : we would be loth to sit out, and to lose our part in this Joy.

This Psalme, and the Psalme next before it, are two sister-Psalmes. That, a prayer for the Kings safety ; the last words of it are, Lord save the King : Why, the King is saved, they have that they prayed for ; and shall not then their Hosanna resolve into a Hallelujah ? Their careful Hosanna, into a joyful Hallelujah ? Yes, and so it doth, in this. For, as the last words of that Psalme are, Lord save the King ; so the last of this, So shall we sing ; sing for very joy of it.

They promised as much, there (in that Psalme) to rejoyce at the 5th. Verse. We will rejoyce in Thy Salvation. Latabitur Rex, here it is : Latabitur nos, there. They promise it there : and they will be as good as their word ; and so they are : For even in this Psalme, Latabitur Rex is the first verse ; Cantabimus nos is the last : That, if he rejoyce, at the first : we come in, at the last. If his at the beginning, ours at the end.

We have no part in David, is the voyce of a Rebel. All good Subjects have a part, have an inheritance in him, or (as the new taken up term is) a birth-right in him ; and in him, before his Law.

In the 2 Sam. 19. 43. They fall there to share the King among them (the Tribes) and to reckon up, what part and portion, each hath in him. Have they a part and portion in him? Why then, in his grief, and in his joy. And if they in theirs: we in ours. So that (to use the Apostles phrase) If he be sorry, who can make us glad? and if he be glad (to use the Apostles phrase again) he may truly say (and so may every good King, of his people) This trust have I in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all. Thus come we to have our part in his joy. And if (as it is well noted) Juda is in David, the very name of the one (with a very small transposing) in the others name: if Juda, in David; then Juda's joy, in David's: That if it be true, latabitur David; it will also be, latabitur Juda, & exultabit Israel; Juda will rejoice, and Israel be right glad. Look ye, there is now a warrant, there is Scripture for it. 2 Cor. 2. 21. 2 Cor. 2. 31. Psal. 53. 6.

Now then, if we have Scripture for our rejoicing, let us do it: and do it thoroughly; even, by and through all this tripartite joy.

Begin with latabitur: Rejoice in the spirit within. A good sign we do so: if we can but say the two first words here [Domine latabitur] unto God. The whole Text is a speech directed to God: He, made witness of our Joy. Therefore see it be hearty and true: there is no halting with him; see it be so, or tell not Him, it is so: He will find you strait, and give you your portion with Hypocrites; if you say to Him, Lord thou knowest thus I am, and yet thus you are not. Math. 24. 51.

In every truth, the Psalm seems to be penned for the nonce, that no Dissembler might say it. He, to whom it is to be said, is not man, but God: and He, can tell whether we speak as we think, or not.

But all true hearts will say it, and say it with confidence, and what even to God Himself, that knows the ground of the heart: Lord, thou knowest, what is within me, thou knowest that I am truly joyful, even there within.

There within, we must have it first: but there within, we must not keep it; nay, there within, it will not be kept, if there be this spirit and life of inward joy, in it. Out it will, with an exultamus: And, even so God would have it. No concealed Joy, no Apocrypha to day. All the seven seals of it opened. Shine out, as a Beam; flow forth as a stream, into a visible and audible exultation: shew it self as Gods Joy doth (in the 6. Verse) in the Joy of the countenance. That if any tell you, he is glad within (that he is) and hath the Clouds in his Forehead; if it will not serve: you may ask Him, but where is your exultatio? We must see, you are so. There is some leaven of malignity within, if there be not the voice of joy and gladness, that may be heard to the ear; if there be not the habit, gesture, and other signs of it, to be seen to the eye: that it may give evidence, to both senses. Apoc. 5. 5. 1 Cor. 5. 8. Psal. 118. 15.

Both these: and both, in no scant measure; no pinching to day: but good measure, running over; exceeding is the word of the verse. Exceed first, in this least, and lowest of all; in the low voice of joy and gladness, in these Panegyrics of praise, and joyful acclamations. But, exceed me them: how? by cantabimus, the hymns and musick of the Church (that is lowder) and to help them to exceed, all the Organs and other Instruments of the Quire below. But exceed we them too: How? with the Bells, the Instruments of the Steeple above: and with the found of the Trumpets, that will be heard further off. And yet exceed them too: How? with a Peal of Ordinance (if it be to be had) that will be heard, farthest of all. Luke 6. 38.

Exceeding is the word in the Text. Exceeding to be, in and through all; that our Hosanna may be in the Highest to day. And so for the other senses: in Shewes, and Triumphs, Feasts, and Fires, and other signs of Jubilee; whatsoever we use, when we use to exceed in gladness; when we would shew, we exceed in it: that so, o quam! may be said of it, it doth so exceed. All are but due, to this deliverance, to thus many triplicities in it.

We to exceed: for God Himself (we see) exceeds here. His ordinary is, but to give leave; or (at most) to call us, to rejoice. But here, He doth not give leave, or call us to it, with a jubilare; Nay, shall (here) is more, than a jubilare: that but exhorts; this binds us: shall be glad; that is, neither will nor choose, but be so. Yes, He makes us, speak to Him, Domine; and makes us promise Him, we will so: and having promised, looks we should make it good. God enjoins it: And if God enjoyn it, the day doth most justly, intercedere, even plead for it, that if ever we will do it, we would now do it, on the salvation-day it self. And never may he see day of joy, that joyeth not in this day: nor have cause of gladness, that for this cause, is not glad. And this, for shall be glad; and for the Bond, de presenti, that is in (shall.)

But besides it, there is a Tense, de futuro, in (shall) too. We may not lose it, for fear of tolletur a vobis. But, admonished by that Tense, bethink our selves, how to draw it further than the present Tense, even into the future (still shall.) John 15. 12.

Lateatur, or latabitur Rex; the Hebrew will bear both. But ours, and so all Translations choose latabitur rather. Not lateatur: that, is not so well; for, that is true, if it be done now, and but now, for the present, for this once: Latabitur, is better; for there, the doing it, is in the future still, still to come; still more joy behind.

For [the King shall rejoice] of this day, will be over soon at night. What, shall we end our rejoicing then, with this day? No (I trust.) But by virtue of this (shall) shall rejoice next year again; and when that is come, shall the year following; and so then again, the year after that: and so from year to year, donec cognominetur (shall) so long as it is called (shall;) so long as we look in to our Books, and find, shall rejoice, there. So long, and no longer. Hebr. 3. 13.

Now, that the Joy may so continue, the causes must continue too, there is no remedy. It is they, must must keep our latabitur, still alive: The causes were, salutem mittere, desiderium praevenire, coronam persequi, vitam dedit. To perform our Vowes then (Vota publica, I trust) to desire, that this Chain of causes, may keep whole still, and not a link of it be broken, or lost: that they may pass into the future, all: still salutem mittere, desiderium praevenire, coronam persequi, and vitam dedit.

Prov. 14. 30.
16. 24.

I will not go through them all: only touch the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and so I have done. Latabitur, and vitam dabit still.

Gn. 3. 8. 10.

Psal. 45. 7.
Psal. 132. 18.

Latabitur, Joy first: if it be but for vitam a di. For, Joy is a prolonger of life, dulcedo cordis & sanitas officium (as Salomon calleth it:) And even for that cause, we begin with it. But (to say truth) leave out latabitur, and what is there with-worthy? Truly, without it, neither saving, nor Crown, nor Life, worth the wishing. For who would be saved to live still in sorrow? And the Crown it self, it is not Corona desiderii, if it be not Corona gaudii. Yea, and who would wish life, but to take some joy and comfort in it? I will say more: let one be in Paradise, as Adam was. Even there, when Adam had lost his joy, Paradise it self, was no Paradise: as good in a dry Desert, as in it: without joy, Paradise it self is not worth wishing. Joy is all in all. Let that then be caput voti: that the oyle of gladness, may run down through them all, and over them all, make His saving precious to Him; His Crown flourish; His life, vitam vitalem, and worth the desiring. That, Joy may be the unity, of this Trinity, 1 salutis, 2 corona, 3 vita.

Psal. 89. 27.

But then, last, because all four of them hold upon life; to the end, they may hold, that that may hold; hold, and hold long. Some think, it is long enough already (and so long may they think.) I know not what to think: For (I cannot tell how) long and short, are said but comparatively: that so, a life may be long, and not long, diversly compared. To stand rating it, as the Law doth, seven years to a life; so, seven lives already: so compared, it is (in a sense) long. But, we will none of that. Nor as compared with the Princes round about Him: For He hath stood them all, and longer than any of them all: and hath had the honour long, to be Primogenitus inter Reges Terra, God's first-born now of all the Kings of the Earth: and long may He have it. Long, if thus. But then again; not long, if compared with the desires of our hearts, with the requests of our lips: Not long is compared with that, that may be: and whatsoever may be in this kind, we wish, it might be: even as long, as nature possibly can draw it out. Let this then, be our Omega, our summa voti; and that in no other words, than the usual words of the old Councils, to the Emperours or Kings, then present among them.

JACOBO REGI, a DEO coronato, a DEO custodito, Vitam longam, Annos multos.

To KING JAMES, crowned by GOD, preserved by GOD, Many dayes, long life. So long, till He change it, for a longer: till there come eternal salvation, an immortal Crown, life in seculum saeculi, nay, in saecula saeculorum, and make all consummate. And so I end.

Psal. 116. 13.

But before I end, in any wise let us not be so ravished, with our latabitur; but that we remember, Tua Domine withall. He, that sent this salvation, fulfilled this desire, the Setter on of these Crowns, the Giver of this life. So rejoyce, as in every of them, our joy come up to Him. So take calicem salutis (as we term it, I pray GOD, we so term it, and so take it aright:) but, aright we shall do both, if we forget not to call upon His Name, even the Name of the LORD. That He, which saved to day, may so save ever: that fulfilled his desire, may keep it still full: that He that set on His Crowns, may hold them on, hold them on fast: and last of all, add to the Crown, life; and to life, long; and to long, for ever and ever.

And even so, conclude we, as the Psalme doth: addressing our speech to Heaven.

Be thou exalted, O Lord, in Thine own strength: Thou wert so, this day: Be so still, again and again. So shall we sing and praise Thee for it. We now do so, for this dayes salvation, and all the joyful triplicities of it: So may we still: So may we long: So may we ever.

And (Good Lord) exalt Thou this Thy strength, and treble these thy triplicities to us; that we may for these Thy exaltations and triplicities, double and treble our thanks and praise to Thee. As this day, so all the dayes of our life. And this with one heart and voyce, beseech we Thee, to grant, &c.

A
SERMON
PREACHED

BEFORE THE
Kings Majesty,

At BURLEIGH near OKEHAM,
 On the V. of August, A.D.M.DC. XVI.

ESTHER, Chap. II.

EO igitur tempore, &c.

Ver. 21. In those dayes, when Mardochai sate in the Kings Gate, two of the Kings Eunuches (Bigthan and Teresh) were wroth, and sought to lay hands on the King Ahashuerosh.

22. And the thing was known to Mardochai, and he told it unto Queen Esther, and Esther certified the King thereof, in Mardochai's name; and when inquisition was made, it was found so, therefore they were both hanged on a tree: And it was written in the Book of the Chronicles before the King.

IN those dayes; So begins the Text: In these dayes; so may we begin. Nay, come yet nearer, on this very day. For, on this very day there fell out that, hath made, either beginning may well serve: In those dayes, or in these dayes. In diebus illis, we read there was a King, and he in danger: in danger to have hands laid on him; and that by two; two of his own people: for no cause, but that they were angry; and it appears not why. And, the issue was, the King delivered; and they that sought his, brought to a wretched end.

As we have read, so have we seen in diebus his. One of the same condition, a King too; and in the very same danger of hands laid on him, and by the same number, two: and of his own Subjects and Servants; and for no cause, but they were angry; and for no cause, that neither. And the issue here again, the King preserved, and they also came both (as these here did) though not the same, yet to a far more fearful end.

I speak, before understanding hearers: and (I know) there was not any but upon the reading of the Text, his conceit did lead him presently, who was meant by King Ahashuerus, and withall did even think of the Bigthan and Tharez of this day. And so made the comparison, with your own selves, before I could make it.

We shall gain, this year, by this Text, somewhat onward more, than the former we did. Till now, The Summe we have been all in Divinity; that, a heinous sin it is, there (this attempting on Princes;) But now shall we go to the Common Law, what it is there. For, here is an Affize brought against two, and the matter enquired; and a verdict found; and they had sentence, and were executed: For what? Even for Voluerunt insurgere, as the Fathers read it, or (as we) Quaſiverunt mittere manum; for but seeking, for but having a will, to lay hands on the King.
 [Bbbb3] we

Pfal. 76. 1.

Jer. 2. 30.

1 Cor. 5. 6.

And that, not the Jewes Law. There, we were, in the years past: now, we are not in Jewry, where GOD was known; we turn us to the Gentiles; we are in Persia now. And this we do, by the Prophets warrant: Get you (saith he) to the Iſſus of Kittim; and behold, send to Kedar, and enquire, if there were any such thing sought there, and were not condemned. For if there, Ad crubeſcentiam veſtram dico, I ſpeak it to your ſhame, that would be held the People of GOD, if any ſuch thing ſhould be found with you. They are worſe than Pagans, that ſo ſeek; we will empannel no Chriſtian, a queſt of Heathen men ſhall ſerve to attain them.

This is no Law of the Brain; it is written: Twice written, 1 written down, firſt in the Chronicles of Persia, by direction from the King. 2 After, written out of them, and enrolled here in this place, by direction from GOD. Enrolled I ſay, and properly: For, this of Eſther is not called a Book, as others are (not the Book) but, the Roll of Eſther. Originally it was but Persian Law (this;) and it had not been much, if that had been all; but, by virtue of this Enrollment, it is made the Law of GOD alſo. That from henceforth, it is clear at both Laws, the Law of the Jewes, and the Law of the Gentiles; the Law of man, and the Law of GOD; that all ſeekings of like nature are made criminal, and capital, and the ſentence of ſuſpenſi ſunt, upon them, holy, and juſt, and good.

Math. 19. 8.

Laſtly, written Law and old Law: For, of this (whether Divinity or Law) this we may ſafely ſay; It is no new Portugal Divinity, this almoſt three years old, taken up in diebus hiis. Nor no new Law of heri and nudiſterius: nay, not of Edward the third then, Et à principio non fuit ſic. No: it is old this, in diebus illis; in thoſe dayes. And thoſe dayes are as old, as the Second Monarchy, the famous Monarchy of Persia: the reports of which Nation are more ancient, than any ſave thoſe of the Jewes: no Book, but the Bible, ſo ancient as they.

And this methinks is not amiſs, when we can bring this Book to juſtify the Juſtice, or any way to give ſtrength, to the Law of the Land: It is pity, but it ſhould be ſo; either ſupport other mutually, facultas Juris, and facultas Theologia. As here now, we have the Roll of Eſther, and in it a Report of Bigthans caſe, long before there were any Year-books or Reports at the Law. We are willing to bring forth this Roll of ours (which, till an ancienter can be ſhewed, muſt be the leading caſe, to make Voluerunt, Treſon) to ſhew the Countrey Law, in this, to be no other, than GOD's is: that it is no otherwiſe, at the one, than at the other: Treſon, by Law; Treſon, by Divinity, by both.

Well may we talk of Law, the Law of the Land; but when all is done, never do men reſt, with that quiet and full contentment, as when they ſee, it is warrantable by the Word of GOD; hath the ground there: as this hath the ground there. Every word here, hath in it, his warrant: Quaſiſum eſt, for the Tryal; Inventum, for the Verdict; Suſpenſi ſunt, for the Execution.

The Diviſion.

I.

The main points are (as the verſes are) two: 1 the Kings danger, in the former, the verſe of danger; 2 the Kings delivery, in the latter, the verſe of delivery.

In either, the means of either. His danger: 1 Of what, 2 by whom, 3 what moving them.

II.

1. Of what? Of having hands laid. 2 By whom? by Bigthan and Tharez. 3. What moving; Nothing, but angry they were.

His delivery, 1 by what means, 2 of whom, 3 and how. 1. By what means? by notice taken and given of it. 2. By whom? by Mardocheus? 3. How? even caſually, as he was ſitting in the Gate.

But, the Kings delivery, it is not meet it ſhould go alone: It is therefore attended with their ruine, that ſought his.

That, is (as it were) the Train born up after it.

His danger by Bigthan and Tharez. In them two things, 1 what they ſought, and 2 what they found.

1. What ſought they? To lay hands on the King: What found they? One laid hands on them for it; appenuſus eſt uterque eorum in patibulo.

2. His delivery by Mardocheus. In him, two more: 1 His notice taken, by caſual overhearing them, ſitting as he ſate. 2 His notice given, by his faithful diſcovery of the whole to the Queen; and to the King, by her means.

III.

Then ſhould follow the legal proceeding, but I will ſpend no time in it. It is all out of our caſe this day. Our Bigthan and Tharez had no enquiry: No Jury went on them, they were not executed in form of Law. No further goeth our caſe, than the Kings danger, his delivery, and the cutting off thoſe, that ſought his life; and no further will we follow it; Not that.

But this we will, the ſolemn ſetting down and recording all this, 1 in the Kings Chronicle, as a memorable accident: 2 in GOD's Roll, as a famous caſe: 1 Of the Treſon of the two, to their eternal infamy: 2 Of Mardocheus's good ſervice, to his everlaſting praiſe: 3 Of the Kings happy delivery, to the univerſal joy of all his Subjects.

And there, come we in. For, we may nor; nor we will not forget in diebus hiis. And I ſhall make it appear (I truſt) that, whether we take the Kings, or the Parties; the danger ſought, or the delivery found; diebus hiis, will match and over-match diebus illis, in all points. And ſo, the joy of this day (our joy) to do the joy of them accordingly.

It

IT is a delivery, they and we celebrate: No delivery, but from a danger precedent, so was there here. The King in danger evidently. And he no sooner out of danger of these two, in this Chapter; But, the Queen in danger of Haman, in the next. So, the estate of Princes is not exempt from danger.

And of no small danger neither; no less matter, than having hands laid on them, that is, even of being made away. This King here (saith the Apocryphal Book of Esther, saith Josephus, say the best Writers) was Ariaxerxes surnamed Long-hand. If he: his Father was slain by Artabamus. The Father was, and the Son (we see) was sought to be; near it, scaped it narrowly.

And by whom this? neither by enemy, nor by stranger, but by his own. Of his own Subjects, of his own Household, of his own Chamber, and the chief of his Chamber then, too.

And why? for no evil of his. He was, for his moral parts (as all write of him) a good Prince. That would not serve: his life was sought, though. And no cause, but they were wrath; and no cause appeareth. All which sheweth Princes; that, for all their might and greatness, for all their innocency and goodness, for all the favours they vouchsafe others, it is not in them, their safety consists. It is in the mercy of the most High they do not miscarry: His hand, that holds them fast; His arm, that strengthens them, that the enemy is not able to do them violence, or the Son of wickedness to hurt them. To look up to Him, to hold good terms with Him, who in all their danger, either by Mardochai (as in the Text:) or without Mardochai (as in the day) can work their deliverance.

Deliverance from danger: Danger whereof? Delivery, where-from? Executed wherefore? All lead us to the Fact next; which indeed seems no Fact, for nothing was done, sought only to have been.

To lay hands is one thing: To but seek to lay, is another. To lay hands is, of it self (I know) a thing indifferent, therefore as the hand is. It may be a helping hand as Gods is, and then mitte manum (saith the Psalms) lay it and spare not. But if it be Satans mitte manum, upon Job, to do mischief; then stay it, lay it not. And such were these hands here; For, it is said, they were angry, and sought to lay hands. Angry hands, it is well known, are hurting hands. Either Feroboams, lay hands on him, to surprise his Person; or Herods lay hands on Peter, to do by him, as he did by James, to murder, and to make him away.

So to lay, is a sin certainly, be it on never so mean a Person. But, in Regem, is a Sin of sins. For, the sin (we know) is still by so much the more grievous, by how much the party is the more eminent, against whom it is. Now, there is not on earth a person more eminent, nay, so eminent as the King. A Deo primus (saith Tertullian) post Deum secundus: Count not God, he is the very first; Count God, and he is second. None so high as he; and so no sin so high as it. To lay hands on him? it is too rank that; away with it.

But that is not the case. It is not miserunt here: none were laid. No matter for that, it is mittere quæsierunt, and that is enough. To lay, and to seek to lay, though one be worse, both be naught, even missio, and quæritio both.

Seeking is a plowing for sin, and that is sin (saith Job;) It is a hatching of a Cockatrice-egge, and that (saith Esay) is poison, no less than that, comes of it.

Sin to lay, sin to seek to lay. As to lay though you hurt not; so to seek to lay, though you lay not. Ever, in what degree soever, Assuerus danger, is Bigihans sin: the Kings danger, their sin that seek it.

But if that be all (sin;) we shall do well enough. What care men for sin; if there be no Action at the Common Law for it? None but Westminster hall sins do men care for. God saw it would come to this; men learn no more duty, than penal Statutes did teach them; He took order therefore, to bring it within them too. We say further then, by virtue of this Text, besides that it is a grievous sin, prejudicial to the state of the soul, it is an heinous crime, a capital crime, amounting to suspensio sunt, as much as their neck is worth to seek this. It will bear, not an Action only, but an Enditement of life and death.

But it must be in Regem then, against Him: Against others, it is not so. This is a Prerogative Royal. And, as many other wayes, so hereby appeareth, what a King is. That whereas, in other mens cases, as touching the Law of life and death, to seek to lay, and to lay, are much different: in the Kings case, they be all one. Quæsierunt, if it be no more but so, the Law in that case to any other, is (I take it) favourable; and for a bare purpose, if no hurt ensue, no man shall suffer death. Not so, with the King; vulnerunt, against him, is death, if it may be discovered; and quæsierunt, if he but seek, though he find it not.

This helps us to understand the Text, Ego dixi, dii essis. Dii, for other causes; and this for one, that they participate this divine privilege; that, as against God, so against them, the heart is enough. Quæsierunt, the seeking, whether they find or not. Vulnerunt, the will, whether the deed follow or not. Thou shalt not speak evil of the King? how? not with thy lips? No; not in thy secret thoughts; saith the Preacher. If not, speak evil in heart; do evil in heart, much less.

Two Commandments (when time was) we said, there were in Nolite tangere, 1 Touch not, the act: 2 Have not the will to touch, the intent. Two cases there be upon these two: 1 Baana and Rechab, that did lay hands upon King Ishbosheth (2 Sam. 4.) 2 And Bigthan and Tharex case here, that did but seek it to King Assuerus. Both guilty, both suffered. Yea, Baana and Rechab, hang them, and well worthy; they murdered the King: But Bigthan and Tharex? Nay, and them too; hang them, though they found it not, only for seeking.

This then, I would have all bear away, it is the substance of the Text: diffusio favi (as I may call it) drops of it self without any streining. We find (here) in the Bible, a ruled case. Bigthans case, that held up his hand, not for laying his hand, but for seeking to lay it, Planè suspensus est uterque, put to death they were both. Why? Quasi fuerunt; for nothing, but that they sought to do it: they did it not; they might plead, Non est factum, they did it not. It would not serve, they dyed for it, for all that, upon no other Enditement, than quia voluerunt. Volumus is enough to attain any: If that can be proved, no pleading not guilty.

And this is the Law, not of the Persians alone (which yet was the Law of a hundred twenty seven Provinces;) nor ours alone (and so may seem to be the Law of Nations) but, that which strikes it home, by vertue of this Enrollment here, is the Law of God; God by thus recording it, hath made it his own; that if there were no Law for it, they might be executed by this Book, and this verse of it. Sit still then, and seek it not: for if you do, this is your doom, expressly set down here, by the pen of the Holy Ghost. Take it as a sentence from Gods own mouth; Qui quasi fuerunt, suspensi; qui quarunt, suspendendi sunt. They that sought, went; they that shall seek, to go the same way.

2 Kings 12. 21.

Yet for all this, sought it was then, and since, even the Kings life, Sed va per quos. And that, per quos, by whom, is the next point. The crime is bad; In Regem makes it worse: But the seekers, worst of all; for they of all other should not have sought it.

Two they were in number: For (I know not how, but) for the most part they go by Two's: Simeon and Levi, to the murder of Sichem; Baana and Rechab, to that of King Ishbosheth; Jozabed and Jozachar, to that of King Joa; Bigthan and Tharex, to this attempt here against Assuerus; and the very same number to that of this day. Treason is in Hebrew called שני a binding together: Two there must be, to be bound, at least: Two, to conspire, or put their breaths together, to make a conspiracy. Upon the point there is in all, never less than three: For, inter duos prodest Diabolus est tertius, All that do conjure, conjure up a third to them: The Devil makes them up three: for he is one still: he, the faggot-band, that binds them: he, the spirit that inspires all Conspirators. For (indeed) these unnatural Treasons do not so much steem or vapour up out of our nature (bad though it be) as they be immissiones per angelos malos, sent into it by some messenger of Satan, or rather by Satan himself. Postquam misit Satanus in cor Juda, After Satan had put it in his heart. For, he it is, that puts in their hearts, to seek to do it; and to do it, if God break not the Band, choak not the breath of them; as here he did choak it in these, with suspensi sunt.

Luke 21. 3.

Two in number, what were they? Nobly born (I doubt not) to be in the place they were.

What place? There be that think, Bigthan and Tharex were not their proper names; but the names of the rooms they held. And they have reason for it; Bigthan (as the word goes in that tongue) is Dapifer; Tharex, is Pincerna. Those (we know) were rooms ever counted of special faith and trust.

Of the Kings Chamber.

But plain it is, they were of his Chamber. Not of his Leiges alone, or of his Household, but (which is more) of his Chamber. It is a wonderful thing, the State, that the Persian Monarchs kept. No man, upon pain of death, to come so near, as into their inner baste Court, uncalled; if he did, he dyed for it, unless the King, by holding forth his Scepter, pardoned him his life. You will easily then imagine, in what place they were, that had free recourse into his innermost Chamber to go and come thither at their pleasure.

Chap. 4. 21.

Not only to do so themselves, but to be those, by whom all others were to go or come: No man to come thither, but by them. For that is meant by Lords of the Threshold, or qui in primo limine praesidebant, as the Fathers read it, the very chief over his Chamber.

The Septuagint (who should best know the nature of the word) they turn it ἐκπορευόμενος. ἐκπορευόμενος first, keepers; οὐκ ἐκπορευόμενος of the body. And many they had (for, many such Kings need have:) But these two, they were ἀρχαῖ, the chief, the Arch-keepers: had, if any more than other, the chief charge, the very principal of all: God do so and so to me (saith King Achis to David) if I make not shie: he Keeper of my head: and in so saying, thought, he promised him as good a place, as he had. He could make him no more. To this place had the King advanced these two: and these two were they, that sought this. That it should be sought at all, evil: that these should seek it, too bad. They, that if others had sought it, should have staid their hands; these to lay on their own, to seek it themselves.

1 Sam. 28. 2.

All men know, it was no mean preferment, early and late to be so near Assuerus's person; They had means thereby to do themselves much good. So had they, to do others much hurt, if they were not the better men. But, for others, hurt it skills not, if they had not thereby had the means to do Assuerus himself; if the Devil prevailed so far with him as he did. Of his chamber Dapifer, his dish; Pincerna, his Cup: Keepers of his body, principal Keepers: if they seek to lay their hands, they will soon find what they seek: the more dangerous they, the more his danger by them, a great deal. And is not this heaviness to death, when they that were so honoured, prove so unkind, when they that so trusted, trusted, so untrue; and may we not take up the Wisemans Oh, O wicked presumption, whence art thou sprung up to cover the face of the Earth!

Eccles. 37. 3.

Stay a little, and look upon them, as ye would upon a couple of Monsters. 1 To seek this, in Regem alone, were too much: to break their duty to their Leige Lord, if there were no more but that: to lay their hands on him, for whom they should lay down their lives: 2 Add then: not to a King only, but to such a King, nor to their Leige Lord alone, but to so good and gracious a Lord, that had done them so great favours, placing them so near him, trusting them so far, honouring them so greatly. (For, no honour, to trust; no trust, to the chief trust of all.) More than heathenish wickedness this, to render evil for good: and whose wealth they of all other bound to seek, to seek his ruine. 3 And they came not to that place, but they were sworn: to vilifie their Oath then, and to tear in pieces the strongest band of Religion. The hands that had taken that Oath, those hands to lay on him! 4 To betray their trust to him, that had laid his innocent life in their hands, and to make their trust, the opportunity of their treachery! 5 In a word: of the chief Keepers of his body, to become the chief seekers of his blood, the chief enemies of his body, and life and all! What can be said evil enough of these? Say it were lawful in any case (it is not lawful in any; but say it were) to lay hands on a King: yet they (in all reason) of all others, should not have been the doers: Est ille dignus perire, at non tu qui faceres tamen. Were not these Monsters then? was not their condemnation just? It grieves me, I have stayed so long on them; yet if I have made them and their Fact odious, it grieves me not.

What was the matter? what could move them, thus to play the wretches? Why they should not, many and good reasons we see. Why they did, none in the Text, but that they were angry: and that is no reason, but a passion, that makes men go clean against reason many times. Bigthan was angry, and Tharez as angry as he.

The cause
wherefore.
They were angry.

Yet, if it be but a little anger, it will over. Indeed (such it may be) it will. What manner anger was it? The word is a shrewd word; signifies an anger, will not go down with the Sun, will not be appeased. What speak we of the word? their deeds shew as much. We see, nothing would satisfy them, but his life: Nothing serve, but lay hands on him. That, they sought; so angry they were.

Ephes. 4. 23;

What angered them then? No cause is set down. And, none I think there was. If there had, we should have been sure to have heard of it. For men, to be angry without a cause, and ever with Superiours, it is no new thing.

Well: if no cause, some colour yet: if not that, some shadow at least. Somewhat we are to seek, why they did seek this.

If there be in the Text any thing to lead us to it, it is in the first words, or not at all: In those days. In those, angry they were: as much to say, as before those days, they were not; but, in those, then they were. Else, there is no cause to mention that, of the days, but to make this difference: Out of the Text, nothing can be picked else.

Why what days were those? That goes immediately before: The days wherein Assuerus had made choice of Esther, to match with her, and make her his Queen; and had made a great Feast upon it. At the Feast (it seems) they surfeited, they could not brook that match, at any hand: Some ambitious in desire of their disappointed by it; likely, that was the cause. This was fain to serve for the occasion, for lack of a better: A bad one (we say) is better than none.

Angry, for As-
of Esther.

What, the great King of Persia find no match in all his own brave Nation? Never a Persian Lady serve him, but he must to this vile base people (the Jewes) his captives and slaves, to pick him a match thence? What a disparagement is this, to all the Persian blood! It would make any true Persian heart, rise against it.

Nay then a worse matter: (now, ye shall see them grow godly on a sudden, and wax very zealous, as the fashion is.) Nay then, we shall have a Queen of a contrary Religion; we shall now be all Jewes. One that cares, neither for Mithra nor Oromasdes; One by all likely-hood brought in, to be the utter ruine of the Ancient Religion established in Persia, yet she came there.

This was it (they tell us) and like enough so to be: As (ever) ye shall observe marriage-matters are made occasions oft, to serve to many purposes. For, Assuerus may not marry, but where Bigthan and Tharez appoint. Else, they will be wroth, and fall on seeking. If any be in the Text, this was it. And was not this (trow you) a goodly occasion, and a substantial, to make them quit their Allegiance, forget their Oath, cast behind them all his Favours, betray their Trust, Truth and all; lose all these? For, all these must they lose; before they could seek that they sought.

But, why found they it not? It was not so easy for them to find at first, by reason that, for any to come there, in the Kings presence, with a weapon, nay but having his hands out to be seen, nor having them hid, held close under their garments, it was death: Cyrus put to death two of his Kin for it. That so, they might well seek: and so I leave them seeking that, I pray to God they may never find. But the true cause was, God was angry with this anger of theirs, that their seeking succeeded not.

And now are we come to the Catastrophe, or turning about of all. For by this time in Esther was Mardocheus, Mardocheus came to the knowledge of it: forth it came. Nay, if it come forth, the King shall do well enough. To discover the Treason, is to deliver the King.

This was by Mardochai: what was he? No Persian (to begin with) but a stranger by Birth, and by Religion; and a Captive, besides: One that had better reason to have sought it, than they. He had had as great causes, as any are by them alledged, that favour such seekings. For, this King held him, and all Gods people with him (to use Esthers own terms) in bitter captivity, as a Tyrant. And ths, worse he was (at least, as evil as an Heretick) for he was an Idolater. One would think, it had been a work meeter for him (this:) He to seek; and they to keep him, from finding that he sought; they him, not he them.

3. As he sat in the Gate.

And how came he to it? It skills not how, but as he sate in the Gate, he came to it. This is all; he sit'd not, but sate still. And sate not in any lurking corner, but even in the broad Gate; and there came he to it, or it to him. This was Gods doing sure. Their anger boyled, so signifies עצב and boyled over, it should seem, and brake out into some words. Else how should Mardochai take notice of it? They would never trust him with it (ye may be sure) being a stranger. A Jew, with their displeasure, at the match of a Jew, never: but, some big words came from Bigshan, that by Mardochai were over-heard.

What in the Gate, in presence of a stranger? The Targum (the most Ancient Exposition we have) saith, God so took away their wits, as they forbore not to talk of it, he sitting by, but did it in a foreign strange language. Knew him a Jew; thought he could speak no language but his own, or a little broken Persian perhaps: not the tongue they had their conference in. Which (it fell out) Mardochai understood, as well as they. And thus all came out, God would so have it: who so assented them, to make a way, as to His mercy, for the safeguard of the King: so, to his justice, to bring that upon their own heads, they sought to have brought upon the Kings.

And Mardochai, when he had it once, he kept it not: Made it known, not to him he next met with: but discreetly, where he knew he well might, to the Queen. She was, by blood and bringing up, faithful to him; and so did she shew her self: for, what he broke with her, she told the King, not in her own, but in Mardochai's name. The fashion is otherwise with some; to tell it in their own names, and never speak a word of Mardochai, from whom in truth it came. Well, the issue was, what she told the King, seemed to him no idle fancy of some vain man, but such as was meer to ground an equity upon. So, they were apprehended, and committed, and so to the Law we leave them. Well, by this means the danger is over, and the King safe, thanks be to God.

2. The strangeness of the means.

And many ways doth God give just cause, to mankind, to admire His high providence, in bringing to light such attempts as this, against his Anointed: such variety, so diverse strange means he hath, to effect it by; as here, in this I note four unto you.

1. The party first, Mardochai, that by him. That this health should come to the King of Persia, neither by Mede, nor Persian, not by any of his own people, but by a stranger, who was none of his Lieges, born out of his Allegiance, a Jew, a meer Alien; that this should come forth by him, and by no other means. But so is God, wonderful in his wayes: and will by an honest stranger sometimes, save that, a bad Subject would destroy. That in default of his own, God would have him saved by a stranger, rather than not at all.

2. Observe again: that, to this stranger it came no otherwise, but as he sate in the Gate. We may not pass that; it stands in the front of the Text, as the special means of all. That it thus came, and no other way, as: he sate still; still, and went not up and down searching: In the Gate, a publick place, not any privy Corner or Lobby; he not diving into their bosomes, but only there sitting, it should thus happen; he should over-hear them talking together in a strange tongue (though to him not strange:) by a meer casualty, one would think (all this;) Indeed by a high and wonderful disposition of Gods heavenly providence, this; that, even as he there sate, it should be brought to him thus.

And very oft God doth bewray bad enterprises by such (one would think them) meer casual events. But, in maxime fortuitis there is minimum fortuiti, & qua fortuna fieri videntur, fato sunt. It seems chance, that is (indeed) destiny. And never let them look for other (all the Bigshans of them.) One shall be by a wall, or at a window under the house eaves, near one cranny or other; God will so dispose: some body shall be within the hearing, when they full little think. For, God will have it out certainly: Rather than not, by some meer accident, some that sits by chance in the Gate, some that goes by the Gate shall bring it out, rather than it shall not be brought out.

3. And may I not add this for a third, that all this came out by occasion of that which they pretended for their occasion. That very match, which was so great a mote in their eye, that they so maligned at, they must needs swear the Kings death for it; that very match was the means that brought Mardochai thither, to the Gate: for thither he came to hearken, not for any such matter as this, but how the new Queen (his Niece) behaved her self; what report went of her. And as it fell out, this (which he came not for) there he heard: his thither coming, by this hap, was the happy means for this happy discovery: happy for the King; happy for the whole Land. But all came by his resort thither, by means of the marriage. So, that, they made their occasion, was made the occasion of their ruine.

4. And let this be the last, that even from their own selves, He brought it. They that go about the like, their own hands shall make them to fall, they shall be ensnared in the words of their own lips: rather than it shall not come forth, it shall come forth ex ore tuo servus nequam; come out at their own mouths, as here it did. Their own tongues shall fall on babbling, their own pens on scribbling: God will have it out certainly; even by themselves disclosed, rather than not at all. And this for Gods mercy, He had here; and still hath to bring such plots to light, means marvellous in our eyes.

Psal. 63. 8.
Prov. 6. 2.
Luk. 19. 22.

Now of Mardochai, the means of all. For, though as this days delivery was, we have no great use of him; there was no Mardochai, no discovery there; this dayes was another manner of delivery, of a higher nature than so: yet there is great good use of him for all that. Indeed, Mardochai, exemplum nostrum, he is our pattern: Ours, that be true men. He set before us a mirror of a faithful good subject, one according to Gods own heart. For, this is a perfect Scripture, we have in it both what to fly and what to follow. As there be in it, two bad; so thanks be to God, there is one good. To avoid them: to be like to him.

Like to him three ways: 1 Like him in his innuit: 2 Like him in his nunciavit: 3 But above all, like him in that which was the ground of all: that he was a faithful subject to a strange and to a Heathen Prince.

Like him first, in his innuit. Not to turn the deaf year to Bigthan and Tharex, as if we heard them not: nor to look through our fingers at them; as if we saw them not. None knew, he understood the language they spake in: He might have carried it slyly, made as if he had known nothing, not known that, he knew; nothing to compel him, but his conscience, to take notice of it. But Salomon in his mind, Save him that is designed to death, wilt thou not deliver him that is led to be slain? Any, but the King more than any, If thou sayst, I know not of it, he that ponders the heart, doth not he understand? He that keeps the soul, doth not he know the contrary? And shall not he pay every man, (and so thee) according to thy work? Well for, innuit, since from the gate it came, good therefore that Mardochai sit there, or (which is all one) that they which sit there have somewhat of Mardochai in them: Be, if not curious and inquisitive, yet vigilant and attentive. And yet curious and inquisitive I would allow, in the case of a Princes safety. And the King and the Queen to have their eyes, and their ears abroad (both of them) and all little enough. We see for all the Kings wise men, that knew the times, never a one of them knew this time. This good (we see) came by Mardochai, came on the Queens side.

Like him in his innuit; to know; Like him in his nunciavit, to make it known. Careful to get notice, faithful to give notice of it in due time. God, whose will it was, it should thus happily come to him; His will it was, it should as faithfully come from him. He knew, by the Law he was bound, if he heard the voice of conspiracy and uttered it not, it should be sin to him (Leviticus V.) He knew (by the Psalm) what it was to partake with other mens sin, what to have his part with a thief or an adulterer; and if with them, with a traitor much more. He knew by the Proverbs, he was now in as deep as they, as good lay his hands on him, and seek it, as lay his hand on his mouth and not seek to prevent it, keep it in and conceal it. He knew (for he told it Esther after) that if he had not bewrayed it, God wanted not his means, to have brought it out some other way. And last, he knew, by the Prophet, God would have set his face against him; for so cloaking it; and have rooted him out. All this he knew: but, the mystery of the seal of inquiry (the Seal of Confession) it seems he knew not. It was not graven then, that seal; nor many hundred years after. That shuts up treason, as a treasure, under a sacred seal, at no hand to be broken: no, though all the Kings lives in Christendom, lay on it. This act of *Mardochai*s marres the fashion of that Seal quite.

And, this may be said of him, he would never have laid any hands on himself: for then he would have let it proceed, and not hindered it, by his bewraying, as he did. This also: he that did thus disclose, for a need would have taken an oath to disclose: Sure I am, would never have taken oath, or Sacrament, not to disclose it: would never have stuck at the oath of Allegiance (that is once:) but it may be, would have stuck at the Seal of Confession, for ever coming upon his lips.

This for nunciavit. And all this he did, yea, though himself were no Subject born to Ahasuerus; nor he his natural Prince; but born out of his Dominions, far off, in Jewry. Did it, not for Josias, or Jechonias, or some King of his own: Did it for Ahasuerus King of Persia, one that held him and his Country-men captive and thrall; yet to him he did it.

Yea, more than that yet, this did he, to Ahasuerus not only a stranger, but more than so, to Ahasuerus a heathen man, an Idolater, one that worshipped the Sun, and the fire, every day. As, that did not hinder him, that of a diverse Nation: so neither did this, that of a diverse, and that of a false Religion. For though he were of a diverse Religion from the King, yet was he of Gods true religion; that teacheth men to be true to their Prince. Be he a Jew, or be he Gentile, Assyrian, Persian, or what he will: Be he a right worshipper, or be he an Idolater; Be his Nation, or be his Religion, what it will be: though the King be (as Ahasuerus) a Pagan; though they be (as Mardochai) the only true Church and people of God; to be true to him though. But none of that religion, that is fast to the Catholick, loose to the Heretick. If it be Josias, O then stay your hand: but, if Ahasuerus, if Ethnicus, or quasi; if excommunicate, then set Bigthan and his hands free to seek, and to find, and to lay them on, and spare not. This Religion was none of *Mardochai*s, (nor let it be any of yours) witness this act of his, an holy and good act. For which (though not presently, yet) not long after, he was highly rewarded by the King, and for which, he is set here (his name; and his act both) among the Righteous, to be had in everlasting remembrance.

Of the train now a word. I said I would tell you, what they sought and what they found. That they sought they found not. Not that; but pity it is, but they should find somewhat, seeking as they did: and so they did. They found somewhat instead of it, which had been better lost than found: they found a halter scarce worth the finding: they found their own perdition: and the worst kind of it, perditio tua ex te, themselves the authors of it. Ex ore tuo, by that which came from themselves out of their own mouths: the Devils quarite & invenietis right.

The solemn Recording of this.

And will you see how fitly every thing fell out? They sought, and they were sought into; quæsitum est. They sought and found not: they were sought into, and found. They were wroth with the King, and God with them; the heavie wrath of God was upon them. They would have laid hands on the King, hands were laid on them for it: up the Gibbet they went, and off they went, and the world was well rid of a couple of traitors. Before they could find, they were found themselves, and their fact, found: the Law was not to seek; that, was found and founded long before. A Law, that now hath received the approbation from God: and so now, a right Persian Law, never to be altered.

Have we done? not yet, this must be entred first, written: Nay written over twice, a Duplicate of it. Written first in the Chronicles. And that before the King, of such importance the King thought it.) And then this writing here of the King, is here written over again, a new order from God. So, two Confess: One, in the Kings Chronicles, the other in Gods Canonical Scripture, of this act. Two Copies extant, one in Rotulis Registri, the other in Archivis Ecclesie; One among the Kings Records, the other in the Churches monuments. What should this mean? Something there is sure, in the adding of this clause, about the writing it up. I know no meaning, but that God liked well of the writing of it in the Kings, that he would have as much done in his own Records.

Why the King would have it *Chronicle*d, is easily seen. It was a memorable event, worthy to be set down there. But why God? Sure he saw, these Chronicles would not last so long, as his will was, this example here should. And indeed they being now lost, we had been little the better, if it had been there only; He made it therefore to be entred into his own Chronica Chronicorum, that never should be lost. Well it was; it should stand in the Persian story while it did last; but God for failing, provided further, to have a memorandum of it in his own Sacred story, that last, as long as the world should last. That, that is there, is ad perpetuam rei memoriam, indeed.

Another reason. Being in these Chronicles, it would have spread no further than Persia, or the hundred twenty seven Provinces at the furthest. Gods eye looked further: that not Persians only, but Jews;
Nor both those, but Christians too: Not the hundred twenty seven Provinces alone, but all the Provinces in the earth should take notice of it. I speak with the Apostle, Hath God a care of Persia? either writ he not this for our sakes? Yes, for our sakes no doubt he wrote it, that we also might be the better for it.

1 Cor. 9. 9.

The better: two ways: First, to know Gods censure of both these, in diebus illis, for the present; The due praise of him by whom the delivery, The just condemning of them by whom the danger; that none that so seek shall be saved by his book: For that (we see here) brings them to the gallows, and there leaves them. Or rather there leaves them not, but by this Scriptum est sets up their quarters, there to stand and be seen, by all that look in it, to the worlds end. And this is worse than hanging, yea in chains; for, the carcasses of those, in time will consume and drop away and come to nothing; so shall these never, but remain as fresh still, as the first day, they were set up, to all generations to come.
It is that, that grieveth the noble generous nature (I dare say) more than the execution it self, there to hang upon the file in Bigthan and Tharez's infamous black roll; their names to be read there, for ever.

Psal. 78. 8.

But, this was written also for them that come after, and a double use there is of it that way: As the parties, and their facts, be good or bad, that there are registred. If bad, then (as in the seventy eight Psalms) Ne sint sicut, not to be like this Bigthan and Tharez. Ne sint sicut, not to be like them in their wicked attempt; Ne sint sicut, that they be not like them in their wretched end.

Not like them; but like Mardochai (A sint sicut there:) that coming to the notice of so wicked a design, took himself bound in conscience to detect it: yea, though it were against a stranger to him in nation, a more stranger in religion to him, yet to do it. Here, Inspice & fac (saith God, in his Law:)
Vade tu & fac simile, (saith Christ, in his Gospel.) In a word: this was written to the end, to tie up all hands from seeking as they did; and to open all mouths, to disclose, as he did: To make men loyal to their Princes, though Heathen Idolaters, such as Ahasbuerus.

Exod. 25. 40.

Luk. 16. 37.

And if this were the end; if any shall go quite cross (in a manner) in their Scriptum est's to this Scriptum est, in all these three: 1. Let loose the hands to that, these (here) sought and are condemned for it: 2. Stop up the mouths from disclosing of that, Mardochai (here) did, and is commended for it: 3. And both these, not in the case of Ahasbuerus, but even of a Christian Prince; what think you by them?
what do they say in effect; but Sint sicut Bigthan & Tharez, Ne sint sicut Mardochai.

I report me to your consciences: God thus skoring up these, that but sought to lay their hands on a Heathen King, would He ever approve of such, as under-hand set on Subjects to go past seeking, even to lay their hand on Christian Princes, Most Christian Princes, their own Princes; Own by nature and nation, Own by mass, and religion too, as in diebus his we have seen two in France (a Bigthan and Tharez, both) one after another?

And what for Mardochai? They swear men, they give them their maker upon it, never to disclose that, which Mardochai is (here) honoured for disclosing. Yea, and approve, nay more than approve of some; for doing clean contrary to that, Mardochai did here; even for concealing; nay; for sealing up (and that under a holy Signature) as foul and wicked a treason, as ever was.

This hath been done. But, we are in writing, what say ye to that? Will ye compare but the writing of diebus illis, with ours in diebus his? Let there be a Book written saith God (this of Esther) that no man ever do the like to these two, that no man ever seek to conceal those that shall so seek:
Let there be a book written (saith some body else) as it were an Anti-Esther to this Book of Esther, to set men on to seek that, these here sought, and to teach them the way how to find it; to point out, who

who shall be Bigthan, when and how they shall seek to lay, and lay both: As it might be a Book written by Suarez in defence of Thariz (his name of the two names, nearest) in some case to license the seeking: and to command the close keeping of such gear as this.

But yet we have not all: Writing a Record, making up a Roll, is more than writing a Book. Every authentick Record (as is this) is of the nature of a President, to do the like; of a Copy for us to write by. So here we have further a warrant, to make up our Records, by this Record, to Record all that lay their hands, for such as Bigthan and Thariz; and all that disclose them, for such as Mardochai. Ever, upon like occasions, to make like entries, shall we do it? Write them down (saith the King) in the Chronicle. Write them down (saith God) in the Bible, for Traitors; these two. Write me down some such as did the like or worse, for other manner persons in another manner Register, even for no less than Martyrs: You know, who it is.

Register me Mardochai (saith the Holy Ghost) for a party well deserving, for uttering his knowledge of so wicked a Treason. Paint me up such an one (saith another ghost) straw and all, and in the border print me him Holy Martyr, for not disclosing as foal a Treason, nay fouler a great deal.

But trow you this to be Gods Vicar, that thus makes act against act; checks Gods Records, with Counter Records of his own; affronts Gods Chronicle with his New Calendar on this fashion: Or St. Peters Successor? Nay not his: of all others, his least: He laid his hand on his weapon, for his Master; So would he reach, and not otherwise. Judas, he indeed laid none himself, but he it was gave the watch-word, This is he, lay hands upon him. So that, Judas's Crew (it seems) they be that do, and no better than Judas himself, that so teach. No Apostle did ever lay hands, but Judas; He did: his Disciples they be; his Successors (not St. Peters) that bid it.

We may, and will then by his warrant, be so bold as to enter them Traitors in the Chronicle before the King: By what warrant, they may register them for Martyrs, in the Calendar before the Pope, let them look. Ours we shew, let them shew but the like, and carry it: Else, if he see, allow, and print Books with privilege, that tend to the manumitting of Thariz's hand, and to the sealing up of Mardochai's mouth; if under confession he animate Thariz, and with his Seal of confession, muzzel up Mardochai; if God write one way, and he another, in effect; write King, write God, what they will, write me him Martyr, we will be so bold as to write him up with St. Paul, for Armeniac, one that opposes himself flat against this Book, and the Writer of it; which Book stays all hands from laying, and opens all mouths to the betraying such as these.

I will pray you, I may rather forget my self a little, than forget in Diebus his after all this; we promised to shew, that they match and over-match in diebus illis. That they match in many points: That Kings both, both in danger, in the same danger, both; by the same number, and by those of the same rank; and upon the same motus, great anger for little cause. Again, that both were preserved, and both strangely: that the seekers in both in stead of finding that they sought, found their own confusion.

But as in many, they match; So, in many more, doth this day match over-match those days. More degrees in our Dyal, than in theirs; the day goes beyond the Text: and not this Text here alone, but any other, that ever yet I could find. The more (say I still) are we all bound to God for His goodness, that hath so magnified His mercies toward His Anointed, and in him to us all, as He hath vouchsafed him such deliveries in diebus his, as He never vouchsafed in diebus illis, to any King of his own peculiar chosen people, or of any other under the Sun. Such to be found in our Chronicles, as not the like in the Chronicles of Persia: Nay, not, of the Kings of Juda and Israel: But are sine exemplo, ours; none coming home, all falling short of them.

Which (methinks) I can let you see sensibly; and so, that we have greater cause to rejoyce in this of ours. In the Kings first. The King in diebus illis (make the best of him) was but a Pagan, a worshipper of Idols: these be Bars in his Arms. The King in die hoc, neither Heathen (I am sure) nor that can have the least touch of Idolatry fastned on him: he that shamed not to say [No Christian] and hath been fain since to eat his word, he durst not say an Idolater; that, would soon have rebounded back upon himself. And no Idolater is a Christian; nor Christian, an Idolater, I am sure.

This first vantage then we have here yet: Alwayes the very state of Kings, in it self, without any other addition is dear unto God (we see.) Assuerus here doth assure us of that, who was thus preserved, only because he was a King, and for no cause else. But I hold clearly, a Christian King, to be more than a King; more than a Pagan King: and so Major Assuerus hic, and de majore majus gaudium; and so we, of the twain more cause to rejoyce.

Next, as both Kings, yet not both like; so both in danger, and that not like neither. The danger of in diebus illis, was but of hands laying: the danger of this, of hands laid. On Assuerus, no hands were laid: it came not to that. It came to that, here. On they were, come off how they can. Those in the Text, but sought: they on the day, found what they sought. It was past quasi verum; it was plain miserum. That was the case, this day. No such thing in those days. Assuerus was not offered the point of a naked Dagger; not taken by the Throat; not grasped and tugged with, till both lay on the floor. All this danger was but de futuro; sought to have been, and might have been, but was not. This was de presenti, present danger, of being presently made away, in a corner, by the hands of bloody wretches; that not only sought to lay, but found that they sought, and did lay. Now, the greater the danger, the joy for the delivery (ever,) and so our joy the greater. For, no comparison between the dangers: that is clear.

Mat. 26. 48.

No more was there between the Attors, by whom the danger grew. Bigthan, bad enough (I grant;) but behold a worse, a bigger than Bigthan here. Bigthan and his fellow might have gone to school to them. They were angry, and so shewed themselves to be, and the less dangerous for that. These were as angry as they, but shewed it not. They brake forth in terms, that it came to Mardochois ear. These had learnt their lesson better; not an evil term came from them, no shew of anger appeared, but fair and false semblant all. So much the more likely to do mischief (say I;) so much the more like Judas treason, the worst that ever was. For, no betraying, to betraying with a kiss. Give me angry Bigthan, rather than fawning Judas: to welcome one kindly, and set on privily, with Judas watch-word, This is he, lay hands on him; from such, God deliver us. The more the parties such, the more our joy; you escaped out of their hands.

Both Kings were delivered: so far, equal. But then again, great inequality in the manner; very great. That, in those days, by a Mardochai: All was regular, went the common ordinarie way, upon a discoverie. Quotidiana sunt hæc, to be seen, to be read in everie Chronicle. But on this day, there was never a Mardochai to discover ought: Mardochai failed here. A conceit there was, somewhat should have been discovered in another kind; but the plot it self, no discoverie of it, till the very instant; till one appeared in arms, till out went the dagger, till the dagger discovered it self: God was faine to be Mardochai, to supply his part: though he were wanting, God was not. By whom it is true Ahasuerus was delivered: but, You delivered, after a more strange manner (I report me to all.) Now, the more strange the manner, the more the joy ever. Then Mardochai did somewhat toward it: this came merely from God; neither Mardochai, nor any else; sitting in the gate, or out of it; there or any where else.

Yet let me add this, that you might be beholden to God (even that way too) He hath fitted you that way also. This fifth of August, without a discoverie, the fifth of November with a discoverie. So, with Mardochai; and without Mardochai, hath God wrought for You, in diebus his: that we might everie way be bound to him, and that, everie way our joy might be full.

Now, in both, as the hand of God was stretched over both Kings to save them; So was the same hand stretched out against both those, that sought their lives, to bring them to evil ends; both which may ever be the ends of such beginnings. There was no wonder in theirs; there, all was done by a Legal course, a fair judicial proceeding, they indicted, convict and executed by course of justice. Good Lord, with what ease was Ahasuerus delivered, even sitting still! There was no wonder in this, at all. So was it not here: Here was old pulling, and wrestling, and weapons out, and drawing of blood; and a kind of battel fought dubio Marte, a good while, but at last the victory fell on your side. And this winning of it, as it were, and seeing Your enemies lie dead at Your feet, made the deliverie the more wonderful; and so the more welcome; and so Your joy the greater. And if one might take joy in the fall of his enemies, the fall of yours was worse for the manner. For, they died not like Subjects, but as open enemies or rebels: Not as penitent sinners, but as damned reprobates, lost not only their lives, but their souls too.

Thus, every way, doth this day go beyond those: the King beyond, as a Prince Christian: the danger beyond; for, the extremity nearer. The parties that fought, beyond, for, the less they appeared, the more perilous they were: the deliverie beyond; for, without any Mardochai at all: And their fall beyond; for, stricken down in the place, like rank rebels; and tumbled into hell like reprobates, without space or grace, without fruit or sign of repentance. And, if thus many waies beyond, allow for everie of these, a degree of Joy, and I have that I would.

Of this writing, one special end was for Joy. A double joy: for either verse, one. 1 In the former, Rege incolumi gaudendum; Joy for the Kings safety. 2 And in the latter, Stratis hostibus gaudendum; joy, that his enemies lay where they lay, on the floor.

For the Kings safety we to rejoyce; but without a Mardochai. He parts not with God, in ours: it is entire without him. So it is not in the Text: God and Mardochai, there: here, God alone, and joy in God alone.

Psal. 92. 12.

Then, for Stratis hostibus, in regard of them. First, that they sped not; then, that they were sped themselves: that their anger was vana and sine viribus; did no hurt: that Gods anger to them for it, was both sure: paid them home: and swift; did it out of hand. That they fell; and fell before him: He saw them lie slain at his feet: that his eye saw his desire upon his enemies; nay more than his desire, that he was faine to pray for them, that had not the grace to do it for themselves.

Chap. 9. 17.

A little after in this Book, for the saving of the Queen from the laying on of Hamans hands, we find, there was great joy and a double feast, the fourteenth and fifteenth of Adar. And can we imagine, but there must needs be as great (nay, Festum magis duplex) for the King here? If for Her a stranger: for their own natural Leige much more. Was so with them In diebus illis, and with us to be In diebus his.

Or rather in die hoc; For (these) It was plural, more dayes went to it than one; many days in doing; here, it was dispatched sooner. No diebus here; begun, acted, ended all in a day: nay, half a day, between noon and night. And this shall be the first, that it was not long in doing. Short as it was, yet may I take upon me, there is as great odds between this day, and them, as is between the fifth of August, (ours) and the fifteenth of Adar, that is, December (theirs:) that is, between a long and a short, a Summers and a Winters day.

Chap. 9. 21.

There is not in all the Scriptures a book that expresth so plentiful joy, for the saving of a Prince, as doth this of Esther: the whole ninth Chapter (in a manner) is spent in it. There is gaudium and latitia, and hilaritas, and convivium, and tripudium, I cannot tell how many times over; and the day christened christened by the name of Dies festus, a Festival day. There is joy in Susan the City; there is joy in the Villages; there is joy in the hundred twenty seven, every Province of them all; joy all over: and all this allowed, nay, a Statute made to keep it. So, a day of joy to all posterity, and all this Chronicles so. A joy in the Chronicles; what would you more?

Hence have we warrant for this day of ours; and for all and every of them, on this day of ours; the same joy full out, the same that was for that in every degree, let be for this; and more for this, as this is more (as hath been shewed;) as by the season of the year, the day is longer, the Sun brighter, the sky clearer, the weather fairer, in August than December. As this case more famous, Gods might and mercy more marvellous; more fit for a Chronicle, more worthy to be engrossed in the great roll, ours than theirs.

And in one we shall be above them, that we begin our joy in the house of God; whereas they in Persia, had none to begin it in: Here do we begin it, as God would have us begin it, in the House of Prayers, with prayers.

A prayer for Bigthans and Tharez, we cannot (either these of the Text, or those of the day:) But, a prayer, that by their examples, both Ruina pracedentium may be admonitio sequentium, the destruction of those that are gone before, may be the instruction of all those that shall come after. This the first part; and if this will not be, the second. So may they ever find that so seek; If seek as they sought, find as they found.

A prayer for Mardochai, that for his so sitting in the gate, he may sit in a better place: that so many may follow him in his good example.

A Prayer for the King. But first a praise (the principal cause we come hither for.) Praised be God ever, that saved in Persia, Ahasuerus from his two: that saved in Scotland, your Majesty from your two: the Saviour of Kings, Maximè fidelium. Then, the prayer; That those dayes, and these dayes may never fail him, nor he ever see other.

No more Bigthans (good LORD) but Mardochai's for them. That Mardochai may never fail him? but, if he do, that thou wouldst not (no more than this day thou didst) but ever save, ever deliver, ever preserve him, and make them that seek his ruine, find their own. Either hang aloft, as these in the Text; or lie on the floor, as those of the day.

And even so, let the end of this, be the beginning of the other, even of the joy of the whole day. For the day, for it: for this happy event on it; for the King, the Subject of it, To the cause of it, and of all our joy, God the Father, by which, and through Christ in the unity of the Holy Spirit, be all blessing, honour, praise, glorie and thanksgiving, this day and all dayes, for ever and ever.

A
 BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE, AT WINDSORE,
 On the Fifth of August, Anno Dom. MDCXXII.

I. SAM. Chap. XXIV.

Ver. 5. And the men of David said unto him: See, the day is come, whereof the LORD said unto thee; Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, and thou shalt do to him, as it shall seem good to thee. Then David arose, and cut off the lap of Sauls garment privily.

6. And afterward David was touched in his heart, because he had cut off the lap which was on Sauls garment.

7. And he said unto his men, the LORD keep me from doing that thing unto my Master the LORDS Anointed, to lay my hand upon him: For, he is the Anointed of the LORD.

8. So David overcame his servants with these words, and suffered them not to rise against Saul. So Saul rose up out of the Cave, and went away.

E C E dies venit, Behold the day is come: So begins the Text: (so say Davids men. And Behold the day is come; so may we begin, and as truly so say of this Day, as ever did they of that. The first words agree well: So do the last, Abiit Rex viam suam, the King rose up and went his way: so ends the Text, and so ended this day too. And not only the first and last words, but the midst and all fall out as fitly. For indeed, what is the whole Text, but a report of a King, in danger to have been made away, and that closely in a cave, and a motion made to that end; and a knife drawn, and Davids men up against him and all? Yet (see the goodness of God!) the King did well enough for all that; and went his way, without any hurt done him.

And, comes not this home to the day? Saul at Engedi, in the cave there, may he not seem (as I may say) a type of His Majesty, as Johnston shew up (to use Sauls words) in the close corner there? In stead of a knife, was there not a dagger drawn there; and somewhat else; and more fought than a corner of his cloake?

cloak? And, as David's men rose here; So, rose there not a popular tumult there?

And yet, being in that extremity, was he not delivered out of their bloody hands? and did not all end, as the Text ends, The King rose up and went his way? And this our meeting now, in this publick solemn manner, is to no other end, but to rejoyce together in the presence of God, and to render unto Him our anniversary sacrifice of praise and thanks, that Ecce dies venit, Behold the day is come, wherein he escaped so fair, and went his way so happily.

And, shall we not withall, put our incense to our sacrifice (that is) add our prayers to our praises; that, as this day there was, so still and ever, a way may be made him to escape all his dangers?

King Saul (here) in the Text, was the first King, that ever the people of God had. In him (the first) would God have all succeeding Kings to read their destinie: that as they are placed high; so, their high place is no exemption from danger; a provoking it, rather. Here now, Saul is in danger in the Vale Engedi. Once before had we him in as great a plunge; and that was in the hill Hachila: Abishai would fain have had a blow at him; and but one blow. But David came then between with his Ne perdas.

That did not so well fit our turn. It was night then: Saul was in his bed asleep. That, was not our case: this here comes nearer. This fell on the day. Saul was awake: So was His Majesty. We may say Ecce dies, Behold it was day, and that day is now come. Between them both, they make up thus much; that sleeping or waking; by night, or by day; in Hachila, the high lands, in Engedi, the low Valleys, out of danger they go not, if the hand of God be not over them, as here over Saul it was.

The Division.

First and last, we may recapitulate the whole Text into one word. It is all but a Delivery. Ecce tradam in manus, a Delivery into their hands: Ecce abiit, a Delivery out of them. Which two makes the two main parts of the Text. The former, the Delivery into, lasts to the last verse: And, in the end of the last, comes the latter, the Delivery out of; the King rose up out of the Cave, and went his way.

I. Ecce tradam in manus is of two sorts; 1 Into David's hands, and 2 into his mens hands. Or thus; Saul's danger here, is double: 1 On the danger of David's mens motion; 2 the other, of their Commotion (for, rising they were, and David suffered them not to rise.)

1. In their Motion. 1 What was moved to David by his men: and 2 what David did upon it. That which was moved, was mittere manum, to lay hands on the King. That, he did upon it, was, he went and laid his hands on Saul's mantle, and cut off an end of it, and that was all. This, the fact: then, the censure of this fact.

When David had done this, what he thought of it: 1 What he, and 2 what his men. He thought not well of it, he did penance for it, his heart smite him for doing but so much. His men thought not well of it neither; but ex alio capite they, for not doing more than so.

2. What followed of this? The neglect of their motion, turned his men to a Commotion: They were rising against Saul, if they had not been stayed. The second danger, this: farre the worse of the twain: The rising of David's men, than the drawing of David's knife. Thus far the Epitasis.

II. Then follows the Catastroph. For, the issue was, David's men were stayed by him, and kept from rising: David's victory. And how? by certain words speaking. Those words are in the third verse: David's still, I may call them.

And upon all this followed, the King was saved, twice saved from both dangers (thanks be to God) and away he went, safe without any harm. Only, lost a piece of his mantle: and I would never greater losse might come to him.

III. Thus lie the parts in this order; which, when all is done, we must crave leave to reflect upon, and review again; to shew, that the Ecce of this our Day is farre above the Ecce of that of theirs.

Now, by the special providence of God, it so fell out, that all this was not passed and done in silence. There was arguing the point, reasoning on both sides. The whole Text is but a kind of Dialogue between David's men and him, what was to be done with Saul their enemy, now they had him in the cave; kill him, or let him go? And it fell out well, that this point was thus urged. For, out of this their debate, might those two wretched men this day have learned (if they had had grace) and may all true men and good subjects learn, what to do or not to do in like case. For, a clear resolution here is, to be held for ever, taken out of David's Absit here, God forbid that ever any should lay his hands on the Lords Anointed. Yea, though he should catch him in a cave (or as good as a cave, as this day he was.)

Nay further, God so providing, here falls a matter in upon the By (of Saul's mantle) that removes it from the main (Saul's person) quite. Saul's person, David touched not; went but to his mantle. And even for going but to that, did his heart smite him. Which (by a minore ad majus) puts this question past all question, as being a protection for the Kings robe: and, if for it, for his person much more.

And let me say two things of this Text to you: One, that as Saul was the first King; so, this the first case that ever was, wherein the making away of a King, was put to the question. So, the leading case (as they call it) to all the rest. Resolved here by David (and we cannot resolve our selves by a better) and resolved once, resolved for ever. No more Quere's of it now.

The

The other, that it is the only case (this) that ever I read of in Scripture, of dixit Dominus alledged for killing a King; of killing Kings by Divinity. The more worthy it is your attention, the nearer it comes to the late phrensie of this Age of ours.

And two uses there be of it, as the chief persons in it are two. 1 In Saul, to let Kings see their danger: 2 In David, to let subjects see their duty. To let Kings see their danger, that they may look up continually to their Deliverer out of evil hands. In David, to let subjects see their duty, and the extent of their duty, as to themselves, so to others.

Two dangers were like to befall Saul here. From David first: His men perswaded him to dispatch Saul: perswaded him, but prevailed not; He did it not: So Saul scaped once. Second: when that would not do, they were upon rising (themselves) to have done it. David dissuaded them: dissuaded them and prevailed; they did it not neither: There he escaped twice.

In which two, David is two wayes our example, to learn us, the two duties (I spake of.) 1 Would not do it himself: 2 would not suffer others to do it: Would not be perswaded by others to it: did dissuade others from it. I will say with our Saviour, Vade tu & fac similiter, Let every good subject go and do likewise. Neither do it, nor suffer it to be done; And he shall be according to Dauids, who was a man according to Gods own. Luke 10:37;

SAUL was now in the cave. What Dauids men would have had him to do to Saul. Even what was good in his eyes (a good mannerly term; but even what pleased him.) What is that? What meant they by it? The meaning is, they would have had him lay hands upon Saul. Plain by Dauids answer: What? lay hands on him? God forbid. More plain yet, by Dauids report of it to Saul (the eleventh Verse.) And some had me kill thee. Loc, there ye have it in plain English.

I.
The first delivery: Ecce tra-dam in manus.

To make this motion good in his eyes, they use here a perillous motive; or rather three in one. 1 Inimicum tuum, the motive of enmity or deadly feud. 2 Ecce dies venit, now is the time come; the motive of opportunity. 3 And de quo dixit Dominus, the motive of Gods Word, of doing it by Divinity.

Inimicum tuum: that, is the ground of all: (a motive well befeeming them that make it; even fit for a Souldiers mouth:) he is your enemy, he would kill you; what should you do but kill him? should not we kill them that would kill us? This goes current in the Camp, this is bonum in oculis, a good motion in their eyes.

I
Inimicum tuum

Now, if this hold for good, if an enemy be to be slain; It is sure, Saul was Dauids enemy: God himself calls him so, Inimicum tuum: they be Gods own words, one that (even as David saith himself) hunted for his soul (Verse 12.) And, even at this very instant had him in chase, and was so eager on it, as up the Rocks he went after him, among the wild goats (Verse 3.) and followed him so hard, he was fain to take a cave (here,) In which cave, what taking he was in, ye may read in the 57 Psalm, (made, when he fled into this cave) even at Miserere mei Deus, miserere mei: One miserere would not serve him; in a greater agonie of feare. For, if Saul had but known it, David had never gone his way thence, as Saul did his. It is well known, Saul sought his life. That was not all; there was a further matter than so, Will you hear it from Saul himself? Look to the 21 v. rs. I know (saith Saul) thou shalt be King after me. Yea, shall! then was it inimicum tuum (indeed) in another sense; then was Sauls life, an enemy to Dauids rising. David stands in his own light, if he do it not. Do it then, and besides the assurance of Your life, the Crown is Yours. These two laid together, any would wonder, what eyes David had, that this seemed not good in his eyes. And, this for inimicum tuum.

Psalme 57.1,

But, many an enemy scapes with his life, because we meet not with an Ecce dies, a fit time and place to do it in. Verily, opportunity it self is a shrewd motive. The common saying is, occafio facit furum: that which one was farre from, would never have imagined, there will come so fair an offer, such a fair shoot (as they say) as will make a man do that, which but for such an occasion, he would never once have thought on. We are all to pray to God to take from us the opportunity of sinning: So frail we are, it is no sooner offered, but we are ready to embrace it (God help us.) What say they then? Why Ecce here is a time, and here is a cave, as fit a place as can be for such a motion. Such an opportunity, as if you take it not you shall not meet with again, all your life long. To have your enemy light into your hands, in a dark cave, where you may dispatch him, and no body the wiser who did it, or how it was done. Well then, wisdom is seen in no one thing more, than in taking opportunity: Go to, shew your self a wise man: you know, what you have to do.

Ecce dies venit.

Nay, it is not only Ecce dies, but Ecce tradam; and there, is an Ecce. For, there is much in tradam; he is even delivered, even taken, and put into your hands: I weigh the word tradam. It is one thing to say, Your enemy is fallen; another to say, He is delivered. Falling is casuall; Delivery imports a deliberate act of an Agent to do it, to deliver him: So, this is more than chance, more than hap-hazard: It is not eccecidit, it is tradam.

Ecce tradam

Again: One thing to say delivered; another, delivered by God (now I weigh the person.) Ego tradam, Ego tradam.

it is God that speaks it. One may be delivered, and by man, by some false traitor (it was not Sauls case, this, it was the Kings.) But here God is the deliverer ^{וְיָצִיא} the giver. Take him then as dominum Dei. God hath even given you him, and having given Him, would have you take Him, and I hope it will seem good in your eyes to do so, and not let God give you Him for nothing.

3 De quo dixit Dominus.

Nay, yet there is more. (Now, I come to weigh dixit Dominus.) For one may be delivered by God, seeing it, and saying nothing to it, but suffering it: by Gods permission. So are all things. Of many of which (though) God saith nothing, speaks never a word: but of this, God spake to you before, spake to you with His own mouth, and spake it with an Ecce; Ecce tradam: gave you warning of it, gave you His word for it, I will deliver him: and is now as good as His word, hath delivered him. See if He have not.

Will ye collect these three, 1 Not casually fallen into your hands, but purposely delivered, 2 And delivered not by man, but by God Himself: 3 And by God, not quovis modo, at adventure, but plainly prophesying and promising He would do so. Or this (sure) God must needs be the Author, that He foretels thus, and promises before-hand. So have you (here) God made accessorie, nay, principal to the murder of a King.

And now are we come indeed to the perillous point of all. This (lo) is it. They would have Saul made away; and for this, they alledge de quo dixit dominus, as if God had bespoken a set day for the doing of it. This, goes to the quick, Inimicum tuum is but a revelation of flesh and blood, that; but dixit dominus, that is the will of our heavenly Father. So, not onely lawfull now, but a matter of conscience, to kill Sauls ^{וְיָצִיא} God hath said it.

Where, first, you see, it is no new thing, this, to kill Kings by Divinity. This geere is but newly raked up from hell againe. It is but the old devill new come abroad, that had been in the world before. For, ever since there have been Kings over Gods people, this hath been abroad; broached first in the cave here at Engedi, and dixit Dominus pretented for it (you see) in the first Kings dayes of all.

Mat. 9. 14.
Acts 20. 30.

The grife is, they were not Sauls, they were Dauids men, the better side, that alledge this. But Dauids men all, are not of Dauids minde: Johns disciples sometimes are found with the Pharisees; and the Apostle saith; Of our selves, there shall arise men speaking perverse things. Therefore never marvaile at it. Goe not after the men: Go after the Master David himself.

Jud. 3. 17.
2 Kings 11.
1oh. 21. 16.

Well yet, I must needs say for these good fellows (here) they go roundier to the point, than doth Snares, or any of them have been blundering about this geere of late. They be all trisslers to Dauids men, here. For upon the matter, all they have been able to say, is, it hath been done. King Eglon was killed; so was Athalia. Neither of them, a true lawfull Prince (as God would have it) ne utriusque both. So nothing to the matter. But, say they had been lawfull: yet all this is but Homo fecit; it is not Deus dixit. Never a dixit Deus comes from them. Nothing but poor Pasce oves: which (sure) is a full unlikely Text to perswade a man to become a butcher, and cut his sheeps throats. One Abisai of Dauids here, one Neperdas, one quis erit innocens, able to dash twenty such, and all they can say, to pieces. Not one of them comes off to the point, as do these in the Text, with dixit Dominus, Gods expresse word for it.

Zech. 2. 13.

There is no remedy, we must stay a little at this, at dixit Dominus. What He saith, we may: nay, we must do. To His dixit, there is no contradixit, If God speak once, let all flesh keepe silence.

I will not trouble you with, when God spake this, or where. Extant it is not. Yet seeing David traveries it not, denies not but that God spake it, we will take it for good, that they truly alledged God. For, it is not unlikely, that at some time when David was in some great distresse, God might send to him by the hands of Nathan, or Gad, his Seers, he should take a good heart to him, he should be so far from being delivered unto Sauls hands, as the day should come, Saul should be delivered into his, to do with him what seemed good in his eyes.

Well then, take it, God said all this: and all this might God say, and yet Saul not touched. Ye shall see as little force in this Dominus dixit, as in their Homo fecit. Neither of them, to the purpose they are brought. You shall see withall, what it is when Sword-men will be a meddling with Dominus dixit, with our profession; what trim consequences we shall have, to make, what seems good in Dauids eyes, and to murder Saul, to be all one. And withall, that it is good for Kings to be learned, and to be learned in Gods Law. For, had not David been the better Divine, he might well have been overtaken and made believe, there is a way to destroy Kings, even by the Word of God.

To scan them a little. Dixit Dominus, God said. What said He? The day shall come: well, it is come, that God would deliver Saul into his hands: well, that is done too. And David should do to him, what? What seemed good in his eyes. What is that? To destroy Saul? No indeed: Bonum in oculis, will beare no such matter. We might dispatch all in a word, all is put upon Dauids eyes, and in his eyes it seemed not good. But to touch them shortly.

Facies ei quod bonum est in oculis suis.

First, Facies ei here, enjoyns nothing, leaves him but to himself: that is all can be made of it. Nay, they desire no more, but so to be left. And when one is so left, what then, may he do what he list? Suppose, he list to do what is evil or forbidden? Adam will tell you, No: That consequence we may pay full dear for. It undid him, and us all. Gods so leaving us, gives not any leave to do anything that evil is; puts but power in our hands, to try how we will use it. For, when power is so put, Ipsa ratio dicitur, even by the rule of reason, we are so to use it, as we take the better, and leave the worse ever, and reach not our hand to the forbidden tree.

When

When God leaves a man to do that which is good in his eyes, he had best wipe his eyes, see they dazle not. If they doe, that may be bonum in oculis, which is not bonum indeed. They be not all one, these two, ¹ Bonum in oculis, and ² Bonum: Take heed of that. That which is evill, may seem good to an evill eye. And no man is so fond, to think, God would have any evill done.

Therefore He saith not; bonum in oculis, and stayes there: He adds in oculis tuis. For, much is, as the party whose the eyes are. For, as the party is, so is his eye. And the party here, is David: God would not have said this to every one. To David he did, and He knew what He did, and that Saul was safe enough for all that. He knew his eye was single and good, that nothing was evill in Gods eyes, would seem good in his. He would never have said so much to Saul, of David: not to Davids men, of Saul. Never have said to David, Quod bonum est in oculis tuorum: if it had been what seemed good in their eyes, Saul had been gone. No, He had not so good a concept of their eyes: of Davids He had. To him therefore he said it; and he deceived not Gods expectation. Pepereit tibi oculus meus (saith he at the 11. Verse.) All then resolving in to Davids eyes; it seemed good in his eyes, to spare Saul. And, this is sure, they have not Davids eyes in their heads, to whom it seemes otherwise. For, to do what seemed good in his eyes, was, to do Saul no harme—Look to tuis then, that the eyes be Davids, and all his well.

Then seeing Davids eyes are so cleare and so good, how were it to be wished, David would see with no other eyes but his owne: would still do, what is good in his owne, not in his mens eyes!

So this was their Elench. It seemed good in their blood-shotten eyes, to lay hands on Saul; and they strongly imagined, what seemed good in their blood-shotten eyes, would have seemed so, in his too. The sequels shewes, it did not. Why stand we any longer then upon it? but leaving the Motion, let us now see how it moved him, what he did upon it.

Some think it moved him, till he came to the very push; and then God struck his heart, and his heart struck him, and so his minde changed. Others think, that it stirred him not a whit (for the blow came after all was done.) Yet, as if it had moved him, he moved upon it. Somewhat to satisfie them, he would seem to do somewhat. So, up he arose, and toward Saul he made וַיָּקָם, as softly and as secretly as he could. And when he came at him, close behind him, out went his knife, as if he meant to use it. (His men, I dare say, hoped, to some other end.) Stay here. And he that had seen David thus, in this wise, coming close behinde the Kings back with his knife drawne in his hand, would he not have taken him for Ravilliac? What difference? I promise you, this was not bonum in oculis, no very good fight. And then knowing, Saul was his mortall enemy, and even now at this very instant time come forth to seek his life, and seeing them thus in a blind cave, and David hard at his back with a naked nife, would he not have given Saul for dead, past (for ever) abijt viam suam.

Well: when all came to all. First, it seemed not good in Davids eyes, to use spear or sword, but his knife. Why, a knife will doe mischief enough. 1. Then, to go to worke with it, not punctum, but casum, not with the point, but with the edge only; thrust not, cut onely. Yet that will hurt too. 2. But cut, what? Neither flesh, not skin, not them: Nay, not his shirt or doublet, his mantle onely, and but a piece of it. 3. And, it was no great piece neither; he cut no skirr: It was so small it was not missed. Sauls fellows spied it not, till David came after them, called to them, held it up and shewed it them: and then they looked well, and saw a piece was gone, but not before. The word וַיִּקַּח, וַיִּקַּח, ala, signifieth a wing: and those (we know) are but additionals, no part of the entire garment: the garment is whole without them. So, it was not in the neither; he cut. His knife he drew, but drew not blood with it; went not to Saul himself, his person, but to his mantle; took but an edge of that, and away he goes: and so may Saul go his way, for any hurt, David hath done him. And this (to) is all, came of the motion; and more than this, seemed not good in David eyes.

What, and is it but this? This and no more? No more but a shred of his mantle, and is that all? All; yea: and too much of that too. For, now it followes, in the second verse, when David reflected upon what he done, how, this he had done, seemed in his eyes. It seemed good to them to do but thus much, or rather thus little, and after it was done, it seemed not good to him, not this little he had done neither; but it even seemed good to him, to repent when he had done it, as little as it was, or as it seemeth to us to be. Repent? Yea, that he had done no more. Nay, that he had done thus much, had cut his mantle, had cut at all. That which any would think, was highly to be commended in him, he went no further, you shall see him do penance for it, as if he had gone too farre, as if he should not have gone so far as that.

Will ye see David do penance indeed for it? Penance I say, in all the parts, the Schoolemen make of it. 1 Contritio cordis, in this verse: his heart smit him for it. 2 Confessio oris, in the next; The Lord keep me from doing more, this was too much. 3 Satisfactio operis, in the last verse, in making amends, by not suffering his men to rise, but converting them from so sinfull a purpose. And besides, in leaving behind him ad perpetuam rei memoriam, a monument of all this, a Psalm, מִכְתָּם that is, a golden Psalm (so he calls it) the 57. Psalm, made as the inscription shewes, at this his being in the cave. Of it, and there, both in word and deed: of saying destroy him not; which is the title of the Psalm. Though yet get Saul in a cave, yet destroy him not.

Other

Not, bonum in oculis: but in oculis tuis.

In oculis tuis, not tuum.

What David did upon this motion

His censure of it.

Other Psalmes there be of the same title ; but the 57, that is the first of them all, purposely set upon this occasion, and at this time and place.

His contrition,
Percussit cor
suum.

For this Contrition. It is said, after he had done it, his heart smit him, and told him why? Even but for making a hole in Sauls mantle. It is strange, that his heart, that (one would think) should have sprung for joy, that he did no more but that ; falls to strike and to bear him for doing but that : in stead of exultation, that he had done well, done the King no harm ; a palpitation, a pang or passion of fear takes him, lest he had done more than he could well answer. And, it is the more strange, the great valiant David, one of the nine worthies, whom neither the Bear daunted nor the Lion ; who without all fear encountred the Giant great Goliath, and smit him down, whose heart served him, fainted not then : here, for doing I wot not what, a shred of Sauls mantle, it serves him not ; but beats and throbs, as, in fear, it is usual for the heart to do.

Bonarum mentium est (saith Gregory) Good minds will sometimes fear and acknowledge a fault, where none is. Peradventure David doth so ; is more scrupulous than needs. Nay indeed. For, to do but this, to the garment of any private man, such as our selves, to cut or to marre it, is a trespass (I take it) and will bear an action. And if so ; then must there needs be a higher, a more heinous offence to offer it, to any of the Kings robes ; to mangle or deface them in any sort. The material part of it, cannot (sure) be justified. Only, the formal part (as in Schools we speak) non tam quid, quam quo animo, that may in some sort seem to qualifie his act, and help to excuse him ; that he did it, with no other mind, nor to no other end, but by the little shred taken off, to make it appear, he did not so much as he could have done, if his mind had been so bad to Saul, as Doeg and such as he, would fain make him believe : teste vel segmento hoc, which he gave in, by way of evidence (Verse 12.) When I cut off this lap, I kill'd thee not ; as going a little further, I might have done : might have done, but did not. Might have gone otherwise to work : with a sword and not a knife ; with the point, and not the edge ; thrust, and not cut : or, if cut, taken away a collop of his flesh, as well as a corner of his cloake. Yet for all this though his heart were privie to no evil intent, it smit him though. For, in cases touching the King so near, it is not enough to say, I meant not that, but this. So, a fault it was ; and as for a fault, his heart smit him.

There is no smiting, but for a fault. Specially, not of the heart. For, the heart strikes not us, but it is it self stricken first. And if you ask, who strikes it ? that doth God : for this (of the heart) is nothing else, but the reverberation of Gods stroke. His knock at our hearts, to fore-think us of what we have done amiss, when we have cut where we should not.

Eccl. 15. 57.

And it is no light fault, the heart suffers for. The heart is the chief part, and the blow of it is the greatest blow. Give me (saith the Wise man) πῶσον πλῆγῶν, any stripe, any griefe, rather than the griefe of the heart. Cardiaca passio is the worst passion of all. Therefore, as a fault, so no light fault it was.

3 Sam. 24. 10.

We may pattern it with the numbring of the people, after. Then, it smite him too ; and then he cryed, Peccavi valde : and the same reason is of both, as misgiving him in both, he had in both done far otherwise than he should. But this (here) was the first blow, and the first discipline given him, as if he had gone too near Saul ; as if Nolite tangere did reach further than the person, even, to the Robes royal.

Psal. 105. 15.

2 King. 5. 38.

And herein is his contrition. For, we use to strike our breasts with the Publican, because we cannot come at our heart to strike it, for not striking us, when we make a fault. But, when the heart needs not be stricken for it, when it strikes us first, when we feel plagam cordis (as Solomon calls it, in expresse words) upon making a fault ; that our heart corrects us, gives us discipline for it ; then is our penance begun, then is our Contrition in a good way.

Now good Lord, if but for a slit in Sauls cloake, his heart went and came thus : how would it have taken on, how contrite would it have been, if his hand had happened to twerve a little, and done him any hurt ! How many blowes then, what sharp penance for that !

Will ye now lay these together. How scrupulous, how full of fear David was, good men were, in that world : Not his mantle or cloake ; not an edge of it. And how desperately audacious, how past all fear some are grown in this : Not cut (now) but thrust : or, if cut, cut thorow cloak, coat, skin and all. And, their heart never smites them for it. Nay, there be, whose hearts would have stricken them, they had stricken no deeper : as did his, that he had hit the tooth, and missed the throat : and that, if the knife had been in their hands, would have cut his skirts so close, the blood should have run down the reins of his back.

To such ; David (in effect) saith thus : It was a lesse matter far that I did, than laying hands on his mantle : If you will be ruled by me, meddle not so much as with laying hands on his mantle : if you had felt such a blow at your heart, as I did at mine, you would never offer. What ? not mittere manum in illum ? nay, not in pallium illum. Never talk of his person : so far from that, as not to the very corner, but of his cloke.

And this is the remove I told you of at first. Thus did God suffer this amixore ad majus to fall out in this first attempt upon a King, that we might inferre thereof a further matter, and yet no other than our SAVIOUR CHRIST's own inference. May not a man put a knife in Sauls rayment ? by this blow of the heart (here) it seems he may not : may he not ? and is not the body more worth than the rayment, O ye of little faith ?

Mat. 6. 25.

Alway, this we may count of, and to conclude this point : that, he whose heart did thus smite him for doing this, he would not do that, his heart smit him for, if it were to do again. Not go thus thus farre; since he felt it at his heart, his going but thus farre; though nothing so farre, as his men would have had him. And so much for percussio cordis, Dauids contrition.

All this while we go but upon collection; feel but by his pulse, how his heart beateh. Will ye have an ore tenus, a full and flat confession from him, hear him distinctly speak his mind to this very point, of laying hands on Saul; and give you the true reason, why he did it not; why, neither they, nor any should ever do it? That followes now in the third verse.

But first, let me tell you, this cut of Dauids was not well taken, of either side. David (we see) thought not well of it: No more did his men. He, that he had done so much: They, that he had done no more. Evidently to be gathered, that his men when they saw he had no more of their motion than so, that he came back with his knife in one hand, and a snip of Sauls mantle in the others, and his knife had no blood on it; and that he had done as much as he would do, and no more was to be looked for at his hands (for, he looked like one heart-stricken, that if it had been now to do, would not have done that, neither:) they fell into a rage, a mutinie, a plain rising; as resolved, if he would not, they would: if it were not good in his eyes, in theirs it was. It was not an end of a mantle should serve their turn; they would make him sure for ever going his way: as knowing, if he went away, he would prove worse than ever, as (indeed) so he did. So, when David was down, his men were up.

Here now, is there a second danger towards Saul, from Dauids men, a multitude ready to rise and run upon him. Plain: for, it is said in the next verse expressly, David suffered them not to rise. Which could not be said properly, unless they were on rising. But, an insurrection there was toward, and at Saul they would have been, had not David interposed, and opposed himself, with these words which now follow, and with those words overcome them, and stayed them; that they did not rise.

So that, the words we now come to, serve for two purposes; Not so much for an Apologie for himself, that he did it not (though, that they do too:) as for a dissuasive, or retentive to them; and in them, to us, and to all, that none should ever attempt it. You saw even now, how evil his heart brooked it: you shall hear (now) his mouth utterly renounce it, never to hold that for good, that seemed good in their eyes.

First, a flat denial it is. But, that is not so much: the manner of it, is all. It is not soberly and coldly. No, I will not do this thing. No: but it is with very much vehemency, as the manner of men is, when they speak in great passion. If ye mark it, it is with short turnes: God forbid: What, do this? To my liege Lord? To God's anointed? lay my hands on him, and he God's anointed? A pause, at every word, as if he were half out of breath, as if his heart did beat still. Weigh them a little: הלא הלא. There is not, in the Hebrew; there is not in any Tongue, so earnest, so passionate an abnegation, abjuration, abrenunciation, as it is. It was the word they used when they rent their cloathes at blasphemy. We turn it, as our tongue will bear, as the poverty of it will suffer us. To turn it to the quick, there is more in it, than can in any one phrase be expressed. So, not being able to do it in one, the Interpreters have assaid to do it in more than one. Every one, as their own Idioms will best bear. The Lord keep me from doing this thing (saith ours.) So, it is of the nature of a prayer against it. Μη ποιοις, Out upon it, Away with it, By no means; Or Μη ποιοις (saith the Greek:) never let me, let any, never let it be done. So, it is an utter detestation. Abstine mihi à Domino (saith the Latine) Never let me come where God hath to do; Accursed be I of God, all evil come to me, if ever I do as you would have me. So, it is a bitter execration. It bears all. Under one, it is both a hearty deprecation or prayer against it, a deep detestation, and a fearfull execration, if ever he be brought to do it, to lay hands on Saul. These three will amount to an oath of Allegiance at least.

You will say, here is passion indeed; but it is reason, and not passion, must carry things when all is done. Nay, here is reason too, and reason upon reason, couched in these words, why not to do it. Domino meo, first; To his liege Lord, or Sovereigne: Not to him. Then, if that will not hold, Christo Domini, to the Lords anointed, not to him; That will. For, two he alledges; Domino, and Christo Domini; The first is from the earth, earthly; Domino meo, his earthly Lord. The second, Christo Domini; Dimini, is the Lord from heaven. The first he stands not on: this second, that he stands on, that, he iterates once and again, sets up his rest upon that: as indeed, when we have studied all that ever we can, we shall never be able, to find a more forcible. It can never be answered, if we care either for heaven or earth, Christus or Dominus, Christ or God; any thing at all. It cannot be; the Lord of heaven should ever endure (where his hand hath been, to anoint) any hand should be, to violate, to do any violence to that party. Do but see how he utters it: Lay hands on him? and he God's anointed? and so breaks off, as if he held it for a foul indignity, for a grosse absurdity in reason, once to question it. So, for laying hands but on his mantle, Dauids heart checked him: But, for laying hands on his person, that is past compensentis, It is vox clamantis, that, μη ποιοις, Abstine; farre be it from me; never that, never.

Will ye now observe how, in this speech, he returns upon them and their three motives? God forbid (saith he) to that, for which they alledged dixit Dominus. To their God said, he says, God forbid: answers Dominus dixit with Dominus interdixit. Of which God said, No, no, God.

God forbid, and that forbidding, forbid with a curse: And what God did then forbid, he doth forbid still; what, to him he did forbid, he doth to us (to every good body, that cares either for his bidding or forbidding it.) They that lay their hands care for neither. Do that, which (as we use to say) is against all Gods forbode.

Then, for inimicum tuum, he replies to that with Christum Domini: opposing, as his GOD forbid, to Dominus dixit; so, the LORD'S Anointed, to his enemy, to weigh down that. And so it doth: there is, there will ever be more vertue in Christum Domini, to keep him alive, than in any inimicum tuum, any enmity in the world, to destroy him.

Last, Where they say, Ecce tradam in manus, He is now even put into your hands, but not mittere manus (saith he) not to lay any hands on him. So, that for all Dominus dixit, or inimicum tuum, or Ecce tradam in manus, David, is still where he was, answers with reason, every part of their reason; God forbid, for any of them, or for all them, Saul should have any harm, but go his way quietly for him. And this for his Confession.

3. Davids satisfaction.

But, you will remember I told you, all this was spoken not so much for Davids defence, why he did it not; as to let them see a good ground, why they should not do it; to keep them from rising. For, rising they were, Rising (say the LXX.) ὑψώσαντες αὐτόν, to have slain Saul. They starting up (as it were) in a kind of indignity, that David had thus served them, to do that themselves, which they hoped he would have done, but did not; for, done it should be, if not by him, by them; that was resolved.

Sure, had David had any edge to Sauls making away, here now was another, a second, a fair opportunity offered it self: as plausible a pretence as he could have wished, to have let Saul been taken away in a military tumult, among of Souldiers. As for David, he had refused it, he had good witness of it: if they rose rudely and ran upon him, what could he do withall? it was their fault, not his; he had no hand in it. But, in all this, he shewed himself a most loyal Subject, in thus putting himself between Saul and them; in taking pains, and even striving till he had appeased them. Which sheweth plainly, his heart was upright in all this business, in saving the Kings life now secondly. Else, what he listed not to do himself, he might have let them do.

So then: do it he will not; nor suffer it to be done, neither: neither per se, nor per alium, by himself, or any other, thought it not enough to say, I will have no hand in it; but neither his own, nor any mans hand else, if he can stay it. (Not only Abstine a me, but Abstine a meis: first and last, Abstine (saith David) to both. Not, non faciam only, let not me do it: but non per me fiat, let not any, let not it be done.) And what? not only not mittere manus, but mittere de manu or de manibus (rather) send him out of their hands, send him away safe. To this second end, were these words spoken by him; and (as the Text is) directed to his men; to quiet them, and not only to clear himself. Now to Davids victory.

II.
The second delivery.
Ecce abiit.

Ecce abiit verbo hoc, and he even overcame them with these words, saith the Text. Here, is Davids victory. But, if he overcame them, then was there a strike. So he even strove to save Saul. And if he suffered them not to rise, then were they bustling up at least, and ready to have risen.

The Text-word in the Hebrew, is full of force: וַיָּבֹאוּ, it is to classe properly, or to ride in sunder. So, either they were clusting (as the mariners in mutinies, to run together on an heap) and he made them head and sever themselves, and return to their places again. Or ye may refer it to their hearts; that with these words were even smitten or clef quite, and broken of their purpose, for proceeding any further in so bloody an enterprise. Their motion did not so much as enter into him; his did in them: entered into them, and as his heart smit him; so, he smit theirs; smit them, and even clef them: made them leave; and let go their resolution quite, and let Saul go.

The LXX. say, ἔπειρα, that is, he persuaded them with these words: (the best overcoming ever, by words, by persuasion.) Overcame them (our Text turns it;) and so David had here a victory: Nay, a double Victory: 1 Over himself, one: and that is a great one. Great victors have failed of it. 2 Over his men, another: He kept them too. And so, by these two, saved the King twice. And many Victories he had; but of them all, none like this: this is the greatest. For in those other, he but slaw his enemies; but in this here, without a drop of blood shed, he saved his Princes life. And now, this victory obtained, David and his men are agreed; and they are satisfied, not to rise, but sit still, and let Saul sit quietly, and go his way. By which, some amends was made him for the piece of his mantle. This, for Davids satisfaction, and for his Victory both in one. For, this Victory was (in a sort) his satisfaction, and served for it.

And now we have set the King safe, that he may go when pleases him, would I beg a little leave to return to Davids words; to his spell (if I may so call it) to this cleaving word וַיָּבֹאוּ: that David did not only smite, but even cleave his mans hearts. With what axe did he this? (for, it is the act of an axe properly.) Even with these words? or they were Davids axe? Shall we doubt it? Shall we so lay hands on him, as by GOD'S Anointed? and the edge of his axe were those two: Christum Domini; they did the feat; all the force was in them. And (indeed) of great force they seemed to David, and were of great use with him, came from him oft. To his Companies, here. To Abishai: (a Chapter after.) To the Amalekites: (the next Book after, I. Chap.) Twice, here: Thrice, to Abishai: Twice, to the Amalekites. Seven times in all. And, with nothing but Christum Domini; as if they had been a kind of a Spell, to charm any from rising, to any such end. On And (sure) a marvellous energie there seems to have been in these words. Davids men (here) were rising: these words kept them down; they rose not. Abishai after, he was even striking: they staid his hands, he struck not. David himself, he was but thinking a thought that way, they smite his heart, made it to ake, made him give over.

Now, when I fall to consider what vertue these words had in those times, to hold mens feet from rising; their hands from striking; yea, their very heart from thinking any such thought; O I am forced to wonder, they should not have in our times the force they then had: David could not overcome some men now: his men would rise, do what he could: feet, hands, and heart, lie loose now, these words notwithstanding. They have not the power to break men; men have rather the power to break them.

*David*s men were brave souldiers; Abishai one of his three Worthies: himself more worthy than they all. Power they had, to stay these so many men of armes: and have not now the power to make a silly Frier hold his hands. What is become of their vertue now? Of the cleaving force they then had? It should seem, *David*s men were othergates men than many (I will not say, of our Souldiers, but) of our Jesuites and Friars, are of late: had magis subacta pectora, breasts of a better mould; had at times, been brought by David to know what GOD was; what it was to be Gods anointed, how precious their blood was in His fight, how no man could lift up his hand against them, and be innocent. So they soon took an impression of this his Abisit, so passionately, so pitifully (withall) delivered by him.

2 Sam. 23. 18.

Psal. 116. 15.
Chap. 26. 9.

Mens breasts are now made of a tougher metal, the words meet with harder hearts in the Cloyster (now) than here they did in the Camp. Some mens hearts (now) leave not striking them, till they have stricken Saul to the heart. Turne *David*s abisi mibi a Domino; into Abisi mibi a Domino facere rem hanc: tune his execration into a prayer, nay, into many prayers, rosaries, and masses, for Gods assistance, to an act, which his very soul abhorreth. And this is the reason. The words are not rebated; they have not lost their edge: but men have instead of hearts now, flint-stones: Else the words being the same, the same effect would still follow, if the hearts also were the same.

For the same effect doth still follow, in all whose hearts God hath touched, on whom the Spirit of God is come. For, where the Spirit of God is, there the Word of God will work: and where it works not, we may safely say, there is no spirit to work on.

1 Chro. 12. 18.

To try then, on whom the Spirit of God is come, there comes to my minde a pregnant place. (It is the 12. of 1. Chron.) full to this point, and it will even bring us home to our owne Text againe. Amasa there, when the question was asked, whom they would take part with, he and his: cryed, Thine are we O David, and on thy side thou son of Ishai. And it is there in expresse termes affirmed, that the Spirit of God came upon him, that made him thus to cry. If then the same Spirit of God be upon us, that was upon him, it will make us take up the same words, Thine are we, and on thy side O David: Thou hast a Testimony in holy Writ, to have been a man according to Gods owne heart: what was in Gods heart, was in thine; then are we to think, say, and do, as thou diddest, and so the Spirit of God is upon us indeed.

1 Sam. 13. 14.

Will ye then be as David with him, on his side? If Gods Spirit be upon us, we will: now come we to our Text. For, here is in this our Text, a vive anatomy, of David in each part: his eye, his hand, his heart, his mouth and all.

1 His eye, full of compassion to Saul his Sovereigne. It was not good in his eyes, to do him any hurt; good to spare him, Pepercit tibi oculus meus, (11 Ver(e) There is *David*s eye.

2 His hand not able to stirre, nor mittere manum in Christum Domini, to lay any hands on him. O ne sit manus mea super te, he twice cries (13, 14.) Let not my hand be upon thee, There is *David*s hand.

3 His heart smote him (we see) for putting but his knife into the edge of *Saul*s mantle. There is *David*s heart.

4 His mouth: from that we heare vox clamantis, Abisi mibi a Domino, with great vehemency of passion. There is *David*s mouth.

5 So says David: and will ye hear how he sings? Heare it upon is Harpe? how his heart and harp agree: heare him say it and sing it both? Ye may: For, to keep for ever this day in memorie, he made a Psalm of *Saul*s being in the cave here, of his scaping out of it: And gives it this title, destroy not; no not in the cave: destroy not. By this meanes to sing into mens minds; their duty in this point. And not into theirs alone, but into the hearts and mindes; of all posterity; not to give their wayes to destroy Kings: No, though they have them in a cave, as these had Saul. Even there, to sing destroy him not. Ne perdas in the cave is worth all.

So have you David at full: if any be of his side, thus to see, and say, and sing, and think, and do, Sic ille oculos, sic ora ferebat. If you would know, what his heart believeth touching this point, percussit eum cor; that, gave him a shrewed check, for but a shred taken off *Saul*s cloake: he believes, he did not well in it. If what his mouth confesseth, Abisi mibi facerem rem hanc, Abisi, saith his mouth; ne sit, saith his hand; Ne fiat, saith his heart, ne perdas, saith his harpe. All keep time, all found one way; this way all.

It seemed not good in his eyes to do it: that, is the Text: Nor, to his hand, let not that be upon him: Nor to his mouth, he spit it out with an Abisi. Nor to his heart; least of all to that, that for a lesse matter, but for drawing his knife, though without minde of drawing a drop of blood, fell on beating, and cast him into a cardiac passion. And any, who thinking but a thought that way, if his heart smite not him, let him smite it hardly. Else he is not according to *David*s; and so, not to Gods heart.

III.
The Ecce of this our day.
Psal. 48. 8.

Thus have our eares heard of a King delivered in the Text. And the like; may our eyes see, of a King delivered on this day. Sicut audivimus, sic & vidimus, is the Psalm: but Plene vidimus quam audivimus, may it truly be said of this day of ours. I report me to you, if it may not: if there be not a greater Ecce; nay many greater Ecce's on this day, than on that.

Dan. 5. 3. 7.

Many wayes (I know the ballance is even, Kings both in danger, and danger of Ecce tradam, both. Both, in a cave (for, all caves are not under ground; some above stairs.) And of a knife or worse than a knife, both. And of a tumultuous rising both: and yet both preserved from both. Thus far, even. But then, in other points, they are not: No, no nor even in these. For, weigh them well, and Saul will be found (as Belshazzar was,) Tekel minus habens: too light in the ballance. And this of ours to over-weigh, to weigh him and all his downe, many wayes.

To reflect a little on this. I have said a great deale; I have said nothing, if nothing be said of this. It is the life of all. If, of the twaine, the Ecce dies of this day, be the greater, if more Ecce's upon it: the more of them, the more beholds, the more beholden are we to God: the more marvellous His mercies have been to us. the more plentiful our thanks be to Him for them.

The Ecce dies, is as the Ecce diu. Ever, the more remarkable the day, the more the things are so, that happen upon it. The Ecce dies is of two sorts: 1 Ecce tradam, 2 Ecce abiit Rex. Tradam, the deliverie into the danger: Abiit, the delivery from it.

And ever this we hold, the worse the tradam (that is, the danger;) the better the Abiit, the escaping from it: and the better it, the more is our joy: and the more our joy is, the more our thanks should ever be, Jehova liberatori. And, O that such an Ecce might be on our thanks, as there is on the day, as it and the Ecce's of it do well deserve at our hands.

1 To shew them, the Tradam is worse; I begin with the Tradem or Traditor. Ecce Tradam, Behold, I will deliver him; it is God that saith this: this was Gods doing, Sauls deliverie into: Here is no treachery in the Text. Into the cave he came of his on accord; was casually found there, not guilefully drawne thither. So, was it not to day; but the King trained thither most treacherously. Ecce; Behold then, it is far worse, when wretched men by wicked alluring meanes, shall coule one meaning no harme at all, into a secret corner, as evill as Sauls cave every whit; and there set on him. Worse, I say, for here the devill betrayes, God delivers not. Suffers, I grant; but is not agent in it. God never co-operates with treason. So then, no day (this) de quo dixit Dominus; rather de quo dixit diabolus, a day (in respect of them and their treachery) of the devils own bespeaking. This then the first ods, that a Domino factum est illud, a diabolo factum est hoc: that of Gods; this of the devils owne tradam: and so the traditor worse (I am sure) with an Ecce.

And, who was delivered, Inimicum suum, an enemy in the Text. Some reason; in that. Saul was so indeed, Dauids enim. You were not theirs: they were yours, without a cause. Nay, cause to the contrary: Nay, causes more than one. And, in that regard worse. Worse, to deliver an innocent than a deadly enemy.

1 Reg. 14: 26.

And delivered, whither? The Text is, into a cave. Where Saul (indeed) saith he was shut up: but to say truth simply he was not so: the caves mouth was open, he might have come forth, his men might come to him at his call. But, with us, in our cave, the King was secundum literam in the literal sense, shut up indeed. Many locks and doores fast upon him, no going out for him, no coming in for others. The worse his case. Nay, a worse could not be. So doth the Holy Ghost describe the hardest case of all by these three: 1 Conclusus, 2 derelictus, 3 & non eris auxiliator. All three, here: shut up, quite left, none to help. In farre worse taking, than ever was Saul in the cave.

Psal. 57. 4.

There is no hurt in a cave, if there be no hurtfull thing in it: But David saith in the Psalm, his was; and sure it is, Your soul was there among lions. The Text is, Tradam in manus tuas; Tradam in manus; I aske, into whose hands? for in danger, it is ever good lighting into good hands. Into what hands light You? No compariton, there. Saul light into Davids hands: His in manu tuas, where Davids, and Davids were gentle hands. His heart smit him, for doing but so much, as you have heard. If their heart smit them this day; it was not for doing so much, but for doing no more. David was touched with his duty to his Sovereigne, stricken with the Majesty of Christus Domini: These, they trode under foot, durie, and Majesty, and Christus and Dominus, and all. Nothing like David, quite contrary, worse with an Ecce.

Nay, not like Davids men. For first, in the Text, here is a dispute between them and David, and the parties divided. Saul the more likely to scape: as he did. Where the enemy is divided the danger the lesse. But to day, in the Kings, no debate at all. It was conclusum in causa, resolved on both sides, long before, what to do with him; if ever they got him. No way but one then.

Again, Davids men (however evill minded at first, yet) after relented were overcome. These of the day, of far another Spirit; their malice invincible. Davids men overcoming was with words: Here, it came to blowes and to griper, and all would not serve. Davids men, they were overcome willingly and did yield: These were overcome too (thanks be to God) but it was maugre their wills, they never yielded till they both lay dead on the floore. The more the parties, the more their hands such, the more your perill: the more it, the more the faire grace of God, you escaped such parties hands.

No.

Now to & facies illi; what was done. At Saul there was a Knife drawn, or rather not at Saul, but, at his mantle. A dagger, not at your mantle, but at You. Between these two, a dagger and a knife, there is some odds: but certainly between a daggers point, and a knives edge, there is. And, this was your case.

And what to do with it? (that sets it further yet.) To do nothing to Saul, and, no great thing, to his mantle: left a piece of that behind. His dagger, with far another mind, and at far another mark, than Dauids knife. More was sought here. You to lose more than so. What talk we of a piece? I would a cloak, I would a whole wardrobe would have served the turn, would have satisfied them, or excused you. No cloak-matter, here. Your best blood was sought; Your breast aimed at; and not the edge, but the point bent, and too near You.

And, to be short, for the last point, Bonum in oculis. No more than a shred, seemed good in his eyes; no less than your life, seemed good in theirs.

Thus every way from point to point, the Ecce still greater, in Tradam, the deliverie too; In Ecce abiit, in the delivery from, how holds it there?

In his extremity, Saul found one yet to cry, Abfit, to deliver him. Never an Abfit here. Never an one? Yes: one there was, and that a strong one. When that wretched creature, that was set to do the fact, in a sort hindered it for once. But, so faint an one it was, as that would not serve, as Dauids did Saul. God was fain to step into Dauids room: And when there was never a tongue on earth to say it, to say it from Heaven, thence to give the true mi yevorto, Ne fiat, I would not have it done, From heaven He sent you help; not by the Caves mouth, but miraculously another way; by them that knew not, whither they went, but unwittingly were led by God to the place of your danger.

Let me see: at the most, there were but two attempts against Saul. So, he escaped but twice. Two and two against you. Twice and twice escaped your Majestie, four times in all; four distinct dangers, and as many preservations. 1. That of him that stood ready armed. 2. That of the dagger at the first: 3. That of the sword: Nay (more than one) Ecce duo gladii, of the second Brother. 4. And that of the popular tumult worst of all. These were but upon rising, in the Text; they rose not: They, were not upon rising, but were risen up indeed. So, two *Ecce*s more in yours.

And of all this perill, Saul had no sense at all. Awake he was, but he might even as well have been asleep. Of all that was said he heard not a word: of all that was done, he perceived nothing; had an easie escape, he. So was it not with your Majestie. You heard, and saw all, and felt somewhat of that, was said, and done; escaped the perill, but not the frights and fear, oftentimes worse than the perill it self.

Upon the matter, in Sauls, somewhat was offered to be done, but nothing acted: No doing. Here there was doing and suffering both.

In Saul it never came to manum mittere, not on his person: hands were laid on his cloak; his person that not touched. Yours was, hands were laid, blood was drawn: the marks of your jaw, the hurt on your hand remained to be seen a good time after. So, Sauls comes not home, falls short in every point. More *Ecce*s in yours; Your day, Your danger, Your delivery: the more of them, the more is God still to be magnified by you, and by us all.

All fell out well in the end though, with both. It was meant, you should neither have risen, Saul, nor You. You both rose. And either of you went viam suam; viam, not eorum, but suam, went not the way, they would have sent you, the wrong way; but viam suam, your own, the right way, the way of safety and peace. And thus ended Sauls danger, and thus Yours: thus the Text, and thus the day.

Nay, yours ended not so. The goodnesse of God stayed not there. Yours had a plus ultra, another, a further, a greater Ecce yet, beyond that of Saul. There, as Saul went his way, so did his enemies their way to: he escaped them, and they him. Non sic impii, non sic: It was not so with Yours. You escaped them, they escaped not you: Quia ecce inimici tui Domine, Ecce inimici tui. For, Lo thine enemies, O Lord, lo thine enemies shall perish (and so they did;) and all the workers of wickednesse shall be destroyed (and so they were:) Misit manum in manum mittentes, He stretched his hands against them that stretched theirs against You. And because their hearts smit not them in this so foul an attempt, they were smitten to the hearts, the sword went through both their hearts. The very place they had designed for yours, became to them the place of their perishing: perishing here, and perishing eternally. The day of which they said, Non is the day come, it came indeed; but came, and proved a dismall day to them: the rubricke of it written in their own blood, withan Ecce; the last Ecce of all, Behold our fearfull end, and let every one fear to do the like.

They said not Abfit nobis a Domino: God therefore said Abfit Dominus a vobis. And so He is; He from them, and they from Him, as farre as the bottom of the nethermost hell, is from the top of the highest Heaven.

And ever the same hand of God be so layd on them, that shall offer to lay hands on Gods Anointed. So may they all shut their eyes, as many as it shall seem good in their eyes, to do the like. So, may their hearts be smitten, that ever hatch in their hearts any thought that way tending: And the faithfull mercies of David be upon them, whose eye and hand, heart and tongue, shall see, and say, and think, and do, as he did. And let the King live, live yet many yeares, to see see the renewing of this blessed Day, and to refresh the memory of Gods mercies, upon it, shewed him; and in him, shewed us all.

And now to return to the beginning. We may (I trust) now say, Ecce dies venit; Behold the day is come, with an higher accent. A day, in regard of the delivery into their hands, de quo dixit diabolus: but in regard of the delivery from them, de quo dixit Dominus, which God did bespeak. Bespeak, but in a better sense: not thus; in quo tradam in manus: but rather in quo eripiam de manibus: not deliver you into, but to deliver you out of their hands. And yet, it is dies in quo tradam too: but the edge turned toward them. Not, in quo tradam te illis; but in quo tradam illos tibi: not deliver you into your enemies: but deliver your enemies into your hands. The beginning was, they made full account, You had been given over into theirs; and that the good should have been in their eyes. The end, as is happily proved, they were given into your hands, and the good was in yours; removed thither: And you have done, and they suffered what was good, not in their, but Your own eyes: heaven an earth approving it, and rejoicing at it.

Now then, as if they had done to you that was good in their eyes, it had made many weeping eyes, it had been Ecce dies funestus: so, seeing they have suffered what was good in yours and even in Gods eyes, and thereby made many a glad heart, shall it not be Ecce dies Festus; a day of joy and health in the dwelling of the Righteous; wherein the right hand of the Lord hath the preeminence, the right hand of the Lord brought this mighty alteration to passe? As they meant it, it had been a day, the devil had marred: as it fell out, this was a day that the Lord hath made, and let us rejoyce and be glad in it; with the voice of joy and thanksgiving among such as keep holy day.

Holy (I say:) for let God have the honour of the day, for setting so many Ecce's upon it. For which, all dayes, but specially as the day it self returnes, we to make return of our thanks upon it. Even upon it, upon this day, for this day, for the many Ecces of this day; to God the Author of them, for the King and his safety, the subjecta materia of them; for the Ecce surrexit de speculunca, his rising out of the cave, in effect as good as his rising out of the grave, or (as David in this Psalm calls it) his delivery from the Lions den: thence he rose. And for Ecce abiit viam, that a way was made him, that he was not made away, but that his way he went. Then went, and many a way since hath gone, and many more may still go, and the Angell of the Lord take charge of him to keep him in all his wayes, and the Lord himself preserve his going out and coming in, from this time forth for evermore.

There is a Psalm (as I said) the LVII. purposely set (of his being there in the cave, and scaping thence:) the Psalm is like the day; represents it fitly. The forepart of it, full of danger and fear: Miserere mei Domine, miserere mei, and My soul is among Lions: well besitting you when you were under their hands. But the latter part, the Catastrophe, full of joy and triumph. When you were got out of the cave, and were now upon your way, then it was (I trust) and ever will be as there it followeth: *My heart is ready, O God, my heart is ready, I will sing and give praise: Awake up my glory, awake Lute and Harpe, I my self will awake up early: I will praise thee among the people, I will sing unto thee among the Nations: For, thy mercy is great toward me, it reacheth even up to the heavens, and thy truth above the clouds: Set up thy self, O Lord, above the heavens, and thy glory over all the earth; as this day thou didst indeed. So ends the Psalm, and a better end there cannot be. So, will we end with glory and praise, blessing and thanks, to all the three persons of the glorious Trinity: To whom for this day, and the Ecce of this day, be ascribed this day all these, even this day, and for ever.*

SERMON

PREPARED TO BE PREACHED
UPON THE FIFTH OF AUGUST, Anno. Dom. MDC. XXIII.

GEN. Chap. XLIX. Vers. V, VI, VII.

Simeon & Levi fratres, &c.

Simeon and Levi brethren in evil, the instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.

Into their secret let not my soul come; my glory, be not thou joyned with their assembly: For, in their wrath, they slew a man, and in their self-will (or fury) they digged down a wall.

Cursed be their wrath, for it was fierce; and their rage, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel.

Have read you a Text, out of a piece of Genesis: a part of Jacob's last words, before he went out of the world; or (as they call it) a clause of his last Will and Testament. There is in it a Censure upon a couple of his sonnes. In which censure (I take it) I have read the destinie of another couple: in attempting (both) of a like foul design, they as these; and these as they: as Simeon and Levi, the brethren of the Text; so these two, the brethren of the day.

To open it self here in the Text; (The day will open it self sufficiently.) You are to imagine, You see Jacob, being now about to go out of the world, lying at the very point of death, lifted up in his bed (for so he was) his Sons standing before him, according to their severall ages, as they came into the world. He had somewhat to say to them (it should seem:) and coming to these two (his second and third sons) he called to mind a foul outrage by them committed, upon Hemor and Sichem, and the whole Citie. Of which you may read before, at the 34. Chapter.

Cccc 3

This,

This, though it were done and past many yeares before, that it might seem to have been forgotten, yet it comes fresh to his mind, and troubles him (now) at the houre of his death. The nature is such (ever) of the sin of blood.

This fact of theirs, he did not think to slip over in silence; but, even then, to tell them of it, and to tell them his mind about it. No time, to keep it from them now. He was going to God; and so, stirred in Spirit, not to leave the world, till he had left a good testimonie of his deep dislike of attempts in that kind. It was the will of God, so as he spared not his eldest son Reuben, for a foul fact of another nature (for incest;) So neither did he these two, for another of blood-guiltinesse. Blood and Incest take heed of them.

Besides, it might prove dangerous (he knew) if he did not declare his mind, and set a censure upon that, and the like attempts; and that he could not discharge his conscience, if he had said nothing to it. That others therefore hearing of it, might fear to do the like; first he condemns their counsell, with a Ne veniat. Let not my soul come in any such counsel or company; 2. Then layes his heaveie curse on the fact it self, and on their thirst of revenge, the cause of it. 3 And lastly, censures them doubly for it: 1 By disinheritance, depriving them, and not them only, but all their posteritie, for ever having lot of inheritance of their own, as all the other Tribes had: 2 And then scattering them abroad up and down all Israel. For, these are two distinct, 1 To disinherit, is one thing: and, 2 to scatter abroad, is another.

The Summe.

The Summe is, Jacob their Fathers curse, and the disinherison of these two Brethren Simcon and Levi; for consulting first, and after pursuing so wicked a Counsell; as the murder of Sichem.

The Division.

Culpa and Pœna will divide the Text; the fault, and the punishment. In it do but adde the persons, to make the parts three; Simcon and Levi, the parties that made the fault, and upon whom, the punishment came.

I.

The fault, was either the fact it self; or two weighty circumstances of it. 1 The fact was, they slew a man, they brake down the wall: This for this fact. and for the two things in it; 1 First, that there was a meeting and consulting before, about the doing of it. 2 Then, that there was cruelty after, shewed in the doing of it. Consulting, and plotting before: Rage and fury, after.

II.

The punishment, or censure is of two sorts: You may thus reduce them. 1 The one is a Church-censure: 2 The other, a Civil penaltie; and so the sentence of both Courts. 1 Maledictus, of one Court, that is Spiritual: and 2 Dispergam, of the other, that is Temporal.

III.

You shall observe, all here stands upon two's: 1 Simcon, and 2 Levi: 1 they, 2 and their bloody weapons. 1. In the Plot, two: 1 Counsell; and 2 Companie: whence Jacob removeth two: 1 his soul, and 2 his glory. 2. In the fact, two: 1 Murder, and 2 Burglary: done upon two: 1 Upon the men, 2 and upon the very walls. 3. In the manner two: 1 Anger, and 2 fury: and they two: two Epithets; the Anger 1 strong, in the beginning; and the Rage 2 insatiate, in pursuing: killed the men, in their anger; brake down walls, in their furie. 4. In the censure, two: 1 The Curse, 2 and the penaltie. One looks back; the other looks forward: One to the fact, the Curse; the other, to the persons, the Penaltie part. In the Penaltie, two: 1 The dividing, and 2 the scattering; dividing their persons in the Family of Jacob: Scattering their posteritie, in the Common-wealth of Israel.

What is now the use, we have of it? First, the not coming to any such Counsels; the condemning of all such attempts, the holding for accursed, all such outrages, as this was. Which (I trust) we will now do at the last. We have seen it condemned in Persia, in Jewrie, and now, in Egypt. In Persia, by the Heathen: In Jewrie, by Kings and Prophets: And now in Egypt, by the Patriarchs. By the Heathen, in the case of Bithan and Tharez: By the Kings and Prophets, in the case of Abisalom, and Abisai: and now by the Patriarchs: in the case of Simcon and Levi. And all this even up as high as Genesis, up before the Prophets, before the Law, long yet Moses were born, in the Patriarchs dayes: and (now) higher than Genesis, further than the Patriarchs we cannot go.

Esay 59. 7.

Kings and Prophets you have heard: to day, you shall hear a Patriarch lay his curse upon it, and not, in his life-time only, but at the very point of death. All, to shew, how hatefull a sin this is, and how God will be sure to require it at their hands, whose feet are swift to shed blood. And this was the good doctrine then, and hath been ever since, till our unhappy dayes; wherein; some that have attempted it, have scaped the Patriarchs Maledictus, and have much ado to scape the Popes Benedictus and being made Saints for it.

Simcon

Simon and Levi are the parties. He joyns them together in the Proceſſe; for ſo they were in the fact: either, as deep as other, and ſo their cauſes proceeded in joynly. Two they are: and two more than one. It is hand in hand, this a double twisted cord. Hand in hand is the ſtronger; double, than ſingle iniquity:

And, this is true of any two: but more yet of theſe two; for theſe two are brethren. And, that very bond of Nature and naturall affection, works yet more ſtrength. For, ſtrong, as the barres of a Palace, ſo is frater qui a fratre adiuvatur (ſaith Salomon.)

The firſt thing, that makes us muſe, is, that Jacob calls theſe two Brethren; if the reſt were not ſo were nothing of kin to them. They were twelve brethren: themſelves ſay ſo, to Joſeph. But, not of whole blood, you will ſay. True: but, ſix of them (theſe two named, and four beſides) they had all the ſame Father (Jacob) and the ſame mother (Lea.) And, why then theſe two, two brethren, and not they? We muſt ſeek ſo ut ſomewhat, wherein theſe two were, and the reſt were not. And we will not ſtirre a whit from the Text. They two were brethren (firſt) 1 in wearing of weapons of violence (in this verſe:) 2 and (in the next) brethren, in wicked counſel: 3 and (third) in the rage of revenge: 4 And (laſt) in a bloody murder. And, as in theſe that make up the fault; ſo, in the puniſhment. In all theſe, were theſe two, brethren; and theſe two only: The other nothing of kin to them, no fraternity in theſe.

If Rabbi Salomon be right, that חֲבֵרִים in Greek be all one with Mechera in Hebrew; then it is, the swords they were girt with, were weapons of violence. But if (as others take it) Mechera be a rent; then, it muſt be, the weapons of violence were to be found in their tents; that, in their tents they had them, though not at their ſides. The other were of a more quiet diſpoſition: ſo were not theſe; but their sword out, ready to offer violence upon every occaſion. The other had weapons too, but not weapons of violence: and, tents they had but, cruelty dwelt not in them. Weapons of cruelty then, is their firſt difference.

Why, may not one for a need, have by his ſide or in his houſe weapons? Yes: But theſe were Chele chamas (that is) weapons of violence, and violence implies wrong, ever. Weapons, he may: of wrong, he may not. All even our very hands and members themſelves: are to be weapons of righteouſneſſe. God never intended to arme injuſtice. There is no power given to deſtroy, or do violence withall. The Law allowes no Chele chamas: no man to have them in his houſe; no man to weare them by his ſide. No ſword is allowed to private fury or revenge: Adibi vindictam, Revenge is GODS, for he will do juſtice. The ſword of it is his; and no mans, but whom God girdeth with it, by vertue of the words in Genesis, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed. But that man is not every man: that ſword hangs not at every mans girdle; nor is, by every hand to be drawn forth.

There is one caſe only, where the party would, and cannot ſtay for the Magiſtrates ſuccour: the aſſailant comes on him ſo fierce and furiouſly, that either he muſt uſe it, or loſe his life: and yield it to the rage of his enemy, being a private man, as himſelf. In that caſe, if he cannot otherwiſe keep off violence from himſelf, it is lent him pro hac vice tantum; and the uſe of it made lawfull, by the unwritten Law, the Law of Nature: Dim vi: Yet (as we ſpeak) cum moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ, or (as our Law) Se defendendo. And never, but upon that occaſion: and in that caſe, the ſword is but a weapon of defence, to keep off violence. And out of that caſe, this one except, not to be allowed. Even they, that carry the ſword in their name (Gladiatores) we call them Fencers: and ſo do they themſelves, their ſcience, the Science of defence, that is, Skill to uſe their weapons only to that end. For (ever) a Cherethite is eo ipſo to be a Pelethite. Theſe two were but one: their weapons, to defend and ſave: to deliver from wrong, to do none. To make the ſword the weapon of cruelty is to abuſe the ſword: Every abuſe is naught: And ſo, theſe two, Brethren, non tam natura quam nequitia, not ſo much in nature, as in naughtineſſe. As, we know a place, where many ſuch there be; no kin at all by nature, yet ſworne brethren they call themſelves: making Sacramentum pietatis vinculum iniquitatis; binding themſelves by the oath of God, to ſerve the Divell: As they all are, whose feet are ſwift to ſhed blood. So, the Patriarch implies thus much: that of all his ſonnes, theſe two were by nature of a revengefull, of a bloody diſpoſition. And as they were, ſo were their weapons. For, who will blame the ſword, or lay any thing to the weapons charge? The weapon is, as the man is; as he will uſe or abuſe it. Of it ſelf, not violent, if he be not ſo, that weares it. But, theſe were ſo: and ſo, the fault, in the men, and not in the weapons. Brethren of blood they were; and not ſo, but Brethren in blood. And ſo paſſe we from this blood.

You may gheſſe at their diſpoſitions, not ſo much by their weapons, as by their counſell; in conſilium eorum: He tels of a Counſel taken about it, where they met, and ſaid one to another, their ſwords ſhould do violence: their ſiſter was wronged; they would be revenged: and no revenge ſerve them, but death and deſtruction; death of the men, deſtruction of the the Town, yea, of the very walls of it. It was a plot or conspiracy then : a very match made between them.

And what was their Counsel? In dolo, deceitfully contrived. Marry they would their sister, to Sichem; and all should be well, if they would be circumcised. Whereas, their purpose was, when they were forest of their circumcising; when the wound was at worst, and they could not stir; then, to set upon them, and make a massacre of them all.

Here, Jacob cannot containe him self, but burst out, from such Matches God keep me. At the very first, at the doing, Jacob misliked it : misliked it then, and ever after; and even now, at his death he cries, Ne veniat, Never let my soul come among them, or have to do with them.

It troubled him much, at the time, it was done. He saw, he lost his reputation by it. Lo, here is the holy Patriarch! Here be Imps of his breeding and bringing up! That they made him even stinke (you will beare with it, it is the HOLY GHOSTS word) before the Nations round about.

Be-side, they put him in fear, and hazard of his own, and all their lives. Very like it was, they would all have been over-run by the bordering people, but that GOD, seeing Jacobs innocency, even for His sake sent His fears into the heart of the Nations adjoining, that they pursued them not to death with the like cruelty. These were motives for the present : but here now, so many years after, he takes it on his death, he was never party nor privy to it. Never was he, to that; nor ever would be, to any such, as we see by his so deeply detesting it, and protesting against it. For it is, as if he should say : I here declare openly before GOD and the World, it went against my very soule, this counsel of theirs : I had no hand in it, neither art, nor part (as they say) neither had, nor ever meant to have : but was, and ever will be innocent from all that belong to it, violence, counsell and all. Never let my soul come among such.

And why not come in any such counsell? For, where two or three are at counsell about any such matter, Inter duos proditores Diabolus est tertius, where two are consulting of any treachery, the Diavell is the third. Misit Satanas in cor, was in Judas, is the rule of all traitours. The first mission, the first motion, is (ever) from him : he the prime Counsellour of the three. And blame not Jacob, if he would not be one of, or one at any counsell of his, or have his soul at the end of any such treaty.

This, on their parts, makes it the more hainous, that they did it not of any sudden passion, but consulted, in cold blood : slept upon it, rose upon it, were in it three dayes : Did all advisedly of malice pretended : met about it, took counsell, how to effect it, the counsell of the ungodly : Put off the execution, till after three dayes.

On Jacobs part; two things he speaks of : 1 That neither his soul should ever come in such counsell. (So, it is a soule-matter; a counsell, and an act, which brings with it the hazard of the soule.) 2 Nor his glory or reputation : (so that, it is a thing which toucheth ones honour and reputation neer; a blemish to the glory of a man.) As pollutes his soule, so taints his blood; is the losse of both. To save both these, he doth (we see) and we must disavow all such counsell and Counsellors. All are bound under the same paine, to make the same protestation : to say the same Ne veniat anima mea, all that are of the Israel of God. Let never my soule come into any such counsell, let never any such counsell come into my soul. Marke those two words : 1 his soule, and 2 his glory : the two things of highest regard withall ; 1 What shall become of our soules, 2 What Name we shall leave behind us. All, to think, that in such company, they do but cast away their soules, they do but lose the honour of their name for ever.

And yet, a farther matter there is. For, marke these two words, Counsell, and Assembly, Sod and Kahal : for by them, two severall partakings he seemes to set out. 1 One, of their secret privie meetings that is Sod. 2 The other is Kahal, which is any publike meeting or assembly of theirs ; and namely their Church and Congregation. He speaks to his glory, never to make one in any such assembly, never to be joyned to any such Congregation : so, makes a matter of Religion of it. Never, of that Church, which shall give countenance, that there may be any meetings, to any such end. It is no Kahal, no Church, no religion for Jacob, that favours any man that is so minded.

If then we will like or dislike with the King and Prophet David, we must say Chalila li, God forbid I should once lift up my hand to any such act; If we will like or dislike with the Patriarch Jacob, we must say, Ne veniat in consilium anima mea. You observe the Patriarchs and the Prophets agree well : Jacobs Ne veniat, with Dauids absit mihi a domino. Not only to have cleane hands from it, nor to lift them up or stretch them out to the Act; but a cleane soul : never once to consult, but to detest, not only their consultations, but even the congregations of such consultours, that be that way given. Neither Civilly, nor Ecclesiastically; neither in Church nor Market (as they say) to have to do with them.

And for a farewell to this point, let me tell you ; there be, that interpret Jacob's speech, in this sense. Not, let not me, nor my soul be present, or partaker of any such ; but, let not my soule or life ; be the matter or subject of any such consultation : Ne tractent de anima mea in consilio tali, ut sicut Sichemitis fecerunt, sic facerem & mihic God keep my soul, save my life from any such Consultours, for ever coming to be treated or debated of, by any such. Let never any such meet in counsel, about my soul or me. Both will stand well : 1 Neither I, about any mans ; 2 nor any, about mine : either, 1 to consult about the life of any other ; or, 2 my life to be consulted of, by any other like them.

From the counsell we come to the fact; to the hatching of it. There is too much in the Counsell; that was fault enough, if no fact followed: But, here followed a fact too. and that a foule fact. Which is of two sorts: exprest first in two words, 1 Interfecerunt, and 2 suffoderunt; that is, Murder and Burglary: and two more; killed, whom? it is said, a man, virum, in the singular, but one; the number doth but aggravate, the fact is all one, one or more, both to be condemned.

II.
The Fact,
1 Murder,
Interfecerunt

But sure, Jacob in saying Virum, a man, meant but, and aimed but at one, principally. Virum: ad quem Virum? what man was it? Hemor the cheif man, the Ruler, the Lord of the City, and the territory about. Of no great circuit (perhaps,) That comes all to one: But: being the Souveraigne Ruler and Lord, such a man is worth many men: that, in killing him, they may be said, in one to have killed many. And, as if Jacob thought, they might be quit of the rest, so they had left that man (the cheife Magistrate) alone.

VI. 111.

But they killed more than one: Even every mothers son, all the males in the City. This is an outrage: not to leave a man to kill: to kill them all, as if they were but one man; to leave not one alive!

Chap. 34. 25.

And why? what was the offence? Sichem had deflawred their sister. Say, there was a fault in Sichem: what no remedy, but kill and slay him? But if his were the fault, let him alone be slaine. But, what was his fathers fault? He sought to make amends, by marriage, for the wrong done, and gave them a blank for her loynter, to put in what they would: Agreed to be circumcised, he and all his people: All that ever in reason could be required. Why was he (then) slaine? For being his father. Nothing else can be alledged: But all the men in the City, the poor people, what had they done? They went about their business, medled nothing in the matter: Yet they went to the pot, too. So, it is murder of many, and those many, innocents all, Innocent and nocent together, to be swept away? shall the Judge of the world do it? shall any Judge in the world do that, which the Judge of the world would not do? They said: should he abuse our sister? No: But should he do it, and all they suffer for it? But, what had their wives and children deserved; that they should be led captive, and all they had, either in house or field, taken for a prey, made spoyle of, and carried clean away? But, what had the walls and houses hurt them, that not only the house-walls, but even the Town-walls must be laid flat for it? was there ever heard of a greater havocke?

Gen. 34. 2.

Gen. 34. 11.

Gen. 34. 24.

Gen. 18. 25.
Gen. 34. 31.

And so eager upon it they were, that, to commit the murder they commit Burglary first: First, downe with the house-walls, that after, down with the men. So greedie to kill, as break down walls, breake up houses to make their slaughter. For, either it must be, they broke through the houses to come at the men and kill them: Or, when they had killed the men, they pull'd down the houses and all. Both (it may well be) they did: But one it must needs. And, that one, is too foul and barbarous.

2 Burglary,
Suffoderunt
Virum.

Now put to the circumstances, which are ever of importance (specially in a story) and well worthy to be weighed, in a matter of fact. Here was no warre, wherein such things are done: (for, the name of warre covers many a foule fault.) But, warre it was not; but a treaty of peace. So, they shed the blood of warre (that is,) that blood which but in warre should not be shed: made spoils as in war; razed down Towns, as in war, and all this in peace.

1 King. 2. 5.

Nay, not only a treaty of peace, but of a match and marriage, contracting affinitie, of a firm league, of amicie perpetuall. Nay, of unity in Religion, taking upon them the same scale of the Covenant. That, they violated all three, 1 Iura fœderis, 2 Connubii, 3 Religionis. And that; in all these, their counsell was fraudulent, Bemerna, without any good meaning, coloured only with these three pretences. Which they did not only violate, but above all abused the holy ordinance of Matrimonie; 2 abused the Sacrament, 3 and made the sacred Scale of righteousness, a cloake for their bad and barbarous intent.

כנס

They would seeme to pretend justice: But, even in justice, the rule is, pro mensura peccati there should be plagarum modus. Here was no measure kept. A whole City sackt, a whole Country spoil'd, all the men slaine, all the rest led away as prisoners; and all for a fault, to which they were no wayes accessory.

And that, all this they did, with a kind of contempt of Jacob their Father, and his authority: never acquainted him with it, never consulted him about it. He was bound not to come in their counsell: they were bound to come to him for his; who if they had come, would have counselled better.

The conclusion is: Reason they had none; nor colour of reason. Only, it is said Birtsonam, for their will and pleasure, did they all this. A wretched pleasure, to take delight in so wicked a designe.

כנס

To this, adde the root of all, set out in two words, 1 Rage, and 2 Outrage, or Anger and fury. That their anger shewed it self cruel; that their fury shewed it self indurate. It was not App only, that is anger; but Gebrath, which is past anger, gone beyond; indeed, very fury. They did it furiously. And, that fury was hard, hard as stone; cast off all compassion, without pity.

The Root of these:

1 Anger.
2 Fury.

or mercy spared none; Not the poore people, that made no fault; not the women and children, but made bootie of them: No, not the walls, but down with them too. And (which is worst of all the rest) spared not God neither: did all these in the very act of religion. If they had done it, when they were (yet) Heathen men, it had been the lesse: but now, in their being circumcised to doe it, as they were coming on to be the people of God, and were within the Covenant, by receiving it already: Now to do it, inferreth well, Cursed be the wrath, yea thrice accursed, that outrage; for, the like was never heard. Anger (we know) is furor brevis: And si gravis, brevis; being so vehement, it should not be long by course of nature: But this was long too, continued; not to be satisfied, but implacable; Nothing could appease them, or turne them from their outrage; till they saw walls and all lye flat upon the ground. Here, we look back. Their weapons (above) were Chels, which is (properly) vasa, vessels. So as, their passion was not poured out like water, and so let run away, but it was kept or reserved, as liquor in a vessel; barrell'd up, to be broached, when they saw cause. Without reason, in the beginning; without appeasing, in the end. Such was the malice of these men: Such theirs of this day.

III
The Curse.
1 A Maledictus to the fact.
Deut. 27. 24,
25.

Now, such rage, so outrageous, justly deserves a Maledictus: Such wrath, so qualified beyond all account, so exorbitant, so insatiable. On such wrath, Jacob layes his Curse, curseth them here. Which Curse was (after) by God renewed in Mount Ebal: Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbour secretly: Again, Cursed be he that lieth in wait, to shed innocent blood. The two last, and heaviest curses there, to which all Israel was to say Amen.

From Jacob

While it was but in consultation, Jacob cries Ne veniat, away with the counsell, come not at it. But, when it comes into act, then he cries, Maledictus, Cursed be the execution; at no hand, be an Assour in that. Nay, not onely have no part in it your selves, but condemne them that have so, and hold them as people accursed, even by Jacob's own mouth.

Numb. 24. 9

Weigh a little this Maledictus of Jacob. Maledictus is a word, we would not heare, from the poorest or meanest body, that is. But there is much in the partie, who is (here) a Patriarch; and they vertuous, holy and grave persons. To be curst of one of them is much: for, whom they curse, God curseth also. And not only a Patriarch, but a Father, to whom God hath given power to blesse, and to curse; and whose curse ever accompanieth a fathers; especially such a Father, as is like Jacob. So that, this puts them under God's curse certainly.

On his death-bed.

Weigh also the circumstance, the time. For this time was the time of blessing: Lying on their death-beds, men commonly give their last blessing to their children. So did Jacob to Judah here, and so to the rest. At this time (then) to do it, is somewhat yet more strange, than at another; Nay than at any other time. Blessing-time with others, is cursting-time with them. When he blest others, to curse them, and that there, on his death-bed! For, the curse of the death-bed is of all other the worst, such as are so curst, some evill will come to them.

Ephes. 2. 26.

Yet somewhat to ease it, This curse (if you marke it) is not on their persons: their nature, as men, is not toucht; but only by reflection upon their affection of Anger. And yet, not on that neither. (For, there is good use of them also: for, one may be angry and sin not.) But as it was transcendent, too much and too long; past the bounds of all reason and moderation. And this was their punishment spirituall.

2 A Dispergam to the Persons.

Maledictus, that goes to the fact: dispergam to their persons; which he denounceth, shall fall upon them. And, he doth not this by way of Prophecy, they shall be divided and scattered: but pronounced it by way of sentence. Not, it shall be done: but he will doe it himselfe. It should be his owne act, and he would never leave it, till he see it put in execution. And, though it were not done in his time, yet it was as good as done; as certaine and sure, as if, at that time, it had had the performance.

You may referre dividam to Simeon, and dispergam to Levi. Simeon was divided into pieces; A piece, in Judah; a piece, in Dan, a piece, in Mount Seir of the Amalekites. Levi was scattered here and there, up and downe in every corner of the Land. Or (if you will referre it to both,) they were divided, while Jacob continued a family: they were dispersed, when they after came to be a State.

And (if you marke) the punishment is very proper, and well proportioned to the fault. The fault was a bad union: their punishment is a just division. Their fault was hand in hand, they were too near: their punishment is, they shall be set farre enough asunder, for taking any such counsell more. So, whom the devil hath joyned, GOD puts in sunder, And, a righteous thing it is, it should be so. For, punishments should have in them the nature of a medicine: They cure (ever) by contraries: Heat, by cold; drought, by moisture. Even as this doth; an evill joyning by a just dispersion.

2. 20. 21. 22.

There was great wisdom in this punishment. For, them that be evill, if we destroy them not, we must take order to weaken them: and to separate them, is to weaken them. United force is the stronger; disunited the weaker still. Undo the faggot band, and when the sticks be severed, you shall stick by stick, deal with them, and keep them under. A stick will easily be broken; a faggot will not. So as, to scatter them, is to weaken them.

And so to be, is good for Simeon and Levi themselves. It takes from them, hability to do hurt: pares their wiles, breaks off their horns, doth them good against their wills. For, if the worst to come the worst, they can hurt but singly or by one. And therefore we say; Consultum est malis, ut a sociis socii dividantur: they that are ill affected, it is good for them and their fellows, to be put asunder.

And, if it be good for them; certainly, for the other Tribes, much more: They shall all live the more quietly. For, if these two should still continue together, they might the sooner, the more easily, again in like sort combine, and confederate themselves together against the other Tribes; if they gave them but the least occasion. Now they shall be so scattered, and set, where they shall do no great harme any more: as no more they did. And so, as it was good for them, so we say, Consultum est Republicæ ut dividantur socii ad malum; Good for the Common-wealth, if any be that way given, to remove them either from other at least. So, they the weaker; and the rest the safer. But scattering will not alwaies serve: for, even scattered, some do mischief enough. And therefore, it is a good police, to coop them up, if scattering they do harm; as it is, to scatter them, if they prove the worfe for being together.

To speak a little of the grievousnesse of the punishment: these degrees are in it. 1 First, it concludes the dispersion of them, the losse of having any lot at all of inheritance of their own, as the rest of the Tribes had. It kills not the men, but it pulls down their wall, and layes them to the Common, wherein every man had as much right, as they. And sure, GOD of his goodnesse, not intending to proceed the way Himself had set: that, having shed mans blood, by man should their blood be shed (for so, they should have been rooted out clean, and two Tribes had been lost in Israel.) The next was, to let them have no inheritance, entirely by themselves, as had all the rest. As the Psalmist saith: Slay them not, lest my people forget, any such thing was done, but scatter them abroad, and so put them down that way, as chaff is either to be burnt, or the wind to scatter it, no man can tell whether. The grievousnesse of the punishment, 1 Disinheriting, Psalm 59.11,

A second degree is, not only to be disinherited, but to be scattered: for, that was Cain's punishment, divided and cast out from GOD's presence, all his life long: To wander up and down, he knew not whether. That was, for blood too, the blood of Abel. It is the Jewes punishment: (and that was for blood too; the blood of CHRIST;) that they are scattered all over the earth (as, to this very day they be,) and never could get together, to make an entire state, no more than these did. 2 Scattering, Gen. 4.12,

The third degree is; That all this did light upon their whole posterity, rather than upon their own persons. For, to have all, that came of them, so dispersed abroad, was a more heavy bearing to them, than if it had light on themselves: of that I make no question. It is the course, GOD holdeth in his Law, to visit the sinnes of the fathers upon the children. But, this is yet heavier: for, there, it is but to the third and fourth, but this is to endure throughout all generations. The father, which is little moved with his own losse, if it shall turn to the dammage of his children, it will move him the rather: As, this ever hath done, and ever shall. 3 Even of their posterity, Exod. 20.5,

And let this be the last, That Jacob's Maledictus, and his Dispergam, do remain and stand thus of record; and so shall stand to the worlds end. The Curse on their heads, a blot on their names, a scattering upon their seed and posterity for ever. 4 And that upon record,!

But, Let me adde this: That, though it appears, their nature was none of the best; they were no good natur'd-men, as given to blood, and so to be disliked: yet was not their nature exempted from grace though, but place left for grace, and so, they to be relieved that way. For, it may well be thought, this so severe a censure, specially at this time now inflicted, and by their own father, being to go out of the world; that it wrought upon these two brethren, and wrought in them deep contrition of that their outrage. Wherewith GOD being appeased, turned their curse into a blessing: Pœnam dispersionis in præmium Sacerdotis (say the Fathers.) For, the curse, which Jacob inflicted, Moses reserved; (not for their dispersing, which came through their fathers fault:) Scattered they were, but scattered with honour: One having the Office of Priest-hood, and teaching men: the other, of Scribes and School-masters, training up their children all the Tribes over.

Let us see now, if you can find in these men, the men of this day; and, in this fact, theirs; and so for the punishment likewise. 1 Two they were, this day: So the number agrees. 2 And brethren they were, as nearly allied. 3 And weapons they had both. 4 And made of the same metall (of violence) that theirs here. 5 Counsell they took, into which Jacob's soul would never have come. 6 And coloured it with false semblance (Bemërma) no lesse than these: (One, of discovering of (I wot not what) Secret: the other, of not being from the Sermon in any wife: his Sermon, like their Circumcision.) 7 Did as much as in them lay, to execute their counsel: offered to strike, offered to bind, lay hands, grasped, fell to the ground. 8 And from the same root they came both, from desire of Revenge. Their fury no whit lesse, no lesse cruel, no lesse implacable. Thus farre their likenesse holds.

But now, in two things, dislike: 1. One, these in the Text had some cause: their Sister was deflowred. Not the least colour, here, Their Sister was honoured; themselves dealt with but too well. No cause in the world, they. Dislike, in this first.

2. And then, if you come to the issue, in that, dislike too. It was not interfecerunt indeed (we thank GOD for that, it was not:) Yet they did their good will (Birsonam;) And, it was a judged case in Persia, Volucrum was enough.

But, when we come to the Virum, there (I am sure) is great odds. Ours, another manner of Virum, than theirs, and put Hemor and Sichem both together. Many a year after this, there were in that Land thirty one Kings, whereof Hemor (at the most) had but one part: The least of your three Kingdoms, is greater than all the thirty one put together. So, there holds no proportion in Virum.

Will ye see now the punishment? that though hand were in hand, they were not unpunished. Jacob's Legacie came on ours too. Under Jacobs curse they died. His curse upon their souls, under which their souls lie, and so shall for evermore. And upon their glory and honour; for, that is gone and lost for ever: and, as their souls, so their memory accursed. And upon their Tribe or House; for, that is scattered as dust before the wind, and come to nought.

And one degree further, wherein ours were dislike. Simcon and Levi, for all this lived out their time; slew, but were not slain. But, here this day with these, in stead of Interfecerunt, it was Interfecti sunt. This Simcon and Levi, they lay both dead on the floore, with their weapons of cruelty in their hands, with their wicked counsel and purpose in their hearts. Which hearts of theirs, the weapons of just defence went thorow; and their counsel turned to their confusion.

And now our Benedictus Deus to GOD: Blessed be He for this Maledictus of Jacob, for the Patriarch's curse, that light upon them and theirs. And yet our Maledictus too, to them, their weapons, their counsel, their fury, their souls, and their memories. And, from such blood-thirsty cursed men, GOD ever blese You.

Let me tell you this, for a farewell. Jacob doth here two things: 1. Delivers us a Document; 2. and denounceth a dreadfull punishment. His Document is, Ne veniat anima mea: His punishment is, Maledictus and dissipabo. And choose, they that will not say, Ne veniat with him, he will say, Maledictus, his curse be upon them. But, as Jacob said, so we to say all, all to say after him, Ne veniat, both passive, and active. Passive: Never be their counsel taken about Jacob's soul; or his soul, that is to us, Jacob, even the Feeder, the Pastor, and Stone of Israel; never come his soul, to be the subject, or matter treated of in any such counsel. Active: and never let any true subjects soul come in any such counsel: nor ever any good Christian come in that Church, wherein such Counsel, or Counsellours are harboured and maintained; or that hold any doctrine that favours any such consultations.

But if any will not thus say Jacob's ne veniat; we to be so bold as to say Jacob's Maledictus, to him, his soul, his seed, his memory and all. Let all such inherit the curse, let it be their legacie.

Psalm 68. 11

Exurgat Deus, & dissipentur inimici, Let GOD arise, and these His enemies be scattered; As the stubble before the wind, and as the smoke, let them vanish and come to nothing. Let their lives be for the sword, their names be put out; their souls for the curse, their houses pull'd down and desolate. So perish all thine enemies, O LORD, &c.

PSAL. CXVIII. VER. XIII. XIV.

A Domino factum est istud, & est mirabile in oculis nostris. Hæc est Dies quam fecit Dominus; exultemus & lætemur in ea.

This is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoyce and be glad in it.

O entitle this time to this Text, or to shew it pertinent to the present occasion, will ask no long proceffe. This Day of ours, this fifth of November, a day of Gods making; that which was done upon it was the Lords doing. Christ's owne application (which is the best) may well be applied here: This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in our ears. For if ever there were a deed done, or a day made by God, in our dayes; this day, and the deed of this day was it: If ever He gave cause of marvelling (as in the first;) of rejoycing (as in the second verse) to any land; to us this day, He gave both: If ever saved, prospered, blessed any; this day, He saved, prospered, and (as we say) fairly blessed us.

Luk. 4. 21.

The day (we all know) was meant to be the day of all our deaths: and we, and many were appointed as sheep to the slaughter; nay, worse than so. There was a thing doing on it, if it had been done, we all had been undone. And the very same day we (all know) the day, wherein that appointment was disappointed by God, and we all saved, that we might not die but live, and declare the raise of the Lord; the Lord, of whose doing, that marvellous deed was; of whose making, this payfull day is, that we celebrate.

Verf. 17.

This

Pſalm 111.3.

This mercifull and gracious LORD (ſaith David, Pſalm 111. 5.) hath ſo done His marvellous works, that they ought to be had, and kept in remembrance. Of keeping in remembrance, many wayes there be: Among the reſt, this is one, of making dayes; ſet ſolemn Dayes to preſerve memorable Acts, that they be not eaten out, by them, but ever revived, with the return of the Yeare, and kept ſtill freſh in continuall memory. GOD himſelf taught us this way. In remembrance of the great deliver from the destroying Angel, He himſelf ordained the day of the Paſſe-over yearly to be kept. The Church, by Him taught, took the ſame way. In remembrance of the diſappointing of Hamans bloody lots: they likewiſe appointed the dayes of Purim, yearly to be kept. The like memorable mercy did He vouchſafe us: The destroyer paſſed over our dwellings, this day: It is our Paſſe-over. Haman, and his Fellowes had ſet the dice on us, and we by this time had been all in peeces: It is our Purim day.

Exod. 12.3, &c.

Eſter 9.26.

We have therefore well done and upon good warrant, to tread in the ſame ſteps, and by Law to provide, that this Day ſhould not die, nor the memorial thereof periſh, from our ſelves or from our ſeed; but be conſecrated to perpetual memory, by a yearly acknowledgement to be made of it throughout all generations. In accompliſhment of which order, we are all now here in the preſence of GOD, on this day, that He firſt, by His Act of doing, hath made; and we ſecondly, by our act of decreeing, have made before Him, His holy Angels, and men, to confeſſe this His goodneſſe, and our ſelves eternally bound to Him for it. And, being to confeſſe it, with what words of Scripture can we better or fitter do it, than thoſe we have read out of this Pſalm? Sure, I could think of none fitter, but even thus to ſay, A Domino factum, &c.

III.

The treaty whereof may well be comprized in three points: 1. The Deed or doing: 2. The Day; and 3. The Duty. The Deed, in theſe: This is the Lords, &c. The Day, in theſe: This is the Day, &c. The Duty, in the reſt; Let us, &c. The other two reduced to the Day, which is the center of both. The doing is the cauſe; The Duty is the conſequent: from the day groweth the duty.

To proceed orderly, we are to begin with the day. For though (in place) it ſtand after the deed; yet to us, it is firſt: our knowledge is a poſteriori. The effect ever firſt, where it is the ground of the reſt. Of the day then firſt.

John 16.22.

1 That ſuch dayes there be, and how they come to be ſuch. 2. Then of the doing, that maketh them: wherein 1 that this of *David*s was; and 2 that ours is no leſſe, rather more, 3. Then of the duty, how to do it? by rejoycing, and being glad: for ſo, gaudium erit plenum, theſe two make it full: How to take order, that we may long-and often do it, by ſaying our Hofanna, and Benedictus; for, gaudium noſtrum nemo tollet a nobis, thoſe will make, that our joy no man ſhall take from us.

I.
Of the Day.
Such dayes
there be.

This is the day: This? Why, are not all dayes made by Him? Is there any dayes not made by Him? Why then ſay we, This is the day the Lord hath made? Divide the dayes into natural and civil; the natural, ſome are clear and ſome are cloudy: the civil, ſome are luckie dayes, and ſome diſmal. Be they fair or foul, glad or ſad; (as the Poet calleth him) the great Dieſpiter, the Father of dayes hath made them both. How ſay we then of ſome one day, above his fellow: This is the day, &c.

Gen. 1.14, 26.

No difference at all, in the dayes, or in the moneths themſelves: by nature, they are all one. No more in November, than another moneth: nor in the fifth, than in the fifteenth. All is, in GOD's making. For, as in the Creation, we ſee, all are the workes, and yet a plain difference between them for all that, in the manner of making: Some made יהי Sit, Let there be light, a firmament, dry Land; Some, with Faciamus with more ado, greater forecaſt, and framing, as man, that maſter-piece of his workes, of whom therefore in a different ſenſe, it may be ſaid: This is the Creation which GOD hath made (ſuppoſe, after a more excellent manner.) In the very ſame manner, it is with dayes; All are His making, all equal in that; but, that letteth nor, but He may beſtow a ſpecial Faciamus upon ſome one day more than other; and ſo that day, by ſpecial prerogative, ſaid To be indeed a day, that God hath made.

Pſalm 65.11.

Now, for GOD's making, it ſareth with dayes, as it doth with yeares. Some yeare (ſaith the Pſalm) GOD crowneth with His goodneſſe, maketh it more ſeaſonable, healthfull, fruitfull, than other. And ſo for dayes; GOD leaveth a more ſenſible impreſſion of His favours upon ſome one, more than many beſides, by doing upon it ſome marvellous work. And, ſuch a day on which GOD vouchſafeth ſome ſpecial factum eſt: ſome great and publike benefit; notable for the time preſent, memorable for the time to come, in that caſe, of that Day (as if GOD had ſaid Faciamus diem hunc, ſhewed ſome workmanſhip, done ſome ſpecial coſt on it) it may with an accent, with an emphasis be ſaid, This verily is a day, which GOD hath made, in comparison of which, the reſt are, as if they were not; or at leaſt were not of His making.

As for black and diſmal dayes, dayes of ſorrow and ſad accidents; they are and may be counted ed (saith Job) for no dayes: Nights rather, as having the shadow of Death upon them; or, if Dayes, such as his were, which Sathan had marr'd, than which God had made. And for common and ordinary Dayes; wherein as there is no harm, so not any notable good; we rather say, they are gone forth from God, in the course of nature (as it were) with a flow, than made by Him; specially, with a faciamus. So, evil Dayes; no Dayes; or Dayes marr'd; and common Dayes, but no made Dayes: Only those made, that crowned with some extraordinary great Favour, and thereby get a dignity, and exaltation above the rest: exempted out of the ordinary course of the Calendar with an Hic est. Such, in the Lam, was the Day in the Passover, made by God, the head of the year. Such, in the Gospel of CHRIST: Resurrection, made by God, Dies Dominicus; and to it; do all the Fathers apply this verse. And we had this day our Passover, and we had a Resurrection, or megbodd, as Isaac had. But I forbear to go further in the general. By this that hath been said, we may see, there be dayes of which it may be safely said, This is the Day, &c. and in what sense, it may be said. Sure there be then; that this of ours, one of them; that if it be; we may so hold it, and do the duties that pertain to it.

Job 3:36.

Exod 12. 1.

Heb 11:10.

David's Day here, was one certainly, Dictante Spiritu; and they, that are like it, to be holden for such: so that, if ours be as this was, it is certainly Dies a Deo factus. Now then (to take our Rule from the former verse) Factum Domini facit diem Domini. It is GODS Deed, that maketh its GODS Day: and the greater the Deed, the more GODS Day. There must be first, Factum est, some doing: and secondly, it must be a Domino, He the doer: and thirdly, that somewhat must be somewhat marvellous: and fourthly, not in it self, so; but, in our eyes. These four go to it; these four make any day a day of Gods making. Let us see then these four, First, in David here, and then in our own; and if we find them all, boldly pronounce, This is the Day, &c.

II.
David's Day was such.

First, The factum est, in David; what was done, set down at large in the forepart of the Psalms. It was a Deliverance; all the Psalms runneth on nothing else. Every deliverance is from a Danger, and by the Danger, we take measure of the Deliverance. The greater that, the greater the Deliverance from it: and the greater the delivery, the greater the Day, and the more likely to be of GODS own manufacture. His Danger first: what should have been done. He was in a great distress. Three several times, with great passion, he repeats it, that his Enemies; came about him; compassed him round; compassed and kept him in on every side: were, no swarm of Bees so thick: That they gave a terrible lift or thrust at him, to overthrow him; and very near it they were. And at last, as if he were newly crept out of his grave, out of the very jaws of death and despair, he breaks forth; and saith, I was very near my death; near it I was, but non moriar, die I will not now; for this time, but live a little longer to declare the works of the Lord. This was his Danger; and a shrewd one (it seemeth) it was. From this danger he was delivered. This, the factum est.

In it there was
1. A Factum est,
A deliverance.

From Danger.
Ver. 10, 11, 12.
Verse 13.
Verse 17.

But man might do all this; and so it be mans day, for any thing is said yet. Though it were great, it maketh it not Gods, unless God, God (I say) and not man, but GOD Himself were the doer of it: and if He the Doer, He denominates the Day. This then was not any mans, not any Princes doing; but GODS alone, His might, His mercy, that brought it to pass: Not any arm of flesh, but GODS might; not of any merits of his, but of his own meet Mercy. This was done by His might: Thrice he tells us of it; It was the right hand of the Lord, that brought this mighty thing to pass. This was done by His Mercy: His ever enduring mercy: four times he tells us, it was that, did it. With that he begins, and makes it the key of the Song. Then, as we have factum est, so we have A Domino: The Doer and the Doer both.

2.
A Domino. By GOD, not by man, Ver. 8, 9.

Verse 15, 16.
Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4.

GODS doings are many, and not all of one size. The Prophet Zachary speaketh of a day of small things; and even in those small, must we learn to see God, or we shall never see Him in greater. Yet, so dimme is our sight, that unless they be great, commonly we see him not: nay, unless it be great usque ad miraculum; so great, that marvellous withal, we count it not worth a day, nor worthy God; unless it be such. But if it be such, then it is Gods, Qui facit mirabilia solus; who only works great Marvells; then man is shut out, and Gods must the Day be. A Domino factum est mirabile.

3.
Et Mirabile, and marvellous it was,
*Zech. 4. 10.

Psal 72. 18.

And yet this is not enough. The truth is, all that God doth, all His works are wonderful: Magna, sed idcirco parva quia ubi sunt. Great Wonders all; but not wonderful; seem small to us, because they be usual: His miracles are no more marvellous, than His ordinary works, but that we see the one daily, and the other not. Therefore he addeth [In our eyes] for a full period: His doings, all marvellous in the selves, but not marvellous in our eyes, unless they be rare, and the like not seen before: But then, they be; and then we say, Dignus Dei est, it is the finger of God; nay, the right hand of God, that brought this mighty thing to pass. Then we give the day for Gods, without more ado. Now then, we have all that goeth to it: 1. A Deliverance wrought: wrought by God: 2. a wonderful deliverance: 3. and that even in our eyes. These make David's day, a day of Gods making.

Will these be found in ours, and then ours shall be so too? They will, all of them certainly; and that in an higher degree, in a greater measure; match Davids day, and overmatch it in all. We were delivered, and from a danger, that is clear. How great? (for, that makes the odds) Boldly, I dare say, from a greater than Davids. Thus I shew it, and go no further than the Psalm it self.

1. David called upon GOD in his danger; he knew of it therefore, We did not: we imagined no such thing, but that all had been safe, and we might have gone to the Parliament, as secure as ever. The Danger never dreamt of, that is the Danger.

2. His was, by compassing and hemming in; that is, above ground, and may be descried from a Watch-tower. Ours was by undermining, digging deep under ground, that none could discern.

3. One cannot be beset, but he may have hope to break through, at some part. But here from this, no way, no means, no possibility of escaping. The Danger not to be descried, not to be escaped, that is the danger.

4. His were a swarm of bees (He calleth them so;) they buzz and make a noise when they come. Ours, a brood of vipers, mordentes in silencio, still, not so much as a hiss, till the deadly blow had been given.

5. His was but of Himself alone; so he saith, I was in trouble; They came about me, kept me in, thrust sore at me: But one person, Davids alone. Ours of a far greater extent; David, and his three Estates with him. Now, though David himself were valued by them at ten thousand of themselves, (and not over-valued neither: for he is worth more, and all Kings like him no less worth:) yet he and they too must needs be more, than He alone. Not only King David had gone, but Queen Esther too; and not only they, but Salomon the young Prince, and Nathan his brother. Nor these were not all. The Scriptures recount, David had Jehoshaphat for his Chancellour, Adoram his Treasurer, Seraja his Secretary, Sadoc and Abiathar, and twenty two more, the chief of the Priests, Admo his Judge, Joab his General; all had gone: His forty eight Worthies or Nobles, all they too. The Principal of all the Tribes in the Kingdome: all they too: and many more than these; no man knoweth how many. It is out of question, it had exceeded this of Davids here.

6. One more. His Danger (he confesseth) was from man: he goeth no further, I will not fear what man doth unto me. This of ours was not: meerly mans, I deny it, it was the Devil himself. The instruments (not as his, a swarm of bees, but) a swarm of Locusts, out of the infernal pit. Not men; no not Heathen men: Their Stories; nay, their Tragedies can shew none near it. Their Poets could never fain any so prodigiously impious. Not men; No, not savage wild men: the Hunnes, the Heruli, the Turcilingi, noted for inhumanity, never so inhumane: Even among those barbarous people, this fact would be accounted barbarous. How then? Beasts: There were at Ephesus, beasts in shape of men; and ugly to me, brutishness is the worst, Philosophy could imagine of our nature. This more than brutish; What Tiger, though never so enraged, would have made the like havock? Then, if the like, neither in the nature of men, nor beasts to be found (it is so unnatural;) we must not look to pattern it upon earth, we must to hell; thence it was certainly, even from the devil. He was a murderer from the beginning, and will be so to the ending. In every sinne of blood, he hath a claw, but all his claws, in such an one as this: wherein so much blood, as would have made it rain blood; so many baskets of heads, so many pieces of rent bodies cast up and down, and scattered over all the face of the earth. Never such a day; all Joels signes of a fearfull day, blood, and fire, and the vapour of smoke. As he is a murderer; so we see (in Mark) by his renting and tearing the poor possessed child, he is cruel; and in this, all his cruelties should have met together. Pharaohs and Herods killing innocent and harmless children? yet they spared the Mother: Esau's cruelty, smiting mother, children, and all: Nebuzaradans not sparing the King, nor his Lord: Hamans not sparing Esther, nor her Ladies: Edoms cruelty, not sparing the Sanctuary, nor the walls, down with them to the ground: His own smiting the four corners, and bringing down the house upon the heads of Joabs children. Put to all the cruelties, in Jeremies Lamentations, not the honouring the faces of Nobles, Priests, Judges; the making of so many widows and Orphans; the voice in Rama of Rachel comfortless: Cruelty, more cruel to them, it spared and left behind, than to those it took away. It irketh me to stand repeating these; That ever age, or land, but that our age, and this land should foster or breed such Monsters!

That you may know it for that perfectly, consider but the wickedness of it, as it were in full opposition to GOD, and you must needs say, it could not be His doing; GOD forbid (saith Abraham) thou shouldest destroy the righteous with the wicked. Kill not Dam and young ones both (saith Moses in the Law.) You shall not touch mine Anointed, (saith GOD in the Psalms.) You shall not pull up the good-corn, rather let the Tares stand, (saith CHRIST in the Gospel) You shall not do evil that good may come of it (saith Paul in his Epistles.) But here is Satan flat contrary, in despite of Law, Prophets, Psalm, Epistle and Gospel: Hoc est Christum cum Paulo concubare, to throw down Abraham, and Moses, and David, and Paul, and CHRIST, and GOD, and all, and trample upon them all.

One more yet: that this abomination of desolation (so calleth Daniel; so calleth our Saviour; the uttermost extremity of all that bad is: so may this truly:) that this abomination of desolation took up his standing in the holy place.

I. An

1. An Abomination: so it is; abhorred of all flesh, hated and detested of all, that but hear it named: yea, they themselves say, they should have abhorred it, if it had taken effect. It is an Abomination.

2. Every Abomination doth not forthwith make desolate. This had: If ever a desolate Kingdom upon earth, such had this been, after that terrible blow. Neither root nor branch left, all swept away: Strangers called in; murderers exalted; the very dissolution and desolation of all ensued.

3. But this, that this so abominable and desolatory a plot, stood in the holy place; this is the pitch of all. For there it stood; and thence it came abroad: Undertaken with an holy oath; bound with the holy Sacrament (that must needs be in a holy place) warranted for a holy Act, tending to the advancement of a holy Religion, and by holy persons, called by a most holy name, the name of Jesus. That these holy religious persons, even the chief of all religious persons (the Jesuits) gave not only absolution, but resolution, that all this was well done; that it was by them justified as lawfull, sanctified as meritorious, and should have been glorified (but it wants glorifying, because the event failed, that is the grief; if it had not glorified). long yer this, and canonized, as a very good and holy act, and we had had orations out of the Conclave in commendation of it. (Now I think, we shall hear no more of it.) These good Fathers they were Dauids bees here, came hither, only to bring us honey, right honey they; not to sting any body: or (as in the XXII. verse) they (as builders) came into the land, only for edification; not to pull down, or to destroy any thing. We see their practice, they begun with rejecting this stone, as one that favoured Hereticks at least, and therefore excommunicate, and therefore disposed, to any that could handle a spade well, to make a myne to blow him up; Him, and all his Estates with him to attend him: (The corner Stone being gone, the walls must needs follow.) But then, this striking it (such an abomination) setting it in the holy place, so ugly and odious: making such a Treason as this a religious, missal, sacramental Treason; hallowing it with Orison, Oath and Eucharist; this passeth all the rest. I say no more, but as our SAVIOUR concludeth, when you see such an abomination so standing, qui legit intelligat; nay, qui videt. GOD send them, that, (not read of it, but) see it, and had like to have smelt of it, to learn that, they should by it: and so I leave it. Tell me now if this were not His doing, and if it should not have been a day of His making, the Devils own making?

This should have been done; this, the danger: what was done? This, the factum fuisset: what the factum est; All these were undone, and blown over; all the undermining disappointed; all this murder and cruelty, and desolation defeated. The mine is discovered, the mine is broken, and we are delivered. All these, the King, Queen, Prince, Nobles, Bishops, Judges, both Houses alive, all not a hair of any of their heads perished; not so much as the smell of fire on any their garments. Give thanks, O Israel, unto the Lord thy God in the congregation, from the bottom of the heart; here is little Benjamin, thy Ruler, the Princes of Juda, &c. that they are here, and do see them here, and that the Stone these Builders refused, is still the Head-stone of the corner. That should have been done; this was done; and we all that are here this day, are witnesses of it: Witnesses above all exception of this factum est.

But by whom, whose doing? Truly not mans doing this; it was the Lords. A Damone factum est illud, or factum est illud. It was the Devils doing, or devising (the plot): A Domino factum est hoc, This was Gods doing, (the deliverance.) The blow was the Devils; The ward was Gods. Not man, but the Devil deviled it: Not man, but God defeated it. He that sat in heaven all this while, and from thence looked down and saw all this doing of the Devil and his limbs, in that mercy of his, which is over all his works, to save the effusion of so much blood, to preserve the souls of so many innocents, to keep this land from so foul a confusion, to shew still some token, some sensible token upon us for good, that they which hate us may see it, and be ashamed; but especially, that that, was so lately united, might not so soon be dissolved; He took the matter into his own hand. And if ever God shewed, that He had a hook in the Leviathans nose; that the Devil can go no further than his chain: if ever that there is in him more power to help, than in Sathan to hurt; in this he did it. And as the Devils claws to be teen in the former; so Gods right hand, in this mighty thing. (He brought to pass) and all the fingers of it.

1. To shew it was He. He held his peace and kept silence, sat still, and let it go on, till it came near, even to the very period, to the day of the lot: so near, that we may truly say, (with King David) as the Lord liveth, uno tantum gradu, nos morsq; dividimur, there was but a step between death and us. We were upon the point of going to the hill, all was prepared, the train, the march, the fire, wood, and all, are we ready to be the sacrifice, and even then and there, In monte providebat Dominus: God provided for our safety, even in that very place, where we should have been the burnt offering: from heaven, stayed the blow. It was the Lords doing.

2. When Treachery hath his course like water, and creeps along like a snail, it is the fifty eighth Psalm, then to make it like the untimely fruit of a woman, never to see the sun, not, as in this; arserunt sicut ignis in spinis, was but a blaze, as in a bush of thorns: nay, if it come so far, it had gone wrong with us: but as in that, prinsquam intelligerent spina, or ever the thorns got bear, or the powder, fire: then, saith he there, dicit homo, Vtique est Deus, Men shall say, verily, there is a God, and this was His doing.

3. And not only, that it was bewrayed, but that he made them the bewrayers of it themselves; and even according to the place (Eccles. 10.) made things with feathers to disclose it: When (as in Psalm 64.) their own tongues (or, which is all one, their own pens,) make them to fall: all that consider it, shall be amazed; and then all men shall say, This hath God done; for they shall perceive it plain.

it is His work. They shall be charged in confession, they shall swear, they shall take the Sacrament to not do it : and yet, contrary to all this, it shall come out by themselves. Was not this Gods doing ?

4. Yet further, to shew it was so : This which was written, was so written, as diverse of profound wisdom, knew not what to make of it. But then cometh God again (God most certainly) and (as in Prov. 16. 10.) puts DEP, a very divination, a very Oracle, in the Kings lips, and his mouth mis- sed not the matter ; made him, as Ioseph, the revealer of secrets, to read the Riddle : giving him wisdom to make both explication, what they would do ; and application ; where it was they would do it. This was God certainly. This, Pharaoh would say, none could, unlesse he were filled with the Spirit of the holy God. It was A Domino factum.

5 Lastly, as that, when it was come forth they were not reclaimed : not then, when they saw, the hand of God was gone out against them, and that it was even God they strave withall : no, but even then, from hidden treachery, fell to open rebellion, and even perished in it (if God shewed not a miracle of his mercy on them) perished there, and perished eternally : as this I say did (that it was factum a Damone, who never left them till he had brought them thither :) So that (before they came thither) God cast their own powder in their faces, powdered them and disfigured them with it ; and that their quarters stand now in pieces, as they meant, ours should : It is the case of the CIX. Psalm. And hereby shall they know, that it is thy hand, and that thou Lord hast done it. How ? in that, they are thus clothed with their own shame, and even covered with their own confusion ; that they fall as fast as they rise ; are still confounded, and still thy servants rejoice. These five (as prints) shew, it was Gods hand. It was the Lord, that made the day ; it was the day, that the Lord made. Be thou exal- ted Lord in thine own strength : It was thy right hand, that brought this mighty thing to passe.

3 Et est mirabile This will not serve the turn. His doing makes it not the Day ; His doing a miracle, that makes it : and that it is too. I take no thought, to prove this point : by the Law, the Prophets, the Gos- pel. To put them to it ; Moses : enquire now of the dayes that were before us, since the day that God created man upon earth, and ask from one end of heaven to the other, if there came to passe such a thing as this, whether any such like thing have been heard, and, if we cannot suit it, or set such another by it, we must needs yield it for one. By the Prophets, Go to the Isles and behold, send to Kedar and take diligent heed, and see if you can possibly find the like : if not, confess it for mar- vellous. Come hither (saith David) and behold, how marvellous God is ! and what is that ; that such, as are rebellious, are not able to exalt themselves. We need not go so farre, we have it here to see ; We may say to him, Come hither. By the Gospel : for, so do they (there) acknowledge our Sa- viours for miracles : Sure we have seen strange things to day : We never saw it on this fashion : The like was never seen in Israel : therefore marvellous certainly. It is now no miracle, no strange thing, to have a King delivered ; every other year, we see it, and therefore wonder not at it. But to see King, Queen, their seed and all their estates delivered, that is mirabile, that is a new thing created on the earth. I conclude : as, that was the Devils doing, and was monstrous in our eyes ; so, this is Gods doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. And again, upon all these marks : that, as this was a day, the devil would have marred ; so this is a day, that the Lord made.

4 In oculis no- stris, in our eyes. Marvellous then it is : yet, hath it not (as we say) his full Christendome, unlesse it be so in our eyes. For the time it was : and that (of the Psalm) fits us well, When God (saith he) turned away the captivity (say we, the destruction) of his people ; then were we like to them that dream. No man, but stood in a maze ; as if he knew not well, whether he saw it waking or dreamt of it, it was so strange. And let me go further. Not, in ours only ; for (sure I am) that which followeth there, is true (Then said they, inter Gentes) of other nations : The Lord hath done great things for them : and we are to blame, if we answer them not, with the Eccho there following, Yea indeed, the Lord hath done great things for us ; for which we have cause to rejoyce. If strangers think it strange, and say, and write, A seculo inauditum, The like was never heard before : if it were marvellous in their eyes, it were very marvellous it should not be so, in our eyes too.

I add, they that were the Actors of it, in their eyes, it is so ; and that of the Apostle, may aptly be applyed to them. Behold ye despisers, and wonder, and vanish, for God hath wrought a work in your dayes ; a work which you your selves that were the doers, shall scarce believe, when it shall be told ; that even astonished themselves, to see it go forward so long, and so suddenly cast down. Nay, I go further, to make it a miracle consummate. I doubt not, but it was strange newes, even in hell it self, inasmuch as even that place had never hatched the like monster before. You see the wel- come they in Hell gave him of Assur, (Esay 14.) What, art thou come, that makest the earth to tremble, and dost shake whole Kingdomes ? And yet it is well known, all his shaking was but in a metaphor : He never made it shake actually, as these would have done : and therefore this of grea- ter admiration, and (I doubt not, but) more wonderfull in their eyes : And ours are very dimme, if in all other it be, and be not so in ours.

II Then if such dayes there be, if this of ours be one of them, if the fore-part of the verse do then must the latter also belong to us : If this, the day, the Lord hath made ; then, this, the day, wherein we to rejoyce : When He makes, we to make ; and our rejoycing in it, is our making of it. To rejoyce, no hard request, nor heavy yoke, let it not be grievous to us. We love to do it, we seek all meanes to do it in all cases else : then to assay to do it here. This (sure) the Pro- phet would not require, nor make it the office of the day, but that upon such dayes, God him- self calls us to joy.

And

And even as, when God calleth us to mourning, by black dayes, of famine or warre, or the like; then to fall to feasting or revelling, is that that highly displeaseth God: so, when God, by good dayes, calleth us to joy; then to droop, and not to accommodate our selves to seasons of his tending, is that which pleases him never a whit.

What? (saith Nehemias, upon such a blessed day as this) Droop you to day? No, at no hand do it, Dies enim festus est, it is a festival day: what then? why it is essential, it is the nature of every Feast (saith God in his Law) omnino gaudere, by any means in any wise, therein to rejoyce. And Nehemia's promise is to encourage us, that if the strength of the Lord be our joy, the very joy of the Lord shall be our strength.

Neh. 8:9, 10.
Numb. 10: 10.
Deut. 16. 11.

To conclude: Sure I am, that if the plot had prevailed, it would have been an high Feast in Gath, and a day of jubilee in Ascalon; The daughters of the uncircumcised would have made it a day in triumph. Let us not be behind them then; but shew as much joy for our saving, as they would certainly have done, for our perishing.

2 Sam. 1. 20.

Exultemus & Latemur. God loveth our joy should be full; it is not full, except we have both these, the body (as it were) and the soul of joy: the joy outward of the body, and gladnesse inward of the soul. (So much do the two words signifie, in all the three tongues.) Both he will have: for, if one be wanting, it is but semipterum; half full.

Exultemus and Latemur both.

And he beginneth with Exultemus, the outward: not to our selves within, which we call gaudere in sinu: joy of the bosome; but such, so exuberant, as the streames of it may overflow, and the beames of it shine and shew forth, in an outward sensible exultation. It is a day, so would he have us rejoyce, that, as by day-light it might be seen in our face, habit, and gesture: Seen and heard both: Therefore he saith (at the 15. vers.) the voice of joy is in the dwellings of the Righteous. And in the dwelling it doth well: But yet, that would not serve his turn: but, open me (saith he at the 19. vers.) the gates of Righteousnesse: that is, the Church-door (his house would not hold him) thither will I go in; and there, in the congregation, in the great congregation, give thanks unto the Lord: And that so great a congregation, that it may constitute diem solennem in conferentia usque ad Cornu Altaris, that they may stand so thick in the Church, as fill it from the entrie of the door, to the very edge of the Altar. This same joy that is neither seen nor heard, there is some leaven of malignitie in it; he cannot skill of it. He will have it seen in the countenance, heard in the voice; not only preaching, but singing for this praise. And that, not with voices alone, but with instruments and not instruments of the Quaver alone, but instruments of the Sceptle too, bells and all, that so it may be Hosanna in altissima, in the very highest key we have. This for exultemus.

Exultemus:
the outward joy.

Verse 15.

Verse 19.

But, many a close Hypocrite may do all this, and many a counterfeit Shimei and Sheba did all this, to David; got them a seeming forced countenance, taken-on joy: And therefore the other; that God will have his joy, not be the joy of the countenance alone, a clear face, and a cloudy overcast heart; he will have the gladnesse of the heart too, of the inner-man: Cor meum & caro mea; the heart, as well as the flesh, to be joyfull. The joy of the soul is the soul of joy: not a body without a soul, which is but a carcase. Strange children may (and will) dissemble with me (saith the Psalm 18. 44.) dissemble a gladnesse, for fear of being noted; and yet within, in heart, you wot what. But, God calleth for his de fontibus Israel, which we read, from the ground of the heart. That is (indeed) the true fountain of joy, that our lips may be fain, when we sing unto Him, and so may our soul which he hath delivered. Nay, he delivered both: and therefore, both the body to rejoyce; and the soul to be glad. This doth Latemur add, to exultemus.

Latemur, the inward joy.

Psalm 16. 9.

Psalm 18. 44.

Psalm 68. 26.

Psalm 71. 21.

If then we be agreed that we will do both, I come to the last, how to order our joy, that it may please Him, for whom it is undertaken. It is not every joy that he liketh. Merry they were; and joyfull (they thought) that kept their Kings day (Hof. 7.) by taking in bowl after bowl till they were sick again. So they that Malachy speaks of; there came nothing of their feasts but dung (bear with it, it is the Holy Ghost his own term) that is, all in the belly and belly-cheer. So they, that sit down to eat and drink, and rose up to play, and there was all; that is the Calves-feast: a Calf can do as much. But with none of these was God pleased: and as good no joy, as not to the purpose: as not to please him.

How to order our joy.

Exod: 32. 6.

1 Cor. 10. 5.

That it may be to the purpose, that God may take pleasure in it, it must begin at Hosanna, at Aperito mihi portas Justitia, at the Temple-door; there must it go in, it must blesse, and be blessed in the house of the Lord. I will first make joyfull in my house of Prayer (it is God by Esay;) the stream of our joy, must come from the spring-head of Religion.

Verse 92

Esay 56. 7.

Well then, to the Church we are come: so far onward. When we are there, what is to be done? Somewhat we must say, we must not stand mute. There to stand still, that, the Prophet cannot skill of. That then, we may (there) say something, he here frames, he here indites a Versicle, which after grew into such request, as no feast ever without it, without an Hosanna: it grew so familiar, as the very children were perfect in it. The summe and substance whereof (briefly) is no more, but (which we all desire) that God would still save, still prosper, still blesse him; that in His name, is come unto us (that is) King David himself, whom all in the house, and all of the House of the Lord blesse in His name.

Verse 15.

Marth: 21: 9.

And to very good purpose doth he this: for, joy hath no fault, but that it is too short, it will not last, it will be taken from us too soon. It is ever a bar, in all joy, colletur a vobis; subject to the worme, that Jonas gourd was. It standeth us therefore in hand; so begin with Hosanna, so to joy, as that we may long joy to pray for the continuance, that it be not taken from us; ever remembering, the true temper of joy, is (exultate in tremore) not without the mixture of some fear. For, this day, we see what it is, a joyfull day: We know not (saith Solomon) what the next day will be: and if not what the next day, what the next year much lesse. What will come, we know not; what our finnes call for to come, that we know; even that God should call to judgement, if not by fire, by somewhat else. If it be but for this, it concerns us nearly, to say our Hosanna, that the next year be as this. It is our wisdom therefore, to make the meanes, for the continuance of it, that God would still stablish the good work, He this day wrought in us; still blesse us, with the continuance of the same blessings.

Psalms 2. 11.
Prov. 27. 1.

Verse 25.

And this that we may do, not faintly but chearfully with the lifting up of our souls therefore, as far as art or spirit can do it, he hath quickned his Hosanna, that he may put spirit and life in us, to follow him in it, with all fervour of affection: four times, twice with Anna, and twice with Na; either of them before, and after; but eight words, and four of them interjections: all to make it passionate; and that so, as (in the original) nothing can be devised more forcible; and so, as it is hard, in any other tongue, to expresse it; which made the Evangelist let it alone: and retain the Hebrew word still. But, this, as near as I can, it soundeth. Now good Lord save us yet still, now good Lord prosper us yet still. Be to us as last year, so this, and all the yeares to come, Jesus a Saviour, yesterday, and to day, and the same forever.

And three things doth he thus earnestly pray for, and teacheth us to do the like. 1 To save, 2 prosper, and 3 blesse.

Math. 21. 9.

1 To save: that should be first with us; it is commonly last: We have least sense of our souls. To save us, with the true saving health; (it is a word whereof our Saviour Jesus hath His name) it importeth the salvation of the soul: properly to that it belongeth, and hath joynd to it Hosanna in the Gospel (Hosanna in excelsis) to shew it is an high and heavenly salvation.

Psalms 1. 3.

2 Then, to prosper. If He but grant us the former alone, to have our souls saved, though without prosperitie, though with the dayes of adversity, it is sors sanctorum, the lot of many a Saint of his, of farre more worth than we: Even so, we are bound to thank Him, if, even so, we may be but saved. But, if he had also prosperitie of the outward, to the saving of the inward man, that not so much as a leaf of us shall wither, but look what we do shall prosper; and that, whatsoever men of evil counsels do, shall not prosper against us: if He not only vouchsafe us Hosanna in excelsis, but Hosanna de profundis too, from deep cellers, deep vaults, those that dig deep to undermine our prosperitie; if He add the shadow of his wings, to shelter us from perils, to the light of his countenance, to save us from our sins, then have we great cause to rejoyce yet more: and both with exultemus from without, and letemur from within, to magnifie his mercie, and to say with the Prophet, Praised be the Lord, that (not only taketh care for the safety, but taketh pleasure in the prosperitie of his servants).

Luke 19. 38.

John 12. 15.

Psalms 125. 1.

3 Lastly, because both these the one and the other; our future salvation, by the continuance of his Religion and truth among us, and our present prosperitie (like to walls) meet upon the headstone of the corner; depend both, first, upon the name of the Lord, and next upon him, that in his name, and with his name, is come unto us (that is) the King: (So, do both the Evangelists S. Luke and S. John supply; and, where we read, Blessed be he, there they read Blessed be the King that cometh: so that neither of them sure, unlesse he be safe; that he would blesse him, and make him blest, that in His blessed name, is come amongst us. The building will be as Mount Sion, so the Cornerstone be fast; so the two walls, that meet, never fall asunder. If otherwise: but I will not so much as put the case but as we pray, so trust, it shall never be removed, but stand fast for ever.

This then we all wish that are now in the House of the Lord, and we that are of the House of the Lord, do now and ever, in the Temple and out of it, morning and evening, night and day, with and pray both, that he would continue forth his goodnesse, and blesse with length of dayes, with strength of health, with increase of all honour, and happinesse, with terror in the eyes of his enemies, with grace in the eyes of his subjects, with whatsoever David, or Solomon or any King, that ever was happy, was blessed with; Him, that in the Name of the Lord is come to us, and hath now these four yeares stayed with us, that he may be blessed in that name, wherein he is come, and by the Lord, in whose Name he is come, many and many yeares yet to come.

And, when we have put this incense in our phials, and bound this sacrifice with cords to the Altar fast, we blesse you and dismiss you, to eat your bread with joy, and to drink your wine with a chearfull heart: for God accepteth your work; your joy shall please Him: this Hosanna shall sanctifie all the joy, shall follow it.

Psalms 136. 4.

To end then. This Day, which the Lord hath thus made so marvellously, so marvellously and mercifully; let us rejoyce in the Maker, for the making of it, by His doing on it that deed, that it is so marvellous in our eyes, in all eyes: returning to the beginning of the Psalm, and saying with the Prophet: O give thanks to the Lord, for he is gracious, &c. Let Israel, let the house of Aaron, yea, let all that fear the Lord, confesse that His mercie endureth for ever.

Who only doth great wonders. Who remembered us when we were in danger; and hath delivered us from our enemies, with a mighty hand and stretched out arme. And, as for them, hath turned their device upon their own head. And hath made this day to us a day of joy and gladnesse. To this God of Gods, the Lord of Heaven, glorious in holinesse, fearfull in power, doing wonders, be, &c.

A
SERMON
 Preached before the
KINGS MAIESTIE
 AT
WHITE-HALL,
 On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
Anno Dom. MDCVII.

PSALM. CXXVI.

In convertendo Dominus captivitatem Sion, &c.

Verf. 1. When the Lord brought again the Captivity of Sion, we were like them that dreame.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with joy: Then said they among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them.

3 The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoyce.

4 O Lord, bring again our Captivity, as the rivers in the South.

The word Captivity is enough to give us light, when and why this Psalm was first indited; namely upon their returne from the Captivity. Of which returne of theirs, it may truly be said, it was one of the greatest; nay, it was the very greatest Delivery that ever God vouchsafed his people. Their estate no where so miserable as there; witnesse the book of Lamentations. Their case never so joyfull, as returning thence; witnesse this booke of Psalms. No benefit so much celebrated: None, so many Psalms as it. Divide the whole Book into foure parts, one fourth part is, for this returne: either directly of set purpose (as here are fifteen together) or recorded in Psalms, though made upon other purpose: still, as the greatest Delivery that ever they had.

Yet, this I confesse unto you, that this Delivery of theirs (such as it were) falls short of that of ours as on this day: wherewith yet I shall be faine to march it. But, this I must tell you before hand: to have this of ours fully patterned in all points, we must not looke for it; The Scripture hath it not. They had no powder, then, it was not found. If they had had, they would have used it, but for the murder of persons: they knew no other murder. But, to murder all three Esai.

Estates of a Realme at a clap! Facti sunt sicut somniantes, or rather, Facti non sunt sicut somniantes, they never dreamt of any such. And what then is our case, think we, that have received from GOD such a Deliverance, as we can find no match for it;

But well, though these Psalms of the Captivity come not fully home, be not altogether like ours; yet, because there be none liker, none that come neerer, we must content our selves with these, and either take our Texts hence, or take none at all.

In taking this then, and applying it to the present, there shall need but one word to be altered, that is, the word Captivity. But for it, all else would runne very cleer and currant: if we might but change that one word, and instead of reading, When the Lord turned away the captivity of Sion, we might thus read, When the Lord turned away the blowing up of Sion: all besides, every word else, would suit well and keep perfect corefpondency.

It is true, it was not a captivity, that was turned away from us. And yet it is hard to say whether it might not have proved to that too: and whether God, in turning it away, did not happily turne away a Captivity. But, if not a Captivity, that He turned away from us, was worse than any Captivity. This Psalm sheweth it; They that are Captives, how miserable soever their case be, yet have hope of returning, as these had and did. But, if this of ours had taken place, we had been sure enough for ever returning: we had been (all) past singing, In convertendo.

This one word being changed (and that without wrong to the Text, for it is for a greater) all else will fall in and follow of itself. 1. As that of theirs, so this of ours for all the world, like a dreame. 2. As they, among the Heathen, then said of them: So, they, of other Nations, now said of us; that GOD had been our good LORD, for bringing us again, if not from the captivity of Babylon, from Babylon (I am sure) that is from an horrible and fearefull confusion, which He turned away from this Land, and from us all.

The Summe and Division.

To set then this Psalm, first for them, and then for our selves. It is a Psalm of Degrees (the title is so) and two degrees there be in it. No new ones, but the usuall; which we must still fall upon, if we deal with the Psalms: (All the Psalms are reduced to them, even to those two words, Halleluja and Hosanna, Praises and Prayer; Halleluja, Praises for Deliverance obtained; Hosanna, Prayers for obtaining the like, upon the like need,) 1. The Halleluja in the foure first verses: 2. The Hosanna in the last. I durst not sever them; they prosper not, where they go not together.

I. The Halleluja or praise hath two degrees, which (as in all other things, so in this) make it praise-worthy. 1. The Stuffe, and the 2. Workmanship.

The Stuffe (or matter) I call, The turning back the Captivity of Sion: and two degrees in it: 1. That Sion is suffered to go into Captivity. 2. That GOD turneth away the Captivity of Sion. This is Halleluja for the stuffe.

And again, Halleluja for the Workmanship. That God did not deliver Sion Utcunque; but, so deliver her, as the manner was memorable. The manner is set down in two degrees (Which two are, as it were, the embroidery of the other. 1. Turned it so strangely, as when it was done, it seemed rather a dreame, than a thing done waking, Facti sumus, &c. 2. Again, turned it so memorably, as the Heathen talked of it, Tum dicebant, &c.

Which Dicebant divides it self into the sound among the Heathen (in the second verse,) and the 2. Eecho of it in Israel (in the fourth.)

Then cometh the conclusion (the best conclusion of all) Facti sumus, &c. This their Halleluja.

II. Their Halleluja is no sooner done, but close upon it cometh their Hosanna. To their knees they get them, and pray, Converte Domine. And in this also two degrees: 1. First they pray to turne it. 2. And then, so to turne it, as the Streames in the south. In the south (that is) the wildernesse; liking their Captivity to a desert, and their returning to streames of water. And what more needfull, or what more welcome than water in the wildernesse? These are the degrees and Steps, in theirs. The same Steps will we tread in our own; to shew, that we may with good right convert to our own use, this Psalm in Convertendo.

VER. 1:

I.
Hallelujahs:

1. For the work,
1. The Captivity of Sion;
Psal. 48. 2.

H Halleluja first for the work, then for the work-manship: The work is, The Lord turned away the captivity of Sion. 1. First, of the Captivity of Sion; 2. Then, of the LORDS turning it.

The Captivity of Sion: I aske first, why of Sion? why not the captivity of Jerusalem, Iuda, Israel? Jerusalem, Iuda, Israel, were led away Captives, no lesse than Sion. They, the greater, and more generall: why not the Captivity of them; but of Sion? It should seeme, there is more in Sion's, than in the rest, that choice is made of it before the rest. Why? what was Sion; We know, it was but a Hill in Jerusalem, on the North-side. Why is that Hill so honoured? No reason in the world, but this; That, upon it, the Temple was built: And so, that Sion is much spoke of, and and much made of, it is only for the Temples sake. For whose sake it is (even for His Church,) that the LORD loveth the gates of Sion, more than all the dwellings of Jacob. Loveth her more, and so her captivity goeth nearer Him, and her delivery better pleaseth Him, than all Jacob besides. This maketh Sions Captivity to be mentioned chiefly, as chiefly regarded by GOD, and to be regarded by His. As (we see) it was: When they sat by the waters of Babylon, that which made them weep, was, When we remembered thee, O Sion: that their greatest griefe. That their greatest griefe, and this their greatest joy: Latus sumus, when newes came, (not faith the Psalm, in domos nostras, We shall go now every one to his own house, but) in Domum Domini ibimus, We shall go to the house of the Lord, we shall appeare before the GOD of Gods in Sion.

Psal. 87. 2.

Psal. 137. 2.

Psal. 122. 1.

Sion, God loved and favoured high: yet how dear soever Sion is in his sight, for Sions sinnes, proper peccata populi mei, she sometimes is forsaken and afflicted by him. Though He take not His mercy utterly from her, nor suffer His truth quite to faile, yet he visiteth her offences with the rod, and her deeper transgressions with scourges: and among the rest, with this scourge of Captivity.

Psal. 89. 33.

To be plagued at home, in their own Land, is but a rod in comparison: Captivity is a scourge, in respect of it, and a sharp one. To be bereft of all we have, and of (that, which they have, that have nothing else (liberty, to be carried into a strange land; to be made bond and thrall to the proud commands of an Enemy; Wo is me for Sion (saith Jeremy.) And no man shall need but to read his Lamentations only. There is, in particular to be seen, the evill of captivity, how sharp a scourge it is. The Book was made for that end.

But, of all Captivities, none so evil, as that of Babel: If any other be a scourge, that is a Scorpion. In Egypt, their case was more tolerable: their souls were free there; howsoever their bodies in servitude; they might serve GOD yet, they were not compelled to fall down before Isis or Osiris. Only, the Captivity of Babel is the captivity of soules, no lesse than bodies. There they must fall down before the great Idol in the field Dura, or be thrown into the furnace. Babel is the worst place that is, for Sion to be carried captive to. And this is the first degree, Sion is afflicted, and that with Captivity; with the Captivity of Babel. Now to In Convertendo Dominus.

Dan. 3. 1. 6.

They that fell by the sword (saith Jeremy) were in better case than they that went into Captivity; save only that, this poor hope they had left. They might returne again. They might returne, and to they did. Sion went into Captivity; but her Captivity went not so far, but it turnes again. It is one of the Songs of Sion. Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth up, &c. And again, Many a time have they afflicted me, &c. that is, many and many times more; but yet, they have not prevailed against me: finally. Here is a proof of it. Though brought to Babel, yet not left there; though led into Captivity, yet restored to liberty. There may be snares, for her, but the end is, laqueus contritus est: there may be bonds, but the end, dirupisti vincula, Thou hast broken my bonds in sunder. Sions captivity is still turned backe.

2 The Lords

Turning of it.

Lam. 4. 9.

Psal. 129. 1, 2.

Psal. 124. 7.

Psal. 116. 16.

But who shall turne it? In convertendo Dominus. Cyrus may seeme to have done it: But alas, Cyrus is a great Monarch, and they a sort of poor Captives. Besides, he is a Heathen man, an Idolater, a stranger to them and their Religion, no wayes like to turne or to be turned; Quis revolvat nobis hunc lapidem, what engine shall bring this about? Dominus, the LORD shall. For, though the hearts of Monarchs be as rivers of many streames, yet, In manu Domini cor regis (saith a great Monarch) In His hand their hearts be; Et quocunque vult convertet, and he can turne them, as the streames in the south. (This verse referring to that of Salomon.) It is the LORD then, the great King, the great Turner of the greatest Monarchs hearts, that thus turnes Cyrus's heart. Cyrus being turned, his Decree came forth for their returne. A Domino factum est istud; It was his doing; they saw it, they noted it; and they had been to be noted of great blindness, if they had not noted it; But, note it they did. So they begin one of their Songs, Nisi quia Deus; and again they repeat it, Nisi quia Deus, if the Lord had not done it, it had not been done. But for Him, they had been in Babel, still. Thus meaneth for Sions Captivity, and the Lords turning: The Lord turned away the Captivity of Sion. So have ye the worke: Halleluja for the worke.

Mark. 16. 3.

Prov. 21. 1.

Psal. 118. 13.

Psal. 124. 1, 2.

And again, Halleluja for the Workmanship. To escape a Captivity, is enough, it skills not how, howsoever, it is well, thanks be to God. But, it receiveth increase, and is made capable of a higher degree, by the Matter: and that greatly. All captivities, are grievous; specially, that of Babel: And all returns joyfull; specially, from thence. Yet is even that made more joyfull, two wayes; set higher by these two degrees: 1. That it was like a dreame. It is ever a signe of a very strange event, when men, at the seeing ought, though they be awake, yet think they are not; though they do not dreame, yet think, they are in a dreame. 2. That they among the Heathen talked of it. It is ever a signe of a famous accident, when other men (specially, other Nations, speak, and speak magnificently of it.

3 Halleluja

For the work manship, or maner.

Falsi sumus sicut somniantes, We were as it were in a dreame, it came so unlookt for. For, so come dreames (we know without looking for: (Men know not, when they go to bed, what they shall dreame of.) And it is a benefit to have a benefit come, like a dreame, without waiting longer for it.

So strange as like a dreame.

1 Unlookt for

Then, it came without any labour of our parts: That, that cometh in a dreame, cometh to us sleeping; we doing nothing to it, or toward it, more than if we had been fast asleep. And, it is a benefit to have a benefit come like a dreame, without paines taking for it.

2 Without labour.

But neither of these is it: that it was unlaboured for, or that it was unlookt for. But that, it was so strange, as no man would ever have looked for it: so strange as well might we dreame of some such thing, but (a wake.) never any saw the like. The nature of dreames is such: Men, in dreames, have such strange things appear to them, as would never come into the mindes of any that were awake. They see ladders so long as will reach up to heaven: they see the Moone and stars worshipping them: They see men with hearts of gold and breasts of silver, and I wot not what things; incredible things, of the phantasies figuring, but never of the senses apprehending. This maketh things by all likelihood, to seem like dreames. And such was their case, at the coming out of Cyrus's proclamation, for their returne. It was so little looked for, that ever it should come: it was so above all they could hope for, when it did come, that, what with the suddenesse, and what with the strangenesse, for the present, it seemed to them a dream of the night, rather than any vision of the day. Well might they say, Facti sumus, &c.

3 Beyond hope

A pleasant dream.
Gen. 28. 15.
Dan. 4. 5.

A dream it was. To specify what kind of dream. Jacob dreamed, and was much comforted with it. Nebuchadnezzar dreamed, and was exceedingly frightened with it. This (here) was of the nature of Jacob's; a comfortable pleasant dream: You may see by the effects in the second verse; Tum repletum est &c. And sure, the impression of the phantasy, no where sheweth it self more powerfull, than in dreams. Men shall be so affected, as they shall even laugh out, as they shall even talk aloud; yea so that they shall even wake with it many times. This here was such; joyful, it filled their hearts full of joy; so full, as it even brake forth, and ranne over, over into the countenance, Os risu; over into the tongue, Lingua júbilo. The face is a mirror, to shew, how the minde is affected: the tongue a trumpet, to sound out the secrets of the heart. You might see their joy, in their face, as in a mirror: you might hear it from their tongue as from a trumpet. Assign it was, the fountain was full, when both the Cisterns thus run over.

And true with all.

But, what is it for a dream, to be pleasant, if it be not true withall? Nay; there is no more miserable case, than of him that dreameth the pleasant Ivorie-dream, and when he awaketh findes it nothing so. Dreams he is at a feast, and waketh all hungry: dreams, he is rich and; waking, findes nothing in his hands. This was not such: it was p. r. cornam portam, a true one; not to be let goe for a dream, for it proved more than a dream, a reall thing indeed. For, when they came out of their dream, all the Country about rang of it, Tum dicebant, &c.

And there can be no better way, to come to a true judgment of what befallerth us, than by dicere, what other men say of it. Men are commonly over sensible of their own joy: a truer estimation would be taken, from them that are no parties to it. Best, hear what they say.

Especially, if it be not only Dicebant inter homines, but inter Gentes too; if they be not single men, but whole Nations. Their Dicebant is yet a degree further. For, many a deliverance there is, the world never talke of, and yet, great for all that: but, those that fill the eyes and the mouths of whole Nations, must needs be prima magnitudinis: and so was this then. Notice was taken of this, by those inter gentes, and no other talke for the time, but of it. This sheweth, it might well be as strange, as a dream, but was no dream indeed.

The heathen were either strangers and regarded them not; or enemies, and maligned them. No fear, that such (especially, the latter sort) should dream too. No; Envie sleeps not, And waking and seeing it; no fear, they will be partiall and confesse more than truth. Commonly, their nature is to abate, diminish, extenuate: no fear of amplifying at their hands. If they say, it is great, it is great indeed. And here, both strangers and enemies confesse it; therefore we may be sure it was no vulgar or ordinary turning.

2 So memorable,
as Heathen talked of it.

And truly, great reason they had so to say; It could be no policy (they say) for Cyrus, to send them backe. He had the n now safe, and well broken to service, by seventie years continuance. They might prove slippery, and revolt; and so he repent his sending them home. Besides, he sent none back, of all the rest of his Captives, being (yet) of his owne Religion, which these were not. They saw (then) no reason for it, in the world. Then, to let them goe; and in such sort to let them goe, with so ample a commission: with so rich rewards, to build againe: This, when it came to their notice, it made them muse; it found them talke, it even drew from them this dicere.

VER. 2.
The Sound
among the Heathen.

Then said they of the Heathen.] And, what is it they said? It is to the purpose. In this (as in many other) the Heathens saying cannot be mended. This they say: 1 That they were no quotidian, or common things; but great. 2 Then these great things they ascribe not to chances that they happened not, but were done. 3 Then done by God himself: they see God, in them. 4 Then, not done by God at randome, without any particular aime: but, purposely done for them. 5 And yet there is more in magnificavit facere (if we looke well.) For, magna fecit would have served all this: but in saying magnificavit facere, they say magnificavit illos, ut magna faceret pro illis, He magnified them, or set greatly by them, for whom He would bring to passe so great a work. This, said they among the Heathen.

And it is pitie, the Heathen said it, and that the Jewes themselves spake not these words, first. But they were so ravished with joy at the first, as they were to be borne with. But now, finding the Heathen, so saying; and finding, it was all but true, they said; they must needs find themselves bound to say at least so much: (And more they could not: for more cannot be said.) So much then, and no lesse than they. And this addeth a degree to the dicere. That the sound of it was so great among the Heathen, as it made an Eccho even in Jury it self.

That

That Ecce then followeth (in the 3 verse.) The person only changed: Nobiscum, for Cum illis, there's all. And indeed, Sion should have been much to blame, if the Heathen should see those things for great, and God to be the Doer of them; and Sion should not discern them for such. If the Heathen should say magnificavit Dominus facere, and Sion should not magnifie Him for this so magnificent a work; if this Confession should even be wrung from the Heathen, & should not come voluntary from the Children of Sion, whom it more neerely concerned a great deale.

And what, shall there be no difference between Sions and the Heathens dicebant, but only Nobiscum? Yes: for though the words be the same, there may be oddes in the uttering. God forbid, but Sion should say, in another manner key, at the left.

And yet, there is some amends for Sion: the words are not all out the same. Here is a hemistichium more in Sions; in which they plainly expresse the odds, between their affections and the Heathens. This it is; Facti sumus latantes: that is, the Heathens say it; but rather wondring, than rejoicing at it. They say it, because they cannot choose but say it, it is so evident; but they bite the lippe when they have done; they could have been well content to have spared the speech; well content, that God had not done it, that they might not have said it. In a word: they say it without a latantes; but, Sion saith it joying, and joyeth in saying it: saith it, and, in saying it, lay at the end of it, Facti sumus latantes. And this (here) is true joy, grounded upon the due consideration of the matter, by occasion of the heathens speech. The other (before) was like the laughing in a dreame. But, this, true joy; and in signe thereof, it was at the first but facti sumus sicut somniantes; but here, it is facti sumus (not sicut, but) verè latantes, truly joyfull indeed. And this maketh up their Halleluja.

Their Halleluja thus performed: they come to their Hosanna straight. And why so straight? They were sicut somniantes, so they say: And, dreames (we know) have this quality, they are but short. And they were facti latantes, and, joy commonly is of the same nature, lasteth not much longer than a dream, but vanisheth quickly, as a dreame when one awaketh. Dreames, and joyes, as soone had, so soone lost. That therefore their latantes prove not sicut somniantes, to keep their joy waking, this they thinke, their wisest way. No sooner to make an end of Halleluja, but straight to begin their Hosanna; make the next verse to their thanks for In convertendo, a petition, Converte. And that to Him, that granted that; to grant this. In convertendo Dominus, Converte Domine: (that is, Hosanna to Him in the highest.)

Converte Domine: Why how now? But very now, they praised Him for turning it away, and do they now pray Him, to turne it away? How hangs this together: to pray to have that turned, that is turned already? They may seeme to be scarce yet out of their dreame. Nor so: These two Convertes, and these two Captivities are not all one. S. Augustine saith well (upon solutis doloribus inferni, Art. 2.) that, two manner of wayes, a thing is loosed: 1. Either, after we are already snared; 2. or else before-hand, that we be not snared with it at all. CHRIST loosed those sorrows, this latter way, which is farre the better way of the twaine. And even so, two wayes is a captivity (or any mischief else) turned away: 1. by an after-delivery, when it is come, 2. or by a fore-hand prevention, yer it do come. The Gretians expresse it, by Prometheus and Epimetheus: the Latines, by Antevorta, and Postvorta; The Schoole-men, by præveniendū, and subveniendū: But, prevention is ever the better. Better a good Buckler, to keep off the blow; than a good Plaister, to heale the hurt of it. Better never see Babel, than returne from it. The captivity of the first verse was come, and is now come and gone: Who knoweth, whether there be any other to come? If there be, Converte Domine, turne it away before-hand; take order there never come any more. So, it is plaine, for all the former In convertendo, they may well pray this last too, notwithstanding. They may well pray it; and good reason they have to pray it. The children of Edom, and the rest of their evil neighbours, that shewed their good-will in this captivity past, are the same men still; still carry the same mindes. No year, no day goeth over their heads, but they wish and contrive, to bring another, either captivity, or some mischief else, I know not what. Therefore Converte Domine is no more than needs.

Now, as Converte Domine is, what they wish done: Sicut torrentes is, the manner how they wish it done. Turne it, and so turne it, as the streames in the South. By the South, understanding the South climate; on which side, lay Arabia deserta. All South-ward from them, was nothing but a drie and waste wilderness. It is of the nature of a wilderness to be without water. And what streames are there then in the wilderness? None, but such as they call Land-waters. And how are they turned or brought thither? No other way, than by melting the snow on the great high hills there: which being dissolved by the summer-sun, come down so plentifully, that all the pooles are filled with water, so strongly, that they turne the course of mighty rivers. Their meaning then is, 1. They have as great need of delivery, as the South climate hath of water. 2. Captivity is as congealed snow, and they frozen fast in it, that they cannot stirre. 3. They would have it turned, but by no violent way, but even only by thawing and melting the hearts of Princes. (Cyrus and the rest) set against them (whose hearts Salomon compareth to these streames;) by that, rather than by any other way. 4, That never was water-ſtreame more welcome to the way-faring man, in the wilderness, than this shall be to them. For, we read of two manner of turnings they had. 1 One out of Agypt, in violent and tempestuous manner: The sea fled, Jordan was driven back, Pharaoh was drowned; Sehon and Og slain; very great ado there was. 2 And now this, out of Babylon; neither by an Army, nor by main strength, but by my Spirit (saith the Lord) breathing upon Cyrus, and in mild and gentle manner melting his heart: and there was all. A conversion (not as that of Pharaoh, but) as this of Cyrus: not as the Rivers of the North; but, as the streames in the South, is it they pray for. So pray they, and so will all pray that are well advised. Thus farre their Hofanna.

For Dicebant.

Now to alter the property of all this, and to convert it to our own use: and to shew first, that both this Hallelujah; and then that this Hofanna, will no lesse agree to us, and our Queere (if not more; but certainly more) a review must needs be granted, of all the former points. And in them (there is no remedy, but) we must fall to measuring, that it may appear there is great odds, between this of ours, and that of theirs. Consequently, that we are bound to give thanks with another manner of Hallelujah, than ever did they. And that, whether we look to that which was turned away; ours was worse: to the manner of turning it self; ours was better: to the meanes of this turning: ours to be preferred: to the likenesse of a dreame, to the dicebant inter Gentes, to the facti sumus latantes: in all and every point; we are still beyond them.

That which was turned away, in them, was a Captivity, for term of yeares: In us, was an utter desolation: as much odds between them, as between lying in prison, and flying in pieces. Captivity (as we say by this) is Vox convertibilis, hath hope to turn again; utter desolation being incapable of in convertendo, past all hope or possibility of ever returning more.

And what manner of desolation; For, we may find Captivities to match theirs: For a people to be carried away captive, is no new thing upon earth. But, this desolation of ours puts down all that ever were. What should I say, but as the Apostle of that which passeth the speech of all Speakers: Oculus non vidit, &c. The like never was seen, heard, nor entered in the heart of man.

And our turning, therefore, the better: and not only therefore; but in it self, simply. Two turnings we said there were: 1 By prevention, yet it come: and 2 subvention, after it is come; and prevention the better, and that was ours. Theirs was by Postventa, light upon them first. Ours came not at us at all; and yet, very near us it came, as near as could be, not to hurt us; and even then, away it was turned. So much the better (should I think) we will reckon of it. That the blow, or blowing up was turned, and we not hurt: rather than we hurt, and lie long on the Chirurgicalians hand, and at last be cured. That of theirs lay heavy upon them for a long time, yet it was turned away: Seventy yeares full. Ours was turned, in the turning of a hand. And we know, it is a doubling of the pleasure, to do it at once.

As in the manner, so in the meanes of this turning, we passe them farre. In that of theirs, the immediate cause of their turning, under G o d, was the turning of Cyrus the Kings heart, which G o d hath in His hand, and turneth as the streames of water. And was not ours so too? And yet still, after a more excellent manner. Theirs; a Heathen; ours, a Christian Prince: theirs, a stranger; ours, our own. To the strange turning of whose heart, to turn the letter into a strange construction, next to G o d Himself, we may all truly ascribe our destruction then turned away. This for the 1 turning, the 2 manner, and 3 meanes of it.

Now at the time of this turning, if they were sicut somniantes, we were more. 1. They were delivered by a Proclamation: Proclamations (we know) come not forth, till it be well on of the day, when the streets are well filled with people to hear them, but never early in the morning. But, the newes of ours came betimes, when a great part of us were not out of our beds, and scarce well awake; so, it might be affirmed of us literally, we were then in good earnest, sicut somniantes.

2. S. Peter was awake, broad awake, when the Angel made his chaines fall off: he cloathed himself, shod himself, girt himself, went thorow three gates one after another, and after that, thorow a whole street; yet that that happened, was so exceeding strange to him, that all this while, he thought he was but in a dream. Our case was S. Peters for all the world; we were truly delivered, and yet many of us got up, and were fully ready, yet we could get our selves ready to believe, but that he did still Visum videre: Sicut somniantes, & ecce vigilantes.

3. They had sense of their captivity, their mind ran on it; the more their mind ran on it, the more like to dream of it. We had not so much: it was the further end of our thought, and therefore more like a dream, more unlooked for.

4. They were not fast asleep, they did somewhat toward their delivery: with long, often, and earnest prayer: they did sollicite G o d; they and their Prophets for them. We prayed not, we knew no cause to pray: nothing at all did we to it or toward it, it ran into our nets, while we were on sleep.

Shall I say any thing of the joy of the dream? This I may: that we passe them in that. They were in a strange Country: they must look more demurely, they must speak more sparingly. We were in our own, we might do it the more freely, both in countenance and speech. And for the time, so we did.

And will ye now see, we passe them in dicebant. Theirs was dicebant: but of ours, not only dicebant, but Scribebant and exudebant; said it; wrore it, and printed it. And what, as this here, here, Magna? Nay, Magna, Et à saculo inaudita, such, so great, as the like was never heard before.

This for dicebant, And for inter Gentes, we passe them there. For, who talked of theirs? a handfull of Nations in comparison: but those that bordered about. They in effect say as much: Not Gentes, not all: but inter Gentes, some among them. A small part of the World, compared to ours: more tongues a great deal went to our Dicebant. I may safely say, Qua regio in terris, What land is there, whether the fame of it is not gone, where it is not spoken of? and we by meanes of it renowned and made famous over all the earth; even to Turks and Infidels (for, thither also it is come, how GOD hath dealt with us.) Yea, even our very Enemies themselves (I doubt not) when it was told in Gath, and published in the streets of Ascalon; even in Rome it self, even they in the Conclave, even the Pope himself, helped to make up this dicebant; though not aloud that their voice may be heard in the streets, yet among themselves, in private, were forced to say as much: that, the greatnesse of ours received witness from the mouth of our enemies.

Our dicebant is double to theirs then, and so is our facti sumus latantes: There is, as a joy for our own delivery; so likewise another joy, for the fall of our enemies: they had the former only: We, both former and latter. For, in theirs, they to whom they had been Captives, let them go, and there was all; and they were glad of it: but they of Babylon became not Captives to Sion. But in ours, not only the Captivity was turned away; but we led captivity captivum, which is the greatest joy of all. They that meant ours, instead of ours, found their own: were taken in their own turn, became captives themselves: and as they intended, our members should, so theirs (now) rent, and stretched one from the other. So, in every point, they fall short of us; and we, in all and every, are still beyond them.

And now let me a little stay, and say as much for our selves, as for the Ieves. If we shall but enter into our own hearts for a moment, we cannot but think thus: What, doth this our deliverance draw thus much, even from other Nations, that are our enemies? Why then (belike) it must be some extraordinary great one. Why (methinks) it toucheth not them; this, it toucheth us: it is we, that were delivered and not they: and, shall they say all this of us, and shall not we say as much of our selves? Shall we come behind them, or rather, shall we not come behind them, since they are got before in this Dicebant? The words we cannot mend, they are so full: Great were the things, and very Great: they changed not, they were done; done by GOD, He was the Doer; He the Doer of these great things, and we the people, for whom these great things were done: And so, a people highly magnified by Him in His mercy; and so, a people deeply bound to magnifie Him for all His mercies, but for this, above all, that all the world speaks of.

And, though we cannot, with other words than they; yet can, and will (I trust) with far other affections. GOD forbid, but facere nobiscum should be sounded in an higher key, than facere cum illis. In dangers (I am sure) it is; never any mens dangers touch us as our own: Never they from the shore, cry so heartily, Lord save them, that they see in danger of drowning upon the Sea; as they in the ship, themselves cry, Lord save us. GOD forbid, but we that felt it, should take up our Hallelujah in a higher streine than they, that were but lookers on: heard of it, and spake of it, but were not partakers as we were of it.

Let this be the difference: that we say the same, that they say: but they say, Magnificavit Dominus facere cum illis, and facti sunt gementes; and we, Magnificavit Dominus facere nobiscum, & facti sumus latantes.

And, since our case doth so many ways surpass this of the Ieves, in all the points along; our Hallelujah must needs do so too. It is but reason I will requite. Theirs (here) went no further, than their mouth and their tongue, Os & lingua; more they mention not. But, in a certain place, the Psalmist, when he would expresse a farre greater joy, thus he saith, All my bones shall say, Lord who is like thee? This, I think reason, that seeing our bones should have been scattered in every corner like as chips, when one heweth wood on the earth; (should have, but were not:) Not only our mouth and tongue (as theirs;) but our very bones should say, Halleluja, Lord, who is like thee, who hast rid us from a danger, the like whereof never was? I add further: that, if we and our bones should hold our peace, the stones should cry it. For, Timber-work, and stone-work, and all had flyen in pieces (we know then; even (as Abakuk speaketh) that the beam out of the timber-work, and the stone out of the wall, may cry one to another; the beam to the stone, Halleluja; and the stone to the beam again, Halleluja, to Him, that hath kept them fast, and not made Ierusalem as an heap of stones. Even they, to cry: Every bone to have a tongue: and every stone and beam to have a tongue, to put down theirs, and to make our dicebant, our Halleluja, our magnificavit the lowder.

And now, shall we stay here and end with Halleluja, and cut off Hosanna quite? I dare not: I feldome see Halleluja hold long, if Hosanna forsake it, and second it not. For I ask; What, are they all dead, that fought our lives? Say, they are: Is the devil dead too? If he be not, it skils not, if they were. His powder-mill will still be going; he will still be as busie, as ever, in turning over all his devices, in turning himself into as many shapes as Proteus, and all to turn us to some mischief. The more it concerns us, not to be too long at our Halleluja, but, when we have done it, before we set, to take up our Hosanna; not to forget it in any wise. After we have praised Him for in convertendo, that so it is: to return, to our Converte Domine; that so it may long be. The wheel will stand, it will not turn on still, without it.

Then, in the person of humble supplicants cry we all, Hosanna to the highest, and Converte Domine, to Him, that is Lord of Ezekiels wheels, and of all their conversions. The rather, for that there there is no design, hath more laid open and let us see the defects and weaknesse of all humane wisdom and watchfulnesse, than is. There wanted neither; but it went beyond both. No, nor any design hath let us see, how dangerous and undiscoverable plots, the Devil is able to possesse his limbes withall. All to let us see, what need we have, to turn to Him, with our Convertes, that can see what they do at mid-night, in the Vault, as well as what is done at noon-day, on the house-top: can see, and discover; discover it, and turn it away. That He would, as many as are comming this way, turn them all away.

And turn them all away, by the way of prevention; not suffering them to light on us (as theirs did) and then after remove it; but averting it, before it come: left after, it be too late.

And (that we forget not Sicut) that He turn it by such, and no other meanes, than the streames in the South: that is, with no great ado: not, in boisterous or rigorous meanes, as that of Agypt; but, in a mild and calme manner, as this of Babel, and as our own. By the same meanes still; even by the turning of the heart, which is in His hands: which as the streames in the South, He now did turn; and so still and ever may. That, from that fountain (Still) may flow the streames, that may give us refreshing in time of our need. That, if it be his blessed will, that may ever be the Sicut, as now it was.

And now; turn our captivity, O Lord, past and to come; turn both: that, as the streames of the South, they may melt, fall away, and come to nothing: that our future dangers may still be sicut somnia, ever as dreames, but never Visions: that, as we have been now matters of praise to the Nations, for our former delivery, so we never become a by-word to them, for any after-calamity: but that, our conclusion may be ever, facti sumus letantes, still in joy, and this joy may never be taken from us; that we still may laud and magnifie thy glorious Name, evermore praising thee and saying, Magnificetur Dominus.

The Lord hath magnified His power and goodness towards us this day, for which

His holy Name be magnified, this day, and for ever.

A
 SERMON
 Preached before the
 KINGS MAIESTIE
 AT
 WHITE-HALL,
 On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
 Anno Dom. MDCIX.

LUKE Chap. IX. Ver. LIV, LV, LVI;

Cum vidissent autem Discipuli, &c.

And when His Disciples James and John saw it, they said: Lord, wilt thou that we command, that fire come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?

But Jesus turned about and rebuked them, and said: Ye know not of what Spirit ye are:

For the Son of man is not come to destroy mens lives, but to save them.

WE have here, in this Text, a whole Town of Samaria, in danger of being destroyed; of being destroyed, by fire: and they scaped it narrowly: so near it was, there lacked but dicimus, a word speaking. Of the Disciples, some were very forward in the motion: but CHRIST rebuked them; and the end was, the Town was saved. And was not this, under the terms of James and John, and a town of Samaria, our very case, this day four yeare? We were then in danger of destroying; and destroying by the same element, fire; and so near it we were, it would have been done as soon, as a letter burnt. There were then, that forwarded these fire-works, with their dicimus, all they could: and they said, they were Disciples of JESUS's society. But JESUS shewed Himself, to be (in heaven) of the same mind, He was, on earth. And as He was then better, to this Town, than His Disciples; so, to us He was better, than the Fathers of His Society, and rebuked them too: and blessed be God, as the Text ends, so did the matter; in Non perdere, sed salvare: none destroyed, all saved.

Finding here these words [Non perdere] in the Text, which amount to as much as Ne perdas, it brings to my mind, that this Text will second well David's Ne perdas. As, when time was, was, we had David's Ne perdas, to save a King : so, here we have now the Son of David's (CHRIST'S) Ne perdas, to save (a Town in the Text ; but with us) an Assembly more worth than Samaria, and all the Towns in it.

This Ne perdas of CHRIST, beside the Sabbath itself, is to us (this day) matter of a second Sabbath ; and so, this (like that in the Gospel) δευτέρωπρωτον, a second besides the first, two Sabbaths in one ; wherein, the voice of praise and thanksgiving is here, and is all over the Land, for the happy non perdere, sed salvare, of this day.

The Summe.

Verse 53:

The whole Text is a question, upon a Case : the Case, this. CHRIST was journeying from Galilee, to Jerusalem : being in that Countrey upon His way, He sent to this Town, to take up his lodging : No lodging would be had ; a general restraint : no man to receive Him : the quarrel, because His face was toward Jerusalem ; would not worship with them, in their mount. Upon his Case, this question : Whether this town, for not receiving CHRIST, upon pretence He was not of their Religion, might not be consumed ? Or make the Case (if you will) blown up with fire. Some little difference there is, and but little : Vis, dicimus descendat (say they ;) Vis, facinus ascendat (say ours :) descendat, or ascendat, both end, in consumet eos, destruction of them and us. In this question, we shall divide CHRIST and His company. For, of them, two here named were ready to do it, and therefore resolve ; it might be done. But CHRIST ruleth the Case, for the Town, that it ought not to be done ; No, not for this quarrel, Non receperunt eum ; No not upon these parties, Samaritans ; No not by that means done by miracle.

It was an error (this) of the Disciples, we see it plain, by Nescitis : but, of it may well be said, that Gregory faith of another of theirs, O salutaris error, qui totius mundi sustulit errorem ! A blessed error it was ; for, by it the world was rid of the like error, ever after : Rid of the error of this day : What CHRIST answered in this Case, He would have answered in ours, a fortiori : If not a poor Town, not such an Assembly. If not, by a supernatural and miraculous ; not, by an unnatural, and monstrous act. If not, for Himself ; not for Saint Peter, So that, this dayes case determined here by CHRIST, before ever it was propounded : and determined quite contrary, by JESUS, to his Disciples, then, or to his Society, of late. We are all much bound to S. Luke, for recording it, or to the HOLY GHOST rather, for inspiring him, so to do. For, so long as this Verse shall stand in this Gospel, it will serve for a resolution to this question. Whether upon pretence of Religion, CHRIST will allow, the Jew should blow up the Samaritane ? Upon non receperunt eos, any of his Disciples may do that, which they (here) would have done ? This rebuke here of these, will reach to all undertakers in the same kind : This non perdere sed salvare, saves all our Towns, Cities, and States, from consuming by fire, from any of CHRIST'S company.

The Division.

I.

Verse 52.

II.

III.

To passe then to the entreaty. In the former verse, there is a Motive, and a Motion. 1 The Motive in these : And when his Disciples, James and John, saw this. 1. The Motion in these : They said, LORD, wilt thou that we, &c. 1 Somewhat they saw, to move them : and what they saw, is in the verse before ; Non receperunt eum : CHRIST'S suffering repulse ; and for no other cause, but because His face was toward Jerusalem-ward : that is, were not affected, as they were in Religion. 2. The Motion, 1 to have the Town destroyed for it : 2 destroyed by fire : 3 by fire from heaven : 4 from heaven, only by dicamus, speaking a word only : and 5 this upon warrant, Sicut fecit Elias, Eli's example.

In the latter, CHRIST'S censure. First, he giveth no leave, nor liking any way to the motion. 1 Magister, vis dicimus (say they :) sed, Magister non vult dicere. 2 So far from that, as He rebukes them, that moved it. The rebuke of the movers, is a dislike of the motion. 3 Rebukes them not, for some one point, or circumstance in it, but even for the whole, for moving to Him, any such thing. Nay, He goeth further : likes not the motion, nor likes not the forcing it comes from : 4 In His rebuke, tells them, Nescitis, they are much mistaken : mistaken themselves, and mistake Him, both. Themselves, to move any such matter : Him, to move it, to Him : it being neither meet for them, to move ; nor Him, to grant. Them, to move : for, they were of another spirit, if they could not hit on it. Him, to grant : For, He came to another end than either to hear, or yield to motions of that nature : tells them they are not of Eli's spirit, but of His, if they be His Disciples ; and so must come as He came, Non perdere, sed salvare.

But (because we come not now to learn only ; but to give thanks, as the duty of the Day requirerth) after this, we will lay the two cases together, case by case ; this of the Day, to this in the Text : by which, it will easily appear (I doubt not) that we have as great cause every way, of joy, and thanksgiving ; nay, of the twain, the greater, for the happy Ne perdas, Christ's Ne perdas, of this day.

OR

OR yer we come to the motion, let us begin with that, that was the beginning of all this quarrel; that is, Dissent in Religion, between the Samaritan, and the Jew. Wee see the fruit of it here, and what spirit it maketh men of. On the one side, Be they Jewes, go they to Jerusalem? let them have neither meat, drink, nor lodging; (that is to say) starve them. On the other: Be they Samaritans, Sectaries; pity of their lives: put fire to them, burn them, blow them up. Mutual and mortal hatred breaking forth upon every occasion. The woman of Samaria expresseth it, by Non co-utuntur, They use not, one side the other. She might even as well have said, co-abutuntur, they abuse each other: so they do, forgetting humanity and divinity too, on either part. Here is the fruit: this, the spirit it breedeth. And these two, the Samaritan, and the Jew: they made not an end of this, till it made an end of them. Look in Josaphat, you shall see in the dayes of Clandim, (Cumanius then Deputy) the very like quarrel to this (here) upon the very same occasion, taken wholly by the Zelote, and pursued hard, opened the way to the Jewes warres, which never ended, till the utter rooting out and desolation of them both. Thus it was: and thus it will be: and by this we see, how necessary Christ's pax vobis is; and the Peace-maker, that could make the peace, how blessed he should be: blessed here, and blessed everlastingly.

The Motive

John 4. 9.

John 20. 26.
Matth. 5. 9.

Verse 56.

Mark 3. 17.

But, let me tell you this withall: this Spirit was not then, in all; neither all the Disciples, nor all the Samaritans: Some there were, on both sides, more moderately affected. The Disciples (I doubt not) did all of them (the other ten, too) much dislike this discourse offered Christ: yet, all cried not for fire: Two only, these two only of the twelve. On the other side: the Samaritans neither, all were not thus inhumane. Though this Town received Him nor, it is said (in the last verse) they went to another Town, and there he was received. So all, neither all the Disciples thus spirited; nor all the sonnes of thunder; some the sonnes of raine, as Bartholomew is interpreted: nor all the Countrey of Samaria: God provided better for both. All had gone to a generall combustion, if all had been of this destructive spirit: and all did go, when those spirits gat the upper hand.

And for their comfort, that are such, this: that Our Saviour CHRIST was none of the Zelote, but shewed Himself on that side, that enclined to humanity and peace. There was no fault in Him. It was still His desire co-uti Samaritanis, to use and be used by them, He would have had water, and asked it of the woman of Samaria: Sent his Disciples to that Town, (there) to buy meat; and now, to this Town here, to take up lodging: shewed Himself (still) willing, to break down this partition-wall. In this very journey, after this repulse here, yet He healed (among others) a Lepre, yea, though a Samaritan. Yea, so favourable that way He was, and so ready to be used, as He was counted and called a Samaritan for His labour. Well then, let this Town, and these two Disciples please themselves, in their consuming zeal: that other Town, in the last verse, and the other ten were in the right. CHRIST was in the right (I am sure:) and it is safe for us, that the same mind be in us, that was in CHRIST JESUS. And so now to the Motion: But first, to the Motive, And when they saw, &c.

John 4. 7.

Luke 17. 16.

John 8. 68.

Let me say this, for S. James and S. John: They saw enough, to move any to indignation. A great indignity it is, that, which is done by common courtesie, to every ordinary Traveller (harbour for a night) to deny that, to any: Omni animantium generi pabulum & latibulum, fodder and shelter, they are due to all living creatures by the law of nature. Within a verse after, Christ saith: Vulpes foveas habent, &c. Not to allow a man, so much, as every Fox is allowed, a hole, for his head? a very great inhumanity, to any: who could choose, but be moved?

Verse 38.

2. And if to deny this, to any were too much: it received encrease, by the person. It was Christ, that was thus repelled; of whose well using, it stood them upon, to be jealous; and not to shew themselves cold, in putting up any disgrace offered to their Master. We must needs allow their zeal, in their Masters quarrel.

3. And, when was this? For, that circumstance adds much, here. It was even then, when He was newly come down from the Mount, from His transfiguration: immediately upon that, came this. Him whom a little before, they had seen glorified from Heaven; to see him now thus vilified upon earth, would it not move any?

4. And, who were they that did it? A pelting Country-town; and they in it, a sort of Samaritan-Hereticks, whom the world were rid of; at whose hands, who could endure to see him thus used? Coming from hatred of Heresie, nor can it choose but be a good motion.

5. And now, why was it, they did Him this disgrace? For no other cause, but for His Religion: because His back was to their Mount, and His face to Jerusalem. And here, zeal is in his prime; Never so plausible, as when it hath gotten Religion for his pretence, and the Catholike cause for his colour; then they may set fire on the Town. Put these now together. 1 A barbarous dignity, harbour for a night denied: and 2 denied Christ: 3 Christ, so late in all His glory: 4 and that by a sort of Hereticks: 5 and only, for that He was well affected in Religion. The case is home : when they saw this, it moved them to make a Motion. Never talk of it : the motion cannot be misliked ; specially coming commended by the Movers, two of his Disciples : and none of the meanest of them, two Pillars (as Saint Paul calleth them) and he, whom J E S U S so loved, one of the two.

Galat. 2. 9.
John 21. 7.

II.
The Motion.

We see, what moved them. Now, let us see what they move, and upon what warrant. They move to have them destroyed, by fire, from Heaven. Their warrant, sicut fecit Elias : whom they had seen a little before in the mount, and who (they are sure) would never have endured it.

In their motion (methinks) two things they take for granted : 1 one, that destroyed they must be : no lesse punishment serve. 2 The other, that it should be by fire. They make no question of these two, nor so much as consult with Christ of them ; 1 Whether it be meet they were destroyed : 2 then, whether fire, were not a fit kind of death for such. They run away with these two, and passe sentence upon them. Die they must : die they must, and then limit the kind ; Being hereticks, best even burn them and make no more ado.

They only advise with CHRIST about the meanes, whence, they will have their fire, and how ? Whence, from heaven : how, by dicimus. And hitherto, the case like. Both, to be destroyed : both, by fire : both, upon one pretence, they and we. Now, they break company, J E S U S's Disciples, and J E S U S's Society. For, when it comes to the meanes, J E S U S's Disciples will take no indirect course : do it, like Disciples, or not at all. They will go to work, on G O D's Name : call it down, nor conjure it up : from heaven, His own sphere ; not from any infernal place, nor rent the earth to bring it up. S. John (as an Eagle) flies up to the clouds : not (like a Mold-warpe) creeps into a Vault, to do it. De celo do it, like Prophets ; not, like incendiaries, fetch fire the wrong way.

The like may be said, of Dicimus : not, from heaven, by any optike instrument (as some had, before that time, fired whole Navies :) No, but only by Dicimus, saying the word and no more, No powder, but from the clouds : no match, but their tongue : No Vis fodimus, no pickaxe to dig : nor beams to carry, nor traines to kindle it : but, Vis dicimus, by way of miracle, or not at all. This, the motion. Now to the warrant.

3 The Warrant.

A good Warrant will do well. CHRIST without it (they know) likes of nothing done. The quo Warranto (to win CHRIST to be willing, to obtain His fiat) they alleadge, one would think a good one ; 1 Sicut fecit ; so, no novelty ; a president for it : 2 and sicut fecit (no lesse Prophet, than) Elias. They had seen him but lately : they did the more easily call him to mind. Moses they saw then too ; but, they could not serve themselves of him. He was taken out of the water : No good sicut for them, that were about fire-works. And he was the meekest man on the earth : and it was no meek matter ; and so he no meet man, for the purpose they were about. Elias, is Scripture as well as he : the authority of so great a Prophet is enough, to do no more than he did, upon like occasion. Nay, not like ; here, the occasion is greater : behold Plum quam Elias, a greater than Elias, suffereth disgrace here ; and therefore sicut Elias is but reasonable. And here again, our motioners will fall short too. For, if the motion to CHRIST had been Vis fodimus ? whom would they have alleadged, whose example or authority, sicut fecit ? Who, who ever did the like ? Which of the Prophets, or Patriarchs ? Their motion must have been without a sicut fecit.

Exod. 2. 5.

Numb. 12. 3:

For the matter, all is one (saith Sanders) all one. Elias, when he commanded fire from heaven, might even as well have commanded any on earth : run upon them, run them thorow, had as great power over the mettals on earth, as over the Elements in the skie. And it is like enough, if Sanders had lived till Anno Domini MDCV, and had been consulted with, he would have said straight : All one, Elias might as well have bid put fire under the Town, from beneath : as let fire fall on the Town, from above. But, by his leave, there is great odds between these. For first, Elias must do, as his Commission was to do it, from Heaven ; He might not inter-line his Commission, and put in, by mettals, or Gun-powder, or what he listed. And again : who sees not, Elia's fire, and Sampson's Foxes are not all one ? G O D's arrowes (as lightning from heaven) and these tela ignita Satanae, Satan's traines and fire-works, from under the ground. In one, the hand of G O D must needs be : in the other the paw of the Devil, the malice of man, the fury or treachery or forlorn creatures may have no place. No such authority, no such fear to touch the conscience, as the act of God hath ; therefore, that is not sicut Elias. And lastly, if it were, yet is, nothing gained by it : Christ repeals it by and by : and forbids in this, either the act or spirit of Elias.

Judg. 15. 14.
Psalm 18. 14.
Ephes. 6. 16.

But now, they that say thus (not Magister dicito tu, but) Magister vis dicimus nos ; feel, in themselves (belike) no lack of strength. The Cardinal cannot say of them, Id non fuit, quia deerant vires, that was not done, because there wanted force. So that, if after, they lost any of their due, it was not, because they lacked power, to maintain it. S. Paul denyeth it flatly : Having (saith he) in a readinesse, vengeance against all disobedience. Had it ; had it, in a readinesse ; and, against all disobedience. And sure, they that could thus do, call fire from Heaven ; strike Elimas blind ; strike Ananias stark dead, in an instant ; need not lose their interest, which they had (forsooth) in this same temporal dominion, for lack of strength. Now, it is well known, it was the case, here in the Text : Discipulus potuit, sed Magister noluit. It was, for want of vis, this in the Text ; Vis, of Voló, of will in Christ : not, for want of vis, or vires, power in

2 Cor. 10. 6.

Act. 13. 11, 15, 17.

in them. It went not, by vires adecrant, vel decrant: It went, by Magister vis; Christ's Will was wanting, and nothing else. That was their case (here:) who therefore (because two things go to the act, 1 their power, and 2 Christ's will) howsoever they felt their own power, and themselves able to do it, yet would not do it, on their own heads without His privity, or leave: and so now, they aske it; Magister, vis dicimus. By which very manner of propounding it, in this confident style, it seemeth, little doubt they made to carry it cleere; made full reckoning of Christ's Volo; and that He would be moved with their motion.

And with their motion, He was moved; for, it is said, He turned with it: but, it was, the wrong way. At the turning, it may be thought, they looked for some good turne; that Christ should have commended them, and said: I con you thanks; I see you have care of my credit; you are even worthy for it to sit one on my right hand, the other on my left, for shewing your selves my Champions: your motion is good, forward with it.

III.
Christ censured and rebuke of them.

But, it falls out, His turning is the wrong way: He turned on the left side, To rebuke them. This Christ did. Now I will tell you, what He should have done. For according to the new taken up resolution, of the grave Fathers of the society, He should have taught them first, to take a paire of ballances, and weighed, whether the good that would ensue would over-weigh the losse of the towns: If it would, up with it and spare not. That it would certainly. For, it would strike such a feare (the burning of this Towne) into all the Townes about, that Christ should never after want receiving: and it would salve Christ's reputation much, who had been thought, too great a favourer of these Samaritans: and it would be much for His credit, that He had Disciples could do as much as ever could Elias.

But CHRIST never stands weighing these: but, for all the parties were Samaritans, parties not to be favoured: for all it is made His quarrell, non Eum: for all their meanes should be by miracle, which cannot be misliked: for all this, turnes and rebukes them. Never thinks the motion, worth the answering; as being evill ex tota substantia: but rebukes them for moving it, rebukes the spirit, it came from: and rebukes them of ignorance of their own spirit; Te know not of what spirit ye are of. As much to say as, If ye did; ye would make no such motions: that you do make any such, it proceeds from Nescitis. That, would be marked. They are in ignorance; and the worst ignorance (of themselves) that move for fire. They knew not, what spirit they are of; but, whatsoever it is, a wrong spirit it is, for, here it is rebuked, by Christ.

That which Christ rebuketh is, Nescitis; that is their fault: There is no word, on which his rebuke can fall, but that. It can be no good motion, that comes from Nescitis. For, from Nescitis cometh no good; without knowledge, the foule it selfe is not good. Nescitis quid petatis; No good Prayer: Adoratis quod nescitis, no good worship; and so ignorant devotion, implicite faith, blind obedience, all rebuked. Zeale, if it be not secundum scientiam cannot be secundum conscientiam; matter of conceit, it may be; of conscience, it cannot be. It is but κακογυλια, and κακογυλια is not to be allowed (we see) no, not in Christ's own cause.

And, it is not every ignorance, this: not of the act, but of the spirit, He chargeth: which is more. For, Spirituum ponderator Deus, GOD weighs the spirit: men look to the acts; He, to the spirit: therefore, trie the act; but, the spirit, rather. We may be deceived in any act, if we know not the spirit, it comes from. One and the same act proceeding from diverse spirits, good for one; for another, not so. Therefore, Probate spiritus is ever good counsell; and discretio spirituum, a principall part of knowledge.

1 Cor. 11. 10

And if this import us, to do in other mens spirits, not to be deceived in them; much more in our own: that we deceive not our selves, which is the third degree. Nescitis, cujus spiritus; cujus vos; the foule Elench of all, ab ignoratione proprii spiritus, to fall into this fallax. For indeed, many blinde actions come from men, by reason of ignorance, of this third. And this we are to look to the rather, for that we see two so great Apostles, like to precipitate themselves into a bloody act, for mistaking this point.

1. There are (sure) many Nescitis, they were in. Elias (first) did not that they would do: that, is one. His fire took hold of none but Delinquents; every one as deep in the same fault, as another. Here is a great many women and children in the town not accessory to this. God would not suffer the wicked and innocent to perish together, no not in Sodom; would not suffer Ninive to be destroyed, because there were in it many, that knew not their right hand from their left. This did not Elias.

Gen. 18. 23
Iohn 4. 1

2. Then, it was but quod fecit Elias; not, sicut: there is another. For, what Elias did, he did by specall inspiration, had a particular Commission, and (as it were) a Privie Seale for it. And, that we must ever distinguish, in the Prophets, when they proceed by their generall calling (therein we may follow them:) and when an act is executed, and done by them, by immediate warrant: for such warrant passeth not the person; no precedent to be made of it. Else, without their revelation, we may do quod fecit Elias, and not Sicut. And, that is a great Nescitis, and doth much harme: for many a lewd attempt, it is sought; and, if they get it once over their heads, they think they are safe. For killing of Kings, Sicut fecit Ehad: of Queenes, Sicut fecit Iehoiada: for rebelling; Sicut Libna. No, no: Quod fecit non sicut fecit; what they did, they do: as they did, they do not.

Judges 3. 21
1 King. 11. 27

But if it were Sicut fecit too, it would not serve; It is a Nescitis still; and this is our Saviour Christ, directed to their allegations of Elias. I observe, they aske of the act; and Christ answers of his Spirit, So that Sicut fecit Elias, is not enough; is but a weak warrant: you must be of his Spirit, as well as do his act. His Sicut will not beare your act, unlesse you have his spirit, too. It is not enough to say, thus did Elias, unlesse you adde, I am of the same spirit.

4. Then, it remaines, they must say, they are of Elias's spirit; and into some such phansie (it seemes) they were fallen: but, that, is another Nescitis. Why, what harme is that? Elias's spirit (I hope) was no evill spirit. No: but, every good spirit, as good as Elias's, is not for every person, place, or time. Spirits are given by God, and men inspired with them, after severall manners, upon severall occasions, as the severall times require. The Times sometime require one spirit; sometime, another; Elias's time, Elias's Spirit. As his act good, done by his spirit: so his Spirit good in his own time. The time changed, the spirit (then, good) now, not good. For both are faulty: the act, without the spirit; and the spirit, without the time. And, so it may fall out, that at some time, one may be rebuked, for being of Elias's spirit well enough, when Elias's spirit is out of time.

5. But, why is it out of time? That is another Nescitis, which CHRIST sets down plainly, when He renders the reason: For, the son of man is come: (for, we may well make a pause there.) As if He should say: Indeed, there is a time to destroy (saith Salomon, Eccles. 3.) that, was under the Law: Ignem lex, the fiery law, as Moses calls it: then, a fiery spirit would not be amisse; then, was Elias's time. But, now, the Son of man is come: ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. The spirit of Elias was good till the Son of man came; but, now He is come, the date of that spirit is expired. When the Son of man is come, the spirit of Elias must be gone. Now specially: for, Moses and he resigned lately, in the mount. Now, no Law-giver, no Prophet, but CHRIST, CHRIST now, and His spirit, to take place. You move out of time: will ye be of Elias's Spirit, and the Son of man is come? A plaine Nescitis.

6. The Fathers work out another Nescitis, out of the Emphasis [Vos;] Cujus spiritus Vos. Vos, is no idle word: it makes a plain separation, between them and Elias. Vos, You: Why, you are my Disciples, (I trow:) you must answer, to Cujus spiritus vos? Cujus spiritus Tu. CHRIST's Disciples, and Elias's spirit? that cannot be. Choose ye now: for, of whole spirit ye are, His Disciples ye must be. If you be His, what do you here with me? get you to his Tabernacle. If ye be mine, off with Elias's mantle and spirit both. The Disciple, and the Master are of one spirit. To make a Disciple, is nothing, but to do as GOD did, at the door of the Tabernacle; take of the Masters spirit, and put it on the Disciples. But, if ye be of My Spirit, my Spirit is in specie Columba, not Aquila; not of the Eagle, that carrieth Jupiter's Thunder-bolt; but, of the Dove, that brings the Olive-branch in her bill, the signe of Non perdere, sed salvare. If this spirit be in you, let all your motions smell of the Olive-branch, not of the thunder-bolt; come from saving grace, and not from consuming zeale.

7. But yet, the worst Nescitis is behind. For worse it is, to be mistaken in Christ, than in our selves. And Him they mistooke, in that they would move Him, to that, whose coming was contrary, quite contrary to that, they would have Him do. This is Nescitis, indeed. Vere nescitis, qui petitis a Magistro mansuetudinis licentiam crudelitatis. A nescitis, to seek at the hands of Him, that is the Master of all meekness, a license to commit such cruelty.

The very title of the Son of man, is enough for this. For, whatsoever as the Son of GOD, He may do; it is kindly for Him, as the Son of man, to save the sonnes of men. Specially being the Son of such men, as He was; the Son of Abraham, who entreated hard that even Sodom might not be destroyed. The Son of Jacob, who much disliked, yea, even cursed the wrath of his two sons, in destroying Sichem. The Son of David, who complained much of the sonnes of Zervia that that they were too hard for Him. (As Christ doth here, of the sonnes of Zebedee: who (as if indeed, they had been borne of a thunder-cloud, and not of a man) were so ready to make havock of the lives of men.) It cost the Son of man more to redeeme men, then to have them blown up so lightly. And, if James and John were to pay for them, at His price, they would not be so evil advised, as to make so quick riddance of the lives of men.

Christ doth here warrant us, that, to tell cujus spiritus, the way is, by ad quid venit? what spirit is he of, by to what end comes he; whether blowes it, which way is his face, to salvare, or to perdere? For, to the end of His coming, GOD hath framed His spirit. You may know it, by His first Text. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, to heale the broken, to deliver the captive; to save that was lost. He sent me: therefore He was sent, and therefore He came. You may know it, by His Name, I E S U S a S A V I O U R: you may know it by His Similes (no destroying creatures;) a Lambe, no Wolfe; a Hen, no Kite; a Vine, no bramble, out of which came fire to burne up all the trees in the forest. Of His coming, clean contrary to this, speaks the Prophet, e He shall come down like the rain; (speaks the Apostle) Hic est ille I E S U S qui venit in aqua; came in water to quench; not, in fire, to consume.

Again, that He Doth not this [non perdere, sed salvare] by accident, as it hits; but, on set purpose: It was the cause, the finall cause, the very end, GOD sent Him, and He came for.

In which point, to take away Nescitis clean for ever, he sets it down positively, and privatively both: Wherefore He came not; and wherefore He came. Came not to destroy; but, came to save: this, is plain dealing. But first, not to destroy: that they which cannot save, may yet be sure sure, not to Destroy any, but; if they can, not only not destroy, but save too, as CHRIST doth. But, of these, CHRIST came but to one end; hath but one office; came not; to the other; and this would be marked. The Cardinall begins his book to the Pope, Duplex Per officium, Pascere & occidere, CHRIST had but one; to feed, to save: Another there is was Homicida ab initio. But, if Saint Peter have gotten two offices, he hath one more, than CHRIST. CHRIST came to save only, with a flat exclusive; of the other. Ioh. 8. 44

And, where they move Him; in specie; for a destruction by fire; He is not content to deny that alone; denieth it in genere, nor to destroy at all; neither, by fire, nor any other way. Here; we have a case of fire: will ye have another; of the sword? Shall we do it by fire? (say James and John, here;) Domine si percutimus gladio? (saith Saint Peter, after) in a greater quarrell farre than this, when they laid hands on Him, to carry Him to His passion. This, He denieth too, and in that quarrell; and saith, Sinite, let alone your sword: Out with your fire; James and John; up with your sword, Peter, So that, neither by fire, here: nor by sword, there; neither, by miracle (as here) nor without miracle (as there) doth Christ like of these motions. What then? Shall not Christ be received? Yes: He is most worthy so to be. I adde, they that refuse it, are worthy any punishment: but, that every man is to be dealt with as he is worthy, would prove but a hard piece of Divinitie, hard for all, and even for themselves, too. If, so oft as Christ suffers indignitie, fire should come down from heaven, Domine quis sustinebet? we were all in hard case, Jewes and Samaritans, and all: yea, Disciples; yea this James, and John, and all. The Samaritans, they received not CHRIST; they were gone; burnt all. For Jerusalem's sake, because His face was that way (here) He was not received. When He came to Jerusalem, how was He received there? Why, there He was murdered: worse used than in Samaria. Then, we must call for more fire: Jerusalem must be burnt, too. Now, for the Disciples James and John, how carried they the matter? It is true: they had received Him; but, when most need was, thrust Him from them, renounced Him, utterly denied; that ever they knew Him. Then, we must trouble heaven once more: call for fire, for James and John, too. Nay then, the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not, nor received Him not: why then the world is at an end, facti sumus sicut Sodomia; all a heap of ashes; if this Doctrine go forward. Best, take Phaeton out of the chariot, that he set not all on fire. Sure, this (I take it) is a Nescitis: For, who receiveth Christ, as he should? yea, who refuseth not one time, or other, to receive Him? Who; of the Disciples, who at Jerusalem? Then, all must be turned out and in: Non venit salvare, sed perdere. Then, this will follow; if no place for repentance, then no use of CHRIST. For, whom shall He save, when James and John have consumed all to ashes? But, it will be well to leave CHRIST somebody to save: not disappoint Christ of His coming, and send Him backe without His errand.

Chap. 22: 49

Psalm 119. 31

Iohn 1. 10. 11.
Rom. 9: 19:

Now, out of this Nescitis, to frame our Scitis. 1. By this time we know CHRIST'S Spirit (as He teacheth us) by His coming. His coming was not to destroy: they that came a destroying, came not in His Companie. 2. Then, our own spirits: if they do spirare Christum, they have the same journeyes end. 3. We know their spirits, that hatched alate this question anew: Vis facimus ascendat ignis? And theirs too, that never turned and rebuked it, but gave allowance to it, both before, and after it was done: yea, bound them to it by oath, and set it forth, with both Sacraments. 1. Of Penance, and of the 2. Altar: and (what should I say?) resolved flat against Christ, in the very same point; and did not (as He) cast water, but put oyle to the flame.

Can these be the Society of Iesus, and the spirits blow two contrarie wayes, and their coming be, to two contrarie ends? His not to destroy: theirs, to destroy: His, to rebuke; theirs, to allow of such motives?

To know, what spirit they be of, look what manner of spirits they make choice of, and by their wils choole, and cherish none other; eager, fierce, boisterous spirits. O, Elias's spirit, is a goodly spirit! but Christ: Ecce Rex venit tuus mansuetus; or Disce a me quia mitis, it is not worth a mite: that spirit is too weak, and too faint, to forward their fire-workes.

And, if yet ye doubt, no better way to be resolved, than by Al quid venis? aske that, and it will resolve you straight. Wherefore came Doctor Morton, a little before the Rebellion in the North? Wherefore came Doctor Sanders into Ireland? Wherefore Cardinall Allen into the Low-Countries in LXXXVIII? To what end, came he out of the Arch-dukes campe hither? was it, to save mens lives, or to destroy them? By these marks, we cannot but know Cuius spiritus.

It sufficeth, that CHRIST rebuketh this spirit: that if they be the Society of IESUS, it is Alius Iesus, another Iesus, than this in the Text: Bar-Iesus, for he, by interpretation, is Elymas, that is a destroyer. CHRIST likes no destroying; no, though the Town be full of Samaritans, He likes it not: no, though the colour be non receperunt Eum; yet He likes it not: no, though we could miraculously do it, like Elias, yet likes He it not. It is not God's will in the Old Testament, that Sion should be built in blood: Nor, in the New, that His Church, on the ashes of any estate: Nor, that His not receiving, should be pretence, for the extirpation of any Town, much less, Kingdom, or country.

This

Our Duty:

This we learn. But, we come not only for that, but to congratulate this poor Town, that escaped the fire, and our selves no lesse, that should have perished by the same element, though not from Heaven, yet another way; though not by dicimus, yet by another meanes: and in publike manner to render our yearly solemn thanksgiving, that we also, by the Sonne of man, were delivered, from the powder laid ready to consume, and from the match light to give it fire; that they were rebuked, yea (more than that) destroyed themselves, that sought our destruction. Every way, our case hath the advantage: and therefore bindeth us, to greater duty.

Will ye consider it, in the parties. This, was against Samaritans; and, by the Apostles: Came commended, by the movers; they were Apostles: aggravated, by the parties, against whom; they were of the Sect of the Samaritans. We are no Samaritans (I trust:) but, they no Apostles, (I am sure:) no Apostles, nor of no Apostolike spirit, which would authorize that, which was rebuked in the Apostles themselves. And, for Samaritans (which falls to our turn;) it may be, they count us and call us so: it is no matter, they called CHRIST himself so, then, This (I say:) had we been such as they would have us to be; such as these (here) very Samaritans, we were to find as much favour, at the hands of the Society of Jesus, as did the Samaritans, at the hand of Jesus Himself; if their spirit, their coming, their faces stood, as His, to Non perdere.

2 King. 17.8.
John 4. 22.

But we are none. No, if we go by the marks, the Scripture sets down of them, the Samaritans will light on their side. For, let it be enquired, whether part, in the worship of GO D, useth more ritus Gentium, they or we (the mark of the Book of the Kings:) of whether of us, it may more rightly be said, You worship, you know not what (which is CHRIST'S own mark.) In a word: let this be the case, Whether Religion have more windowes open to Jerusalem, whose face looks more fully that way. No: the looking to Jerusalem, is not the quarrel; the not looking to Rome, that, is the matter.

And sure, this quarrel is much after one in both; That, in the Text, was made a matter in Religion, but, was none: no more was this of theirs. Non receperunt, is no act of heresie: Non crederunt, that, is. But it is not their mis-believing, moved them in the Text: nor these neither. It was the not-harbouring makes all this ado. So they would entertain them, they might believe as they list, Upon the matter then, it falls out to prove, not zeal against their Heresie, but zeal for their own entertainment; which will not, but directly, be made matter of Religion.

Now, if ye weigh the destruction, ye shall find, though in the main, they agree (for upward, and downward makes small difference) yet, ours was the worse.

Worse, for, it should have been sudden, which is worse for the soul; therefore simply worse. Worse, for that would have wasted but to the ground, and there left: but, this should have fetched up foundations and ground, and all. Worse certainly: for, that should have consumed but Samaritans only: but this, for the good of the Catholike cause, Samaritans and Jewes, both. Yea, such as themselves were, Disciples, and James and John too, if they had been there, for company. Worse: for, this had the shew of an example, Sicut fecit Elias: but ours, Sicut fecit who? Not, Sicut fecit ELIAS: No; Sicut without example. Never the like entred into the heart of any, that carried but the shape of a man. So, still the advantage, on our side.

Now, for the delivery, when all is done, that which was saved here, was but a poor Towne without a name. I should much wrong that famous Assembly, and Flower of the Kingdom, if I should offer to compare it with that, either in quantity, (alas, like little Zoar to great NINIVE) or in quality, when, in ours (to say nothing of the rest) One there was, more worth than ten thousand such as they, we have good Scripture for it.

2 Sam. 18.3.

These, here, were rebuked but verbally, on earth: Ours, really rebuked from Heaven. Really rebuked, in their intention, by miraculous disappointing the execution: and themselves put to a foul rebuke besides: God first blowing their own powder in their faces, to write their sin there; and after making their bowels, their mercilesse bowels, to be consumed with fire, within the very view of that place, which they had meant to consume with fire, and all us in it.

CHRIST came to save us: There be manifest steps of His coming. Apparent first, in that He made them, they could not contain their own spirits, but brought them out by their own Dicimus: made them take pen and paper, and tell it out themselves, and so become the instruments of their own destruction, which is the worst of all.

Again He came, when He gave his Majesty understanding to read the Riddle of [so soon as the letter is burnt:] to construe the dialect of these unknown spirits, and pick it out of a period, as dark as the cellar was dark, where the powder lay.

Psalms 118.16.

There is but one coming in the Text: He came not to destroy, but to save: Here, were two in ours; both comings, of CHRIST. He came not to destroy, but to save us, in mercy. He came not to save, but destroy them (His second coming) in Judgement. To conclude: This one notable difference there is, on our side: They should have been destroyed by miracle; and we were saved by miracle: The right hand of the LORD brought it to passe; which is of all others, the most welcome deliverance.

And shall I then, upon all this, make a motion? Master, wilt thou, we speak to these whom thou hast delivered, that seeing thou tookest order, the fire should not ascend to consume them, they would take order, their prayers may ascend up: and as the odours of the Saints phials, burn before Thee still, and never consume, but be, this day ever, a sweet smell in Thy presence? Their fire, they came to put under the earth, CHRIST would not have burn; another fire, He came to put upon earth, and His desire, is that it should burn: even that fire, whereon the incense of our devotion, and the sacrifice of our praise burn before God, and be in odorem suavitatis. We were appointed, to be made a sacrifice: If Isaac be saved, shall nothing be offered in his stead? Shall we not thank God, that He was better to them, than James and John: and to us, better, than those were, that will needs thrust themselves; to be of His society? That, when this dicimus was said of us too, stayed it at dicimus, and never let it come to perficimus: miraculously made known these unknown spirits: that he turned and rebuked the motion, and the spirits that made it: that He came, once and twice, to save us and destroy them. Luke 12. 49: Ephel. 5: 21

If we shall, let us then do it; let our souls magnifie the Lord; and our spirits rejoyce in God our Saviour: that the beginning of the Text and of our case, was fire, to consume them (in the first verse:) that the end was, non perdere, sed salvare. (in the last.) Such may ever be the end, of all attempts to destroy us. So may He come still; and still, as here, He came, never to destroy, ever to save us. And, as oft as He, to save us, so oft we, to praise Him. Luke 1: 46:

And God grant, that this answer here of CHRIST may serve, for a determination of this case for ever, and every Christian be so resolved by it, as the like never come in speech more, by any dicimus. But if (as we know not what spirits are abroad,) that every destroying spirit may be rebuked, and every State preserved, as this Town here was, and as we all were, this Day. And (ever) as He doth save still, we may praise still; and ever magnifie His mercy; that endureth for ever. Amen. Psalm 136. 12

LAMENT. Chap. III. Ver. XXII,

Misericordiae Domini. quia non sumus consumpti : quia non defecerunt miserationes Ejus.

It is the LORDS mercies that we are not consumed, because His compassions fail not.

Luke 7: 32:

THE Verse is not amiss; The Book suits not so well. For this joyfull Day of Our great and famous Deliverance, CHRIST'S, tibiis cecimus is more meet, than John Baptists Planximus; and DAVIDS Harp, than JEREMIES Lamentations. This (I know) cometh to your minds, at the mention of this Melancholicke Book. But yet, if we weigh our case well; nor what it fell out to be, but what it was meant to have been; the very Book will not seem so out of season. For, this very day, should it not have been a day of Lamentation to the whole Land? Was it not so marked in their Kalender? And they had their will, would they not have given matter of making a book of Lamentations, over this State; and that another manner of Book, with more, and with longer Chapters, than this of Jeremie's? By the mercy of GOD, is proved otherwise. But what? shall we so intend the day, what it is, as we forget, what it was like to have been? No: the Book and the verse Iuxta se posita will do well; one set out the other, as the black-work doth the white. The Book put us in mind, but for GOD'S mercy, in what case we might have been. The verse by GOD'S mercy, what we are. And even to thank Him, that our lot was, hit the verse, and miss the book; to fall within the one, and without the other.

The truth is, I had a desire that Misericordia Domini might have their day: and this day I thought to dedicate chiefly to them. We have formerly moved and resolved the question out of the Gospel; we have once or twice called to joy out of the Psalmes. The barbarousnesse of the act, and the parties to it, hath been justly inveighed against: A time given to each of these
 And:

And shall we not allow one day to the magnifying of Him, and His mercies, that was the cause of all? It should have had the first day by right, and we were pointed to it, by Misericordia Domini super omnia opera Ejus: Well, at last now in this seventh year, this annus Sabbaticus, let us make it our Sabbath, rest upon it, and, put it off no longer. Be this day dedicated to the celebrating of them.

To this end, though all the Scripture over, God's mercy be much spoken of (for where shall ye light, but ye shall find it upon one occasion or other?) yet, to fit this day and our case, as it tell out this day, (in my poor conceit) none in any other book, falleth out so just, cometh so home, as this verse to this day, It was the mercies, &c. as upon the opening will fall out. Which though it be in the Book, yet is nothing of the nature of the Book. Psalm 144. 5.

The Verse is a Recognition or acknowledgement: I may add, a just and a joyfull recognition. The Summe And that double, 1 That we were not consumed, and 2 Why we were not. So, it standeth on two & Division. parts: 1 That we were not, a happy effect: 2 Why we were not: it was God's mercy, the cause of that and all other our happiness.

The effect is in these words; Non sumus consumpti. Of which, 1 Consumpti, is the danger; and 2 Non sumus, the deliverance. I.

The cause in these words, Misericordia Domini quod non: And there first: 1 Non, we were not. 2 And then there was a cause quod non, that we were not: 3 Then, that cause was God's mercy. 1 Which we take in further: It was God first, that did it: 2 Then, it was His mercy that moved Him to it. In the mercy, three things we find: 1 Misericordia, more than one, many, mercies. 2 Compassions, or (as the native signification of the word is) bowels, the bowels of mercy; that special kind. 3 And those have this property, they fail not, or (which is all one) consume not: not they; and so not we: Their not-consuming is the cause, we were not consumed. II.

Then last our Recognition. That seeing, His mercies fail not us, that we fail not them; seeing they consume not, not we, by their means; that our thankfulness do not neither, that it fall not into a consumption. But that, in imitation of the three, we render Him 1 plural, thanks; 2 and these from the bowels: and 3 that uncessantly without failing. And this, not in words only, but in some reality, some works of mercy, tending to preserve those, that are near consumpti, pining away. III.

PLain it is, a danger there was: Else, vain were the Recognition. That danger is set down in the word Consumpti: some consuming there should have been: some such matter was in hand. A word, even (as it were) of purpose chosen, for us; for, it foreteth just with our danger as may be.

Consuming may be more ways than one: but, no way so proper, as by the element of fire, Confessor & consumer omnium (saith the Heathen man) that makes away and consumes all things. It is the proper peculiar Epiethete of that Element, consuming fire: and the common phrase of the HOLY GHOST is consumed by fire. This fits us right. Fire it was, consuming fire, should have consumed us: it was a fiery consumption. I.

Then consumpti, in propriety, is nothing but simul sumpti: Con is simul in composition. All taken, all put together, and an end made of all. And was it not so with us? King and Prince, Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Judges, Knights, Citizens, Burgeses, and a great number besides of Spectators and auditors, that day, out of all the flower of the Kingdom: all couped up together under roof, and then blown up all. This is simul sumpti, and consumpti, both. The Effect: I Will ye any more for company? This was but personal; take the real too: lead, stone, timber, windowes, walls, roofs, foundations and all, must have up too: an universal desolation of all, both personal and real. That the Stone out of the wall, and the beam out of the frame, if they could speak, might say, and we are in: simul sumpti, and consumpti too; all hid waste, not one stone standing upon another. This, was right consumpti, spent indeed, were nothing left, person or things with life or without: utter havock made of all. 1 Really; Habac. 1. 11. Matth. 24. 2.

Thus far might Jeremy go, and match us in these three. I will touch two or three more beyond him, that we may see, our case should have been more lamentable, than the book of Lamentations it self.

1. There was no fire in Jeremies time: none but of wood and coal, and no consuming but that way: and that fire consumes by degrees, piece and piece, one piece fire while one is wood, still; so that one may save a brands end for a need. But this was a fire, Jeremy never knew of, not many ages after was ever heard of: takes all at once. No brand here, no pulling out of the fire, no saving any: here is quick work, all done and past, as soon as the paper burns. Zech. 3. 2.

2. Another: In this of the Prophets they had fair warning. There was a Camp pitched three several times in Ieboraim, Iecanias, Zedechias dayes: they had time to make themselves ready. But in ours, facti essemus sicut Sodoma, our destruction had been like that of Sodom; no Camp pitched there, but suddenly, in a moment: to the hazard of many a soul, that where (I doubt me) but Rom. 9. 29.

but evil prepared, if they had been thus suddenly surpris'd. And that had been a lamentable consumpti (indeed) of both body and soule, the body here, the soul eternally. A terrible blow indeed, and we should not have known who would have hurt us.

3. Now we do, as hap is; and therein we leave Jeremy behind again. It was not an open enemy offered this: usually, destruction cometh from them. So did this, in the Text: from the Chaldes; not only strangers, but in open hostility with the Jewes. But, in ours, they were not so much as strangers; but borne subjects of one and the same countrey, tongue, and allegiance. The more lamentable, to be consumed by our selves, to be shot thorow with an arrow, the feathers whereof grew on our own wings. So they were, naturally: but, when they fell once to this unnatural designement, when they fell on consuming, they were no longer men, all humanity was quite consumed in them. And this was the danger.

To make a danger dangerous, two things are required: 1. The surenesse, and 2. the neerenesse. If it be uncertaine, we reckon not of it; nor, though it be certain, if it be farre away. Let us see, both was it.

2 The certainty of the danger.

To make it certain, these are required: 1. It be soundly resolved: 2. surely bound 3. and feriously put in execution. First upon good resolution, a sentence given quod eramus consumendi, we were to be made away, and rather than we should not, their own friends, allies, and kindred; yea, their one dear Catholikes to go the same way, to have been in the Consumpti, as well as we. This was to have it certain, to make sure work.

Gravely resolved; and fast bound, as funiculus triplex, the three immutable things of their Religion could bind it. 1. Bound by oath: their Sacramentum militare, they everooke first, never to discover, never to desist.

2. Bound again by their Sacrament of Penance. Thither they went in an error, as if it had been some fault; but, they found more, than they went for: went for absolution; received a flat resolution, it was not only no sin, but would serve to expiate their other sins. And, not only expiate their sins, but heap also upon them an increase of merit. In effect, that our consumption would become their consummation.

3. Bound last, with the Sacrament of the Altar, and so made as sure, as their Maker could make it. These three; sure now, past starting (I trow.)

3

But go too: Oaths and Sacraments consume nothing. True: It was therefore not only solemnly bound, but sadly set upon. They fell to their Pick-axes, laid in their powder, by ten and by twenty barrells at once; and I know not how much iron, and how many huge stones; Fervebat opus, in earnest they were. Of all which we may say (with Saint John) That which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, that preach we, in this point. That, very sure it is, we were very far gone in our Consumption.

1 John 1.1.

3 The neerenesse of it.

And all this while, it may be, it was in dies multos, far enough away; to be done a good while after, we know not when: How neer was it? Nox una interposita, but a night (nor that neither: neither a whole night, nor a whole day;) but a few houres we had to spend. The traine ready, and the match: three for failing. They stayed but for the con, for the time, till all were con (that is) simul sumpti; and then consumpti should have come straight upon all.

This was our case, thus dangerous, thus sure, thus neer; Inasmuch as, we were even given for dead. The letter shewed as much. Their being together, and waiting for it, at their meeting place, shewed as much. They made full reckoning, we were little better, than even consumpti in the preterperfect tense. And neerer we cannot come. It is well known, David was never destroyed indeed finally, yet (often in the Psalms) he saith, He was brought back from the deep of the earth again; from the gates of death: yea even from the nethermost Hell: His meaning was, he was exceeding neer it. And so were we as neer as was possible, and not be swallowed up of it. And this is the meaning of consumpti. And thus much for it.

Psal. 71. 18. 9.
14. 88. 13.

The deliverance.
Esay 37. 3.

Now are we to put Non sumus to it, and we are safe straight. Which two words contain our deliverance. So as, though we were destinate as fewell, to this fire; though venerunt filii ad partum, though they were come to the point, to be delivered of that they had so long travelled withall; though like we were, and sure we were, and neer we were, yet consumed we were not. We were not: for, here we are, blessed be GOD. Here, and else-where (some few except, which since be gone to their graves in peace.) The place standeth, the persons still alive. Non sumus consumpti; this is ad oculum, it admits no further discourse. But this it admits, that we may stay a little and say our Non sumus, to this of Jeremy in the Text; and we shall find ours, another manner of preservation, by odds; that so we may provide our selves of another manner of recognition.

Non sumus consumpti (saith Jeremy;) when for all that in every corner of the streets, they lay slaine. Only he, and a handfull more in comparison, were spared. This served him to say; yet we be not all gone: A cold comfort (God knoweth.) This for persons.

1 The comparing of theirs & ours.

1 In the persons;

Chap. 2. 2. 1.

2 In the things.

For things. The gates of Ierusalem were burnt with fire, and a great part of the City; howbeit not all. A remnant there was left, though but a poor one (God wot;) yet, enough in his sense, to say Non sumpti, all is not consumed. 1. Will ye see now them with us? With them, some few left alive, the most slaine: with us not one slain, but all still alive. 2. With them a part of the buildings left, though the farre greater part consumed: With us, neither sticke nor stone touched, nor burnt; nay, not so much as singed. All safe, all, in toto; and all in qualibet parte. 1. Upon the matter, thus it is. They were not consumed, that is, not all: We were not consumed; that, is not at all.

All.

All they were not consumed, with them : None at all, with us, 2 Some were saved there : Both all and some here ; neither Person, nor thing miscarried. 3 Jeremy could not say : It is Gods mercy we are all safe : He was faine to give it in the negative, We are not consumed. We may say it, and put it in either : both in the affirmative, All safe, and in the negative, None consumed, no, not one.

There be indeed two Non consumpti's : 1 One cometh after, after it is burnt a great while, with water to quench it. 2 The other goeth before, and keeps it from taking fire at all : and that is ours. In which case, Non consumpti is no terme diminuent. Nay, the precurrent negative is better by much. Aske the speculative Divine, if it be not so : If Ne nos inducas, be not better, than, Libera nos ; Leade us not in, than Deliver us out. Not to Sin, than to be forgiven it ; not to fall, than to be lift up again ; And (to insitt in this present) not to kindle, than, to quench. For, the latter is from Subsequetur mihi misericordia, Mercy subsequent, which is good ; the former from Cito nos anticipet misericordia tua, from the anticipation of mercy, which is farre the better of the twaine.

The difference of ours above theirs:

Psal. 23. 6.
Psal. 79. 8.

2. One great difference we see between the two Non sumus's. Another now, no whit lesse. For the greatest of all their miseries, and which touched Jeremy next, was the proud insolency of their enemies (the Chaldes) over them ; worse, than the consuming, was their insulting upon them. This, worse than all the rest. Thanks be to GOD, so did not ours. They had no cause to triumph over us : we, over them, rather. Non sumus consumpti : Non nos, at illi, Will ye observe that ? We were not : but our enemies were consumed themselves. Et viscera impiorum crudelia, the cruel bowels of those wicked men consumed ; and that with fire, and that before, and in sight of the very place, to which they had vowed destruction, and, in which the destruction of us all. That the saying of the Prophet might be taken up over them : Va qui consumis, Nonne consumeris & ipse ? You that will needs be a consuming, shall not you your selves be so served ? In the pit you digged, in the net you spread, in the element you made choise of, your own bowels burned. Behold ye Despisers, and tremble, and fear, your mischief is turned upon your owne heads, and your consumption lights upon your own bowels. This then doubles the point : that not only we were not, but that they (our consumers) were.

Prov. 12. 10.

Esay. 33. 12.
Psal. 9. 15.
Acts 13. 41.

3. Yea, I adde (for a full triplicity in this point) even that we were cured of our consumption sleeping (for so we were) and never dreamed of any danger, till we had scaped it. This also is a main difference, and increaseth our Non sumus a great deale, above theirs. For, as that, the misery of all miseries, when a man is, and yet knoweth not himself to be miserable : So (I say) that, the delivery of all deliveries, when we know not our perill, till we be past it : And that was our case, Much trouble of fear, and care, much anguish of spirit is saved by it ; which the poore Jewes, were even worne, spent, and consumed withall, and which Jeremy (GOD wot) was in, a long time. We, not a moment. But without heaviness for a night, we had joy in the morning. Sure if this be a benefit, So they cried unto the LORD, and He delivered them out of their distresse : what call ye then this, They never cryed unto the LORD ; yet He delivered them out of their distresse ? Then put these together : 1 We were not consumed at all. 2 There should have been fire : there was not so much as smoke, 3 All should have gone : not a man, that perished. 4 All should have perished, and perished utterly : not an hair of any of their heads fell to the ground. 5 We were not consumed at all ; our consumers were consumed. 6 And we without any care taken, were rid of our consumption, We were not ; our enemies were. We without consuming our selves with thought, and anxiety of mind delivered from our danger before ever we knew it. And remember withall (not, Non taliter fecit omni populo, but) Non taliter fecit populo suo : He did not deale so, not with his own people, as He did with us.

Psal. 30. 32

Psal. 107. 6.

Psal. 147.

The effect we have ; we were not : what was it, that we were not ? First, an It there was ; 1 Quia it had (that is) a cause, certainly. It was not forte fortuna, by hap hazard. No it was no casualty (this fire ;) no more was the saving us from it : neither casual ; but causal both. We will not then (with those in Esa) libare fortuna, no healths to fortune, but seek out this It, even the cause that wrought it. In Philosophy, they count him a happie man, that can find the cause : But sure in Divinity, miserable and unhapy we, if we find it not, but (with swine) feed and fill our selves with the Acorns, and never once look up to the tree, whence they came. A dangerous error, no lesse than the danger it self.

II.
The cause:
I
It was God.
Esay 65. 11.

2. Our next caution must be, to take heed of Non causa pro causa. Where let me tell you this. There is a disease under the sun (and it is one of ours) as to put all faults from our selves, to others ; so, good deeds (as neer as we can) to plucke all to our selves from others. Others (I say) not only men ; but even God Himselfe. And that two wayes : 1 If any good be done, it was our own arme, or our own heads did it : something in us : God is left out. But, if it be too evident. He had a hand in it ; then it was God, 2 but not his mercy, not of Himselfe, but something from us there was, that moved Him to do it. So, either something in us, or something from us : whereof the one is against It was God ; the other, against It was his mercy : not God, or not His mercy ; but we or somewhat of ours. Ever our manner is, never to seeke further than our selves : there we would faine find it. And there, if we can find any colour of a cause, in any wisdom or foresight of our own, it is as a mist, or cloud, to take God out of our sights, the first originall true cause, the causa causarum all such miraculous divine preservations, as this was.

And

And yet secondary causes there be (I know:) And even in this, man may seeme to have a part. It was the letter that was sent, it was the Kings divination, which I reckon the highest cause upon earth. This it was; and that it was: But, God it was (I am sure) above both. He, that did infatuate him, that sent the letter: that made them false among themselves; false to their Oath, false to their ghostly Father, false to their Maker. And God it was, that inspired that divination into His Majesty: Logick, or Grammar could not reveal it. God only could; could and did direct to that most true, but (withall) most strange interpretation. Let God then have that is His: Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed Nomini tuo da gloriam, Not unto us, Lord, not unto us, but to thy Name: be the glory of it given.

Psal. 115. 1.

It was Gods
Mercy.

God it was: but, what in God? For (we see) it is not enough to ascribe it to Him; but (for some reason) we must go yet further. God may do it, and be bound to do it, and did us wrong, if He do it not. What then in God? 1. His power may seem to claime the chiefe place in a deliverance. But power, and wisdom, and other fix (that is) all the rest of the Divine Attributes, be but Communitar ad duo (as the Schoolemen terme them) No prime causes themselves; but attendants only, and set on work by the two Master-Attributes, 1. Justice, or 2. Mercy. So that Justice it was; or Mercy it was. Mercy it was (saith Jeremy) and so may we all, in and by his mouth that straight upon it pronounced, Misericordia Domini super omnia opera Ejus. For, if it had not been that Mercy, nay if (as St. James saith) it had not been Misericordia super exaltat iudicium, Mercy had not been above all His workes, even justice and all, it had been evill with us, Mercy it was, Justice it was not. For then our own good deserts might procure it, as due to them; and so we come about again, to find the first cause in our selves, because we were this or that. All cometh to one: if it were our own fore-sight, it was not God; and if it were our own merit, it was not He neither.

Psal. 14 5
James 2. 13.

But, for this, I speale to our selves. For (I verily thinke) if we would but call to mind (and here now, I would, that every man would call to mind) in what case he was for his soule to Godward, at that very time; whether in state of fine or of grace; Sure, if we did but returne to our hearts, and there (as Salomon speaketh cognoscere quisque plagam cordis sui, every man feel how his heart beates; that heart of ours would soone tell us. Best claime not by justice: Best, even confesse (with Jeremy) It was God and Gods mercy, without more ado.

1 Reg. 8. 28.

We were in consumpti, if it were but our consuming sins: 1. If but of what then was and (may I not say) still is consumed and wasted? What huge summes in superfluity, riot, of belly and back, and worse matters! 2. Our time: if but the consuming of it, in ease and idleness, and too well-known fruits of them both. 3. Of the Service of God, that is quite consumed by most of us, now: fallen too, but a sermon, if that, and how little like a Sermon, we hear it, and lesse (I fear) after regard it! 4. Of Gods Name that runnes waste; and our Blessed SAVIOUR, that is even piecemeale consumed in our mouthes, by all manner oaths and execrations, and that without any need at all. These, with other sins, that fret like a moth, and creepe like a Canker, to the consuming of our soules, we should find: that, as it was our enemies purpose we should have been consumed; so it was our desert to have been consumed; and that, it was His mercy only, we were not consumed. This is the true cause, Gods mercy.

In which, note these two: how fitly it answereth and meets both with 1. our consuming, and 2. with us. 1. As the cruelty of man was the cause, we should have been; so (full against it) the mercy of God, the cause we were not. The true cause of our safety, Gods mercy; as of our destruction, mans cruelty.

2. Again, to provide, that being out of our consumption, we fall not into presumption, and so plucke a worse judgement upon us. The mercy of God, against our desert. Our desert it was, to have been; His mercy it was, we were not. His justice for our deserts, would have come upon us: It was His mercy turned His justice from us, upon them. His justice would have subscribed the sumus: His mercy it was that gave the Non, and stayed it; Glory be to God, and to His mercy for it.

Which mercy yields us three things to be observed: 1. The number, the nature, and 3. the property.

His mercies.
1 Their number.

Mat. 25. 9.

1. The number: that it is not miseria cordia but miseria cordia; not one, but many, even a plurality of them: A multitude of them, because a multitude of us; They many, because we many: We many, and our sinnes many more, and where sinnes are multiplied, there a multiplicity of mercies is needfull, Ne forte non sufficiant nobis & vobis, lest there be not enough for both houses, and for all three Estates in them: For so is it to be wished, there may be a representation of all His mercies, as that Assembly is the representation of all the Realme: that so there may be enough for all.

2 Their nature.

2 But then of mercy, the cause here set down; (another cause;) because his compassions faile not: How hangs this together? Thus: the word, which here is turned compassions, in very deed properly signifieth the bowels. It is to shew, that not mercies, nor a number of them at large; from any place or any kind, would serve for this work: but, a certain speciall kind of choice mercies as required; and those are they that issue from the bowels: miseria cordia viscera, or viscera misericordia (which you will.) You shall find them together in some speciall workes of God, such as, this was.

These are the choice: for, of all parts, the bowels melt, relent, yeild, yern soonest. Consequently, the mercies from them; of all other, the most tender, and (as I may say) the mercies most mercifull. The best, 1 both because they are not drie, but full of affection, and come cheerfully: (an easie matter to discern between a dry mercy, and a mercy from the bowels.) 2 And because to mercy one may be enclined, by somewhat from without : when that failes, where are we then ? But, the bowels are within him, and when we have brought the cause within Him, we are safe. Quando causam sumit de se & visceribus suis, that mercy is best, and yieldeth the best comfort.

But, in this word of the Prophets, there is yet more than bowels. עצמות were enough for them : עצמות are more ; are the bowels, or vessel near the womb, near the loynes : In a word, not viscera only, but parentum viscera, the bowels of a father, or mother, those are עצמות which adds more force a great deal. See them, in the parable, of the father toward his riotous lewd Sonne ; when he had consumed all viciously, his fatherly bowels of Compassion failed him not though. See them in the Story, in David, toward his ungracious impe Abalom, that fought his Crown, sought his life, abused his Concubines in the fight of all Israel ; yet hear the bowels of a father, Be good to the youth Abalom, hurt him not, use him well for my sake. See them, in the better harlot of the twain : Out of her motherly bowels, rather give away her child quite, renounced it rather, than see it hurt. This is mercy, here is compassion indeed : o paterna viscera miserationum ! when we have named them, a multitude of such mercies, as come from a fathers bowels, we have said as much, as we can say, or can be said.

And, mention of this word is not unfit, whether we regard them (our enemies) per quod itum est in viscera terra (in which place, GOD's bowels turned against them and toward us :) or whether we think, that His bowels had pity on our so many bowels, as should have flown about ; all the ayre over, and light some in the streets, some in the river, some beyond it, some I know not where.

Now, that which maketh up all, is the property last put ; quia non deficiunt, or (which is all one) non consumuntur, fail not, or (as ye may read it) consume not. And so, as we begun, we end with Non consumpti. There cannot be a more kindly consequence than this ; our not failing, from their not failing ; we do not, because they do not. If they did, we should : But, quia non consumpti a illa, non consumpti nos : for, they are not consumed, no more are we. And why do they not fail ? Because He Himself doth not. He is the same still, He failes not : His bowels are as he is ; so, they fail not, no more than He.

And in this [Quia non deficiunt] is all the comfort we have. For, since Jeremies time ; one would be amazed to consider, (the huge number of foule enormities, that have been committed, and yet the parties that commit them not consumed ;) where there should be mercy to serve ; for them all. One would think, by this, they should have been drawn dry. So they had, but for this וְיִשְׁמְרוּ. It can never be said, Now, there is all ; there is (now) no more left. No : an inexhaust fountain there is of them : never dry, but floweth still fresh and fresh. And look, even the next words, Jeremy tells us, they renew every morning : No morning comes, but a fresh supply of them. And even this morning, this fifth of November, we had a good proof of it. Yea, they are never perfect, the summe is never made up : There is still added every day ; and they shall not be consummate, till the consummation of the world.

And but for these bowels, that still melt ; and for these compassions, ever-flowing and never failing, they (our enemies) had not failed of their purpose. But, because these failed not, they failed ; because these consumed not, we were not consumed. They are not only plentiful, as, in the plural ; and choyce, as from the bowels, the bowels of a Father ; but perpetual : (what talk we of perpetuall ?) they are eternal. These three, their multiplicity, their speciality, their eternity, these three we hold by.

And now to our Recognition. To perform it to the full, as it deserved, that (I know) we cannot. Worthily to celebrate, and set forth His mercies therein, according to their merit, what tongue of men or Angels can do it ? But, shall we not therefore do it, as we can ? We were not consumed : shall our thankfulness fall into a Consumption ? His compassion failed us not, shall our recognition fail them ? Shall we not find our tongues as well to praise His mercies, as to pray for them ? Can we pour out petitions in time of need, and can we not drop forth a few thanks when we have what we would ? No, let this be the first : that we answer, Misericordia non consumpta, with gratia inconsumpta ; that our thanks fall not into an hecstick.

Then, that we imitate the three properties of this Vertue, that saved us, and to whom we owe our selves : no other, than those, that be expressed in the Text.

1. That we keep the number, do it plurally. Not single thanks, for plural mercies : that agrees not. Iterate them over and over, as much as we may. In the weight, we shall surely fall short ; let us make amends with the number : Do it oft, and many times ; in hope, that Sape cadendo, they shall effect that, which Vi, by any force in them, they are not able.

This for every one, to give as many as we may, make them many. Now, as many as we are many. As we should have gone all together, as we should have gone ; so, and no otherwise, let us, together, here, all acknowledge His mercies, this day, shewed us, and praise Him all of us for them : Psal. 148. 11.

Praise him King, and Queen, &c.

Yea, nor only Dicat nunc Israel, but Dicat nunc paries, praise Him walls and windoes, praise Him lime and stone, praise Him roof and foundation, Let them praise the Name of the LORD : for He said but a word, and they stood fast ; He commanded, Non, and they were not stirred. Jeremy speaks to a wall to weep (Chap. 2. 18.) we may, with as good reason, to rejoyce, and give thanks. All, that should have perished together, praise Him together. Psal. 118. 13.

2. Next : that we put him not off with certain (I know not what) hollow thanks, that have no bowels at all in them. But do it, De visceribus, De intus, fibris, from the very bowels, from the innermost veins and the smallest threads of them: with Him, Praise the Lord, O my soul, בְּרַחֲמֵי קֶרֶב, and all my bowels, all that is within me, All my bones shall say, &c. When the bones (the bones that should have been shivered in sunder) when the bowels (the bowels, that should have been scattered abroad) speak, that is the right speaking. If every one of us, to himself, would but say the very words of this verse only, as they stand: It was, &c. It was, &c. even this onward, were worth the while; if it be not for form, but feelingly spoken: Dic, Dic, sed intus dic; say it, but say it from within, let the bowels speak it; though our words fail us, they do not. And (indeed) the consumption should have been with fire; shall our recognition be frozen? no spark, no vigor igneus, no fervour at all in it? How agree these, a fiery destruction, and a frozen confession? It standeth us upon to be delivered, no less from cold thanks, than from a hot fire.

Pſalm 136. 1.
Pſalm 89. 1, 2.

2. And that we never fail to do it. No year to intermit it, no week, and (I would I might add) no day neither. Answer Misericordia Eius manet in aeternum, with Misericordias Domini cantabo in aeternum: and not mercies that never fail, with short thanks and soon done; specially, seeing, their not failing lyeth upon our not failing them.

James 1. 16:

Now, it would do well to seal up all with a Recognition real; that is, the praise of mercy, with some work of mercy. What was done upon us, this day? our preserving: A work of mercy it was. This work can no way so lively be expressed, as by a work of like nature, nothing so well (saith S. James) by warme breath, as by warme clothes. Erga consumendos, such as are in danger of it, not by fire, but by cold and nakedness.

This, as it is a most kindly way to resemble it: so (withall) it is a most effectual meanes to procure the continuance and not failing of it. Magnes est misericordia Dei erga nos, misericordia nostra in fratres; of God's mercy to us, keeping us from consuming, our mercy toward our poor brethren is the loadstone, to keep them from the like. So, under one, shall we both set it forth and procure it; procure that, we so much stand in need of, and set forth that Vertue, to which we were so much this day beholden.

Now to God; to Him, and to His mercy; the bowels of His mercy, and the fresh fountain of them: That suffered us not to be consumed, but delivered us; and that from that fire, and that universal, utter, sudden, unnatural consuming by it, the decree whereof was so certainly gone forth against us, come so near us, and we not aware of it: That suffered us not to be consumed, but gave them to be consumed in our steads: and hath this day, presented us all alive to give Him praise for it: To Him, for the multitude of His mercies, for the paterua viscera miserationum suarum, that never fail nor consume themselves, nor suffer us to fail, and be consumed: To Him I say, &c.

A SER.

A
SERMON
 Preached before the
KINGS MAIESTIE
 AT
WHITE-HALL,
 On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
 Anno Dom. MDCXIII.

PROV. Chap. VIII. Ver. XV.

Per me Reges regnant.

By Me KINGS Reign.

These words may well serve for a Sermon, for they be a piece of a Sermon. For, all the Chapter is a Sermon preached by one standing in the top of the high places; (Verse 2.) The high places, that was (then) their Church; The top of them, that was the Pulpit.

It is the common question, Who preaches? Ever, we must know that: And though the whole book be Salomons; and though he be a * Preacher upon Record; yet Major Salomone hic, a greater Preacher than Salomon is here. He was but wise; it is Wisdom it self made this Sermon. And we may be bold to preach, what Wisdom preacheth: A Sermon out of such a Sermon, cannot be amiss.

* Ecclef. 1: 1.
 Mark 12: 42.

Specially, this Wisdom; the essential Wisdom of GOD: which upon the point, will prove to be none other, but CHRIST: And so, our Text fall out to be de verbis Domini: that is, de verbis Domini secundum Salomonem; for, so there be, no lesse than secundum Matthaeum, or Ioannem.

Which, though they were uttered by Him, before He was in the flesh, what of that? they be no whit the lesse: but full out as good Gospel, as if they had been recorded by any of the four Evangelists: yea, and this we may add further: even Gospel, before any Gospel, of them all. Thus much for the Author of the speech.

The

The summe.

The speech it self seemes, as if some question there were, Per quem Reges? Or some were about to bring the Writ of Quo Warranto, to know, how they claime to be Kings; how to hold their soveraign Authority; by whose grant?

And let not this seem strange: It is no new thing, to bring this Writ in like cases.

Exod. 2. 14.
Matth. 21. 23.

One was brought against Moses; Who made thee a Ruler? Nay higher; one against our Saviour Himself: By what authority doest thou these things, and who gave thee that authority? Against Moses, against Christ? and why not then against Solomon and his fellow King;

Exod. 3. 14.
John 10. 36.

And this same Per Me (here) is an answer to all. Who made you (Moses) a Ruler?
He whose Name is I am, sent me. Who gave Christ His authority? He, that sanctified Him, and sent Him to be the Messias of the world. And here now; Kings, by whom, Per Me, by Him too. These words of His Charta Regia, This their Charta Royal: And He that gave it them, will warrant it for good, and bear them out against all the Per me's in the world. This for the Nature of the speech.

Bellar. cont.
Bicel.

A point necessary, if ever, at this time to be weighed well, and looked into; wherein this question is put up, and so vexed, that it cannot rest: Wherein they have set up an Anti-per and given him this sentence in his mouth, Ego facio, ut Rex tuus Rex ne sit. I will make your King no King, this Text Per me notwithstanding. One, to sever Reges and Regnant, that they shall reign no longer, than he sees cause to suffer them. And is it not time then, to make good their Tennants?

And that do this Text, and this day. The Text in word; the day, indeed cum effectu, really.

The Text, the words indeed (as the words of Wisdom) are but few, and the sentence short; scarce any in the Scripture so short: In our tongue, but four words, and they but four syllables. But it saith with sentences as with Coynes. In Coynes, they that in smallest compasse contain greatest value are best esteemed: And, in sentences, those that in fewest words comprise most matter, are most praised. And such is this.

Exceeding compendious, that we must needs be without all excuse (it being but four monosyllables) if we do not remember it.

And withall, of rich Contents: for, upon these four syllables, depend all Kings and King-domes of the Earth: of such force are they.

Of which four, the two latter (Reges and Regnant) be two as great matters as any be in the World. One, the Persons themselves, as they be Kings. The other, the Act of their reigning, or bearing rule over Nations. These two latter depend on the two former per me: which are but one in effect; but, He a great One. For, it is here positively set down, asserendo, that these two are by this former; By and through Him, that sayes per me. By and through Him Kings first settled in their reignes. By and through Him ever since upholden in their reignes. By and through him vouchsafed many miraculous preservations in their reignes. Thus far the Text.

Duke 1. 78.

Then, by the tender mercy of our GOD comes the day from on high, and giveth great light unto the Text: This Day, on which a very memorable memorial of a famous Per me. One, in great Capital Letters: Even of Per Me Reges: and not of per Me Reges alone, but of per Me Leges, (and that too followes, here in the verse) and of per Me Greces too: all had gone up, but for this, Per Me. This Day, this per Me soundeth in your eares, and this day this per Me was sealed in your eyes; and this question actually decided.

IV.

For the Order in treating whereof, our parts must be as our words: Look how many words, so many parts: four of either. 1 Of Me first, the Cause: 2 Then of Per, the Manner: 3 After of Per Me Reges, the Persons: 4 And last of Per me regnant, the Act.

I.
The Cause, Me

Kings & King-domes have a cause.
Psalm 57. 6.
Rom. 13. 4.

That cause is a person.
Verse 14:

Esa. 65. 11.

James 1. 17.

PER ME. It is a generall Rule, Per dicit causam: the Nature of this Preposition (Per) is to note a Cause certain. And a certain cause excludeth Chance. First, then Kings and Kingdomes have their Per: they be not forte fortuna, at hap-hazard, ex concursu atomorum.
They be no casualties: The wind blowes no man to them (saith the Psalm 57.) And Non temere (saith the Apostle:) where Non temere, as it is not in vaine, so is it also not at adventure: Causall they are; Casual they are not. A Per there is: a Cause of Kings reigning.

What is that cause? Per me: and Me is a Person; And a Person is Natura rationalis individua substantia, a single or determinate substance of a Nature indued with reason. It is not Res bruta vel muta, no dumb thing or without understanding, is cause of them. He speaks (we hear:) saith, Per me. And His very last words before these, be, I am understanding.

Against those that do Foris mensam ponere, ascribe it to the Position of the starres, to this or that Planet in the Ascendent. No; it is not de luminibus (they, be no Persons:) but de Patre lumi-num (He, is.) So a cause there is, and no impersonal cause, but Per me a Person.

What

What Person? per me regnant: that is not Per se regnant: so another person it is besides themselves; one different from them. That they reigne, is not, by or from themselves, but by or from some other besides: Regnabo (saith Adonijah) but he failed; it would not be: To teach him, it is not Per se, by their own bow or sword, nor Marte nor Arte, the reigne; And so to sacrifice to them. It is not their own place, they sit in, nor their own power, they execute: It is derived from another person; Ipse est qui fecit nos, & non ipsi nos (may they also say) He it is that made us & not we our selves. A person; And another person.

And who is that other person? Let me tell you this first: It is but one Person, not many, Per Me is the singular number. It is not Per nos: so it is not a plurality; no multitude, they hold by. That claime is gone, by Per me: one single person it is, Per quem. The other, a Philosophical conceit it came from, from those that never had heard this Wisdomes preach. In this booke, we find not any Sovereigne power, ever seated in any body collective, or derived from them. This we find, that GOD He is King; that the Kingdoms be His, and to whom he will He giveth them. That ever they came out of God's hand by any Per Me, any grant into the Peoples hand to bestow, that we find not. One Person it is.

I aske then, this one Person who He is? This I find (at the XXIV. Verse.) That whosoever He is, He was, when there were yet no Abyssi, no depths, nor no mountaines upon the Earth, nor the Earth it self: He was before all these. I find again, (at the XXVII. verse.) When the heavens were spread, a decree given to the Sea, the foundations of the Earth first laid, He was there a Worker together with God: Was at the making of all, was Himselfe Maker of all. So, neither Man nor Angell; they were not so ancient, they created nothing, they were created themselves.

Then sileat omnis caro, let all flesh keep silence, And Omnis Spiritus (too,) in this point of Per Me. Neither the spirit that said of the Kingdoms of the Earth, All these are mine: Nor he, that though he have horns like the Lambe, yet speaketh words like the Dragon. These foure syllables are a supradecus to all booke-makers for any mans Per Me, any mans claime. It is no man. And if no man, then no Pope; for he also is a man (as Saint Peter saith, he was: y And Circumdatus, compassed with infirmities, St. Paul saith, he is: Sure, he made not the Earth; himselfe is made of the earth. The Abyssus, the deep was made, per he ascended out of it: the seven hills, long before he sat on them. He is not this per Me; they hold not of him: they hold of per Me, that created heaven and earth.

And this per Me will bear no per alium besides: He that must say, Per Me Reges, must also say, per me Cælum & terra. None but He that can say the one, can say the other. Therefore none with Him in this, Per. None to step forth and rejoyce, Etiā per me, and by me too: unlesse he can say Etiā per me Cælum & terra. Per alium then hath no place here.

But might not the High-Priest claime deputation under per me? For that, there is a ruled case of it here, in him that was the setter down of this (Salomon.) Had the High-Priest, had Abiathar ever a per me for him? It is well known, his per me went with Adonijah, against Salomon: His per me, if it could, would have deposed Salomon. But so far was it from him to say per me Salomon, that contrary Salomon might say and did, per me Abiathar. Depose Salomon he could not; deposed he was himself. Non nobis Domine, non nobis, would he have said: It was per me the wrong way with him.

Well then, being neither Man nor Angell (since they made not the world:) GOD it must be of force: There is in the reasonable nature, no other person left; but He: And He it is. He, the party, that speaks: By me Kings; I am the cause, that Kings reigns. Then, Reges quod sunt, per Deum sunt: Kings, what they are, by GOD they are: ὅς τὸν ἀΐσιμα (saith Crisostom;) and a speciall dignifying of their states it is, so they are. It was (we find) wont to be the usuall style (yea, even of Popes themselves writing to Kings) to with them health in eo per quem Reges regnant, in Him by whom Kings do reigne: And that was neither Pope, nor people But GOD alone, whose proper style that is.

By God then: I aske yet further, by what Person of the God-head? so far we have warrant to go by this Text. It is Wisdomes, whose speech all this is: No created wisdomes, but the Wisdomes of God created all things, it self uncreate: that is the SONNE of GOD. For, whom Salomon here called Wisdomes, the same (in the thirtieth Chapter after) he termeth the SONNE: What is his Name (speaking of God) or What is His SONNE's Name? By Him, by that Person do they reigne: And now at the last, are we come to the right per me.

Per (the preposition) would teach us so much, if there were nothing else. Per dicit causam medianam, it designeth a middle cause. And He is the middle Person, of the great Cause, Causa causarum, A Deo (saith St. Paul;) per me (saith Salomon: from GOD the Father; by God the Sonne. We may know it, It is CHRIST's preposition, this (ever:) per Christum Domini nostri.

And by Him, most properly: for, in that He was to be Man, all the benefits which were to come from God, to man, were to come by Him. He, the Per, of all: among which, this one of Regall Regiment is a principal one.

By Him again, because He is Wisdomes (which I reckon worth a note) that the per of kingdoms, whereby they consist, is not Power so properly (the Attribute of the first) as Wisdomes (the Attribute of the second Person:) they stand rather by Wisdomes than force. Besides, Sapientis est ordinare (saith the great Philosophy) the proper work of wisdom is to order. And what is Anarchy, but a disordered Chaos of confusion? Or what is Rule, but an εὐταξία, a setting and holding of all in good order. This being wisdomes proper work, this per is most properly His.

In a word: Ut utrobique regnaret per Christum: And that all Crownes, both the Crowne of Glory in Heaven, and the Crownes of highest dignity here on earth, should be holden of Him, all, as all are. Thus by this time, we see this Per Me, who He is:

1 The Answer; Per.
I.
Not by Permission.

Now returne I to Per: There is much in the right taking of this word: What Per is it? There is a Per of Permission; as we say in the Latine, Per me licet, You may for all me; Good leave have you; I hinder you not: Or (as in English,) By Him, that is besides Him, they came, and He stopped them not. Is this the Per? Indeed some such thing is blundered at, as if G O D only permitted them, And scarce that.

b Psal. 138. 6.
c Psal. 110. 1.
d John 10. 35.
e Rom. 13. 2.

Thus comes one of them forth with the matter, and makes it the very first words of his book. The Priest, he is a Solo Deo; but the King, he is ex importunitate populi: The people importun'd God, and He yielded with much ado, egre (His own word) against His Will: And so we must interpret Per Me, that is Contra me; By me, that is, all against my minde it is that Kings Raig, but bear them or bear with them. Upon the matter this it is: They would have Kings to be, by Toleration only; And so, by that Per, are all the evils and mischiefs in the world. And, are not Kings much beholden to these men, thinke you?

But by Comission
10. 1. 3.

But this Per we reject utterly: It cannot be. For, though the Latine Per will bear this sense, the Greeke [δὲ] the Hebrew [וְ] will by no meanes; the phrase, the Idiome of the tongue will in no wise endure it. And will admit no permission; nor וְ neither. Away then with that.

How take we Per then? What need we stand long about it, having another Per, and of the same person to patern it by: Omnia per Ipsum facta sunt (saith Saint John: And the same saith Salomon by and by after in this Chapter) Then, as By Him, all things made there, so By Him, Kings Raig here. The World, and the Government of the world by the same Per both one and the same cause institutive of both. That was not by bare permission (I trust:) no more these.

Per ipsum, they; and if Per ipsum Per Verbum, quia ipse est Verbum. For, how were they (the creatures) made? a Dixit & facta sunt: By the Word, by Him. And how these (Kings?) By the same b Ego dixi. Even by the same, that He Himself c Dixit Dominus Domino Deo. As He then; they. And so doth Christ Himself interpret d Ego dixi, αὐτὸς ἐξ ἑωυτοῦ ἐξήτο. A Word came to them: And what manner was it? e Saint Paul telleth us, it was Διαταγή, an ordinance, a word of high authority; the Imperiall Decrees have no other name but Διαταγὰι. This now then, is more than a Per of permission: A Per of Comission it is; A speciall warrant, an ordinance Imperial by which Kings Raig.

I have said Te are Gods: which of the persons, that are each of them G O D? it followeth, Filii Altissimi, Sonnes of the most High: Son, that is C H R I S T's Name: He the Person then, to whom they are beholden: He, by whom, they are. And yet so from Him, as still they be in Him: both p Corona Regis (saith Esay) and q Cor Regis (saith Salomon) their persons and Estates both, in manu Domini.

And in Him, as He saith, r My Father in Me, and I in Him; so, they in Him, and He in them. For such is the nature of the Prepositions, the H O L Y G H O S T hath made choyce of, as they may be inverted and verified both wayes. For, as it is true, They reign in and by Him: so is it likewise true; He reigns, in and by them. They in G O D, and G O D in them, reciproc. He, in them, as His Deputies; they, in Him, as their Author and Authorizer. He, by their Persons: They, by His Power. And so having brought them to Him even into Him, and lodged them in Him, there let us leave them.

This

This while we have been in the two former ; 1 Per, 2 Me. Now to the two latter : 3 Per Me, Reges ; and 4 Per me, regnant.

Per me Reges. And first, I am glad we have met with this word Reges, in propriis terminis : when we meet with some other, there is such pinching at them. The Apostle speaks of Higher power : 8, it is too generall ; it may be Powers Ecclesiastick, as well as Civill : (A meere shift.) The Psalmist saith, Ego dixi dii ; that is not home neither, there is mention of Judges in the Psalmes, as well as Princes. But here is a word, will hold them ; Kings in expresse termes, totidem literis : No evasion here, no shifting it. This is home ; (I trust.)

Per me Reges. Why what great matter is that ? Per Illum omnia (saith Saint Paul, Rom. 11.) All things are by Him.

All things ; but all good things specially, (saith St James,) Why, By Him, there can nothing come, but good.

Thirdly then, speciall good things : By a speciall Per, they, And Kings are such, and for such reckoned up here, in this very Chapter. Even for one of the Principallest benefits, vouchsafed mankind by God, this By me Kings : for will ye but marke this, they have precedence, are reckoned up, here, before the creation, it self : for, that cometh after, at the XXIV. Verse. To shew, it is (as indeed it is) better for us, not to be at all ; than, not to be under Rule. Better no Creation than no Government. GOD is highly to be blessed for this Per me Reges : that He hath given prestatem salutem hominibus, Such power unto men.

Now, I weigh the word [Reges] What ? any by Him ? any in grosse qualification ? what without any regard of Religion at all ? Sure, if none but true Professours had been here meant, It must have been but Per Me Rex : for none but one, but this Salomon, was then such, of all the Kings of the Earth. But, in that it is Reges, the Holy Ghost's meaning is to take in the rest : Hiram, and Pharaoh, and Hadad ; they are in too in this Reges. For, where the Scripture distinguishes not, no more do we. Be their Religion what it will, By Him they are.

But, what if they take too much upon them (Cores exception :) Then, it is Dedi vobis Reges in ira (saith God by the Prophet :) Angry I was when I gave him, but I gave him though. Per Me iratum, it is : but, Per Me, it is still ; Per Me, though with a difference.

But, this Onus principis (say they in the Prophet) how may we be rid of it ? Is there any other Per me ; to go unto, to deprive or depose them ? Sure, where the worst is reckoned that can be of them, Glamabunt ad Dominum is all, I find. No Per to do it but He. By Him, and by none but by Him ; they be ; By Him, and by none but by Him they cease to be. In Nature, every thing is dissolved by the same meanes, it came together. In Law, Institution and Destitution, belong both to one. In Divinity ; the Prophet in one and the same Verse, saith, Dedi vobis Regem (in the forefront) and with one breath, Abstuli eum in the latter : So, both pertaine to Him ; Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit. As for this new per me ; we argue from the Text : He makes no Kings (we know) and, as he makes none, so he can unmake none. No right to one Per, more than another.

All be Kings then, by Him : yet not all alike. GOD forbid, but there should be degrees, Majus and Minus, one more than another : But we should put a difference between Melchisedek and Nimrod ; between Salomon and Saul.

We say then, All Kings by Him ; but among all, and above all, such as he that set down this, such a Salomon for he by the great Capital Per Me. Per Me iratum, those other ; Per Me propitium, He : And that is the per indeed. Thus much he doth insinuate, by adding in the latter part of the verse (which commonly is the Exegesis of the former) namely, if justa decernunt do come too. If he be a Righteous KING, as Melchisedek, King of righteousness : If he show the fruit of righteousness in peace, that is be a peaceable King, a Salomon : If he Rule per Me (that is) Sapientem, rule wisely. Those are per me propitium ; Those are Kings prima intentionis, Kings of speciall favour.

This for the Person. Now to the Act : Per Me regnant.

And I make these two, two diverse, because some are Reges, Kings, and yet reign not : as true Heirs defeated.) And some reigne, and are no Kings : (as do all Usurpers of the Throne, per fas nefasque.) Alwayes, one thing it is, to be a King ; another to reigne. Ioas was the true King, all those six years he reigned not, Arphalia reigned all those six yeares, yet true Queen was she never any. Of such, GOD saith, in Hosea ; Regnaverunt, sed non a me. Why ? for per me, Reges regnant, By Me Kings reigne ; KINGS, of lawfull and true descent, they Reign by Me : These were none such. So, they reigned ; but, without any per from Me. But, when these meet, and they that be Reges de jure, regnant de facto, then it is as it should be : And per Me it is that they so meet.

This Regnant I consider, as an Act, three wayes : 1. As it hath a beginning. 2. As it hath continuance. 3. As it hath Rediund : or obliquity incident to every act. Regnant, that they reign at all : Regnant diu, that they reign long : Regnant recte, that they reigne aright. And every one hath his per, Ianua, By, the doore, by Him they enter their reign : per, linea ; By, the line which He stretched out over every government, longer or shorter, by Him they continue their reign : per, regula ; By, the rule so reigne, as they swerve not from Him, touch Him still continue with Him, and He with them, and He will make them to continue long.

The Act
Regnant.

Hosea 8. 14.

I am led to this, because you shall see these three duely set upon every Kings head, through all the story of the Bible.

1. Such a King, was so many yeares old, when he began his reigne: there is his Inchoation, his Regnant, his door of entrance,

2. And then: So many yeares he reigned in Ierusalem, or Samaria: there is his continuation, his diu regnant, his per of Line, or continuance.

3. Then ever followes (if you mark it) either, And he did well, and walked in the steps of his Father David; there is the manner, his hene regnant, his Rule or Rectitude: Or, and he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and turned not from the wayes of Jeroboam, there is his obliquitie; out of Rule himself, and brought all out of Rule with him. This holds in all, and in all will hold, after they be once off of the stage.

I

*Regnant, Per Fausa.
The entrance.*

As it is actus inchoatus: they reigne, that is, they come to the Crown, they begin their reigns.

It is generally true, that the main frame of Government, the first raising of it, could be by none, but this Per Me. But I insist on particulars rather: Wherein, any that shall but weigh, what difficulties, what oppositions be raised, what plots and practices to keep Reges from regnant, those from it whose of right it is, shall be forced to confesse, that even by Him they have their first entrance. Take him that is next hand Salomon; and he that shall mark, Adonijah's plot, drawing the High-Priest (Abiathar) and the General of the field (Joab) into a strong faction against him; shall find, Salomon was bound to acknowledge, that Per Me he came in. Or if he will not, Adonijah himself will, he was forced to do it: That the Kingdom was turned from him, and was his brothers, for it came unto him (even Per Me) By the L O R D. This Confession of his is upon record, 1 King. 2. 15. And your Majesty was non ignara mali hujus, was not altogether free from these: It is English I speak. Possibly, from Joab you were; but, not from Abiathar; His Bulls, they were abroad: And some there were that could not enter by the door, but were climbing up another way. Yet for all these, you came to your reign, and you came by the right Per, by the door: And, this (I know;) You are one of the number of those Kings that ascribe their regnant to this Per Me. This, for Actus inchoatus: Now, they are in.

*Regnant diu,
Per line.
Their continuance.*

a 1 Reg. 16. 15.

b 2 Reg. 15. 13.

c 2 Reg. 23. 31.

d 2 Reg. 15. 8.

But when they are in, they may out again soon enough; when begun, end quickly; if Per Me, as He was the Cause procreant, so He be not also the cause Conservant, and make their reign Actus Continuatus; draw the line out along, keep and continue them for many yeares in it. Regnant, is true in the first instant. One reignes: if it be but * for a seven-night, as Zimri reigned no longer: but what is that? Or what is it to reign a Moneth, as * Shallum; or three, as * Ioabaz; or six, as * Zacharias did? Nothing: The continuance, proprie loquendo, that is, the reign; and Regnant without this Per is as good as nothing. And the Text is for this. The word in Hebrew is not Regnant in the Present, do reign; but regnabunt in the Future, shall reign, or continue reigning. And so is the Preposition [Per] for it too. For, Per addit durationem; add ever a continuance, where it is added; as is evident, by perstist, permanent, perdurabile, perseverance, perpetuity.

e Dan. 5. 26.

f Job. 12. 18.

g 1 Sal. 89. 44.

And this now questionlesse depends upon G O D alone; even their quick cutting off, or their long preserving in their reignes. He can draw the line longer or shorter: draw it out still, or snap it off. He can take them from their reign by the * band-writing on the wall, M E N E, &c. He can take it from them by * Solvit baltheum Regum, taking off their Collar, and * casting their throne down to the ground. He can call in a forraign enemy, stir up a seditious subject, let loose the sea of popularity in upon them; unlawfully to do it, but to do it though. Many such things are with Him.

Now we are at the main. For, here comes all the danger: there is such heaving and lifting at them after they be in; such thrusting by force, such undermining by fraud: So many Per me's, Per me Clement, Castell, Catesby; and they again so many Per's, Per knives, pistol, powder, all against this Per of continuance; as be the former how it will, they cannot but confesse here, that Per Me it is, that they hold out their Reignes.

Lament. 3. 22:

Psalms 30. 3:

And, here fall's in kindly, this dayes design and the visible Per Me, that happened on it; For, By Him it was, and by His mercy, that King and all were not quite consumed. That your Reign, and your life were not determined both together: Not that you went not down (with David) into the pit; but, that you went not up, up into the ayre in (I know not how many) pieces, and that now, after thus many yeares, it is Regnant with you still: And may it be Per Me Regnat (so we all pray:) and not Per Me R'gnat only, but, Per Me Regnabit, many times, many yeares more. I but put you in mind here of what I told you right now: It is In Me (in Hebrew) not Per Me; In Him, not by Him, though never so hard by Him (for, that is without Him;) but even In Him, and then they be safe.

Psalms 18. 2.

Psalms 89. 22.

And in Him You have reigned. For He hath inclosed You (as it were) and compassed You on every side. As in a fortresse, strong hold, or place of defence; so have You reigned in Him: That, as David oft calleth God, so may You; Your Rock, Your Refuge, Your sanctuary of safeguard: So that the enemy hath not been able to do you violence, nor the son of wickednesse had power to hurt You.

James 4. 6.

And yet there is more in this Regnabunt, greater grace yet. For we may extend it yet further, to a continuance, not in themselves in their persons only; but, in their posterity too. That, when it shall cease with them, and they in their graves, yet it shall be a Regnabunt still, and they reign in their race and progeny, when they have done reigning themselves. This drawes out the Per longer: for, so reign they, many ages; not their own only. Kings, in themselves; Kings in their their seed; Reges a saculo in saculum, from one generation to another. By Saul, and by David, we may plainly see; one thing it is, to bring one to be King, as Saul was: another, to establish the Kingdom in his line, as with David it was. And it is that, he magnifieth so much, 2 Sam. 7. That G O D had not only brought him thitherto (to the Crown) that was but a small thing; but that also He had spoken of His Servants House, in longinquum, for a long time; for, that is the right Regnabunt. The right Regnabunt is not that (in Dan. 2.) like an Image, which when it is broken, nothing comes of it: But the right is that (Dan. 4.) where it is like a goodly tree that hath branches come out of the stemme, which will prove Siens and be new grafted again, and so successively derive self it down to many generations. This also is, Per Me; and altogether by Him, and in his hand, who can establish succession, as to David; and who can also bid Jeremy, Write this man destitute of children, of Him there shall none come more to sit upon the Throne of Israel. Jerem. 22. 30

This for the Continuance, Diu regnant, I will but touch the third: I would not have touched it, but that it is a special meanes, for the second, of continuance. To Diu, the way is by recte; To rule long, the way, to rule right: Nay, it is the way to rule for ever: And, without Recte, the shorter the better; better for them, and better for all parts: 3 Regnant recte Per, regule. The manner.

Thus doth one Per still lead us to another: for as it is true, Per dicit causam, so is it likewise true, Per dicit regulam. By Him, as a cause; By Him as a rule, from which Rule not swerving, there is a direct promise, Deut. 17. He shall prolong his reigne, and not his alone, but even his children too, in the midst of Israel. And, by that Rule, a long line shall be drawn, for the drawing out of his reigne many yeares. Deut. 17. 20

And, this we need not seek for, any where else: it is even in the body of the word. For Rectitudo and Rectum, and Recte, Substantive, Adjective, and Adverbe, all come of Rego: so doth Regula too, it self: That they need be no strangers one to another; There is an alliance, and there ought to be a reciprocal reference, between them and Regere, and between Regere and them. Erit apud rectissimum Rex (saith Moses, Deut. 33.) He shall be as straight, as near the Rule, as may be. Deut. 33. 2

Now, that Rule is (here) Me; and Meis Wisdom, and Wisdom is the Rule which God Himself draweth His lines by; and Kings, as in other points, so in this, to be as like, and draw as near God as they may.

But then, care would be had, it be that Wisdom which is Me (indeed.) For, Achitophel's and Ieroboam's go for Wisdom, in the world; but (indeed) such wisdom (as Saint James termeth it) is earthly, sensual, and hath somewhat of the Devil in it. It is not that worldly wisdom, they be Kings by; but that which is from above, and that (I told you) is Christ. What they are, by Him they are; That they continue, by Him it is; Who is, and will be pro illis qui per illum; be for them, that be by Him; and will not see or suffer the overthrow of his own Ordinance. James 3. 15

And, may I not then commend Him (this Per Me) to them? That, since they reign, by that Wisdom (which is CHRIST) they would reign by that, and by no other Wisdom. And that reciprocatation (I touched before;) that seeing they reign by Him, He may reign by them; Regnet, per illos, qui regnant per illum; since they rule by Him, to be ruled by Him: There cannot be a more reasonable request, than this: Regnet per Reges, per quem regnant Reges.

Specially; since this Per of the Rule, will bring them to the Per of Persistence; so long as they continue with Him, and He with them: He will continue them and their reigners, and nothing shall stirre them. But, let go that, and take them to another Per Me. And I dare not promise ought: If any have miscarried, he hath first left his Per go, and then after was put out of protection: And then, the sons of perdition had power over Him, and his continuance soon came to an end.

Take this then, for the fare-well of this point. Sever not Reges from Per Me, and you shall never sever Reges from Regnant: But if they have once lost their Per Me, marvel not, if they lose their Regnant not long after.

But, this Sermon was made for the people: To them then, I turn. For, as if Princes will weigh this Per Me, they will rule the better: so if the people do the like, they will obey the sooner. This is sure: If Per Me Reges regnant, then Per Me populi parent; if from Him the Power of Sovereignty, by Him also the Duty of Allegiance; which we do bear them, even for this very Per Me; even therefore because they be of Him. Δι' Αὐτοῦ (saith Solomon, here) Per Ipsum, by Him, Δι' Αὐτὸν (saith Saint Peter) propter ipsum, for Him, for His sake. The Application to the people. 1 Pet. 2. 1, 3

Two points I would commend to you and so end: Christ it is, that here speaketh: Wisdom it is, that here speaketh. Since it is Christ here speaketh, it is against Christian Religion; since it is Wisdom here speaketh, it is folly to hold, to say, or to do the contrary.

For Christ: If Per Me Reges be from Christ: from whom is the other Per Me? Per me rebelles, Per me regicide: from whom they? If By Me Kings Reigne, be *Christ*s; By me Kings slain, whose Per is that Per? That Per cannot be the Per of any, but of *Christ*s opposite: who is that? Qua conventio Christi & Belial? What agreement hath Christ and Belial? There he is: You see whose brood they be, that go that way, Even Belial's brood. He, out of his enmity against Per Me, can neither endure Reges nor Regnant; but stirres up enemies against them both, both Reges and Regnant. Against Reges, Regicidas; to assault their persons: Against Regnant, Rebelles; to subvert their estates. a Cor. 6. 15

And, it is He that sets up this Anti-per, who takes upon him, to loose this Scripture; to sever Reges and Regnant: Nay (which is worse than this) to make Saints and Martyrs of them, Qui John 13. 35

vias dant ad delendos Reges, that set their wayes to destroy Kings, against which there is a special Caveat in the last Chapter of this Book. But (which is worst of all: for though the Rebell be evil, yet the Rebel-maker is far worse:) He that raiseth up this new sect of Rebel-makers worse than Rebels themselves: For, if they be the brood of Belial, Qui vias dant, What shall they be, qui vias docent? Shall not they be Primogeniti Satanae, Belial's first begotten? That score out the way for destroying of Kings: tell, by whom, and in what sort, it is to be proceeded, to make a very method or Agend of it.

There is a short resolution in this Text for all these: Seeing it is Christ, it must be unchristian (if not Antichristian) to make any such course: Christ's Disciples they are not; None of His (sure,) that either put their hand to practise it, or their pen, or tongue, to defend it.

And as, if this be Christ, it is unchristian; so, if this be Wisdom, then is their course, folly: And so it is, three wayes.

Acts 9. 5:

1. Folly first, to seek to sever Reges and Regnant, from Per Me: it will not be. To think, they can set themselves against Kings, and yet never have to do with God at all. But, Kings (we said) are in God: so they must go through Him, before they can come at them: they cannot deal with Kings, but they must begin with God, first. Samuel's position is sound and good: All one to fight with God, and that which is of God: for, they cannot be severed.

Acts 5. 39:

2. And, if they cannot; to fight against God, to kick against the prick, that is folly and madness (I am sure.) Ye may return them all for fools, that go about it. That think with their devices to out-reach Him, whose folly is wiser than their wisdom. Or by their practices to over-bear Him, whose weakness is stronger than their strength: He will be too hard for them, do what they can.

3. Specially (which is the third) having had so often, so certain experience, that they which have gone about it, still come by the worse. For extreme folly must it needs be, to begin that, which none that ever yet began, could bring to good end; Which, all that ever yet began, ever came themselves to an evil end: As, to an evil end have they come, all the pack of them. These four words have put them all down.

a Num. 16. 33:

b Acts 1. 25.

And (as it falls out) this day, of this folly, we have Exemplum sine Exemplo: And in the success thereof, may all the rest read their destiny. For, by the light of this day, any (that is not blind) may see, that By and through Him, Kings Reign, in that, by and through Him; they, that would have blown them up, are come to a shameful end. Blow them up, they shall not, but blow themselves down they shall; down, after Corah, the same way he went: Even to their own place, with Corah, and Judas, to the bottom of hell. That so, it may appear to all the world, since this Per Me is Wisdom; if Wisdom set them up, folly it shall be, in them that seek or set themselves to put them down; to subvert, either Reges their Persons, or Regna their States.

Luke 7. 25.

Let Wisdom then be justified of her children: And so many, as love Per Me, love and be friends and take part with both their Persons, and States. If they be Per spum, By Him: put our Per to His Per, that they may be, by us, too: We cannot err (we are sure) if we keep the same per, that Christ doth.

And (to conclude) let this be our last duty: since we know Whence they be, we know whither to go; since, By whom they be, to whom to repair, if we have any business concerning them. If we have a good Prince, whom to thank; if otherwise, whom to appeale.

But if a good (for to that case I return) never to look upon him, but to lift up our eyes withall, to this Per quem. As, to thank Him, that He hath preserved him many other times (but specially and above other, this day; him, and his, that is, him and us all; so, duly to pray to Him, that He which reigneth thus by Him (that is, by His appointment) may safe, and well, and long reign by Him, (that is, by His protection.) To thank Him, for Per Me regnant, and to be sutors to Him, for Per Me regnabit; that He would draw out this per, and make it a long per, Per multos annos. That it may ever be (as, in the Text, it is) Regnabit, still; still, in the future, Shall reign.

Shall reign out his own age himself, in person (there is one Regnabit.)

Shall reign in his Issue and off-spring: and that many ages: (there is another Regnabit.)

Shall reign, in the life of memory, and a blessed remembrance of his time and reign, and that thorow all ages: (there is a third Regnabit.)

Shall reign all these; And beyond all these, there is another yet, as the last, so the best of all; Shall reign, all these per Deum, By God; and, after all these, Shall Reign, Cum Deo, With God, in the glory, joy, and blisse of His heavenly Kingdom, and that perpetually: which Kingdom shall have none end, but be in Sacula Saculorum. To which Kingdom I, &c.

A
SERMON
 Preached before the
KINGS MAIESTIE
 AT
WHITE-HALL,
 On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
 Anno Dom. MDCXIII.

PROV. Chap. XXIV.

Fili mi, &c.

Verse 21. My Son, fear thou the Lord, and the King: and meddle not with them that are given to change.

22. For their destruction shall rise suddenly: and who knoweth the destruction of them both?

23. These things also belong to the wise.

E begin this year, where we left the last. Then By Me Kings reigne: Now, by Me, rerum novarum studiosi, seditious persons, come to ruine and destruction. For, that is the sum and substance of the Text.

Prov. 8. 15.
 The Text:
 Anno 1613.

It is a fatherly advice given by Salomon to his son: Not to meddle or make with them that are given to changes. And there was a change; such a change, as never was seen, or heard in any age, meant and medled in, this day. So the first verse interested in the Day.

The Summe of the Text.

And, this is not a bare advice, and nothing else: but, upon a penalty. And that penalty set down, by way of a Prophecie. And that Prophecie fulfilled, and that penalty extended; this day too. So, the second verse likewise. So that, this day, the first verse was justified; the wisdom of the Counsell, that it is wise and good: And, this day, the second verse was verified, the event of the Prophecie, that it is certain and sure; for destruction followed them, that followed not it.

The points in it are, as the verses are, two: 1. There is an advice, in the former; My SON, fear GOD and the King, &c. 2. with a penalty annexed, in the latter: For their destruction shall arise suddenly, &c.

I. There

I.

There is in the advice, ¹ first, a kind of commending of it. ² Then, the advice it self.

¹ The commendation stands first: For, Fili mi, I take to be a Commendation; That it is a counsel, a Father would give to his son: And, that is no evil one, we may be sure. Do but cast your eye, over the counsels in this book, that are given with a Fili mi, you shall find they be de meliore nota, special ones, all very well worth the giving.

² The advice it self followes: the main drift whereof is, A Retentive against meddling with certain persons: persons, such as this day brought forth. To fear, and to forbear. Fear God and the King: And Forbear to have to do, or deal, with any such. It consists of two counter-points: a Fac, and a Fuge. Do this; and eschew that. The Fac is Fear God, and the King. The Fuge is, Et ne commiscearis, Meddle not. Follow one, fly the other.

II.

Now, it is punishment enough for a man, not to follow good Counsel, when it is given him: Yet hath God so ordered, as there goeth (ever) some further evil, with the contempt of good Counsel. As, with the contempt of this, there goeth a penalty, no lesse than destruction and ruine: and that, a sudden destruction, and an unknown ruine: It shall surprise them on the sudden: And it shall be such withall, as Quis scit (saith Solomon) Who knowes? (that is) No man knowes, how fearful. Print well in your mindes these four: ¹ destruction, ² ruine, ³ repent, ⁴ quis scit? They be the quatuor novissima of the Text. And, for fear of these; fear to meddle with these spirits.

So Solomon sits here, as a Counsellour; and, as a Judge. A Counsellour, to advise: a Judge, to pronounce. Hear his Counsel, then: if not, hear your sentence. And choose which verie you will be in. There is no scaping them, both. In one of them we must be, all. Either in the verie of counsel: Fear God and the King, &c. Or, in the verie of penalty: For their destruction, &c.

III.

The shutting up of all, is, Hæc quoque sapientibus: (So read it the Seventy, with this verie;) And so, the Fathers all: And not, as now it standeth (with the verie following.) The meaning is: that, this is no counsel, for fooles: No man so wise, the wisest man that is, it may well become him to take it. Commonly, they that meddle, in these matters, want no wit; are wise, at least in their own conceits: therefore (say the Seventy) μήτις ἡ ἀγνοῦν τοῖς σόφοις. You, that think you are, and would be taken for wise, to you be this spoken.

I.

The Advice.

From a Father.

I will speak a few words, of the commendation. Fili mi: It is of a Father, to his Sonne. True and hearty is the counsel of a Father, to his child.

The very force of natural affection so whetting the wit, as oft, even a simple man, will give his child no simple advice, but sound and good. But, if it happen not alwayes to be of the best, it is the best he had, you may be sure. There might want braines: the good heart of a Father was not wanting.

And he wise.

To supply that want, I ask secondly, who is this Father? I find, that it is Salomon, that speaketh. One famous for his Wisdom among the sonnes of men. One, able to give good Counsel, worth the following. And yet (I know not how) they that are holden for wise, other-while give not all the best. But it is because they bend not their minds: and they bend them not, because they respect not the patries much, they give it to. But, were it Fili mi, had they to him the hearty true zeal of a Father, it would make them gather their wits together, and help it much. That is, if we could get these two to meet: the braines of a wise-man, and the bowels of a Father: if a Father were Salomon, or if Salomon were a Father: if a Father were as wise as Salomon, or Salomon could be as kind as a Father: that, were like to be good counsel indeed. For as a wise man, he well could: And, as a Father, he (sure) would give his best. So, none to that. Why, here they be both: This Father, is Salomon, The braines of Salomon, and the bowels of a Father, both in it.

Godly wise.

What lack we yet? Somewhat: Wise is not all. We find one wise, that would not have given this counsel, for he gave it not himself (as might be Achisophet.) None of his wisdom: away with it: It is devillish. No, this is Salomon; not only wise, but godly wise, with the wisdom that is from above: and that is the wisdom indeed.

James 3. 17.

Prov. 1. 7.

In signe it is so? see, his counsel begins with Fear God, the beginning of all true wisdom, when all is done. And ever the counsel right, that is so grounded. If this come to the two former, I see not what can be required more. To the commendation of it then, all three meet in it. Here is a ¹ Father; the Father is ² wise; wise, as ³ Salomon, his wisdom from the Spirit of God. There can be no more. To such a counsel (I trust) we will give care. And so, I pray you, let us.

² The Advice
it self.

The Fac:

² Fear God and the King:

God and the King in conjunction;

² Inter se.

The counsel hath in it a ¹ Fac, and a ² Fuge. The Fac, is Fear God and the KING. There is in it, a single act, and a double object. The single act ¹ Fear: The double object ² God, ² the King. We begin with them, as in nature, first, Deum & Regem.

Where, at the first, we see (and it is a good sight to see) God, and the King, in conjunction. And no marvel, if Rex, quom, and Deus, per quom do joyn. But joyn they do, and joyn they may, and yet be in two several sentences, or in two several members of one sentence. Et would couple them well enough. Joyned nearer than so, in one and the same sentence: In one, and the same member, member, of one and the same sentence. And in one member they may be too: and yet some word between them, and not immediately. Here, so immediate, so hard one to other, as nothing in the world between them, but the Van, the Et; the very soder (as I may say) that joynes them thustogether.

All this is but one: but, I observe no lesse than five conjunctions of these two great Lights; all within the compasse of this Text. 1 First, with one Et. 2 Then in one time (there is but one Time, between them both.) 3 Thirdly, as with one Et: so with one Et ne, both; that, is but one, neither. 4 Fourthly, they are but one party in opposition to them both, Shonim. 5 Fifthly, the trespassers against them both, have but one end, ruinam utriusque.

All this, this joyning, thus near, thus close, immediate thus many wayes; all this is God, God it is, that thus joynerh Himself, to the King; and the King, to Him. Not only here, by Salomon, under the Law; but even in the Gospel also, by Christ. He joynes Caesar and God too; and (in a manner) as near, with the same Et, and with but one Reddite: and puts them, and their duties, both, in one period. Here, God before Caesar: there, Caesar before God.

Now, the nature of those that be joyned by God, is set down by our Saviour, thus: Quod Deus conjunxit: Quod it is; not, quos, or qua: No more plural, then: No, but coalescunt in unum, they grow together; together into one, one singular quod. God's Conjunction is (ever) of the nature of an Union. One Et; One Et ne: One fear between them; One opposite against them.

To these, thus joyned by God, what is our duty? As we find them close joyned to our hands, so to keep them. First, Homo ne separet; not to sever them at any hand. Nay, Homo ne solvat, not to make the knot more slack or loose. Think, it was not for nought, that our Saviour Christ said of this Scripture in particular, Non pteest solvi Seriptura. Not, Non dissolvi: but, Non solvi. Dissolvi, the knot loosed quite: but solvi, not made more loose, or slack, than He left it. One is opposed to the joyning: the other, to the near joyning of them. Not to do it, our selves: and not to endure them, that are tampering about it. Not the Anabaptists, that would put out Et regem, clean. Not other (little better) that put it out and put it in, at their pleasure; a King or no King; to be feared, or to fear; fast or loose; to joyne, or to stand a loof (as it were in opposition, the whole heaven in sunder:) Timee Reges, the Accusative; or Timee Reges, the Vocative, as falls fittest to their turn. Neither to endure them, that would dissolve it clean: Nor them, that would fain slacken it, to the end, to wring or wedge in a third between Deum and Regem. No; let them stand; and stand, as they be left: unloosed, unloosened, Deum & Regem. They that fall to be changers (after) in the Text, begin their change (ever) at this; at transposing, or interposing somewhat, between Deum & Regem. Therefore, look to this well. This, for the first conjunction inter se, between themselves.

Then they are joyned again in aliquo tertio, in a third: Time. Why, in Time? Indeed, Our SAVIOUR CHRIST Qua Caesaris, is more ample a great deal: many things contained in it, besides. Of those many, this is but one: but, this is one. And this one (here) is made choice of, because it falls fittest, to the purpose in hand.

The purpose is, to restrain from meddling. Now, fear is more restrictive, than honour, or any of the rest. The Philosopher calls it phobos, the passion, that holds (as it were) the reins of our nature, to checkus, and keep us back, from that which is hurtfull; to which (other-while) we are but too inclinable. As namely, there is a spirit in us: and that spirit (saith S. James) lusts after envy: And envy is, at our Superiours, toward whom (even the supremest of them) men stand not (alwayes) in so good termes, as were fit. Nay, so far forget themselves, sometimes (witness this Day) as they fall to change; change with a witness, change them into ashes; put fire to them, and blow up King, and all. Here needs a Retentive: Fear, is fit for that. Therefore it is Fear: Fear God and the King.

Of [fear God] we shall soon agree, that he is to be feared: I would to God, we would, with as great accord, agree to do it, as we will easily agree, it is to be done: that so, it might be with us, as with holy Job it was, Ut timor noster, spes nostra, from our fear might grow our hope; the true hope, when all is done. Even that, which riseth from fear, which makes us refrain to do evil, and so bleeds in us, the hope of all hopes, the hope of a good Conscience.

But fear God is not all. Et Regem, and the King: him we must fear, too. In water and blood I saith Saint John: not in water only, but in water and blood. So here: God and the King: not God alone; but God and the King. Non sufficit unum: oportet utrumque fieri, in Copulativo.

Hence riseth the second conjunction. As before of God, and the King: so here now, of the fear of God, and the fear of the King. And even the same benigne aspect that is between God and the King, the same is there between the two fears: the very same, every way.

They be concordata compatible (as we say in Schooles:) they will stand together, go together, hold together, well. They hinder not one the other. By the grace of God, we may do both. Both, be regal and religious too. We shall not fear the King, awhile the lesse, for fearing God: Nor (vice versa) God the lesse, for fearing the KING.

Not the lesse? Nay, the more. For, they be not only concordata, but concordata: not only, a joynt and mutual consistence between them, but a joynt and mutual assistance, either of other. Not only, not hinder, but further; nor endure, but induce one the another. So that, that which is (here) Et Deum; is (elsewhere) Propter Deum. And not only with God, but for God, we fear the King.

And, though Regem stand last, be (as we say) ultimum in executione, yet is it) here, in this place primum in intentione: The sequel shews it. For, when he comes to the Et ne (mark it well) the point of opposition : He saith not, Meddle not with irreligious persons, Achiefs, such as fear not GOD (so he should, if Time Deum had been principally meant :) No, but Meddle not, with the Seditious. Now, they (we know) are most properly opposite, to the King. The fear of GOD hath elsewhere his chief place, many times and oft. But, here, Time Regem is prima intentionis, the very mark, and all this Text levels at.

Then, why is it not Time Regem and no more ado, and leave out Time Deum quite ; For, what hath GOD to do here, in matter of this kind, of Sedition ? Not so : There is reason, Time Deum should be in, and first in. In the point of Allegiance, he that will lay his ground sure, it behooveth him (as Gregory speaketh) arcessere rivum Fidelitatis, de fonte pietatis, to draw down the stream of Allegiance from the true Conduit-head of it, the fear of GOD : If, thence it come not, it is minus habens, not as it should be. For, if it be right, Time Regem is to come, out of Time Deum.

But fear God
first.

Mark this method well : to have Regal duties rightly settled, he goes up as high as GOD ; begins with Time Deum, the fear of GOD. And, thither we must, if we shall go soundly to work, It is not the Common-Law, or any Act of Parliament, that breeds Time Regem, kindly. If our fear to the King, be taught us by the law of man, it is not yet upon his true base, his right corner-stone, To Divinity we must ; to this Book, the Book of the fear of GOD : if it be right, ground it there. And, if that might take place, there should need no law else ; to sustain or preserve Kings or States.

Set this down then for a Rule : that, there is no Surer friend, no Surer stay to Kings, and their rights, than Time Deum (that is) true Religion. And set down this with it : that, it is a sure signe of a good Religion, if it will joyn with Time Regem (the duty to the Prince) well. For, if it be a true Time Deum, it strengthens Time Regem : it weakens it not.

And on the other : that it is an infallible note of a bad one ; if either it shoulder the King from GOD, or shrink up the sinewes of civil obedience.

But, if it make Time Deum, to blow up Time Regem ; make the Catholike faith, to overthrow the Catholike fear of GOD (for, both I trust be alike Catholike ;) if they persuade men, that the King, and the whole Parliament must up, or the fear of GOD cannot stand : they are out of the Text quite : they are clean beside Time Deum, as it was in Salomon's time : teach a new fear of GOD, falsely so called, without this Book altogether.

But, what is become of Time Regem, with them ? Sure, they that fear not, to blow up the King, I will never say, they fear the King : they that put men, in their Amphitheatrum Honoris : nay, in their Martyrologie, or Kalender of Martyrs, for not fearing to attempt it, it is a strange fear, they teach ; Indeed, rather Time Rex, than Time Regem.

Jude 8.

And, another sort there is, not come so far ; with whom (yet) Time Deum & Regem, as it should be : that fear (I know not how) as if the fear of the King did abate somewhat, from the fear of GOD ; and there were no true fear of GOD, without some mixture of contempt of Order and Government. But, if one can grow somewhat bold, somewhat too bold with Kings, to teach them their duties : and fear not to speak evil of such as are in authority : then (lo) he fears GOD aright. And, none of the Clergy fears GOD, but they that use it. Nor none of the Laity, but such as bear them in it. And these two are the only Fear-GOD'S in the Land. Others, that think, they may do both, and would gladly do both, may not be allowed to fear GOD on the right fashion ; They fear the face of man. And thus, with their new fear of GOD, they put out of countenance the fear of the King. As if, these fears cast out one another : and one could not be in at the former, but of necessity, he must be out at the later. What is this, but to make a disjunctive (at the least) between them ?

Jerem. 1. 7.

Rom. 13. 7.

Psaln 82. 6.

But you (beloved) never fear to do as Saint Paul wils you : Cui timorem, timorem, to give fear, to whom fear belongeth ; and, to the King it belongs, as here we see. He that said Ego dixi, Dii estis : in so saying, said, Et sicut Dii, timendi estis. Therefore, Nemo timeat timere Regem, let no man be afraid to fear the King, and yet fear GOD too. You may do both : you must do both. The Text is short, but full, in this point. For Time Deum ; that is, be a good Christian : and, Time Regem ; that is, be a good Subject. And, the better Christian, the better Subject.

But indeed, I have not done well in speaking of them all this while, as of two fears. There is but one Time, in the Text. If you strike it out from Regem, you strike it out from Deum, too. For, there is but one in all. And they consequently to be feared, not with two, but with one and the same fear, both.

This, for the conjunction : which (I wish) we may endeavour by all means to maintain. For, besides the offence to GOD and His fear, It is a preparative to the change (which here followeth) to sever GOD from the King, or the King from the Kingdome : to force them one from the other, that GOD hath so straightly united together : Hath Himself, and would have us do the like. And now, after we have done with the Fac, and the conjunction, let us come to the Fuge and the opposition.

2. The Fuge.
And meddle not,
&c.

Fear GOD then and the King, wherein ? In many other points : but (to hold us to the Text) in this namely, that you meddle not with these following. And, even by this, ye may take measure, whether you fear them or no, by your fearing to joyn with such, as this day brought forth. For, if we joyn with them, ye oppose straight to both those : not to the King alone, but to GOD ; to His fear, as well as the Kings. Indeed, to the fear of them both. For, to both, are these here set in opposition. It is not Fear the King (alone) and meddle not with them : but, GOD is in it too, as well as the King. Nor Nor, it is not, fear GOD and the King, and then over again, with two for two: and meddle not, either with irreligious, or seditions persons: but, with seditions, only. Sedition is joyntly opposed to both: and no lesse to GOD, than the King. To either, in equal opposition.

I note here, no lesse than four oppositions besides the Et ne; as before, four conjunctions besides the Et. 1. Against the King: 2. Against GOD: 3. Against both; 4. Against the fear of both. 1. The King: For, it is (this meddling) a trespass at common Law, against him, his Crown and Dignity. 2. GOD: for it is a sin also against GOD'S Law, against Heaven and Him: Not only, these on earth, Laſe Majeſtatis: to GOD'S Majeſty no lesse than the Kings. 3. Both Deum & Regem; For, it is directly against both Tables: And against the two first and great Commandments of both Tables: 4. And, Being a sinne against fear & it will prick salt toward presumption; and, that is a high sinne: If that once get the dominion over any, he shall not be innocent from the great Offence. So, against the 1. King, 2. GOD 3. Both, the 4. Fear of both. Mat. 22: 38

But, by this, clear it is, who ever they be, that meddle with these, eo ipſo they fear not GOD. Directly: for, if the Commandment be, Fear GOD, and meddle not; one cannot do both: both be a medler, and yet fear GOD, though. He cannot say (with the medlers of this day) Yes, yes: meddle with the Powder-plot, and yet be a good Catholike, and fear GOD well enough for all that. Nay, fear GOD the better; and be the better reputed of, you know where, for this very medling.

But, that in this point we may proceed to purpose. we are to see first, 1. who be these Shonim שׁוֹנִים: 2. And then, what it is to meddle with them.

The word in the original, is very pregnant, and plenteous in signification; which hath made, divers turn it diversly. The Vulgar turns it Cum detractoribus, such as detract from Princes: and well. Ours, before, was With the seditions; and, it was well so. Now, we read, With them that are given to change: And, that is well too. For, all are in it: and well may so be. For, Detractions, Changers, Seditious, all come to one. What these Changers be.

Detractors: For they that in the end prove to be seditions (mark them well) they be first detractors: Or (as the nature of the Hebrew word is) Bitters. It is, of Shen, a tooth; they that have teeth in their tongues. Ever, the first thing that moves to a sedition, is Shimei's tongue. As at first, it did (sedition;) so doth it still, begin in the gain-saying, in the contradiction of Caleb. So began he: This Moses, and this Aaron, they take too much upon them, do more than they may by Law; they would have somewhat taken from them. So Absalom: Here is no body to do any justice in the Land. So Jeroboam; LORD, what a heavy yoke is this on the peoples necks! Meddle not with these Detractors. 1 Detractions?
2 Sam. 16: 7.
Jude 11.
Num. 16: 3.
2 Sam. 15: 3.
1 King 12: 4.

Then secondly, when they have made the state present naught, no remedy, we must have a better for it; and so, a change, needs. What change? Why, Religion, or the Church-government, or somewhat (they know not well what) stands awry. Ye shall change your religion (said they of this Day) and have one for it, wherein for your comfort, you shall not understand a word (not you of the People) what you either sing, or pray: and for variety, you shall change a whole Communion for an half. Now a blessed exchange, were it not? 2 Changers?

What say some other? You shall change for a new Church-government: A Presbyterie would do much better for you, than an Hierarchie: And (perhaps) not long after, a government of States, than a Monarchy. Meddle not with these Changers.

Now thirdly, whom you find thus magnifying of changes; and projecting new plots for the People: be sure, they are in the way to sedition. For (mark it) they do sedire, that is, seorsim ire, go aside; they have their meetings apart, about their new alterations. Now, of sedire comes sedition, side-going. For, if that be not looked to in time, the next newes is, the blowing of a trumpet, and Sheba's proclamation, We have no part in David. It begins in Shimei, it ends in Sheba. But so, at last all (ye see) comes to one: Shonim all. 3 Seditious.
2 Sam. 20: 11

And now to the Medlers. But first will you observe, here are two sorts in the Text: 1. They that meddle; and 2. they, with whom they meddle. The Seditious (that is) the contriver of the treason: and the Medlers (that is) his complices. And that it is not, Be not your self seditions: but, meddle not with such as be. Be not the author, or Ring-leader: but, be no faoutour of them, have no part or fellowship in the business, Ne commiscearis, be not a mixt Traytour: For, mixt and pure, both are naught. What, the Medlers.

As for them, that are in it at the main (as they say) he doth not so much as once speak of them: Of them there is no question. Only, directs his speech to them, that are brought in on the By. Tells them, in so being, they are as deep in as the others. No accessory here: as is the Seditious, so is the Medler, Author, and Faoutour, all alike. Alike, first: For, both without the fear of GOD and all Religion, alike. Alike again: For, liable to the same penalty after, ruinam utriusque.

Well now, What is it to meddle, this Commisceari? I would note two things to you out of it: 1. The nature of the word, 2. and the extent.

The Nature, I take to be worth a note. Commiscearis, is a mixture: What manner of mixture is it? Out of the Hebrew word, it properly betokens that mixture or medly: that is, of the light with the darknesse after the Sun-set, in crepusculo, in the Owl-light (as we call it) That, is Ereb properly; (Thence cometh the Poets Erebus: ye know, what that is.) No this, in very deed, is rather a confusion, than a mixture: and might well have been turned Ne confundaris, Be not confounded: together, they and you: or (as S. Peter speaks) Run not together with them to the same confusion. So, a confused mixture it is, or a mixture to confusion. 1. The Nature of Ne commiscearis.
1 Pet. 4: 4

You shall see, it is a word well chosen. Take it of the persons, and a confused mixture it is, For even the children of light (not alwayes so wise in their generation) that is, some plain meaning men are sometimes drawn in too, by some illusion or other; to meddle and to joyne with these sons of darkness. As, some went with Abisalom to the paying of his vow in simplicity; and were in before they were aware. For being with him, they must do as he did. Just the medley of the Pharisees and John's Disciples.

2 Sam. 15. 11.

Or take it, of the Plot it self. In it also, such a mixture there is; for, they want not some glistering pretences, as it were a false light, cast on the plot. But, go to the bottom of it, and there it is, Caligo Tembrarum, the very dungeon of darkness: and, well, so, as being wrought in a dark Cellar, under ground, by the sons of Erebus, in the skirts of Erebus it self.

1 Tim. 3. 16.
Apoc. 7. 5.

3

Or, look to the carriage of it; there you shall plainly discover, a very blending of light with darkness, of the oath of GOD, with the work of the Devil: the Sacrament of godliness, with the Mysterie in the Whores forehead, of all abomination; of the loosing from lesser sinnes; with the binding to a greater. Mashing together holy duties, with lewd practises; and not mingling, but confounding Oaths, Sacraments, Absolutions, with the works of Ereb, or Erebus, of the blackness, and of the darkness of Hell it self.

2 The extent of it.

Now of the Extent: Meddle not. How many wayes may one be, or be said to be a Meddler? That may be many wayes: as many, as one may be Partaker of another mans sins. 1. By being a Champion or Leader for them; as Joah to Adonijah. 2. By being Spokesman, or Orator for them; as Jeroboam to his crue. 3. By blowing the Trumpet, animating them, setting them on; as Sheba to his. 4. By giving them shrewd advise, how to manage their matters; as did Achisophel to Abisalom. 5. By saying Mass, praying for their success: that was all Abisathar could do. 6. By bruising infamous speeches or Libels of David: that was all, that Simei. 7. By harbouring, or receiving them; as the City Abel did Shiba, and should have been sacked for it. 8. By furnishing them with money or supplies otherwise, (as it might be, contributing to the powder:) as the men of Sichem to Abimelech. 9. By that which Salomon calleth hand in hand, that is, digging with the Pickaxe, co-operating with them in the Vault. 10. By being (if not party, yet) privy to it, and not opposing: as David had been to Saul's death, if he had not hindered Abisathar: Non obstantes. 11. Or, at the least, privie, and not disclosing it; which had been Mordecai's case, if he had concealed the Eunuch's Treason: Non manifestans. 12. And last, (which I take to be full out as bad, if not much worse than any of the rest) by speaking or writing, in praise or defence, either of the deed or the doers; their case, Numb. 16. 47. calling Coreh, and his Company, the people of the LORD: for sure; if the Consenter be in, the Commander much more.

All these make up this medley. To these, or any of these, well may it be said, Ne commiscearis. Now I know, degrees there be in mixture; more or less: but here is no degree. Only, Ne commiscearis, simply. Nor, in no great quantity: but, not in the least scruple, nor at all. It is rank poison. The least drop of it is deadly. Never so little is too much.

Therefore, absolutely, ne commiscearis: Meddle not with them at all; nor with absolving them, nor giving them the oath, nor with praying for them; above all, not with offering the unbloody sacrifice, for so bloody Treason. Jacobs counsel is best: In consilium eorum ne veniat anima tua, not to come once among them: To separate your selves from the tents of Coreh, touching whom, you know, what GOD gave in charge, and what Moses proclaimed, Away from them, come not near them, touch not any thing that is theirs. It is infected: they have the plague: if you meddle with it, it will bring you to destruction.

Gen. 49. 6.

Numb. 16. 26.

II.

The Penalty.

So are we come to the second verse, to the penalty. And it is not more than needs. 1. For sure, even good counsel enters but slowly into us (we are so dull if it have not an edge given it: be not seconded with some forcible reason to help it forward. 2. Now, no reason more forcible, or of better edge to enter us, than that, which is taken from the fear of some great mischief or main inconvenience, which will surely take hold of us, if we take not hold of the counsel. 3. And as none more forcible, so none more fit for the present counsel: It is, to fear. Now, to induce fear, what way more fit, than to set before us some matter of terrour, some fearfull object or consequent, it will bring us to. And what more fearfull, than of all the five fearfull things set down by the Philosopher, the most fearfull (that is) the fear of death? This? Why it works with beasts, and even with the dullest of them, Balaam's beast; spur him, strike him, lay on him with a staffe, ye shall never get him to run upon the Angels sword, upon his own death; that shall ye never. Sure, we are to think, his first Commandment GOD headed with the best head, He had: and that was Morte morieris. He thought it the surest, and most likely to prevail. And if any thing hold us, this will. If ye fear neither GOD, nor King; yet fear this.

Numb. 22. 23.

I

Destruction:

1. But yet, if we weigh the word [destruction] there is more in it than death. To death we must all come; but this, it will bring you to an untimely end. Not fall of your self, but destroyed: but plucked down, a great while before you would fall.

2

Nay, Ruine:

2. Nay, nor it is not untimely death: either: there is more in it than so (in destruction.) All that die before their time, are not destroyed: GOD forbid. No: there goeth some evill touch, some shame, some foul uncouth end (ever) with it: that is it that makes it destruction.

3. But what manner destruction? Some may be restored and built again: This is ad ruinam (that is added in the latter part of the verse) to ruins: So that never built again, never repaired more: that is, to utter destruction.

4. And

4. And yet there is more still. For, these two, (1 Ruine, and 2 Destruction), they be not used of a person, properly; but, as the word gives, of an house or structure. Add this then, that it will be the ruine and plucking down, not of your self alone, but of your house too. And indeed how many great Houses have been ruined by it?

Then, if this will not hold you from meddling; that it is a finne, a double fin, against both Tables; that it is a fin of presumption: if this will not; let this, that it is destructory, a destroying fin; one of those sins that follows them, that meddle with it, hard at the heels, and never leaves them, till it have brought them to destruction and utter ruine: them, and their whole house, it eradicates; it pulls all up by the roots. Sin it self is a Nimium: yet is there a Nimium in sin too, O be not over wicked (saith the Precacher) be not too too foolish, so very wicked, so over foolish, as to shorten your own dayes, to make you die tempore non suo, before your time come: yea, to be destroyed utterly, you, your house and all. Sure, if this come of it, he had you not fear for nought.

Nay, this is not all; he goes further. Of all Retentives, fear; of all fears, the fear of death: death and destruction. Now of all destructions, this; (for all destructions are not of one size neither: some more fearfull than other.) But this, this is no common one: it hath two attendants, to make it more fearfull than the ordinary destructions or visitations of other men. The former two, as it were manacles for the hands; not to have a hand in it: These latter, as fetters to the feet; not to go about it. But still runs upon two: as it were, one for the King, another for God still.

This is the first: Their destruction, it shall rise suddenly. Every word hath his weight (if you mark them.) It shall rise: fitly. For, Sedition, we call it a rising: one rising, He punisheth with another. Rise, it is; not Surget, but Consurget: as early up, rise as soon, as the sin it self. From the first moment of sin, their destruction rises with it, followeth it at the heels; is still hard behind it; if they could look back, and see it, it is not an inch from them.

2. Rise, and rise suddenly. Let death come suddenly upon them at unawares (it is David's prayer;) and so shall it come (it is Salomon's Prophecy:) come, ab improviso, break forth, and surprize them in a very suddain. Fitly, this too: Their meaning was, to have dispatched all of a sudden: As soon as the paper burn, the powder go off. Quick and sudden surprizing therefore, doth best besite them: the punishment, in every point comes home to the sin.

3. Sudden things confound, and are therefore the more fearfull. Fit, this again; These would have brought all to confusion, (what a confusion had there been this day?) Meet therefore they should be amazed with the suddenness of the breaking out; and the confusion they meant, fall upon their own souls.

4. But what manner of confusion? the word he useth in Hebrew, sheweth that: It is properly the confusion they are in, that are in a thick mist or fog; that after they have been a while in it, are they know not where; and when they come out of it, find themselves where they never meant to have come.

This fits likewise: in a mist they walk; carried their matters mistily; and at last lost themselves in it: In darkness they delighted (dark vaults, dark cellers) and darkness fell upon them for it. And when they were out of their dark vault, found themselves in a dark prison; which they little thought ever to have come in.

It doth very well (this suddenness) set out to us, the course and carriage of this sin. It will flatter on, and draw him on a great while. All things will seem so subtilly contrived, so cunningly carried, so secretly kept, and so long; commonly, till the very time it should be done in: And then, even on a sudden, all breaks out: and that strangely; and all the goodly cobweb, that was so many moneths in spinning and weaving, comes me a broom, and in a minute snaps it down, and destroyes it quite; the cobweb and the spider; the plot it self, and the author and all. To have their Treason kept in, so many prorogues of the Parliament: their cellar so fitly chosen: their Powder so safely laid in, and so well couched: and all in a readines: and then, et subito, in a night, suddenly to have all come forth, so strangely, and all their long consultations, and often deliberations, quashed all, in a moment! Their destruction shall rise suddenly, this is the first.

But this is nothing to the other, Et ruinam eorum quis scit? That, that is the fearfull one indeed. For, nothing so fearfull as that, a man cannot tell what to make of it. Who knowes their ruine? Who knowes? that is, no man knowes. Good Lord! what might that ruine be, that no man knowes? No man knowes? Why, do we not all know, what it is they suffer, that come to this destruction? they are drawn, hanged, &c. we all know it. It is rather, quis nescit? than quis scit? (this) one would think.

No: Quis scit? (saith Salomon) And he knew well what he said. It is unknown, their ruine: what then shall we make of it? Sure, no destruction, here. All here, the worst is known of them. It must be some other where, in some other world than this. And so it is. And that is quis scit? indeed: That, no man knowes. For it is as truly said of the pains of Hell, as of the joyes of heaven, quis scit: Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man, what, or how great they be; the one not so joyfull, but the other as dreadful: Unknown, both: Quis scit? equally true of both. For, Nemo scit, nisi qui accepit, no man knowes them, but they that be in them.

And it were well, when they meddle first with it, they would bethink them of this. If a man might know before-hand, it were this, or it were that, or it were we know not what; then it were were not so fearfull. But Quis scit? goeth beyond all conceit. But they do, they know not what; and so they suffer, they know not what. The meaning is, they perish here, they perish everlastingly: that this destruction is eternal destruction, and no other.

And indeed, the later word sheweth as much; which is not ruine, (but properly) the ruine, or fall into a fire: it is taken from רָעָה, that is, a burning-fire-brand. This also is fit: Fire they meant, and they end in fire, even in Hell-fire. For so is the nature of the word; and so is the Hebrew proverb upon it, לֹא עֲרִיב לֵךְ: It is a ruine, from whence there is no Redemption. It is a fall or ruine, from whence no rising. A fall into the bottomless pit, into the furnace there; If they once come there, they never come thence. So it comes suddenly, but it lights heavily. They know not when it comes; but when it comes, it payes home. When the mist breaks up, they find themselves among the fire-brands there. And if nothing else will, let this move them.

And utrinque we may not leave out. It is added, to make sure work. For if it had not, it might have been imagined, that these four novissima had been to come upon them only, that fear not G O D: That there be no mistaking, in the reference to whom, it is expressly set down, utrinque Horns; it is upon both of them; one, as well as the other: as well of those, that fault in their duty toward the King; as those, that are void of the fear of G O D. And again, as well those, that meddle or make; as those, with whom they meddle or make; the plotters themselves. Both of them in the same condemnation: Both come to the same destruction. So as we find G O D and the King joyned, in one fear at the first: So here, find we again the trespassers against either, wrapped up in one destruction at the last. Ruinam one end, utrinque of them both. And, such end may ever come of such beginnings.

III.
The conclusion,
These things belong to the wise.

And thus (now) he knits up all, ταῦτα δὲ λέγων αὐτὸν τοῖς σοφοῖς, Be this spoken even to you that be wise. For, Salomons own son (indeed) was no very wise man. So, it might seem (perhaps) to be given to him (this counsel) and such as he was, none of the wisest: Fools may not meddle; Wise men may. Now (commonly) they be no fools, want no wit: they think, they bear a brain that meddle in these matters. Therefore is this addition; to shew, that how wise forever they take themselves, or be they never so wise, it may well become them, to take this advice here. Hac quoque sapientibus: it concerns them too.

2 Sam. 16. 23.

There was one, as wise, as ever they will be, whose counsel (in his time) was holden as the Oracle of G O D: Yet, this great wise man, for meddling in this, contrary to it, proved but a fool, and made up the number of those that came to this untimely, and unknown ruine and destruction. And now, where he is, we know, what he suffers, we know not. It was Achisophel, I mean.

And strange it is, that is observed of his name. For Tophel is a fool: And Achi is a Cousin germane at the least, if it be not nearer. So as wise as he was, his name was ominous, and gave him to be (as he proved) germanus stulti; a wise man: but of whom a fool might have claimed kindred: As of him, he might; and of all, he may, that meddle as he did. This Achisophel, as wise, as he takes himself, he shall be the wiser, if he take this counsel.

The Application to the Day.

Luke 4. 21.

We have done with the Text, now: The Day will hold us yet a little. For, the day subscribes probatum est to this Text, and sets a seal to it.

Thus it shall be (saith Salomon,) But was it thus? Ask the day, and it will ask you, was it not thus? was not this Scripture this day fulfilled, not in our ears, but in our eyes (indeed in both?) Was there not an execution of this sentence upon it? Did not Salomon shew himself to be, not only a wise man, but a Prophet, and that a true one.

This day was delivered, and brought forth certain sons: You have heard what the Father hath said to his sons; will you stay a little and hear, what the sons will say to their Father; take his Counsel or no. No: these sons were wiser, than their Father; saw deeper (as they thought) than Salomon; thought not him wise enough, to advise them: Not him; but got them an heap of new Fathers, that gave them other manner counsel; even to trie a conclusion with Salomon, upon this Text.

Mat. 12. 42.

Will ye hear some new Divinity, how some Fathers here with us counselled their ghostly children: the Fathers of the Society, their sons of the society, the wicked society of this day? You shall see the Text turn'd round about, clean contrary.

My sons fear God and the Pope, (so is the new Edition:) and as for those that would fain change things here, do meddle with them, say, Salomon, what he list. Ecce major Salomone, Lo a greater than Salomon (you know where.) He (as yet, it stands in the gloss to be seen) made this Book of Proverbs authentical, by citing it: and as he made it, can unmake it again at his pleasure. Nothing in it shall bind you. Here is the counsel crossed.

But then, how shall we do with the latter verse? For that, take no thought: where he tells you (this Salomon) of destruction, it is nothing so: On with your Powder-plot notwithstanding. You shall be so far from this (he tells you) that, if ought come to the plot or you, otherwise than we wish, it shall be no destruction; No, but a holy Martyrdome. And Quis scit? who knowes the blessed estate you shall come to by these means? But, Martyrs you shall be streight upon it in print: And who knowes, whether there may not be wrought a straw miracle, to confirm as much, if need be.

But

But to put you cleane out of doubt for your medling : you shall have of us the Fathers of the Societie to medle in it, as well as you ; to make up this holy medly with you. To confesse you, to absolve you, to sweare you, to honour you, to say Masse for you, and to keep your counsell in all holy equivocation. You see, what worke was made; how the matter was used with this Scripture when time was; how the Fathers of the Societie took this Father by the beard, and affronted him and his counsell, in every part of it.

What shall we say of these Sonnes, and these Fathers? Sure, their Catholike faith we will not meddle with; but, what Salomon saith we may be bold to say, and pronounce, Fear of God there was none in them : neither in the father, nor in the son. Neither in them, that gave the counsell; nor in them, that took it. None of them GODS servants : Him, they feared not: None of them, Salomons sonnes; him, they heard nor.

But, of the twaine, the fathers, that gave the counsell, farre the worse : who, what Salomon termes destruction, that turned they into edification : and what he ruine, that changed they into exaltation; and gloriam utriusque quis scit? A strange change : that, now become glorious; that, before, these dayes, was ever damned as detestable! Changers right : change States, and change Churches so long till they change Divinity and all; set up a new fear of GOD, a fearfull one to Kings and to Kingdomes; and that had like this Day, to have cost many a thousand mens lives.

And needs there not a reventive, when these coine such motives? when that, which by Father Salomon (here) is so straightly forbidden, is justified, nay is sanctified, and glorified, by these Antipaters, Anti-Salomons, Anti-greater-than-Salomon : they?

Well, look to the end. See, what became of this sanctified Sedition. Sure, here Salomon was in the right : read their destiny truly. For, surprised they were, and blacked all of the sudden; and that, strangely and carried away straight to their utter ruin : And their ruine who knoweth? Not their ruin here, or fall from the ladder; but a greater ruin, and into a deeper place : How low, into what torments, quis scit? (saith Salomon) and so say I. Their end (here) we saw : their end, who knows? Or, how they hang in hell for it? And all, for not following this advice.

To draw to an end : their ruin we know not; that is, quis scit? But, by their ruin who knows not; that is, quis nescit? For, all men see and know, how highly these medlings displease GOD, who hath so many wayes, so strangely, both of old and of late, and still doth testifie to the world plainly, His deep dislike of them : that a wonder it is, that (still) there are, that dare adventure upon them; save that, GOD, for want of His true fear in their hearts, suffers this efficacy of error, this strange delusion to beset them.

But, let them take this from Salomon that, torries quoties, so oft as they seek to build Sion in blood, so oft shall their building end in destruction : and so oft as they rise to that end, they shall rise to their ruin : fathers, and sonnes, and sonnes-sonnes, to the end of the world. Mica. 3. 103

But we (Beloved) who have better learned to fear GOD (I trust) if Salomon shall acknowledge us for his sonnes, or GOD for His servants; if we will be the children of Wisdom, let Wisdom be justified of her children. Let us do Salomon the honour, to thinke him wise enough, to give us counsell. And since we see, he is proved a Prophet, and not a word of all this Text is fallen to the ground; that strange examples there have been of it, and that, many; and this day, one Exemplum sine exemplo, an Example per se, a matchlesse one, in this kind : Having these before our eyes, and having in remembrance the four novissima in the Text, 1 Destruction, 2 ruine, 3 repente, and 4 quis scit. Let us fear those four; and fearing them; persist as we have done hitherto; in the fear of GOD and the King; and ever fear, to have to do or to deal with them, that fear neither. So I pray GOD, we may; and that this may be the fruit, even our fruit. And, His blessing upon that, hath been spoken, that we may live and die Timentes Deum & Regem, ever pure from this mixture: and so GOD make Us all. Math. 13. 98

A SER.

A
SERMON
 Preached before the
KINGS MAIESTIE
 AT
WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
 Anno Dom. MDCXV.

PSALM. CXLV. VER. IX.

Scavis DOMINUS universis : & Miserationes Ejus super omnia opera
 Ejus.

The LORD is good to all : and His mercies are over all his Works,

EN yeares it is now, since our memorable delivery, as upon this day : and we here to celebrate, not the Anniversary only, but the Decennalia of it. Now, in numbring, it is well known, that, at ten, we begin anew at the figure of one : we return again (ever) to the first. So do we now. For, this was the first ; Misericordia DOMINI super opera ejus.

We shall never forget it, so many of us as then heard it, that it was the first, that it was thought (and that, Authore magno) to be the fittest theme of all, wherewith to begin the first solemn thanksgiving of all, for the great Mercy of GOD, and for the great Work of that Mercy, this Day, shewed upon us all.

To this then the first (every way, the first) may I crave pardon, to put to my poor cypher, and make it ten, this tenth year. So, as it was the first-fruits, it may be the tenth. So, they may be, as they should be, Primitia & Decima de eodem, both out of one and the same.

It led us at the very first, whether first and last we must come ; to the true Cause of that our Delivery : of that, and of all other, we have had, or ever shall have, the Super omnia of His Mercies.

That

That deliverance when it came, it came not temere, it had a cause. That cause was G O D, and, in G O D, His Mercy, It was the Mercy of G O D we were not consumed: so said we then (out of Jeremy) at the seventh year. That mercy of His, that is super omnia: So say we now (out of David) at the tenth. For, this is King David; and, that way, not unfit neither: As, written first by a King; applied since, by a King; in the case of saving a King, and a Kingdome: Or rather, one King, but more Kingdoms than one. Lament. 3. 22.

It was then spoken, to the praise. And it is a praise; and it is out of a praise. For so, is this Psalms entitled: David's Praise. For however the prayers and the praises (all) in this Book, are, (for the most part) of David's penning: yet, two there are, he hath singled out from the rest, and set his own mark on them, as proper to himself. The LXXXVI. Psalms, his Tephila; David's own Prayer. And this here, his Tephila his own Prayse or thanksgiving. As if he had made the rest, for all in common: but reserved these peculiarly for himself.

With Exaltabo te Deus, it begins; He will exalt G O D; Every day, and for ever: so he exalts, in the two first verses. For what, will he exalt Him? For many high perfections in Him, For the greatnesse of his Nature, which is infinite, at the third; For the greatnesse of his wondrous Works (the fourth:) for His glorious Majesty the fifth:) For His mighty Power (the sixth:) For His Goodnesse, subdivided into His Justice and Mercy: For His Justice (the seventh:) And for His Mercy (the eighth.) And here now, in the ninth, in this verse, and these very words, He sets the Super omnia, the Crown and Garland (as it were) on Mercies head; gives it to the Sovereignty over all. Exaltabo Te; G O D He will exalt: and Exaltabo in Te, in G O D he will exalt His mercy, above all the rest.

Upon the matter then; all is (as we said) but a praise of Mercy. And a praise, not positive The summe, (this is not so effectually) but, by way of comparison (held ever the better.

In a comparison (ever) three points we look to: 1. With whom it is made, with the Works of G O D. 2. How large it is laid: Not with some one or more, but with them all; all comers (as they say.) 3. And, in what; In the point of Super; (in that, there is so much ado about) the point of Supremacy: whether above, whether Superior to other.

Two things of G O D there are set down: 1 His Mercies, and 2 His Works: these two compared: Compared, in the point of Super, and Mercy found to carry it. Here's the Supremacie. All His works: high all, great all, all excellent: But major horum Misericordia, the highest, greatest, most excellent of them all, Mercy; that, the Super omnia of them all. Of these then.

First of the words as they stand in order.

Then of Merci's Super, and that three wayes: 1 Super, above; (So, we read it.) 2 Super The Division over; (So the LXX. ἐν πύλῃ.) 3 Super, upon; so we pray, Fiat misericordia super nos, Let thy mercy be upon us. 1. Super, above it may be (as a Spire is) and not reflect down, and be over. I. 2. Super, over it may be, and hoover aloft; not descend, or come down upon us. 3. But, Super, II. upon, is it; when it lights upon us: that is, Fiat misericordia super nos.

And of these, 1 as well for Merci's honour, that is over them: 2 as for the good of the Workes that are under it.

Then come we to a Super in this Super, upon some of G O D's workes, more than other some: And so to our selves: And so to this day. III.

For (sure) this Scripture, if it be well looked unto, doth comptere, agree to no case, so, as it doth to ours: Nor to ours, as this day. We are His workes once, and Those Mercies of His, here said to be over all His workes, have been over and upon us. Upon us, in LXXXV. III. and many other times: but, above all other most sensibly, this day; this day of all dayes. And that with such a Super, in so high a degree, in such, so great a Mercy, so great a work of Mercy, as great as ever was any. In Saving so great a number, from so strange and unheard of a cruelty: by a Mercy, super omnia (I may say;) from a cruelty, Super omnia (I am sure.)

Then lastly, what we are in Super to G O D, for this Super. Where, 1 Of the Super upon the head of all G O D's Workes, for these His Mercies thus over them. 2 And, of all His Workes, and above them all, of the Super remaining upon our heads, for diverse besides, but for this Day and this Work, Super omnia: Above all the Dayes, we ever say: Above all the workes, He ever wrought for us. IV.

And, it is the tenth year, this; And, naturally, Decumani sunt grandiora. A Fluctus decumanus, a deep flood it was, had like to have gone over our souls: And a Misericordia Decumana, A Mercy of a large size it was, that made, it went not then. That we perform then Laudes Decumanas, great praise and large thanks: now, this Anno Decimo, some way answerable to the greatnesse of our Peril, and to the greatnesse of the Mercy, that made us so well passe it. The numbers of seven and ten are not without their weight. The Seventh, the Sabbath: The Tenth, G O D's parr. Both wayes, as the Sabbath day, as the Tenth year, sacred to G O D is this Day, and our duty upon it. Psalm 38. 4.

I.
Of the words
in order.
Misericordia.
The Mercies.

M*isericordia DOMINI. Misericordia.* To look into the nature of the word Mercy: It is best conceived, by the Object, and by the Act. Mercy hath for her Object circa quod, her matter and mettall to work upon, Misery: the best Virtus, the worst Object of all. It is not so plain (this) in our English word [Mercy] as in the Latine [Misericordia] for, there, is misery full out at length.

Upon this Object, the proper Act of Mercy, Miseratio, as the Fathers read this Text: Misericordia is the Habit; Miseratio the Act, which is nothing else but Misericordia eliquata, that which runnes from Mercy, at the melting; the Act that relieves us of misery, and all the degrees that lead to it, necessities, impotencies, defects, distresses, dangers, and whatsoever would make our case miserable, more or lesse.

To relieve these, is the Act: and (this you must take with you) without merit, to relieve them. The opposition, the Church makes, in diversie her Collets: Non nostris meritis, sed tua sola misericordia, with an expresse obstante of all merit. For, the Eye of Justice will receive all them, that deserve it. Goodnesse, in merentes, that, is Justice. Goodnesse, in immerentes, yea, and sometimes a degree farther, in male merentes: that is, Mercy properly. Nevertheless (saith the C VI Psalm) for all they deserved it (to be miserable) when he saw their misery (saw that, and nothing else to move Him) that moved him, and He heard their complaint, and gave order for their relief. This, is Mercy.

Psalms 106. 44.

Misericordia
Ejus.
Mercies in
G O D.

This, Mercy is in G O D; Misericordia Ejus. Indeed such is the immutable constancy of the Divine Nature; as we should hardly conceive it to be in this wise flexible, but that great care is taken of this point (of no one, so great;) that there is Mercy in G O D, there be Misericordia Ejus.

But what Mercy? From the nature and force of the word מֵרֶחֶם, which (I am not now to tell you, I have done it heretofore) is properly the bowels: that is, there are tender mercies in G O D (so we turn it, in the Benedictus.) Not, of the ordinary sort, slight, and such as pierce not deep, come not farre: but, such as come de profundis, from the very bowels themselves; that affect that part, make the bowels relent.

And what bowels? Not the bowels of the common man (for then מֵרֶחֶם had been the right word:) but רֶחֶם are the bowels of a parent (so, we said, the word signifies) and this adds much; adds to mercy copulw, natural love. To one strong affection, another as strong, or stronger than it.

And what Parent? the more pittifull of the twain, the Mother. For, רֶחֶם (the singular of this word) is Hebrew for the womb, So as this, to the two former, addeth the Sex; the Sex holden to be the more passionate, and compassionate of both. 1 Of all mercies, those from the bowels: 2 and of all bowels, the bowels of a parent: 3 and, of the two parents those of the mother, those from the womb: such pitty, as the mother takes of the child of her womb; such, as the womb, of the child that lay in it. Mercies are in God; such mercies are in God.

And G O D, willing to set forth unto us the exceeding great tendernes of His mercy, to have it thoroughly apprehended by us, Humanum dicit, speaks to us in our own Puerilis. And, to expresse the efficacy of his action takes to him the affection: and to expresse the affection, takes to Him the part of the body, the seat of it, the bowels: and the bowels of a parent; of that parent; whose bowels, in our nature, are the pittifullest of all, the mother. And (if you will) you may add this: that one mother hath but one womb, for all her children; but, he speaks (here) of G O D in the plural; as if He had the compassion of more wombes than one, the pity of many mothers put together.

In God, with a Super.

And that Super.
Super omnia.

It is good newes for us, these mercies are in God: but, better yet, that they are in Him; with a Super. But, best of all, that that Super, a Super, not Super quodam, but Super omnia.

Much is said in few words, to mercies praise, when this is said, Super omnia. Nihil supra were much, none above it: but Super omnia, it above all; he that saith that, leaves no more to say: there is no higher degree; Super omnia is the Superlative.

Super omnia, Above all. For, Opera ejus, His workes: these two might well be spared. All, are workes: and all are His workes. Super omnia opera ejus, that is, absolutely Super omnia. For, workes, is no term diminuent here: All His workes: that is, all, simply. Beside God and His workes: there is in the wide world, nothing at all.

But yet, with His workes, with them it is laid; and well: Not, with God's other Attributes, absolutely; but with them, in the point of workes: His Attributes are all alike: all, as Himself is; infinite, all; and one infinite is not more than another. But, take the workes (and Virtus in actione, we know) lay it there; Compare the workes of any of them, nay, of all of them, with the workes of mercy, and mercy carries it clear. More workes; more in number: (If they their thousand mercy her ten thousands:) More great, more glorious Workes, of it, than of any of them all; Nay, than of all of them: Super omnia opera, that it is. And now to our Super. And first, Super, above.

1 Sam. 18. 7.

II.
Of their Super.
I.
Super, above.

Super, above, is said (here) by way of figure. Properly, Super is of height: height is a dimension, that pertains to quantity; and quantity, to bodies: whereof Mercy is none. The meaning is, it is the chiefeft. So, heaven in the greater World; So, the Head, in the lesse: both of them the highest, est, both of them the chiefest; chiefest of all; and rule all. As (indeed) of whom is Super said so rightly, as of the Sovereigne? So doth Mercy: namely, His Power (which may serve for all) Deus (saith the Church, the ninth Sunday after Trinity) qui omnipotentiam Tuam pariendo maxime & miserando manifestas; GOD, which shewest thine Almighty power, most chiefly, in showing mercy:

But to keep us to the letter. Super, above, is either 1 reall, or 2 locall. 1. Reall, as Saul above the people, higher by the head and shoulders than any of them. 2. Locall, as Zachee; though low in stature, yet above in the top of a Sycamore tree.

Mercy is it selfe highest. We will soon end this point; by the heavens, the uppermost of all his workes. His mercy (saith the CVIII Psalm) is intra above; and that, with a super, a great way above the heavens: and, if above them, above all under them. It is it self highest.

And it hath the highest place of all, above all, the precedence before all. The highest place. The Ark was (on earth) the figure of the spirituall heaven: Over it were the Cherubims; Above, upon the top of their wings, was the Mercy-Seat: there sits mercy in the highest place of all.

As the highest place, above all: so the precedence before all. In Gods owne stile framed and proclaimed by Himselfe, Exod. XXXIV. consisting of thirteene stiles, (סדר) measures or degrees) next after the Lord God, the very first is this word, here. And take this withall; that of the thirteene, nine of them belong to Mercy: that proportion it hath, that so, it may have the super every way.

From this place it hath, over all (and by Gods appointment; it took it not, it selfe, we gather the place it hath, in Gods esteem. That, which one most sets by, he sets by himselfe: and next himselfe ever the dearest, the nearest still. GOD, by thus setting it, next to Him (none between God and it, in His stile) shewes plainly, what vertue it is, He loves above all; and what vertue He commends to us above all. To us all; but especially, to them that are above all. To be super omnia, in them that be super omnes. As the nobler the Nature, and the neerer to God, the more easie (ever) to take the impression of it. To hold you no longer in this first. It is one of Gods Titles: (Melchisedeck first gave to him) Altissimus. As He, Altissimus; so Mercy; altissima; ever: Altissima, in Altissimo, the highest Vertue in Him that is most high, which is God, above all to be blessed, and to be blessed for this above all. And this, for super, above.

But, there is more than so in it. Super is over, intra is over all. All that are above, are not over. It is not above only, as an Obelisk or May-pole; higher than all about them; but have neither shadow nor shelter; no good they doe. Mercy hath a broad top, spreading it selfe over all. It is so above all, as it is over them; too. As the vault of this Chappell is over us, and the great vault of the Firmament over that. The super of latitude and expansion no lesse than of altitude, and elevation.

And this, to the end that all may retire to it, and take covert: It, over them; and they, under it. Under it, under the shadow of it, as of *Ezra*s great rock, in the Wilderness; from the heat. Under it, under the shelter of it, as of Daniels great Tree, from the Tempest.

Over all his works, now, O Lord (saith the CIV. Psalm) how manifold are thy works! We shall never get thorow halfe of them; GOD knowes; Non est pertransire infinitum. We will contract them; thus: take the two extreames, so shall we take in all betwixt them. Over all, that is, none of them all so high; but as high as they be, they need come under it. Nor none of them all so meane, but as meane as they be, they are not left out: one way or other, within it, under it, all. So we divide His works, into His OPERA, and His opusculas and over both it is.

None so high: None on earth, not His Saints (who of all on earth, have the super, are of highest perfection) In them He found no steadfastness (Job XV.) they be Vasa misericordie all. If you will take it with Jacobs staffe, He saith, minor sum cunctis, he is under them, under them all.

Nor in earth then: No, nor in Heaven. Neither heaven it selfe, nor the brightest part of heaven, the stars; they are not cleane in His sight; they also need it. Nay, nor the Angels, the very brightest of them all: In them He found Pravitate, exaltati some what amiss even in them. So, over them too; they need it. The very Seraphim have something to cover. As for the Cherubin, they will set Mercy a seat upon the top of their wings: So glad and faine are they to have it over them. All the tongues of Saints and Angels must say this verse with us, Misericordia Domini super omnia opera ejus. Both say it, for both need it: And if both they, I would faine know, who needs it not.

Now, as none so high; none of His opera, His folio works: So none so meane; none of His opuscula, but over them too. As His art no lesse wonderfull, in making the Ant, than the Elephant: So, His care no lesse over the one, than over the other. Natura rerum minimarum non destituit Deus: The very minimas of the world, His Mercy leaves them not destitute. Nor the Wilde Asses, without a place to quench their thirst. Nor the young Ravens crying on Him. Nor the Sparrow of halfe a farthing, lets not them light on the ground without His providence. Even these, even such His mercy is over all. It is not Pallium breve; the Mantle is wide enough, it leaves none out.

None out? What say you to hell and those there? Not them? Nazianzen (that had the honour to be called the Divine, of his time) thinks it may be maintained; not them: and so do the Schoole-men all, in asmuch as even there, Mercy moderates, too. That it is not, with them there, as it might and should be, but tolerabilius, easier, than they to deserve by much. None, no, nor in that place, though beaten with many stripes; not yet with so many as the quality of his offence, in rigour of justice would require. This is sure, Deus promittit ultionem: God (ever) rewards beyond but punishes on this side; short still, of that we deserve: that His very punishment is tempered with mercy, that even in His wrath, He remembereth mercy.

But we will not stand upon this; we need not; we shall find another Super for these, anon. For many are the Super's of mercy. Not in any one (possibly;) but in one sense or other, over all. Then if it go by quo communius eo melius) None so good; for none so common (I am sure.)

The reason is Ejus, referred to Mercy.
Mercy the maker of them all.
Psal. 116. 5, 6,
7, &c

And reason, why Mercy should spread the wing of her mantle thus, over all. All are Opera ejus: Opera ejus: Ejus may be referred indifferently: to Mercy, as well as to God. Mercy hath the name from Uter the womb. For, she was the womb, (indeed) in which, all were conceived at first, and she delivered of them all. Plaine, by the CXXXVI. Psalm; Who by His excellent Wisdome made the heavens, Who layd out the earth above the waters, who made great lights, &c. And the cause of every one, at the end of every one, and of twenty more, For, His mercy endureth for ever. That, set all on work: His wisdome, to contrive, His power to execute; appointed all, did all.

It was Mercy, and nothing but mercy, set the Creation in hand. For, it is well known, in non ente, there could be no moving cause at all. Nothing we were; We, and all His workes: In nothing, there can be nothing to induce, why it should be brought out of the state of being nothing. So that, His mercy it was, that removed that universall defect, of non entitie at the first.

Mercy the preserver of all.
Exod. 19. 4.
Mat. 13. 37.

And having then made them, it is kindly, that Viscera misericordie should be over those Opera that came de visceribus; whom it brought from nothing, to be over them, and not see them cast away, and brought to nothing againe. The Eagle (saith Moses) the poor Hen (saith our Saviour) will do it for their young ones: stretch their wings over them to preserve them, what they can.

The reason.
1 In Ejus, his possession, 1. sal.
119. 94.
2 In opera, his handywork.
Psal. 137, 8

So that these very two words [Opera ejus] containe in them a reason, why mercy should do no lesse. A reason? Nay two. 1 One, for that they be Ejus his, I am thine, & save me; a good reason: His they be, a part of His possession. That alone, is enough with us, to preserve that is ours; only because it is ours; though we never made it. 2 But Besides that they be His, they be His handywork. Another good inducement, Despise not, O Lord, the works of thine own hands. We see, then, why over all; quia ejus, quia opera; because His all; because His workes, all. And it is well for us, the reason is so large. For, what ever we be or do, or what ever become of us, His we are, and His workes we are still. So, still His mercy is over us, and we under it.

Super omnia.
1 For mercies
praise.

It made me say at first, This Super, as it is highly to the praise of Mercy, that it is over His workes: So it is every way, as highly to the good of all his workes, which are under mercy. The vanity, Salomon saw (One ses over others for their hurt) hath no place, here. That Mercy is over all, is for the generall good of all, and that is ever a blessed Super. We shall not need to fear any heart-burning, any emulation, for this Super: or to aske what the workes say to it? they all say Amen Halleluja: glad are they, that mercy is in that place; they would have none other, if they might. It followeth next, Confiteamur tibi opera; His workes are ready all to confesse, to acknowledge this Super remacie without any scruple; to take the oath to it.

2 For the good of His workes,
Eccl. 8. 9.
Verse 18

For Super (over) there is no doubt, that it is as the Cherubims wings stretched forth from one side of the Temple to the other; Over all, for all to flie under and finde succour there. Tutissimum est (say they, that can say least by it:) when all is done, nothingw he reto we may so safely commit our selves. And, therefore Super omnia, that Super omnia we might trust in it. But I say, that, even Super (above) it is not, as a bare pole upright; there is a brazen Serpent upon the top of it, for us to look up to and receive comfort by. I will touch two or three: for thus we deduce. First if it be above all his workes, it followes, then above every one of them: And, One will serve the turne. Of all the workes of God there is no work we are afraid of, but one; that is, His judgment, the work of his justice. Above that, it is: for, above all it is. And, that is to our comfort greatly. For which (besides this generall above all, and therefore above it) we owe to Saint James; that we have expressed in particular, even in termes terminant, Misericordia Super-exaltat iudicium, Mercy is exalted (more than exalted, Super-exalted) above judgement, nominatim. That work of His, we most stand in awe of, over that work by name, Mercy Triumpheth. And, in the very Decalogue, there may you see the Super of a thousand to four, in Mercy over justice. Even there, even in the rolle of His Iustice (the Law;) there would God have it extant upon record, that Mercy is above it.

James 2. 13.
Exod. 30. 6.

Heb. 4. 16.

And if mercy be above it, thither (to mercy) we may remove our cause, as to the Higher Court. There lieth an Appeale thither. A Solio Iustitie ad Thronum Gratie, from the Bench of Iustice, to the Throne of Grace and Mercy. There, we may be relieved. Now, if it be above that Opus, that work of God, for Gods workes we seek no more.

2 Above all our works, our sin-full works.
Gen. 4. 13.

A second we deduce thus, If it be above all his workes, shall it not much more be above all ours? What are we to Him; ours to His? No, no work of ours, then, or to be done by us, but the mercy of God is above it; no sinfull work (I mean) that we erre not Cains error, His sin was above Gods mercy: No; Mercy above it. Grande est barathrum peccatorum meorum (it is Chrysostome) sed major est Abyssus misericordie Dei: Great is the whirlspoele of my wicked workes, but greater is the Bethesda, the wide and deepe fulse of the mercy of God that hath no bottome. And indeed, it were not, truly said, It is above all His workes, (all His, and much more then, above all ours) if any of all our workes were above it: No more then, There is a Lambe, that taketh away the sins of the world, if there were any sin in the world. He takes not away. And this is the Super indeed, that would be looked into by us, by reason of another Super. Iniquitates nostrae supergressa sunt capita nostra, Our sins are gone up, above our heads, over head and eares, in sin. And another Super yet, above them; Even the phials of Gods wrath hanging over our heads, ready to be poured on us and them, were it not, that mercie is above them, and staies them: Were it not that, Over whom misery, over them mercy: Else were we in danger to be overwhelmed with them every houre. We see then: the comparifon was well said in Super. Our sins over us; judgments over them; but mercy over all, Super Omnia. Always, where there is Super, there is

John. 1. 29.

Psal. 38. 4

Apoc. 16. 1:

Satis, Satis superque shewes, super is more than Satis, Enough then there is, and to spare, for them all.

One more: not only above all ours; but if it be above all his works, then is it above all the works of them that be His works: and so (not to hold you) above the Devil and all his works. For he also, is one of them: Of Gods making, as an Angell; of His own marring, as a devill: Above his works (I say) and above the works, and practices of his limmes, and all they can do or devise against them, over whom His mercy is. The Son of God (saith Saint John) in mercy therefore appeared; Ne solveret opera Diaboli, that He might loose, undo, quite dissolve the works of the Devil. No worke shall he contrive, never so deep underground, never so neer the borders of his own region, but Gods mercy will bring it to light; it, and the workers of it. His mercy will have a Super, for their Subter: There shall be more in Mercy, to save; than in Satan, to destroy: More, dicat nunc Israel; more, may this Realm now say. A notorious Work of His, as ever any; Nay, Super omnia; as never was any, this day by His mercy brought to light, and dissolved, quite dissolved. We heard it not with our eares, our fathers told it us not; our eyes beheld this Super.

3 Above the works of all His works.

1 Ioh. 3. 8.

Psalm. 2. 4. 1.

Psalm. 44. 1.

So we are come, to our own case, yer we were aware, That is Super, upon. Over all it is; yet, not over all alike: at least wise, not upon all alike; upon some, more than over other some. Equaliter est illi cura de omnibus, but, not equalis; Equally, a care of all, but, not an equall care; though. No, His mercy over all in generall, is no barre, but upon some there may be a speciall Super; and so, some have a Super in this Super too.

3. Super upon, 1 Upon some, more than others of His works.

For, if the reason, why mercy is over all his works be, because they be His works: then, the more they be His works, the more workmanship He bestowes upon them, the more is His mercy over them. Whereby it falls out, that as there is an inequality of His works, and one work above another; so is there a diverse gradation of His mercy, and one mercy above another; or rather one and the same mercy, as the same Planet in Auge, in the top of His Epicycle, higher than it self, at other times.

To shew this, we divide His works, (as we have warrant) into His works of Fiat (as the rest of His creatures;) and the Work of Faciamus, as Man, the master-piece of His works; upon whom He did more cost, shewed more workmanship, than on the rest: the very word [Faciamus] sets above all. 1. Gods opus: that He did deliberate enter in consultation, as it were; about his making, and about none else. 2. Gods utroque: that Himself framed his body of the mould, as the potter the clay. 3. Then, that He breathed into him a two-lived soule, which made the Psalmist break out, Domine quid est homo, &c. Lord, what is man, that he should so regard Him, as to passe by the heavens and all the glorious bodies there, and passing by them, breath an immortall soule, put thine own image, upon a piece of clay? 4. But last, Gods setting him Super omnia opera manuum suarum, Over all the works of His hands. His making him (as I may say) Crown Palace of the world; this shewes plainly, His setting by Man more than all of them. As he then is over them; so, Gods mercy over him. Over all His works; but, of all His works, over this work. Over His cheife work, cheifly: in a higher degree. And nor without great cause. Man is capable of eternall ether felicity or misery; so are not the rest: He sins; so do not they. So, his case requires a Super in this Super, requires mercy more than all theirs.

1 Upon Man more than other creatures. Gen. 1. 26.

Gen. 2. 7.

Psalm. 8. 4.

Psalm. 81. 6.

Upon men then, cheifly. They, the first Super in this Super. But, of men (though it be true in generall, He hath shut up all under sin, that He might have mercy upon all, yet) even among them at Super too, a second. Another workmanship He hath yet, His workmanship in Christ Jesus: the Apostle calls it (Ephes. 2. 10.) His new creature (Gal. 6. 15.) which his mercy is more directly upon, than upon the rest of mankind; Servator omnium hominum; the Saviour of all men (saith the Apostle); maritus autem, most of all, of the faithfull Christian men. Of all men, above all men, upon them: They are His work wrought on both sides; Creation on one side, Redemption on the other. For (now) we are at the work of Redemption.

Rom. 11. 32.

1 Tim. 5. 16.

And here now is My right, in kind, רחם רחם Rahame Rahama; the mercy of the bird of mercy, that is the Pellicans mercy (for, רחם is the pellican, which hath her name of mercy, as the truly mercifull bird.) For, here (now) is not the womb to hatch them, nor the wings to cloake them, but the Pellicans bill of mercy, striking it self to the heart, drawing blood thence, even the very heart-blood, to revive her young ones, when they were dead in sin, and to make them live a new the life of grace. This is Misericordia super omnes misericordias: Shall I say it? (I may truly.) Mercy, in all else, above his works: but, in this, above Himselfe. For, when he brought Him down from Heaven to Earth, to such a birth in the manger, such a life in contradiction of sinners, such a death on the Cross, it might truly be said then, Misericordia etiam triumphat de Deo: You shall mark therefore, at the very next words, when he comes to his thanks, it is Confiteatur Tibi opera Deum; but Saint Iohn hence icant Tibi; Thy works; let them say Confiteor; Thy redeemed; Thy Saints; let them sing Benedictur. Thy works; let them tell truth and confesse; But Thy Saints, let them speak all good and blesse Thee; highly blesse Thee, for this thy high mercy of all other upon them, as of all other, they have most cause to do.

Luk. 2. 31.

Heb. 12. 3.

Phil. 2. 8.

Verse 10.

To elevate it one degree, one Super, more. For (I know not how, but you shall observe, that) even among the faithfull, even among them, God singles out some one People still, from the rest, that He makes of above the rest, and vouchsafes His speciall favour upon more than the rest, though Christian men, as well as they; and no reason in the world to be given of it, but the Super of His mercy. It was ever so: Some Nation, of whom it might be said, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi; He hath not dealt so with every Nation: Nay, Nam omni is, nulli. He hath not dealt so with any Nation.

Psalm. 147. 10.

Some of whom it might be said, Of all the people in the Earth, I have chosen you, to come nearest to you, to vouchsafe you my chiefest, my choicest mercies, Super omnes. Not in matters only pertaining to the soul, in which all Christians are interested alike; but even in the things pertaining to the course of this life, secular (as we call them) and temporal: In them, too. And, in both, is better than one alone. In saving that way with the salvation, the King rejoiceth in (21 Psalm.) saving them, from plots and practices, even against their worldly prosperity; from Achitophels plots, from Abshaloms Vow, and such like.

III.
Our Super in this Super.

And now to our Super. For, may not we (think you) reckon our selves in all, in this last, above all. His works first: so are all His creatures. His chief workmanship: so are other men. His workmanship in Christ: so are other Christians. But above all; these, His non taliter. For, if we be not very dignified, without any perspective-glass, we may see such mercies and favours of His, Super upon our selves, as (sure) the Nations round about us have not seen: and I think I may say, nor any Nation on the Earth seen the like.

Luke 11: 78;

Many ways might this be made appear, and many dayes brought to give us light to it: But, let all else passe in silence: this Day, this fifth of November, is instar omnium. Nay, is super omnes, before, beyond, above them all: to elevate to us, this point, of the tender mercies of our God, whereby this day spring from on high did visit us. This Day (I say) enough and enough, to bring from all our mouths, that it brought from His Majesties, and that with admiration, Misericordia Dei super omnia opera eius! And the Confiteantur, and the Benedicant of right belonging to it.

1
Ne inducas.

We, right now, divided His works: we will now divide His mercies. That do we, according to their Object, which is misery: And that is double. For, either it is already upon us, and we in it: Or but over us, yet so over us, as we are within the shadow of death, at the very pits-brink (as they said) and even now ready to be tumbled in. To quit us of these two, there is a double mercy (they follow at the 14. verse.) 1 Erigit lapsos, 2 Sustinet labentes; Lifts up them that be down, and staves them that be going down. There is a Super in these two. One of them, the better (which our Pater-noster will teach us:) Ne inducas first, and then Libera. Better, lead us not in, than deliver us out. If we are in, deliver us: but, better never come in at all. Jonas was delivered: So was Ninive: Ninive's was better (they came not in;) than Jonas his: he was in, but got out. That of Libera, God send us too, if ever we shall need it: and send it all them, that at this present, do. But yet give me the mercy of Ne inducas, let it not light, let it passe over; the Passe-over, that, is the memorable Deliverer: that, the high Feast.

And, that was the Super, upon us. And it behoved so to be. We were not in: It came not to that; thank Mercy for it. If it had, it had been past with us, past Libera: that other mercy could have done us no good. If it had not been prevenisti, postvenisti had come too late. For, if in, never out more. This, our first Super.

The mercy of Libera, from a cruelty close to us.

But, being not in, was ere as near it, as near might be, and scape it. Over, it was; nay, it was rather under us; then: but all is one, Superior Subter: either will serve; here: that Subter would have ended in a Super, sent us up high enough (I wot well;) therefore we will keep the word of the Text [Super] let it go.

First, when it was contrived, Over us it was: then, when it was set in hand, Over us yet more: but when it came to passata (sunt omnia; all ready for the march, and the march for it (for, so near it came) then, it was over us (I trow) hard over us: and, then to scape it, when it was even in a manner ready to seize on us, that, is another Super: for, then to escape it, that, doth us the more good, ever; and that is ever praised, for the Superiour deliverance. The second Super.

And close,
from us.
Apoc. 3. 17.

Specially, if you add the third: that when it was so near us, and we to it, it was not so close by us, as close from us; we knew it not. And none so miserable as they that are so, and know not they are so. Nay, think it clean otherwise. The Laodicean misery, that (we say) is of all other the most wofull: Tu dicis quod; Thou sayst, thou art this, and thou art that; safe, and sure, and happy: and behold, thou art none of all these: but, even then when thou sayest it, miserable, and even in the jaws of death. That is the misery, that comes as the thrones of a woman in travail: as the flood, upon the old world; as the fire, upon the five Cities.

Jer. 6. 24.
Mark 24. 37.
Luke 17. 26,
28.

And, that was our case right: they, in the dayes of Noe; they, in the dayes of Lor, never reckoned less, of the flood, or the fire, over them: than we, of the powder, under us. And I blame us not. Who would not have thought himself safe in that place? who, that he might not have trodden on that threshold, that floor, without danger? If safe at all, if any where, there. It is the Asylum, the surest place (one would think) in all the Land. Ep'is propter idcirco est asylum et refugium. Where our greatest trust, there our danger most deadly; and that is (ever) the Super of all miseries.

Psalms 124. 3.

Being then so over us, or under us; under us, and near us, near us, and we not aware of it: so near, that they made full account (I say not (as the Psalm) to have swallowed us up quick, but) to have blown us up quick, and in a moment sent us up, shivered all to pieces; it was a third, and a principal super. (this) more than ordinary, that made us super-sse, to remain still alive, after so great, so present, so secret danger.

4
The super omnia of this cruelty.

And yet another super more, against this last; which will serve, as black work (I mean, their cruelty) to make this white work of Gods mercy shew the better to us. It is a Super omnia, too. As our deliverance, a work of Mercy super omnia; so, our intended destruction, a work of cruelty super omnia.

Super

Super omnia, above all examples (to begin with.) For, the like never seen, nor heard of. Nay, not to be raked out of any story, in any Age, of any Countrey, civil or savage, of the like. And Super omnes, over all it would have gone, not spared any, no degree, high or low; no estate, Nobles or Commons; no calling, sacred or civil; no sex, King or Queen; no age, King or Prince; no Religion, their own, or others. This is but super omnes: Nay, super omnia, it was too: Super, up with lime, and stone, and timber, iron, glasse and lead: up with floor, windowes and walls, roof and all. Yet another super omnia: all bands of birth, countrey, allegiance, nature, blood, humanity and Christianity; tread upon them, trample upon them all, tear them all in pieces. Never such a super omnia, in all senses. So (indeed) a cruelty for the Devil himself: To make the opposition perfect, of God's Mercy, and Satan's Cruelty. Of whom (to give each their due) it may be said, and no lesse truly said, Crudelitates ejus super omnia opera ejus, his Cruelties are above all his works: than of God, that His Mercies are above all His.

Super omnia opera ejus, it is; and contra omnia opera DEI: Above all his own, and against all God's works. The enemy of God he is, and so of all God's works; and of those His works most, that God most sets by (that is) mankind; And of that part of mankind most, God hath done most for; and so may be thought, most to favour (that is, Christen men;) And then of them, if there be a Non taliter in His mercy, a Non taliter too, in his malice, straight. If a super omnes with God, a Super omnes with him, in sensu contrario.

To any creature (only because it is a creature) is he cruel: he will into the Hogstie, to shew it rather than not to shew it at all. Math. 5. 13

But, to man, to one man, rather than to a whole heard of Swine.

And among men, his malice is most at Christen men: they are nearer to the Kingdom of God. To keep them from that, Himself hath irrecoverably lost (that is) Heaven; and to plunge them into eternal misery, whereinto himself is fallen, without all redemption.

And among Christen men, to the best sort; to publike persons, rather than to private mean men.

But, if he could get a whole Parliament together: A King, his Nobles, his Commons; that is, a King, Kingdom and all; and up with them all at once, all together: there were none to that: that (to) he would over sea and land to compass. For, that were indeed, with him, a super omnia: He never had done the like.

Of this their Father, were those ungodly men of this Day. Ungodly (I say:) For Salomon sets us this signe, to know ungodly men by; Viscera impiorum crudelia, if the bowels be cruel, then ungodly, certainly. No piety, no piety, with him. And we find, that mercy is a plant of our nature: So incident to the nature of man, as they are holden inhumane, that are without it. No piety, no humanity. Why then, Satanistic, it must be, if God and man disclaim it: : Even of him, cujus crudelitas super omnia opera ejus. Prov. 12. 10

Now God cannot abide cruelty at any hand. By what He placeth highest, may we know, what He loves best (mercy;) and by that, may we know, what He can worst away with (cruelty.) Nay, if once he take his fellow by the throat, deal cruelly with him: never hear him more. No cruelty can He endure, at all: specially, no such cruel cruelty, as this that passed all. Math. 18. 23

And in this case of ours, I make no doubt, God was moved both wayes.

One way, by Mercy: for us, that our bones might not be scattered, in every corner; as when one heareth wood, chips flye about. And again; for them, we should have left behind, that Videns JE-SU S turbas, misertus est eis, He looked upon them too, and saw, they should have been ισχυριστοι and επιμυητοι, scattered all; and hurried up and down, like a sort of poor matterlesse sheep: His mercy wrought with Him, in both these respects. Psalms 141. 7.

But on the other side, their Cruelty moved Him also. And (I am perswaded) God, looking upon those mercilesse bowel'd men, when in their hearts they hatched that monster of cruelty, even at the sight of that barbarous resolution (yea more than barbarous) His heart even turned against them, His very soul abhorred that devilish intention of theirs. They had thought to have had the Day; but, to the high praise of His mercy, and to the confusion of Satan and all his cruelty, He gave order, Mercy should have the day: and she had it, that there might be a mercy, super omnia, above this Cruelty super omnia: as there was. Their counsel brought to light; brought to nought; brought upon their own heads: and both counsel and counsellours brought to a shamefull end. Math. 9. 36.

Nay, would they make mens bowels fly up and down the ayr? Out with those bowels; what should they do in, that have not in them that, that bowels should have. Would they do it by fire? Into the fire with their bowels, before their faces? Would they make mens bones flye about like chips? Hew their bones in sunder. Just is David's prayer: Their delight was in cruelty, let it happen to them: They loved not mercy, therefore let it be far from them. Psalms 109: 17

But, how now? We are gone now from mercy quite. No no: there is mercy even in this severity. In the Psalms of Mercy (CXXXVI.) Slaying is made a work of mercy; Slew the first-born of Egypt: cruel Pharaoh, cruel Og, For his mercy endureth for ever: Mercy, in ridding the world of such. For, they are not worthy to be inter opera DEI, among God's works, that renounce that Virtue: that is, super opera DEI, over all God's works. Psalms 136. 10

And so now ye see that Super, I told you, we should come to at last; Over hell, and them there. The Super Superantis, the Over of an Overcommer; of Mercy a Conquerer. Above His other works, with the Super of a Sovereign, to protect them: Upon the devil and devilish men in their works, with Super Aspidem & Basiliscum, to tread upon them, to make His enemies His foot-stool, and so a Super, Over them too. Verse 10.
Psalm 63. 1.

From us.

And now, we have set Mercy in her Chariot of triumph; In which, if ever she sat, she sat in the Super omnia of this Day. Let us now come to the last Super, the Super of remaining upon the head of all Gods works; for His mercy over them all; but, among them all, and above them all, upon our heads (if it were but for the Sovereign Mercy of this Day) what we were in Super to God, for it.

The Super upon all Gods works followes, in the words next ensuing, Confiteantur. Are His mercies over all his works? Why then, O all ye works of the Lord, all flesh, every thing that hath breath; but chiefly His chief work, the sons of men, the nations and the kindred of the earth; come all to confession: all ow this (to confesse) at least. Confesse? what? Nothing but mercy, and the Super of the Mercy. Nothing, but that it is, as it is: do but as God doth, exalt it, place it, where He sits it. Let the deeps say, it is over me; and the dry land say, it is over me; and so of the rest, every one: to many works, so many confessions.

There is a farther Super, upon His Saints: they, owe more to Him than His ordinary works. His works but to confesse: His Saints, to confesse and blesse, both. They are double works, needle-work on both sides: more becomes them. Te decet hymnus in Sion: Both, to confesse, it is above all; and to blesse and praise it, above all. For, if it be above all, it followes, more praise is to come to Him for it, than for all, If Mercy, above all; the praise of His Mercy, above the praises of all.

There is a further Super yet, upon us that have found and felt the Super of it: the Non taliter (say I) above works and Saints both. All are bound: but we that are here super omnes; more than all, we. We that should have been Martyrs of Satans cruelty, it stands us in hand to be Confessors of GOD'S Mercy, as, to which we owe even our selves; our selves, and our safety; safety, of souls, and bodies, every one of us.

Then, let the King, Queen, and Prince; let all the three Estates; let the whole Land delivered by it, from a Chaos of confusion; let our souls, which he hath held in life; let our bodies, which he hath kept together from flying in pieces; let all think on it: think how to thank Him for it; say, and sing, and celebrate it above all. We, above all: for it, above all.

For, if ever Mercy were over work of His; if ever Work of His, under it directly; it was so over us; and we so under it, this Day. If ever, of any it might be avowed; or to any, applied; If ever any might rightly and truly, upon good and just cause, say or sing this verse; we of this land, may do both: It will fit our mouths best, best become us.

For, such a work did He shew on us, this Day, as if Mercy have a Super omnia of other, this may claim a Super omnia of it; of Mercy itself. His mercy is not so high above the rest of his works, as this Dayes Work, high above the works of it. That, supream to all: this supream to it. Mercy, in it: even above it self.

We then, that have had such a Super in this Super; we, of all others, nay more than all others, to have it yet more specially recommended. A bare confession will not serve; but the highest confession of all, to take the Oath of the Supremacy of it. We, if ever any, to say it, and swear it: if it had not been in Sovereign manner over some of His works (that is, our selves) we had been full low yet this, infra infimos, beneath, under all his works: not (now) above ground, to speak and to hear of this Theme.

Let it then claim the supremacie in our confiteantur, and in our Benedicant, both above works, Saints, and all. And that, not mentally, or verbally alone; in heart so to hold, and in tongue so to report it: but, which is worth all, really in work, so to expresse it. I mean, as our thanks for His mercy above all our thanks; so our works of mercy, above all our works. But, be they so? His are so: are ours? I would to God, I could say they were: but (sure) they are not. His mercy above all his works: With us, in this point, it is clean contrary: all our works, above our mercy. The least, the last, the lowest part of our works, are our works of mercy: the fewest in number, the poorest in value, the slightest in regard. Indeed, infra omnia, with us, they.

But sure; GOD, in thus setting it above all his works: sheweth, He would have it, with us, so too. That which is Super omnia ejus, to be Super omnia nostra: as above all His, so above all ours likewise. And CHRIST our SAVIOUR would have it so; His Estate, is Estate misericordes: and how? not barely, Estate; but Estate, sicut Pater vester celestis; Mercifull, as He. And, how is He? So, as, with Him, it is above all. To imitate him then in this, let it be highest with us; as with Him, it is highest. Sure, we are not right, till it be with us, so too: As in Gods, so, in ours: above ours; above them all, that so, it may have the Supremacy, in Confiteantur, in Benedicant, in praise and thanks, in words, and works, and all.

To set off the Super of this day then, and to conclude. If the generality of His works confesse Him, for theirs: and the speciality of His Saints blesse Him, for theirs, what are we to do, how to confesse, how to blesse for the singular Mercy of this Day (and let all others go?) Sure, our mouths to be filled with praise as the Sea, and our voice in sounding it out, as the noise of His waves and we to cover the heavens with praise, as with clouds for it.

But, we are not able to praise thee, O Lord, or to extoll thy Name, for one of a thousand. Nay, not for one of the many millions, of the great Mercies, which thou hast shewed upon us and upon our children. How often hast thou rid us from Plague, freed us from Famine, saved us from the Sword, from our enemies compassing us round, from the Fleet, that came to make us no more a people!

Every

Even ; before this Day, we now hold ; before it, and since it, have not thy compassions withdrawn themselves from us. But, this Day, this Day above all dayes, have they shewed it Super omnia : and, not over, but upon us.

Wherefore, the powers thou hast distributed in our souls, the breath of life thou hast breathed into our nostrils, the tongues thou hast put into our mouths, behold, all these shall break forth and confesse, and blesse, and thank, and praise, and magnifie and exalt thee and thy mercy, for ever. Yea, every mouth shall acknowledge thee, every tongue be a Trumpet of thy praise ; every eye look up, every knee bow, every stature stoop to thee, and all hearts shall fear thee. And all that within us. Even our bowels : those our bowels, that (but for Thee) had flowen, we know not whether : Even our bones : those bones, that (but for it) had been shivered bone from bone, one from another : all shall say, Who is like unto thee O Lord in Mercy ? Who is like unto thee, glorious in holinesse, fearfull in praise ; doing wonders, wonders of mercy, as this day, upon us all, to be held by us and our posterity, in an everlasting remembrance.

Glory be to Thee O Lord, glory be to Thee : Glory be to thee, and glory be to Thy Mercy, the Super omnia ; the most glorious of all thy great and high Perfections : Glory be to Thee, and glory be to it : To it, in Thee ; and to Thee for it. And that by all thy works, in all places, and at all times. And, of all thy works, and above them all, by us here ; by the hearts and lungs of us all, in this place, this day, for this day, for the mercy of this day ; for the mercy of it above all mercies, and for the work of this day above all works of it. And, not this day only, but all the dayes of our life ; even as long as Thy mercy endureth, and that endureth for ever ; for ever, in this world ; for ever, in the world to come. Per, through the Cisterne and Conduit of all Thy mercies, Jesus Christ.

A
SERMON
 Preached before the
KINGS MAIESTIE
 AT
WHITE-HALL,
 On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
Anno Dom. MDCXVI.

PSALM XXXVII. III.

Venerunt filii usque ad partum, & virtus non est pariendo.

The Children are come to the birth, and there is no strength to bring forth.

Have taken this piece, and no more. More I could not (you see) It will not fit our turn, or this Day (the fore-end of the verse:) This is a day of trouble, rebuke, blasphemy, cannot we say? We must say, This is a day, not of trouble, but of joy; not of rebuke, but of praise; not of blasphemy, but of thanksgiving, with us. And so may we say too, and yet keep these words for our ground still. Nothing lets, but that one and the same day, may be, both a day of joy and sorrow. They that have the day, and they that lose the day, the day is but one: but, to the winner, a joyfull day: to the loser, not so; but a day of sorrow; and of blasphemy, otherwise. And so this day, a day of Sorrow, to some: they might have taken up the whole verse, as it stands: those (I mean) that, do what they can, must be fain to father the Children, that this day were comming, but came not forth. That they came not forth, the want of strength to be delivered, made it to them a day of Sorrow (some say, of blasphemy to:) Not so, to us. To us a day of praise and thanks: that they lost heir so looked-for and longed for children; that they are not born, who if they had been born, would have been the bane of us all. To us then, as this, a day: So this, a verse of

The words are (in Hebrew) of the nature of a Proverb; and used by them, as a By-word upon the defeating of any plot. Not every defeating; but then, when a plot is cunningly contrived, and closely followed, and is near brought to the very point to be done, yet not done though; but defeated, even then: then, take they up this Proverb, and say, Venerunt, &c.

And two ways take they it up, thereafter as the design is. If it be bad, yet well layed, and well seconded, and for all that, in the end disappointed; then utter they it cheerfully, Aha, the children, &c. but as God would, &c. by way of gratulation. But if good, and for a while come fairly forward, but in the end prove to nothing; then take they it up, with a sigh, alas the children, &c.

It cannot be denied, but good King Hezekiah, whose the words are, spake them here in some grief. Grief, two ways: for first, grieved he was to hear how Rabsakeh had raged and raved, and spewed out most horrible blasphemies. Fain would he, he and his men, rather than their lives have been at him for it. They were even great with this, (as it were) and the children come to the birth; But their strength served them not, they durst not give him a word, for fear of a further mischief, if they should provoke him. Now, there is no more hard and grievous case in the world, than when a man shall be forced to hear blaspheming, and not to be in case to answer it home.

But the King of Assur (his Master) was not far off, with his Forces; but at the siege of Libna (not past a dozen mile off;) that Town, not like to hold out long, and then have at Jerusalem; and they (God wot) but meanly provided to welcome him. But a poor remnant, to so huge an Host; So huge, as with their very feet they dried up Rivers, as they went. Non erant vires, was their case right; and this here a second grief.

For the words, though they sound, as if the Queen, or some great Lady, were in child-birth; yet no such matter. All is spoken by Allegory; and no woman, but the State of the Kingdom, here meant.

And it is no new thing, to set forth States by women. The Prophets do it oft: Esaies Heph-siba; Ezekiels Aholah, and Aholiba; Hoseas Lorubamah, all shew it. Nothing more common with them, than the Daughter of Babel for the State of the Chaldeans; the Daughter of Sion for the State of the Jewes.

And not to women only, but to women with child; then specially, when there comes any shrewd plunges upon an Estate. Filia Sion quasi parturiens (Hosea 4. 12.) Sion is ready to cry out, in the Old: And, in the New, the Church (then) hard bestead, is represented by a Woman ready to fall in labour (Apoc. 12. 11.) And States, when they would be delivered of ought (would, and cannot) as it were the throws of child-birth seem to be upon them: and this Proverb, then not unfitly applied to them, Venerunt, &c.

A Woman, her time is come, and strives to bring forth, and cannot, not having strength for it; this (we know) is a case of great extremity: we know it by Rachel (Gen. 3 9.) by Hophnies wife (1 Sam. 4.) both which were in the case here: at the point to be delivered, and wanted strength, and it cost them both their lives.

Now, as when a woman is so, all about her are at their wits end; know not what to do, or whether to turn themselves: No more did Ezekias; but even turns to the Prophet Esaie: (as, at such times Prophets shall have their turns: not oft, besides.) To him they send for Levi orationum: Lift up thy prayer: Prayer, now, for, but, in prayer, no help is left; if that relieve us not, we are gone. This spake then Hezekias in grief.

It grieves me on a day of joy, to hold you so long in a point of sorrow; but, the turning all into present joy will make amends. To that, I come.

This for the present, was their case: but this was not their case long. For, within a while after, before the end of the Chapter, the very same words, by the very same persons, were (or might have been) taken up, in a far other more joyfull key. Then, when the King of Assur, he that cast them into this agony, as he was upon removing to come towards them (and so, the children (as it were) come to the very birth, indeed:) God put a Ring in his nose, turned him about home again, as fast as ever he could, upon newes of invasion of his Countrey, by the Aethiopian: When, being so near come to the birth, he came not, had not the power to come one foot toward them; then (I hope) the case was altered: then might we have said this Text as Iopaan, with joy, Venerunt, &c.

And this (lo) is our very case, this day. For, why are we here met, but that (as the Text is) a birth there should, this day [the fifth of November, this very Tuesday] have been with us? should have been, but was not: That it was not: This day should have been a Dismal day; that it was not so. A birth was in bearing, and venerunt ad partum (I promise you:) that it was not born, that it was partus non partus, a birthlesse-birth, it is (with us) a day of joy: and as this, a Day; so this, a Text of joy: and thanks be to God, it is so. And we say these very words of Ezekias, not as (here) he did: but, as after he might have, and as we, this day, may speak them, with a chearfull accent, Venerunt ad partum, &c.

There be in the Text, two parties, which makes us two parts: 1 the Children, and 2 the Mothers. The Children, in the very first word: The Mother in the last: Pariendi it is here; Pariendi it is in 2 Reg. 19. If there be no strength pariendi, it is, because there is none parienti. Of these two; two things are here said: One affirmed: The other denied.

M m m m 2

Affirmed,

Affirmed, the children were ready: Denied; the mother, not, nam erat. The children not unwilling; for they were come: the mother unable; for, by that time they were come, her strength was gone. The end is left for us to gather: for, if no strength to bear, no birth there will be: No more there was, And, that there was not, it is holy-day with us, to day.

Applying all to our case, I am to tell you first. 1. These children, who they were: 2. And secondly, how near to the birth they came: 3. Thirdly, of the strength to bring them forth, the failing of it, and how it came to fail: Upon these, two questions: 1. Why they were not suffered to come forth? 2. Why they were suffered to come so far? 4. And last of all, of the Tu ergo, or inference upon all this: Which is not that which Hezekiah inferres (the next verse) Tu ergo leva orationem; But another Ergo, as it were a new birth of ours, Tu ergo leva gratiarum actionem. Yes, yes: That, and leva orationem too: And so let us lift up our prayer, and for nothing more, than that we may raise a good levie of thank; indeed, to send up to God that there was no strength to bring forth, when it was so near brought.

I.
The Children
1 Who they were.

THe Children, are the first word, and so offer themselves to be begun with. And with them, we must begin: For on them all depends (whether the Day shall be kept, or the Text uttered, with joy or not. For (indeed) prima facie, it may seem to be somewhat an unkindly joy, to take pleasure in the perishing of Children, when they be come to the birth. Yet such may the children be, that are to come, as it makes no matter. Nay, as we well may wish, they may: and well rejoyce, if they do miscarry there, and come no further.

Gen. 3. 15.

To begin, from the beginning. There read we of the Seed of the Woman, and the Seed of the Serpent: we are back at our Text straight. If it be the woman's seed, save it alive in any wise, let it come, not only to the birth, but, from the birth, well: and if by any mischance it do not, say the words of the Text, but say them with grief, Venerunt, &c. On the other side, if it be the seed of the Serpent, away with it, let it not come to the birth: if it do, let it not be born, stifle it in the womb, and be glad when you have done, and say with joy and spare not, Venerunt, &c.

Heb. xi. 23.

And yet I cannot tell neither, whether we make the Rule so general, as to extend to all the Woman's Seed. But, if the children be, as of Moses it is said, Hebrews 11. asius proper sweet children: Nay, if they be but according to kind, regular births; when they be come so far, it is grief, if they come no further. But, otherwhiles they fall out these same παρεσβασιν βρεων, Natura errores, Misshapen monstrous births: and then, in that case, and for such, it skills not when they be thither come, if farther they come not. Yea, I dare say, it will not discontent the unhappy parents that begat and bare them, though this Verse be verified of them, that when they come to the birth, they might not be born, but have the womb for their grave, and no strength to deliver them.

Since then, upon the matter; all is thereafter as the children be, our first enquiry is to be, what these children were? Where let me tell you this, you shall not look for such children as women go with: (the verse is proverbially, not verbally to be understood:) Not of any Woman's birth; none there was, at the speaking it. Ezekias meant it of Zennacheribs intent, to sack Jerusalem: and we of their attempt or enterprise, this day, to have made a massacre of us all. Of them that went big with this monster.

Psaln 7. 14.

To begin with the soul then, of their children. For, there is not only fructus ventris, there is partus mentis: the mind conceives, as well as the womb: the word [conceiving] is like proper, to both. Men have their womb, but it lieth higher, in them; as high as their hearts; and that which is there conceived and bred, is a birth. So, I find, the Holy Ghost in the Psalm calleth it; Behold, he travelles with mischief, he hath conceived sorrow and brought forth ungodliness. And that is, when an evil man, in the evil womb of his heart, shall hatch or conceive some devillish device, and go with it as big as any woman goes with her child, and be even in pain, till he have brought it. This is the birth here meant: and there in the heart, is the matrix or conceptory place of all mischief. Thence (saith our Saviour) de corde exeunt, From the heart they come all.

Mat. 15. 18, 19.

Usually they say in Schooles, Conceptus, conceptio; partus, opus: the concept is a kind of conception; and the work, a kind of birth: the imagination of the heart is an embryo, conceived within: the work now brought to passe, is a child born into the world. Nay, they go further, to more particularities, and carry it along through all the degrees: child-bearing. 1. When a device is intended, then is (say they) the child conceived (as it were.) 2. When projected and plotted handsomely; then, the child articulate. 3. When once attained, and set in hand, then it is quick. 4. When so far brought, as all is ready; then the child is come to the birth. 5. And when, allum est, all is done and dispatched, the child is born. 6. But, if it fall out otherwise, than was looked for, no strength to bring it forth; then have you a dead-born child. 7. And look, with the natural mother what joy there is, when there is a man-child born into the world; the same for all the world, is there with these bad men, when their imaginations prosper. And, what grief the poor woman hath, at the perishing of the fruit of her body; the like in a manner is there with them, when their powder will take no fire. So have you the soul, or spiritual part to begin with.

John 16. 11.

Will

Will ye see the body also, in the birth of this day? You may, even ad oculum, have it laid out before you. In imitation of the natural womb, wherein we lay, and whence we come all; there is (by analogie) another artificial, as Art doth frame it: Such I mean, as was the Trojan Horse, of which the Poet — Uterumque mirato milite complent, the belly or womb, when it was full of armed men: and so many armed men as there were, so many children, after a sort, might be said to be in it. And, if that: may we not affirm as much of the vault, or cellar, with as good reason? The verse will hold of it too — Uterumque mirato pulvere complent. The uterus or womb of it, crammed as full with barrels of powder, as was the Trojan Horse, with men of armes. This odds only: Every one of these children, every barrel of powder, as much, nay more force in it to do mischief, than twenty of those in the Trojan Horse's belly.

The more I think of it, the more points of correspondence do offer themselves to me, of a birth and coming to a birth, and that in every degree. 1 The ussels first give forth themselves, as so many embrios: 2 The vault, as the womb, wherein they lay so long: 3 They that conceived this device were the mothers, clear: 4 The slathers, were the fathers (as they delight to be called) though, oft, little more than boyes; but here, night-fathers, in that they perswaded, it might be, why not? might be lawfull; nay, meritorious, then: so, it was they, that did animate, gave a soul (as it were) to the treason. 5 The conception was, when the powder, as the seed was conveyed in, 6 The articulation, the couching of them, in order, just as they should stand: 7 The covering of them, with wood and faggots, as the drawing a skin, over them: 8 The Venerunt ad partum, when all was now ready, train and all. 9 The Midwife, he that was found with the match about him, for the purpose: 10 And partum, the birth should have been upon the giving fire. If the fire had come to the powder, the children had come to the birth, insusurè, had been born. But, Non erant vires (which, I turn) there was no fire given: and so, partum they wanted, as God would.

And, that only wanted: for, all the rest held to an hair. Nothing, that could be in a birth, was wanting: all, to be pointed at, from point to point: that, the Text is fitly enough applied to it. By this time, ye see the Children, both body and soul. Now, when looks the mother; when reckons she, her time will come?

Will ye now (which is the second point) weigh a little better, what is in these three words, Venerunt ad partum: 1 They were not upon their way, coming; but venerunt, they were even come. 2 How near the birth. 2 And come; not versus, toward; but even, ad, to. 3 Ad, to; not, loci partus vicina, some parts near, or next to it; but, ad partum, to the very birth-place, the nook, or enifce of the marriage. Or, if you will take partum, for the time; not ad tempora partus propinqua, within some few dayes of their reckoning; but, ad partum, to the very time, the day, and within a very little, to the hour it self; it missed not much: (that is) as near, as near might be. If ever there were a venerunt ad partum, and no partum upon it, here it was.

And, if you marvel, it was ad partum, and not ad parturitionem, first: Marvel not at that; why, it would have been a very short travel, that. That of the Prophet (in the sixty sixth Chapter) Antequam parturiant, peperit, would have been fulfilled in it: she should have been delivered, before ever she had fallen in labour. To the birth, they came, then. And you will remember, Chap. 66. 7. how far they came, how many degrees they passed, before they got thither. They came, 1 to generation: they came 2 to conception: they came, 3 to articulation, 4 to vivification, 5 to full maturity; and yet, none of all these, our venerunt, here. Passed all, and every one of these, never staid, till they came 6 even ad partum, could come no further, unless they had come forth: which God forbid; and so He will, you shall see. For, thus have we done now, with the first part (the Children.)

Now to the Mothers part. The Children came to the birth, and: The right and, the kindly Copulative, were, To the birth they came, and born they were; In a kind consequence, who would look for other? It is here, Venerunt, & non: thither they came, and no further; there stopped. Ad, in [ad partum] is but usque ad, exclusivè; that is, to it they came; through it, they came not. I I. The Mothers;

And, why came they not? By meanes (as is here set down) of a non erant. Somewhat there was not, that would have been; somewhat missing: a non erant there was, whatsoever it was.

What non erant was that? It was not, Non erat ingenium. (I am sure) Pestilent vis they lacked none, as deep, as dangerous an invention; as ever came into the brain of man. Neither came it thither, or was bred there, without the Seed of the Serpent. Nor can it be said, Non erat, that they wanted will; For, so maliciously were they bent in that wretched will of theirs, as they resolved to know neither friend nor foe, but up with all together. Nor did they want opportunity, of a place: Got the vault first, and the cellar after. No, not meanes: had their iron-sooles; had powder enough, and good storage for it. These they had, all: yet, Non erant (saith the Text;) what Non erant might that be? Non erant vires, they had no strength.

To a birth, there be two things: 1 The Children must be come thither, to the birth-place. 2 When the children be come thither, there must be strength, at least as much to deliver them. Ad partum opus est mixtum; ad mixtum opus est viribus: To a birth, there goes a kind of streffe; to a streffe, there is required some strength. Nixta inanis sine viribus; and nixta inani nihil paritur: To no 3 Her want of strength; purpose purpose is the stresse, if there be no strength, but all in vain : And, if that be in vain, there will no birth be. (No more there was) but the child perish; and if the mother scape, it is well; but (oft) they go both. And so fell it out here : the children dead-born, and the Mother dyed for it too. To speak without allegory. To the producing of any effect, two things there go : 1 Counsel, and 2 Strength : not counsel alone : but counsel and Strength. For as strength without counsel, will procure but a mole : So counsel, without strength, will prove but an aborcement. We see daily, many excellent devices come to nought ; all, because they be not strongly followed to execution. Strength then, there would be.

And strength they had not. Not strength ? yes (sure) that had they. To follow them, in the allegorie ; the mother was strong, else would the children never have come so far, as they did, to be so ripe, and ready for the delivery. And, the children were strong children : strong enough, but with one small sparke, to have sent us all up aloft, if we had been twice as many more. To leave the allegory : strength they had enough, to handle the pickaxe, to dig deep into stone-walls : strength enough, to lay in great barrels, and those all full, and a great many of them. Strength enough to remove them up and down, as they might stand best for the purpose : and to clap on iron and stones, and wood enough, upon them. And how then was there no strength ?

You will easily mark, Vires is the plural number : and so, many strengths there be : and, that he saith not [Vires] simply, any strength at all ; but, vires pariendi, strength to bring forth. Vires, is one thing ; vires pariendi, another. Vires, they had ; vires veniendi, ad partum : else had they never come so far ; but vires pariendi that, they had not.

For partus is opus (we said :) and nothing was done. All the while, till they came ad partum, their strength served them well. At the instant, they should have been brought forth, it failed them : Strength there was, to carry it along, to bring it so farre : but not pariendi, to bring it to issue.

To bring a thing to issue, that, passes the devils power. He could give them the counsel (as, no doubt, he did : it was too devillish, to grow in any mans head.) But, the strength to issue, that lieth not in his hand. Ye may be sure if it had, they had had that too. He longed, as much as they, to hear the blow, and see the fight. He, that helped them to lay in the powder, would have helped to have put to the fire, had it been in his power. But it was more than they could do : the strength to issue is Gods ever, and He took it from them.

Verse 36.

Domini sunt exitus : The Issues of all attempts are in the hands of GOD, them He reserves to Himself, as His own Peculiar ; yea, even of evil attempts. For, howsoever He be not at the beginning of them : at the end, He must be, or no end will be : Domini sunt exitus. The horse may be prepared to the battel ? the lors, cast in the lap ; the Cellar made ready for the powder ; and the powder for the cellar : And, when all is done, that the wit or malice of the devil, or man, can do or devise, comes GOD and dashes all in a moment. The Counsel of Achitophel ; Hamans high favour ; the great Fleet at Ezion-geber ; Sennacheribs huge host : defeats them all. For, counsels may be in the heart of man, and words at his tongues end, and acts at his fingers-end : yet nothing shall be said or done, unless GOD will so have it. He gives or denies success, as Him pleases. That when the children are upon the point to be delivered, there shall be strength, or no strength to do it, as pleases Him. And here, it pleased Him not : so, no birth there was ; but quando filii venerunt, vires abierunt, when the children were come, all the strength was gone.

Numb. 23. 8.

It seemes, it was somewhat doubted, lest when it came to the pinch, this strength should fail : therefore was their strength sought, even the strength of prayers ; to leva orationem, they gat them : but, they sent to the wrong party : Not to Esay, but to Balaam, to curse, where GOD did blesse ; and to blesse that curst birth of theirs, which His very soul abhorred. So many Prayers were said, they might have a good beire. They say, they were so, for Queen Marias child : But, she had no child to come, these had. But all in vain : when the time came, for all their Masses, and Processions, and Rosaries, and Jesuss Psalters, it would not be. No children came, strength there was not.

Judg. 16. 18.

And will you know, how it came to fail them, this strength ? Ye may, and never go out of the Text, or the termes of child-bearing. Or ever the birth was fully come, one of the complices fell to be wish-child ; and no remedy, but he must needs be delivered before his time, had not the power to keep his hand from the paper, and to disclose it. And, disclose a Treason, and the neck of it is broken, the strength of it is gone : as Sampsons strength soon was, when the Philistims knew once where it lay. And this was the strength, and none but this, that failed them. An easie strength (one would think.) to hold ones tongue, or to hold the fingers still. That, had he not : but for lack of that must needs be scribbling : and that marr'd the fashion of the birth quite. His not having the strength, not to bring forth his, made, they had not the strength to bring theirs forth. His putting his hand to the paper, made, there could be no fire put to the powder ; made, the mid-wife was intercepted ; and so, the birth, though near the delivery, yet never delivered.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither : for when this work of darknesse was brought to light, the light was so dim, and the Riddle so dark, even then ; that for all that bringing to light, the children were coming forward to the birth, still. Till strength was given to deliver us from this birth, by another travel. For, a travel I will call it, the studying, and the bringing forth of the hidden myserie, of the burning of the paper, the ridling of that Riddle. For, so came out, who the children were, were, and of what element they were made, what, and whereabout the womb was, they lay in. So by a birth; and by that birth, we were delivered from this. That birth smote all dead. For, it was found, even so: and then came prostratio virium indeed. Then, all strength (indeed) was quite and clean taken from them. That being taken from them, they were not delivered: and by their not being delivered, we were all delivered.

To the joy now. Divide the Text: Venerunt ad partum, is their joy, Non erant vires is ours. 1 The joy of Non erant vires That, theirs, for a time: this, ours for ever. To make their grief the greater, when it came, they were for a while, put in joy. Glad were they (I dare say) to see it go currant, kept close so long. They even itched for joy at it, and fell into a foolish paradise: provided a Protector and all. Comes me Non sunt vires, all their joy was at an end, and with that began their sorrow. We by their grief, shall best conceive our own joy, taking the whole verse intirely together.

A grief it was, and it went to their hearts, these children, that they came not. A double grief, that when they held well so long, and were so likely to come, yet they came not: had strength all the while, had it not, then. Venerunt ad partum, & venerunt ad partum are much alike. Any wrack is a grief; but no grief to the grief of that wrack, that is made, even in the very havens mouth. To goe the voyage well, and arrive well, and then, before the very port to sink, and be cast away! To bring the game to the upshot, and then to lose it! It trebled their grieffe, that so many Ladies Psalters, and Iesus's Psalters were said for it; and that neither Iesus nor our Lady blessed the birth no better. And last, that the children perished; and perished not alone, but the mothers went too, and some of the fathers, for company. It should have been parietes perierunt: it was parietes, or parietes, (if you will) perierunt.

Now looke how many wayes they were grieved, and said, alas, for venerunt ad partum. Alas for non erant vires; so many wayes do we rejoyce, and say, It is well, that venerunt ad partum. Thanks be to God, that Non erant vires. 1. First, for non erant vires, by it selfe: that, defeated it was. 2. Then, for Venerunt ad partum, & non erant vires, together: that it prospered so long, and yet defeated it was; this was gaudete with an iterum dico. 3. Then, that without any levitationem on our parts; without any on ours, and against so great a leavie of theirs, of I know not how many prayers and processions, and all for the prosperous success of a business knowne to none but the Superiors, 4. And, to make it terque quaterque, that we saw them come tumbling downe that made full account to have seen us flie up.

That we were delivered from a danger so neer; brought to so narrow a point; we not praying, nor so much as once thinking on the matter, but delivered as it were in a dream: Our selves not only delivered from, but they that so sought ours, delivered to their own destruction; brought not forth Pal. 126. 1. but were themselves, brought forth to Iudas end, the end of all traitors: and their children, not brought out, but, as enquadrata, pulled out of the wombe of the cellar, piece and piece; and never saw the Sun alive, or the Sun them; pitty it should.

Shall I now tell you a reason or two, why Non erant vires parienti? 1 One out of parienti, 2 the o- a The Reasons of Non erant vires.

1. This parienti was indeed periculi; the bringing forth a quantity of powder, the perishing of a whole Parliament. They were not; but, put case they had come forth (it is well, we are in case, to put this case) certainly, they had been Benoni's, sons of sorrow, to this whole land; Ichabod's right, our glory had been gone cleane. For, what a face of a Common-wealth had here been left? Exclusio they came ad partum; if, inclusive they had, their inclusive had been our exclusive. We had been shut off and that out of this life and this world, every one. Venerunt, if they had come ad partum; if they, ad partum, we ad perniciem: Non erant vires: If there had, these vires had been vires to us, and their parienti out parienti. If those children had not been lost, many fathers had been lost; many children had lost their fathers; and many Wives their Husbands. There had been a great birth of Orphanes and Widows, brought forth at once. What manner of birth should this have been, first in it selfe then to us? In it selfe: we said, for Vipers, there should be no strength, to deliver them. Were not these Vipers the wombe, they lay in must have been rent, for them to come forth: were they not the brood of Vipers? What talke you of a Viper, that sometime (it may be) stings a child to death: or an elder body, if it be not looked to in time? What are Vipers, to them, that at once, would not have flung, but have sent up, and torne in pieces a King, a Queen, a Prince, and I know not how many of the Nobles, Clergie, Commons; all the Estates of a Realme, a whole Countrey, their owne Countrey, all at one blast? We said, for Monsters, there should be no strength to deliver them. These were such Monsters, as not in Christendome alone, but, even in Africke (that mother of monsters) the Turkes, and Moors, and all that heard of it, were amazed, that ever the earth should beare such a brood of Miserants. For, they should not (as children) have cryed at their birth, but roared as devils; or, as if all the infernall furies had broke out of hell together. Let this serve: it was so out of measure bad, as it was too bad, ever to be brought. What marvel then, if nature shrunk in and would give no strength, for such a birth as that.

2. Shall I tell you another, why non erant vires? I will: it is somewhat a strange one, but it is raised out of the words of the Text, and it is a birth borne of late, and Christened by the name of a Non erant vires, that you may know, they be a-kin, this and that. And so (I hope) it comes not out of season, since for that child's sake, this (I hope) fared never a whit the better.

You cannot but remember a clause not long since printed, and so (as it were) a child but lately born, a Cardinals child it is (I mean the Tenet late taken up at Rome.) That, all is now to goe, all Christianity to stand or fall, by sunt, or non sunt vires.

The

The old Christians never knew of any such birth as this: Id fuit, quia deerant vires, saith the Cardinall. As much to say as, if they now in these dayes, be so as they were, carry themselves quietly, it is quia non sunt vires: and to hold no longer, than donec erunt; and then you are like to heare of them, to have them goe againe with such another birth. (You shall have them as milde as Gregory the first, when they have no strength; but as fierce as Gregory the seventh, when they have.)

Nay, and they would bear the world in hand, this Child may claime kindred of the Fathers: that this was the minde of the blessed Saints, and Martyrs, in the persecutions of the Primitive Church. That, with them, all went by Si adessent vires, and if then they had had strength, never an Emperour should have kept his Crowne upon his head. For, it was neither Allegiance, Conscience, Christian duty, nor respect, that held them in. Id fuit, quia deerant vires: as (if they had not been wanting) full well they should have understood. That they were gentle and meeke, gramer-cie non erant vires; that and nothing else. O write a book for Gods sake, de gloria Martyrum (Turonensis so hath) of the glorious Martyrs that suffered then; but it was because they had no strength: else, the Emperours should have suffered, not they.

But, they mightily wrong the Fathers, to father this opinion on them. Two hundred yeares after Christ, in the midst of the fervor of persecutions, Tertullian tell us another tale; that they had strength then, more than enough; and so, suffered then, upon a better quia, than quia non erant vires. Well nere two hundred yeares after that; the Ecclesiasticall Story sheweth under Indian the Apostata, and under Valens the Arian, they wanted no strength then (the greater part of the Apostates Army being Christians; and the chief Leaders and bravest Companies, under the Arian, being Orthodox.) And two hundred yeares yet after that, against the Lombards, Gregory saith, was then strength enough, to have left them neither King nor Duke, if all had gone by vires, then. But, he (good man) might not miscere se, meddle with ought that might be the death, cujusquam, of any one man. And these would have been the death of I know not how many, but that Non erant vires. No such children then, as those, this day brought forth. It is not the Divinity of the old Christians, but of the new Iesuits, this: They must take the child to themselves; It is no babe of the Fathers, it is a brat of their own breed; hatched in these dayes of ours, never heard of before. And such an one it is, as if it be let go, we shall have a generation of monsters come of it soon.

He began with vires: Another since him saith, if ye have not vires, virtus will serve as well. And since, that another; if vires, and virtus faile too, go to it with fire-work; Pulvis Serpentis which is worse than virtus Serpentis; Serpentine poder worse than Serpentine poyson. Poyson kills one by one; powder, with one puffle, dispatcheth all. For poyson, ye may have a counter-poyson: No antidote for powder, if it once take fire. Poyson gives men leave yet, to die with some leasure: Powder, that it doth, it doth at once in a moment.

To the utter confusion of this error, that all is to goe by sunt vires, was it, that non erant vires, this Day. And do but mark it, that God payes them with their own mony. They put all upon this very point; in this point, God this day foiled them. They go all by strength; and that strength, then failed them. All, upon Si essent vires: God took order quod non essent vires. And God never let them have strength, that so resolve to put it; that, can they once gather strength, no King, no State shall stand before them; but blow them up, sinke them; poyson them one way or other, away with them all.

You see the reason, with GOD: but, see you not withall, next under GOD, where we are to ascribe our safety? Even to non erant vires. There is a point hangs by that. For, while that lasts, while ye keep them there, ye shall have the Primitive Church of them; have them lie as quiet, as still, as ever did the barrels in the vault, till vires (like fire) come to them: and then, off goe they: then, nothing but depose Kings, dispose of kingdoms, assoile subjects, arme them against their Sovereigns: then, do they care not what. But, if the powder take not fire, then shall you straight have books tending to mitigation; then, all quiet againe. Certainly, thus standing, it were best to hold them in defectu virium, to provide ut ne sint; to keep them at non sunt vires, till time they be better minded in this point, and we have good assurance of it. For, minded as they are, they want no will, no virtus: they tell us what the matter is; strength they want, they write it, they print it; and si adessent vires, they would asit it in earnest.

But yet, why was it suffered to come so farre? Why not taken sooner? Evill (we all know) is best nipped in the bud; best (ever) destroyed in the Spawne. Being then so evill, as it was, why was it let goe all the while?

I will give you two reasons: 1. One on Gods part, 2. The other on ours. 1. On Gods part: I know not how, but ye shall observe that he loves, that He takes delight thus to do: It is His play with Leviathan. To suffer his Whelps and him to have their course for a time, and for a long time; and then suddenly give them a twitch, and down they come. Let them goe even till they come to the birth, and then come in the neck of them with a non sunt vires, and all is marr'd.

Here in the text, how many Countries wan Sennacherib? How neer was he let come to Ierusalem, even to Libna, within lesse than a dozen miles? Newes came suddenly, of the Blackmoors invading his Country, back he goes, had not the power to stirre on foot farther. How far was the invincible Navie suffered to come failing in LXXXVIII. to cast anchor, even before the Thames mouth, every houre ready to deliver her children ashore. In an instant, a fatale faintnesse fell upon

2 Why they were suffered to come so farre?
1 Reason on Gods part.

Verf. 9.

upon them; their strength and courage taken from them; about they turned, like a wheel: fled, and had not the power to look behind them. But, non erant vires pariendi, we all know. God loves thus to do: and then do it, cum venerunt ad partum. His glory is the greater, He can let it come so nigh, and then put it by; let it alone till then, and then do it.

2. There is another on our parts. For, easie account, and but easie, would have been made, if they had been taken at first: no greater matter, that. That we might make no easie account, we scaped not easily, but hard and scant: so, to make our escape the stranger, and our joy the more, that it went so far, and came so near, and yet missed us.

Of it self, it is best, Ut malum ubi primum contingit, ibi moriatur, Evil be crushed at first, ^{2 On our parts} the Serpents head troden, at his first peeping in or putting it out. But God doth not alwayes that, which in it self, is best to do: but that, which will best affect us, and we take in best part. And so did He this: thereby to beget in us, and bring forth of us, a new birth of praise and thanks according.

For, now we have done with this degenerate birth of theirs, we are to stay a little, and see ^{4 The inference} if we can get another, a more kindly birth, come from our selves. For barren we may not be: this delivery from theirs, is to make us delivered of another; we to bring forth somewhat, for their not bringing forth.

What is that? The Text will lead us to it, if we look but over the next verse. For there, when any evil travel threatens us, we find by Ezechia, the kindly Birth then, on our parts, is Tu ergo leva orationem, a levie of prayers. Now, that being turned away, and turned away in a manner so miraculous, the natural kind issue then, is another Tu ergo, Tu ergo leva gratiarum actionem, a new levie of thanks: a new leva, quia levatus, for His easing of us, of so heavy a chance, like to light so heavy on us. ^{Verf. 41}

At the present (sure) while it was fresh, we were ravished with it; for the time, we seemed to be even with child, as if we would bring forth somewhat: and somewhat we did bring forth, even an Ait, that we would from year to year, as upon this Day, bring forth and be delivered of thanks and praise, for this delivery for ever. And here we are now, to Ait that, we then enacted: even to travel with this new birth. God send us strength, well to be delivered of it.

For, so shall we double our joy; ¹ One joy, for the turning away of that miscreant birth, of theirs; ² another, for the welcoming this of our own.

This birth, we now travel with, is a good and a blessed birth. Blessing, and glory, and praise, and thanks, are in bonis all; all, good in us (if any thing be good in us:) the best fruits of our nature, when it is at the very best. And if they be brought forth, it is as it should be, and as God would have it.

But if (which God forbid) they should either not come, or when they be come, our strength fail, and they not brought forth, then are we at an after-deal again; then would not this day be so joyfull for the mis-going of the other, as sorrowfull for the abortion of this. Our joy (at least) not so entire, but mixt with sorrow: for, there is sorrow even to Death, if we go with so good a fruit, and it come to the birth, and there perish; if we shall but make an Ait, and do no Ait up on it.

We seem to sorrow at nothing more, than that many a good purpose there is, and many a vow made in time of need, sicknesse, or adversity (so many, as it is by Divines held, There be moe good purposes, and that by odds, in hell, than there be in heaven) but, abortive purposes, and vows, all. For, O that we were but the one half of that we then promise to be; when we want and would have somewhat! O then, how thankfull we would be! how never forget! how fast the Children come to the birth, then! And when we have what we would, our vigor quailles presently, our strength is gone from us, & non sunt vires pariendi. For, all the World seeth, nothing we bring forth. Alas, how many abortements are there daily of these Children! No where may this Verse be taken up: No where so oft, so fitly applied: No where so used upon better cause than this, upon the failing of good desires and intents.

That this we may do, to take us to leva orationem: let this be our last. To lift up our prayer first, against such unnatural births as that was, the Prophet Hosees prayer. Give them, O Lord, what wilt thou give them? a barren womb and dry breasts. There was no strength for that birth of theirs: It was well, there was not: Thanks be to God, there was not: Thanks be to God, for non erant vires. And, Ne sint vires (say I) Never let there be strength, for any like this birth; Never strength, but weak hands, and feeble knees, for any such enterprise. Ne vires pariendi: Nay, Ne veniat ad partum; not neither, not so far: Nay, ne ad conceptionem; Nay then, Ne ad generationem, if it may be. If it may not, but they scape thither, to the birth; then, lift up your last prayer: and let this be it, and let it come up to Heaven, into God's presence, and enter in even to His eares, for the equity of it; in all such designs, that pariens may be sine viribus, and partus, sine vita; the mothers, no strength; and the children, no life; But child and mother, perish both, as this day, they did. And, better so, they perish, than such a number, than a whole Country perish, by their means. This, a Ne veniant, and a Ne sint vires, against theirs. ^{Hof. 9: 14}

But, for ours, for our praise and thanks, Veniant, Let them come; and Sint, O sint vires, and let there be strength, when they come; for such, for so good a birth. Ever be their strength, so kindnesse, so thankfulnessse, to the accomplishment thereof, whereto we are in duty so deeply bound.

Strength (ever) to all honest and good resolutions. Pity, but they would be so; Pity, there should want strength for them. Well may they be conceived; come well to the birth; when they be come thither, vigor enough, to deliver then; and never, when they be come so far, to miscarry.

We may take our light from that. It is venerunt filii: and filii is the plural number. So, more than one, many there would be. And filii falls well with the word gratie, which lacks the singular. No such phrase, as Agere gratiam. A single thank was never heard of. And both falls well likewise, to quit the birth, we were quit of: For, the barrels were many and full, and so would our thanks be.

Again, they would be filii; that is, such as children be; and children be flesh, blood and bone; I mean, some real, some substantial thanks. Not to travel (as it were) with wind, with a few words only, which are but ayr, and into the ayr they vanish again. Partus opus (ye remember) we said before: some works there would be, Adio gratiarum, somewhat actually done: leave some reality behind it, as in a Child there is.

Thus far, like: but then, a difference. Come it would, not as it did their ad partum exclusivè, thither, and no farther: but, inclusivè, to the birth, and from the birth, have the blessing of the Womb and of the breasts; of the womb, to bring it forth; of the breasts, to bring it up, till it proved somewhat worth the while.

That so we may rejoice as much in the affirmative of this birth of ours, Venerunt & sunt vires; as we did in the negative of that of theirs, venerunt & non erant vires. So doing, GOD shall again and again turn away those births, if any be in breeding; take away all strength from them being bred, as to Day, He did: And give us new occasions daily to bring Him forth praise and thanks, for His daily continued mercies, in delivering our King, our Land, Us, and Ours all.

AT
WHITE-HALL,

On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDCXVII.

LUKE CHAP. I. VER: LXXIV. LXXV.

The VII. and VIII. Verses of Benedictus.

*Ut, sine timore, de manu inimicorum nostrorum liberati, serviamus illi,
In sanctitate, & iustitia coram Ipso, omnibus diebus nostris.*

That we, being delivered from the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear,

In holinesse, and righteousness, before Him, all the dayes of our life.

HE children were come to the Birth, and there was no strength to deliver them. (There we left, last.) Their not being delivered, was the cause of our being delivered. (And now I go on.)

*And our being delivered was to this end, That, we being delivered, from the hands of our enemies, might serve Him, &c.
For I demand: Delivered we were (as this Day) why was it?
Was it that we might stand, and cry out of the foulness of the fact? Or stand, and inveigh, against those monsters that were the actors in it? Was it, that we might blesse our selves for so fair an escape? Or bestow a piece of an Holy-day on GOD, for it? And all these we may do. And all these we have done: and upon good ground, all. Yet none of these the very Ut; nor we delivered, that we might do these. But when all is said, that can be said; higher we must come:*

*to this Ut here, and pitch upon it: for, this is indeed, the Ut finalis; the right, the true, the proper That: That, for our deliverance, we bethink our selves, how to do Him service.*

The Text the year before,

The end (or ut) of this dayes deliverance.

Take the whole Tract along, from the first word, Benedictus : There is visited and redeemed in the first verse : A horn, or a mighty salvation, in the next : After, we saved from them that did hate us : But you shall see, that all these suspend still, no perfect period, till you come to this. But at this, there is : visited, redeemed, saved, mightily saved ; why all ? For no other end, but that being so visited, redeemed and saved, we might wholly addict, and give over our selves, to the service of Him, who was Author of them all.

Our delivery from the grand delivery by Christ.

I wot well, that principally and properly, the whole song referreth to the deliverance of deliverances, our final deliverance, from our ghostly enemies, and from their fire (the fire of hell) by our blessed Saviour ; which was so great, as it was able to open the mouth, and loose the tongue of a dumb man, and make him break forth into a Benedictus.

The same Ut.

But, inasmuch as in every kind, the chief giveth the Rule (or, as we say here) the Ut, to all that are from, and under it : And that, ours and all other deliverances, that have been, or shall be, are from or under that of His : Our enemies, set on by those enemies ; Ours lighted their match, at their fire (the fire of hell) and so do all others, whatsoever : therefore it is, that this Text aptly may be, and usually hath been ever applyed to any deliverance, from any enemies whatsoever : those of LXXXVIII. these of this Day : the same Ut, in all : as coming, all from the same principium a quo : and tending all, to the same finis ad quem, that here is set down.

I

Verse 11.
Mercy.

For the principium a quo ; we have formerly endeavoured, to set that straight, from whence our deliverance came : Even from the goodness of God ; yet not expressed under that term, goodness, but under the term of mercy, as elsewhere. As here (but a verse before) To perform the mercy. And a little after, Through the tender mercies of our God.

Which term is made choice of, for two causes : One, it includes misery : The other, it excludes merit : and so, fittest for our turn.

1. Goodness may be performed to one, though in good case : Not mercy, but to such only, as are in misery. In miseria there is misery, ever. And this, to put us in mind of our case, the extrem misery we had come to, but for His mercifull deliverance.

2. Again, Goodness may be shewed to such as may seem some way to deserve it : So cannot Mercy, For, but where merit is wanting, mercy is not pleaded properly. These set us right, in the principium a quo, that we ascribe it not to a wrong cause. Out of Jeremy : It was the mercy of the Lord, that we were not consumed. Out of the Psal : That mercy of His, that is over all his workes.

wherein.

And now to the finis ad quem. For, we are as easily, and no lesse dangerously mistaken in that. By merces means, without all merit of ours, we were not consumed, but delivered from so great a misery, so near us : why were we so ? Were we liberati ; to become Libertines, to set us down, and to eat, and to drink healths, and rise up, and see a phy ? was there no Ut in it ? Yes : what was that ? Ut serviamus illi.

The summe or Substance of the Text.
Contractus innominatus.
Verse 5.

So, there growes an obligation out of it. For, Ut, is a conditional, and implies ever a kind of contract ; at least, that which is not named, but is much used. Do ut des, facio ut facias. So that, the Text is of the nature of a Bond, or Covenant. And I give it not that denomination, of mine own head : I find it so called, in expresse terms, but a verse before, To remember His holy Covenant.

The Division.

A Covenant then, names it. And a Covenant divides it : For, a Covenant is ever between two, the two here, God and us.

I.

The Covenant on God's part, is at the fourth verse ; That we should be saved from our enemies. Which Covenant is here pleaded, as performed by Him, under liberati.

II.

The Covenant on our parts, rests ; That, then, we should serve Him for it, His part is kept, liberati shewes that : Then may we put in suit, for ours, that is, for serviamus.

GOD'S part,
The Covenant.

On God's part, I set forth these.

Our part.
The Condition.
The Matter.

1. That we were delivered. 2. That, from our enemies. 3. That, from the hands of our enemies. 4. That, without fear (for so it stands in the verse) Ut sine timore liberati, that, without fear being delivered. So it may be taken ; and so it is taken, by sundry of the Fathers.

On ours, I reckon these. Our Service : The matter : and the manner of it. The matter wherein : Serve Him in holiness, Serve Him in righteousness : not holiness, or righteousness alone, but to serve Him, in both.

The Manner.

The manner how (often, no lesse acceptable than the service it self.) 1. Ut sine timore ; that our service be freely and cheerfully done (now we are out of fear.) 2. Ut Coram ipso, That unfeignedly, as before Him, not before men (before whom we may and do often halt.) 3. And for the time of it, Ut omnibus diebus, that we faint not, or give over, but continue in it all our life long. Three qualities of ours, and indeed, of every true and faithfull service. That these be done : And that they may be done ; And that, that which shall be spoken may tend to this, that they may be done, &c.

UT liberati. That we being delivered. To shew the great equity on Gods part of the Covenant, we say first: that we were to serve Him, though liberati were left out: being, or notwithstanding delivered. This to be our first point.

The Noble Army of Martyrs, it was all their case, they served out their service; without any liberati, any bond of temporal deliverance. Far from any liberati, were they three, that were upon casting into the fire, and even then said: *Our God whom we serve, He can deliver us out of thy hands, and from the fiery fornace. But, if He will not (not deliver us) Be it known unto thee, O King, we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image, which thou hast set up. That is, serve Him we will, whether He deliver us or no. Will ye hear an Heroical spirit, indeed? Not, Etsi me non liberatis, Though He should not deliver me; but, Etsi me occideris, yet, I though be should kill me, to die for it, I will do my duty, and serve Him, though. It is Job. These stood not upon liberati: but, deliverance, no deliverance, come of it what would, they were at a point, would and were resolved to serve Him. And (περὶ ἐξουσίας, ad erubescendum vestram dico, I speak it not to our commendation) if there were in us, any remnant of their generous spirit, God should not need to come in indentures with us. It savours somewhat of a mercenary, that serviamus should hold, and let liberati go, whether it would: And we live and die, His servants, though He had not, or should not deliver us. This is liberati, without liberati.*

But then, liberati, with liberati. If God take us, as He findes us, and say with the Apostle; Pec- co autem vobis, Goto; I beset with you; and et ovipoulos, by way of indulgence, condescend to condition with us, if He come to liberati; shall not that hold us: Our duty being absolute, depending upon no liberati; if upon special favour, God will come in bonds, and let it run into this tenour, That being delivered we shall serve Him; else not: shall we not then do it? This being done, I marvel what we can alleadge, to decline our duty; unless we mean, it should be fast with God, and loose with us; He bound to do all for us: and we free, to do nothing for Him.

And yet a third (to magnifie His mercy, yet more, and to tie us the harder to our Covenant) liberati, is not only with liberati, but with liberati, first: God is bound, and first bound, to do for us, before we do ought for Him. It is not, That we should serve Him, first, and then He deliver us, after: But, that He should first deliver us, and after, when we are delivered, then, and not before, we should do our service. It is not liberandi, shall be, or may be, hereafter: It is liberati, are already. So we are afore-hand with him. He hath done His, before we begin ours. liberati, you see, precedes serviamus: liberati, the tense past; serviamus; but the present (and I would it were the present) I doubt, for a great part it is yet to come.

And the reason, why He will have it so to precede; is, He would have our service grow out of His favours, our duty, out of His bounty. That is the right, and (indeed) the Evangelical service. If He have us at the advantage, on the hip (as we say) it is no great matter, then, to get service at our hands. None more servile than we, then. But that, is the Legal, for fear. And that sometimes He hath, but likes it not; He would have it, out of love, out of the sense of His goodness, have our hearts broken; with that. That, is the only acceptable service to Him, that grows out of that Root. The serviamus that grows out of liberati; delivered and serve: first delivered, and then serve. This for the equity of the Covenant on Gods part.

Now come I to plead, that on Gods part this Covenant was performed, that liberati we were. Heaven and earth would rise against us, and condemn us, if we should not confesse liberati this day. Heaven saw it, and was astonished: And it is gone over all the Earth, the fame of it. But that, we do. The keeping of this Day, the meeting of this Assembly, are both to acknowledge and professe, that a liberati there hath been.

Nay, not one alone: Two there have been: and two such, as our eyes have seen; but our ears have not heard, neither could our Fathers tell us, of the like. Two such, as no Age ever saw, nor can be found in any Story; That of LXXXVIII. This of DCV. (both within the compasse of seventeen yeares.) One by strand, the other by land (as they say.) From a Fleet by Sea, from a Vault by land, de abyssis terra (as saith the Psalm) as well, as de abyssis maris: a Summer, and a Winter deliverance: either of them, like this of Zacharia's, able to bring Benedictus from a dumb man.

So, delivered we were. But, a delivery is a thing at large: though it be, but from a mischance, from some heavy accident, it is a delivery. But, if it be from our enemies, it is so much the more: As, in that, there is nothing but casualty: in these, there is rancour and malice, they hate us: So this the greater danger by far.

And there is much in the enemies: Of them, some reach but at our states, lands or livelihoods: Other some, nothing will satisfie, but our lives. Every enemy is not mortal, where he is, the danger is deadly. Ours were such, sought to bring utter destruction on us: and not on us alone, but on ours: nor on us and ours only, but on the whole land in general.

Again, of such as be deadly, some are roaring enemies (the Psalm so calls them) such as threaten

And last, that all this was sine timore.

For in the Verse so it stands: first, ut sine timore liberati.

And stands so first, that we might take special notice, and note of it.

And though divers

Writers draw (sine tempore) to servianus, as if there were an hyperbaton, to serve Him without fear; Yet what should let us, so to take it, as it stands? Specially since divers of the Ancients take

it and proclaim their enmity, like those in LXXXVIII. Others lurk, like Vipers, that sting to death, without any hissing at all: as were ours (this day) which are the more dangerous a great deal.

This made it (indeed) to be more than liberati (outs.) Liberati, is properly set free, and freeing is but from Servitude. This was more. Our death was sought, and we delivered from death, and that a fearful death, unprepared, suddenly, in a moment, to be shattered to pieces. And yet it was liberati too, in the proper sense: for upon the matter, it was from both. The Prophets division would have taken place in it: Quod ad mortem, ad mortem; qui ad servitutem, ad servitutem.

They, that had been blown up, to death; they, that had been tetry, to Servitude (to a State more miserable, than death it self.) So, in one liberati, we had two. Both from that of Human's loss, which were, to death (one that was in Hebrew, this was in Greek:) and from that of Babylon; Besides, which was thralldome and confusion. Thus were we delivered from our enemies.

But from the hands of our enemies, is more, than from our enemies. For let the malice of an enemy be what it will, if his hands be weak, or short, or we far enough from them: the matter is so much the lessened. But if we come within his reach, if he get us within his hands, then God have mercy on us.

Specially, if there be in his hands, a knife thus engraven, To cut the throats of the English Heretics: as in LXXXVIII. divers so engraven in Spanish, were brought from the Fleet; and shewed. Or if there be in his hands, a match, ready to give fire, to XXX. barrels of powder (not so few.) If the hands be such: that is then a delivery, not from our enemies only, but from their hands: or (as we say): from their very clutches. Ye will mark, that thorow all the Psalmes, ever the part is still enforced: Nor from the Lions, but from the Lions paws: from the horns of the unicorns, from the teeth of the Dog: So here, from the hands, from the bloody hands of our enemies.

Further I say, it is more, to be delivered from their hands, than out of them. For if (out) then (in) first. They must first be, in the hands, that are delivered out of them. But from them, that may be from coming in them at all. The better deliverante of the twain. And that was ours: And that was CHRIST'S: He is said, to have loosed the sorrowes of Hell, Non quibus nexus est, sed ne claretur, saith Augustine. Nor, wherewith He was bound: but that he might not be at all bound with them. So we not by taking us out, but keeping us from, from their hands, from the hands of our enemies.

Let me yet stay a little. For (methinks) we may find in this word, not only our deliverance, but even the very manner, and the meanes of it. Not in liberati, the Latine: but, in S. Lukes own words, positive, that will come home to both.

Positive that is, properly erui. Erui, that fits us, for the manner, two wayes: Eruiere, is de tenebris in lucem adducere. Out of some dark deep hole (as it might be the Cellar) to bring forth something to light (as it might be those same vasal mortis, vessels there couched, and destined to the blowing us all up.) It must be some dark vault or pit, Unde, from whence: well therefore said of us erui, that were delivered from a pit-danger, a danger under ground, in abyssis terra, in the deep of the earth.

Secondly, eruiere, the compound is, from rueri (the simple) that is, from a ruine. Not as if he should have fallen into the pit, but that, there was there bestowed within it, that which would have sent us up, that down we should have come, have fallen down, all to pieces. Ruina it would have been, and therefore erui, right. And they talk of helping incendiarius ruina: Here, there had been incendium and ruina both, and neither helped or other, but both been past all help.

Delivered from a ruine; But eruiere is then in kind, when we are so delivered from a ruine, as with their ruine, that fought ours. So it was, we parted not of even hands, we from them, and they from us, neither of both a fall. No: we fell not (no fall with us:) they fell, and had a foul fall.

We were so delivered from their hands, as they delivered into ours. We erui: they rui and cast both, fell and were slain. The pit they digged, they fell into themselves: In the snare they laid, was their own foot taken. The highest deliverance of all (so much made of in the Psalmes.)

And thus much was before implied, when it was called Cornu salutis, a Horn of Salvation. The salvation that so comes, comes ever with the perdition of the adverse partie. So is the Horn expounded in Deut. XXXIII. With these shalt thou strike thine enemies and push them, as any wild beast. Ventilare is the word; Tossle them up into the wind, upon the top of their horns, till they have gored them, and brought them to their end. Such was our Horn of Salvation, or (as we turn it) a mighty salvation. God shewing His might no lesse against them, than for us: visited and redeemed us mightily, in His mercy; visited and ruined them as mightily, in His wrath.

And again, in this, not only the manner, how, but the meanes whereby. For, He hath raised up a horn of salvation. Now to raise up, must needs be interpreted of a person, the meanes of the delivery. Who was that? In Dani. I, and the Revelation, I find it totidem verbis, Decem Cornua, decem Reges sunt: Alluding therein, as to their great power, so somewhat to the anointing thence poured on their heads: that it should be salus Regia, and per Regem. A delivery wrought by a King: the King of heaven to work it, mediant Regis terreno. In cuius labiis divinatio, if ever it were in any's, who did thereby eruiere that, out of the dark phraze, by which we all were erui. And so, not the manner alone, but the meanes in it, too, that we were eruiendo, erui.

And last, that all this was sine timore. For in the Verse so it stands: first, ut sine timore liberati. And stands so first, that we might take special notice, and note of it. And though divers Writers draw (sine tempore) to servianus, as if there were an hyperbaton, to serve Him without fear; Yet what should let us, so to take it, as it stands? Specially since divers of the Ancients take it so : (I name Origen, Titus Boetrensis, Chrysostome, Theodoret, and Theophylact.) But we may well reconcile them both, if we say (which truly we may say) That , without fear we were delivered, to serve Him in a State without (or void of) fear.

It is a great favour, when we are delivered ; to be delivered, absque hoc, that we be at all put in any fear. Some, are sometimes saved from their enemies, but it is, with some fright first. It was Ester. 4.3. the Jewes case, when from Haman : It was ours, in Anno LXXXV111.

They that are so, it cannot be denied, but delivered they are, but not sine timore liberati, not delivered without fear. This was without fear. Our case, just. We had no sense, and so, no fear at all, of the danger, till it was past, I cannot better expresse it, than in Theodoret's own words. Sed si sic dicendum est (saith he) veluti non sentientes ita, nos de periculo transtulit in securitatem. If it may so be said, without any sense or feeling at all, did he translate us, from the depth of danger, into the state of security. In which point, ours did come near to the great delivery of the world, by CHRIST, what time the world little thought, either of their own peril, or of His paines and passion, that delivered it. Yet, in this, ours had more than was in CHRIST's own delivery ; That there, though it were without fear, yet not without somewhat as evil, as fear. For, CHRIST's was wrought by his innocent death (a matter of sorrow, and grief.) But in ours there was none, neither fear nor grief, nor any other unpleasant passion. No innocent suffered here ; none but they, that had their heads in the contriving, or their hands in the digging about it. Without fear it was, without any thing else, that might taint our delivery, with the least matter of grievance.

So then, 1 delivered we were. 2 And not from the casualty of any mischance, but from the malice of enemies. Enemies, and those 3 capital ; And those 4 close hidden enemies : From them ; yea, 5 from their very hands : And 6 From their hands, not out of them. And our delivery was 7 eruti, 7 from something in abyssis terra ; And 8 from a ruine too : 9 And that, with their ruine, that fought ours. 10 Our salvation, Cornu salutis, a Royal deliverance : 11 And yet eruendo it was. 12 And all absque timore. 13 Or Absque any thing else that might blemish our joy with matter of sorrow in the least degree. The recapitulation of all the former.

And this for God's part, who hath remembered His holy Covenant (I trust) and performed it in every clause : nay, in every word, to us, to the uttermost.

Now, to our part (which we may be put in suit for.) Liberati then, is clear. But how ? absolutely ? at large ? absque aliquo inde ? No condition annexed ? No Ut ? Yes : take the Ut with you. Liberati, Ut. Delivered that we should ; Should do somewhat : for, naturaliter obligamur ad dantem. This Ut is natural : there groweth a natural obligation between him that doth, and them that receive a good turn : (And a deliverance, specially such an one is a good turn.) The fields we till, the trees we plant, shew it. They return their fruit to them, that bestow labour, or cost upon them : That (I know not how) but so it falls out, in matter of benefits, we be not so soon loosed, but we be tied again : Nor eased, but loaden afresh : nor freed, but bound anew. It is the Law, the bond of nature : this, Liberati Ut.

And that Ut, is Ut serviamus. And this particular, Ut, groweth out of the Law of Nations. There the Law is, ut victus sit in potestate victoris, the conquered, ever, in the power of the Conquerer, to take his life, or to save it, at his pleasure. But, if he will save it, then comes the voluntary Ut, or Covenant. He that hath his life saved, to vow to bestow it, in his service, that did save it. Servi (the very name) came of servati. They that should have died, and were saved, did willingly covenant, serva & serviam, to serve him, by whom their lives were preserved. This being the Law of Nature and Nations, why should not the God of Nature, the King of Nations be allowed it ? that if our lives have been by Him saved ; we should, from thenceforth, come to this Ut, ut serviamus Illi. II. Our Covenant or Condition. Delivered, That we should.

Well, well, it is past now ; if it were to come ; It is, that we being delivered ; if it were, that we being to be delivered, we would tell another tale : we would be glad and fain so to covenant, O deliver us (then) but for this once, and we would serve Him (that we would) and be holy and righteous, and what He would besides. Put any Ut, to liberati, then. We would then seek it of Him, that now is offered by Him, to be delivered ; if being so delivered, we will covenant, but to do that, which we were bound to do, delivered or no. c we would have covenanted to serve Him.

And, why should we think much of this serviamus ? All the world knowes, if the plot had gone on, and the powder gone off ; the whole land should not have scaped ut serviamus : But should have served duram servitutem, been not in service, but in servitude. Their servitude, is changed into this service. A blessed exchange for us, Great odds between those two : Nay, no comparison at all, between God's service, and their servitude ; their bondage, thralldome, slavery, tyranny, I cannot heap too many names. God's service is freedom in respect of that : Nay, without any respect at all, His service is perfect freedom : we say it, we pray it, every day. we should have served, if not delivered. And served a worse. For the service, serviamus.

And if no comparison, in Serviamus ; None, in Illi (I am sure.) Nay, if there were any thing to mislike in serviamus, amends is made for it, in Illi. For, the service is much thereafter, as the Illi ; the party is, whom we serve. Dignitate Domini honorata sit conditio servi. He may be so great a State (we serve) as, it is an honour to serve Him. Now how great a Lord, the Lord of Lords is, what shall I need to tell you ? There is no end of his greatness. How great, and how good wit hall, res ipsa loquitur : that appeares, by our delivery, in part : and more shall, by For the party, Illi. For His greatness.

by His eternall reward laid up, for them that serve Him. There is in all the world, no more honourable, nor beneficiall Service, than, this serviamus Illi.

But say, we have no mind to serve Him, if we serve not Him, yet serve we must, and serve we will, if not Him, some other. It is the condition of our life, one or other serve we doe. We must hold of some Lord: if free from one, another we serve: And who is that other; when we are free from GOD, from righteousnes, we serve sin and Satan (a worse service, I dare say:) better then, be free from them, and serve God in righteousness.

If we serve not Him, some other we must,
and worse.
Rom. 6. 18, 20
Those worse be
His enemies.

But, if we not serve Him; I aske, what will we do then? will we serve His enemies? For so are these. We were not delivered from our enemies, to serve His enemies (I am sure) That were a soule shame for us: that were against all reason. But, if we serve not Him, we serve them. Resolve then to serve Him, that hath saved us: Not, His enemies, in a prophane and unrighteous; but Him, in an holy and righteous course of life. And so, am I now come to that, wherein our service lieth.

The Matter of our service,
I divide 2.

In holiness and righteousnes. In which two, in a sort, are recapitulate the two Tables of the Law; Holy to GOD, Righteous to men. Quod quis reverenter se habeat ad divina: Quod quis laudabiliter cum hominibus conversetur (saith Chrysostome) Reverently to performe holy duties: Laudably to have our conversation among men.

Holinesse and Righteousnesse
Both.
Math. 23. 5.

Both these (first: not either of them. To spend our service but in one, is but to serve Him by halves: in both, then, to serve Him. Neither in an unrighteous holiness; nor, in an holy kind of unrighteousnes. Neither with the Pharisee, to have all our holiness in our Phylacteries and fringes; and frequenting the Lectures of the Law (no matter how we live:) Nor with the Sadducee, live indifferent honestly, but neither believe spirit, nor look for resurrection: be Christians, like Agrippa in modico, a little Religion upon a knives point, will serve us. Neither in holiness then only, nor in righteousnes only, but in both.

Acts 23. 8.
Holinesse first.

In both, but in order though, as they stand; And holiness stands first. So, to reckon of that as our prime service. For, if there had not been some meaning in it, it is sure, righteousnes might have served for both: Religion, holiness, all vertues are συλλεβδω, in it. Summ cuique (saith righteousnes) and in that, is qua Dei, Deo. Every one, his due; And so God His.

Math. 22. 21.

Ecclus. 47. 2.

Yet are they ever thus parted, here, and else-where: Partly, to set out Gods part by it self (as the fat from the sacrifice) for the dignitie of His person: Partly, to keep up the distinction, which ever hath, & ever must be maintained, of severing things sacred from common; and holy from humane duties. And partly also to check the conceit that runs in the world abroad, O, he is a good man, lives quietly with his neighbours, payes every man his due: Every man his due? and how then? shall God lack His due? I trow not, but have His too, and His first. Reason is, He be first served.

Exod 28. 36.
Esay 6. 3.

And holiness is His due: you may read it, in the plate of gold, in the High-priests fore-head, Holinesse to the LORD: You may heare it, from the mouth of the Seraphim, they mention none of all His Attributes, but that. That they do, and do it, thrice over, Pointing us thereby, what is chief in Him, and should be chief with us, and whereto we should chiefly direct our service. Holinesse, is His due: and (hear you) so His due, as the Apostle is direct, totidem verbis, without this due payed, without holiness, shall no man ever see God.

Heb. 12. 14.

To serve Him in Holinesse.

But then, you will mark, it is to serve Him, in Holiness. Holinesse is one thing: To serve God in Holiness, is another: Holinesse we may have (at least, thinke our selves to have) but, a stately, surly kinde of Holiness it is, so as in our Holinesse, we serve Him not. But it is not enough to be holy: a service in holiness is required at our hands: that we acknowledge service in holinesse, and as servants, carry our selves and serve Him, in it.

Our service in Holinesse in the Congregation.

Psal. 111. 1.
Deut. 29. 29.
Deut. 29. 39.

Our service in holiness I divide, as the Psalm doth: Either in secreto Sanctorum, when we are alone by our selves (as, there, in secrete, good folkes faile not, to serve Him. (Or, in Synagoga in the open Assembly, with the Congregation.

Our secrete holinesse I meddle not with. Abcondita Deo nostro, I leave it to GOD. I hope, it is better, and more service-like, than our outward is. As abcondita Deo, so revelata nobis. Our Church-Service, our Service in Synagoga, the outside of it (so) that is no secret; all men see what it is, that full homely it is, nay, full rude it is (and lightly) the meaner the persons, the more faultie in it. Our holinesse is grown too familiar and fellow like, Our carriage there, can hardly be termed service, there is so very little of a servant in it.

Psal. 97. 5.

Psal. 96. 9.

1 Thes. 4. 4.

1 Tim. 2. 2.

When we do not only serve Him, but to do our service before Him, (both, are in the Text, Illi, and coram illo) as that we do when we come hither, it is to profess our service, that we come. When we come, before the presence of the Lord, the presence of the Lord of the whole earth (so the Psalm doubles it, to make us think on it the better) then, saith he, worship Him in decoro Sancto, in a holy kinde of decency, or (as we read it) in the beauty of holiness. Our holiness should have a kind of beauty with it. Holiness and Honour, the Apostle joyneth them together; Godlines and Gravity, εὐσεβεία καὶ σπουδή, and them too. Now this is that, the world complains of; there is not that decor that beauty: not that honour, nor that σπουδή, that venerable grave behaviour, in our holiness, we carry not our selves in His holy Sanctuary, where our holiness should be at the holiest, nor at His service there, as servants should, and use to do.

We stumble at the very threshold. Our very first service (or rather, the introduction to our service) in the first Table (the Table of holiness) is there set downe to be, adorabis. We turne it, shalt worship. How that is, we are told every day in the Psalm, Let us worship, and fall downe, and kneel before the LORD our Maker. It was ever in the Primitive Church, the first voyce was heard, the first thing they did, ante omnia adoremus Dominum, qui fecit nos. Before we do any thing, let us fall down and worship the Lord that made us. And it shall never be found, that they came in without it. But this shall, that men came to the Temple, purposely to adore, and that, that they did, though, their time or occasions would suffer them to do nothing else. That, they held a service, of it selfe. Now, adoration is laid aside, and with the most, neglected quite. Most come and goe without it; Nay, they scarce know, what it is. And, with how little reverence, how evill befeeming us, we use our selves in the Church, coming in thither, staying there, departing thence, let the world judge.

Why? What are we to the glorious Saints in heaven? Doe not they worship thus? Off goe their crownes, down before the Throne they cast them, and fall downe themselves after, when they worship. Are we better than they? Nay, are we better than His Saints on earth, that have ever seemed to goe too farre, rather than to come too short, in this point? There was one of them, and he was a King (no lesse person) when it was thought, he had done too much. What? uncovered? yea, uncovered (saith he) and if that be too vile, vilius adhuc sum plusquam, I will be yet more vile; Why, it is before the Lord, before whom we cannot be too low. To humble our selves before Him, it is our honour, in all eyes save such as Michal. And I reade of none, but of Rabsakeh, that upbraided King Ezekias, for saying to his people, You shall worship before this Alter. No more then, is sought from us, than Kings on earth, than crowned Saints in heaven, in their holy service do before Him.

In Malachies time, things were grown much to this passe, that now they are, to this want of regard: to think any service (though never so slight) would serve GOD well enough. When they were come to this, GOD is faine to take state upon Him, and to tell them plainly, He would have them know, He is a King, and a great King: Great: for He is King of the whole earth; Others, but of some part of it. Great: for He is King for ever and ever; Others, but for a terme of yeares. Great: for He is King of Kings, and they His lieges to, whose lieges we all are. And so falls in termes with them, that He held scorne to be so slighted over, even to these very words, Shall I take it at your hands? And then, bids them goe, and do but offer such service as this, to their Prince, do but come before him on that fashion: See, if he will be content with it, or accept his person (that is) give him a good look, if any would so appeare in his presence. No more will GOD: He knoweth no reason, why any King or creature on earth, should be used with more respect, or served with more reverence than He.

Thus serve we Him, in His holy worship: how serve we Him, in His holy things? how serve we Him, in our holiness there? I will begin, and take up the same complaint that the Prophet Malachi doth. First, Mensa Domini despecta est: The Table of the LORD is not regarded. That Sacrament, that ever hath been counted, of all Holies the most Holy, the highest and most solemn service of GOD (where are delivered to us, the holy Symboles, the precious memorials of our greatest Delivery of all;) why, of all others they speed worst. How are they in many places, denied any reverence at all, even that which prayer, which other parts have? No service then: No servants there: but bidden guests, haile-fellows, homely and familiar, as one neighbour with another. And not only, de facto none they have: but de jure, it is holden, none they ought to have. And that, so holden, as rather than they shall have any, some will suffer for it, or rather for their own proud folly, in refusing it. What time they take the cup of salvation, they will not invoke, at least not be in in specie invocantis: as the King the Prophet would. What time they receive the Cup of Blessing, they will not receive it as a blessing, as children receive it from their Parents, and their children from them. Both which, invocation and receiving a blessing were never done, but de geniculis. What shall the rest look for, if thus we serve him, when we are at the holiest?

Shall we now come to the service indeed? λατρεύειν the word here in my Text. It is no new thing, for one species to carry away the name of the genus from the rest, as in this: For, though there be other parts of GODS service: yet Prayer hath borne away the name of service, from them all. עֲבוֹדָה the Hebrews call their Common-Prayer, and that is, service. And the Greeke theirs, Λειτουργία and that is so, too. And we, when we say, At Service time, and the Service-Book, and refuse to be present at Divine Service, meane so likewise. And, GOD Himselfe seemes to goe before us, and direct us so to do. For, His house, He hath named the House of Prayer. (Observing the Rule, to give it the denomination, from that which is the chiefe service in it.) As indeed, when all is done, devotion is the proper, and most kindly work of Holiness: and, in that serve we God, if ever we serve Him. Now, in what honour, this part of holiness is; what account we make of this service, do but tell the number of them that be here at it, and ye shall need no other certificate; that in His service we serve Him but slenderly.

Thou hast magnified thy Name, and thy Word above all things; saith the Psalm. After invocation then of His Name, let us see how we serve His Word: that part of His service, which in this Age (I might say, in the error of this Age) carries away all, For, what is it to serve God in holiness? why, to go to a Sermon; All our holiday holiness, yea, and our working-day too, both are come to this, to hear (nay, I dare not say that, I cannot prove it) but, to be at a Sermon.

Our service is

Our service of GOD in the word.

The Word is Holy (I know) and I wish it all the honour that may be, but, God forbid: we should thinke, that in hoc uno sunt omnia. All our holiness is in hearing: All our service, care-service: that in effect, as much as to say, all the body were an Eare.

1 Cor. 12. 17. An error it is, to shut up His service into any one part, which is diffused through all. Another, so to doe, into this one. It is well knowne, that, all the time of the Primitive Church, the Sermon was ever done, before the Service begun. And that, to the Sermon, Heathen men, Infidels, and Jewes, Heretikes, Schismatics, Energumeni, Catechumeni, Penitentes, Competentes, Audientes, all these, all sorts of people were admitted: But, when they went to service, when the Liturgie began, all these were voided; nor one of them suffered to stay. It were strange, that, that should be the only, or the chief Service of God, whereat, they which were held no servants of God, no part of the Church, might and did remaine no lesse freely, than they that were.

But even, this holy Word (wherein all our holiness is) how serve we Him, in it? Nay, we serve Him not, we take the greatest liberty there, of all other. We come to it, if we will: we go our wayes, when we will: stay no longer than we will: and listen to it, while we will: and sleep out, or turne us and talke out, or sit still, and let our mindes rove (the rest) whither they will: take stich at a phrase, or word, and censure it, how we will. So, the Word serves to make us sport: we serve not it. At this part of service in holiness, we demeane our selves with such liberty (nay licentiousness rather) that holy it may be, but sure service it is not, nothing like. And truly, it is a notable Stratagem of Satan, to shrink up all our holiness, into one part: and into that one, where we may be, or not be: Being, heare or not heare: Hearing, mind, or not minde: Minding, either remember or forget: Give no account to any, what we doe or nor doe: Only, stay out the houre (if that) and then go our way; many of us as wise as we came.

Ezek. 33. 3. But all (in a manner) hearing as (Ezekiel complaineth) a Sermon preached, no otherwise than we do a Ballad sung: and doe even no more of the one, than we do of the other. Eye-service Gods likes not (I am sure) no more (should I think) doth He care-service. Speak on Lord for thy servant heareth (and well if that, but scarce that, otherwhile:) but, speak on LORD, whether thy servant hear or no: would any of us be content with such service? Yet this is all: to this, it is come. Thus we serve Him in holiness: This service must serve Him (as the world goes;) for, if this way we serve Him not, we serve Him not at all.

Our service in holiness out of the Congregation.
To His Name, Psal. 111. 9. Psal. 99. 3.
But all Gods Service in holiness, is not in the Church. Some is abroad. And, when we are forth of the Church, neither Word, nor Sacraments, nor Common-Prayer, there: Onely there, we serve Him in His Name.

And, Holy and reverend is His Name (saith one Psalm,) And, Great and fearful is His Name (saith another.) Now, how unholy, this holy; how unreverently, this reverend Name is used: upon how small cause, this great; how without all fear, this fearfull Name is taken up in our mouth, I must say it againe and againe (which Saint Augustine saith) Aures omnium pulso, conscientias singulorum convenio: I speak to the eares of all in generall; I convent the conscience of every one in particular, that heareth it. That, which by Him is magnified above all things, is by us vilified beneath all things. We pray for it first: we regard it last, certainly. For if it be indeed holy, let no man count it common. If not count it so: not use it so: for, what we use as common, eo ipso we make it unholy (quantum in nobis est;) for, common and holy are contradividentia.

Psal. 138:
Matth. 6. 9.
Acts 10. 15.

1 And to make it so common, that is, to prophane it: Evill enough that. 2 But in the eagerness of our spirits, to use it to grievous execrations, that is more, even to pollute it: A worse matter far. 3 But beyond both these, to let it come to this, that we grow unsensible of both, and both passe from us, and we have no feeling of either, this is worst of all. Call we this to serve Him in Holiness, for this dayes delivery, when we so serve His Name?

Ezek. 39. 7.
Our service to God in righteousness.

But neither is all God service in holiness alone: Some is in honest dealing with men, in righteousness: Gods is served in that too. He that hath done a piece of good justice, downward: that hath done his duty to his Superiour upward: that hath dealt equally with his even Christen: in so doing, hath not only dealt well with men, but done God good service also. That a man may goe from Church, and yet say truly, he goes to serve God, if he go about these.

Well, how goes our righteousness? How serve we God there? Divers errors are committed in that, too.

Holiness held a discharge, from righteousness.

One is of them, that think holiness a discharge from righteousness quite. So they serve God, and heare Lectures (as the terme is) they take themselves liberty to pay no debts, to put their money out to usury, to grinde their tenants; yea, and so they misse not such Lecture, in such a place, they may do any thing then. Nay, God is served in righteous doing, as well, nay, better, than in holy hearing.

Righteousness held no service

A second kinde (which I like not neither) that when men deale honestly, keep touch, pay their debts, they are so brave, so imperious upon it, so like great Lords, as if righteousness were no service, all were meere liberality they did, men were bound to them for doing it, they were not bound to do it, Nay, we serve in righteousness, too, That also is a service (sure.)

Righteousness measured by the Common Law
Isay 29. 13.
Mica. 6. 18.

A third, and that very common, of them that make the law of man, a scantling of their righteousness: and further than that will compell them, they will not go, not an inch; nor so far neither, sine timore, but for feare. Yea, not only our righteousness to men: but even our fear to God is taught us by man's precepts: and in both, so the Statutes of Omri be observed, all is well. But, whatsoever a man else may make sure, he cannot make sure his soule, by the Law of the Land. This righteousness here, goes up to God and His Law and pierces deeper beyond the outward act, even to the inward man: whence, if ours come not, or whither, if it reach not; Man we may (perhappes) but God, in righteousness, serve we not.

But even according to mans Law, our righteousness goes not well so, neither. The Philosopher gives a rule, when a people is just or righteous, according to mans law: (God's he knew not) and that is, when justice wants work, hath little to do. By which rule, ours is in no very good case: Men are so full of suits, so many causes depending before every seat of Justice, so much to do: and all to repair the wrongs of our unrighteous courses, while each one seeks rather, to over-rule men by wrong, than to serve God by right.

And this were not so evil, if all the injustice were below: if the Seats which are set to doe justice and righteousness, were themselves right. For, fares it not even with them, as the Prophet Hosee saith, The Princes of Israel are as they that remove the land-mark: Each Seat seeking to enlarge their own border, and to set their meer-stones within the others ground? A full unnatural thing in a body, that one arme should never thinke it selfe strong enough, untill it had cleane shrunk up the sinews of the other. But I say. These things, being amended, we shall be so much the more in a forwardnesse, to serve God, both in holinesse and righteousness: And so, for the matter of our service, keep our Covenant.

Our righteousness too much worke.

The Seats of righteousness faulty.
Hos. 5. 22.

For the manner, now. To serve Him, sine timore, without fear: 2 Coram ipso, before Him: 3 Omnibus diebus nostris, all the dayes of our life.

1. Sine timore, without fear. And so, in a sense we do. So without fear at all, as if men were afraid, to seem to fear God. But this is no part of His meaning, without feare (here) is not without feare of Him (of God) but, that being now without feare of our enemies, we should do it, the rather. For, who being in a bodily feare; who having Pharaoh and his host hard at their backs, could quietly think of serving God? That, even God Himselfe, did rid His people of that feare before ever He gave them His law, to serve Him by. But when mens mindes are quiet from the agonie and terrour of it, when they are settled in tranquillo: they should in all reason then, better intend His service.

And, will we (think you) if we be so out of fear, intend it the better? without doubt, in experience, we find it contrary. For, except we be held in feare, we scarce serve Him at all: how soone we are out of feare, we forget our selves, and our service, yea, God, and all. True: yet for all that, the service so done in fear, is but a dull, heavy service. It likes Him not. God loves letum, lubens, when being at liberty, with a liberall minde we do what we do. Lati serviemus Regi (say they in Genesis) and it pleased the King: And it pleaseth God as well, if the service we do, we do it cheerefully, without mixture of fear, or any servile affection.

Without this fear to serve Him, but not without His fear. Nam, si Dominus, If He be a Lord (as if wee be His servants, a Lord He is) ubi timor? where is My fear saith He in Malachy? As love, to a father: so fear, to a Lord, doth belong most properly. And, this is not Old Testament only: the Apostle is as direct, in the New: if we will serve Him to please him (and as good not serve, as serving not please) if we will so serve Him, we must do it, with reverence and feare: κατασκευάζετε τὴν ψυχὴν ὑμῶν ὡς ἐν κυρίῳ, ὡς ἐν δεσπότῃ. Neither rudely then, without fear: nor basely, with fear: But reverently, with feare; and cheerefully without feare: (that is the meaning.)

2. To serve Him Coram Ipso, before Him, Coram Ipso: for, coram me, is the terme of the Law: As if He were present, and looked on. And it helps much to our service, so to do it: Helps our reverence not to do it rudely: (we do it before Him.) Helps our sincerenesse, without hypocrisie, to do it as before Him: For, these two words, coram ipso, are the bane of hypocrisie.

All things are before Him: In nothing can we get behind Him, or where He cannot see us. But, some things are before Him and men, both: Those, we call not, before Him, properly. Properly, that is, before Him, that is, before none but Him. That is, the heart. Coram homine, the service of the eye, Coram ipso, the service of the heart. Men love no eye-service neither, if they could discover it, but they are faine to take it; the heart is not coram ipso; Coram ipso it is. Upon that, is His eye: and nothing pleases Him: if the heart be away: for that, of all other, is His peculiar Coram Ipso.

It is a broken service, if any part; chiefly, if the chiefe part (the heart) be away. It would be entire, and with all parts, since all are before Him.

It is a mock-service, as if what serves man, would serve Him: as if we could complement it with God, with face and phrases, as with men we do.

3. The last, is omnibus diebus nostris. As sincere, without faining: So, constant without fainting. Coram me, excludes the Pharisaicall service of the out-side of the platter: Omnibus diebus, the Bethulian service, for certaine dayes, and no longer.

You shall have few, but will serve God at a brunt: have certain pangs of godlinesse come upon them at times: be affected for the present, with a delivery, grow a little holy upon it. That little, is little worth. God complains in Malachy, That in their holinesse they puffed, and blew, as men short-winded, quickly weary of it, and soone out of breath. And in Hosee, that their righteousness was as the morning-cloud, scattered, and gone, before the Sun was an houre high.

To serve Him then, not with usura exigui temporis, some small time primis diebus, two or three dayes at the first, and then, desuncti, we have quit our selves well: but from day to day, as long as there is a day left to serve Him in; So long to serve Him. To serve Him to the very last,

That, all the dayes of our life.

More. The dayes
since.

The merciful and gracious Lord hath so done His marvellous acts, that they ought to be had in everlasting remembrance; all of them. But some more especially: for some are more than marvellous: As was this of ours. That if quibusdam diebus, would serve for them: Omnibus diebus, is little enough for this: So more than gracious, so more than marvellous, so more than both, in this: as the memory of it, never to die; never to decay, but our dayes and it, to determine together.

And for all that, though omnibus diebus, all our days, and in them all: yet not in them all alike. So in all, as in some, more than other some, Suscipiunt magis & minus. So then to serve: as in our dayes after the delivery, we do it, more, and better, than before: And upon the day it selfe (that is, as this day) we do it, most of all.

And this day most.
It will be wise.
ly done to keep our Covenant.

Thus, we have laid forth our Covenant, both for matter and manner. Wherein, if we will deale as just men, we must keep it: and if deale as wise men, we will keep it. For who knows, but we may (perhaps) stand in need of a delivery again? If we behave our selves frowardly in His Covenant, what shall become of us then? How shall we hope for such another at His hands? And if He doe not, who can deliver us from such another?

We shall be without fear of such another.

But, such another (we hope) shall never come: And I wish, and hope so, too. But should hope so the rather, if I could see, we did but set our selves to serve Him, as hath been said. Otherwise, the devill, he is our enemy; (that is once.) And if we had no other, he is enough: An unquiet spirit he is; I trust him not, though ever since, he sleeps the Foxes sleep. For the breach of our covenant, if he be let loose, he is able to do mischief enough. And we have the amends in our hands. Liberati we had, Serviamus we returned not. Returne it then, and then we shall be without fear of any more.

We shall be in hope of a reward.

And not only without fear: but we shall be in hope also; and that, not of a new deliverance only (if need be) but of a further matter. For though our service be due; without any: but much more due, upon a delivery, specially such as ours this day was, though no more ever should be done for us: yet that we may know, we serve a Lord of great bounty, this shall not be all: over and above our assurance to be delivered, toties quoties; we shall not be unconsidered for our service, besides. Let our delivery goe, transcat: He desires no service, but for a reward.

Reward is in the body of the word λατρεύω to (serve.)

And so I returne now to the word of our vice, the word of our Text, λατρεύσαι. In λατρεύσαι, there is λαέω: And λαέω, is a recompence or reward. Gods service is λατρία. Delivered we were by Covenant: Of His great bounty, Rewarded we shall be beside. It is in the very body of the word (this.)

The reward of our service:

Without fear

Rev. 14. 11.

So here is λαέω an λαέω: λαέω in our delivery, and λαέω in our recompence. Let one of them, λαέω or λαέω: or, if not one of them both of them, prevaile with us, to see Him served.

And what shall the reward be? I will tell you that, and so end. It shall be the Grand deliverance in the Benedictus, here. And ours of the day was a riddance of us, from our bodily enemies, for the time; and we set in a State of temporall peace, which we have enjoyed ever since: So, the finall reward of our service shall be a riddance from our ghostly enemies, for ever, that come not with a puffe or blast of Powder, but with a lake of fire and brimstone, the smoke where of shall ascend for evermore. To be rid of them, and so being rid, to enjoy a State, of perfect, of eternall peace and security, without ever fearing more, sine timore, indeed.

Before Him.
Psal. 16. 12.
All the dayes of our life.

And to make it every way correspondent: for coram ipso here; it shall be, coram ipso, there. Even in His presence, in whose presence is the fulnesse of joy.

And for omnibus diebus, here: all the dayes of this transitory, short life, we shall enjoy it all the dayes of heaven. Omnibus diebus? nay omnibus seculis, all the Ages of eternity. And so, for that, which in Law is held but as a lease of seven yeares, have an everlasting free-hold, in His heavenly Kingdom, there to reap the reward of our Service, world without end.

A
SERMON
 Preached before the
KINGS MAIESTIE
 AT
WHITE-HALL,
 On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
Anno Dom. MDCXVIII.

ESTER. CHAP. IX. VER. XXXI.

Observantes dies sortium & suo tempore cum gaudio celebrarent :
 sicut constituerant Mordochæus & Ester, & illi observanda susceperant a se, & femine suo, Jejunia & clamores & Sortium dies.

To confirm these dayes of Purim, according to their severall seasons : as Mor-dochai the Jew, and Ester the Queen had appointed them, and as they had promised for themselves, and for their Seed, with fasting and prayer.

HERE have we the making of a new Holy-day (over and above those of GOD's in the Law.) And the making it, by Royal authority, and the Peoples assent ; and so, of the nature of an Act or Statute : a good president for us, that have made the like. Here is a joynr concurrence, of Mordochæus advising, Queen Ester authorizing, they (that is, the people :) undertaking for them and their Seed, to confirm, what ?
Purim ; there is the Day ; when ? at the appointed times, that makes it a set day : how ? with fasting and crying (that is, prayer) that makes it an Holy-day. Upon what ground all this ? That is in the Word Purim, the name of the day. It is called Purim : (that is) lots : as much to say as, the Lot-holy-day.

This name it came to have, for that there was a dismal day coming toward them, by meanes of a lot cast ; which (yet) it was their lot to escape. In the remembrance of which escape, this Day was thus ordained : and the like may so be upon like occasion.

The summe.

Thus it was. Hamar, one in highest favour with King Assuerus, had taken a displeasure of Mardocheus: and, a feud it was, the strangest feud that hath been heard of: not with all of his kinne; or all of the name; but, with all of the nation, all the Jewes, because Mardochai (forsooth) was a Jew.

His quarrel was at Mardochai alone; none had offended him, but he; yet such was his pride, or malice, or both, as I know not how many thousands, men, women and children, must die all: for no other cause, but that it happened, Mardochai to be their Countryman. For, other trespass had they made him none.

Well, in the height of his favour with the King, and by a wrong suggestion, he obtained the lives and goods of all the Jewes in the Land. And, when he had them now in his hand, and might have dispatched them out of hand; that he would not; (see how men shall be transported and forget themselves!) in a strange kind of insolency (they call it bravery) fell to make a lottery of their lives. And Pur, the lot, was cast; what month first; then, what Day of the month, they should have all their throats cut. It fell to be the XIV. of Adar (that is) FEBRUARY: and then, he got a Proclamation, that upon that day all the Jewes should be put to the sword.

Chap. 7. 10.

But, before that day came, by the goodnesse of GOD, it was the poor Jewes lot, to escape for all that: And in the mean time, the lot turned upon the lot-caster: and he that intended this great Massacre, it fell to his lot to be hanged himself. And, this was the ground of their holyday. That, in remembrance of this lottery-day, that should have been the XIV. of Adar, as the Eve or Vigil, and the XV. as the Feast or Holy-day it self, should religiously be kept for ever; as, to this day, it is.

This comes somewhat to our case. For, as they were in danger then, by a lot; So were we, this day, by a plot, in as great danger as they, and as strangely delivered; We, from our plot, as they, from their Lot; and so, as deeply bound, and by this Text, as perfectly enabled, to make a Day of Purim, as ever were they.

A plot, and a lot, though they sound alike, yet (with us) they differ much. A lot seemes meerly casual; a plot is laid with great circumspection: but with GOD, they are in effect all one. The best laid plots, with Him, prove no better but even as uncertain lots, but even hap-hazard, if He list to disappoint them. So as upon the matter, quoad Deum, lot or plot, no great odds: both come to one. Seeing then, there is no more odds, and that there is in every Text, a predominant word: and, in this Text, the word Purim is it, we will insist upon that word, and account them lots both: ours, as well as theirs.

The division.

To make a like day, with a like observation, there are required, 1 a like ground: and like authority.

To shew the ground like, we are to shew the lots to be like: theirs, and ours. Like 1 in the casting in, the intent or danger: 2 like in the drawing out, the event or escape.

I.

In the casting the lots, or intent, these four: 1. The lots that were cast; their peril, and ours. 2. The parties, on whom they were cast: the Jewes, and our selves. 3. The parties, by whom they were cast: their Haman, and ours. 4. And the cause, or colour, for which they were cast.

In the drawing or event, four more: 1 The means of their and our escape, 2 the manner, 3 the time, and 4 the issue.

In all these, to match theirs and ours, And, in all these, I make no doubt, this of ours will more than match that of theirs: the lot of our danger more fearfull, the lot of our deliverance more wonderfull.

II.

And if so, then have we as good ground, as they; nay better, than they any. This for the ground. But, that alone is not enough: yet lack we authority. Here it is: the Queen, by advice, injoyning it; The people submitting to observe the day, at the appointed time.

We conclude then: the ground being all one, on which (a famous deliverance:) the authority the same, by which (the Queen there, the King here, injoyning it:) these being alike, alike bound to us, super animas nostras, for a like day of ours, even the day on which it was our lot to escape; at a like time, that is, once a year: and in like manner, to be holden, as theirs, with prayer, and crying, though of another nature.

And this Record (here) in the Roll of Ester, shall be our warrant for so doing against all opposers.

THE lot is cast in the lap, but GOD giveth the hap: it is Salomon, in Proverbs c. 16. v. 33. ^{I. The Ground!}
 We begin with the lot in the lap, Hamans lap, the danger: And come after to the hap ^{The Danger!}
 GOD gave, the happy deliverance. The danger. 1 They and we had but one lot both: to be destroyed quite, utterly. And we agree in two more: 2 to be destroyed all: 3 to be destroyed on a set day: these three.

But in all three, our lot the worse every way. And the worse it is in the lap (the lot) the better it is in the hap, if we scape it.

Utter destruction to both. But their lot was a sword, to be slain. Our Pur was πυρ πυρς: Our lot, fire and powder, to be blown up. Of the twain, this the worse. ^{Utter destruction,}

The sword is in a hand, and that hand is guided by the heart, and that heart may relent at the sight of a silly innocent babe, a poor old man, a woman great with child; so some hope, for some to scape there. But fire, no hope for any: Fire cannot relent, that spares none.

Yet Saint Jude speaks of saving some by plucking them out of the fire; But not this fire: no ^{Jude 23!}
 plucking out here, no scaping for any: all dispatched in a moment, past saving all. Faciessemus sicut Sodoma: nay worse. That came from Heaven, this from Hell: from Hell-ward ^{Rom. 9. 29!} at least. There, three: here, not one should have escaped. Lots case, his lot will end this; ^{Gen. 19. 21,} his lot to all intents: better when he scaped the fire of Sodom, than when the sword of the ^{Gen. 14. 13,} four Kings in battel, This the most destruetive destruction of all: If any more than other, ² this is it. Might we draw lots for our death, we would never draw this. And this was our ^{General De-}
 lot. ^{struction,}

A general Lottery was intended in both. Truly might his Majestie have said, as ever did ³ Queen Esther (Chap. 7. ver. 4.) Traditi sumus ego & populus meus, Betrayed we are I and ^{Chap. 3. 6.} my people.

And will ye mark, how like of Haman it is said, Pro nihilo duxit in unum Mardocheum manus mittere: He thought it nothing to lay hands on Mardochei alone, magisque voluit omnem Nationem perdere: No less would serve him, but the havock of the whole Nation: cap. 3. ver. 6. Said not our Haman the same? What? lay hands on the King; (as one of them offered) Tush, that is not worth the while, magisque voluit omnem Nationem; Nay, if we shall do it indeed, be right Hamans, up with King, and Parliament and all; make a general lottery of it in any wise. Haman right (this) in his own terms.

But though in this, they seem to be even (both our lots:) yet draw them, ours is the longer, sensibly. For though Haman presumed very near, when he came to the Kings side, touched the Queens life: Yet well-fare Haman (say I) in this, the King he touched not; No harm to him;
 the King was out of Hamans lottery. Here, the King was in, too: Ours went to Queen, and Prince, Peers, and Prelates, and Commons, yea, King and all. Omnem Nationem, but not Regem, there. Omnem Nationem, & Regem, here. This was universal indeed: And we, in this, beyond them.

Theirs was in diem, against a day. Ours was so, too. So, the lots even.

With Haman, Missa est sors in urnam, quo die deberent gens interfici; exiit Adar. Die they must, that was resolved; That was not enough. (See whither pride will carry men!) He would ³ cast the dice (as it were) draw cuts, make a lottery, of no less matter than mens lives. And that ^{On a set day!}
 not of a dozen or a skore, but of a whole Nation, which day, and which moneth they should die all, ^{Chap. 3. 7.}
 And, In this casting; they went from moneth to moneth, and from day to day, till at last, there (with Haman) the lot fell on the fourteenth of Adar: and with ours, on the fifth of November.

And Take this with you too: Hamans lottery was in Nisan (that is, March) the first moneth, but it fell not till Adar (that is, February) the last moneth: so a twelve-moneth between. And was it not so with us? A year before, nay more than a year, was our day set. And first, it was in the moneth Adar, in February (as theirs was just;) but by proroguing the Parliament, we scaped, and were reprieved once and again. But to it again they went, and so at last the lot fell on this very day, to be the day of our Purim. Thus farre the lots Even.

But then here again there fell odds on our parts, two ways. 1. One, the Jewes had notice of their day; It was proclaimed: so they that could, might have slipped away secretly, and so scaped. And they that were watched, that they could not well, yet they might make their souls ready, and die prepared. And even that, when there is no Remedy, but die we must, it is good not to be surprized on the sudden, but to have some warning, that so we may make us ready for GOD. But see our case now: We know not of our day, we. The day was kept as close as the powder: we had gone off suddenly, to the great hazard (as it may be feared) of many a soul,

But their day known, Our not soul, that for default of this, had perished (indeed:) perished here, and perished eternally. Against a lingering death we pray not; ab improvisa morte, we do: And mors improvisa had been our lot then. Here is then the first odds. Both were in diem; but theirs in diem certum, certainly known to them all. Ours (as I may say) in diem certum, and yet incertum: Certain to Haman, to them; they knew it perfectly: Uncertain to us: We knew not whether any such day or no: We had gone to it, We had drawn our lot blind-fold. So ours worse than theirs.

2. Another odds there is (worse yet than this) in the dayes. For, what was the fourteenth of Adar, but an ordinary common day? But the fifth of November (as it fell out) was the first day of a Parliament; a famous day, as comes in many years. That not only when we should have said Tax & securitas; but when we should have been in all our glory, when even at the time, Repentinus venit super eos interitus, the most unseasonable time of all had been our lot, a heavy lot, if it had light.

Theirs, an ordinary.
Ours, a Parliament-day.
1. Thel. 5. 3.

When men go to their death, they would go mourning, all in black, as the manner is. But when they are going in all Pomp and Magnificence, then to be shot off, and flie all in pieces! No man would draw that lot if he could scape it. Yet that was our lot, and at this very time.

For a King to be made away, is a thing not unheard of: but in this manner, a King to be made away, in his robes royal, the Imperial Crown on his head, the Scepter in his hand, sitting on the Throne of his Kingdom, in the midst of all his States, then and there, and in that manner; that passes all: that the lot, that never yet hath been heard of. And let it never be heard of? Let never King have the lot so to perish: Pity any ever should. Yet this was Tours (Sir) like to have been. Too much oddes this. And this for the lot, that was cast.

2. The Parties
On whom.

Now for the Parties, on whom this lot cast. There, sure I am, we have the vantage. The Parties, in the Text, who were they, but a sort of poor scattered Jewes of the captivity, in a strange Countrey far from their own, and in their enemies hands. Far otherwise was it with us, here, No Captives we, but a flourishing Kingdom, as any under Heaven. Not in any forrein part, ours; but at home in our own native soil.

It had been somewhat for Assuerus to take away so many lives at once; But his Captives they were, he might do with them, what he would, in rigour of Law: so, their end had been by lawfull Authority. But in ours, no colour, no shadow of any law, but a most barbarous treachery against all Law, both of God and man. Alas! the Jewes they had neither Prince nor Peers, they were no State. What talk I of them? I should wrong our selves much, to stand on this any longer.

3. The Parties
By whom.

Chap. 3. 1.

Exod. 2. 13.

This for upon whom. Now, by whom, the lots were cast. For it was our lot to have our Haman too. The Lot-master and the Plot-master. I hold them Hamans both. But first, where they had but one, we had many. And then theirs nothing to ours. Haman was to the Jewes a stranger in Nation, for he was an Agagite: A stranger in Religion, for he was an Heathen man. Ours were no strangers in Nation; the same Nation that we. No Turks or Infidels, but professing the same CHRIST, that we; and better than we (they say:) for right Catholikes they, and not Christians, but (which is more than Christians) Jesuites, some of them. Better for an Israelite to suffer at the hands of an Aegyptian, than of an Israelite his brother, as Moses told them. Better at the hands of the uncircumcised, than of the people of GOD. The Jewes, they had perished by the hand of an Alien, and a Pagan; If our lot had been so, it had been the less unhappy. But our lot it was, to be shot thorow with our own ordinance: JESUS to have blown up CHRIST; and one Christian man to have committed such a butcherly barbarous act, upon another (nay, many others) such an act, as never was heard among the Heathen, to the eternal stain of all that profess Christ.

Chap. 7. 6.

Wicked Haman is his Epithete. Too good for those, that not only as a brood of Vipers, sought to gnaw out the bowels of their own damme (which Haman never did;) but in such sort did it, as all the malice of man, calling to it the malice of the Devil, could never invent the like. But a degenerate Christian is the worst man; and the worst man is the worst Creature, of all others.

4. The Cause or Colour.
Chap. 2. 5.

And what might be the cause of all this? It seems the same in both. Hamans was, because that he was not worshipped by Mardochei. And in ours too, If we ask — quo numine laeso, Quidve dolens, we shall find, it was much to that, even the not worshipping of one no whit less proud, than Haman. And here, they will fall short too. For in our, Mardochei must fall down, and kiss his feet; which Haman in all his pride never required.

Chap. 2. 8.

But it were hard to destroy an whole Nation, for no other cause, but that one man of them would not make him a leg. We must have some other than this, some better pretence must be had, sure. So have all evil things, one thing for the cause, another for the colour. In good, one serves for both. Sure in effect, the same was that of ours, that here was suggested by Haman. These same Jewes (saith he) they are a people with a Religion by themselves; As much to say (with us) as, a sort of Hereticks they be, the world were well rid of them; it makes no matter, up with them all.

But then, here comes a difference again, to make ours the worse. Haman made it but a matter of policy, It is not for the Kings profit to suffer them. Ours made it not less than a matter of Religion.

ligion. Religion was at the stake. A case of meer Conscience: not to do any thing, but the Oracle consulted first, the Father Provincial, who ex tripode resolved it for such. And as if he had all our lives in his hand, answered in no other style, than did Assuerus, Cap. III. Ver. XI. De populo fac quod libet, As for this people, dowish them what ye list: with them, and with the King too (which was more than here did Haman) blow them up and spare not. And though there be of our own Catholicks among them, no force; blow them up, for all that: It is for Religion, this.

I conclude all, with the very fight, if this lot of theirs had fallen to our lot.

It had been an heavy fight (as in the Massacre of Paris) to have seen men tumbling in their own blood here and there in the streets: Nothing to this, to see men torn in sunder, heads from shoulders, arms from legs, both from the body; quarters and half quarters flying about: the brains fly one way, the bowels another; blood spilt, like water in the river, in the fields, in every corner of the streets, never the like fight, and so never the like lot to this.

Now then; since in our lot, 1 the destruction more destructive (for by Powder) 2 more general (for King and all with us:) 3 upon a less certain, and upon a more famous day: Our Nation more noble; our Haman more wicked: Their cause and colour more to be abhorred: I conclude, our lot was the worse, and the worse the lot, the better the escape: the better it, and the better deserving a Holy day for it. And this for the lot in the lap.

Now to GOD that giveth the Hap.

Where first I note, that the word Pur is no Hebrew, but a Persian word; yet it was thought meet to retain it. They give this reason, for that, the same word Pur (in Hebrew) signifieth to disappoint; shewing plainly, that the Hebrews GOD should give an Hebrew Pur to the Persian Pur; disappoint the Persian lot: and though it were cast, yet not suffer it to light, though.

We find at the XXIV verse, Haman did cast but Pur in the singular, but one single lot (He needed cast but one, since all were to go one way, none to escape;) yet the Day is called Purim, that is the plural, as if there were more than one, some other beside that of Hamans. And so it was fit there should, that there might be as well a good lot as an evil. The truth is, there can be no lottery of one; there behove to be two at least: two diverse. The Law is so. The first lots we read of, that ever were cast, were between the two Goats, Levit. 16. Whose lot it should be to die, and whose to scape, to be the Scape-Goat. Here was never a Scape-goat in Hamans; slain-goats all: so, beside the Law quite. GOD took Haman casting lots beside the Law, and he took the matter into his own hand; and he did it regularly, made two lots to two ends, and for two parties. One for Mardochai and the Jews, them one: for Haman another: GOD put in one for him too, by his leave. Mardochai saith it plainly in the Greek Supplement c.l.v.X. that GOD made two lots, and gave them forth; one for his own people, and one for the wicked, (meaning wicked Haman) So have ye Haman's Pur, (he cast but one, which was disappointed and never drawn:) And GODS Purim (two of his putting in, and both drawn.) And it is well we have removed out of Haman's into a better hand, that we may say, In manibus tuis sortes mea (as saith the Psalm) Not in Hamans hands are our lots, but in thine. Psalm 31.19

Two good hopes we have thereby. 1. One that though it was nothing with Haman, to lay hands on Mardochai, nor with ours on the King; yet with God it will be somewhat, say much: That God will be otherwise minded, than Haman or they. Not magisque voluit omnem Nationem perdere, but magisque voluit omnem Nationem servare; rather see Haman hanged, and a dozen such as he, than that a whole Nation should perish in this manner.

2. And then secondly, seeing they be now in Gods hands, be the lot what it will, or in what lap it will, in Haman's own lap (to be sure) yet when it comes to the drawing, God will give it forth, which way, and with what success He pleaseth. And when all is done, what Haman, nay, what Assuerus himself doth purpose, God will dispose; and there will be neither lot, nor plot, against the Lord. And so we come to Gods Purim, to His lottery.

Wherein we are again before them as many wayes; in the 1 means, the 2 manner, the 3 time, and the 4 issue, all four. 1. The fewer means, the more like a lot: and we had no means. They had, and used means, both to GOD and man. To GOD by fasting and fervent prayer, which prevails with him much. To man, to King Assuerus; they had the Queens mediation, which prevailed with him too. We used none, either to God or man; fasted not, prayed not, suspected no evil to be toward, and so used neither. There is no cause, no means in a lot. It is Saint Augustines note, that it is therefore termed the Lot of Righteous (in the Psalm) and in the Apostle, Sors sanctorum; for that, merit or means there is none at all; God only allots it to us. And such was ours; not by means, as they; but delivered (as I may say) from a lot, by a lot, a meer lot. So our Purim (we may say) was more pure than theirs. Psalm 125. 3
Colos. 1. 12

But though no means we had to God, yet a means from God we had; they and we both. For from a King it came, in both. But far otherwise in the manner with us, than with them, two wayes. 1. First, with them the delivery came from the King, and well might. For from him came their danger, from his proclamation under his hand and seal; without which, Haman could have made no lottery of himself. With us, in a better manner, and so our lot better. For from the King came our escape; but no danger from him. He as deep in the danger as we. Nothing that was evil, nothing that pertained to any peril from Him: but our safety solely and wholly from Him, next to GOD.

Another

Another yet. For in theirs, the King had been mis-informed by Haman, was set right by the Queen's most true information; and this is a regular, common way. But ours, by no information of Ester, or of any: only by meer inspiration, immediately from God, by making that come into the Kings head, which neither did, nor would have come into any mans head else: the more sure that it came from God, since so great a salvation was wrought by it. For the burning of the paper, if he had taken it in the sense that others did, or any would have done, we had all been burnt indeed, as soon as the paper. But God drew from him a sense beside all sense, even as it were by a lot, since (to all mens seeing) it was rather a casual, than a rational interpretation. The drawing of that sense, was even like the drawing of a lot: so that, forte mira servati sumus; and never any more true Purim, than this of ours. And though men, when they escape, stand not so much on the means or the manner (it is well, they are well:) yet, it cannot choose but do us much good, to see our selves saved, by so royal a means, and in so miraculous a manner. It is a sign quod respicit nos Deus, God respects us, in the manner of whose saving, He would shew to divine a miracle.

But beside the means and the manner, thirdly the circumstance of time is worth the considering: For in both an came about in a night. Haman had made all sure, so sure, as he had set up the gallows and all, and meant to move the King, and made no doubt but to have Mardochai hanged, the next morning. This was over-night: And that very night, did God take order, the King could not sleep. And by that means, was Mardochai's good service read to him. Sure, for saving the Kings life, he deserved not to lose his own. Now it comes to the drawing. A good lot, a prize: Honour for Mardochai. And this good lot, for Mardochai's honour, God drew even out of Haman's own mouth, he, was by the King made to be Proclaimer of it.

It staid not there. But the day following, the King being rightly enformed by the Queen, Her people were no such people, as Haman made them; one of them had saved the Kings life; with this, forth came there a good lot for the Jewes: the former proclamation called in, the Posts sent with all speed to publish another for their deliverance.

Now comes Haman's lot. God took him casting lots upon his people, and He cast one upon him too. For when the Queen fell on her knees, and begged her own life of the King, He was justly displeased with Haman's presumption, that durst come so near him, as touch her life; and straight allotted him the same death, he had hight Mardochai. And the same day in the same place, and even upon the very same gallows, he had purposely set up for him, the night before, it came to his lot, to be fairly hanged himself. This is God able to: to make Haman, in the lot he cast for the Jewes, unwittingly to draw his own destiny; and make the day by him set for them, the fatal day of his own destruction. To do this, and upon so short warning, to do it: for all this was done, in the space of four and twenty hours. Wherein we see it verified, that Salomon saith, That the Kings heart is in Gods hand, and he turns it as a water-course, to run which way He will have it, and other-while makes a damme in it, and diverts the current a quite contrary way, clean back upon Haman, to overflow him, and to drown him. Thus did He with them.

And so did He with us, and more also: and that in less time. For ours was nearer than so; and the nearer it came, the fairer our lot to escape it.

For with them, the fourteenth of Adar was not yet come; the Posts had time to go and come before it: but with us, it stayed till the very day it self was come. In a night both: but ours, the night, the next night before; so was not theirs. Ever the Scripture doth preis this point; Not till the day, Noe entered into the Ark: Not till that morning, that Lot went out of Sodom. So ours, not till the very night immediately preceding the dismal day it self. And then, when powder, and train, and march and all were in a readiness, then comes me God with His Scute hac nocte, and dashes all. They were delivered before the day came: The day it self came before we were delivered: It was hac nocte (indeed) literally. So we escaped more narrowly: our lot more near the drawing. So ours was potior tempore.

And potior jure too. For though the same issue to both; yet in that also, have we the better. A delivery there is mentioned (124. Psal.) Our soul is scaped even as a bird, out of the snare of the Fowler; the snare is broke, and we are delivered. And this is worth the drawing. But this is but Pur, a single lot: For if that be all, the bird is escaped, and that is well for the bird: but the fowler (save that he is a little deluded) he is not hurt; and so he can soon set another snare again. This is but Pur.

But Purim is better; when the fowl escapes, and the Fowler escapes not, but comes himself to a foul end. The snare is broken: No, the snare is whole, and they taken in the snare. It sprung only, and away went the fowl; but with the spring, the knot was knit anew, and Haman, and his fellow-fowlers caught, and strangled in it.

And this (lo) is Purim: Purim, after the Hebrew idiom, is the great lot. To scape a snare, and in the same snare, to have (not their foot, but) their neck taken, that set it: There is no greater. The Passover is no greater: There they escaped, and Pharoah drowned: here they escaped, and Haman hanged.

Will ye look back to the Kings sentence at the five and twentieth verse? This it is: Malum quod cogitavit contra vos, avertatur in caput ipsius. Not, Avertatur a capitibus vestris; (Esters first petition was no more, let my life be given me; Turn away my destruction: That it is too:) but that is not it. This is it; Convertatur in caput ipsius, The evil he devised, be it turned away from your your heads (that is well;) not a hair fall from any of our heads; But the same evil they devised, be it turned upon their own heads that were the devisers. This is it, and this is as much as the King could grant, or the Queen could desire.

And this same is the lot of this day. They imagined such a device, as they were near the performing, yet were not able to perform. The non-performance was well, the scattering of their imaginations; we escaped by the means. But further, they were taken in their own turn, and the evil they devised against us, returned upon their own heads: their heads and quarters both. To Hamans end they came: Nay, to a worse than Hamans, and justly; for their device, worse than his. The place they meant to have done execution upon us in, under the same place they themselves executed: Before their eyes, on whom their cruel bowels had no compassion, were there cruel bowels burnt. The heads, from which it came, to have blown up the House; the House hath blown up their heads, and so they be Agagites right. Their bodies plucked in pieces, their quarters rent in sunder, so their meaning was to have dealt with ours, This is the lot of the ungodly from the LORD. Their evil lot, and (under one) the same, the happy lot of our Deliverance. Psalm 21. 11.

And so we have done with Purim now. For by this it is plain, 1 Ours was altogether without means, and so more lot-like; 2 Ours was more miraculous in the manner, and (for all the world) like a lot: 3 Ours was more near brought in time; and (like a lot) drawn in the instant. 4 Ours was beyond theirs in the aversatur; For ours without sack-cloth or ashes, fasting or crying at all: And in the convertatur; For our Fowlers came to a fowler end than theirs; and what would we more? Never might David more truly say, than we, The lot is fallen to us in a fair ground, the LORD hath maintained our lot. Job 20. 29.

This, God hath drawn for us: Shall we now draw for Him again; and for this so fair a lot, allow Him somewhat of our part? Memento is set before the great, and so before all Holy-days. All He would draw from us, is, but that the lot of this day, or the day of this lot may never be forgotten. A benefit would not be forgotten: Not mans Gods much less. Such a benefit especially. For even in Gods, there is a difference: God hath his daily benefits, and those to be remembred of course. But some other He hath so rare, as the like never seen; Those would have a more ordinary regard. For where God is Extraordinary, we to be so too. If he make it a memorable day, by some strange delivery, we to make it memorable by some rare acknowledgement. They seem willing so to do here. Illi sunt dies, quos (say they;) Ille est dies quem (may we say) nullamquam delebit oblivio: and so let us say: and so said, and so done, is as much as God requireth. But our thankfulness is not to flie away, like a flash of powder. To fix it then, fiat volatile fixum; that would be done. And fix it in any thing else but time, time will eat it out. Best then fix it in time it self: and that hath been ever thought a wise way: so shall it roll about with the time, and renew as it doth. And so Time which defaceth all things, and bringeth them to forgetfulness, shall be made to preserve the memory of it, whether it will or no. Fix it in time; what part of time? A day; Memento diem, saith God in his Law, and so points us to the proportion of it. Set some day; and let there, then on that day, be some special commemoration of it. Psalm 16. 6.

But that day or time, is to be a set day. Fix it in time; but fix the time too. The word of the Text [זמן] is an appointed day, that comes once a year; as Solenne is quod solum in anno. Now this some will not hear of: No set dayes, no appointed times (they) but keep them in memory, all the year long. I like not that. For so when time was, it was said by some, they would not have this day nor that day, to fast on, but keep a continual fast (they:) and it seemed a pretty speculation at first, but proved nothing but a speculation: what their fast is come to, by this time we see. It is to be doubted, if other set times were likewise taken away, their continual feast would prove to no better pass, than their fast is; Better be as it is, and we do, as God and good people have done before us. II. This lot to have a time of Remembrance. Exod. 20. 8.

Provided that it shall be lawfull for them to keep the memory of this Day, every day, if they be so disposed. So yet, as they be content to allow some such Day, as this for them, that are not of so happy memories: for fear, lest it be left at large to every mans daily devotion, it may fall to be forgotten; and where it now hath one day, then to have none at all. 3. A set time, or day.

And if a set time, what day can we set so fit, as the day it self it fell on? With them, the fourteenth of Adar: with us, the fifth of November. It cannot but be the best way (this) that God took himself: and God took this. The same days He did His Noble acts upon, those very dayes, did He order once a year solemnly to be kept. The fourteenth of Nisan, did the Destroyer pass over them; that day; from year to year did He ordain the Passover to be holden. Fiftie dayes after He granted them his Law: in memory of this gift, they to keene yearly the day of Pentecost. Can we go by a better example than this of Gods own? 3. The day it fell on. Lev. 23. 5.

These two were not all; but God did as great acts after, as these were, for the same people. They then, setting before them this way skored them out by God (for every famous benefit, a solemn day;) for those other benefits after vouchsafed them, they did appoint like solemn dayes of themselves. Lev. 23. 16.

We instance in this of Purim, which Moses and the Prophets never knew. We instance in another after this, which Esther or Mardochai never knew, the Eucania or Feast of new dedicating the Temple, after it had been polluted by Antiochus, recorded in the X. of the V. of John. And I would fain know, why it should not be like acceptable to God, to keep the fourteenth of the last moneth Adar for their deliverance from Haman by Esther in Persia: as it was to keep the fourteenth of the first moneth Nisan, for their deliverance from Pharaoh, by Moses in Egypt: Quid interest?

The ground being moral, or rather natural, as reducible to thankfulness, which is a virtue of the Law of Nature: the prime example being Gods own: By warrant of it, the former Church having institute others, the Christian Church knew nothing to bar it from doing the like: so Holy-days she appointed too. It is St. Augustines (de Civitate X. 4.) Memoriam beneficiorum Dei; &c. The memorie of Gods benefits we Christians keep sacred and holy, by holding solemn feasts for them, lest else, by revolution of time, forgetfulness might creep upon us, and we prove unthankfull: And do we any other thing in appointing this day, than all these did? I conclude with the style of the Councils: Sequentes igitur & nos per omnia Sanctorum Patrum vestigia: We herein do but tread in the steps of our Holy Fathers, and follow them were followers therein of GOD himself.

If it be said all this while we hear no precept alledged, we have nothing but example: No more had Esther here: precept had she none. Only GODS example she had; Picked the fourteenth of Adar, out of the fourteenth of Nisan: from Pharaoh that, from Haman this. It is true, Dirigimur preceptis; By precepts we take our direction: but it is no less true, Instruimur exemplis: We receive instruction (in a great part) from examples also. One serves for our rule, the other for our pattern; and we, as to obey the one, so to imitate the other: For Perfectio inferiorum, assimilatio superiorum: The inferiour hath no greater perfection, than to become like to them that are his Superiours. Superiours (I say) and that, in time, no less than in place; that is, such as have in former times laudably gone before us. The Bible sheweth this plain: there, beside the Books of the Law, that serve for precepts to direction, God hath caused to be written the Story of the Bible, to yield us examples for imitation. And those Books of Story are in Hebrew, called the former Prophets, to shew, before there came any predictions into the world, there was a Prophetical force in them, to guide Gods people by. To the Law, and to the Testimony; For the practice of the Saints runneth along with the Law, under the name of Testimony; their lives having ever born testimony to God and his Truth. And as the Hebrewes say, a barren divine shall be, qui nescit facere legem de Prophetis, that out of the Saints practice cannot frame a Law.

The ground then being laid: If this be agreed of, that a day, that a set day, and that this very day may be appointed; We have two points more to touch: 1. the authority by which it is to be enjoined: and the 2 manner, according to which it is to be observed.

I
The authority by which it was enjoined.

1. The authority first: for be the ground never so good, yet are not we to take up dayes of our own heads, but by order of Authority, they are to be enjoined us. Whose authority here? There be in a Law but three things, 1 Advice, 2 authority, 3 and submission, they be all here. It should seem at the first, Mardochai did only by a letter, advise them, Ut suscipere & revertente semper anno celebrarent honore, (ver. 20.) before: and this before he was in place. That latter of his, either not taking place, or not place enough: and they being either laid down, or so like to be, here cometh now שני a second, to confirm that (as the word is) and this, no advice now, but חוק כלל with all authority: of the nature of a Law, to establish them for ever.

Now this could not Mardochai, nor Esther, say, nor both of them do of themselves in Persia: nor, without the regal authority there, or without commission from it. Nor send over the hundred twenty seven Provinces: nay, not over any one Province of them, but by vigour of Assuerus's warrant. His warrant they had at the XXV. Ver. and by it proceeded they to do all this. What Esther did, she did in the power of Assuerus.

Jonas 3. 7.
Dan. 3. 29.
Ezra 5. 13.

6. 12.

Now Assuerus (it is well known) was a Heathen King: yet have we here a Feast established by his authority. So was the King of Nineve, a Heathen too: yet have we a Fast enjoined by his. So was the King of Babel, a Heathen King: yet a Law by him made, upon pain of death not to blaspheme the true God. So were Cyrus and Darius: yet the Temple built by their authority. Things pertaining to Religion all. So that there is, in the Regal power of all, even of heathen Princes, to confirm and to injoin what may tend to the worship and service of God.

2 Cor. 13. 10.
1 Tim. 2. 2.

Power against the truth, or for falsehood, I know none: no Power to destruction: to edification, all. And Prayer is to be made without ceasing for Kings, that they may apply their power to the, to edifice in the Truth. So they will, if Mardochai may be in a place to advise them, not Haman. But if they mis-apply it, and not to the end God gave it them; (for He that gave it them, is to take account of them for it, and he will require it at their hands:) to him they be respondent.

But be this here and ever remembered, if by an Heathen Princes power this was done, shall it be denied to a Christian Prince, to one in whom Assuerus's power, and Esther's Religion (both) meet to take order for dayes, or rather rites of that nature? Well then, having both our ground, and our authority חוק (which word is, three several times repeated in this one verse, 1 Once for Mardochai, that advised; 2 for Esther, that enjoined; and 3 Once for the people that undertook to observe it: It is the Jewes operative word whereby they enact all their statutes;) Be it then enacted, what? Ut nulli liceat dies hos absque solemnitate transigere, ver. 23. That it be lawfull for no man, to pass these dayes without solemnizing.

To a Law there go two כאשר two Caasfers, two accordings. Both twain are here. 1 According as Esther with Mardochai's advice, enjoined it: 2 And, according as they (that is, the people) took upon them, decreed to observe it.

Which observing is the life of every Law: even the publick approbation, or giving allowance of it, by the constant keeping it. The second according is added for the peoples commendation; that what was prudently advised, and lawfully enjoined, was by them as dutifully observed.

And this they not only did, but bound themselves moreover, and their seed, so to continue. Themselves, and that with the highest bond, super animas suas (which is more than upon themselves, and would not have been put in the Margent, but stood in the Text) upon theirs, and upon their seeds, never to let them fall. The word is קבל at the 27. verse, that is, to make a Kabala, or tradition of it. And that is the true tradition of it indeed: when a thing orderly taken up (there is קבל) carefully, and out of conscience kept up, (there is קבל) and delivered over from the Father to the Son, and from the Son to the Nephew, to all succeeding ages; none daring to transgress it, on the charge of their souls. This Kabala made it a perfect Law.

Now a word of the manner of keeping them, and so an end. They enacted, to keep the Purim-dayes: How to keep them? It will lead us (this) to the nature of them, whether as holy-dayes or no. For, at this, there be that stick too. A feria they will allow them, a play-day, or ceasing from work: or a feast-day, if you will, a day of feasting, or encrease of fare: but not dies sanctus, no holy-day, no, at any hand; For, then may Esther make Holy-dayes (they see) it follows. What should one say to such men as these?

The manner of keeping it.

For 1 first, it is plain by this verse, they took it in animas, upon their souls; a soul-matter they made of it. There needs no soul for feria or festum, play or feasting. 2 Secondly, the bond of it reacheth to all, that Religioni eorum voluerunt copulari, (verse 27) to all that should joyn themselves to their Religion: Then a matter of Religion it was, had reference to that: what need any joyning in Religion, for a matter of good-fellowship? 3 Thirdly, it is expressly termed a Rite, and a Ceremony (at the 23. and 28. Verses) as the Fathers read them: Rites, I trust, and Ceremonies (as Holy-dayes are no more) pertain to the Church, and to the service of God; not, to merry meetings; that is not their place. 4 Fourthly, they fast and pray here, in this verse; fast the eve, the fourteenth, and so then, the day following to be holy-day, of course: 5 Fifthly, with fasting and prayer (here) almes also is enjoined (at the 22 verse) these three will make it past a day of revels or mirth. 6 Lastly, as a holy-day the Jewes ever kept it, have a peculiar service for it, in their Seders, set Psalmes to sing, set Lessons to read, set Prayers to say, (and that at four several times as (out of Neh. 9. ver. 3.) their manner is, on Holy-dayes) and good and godly all. None, but as they have used from all antiquity. 1 Being then taken on their souls, 2 restrained to the same Religion, 3 directly termed a Ceremony: 4 being to be held with fasting, prayers: and 5 Almes, works of piety all: 6 the practice of the Church concurring; theirs was a holy-day clear, and so ought ours to be. Thus have we a president, upon record, to draw up ours by: the Superiours to injoyn such a day, the Inferiours to observe it.

And as a warrant to do it, so a rule how to do it; with fasting and with crying, that is, prayer, earnest prayer (the last word.) What, and must we fast then? That were no good lot in the end of a Text. No, if we will pray well: I dare take upon me, to excuse us from fasting. Their fasting was, to put them in mind of the fast, their Fathers used (Chap. 4. 3.) by means whereof they turned GOD, and GOD turned the Kings heart, and so all turned to their good. But for us, we have no such means to remember in ours: we used not any, and so hold ours without any. They had two dayes; their holy-day had a fasting day. Our lot is to have but one; and that no fasting day: an immunity from that. So much the better is our lot: A feast, without any fast, at all.

But though without fasting, not without earnest prayer (meant here by crying;) nor, without earnest thanks and praise, neither. For joy also hath her cry, as well as affliction: The voice of joy and health is in the dwellings of the righteous. But prayer (sure) will do well at all hands, that a worse thing happen not to us. But prayer is but one wing: with Almes it will do better, make a pair of wings, which is before prescribed at the two and twentieth verse. So to eat the fat and drink the sweet ourselves, as we send a part, to them for whom nothing is provided: Dies enim sanctus est, saith Nehemias; for (by his rule) that makes it a right Holy-day.

Psal. 118. 145.

Neh. 8. 10.

But prayer is the last word here; ends the verse: and with that let us end. Even that all, that shall ever attempt the like, let Hamans lot be their lot; and let never any other light on them, but sors funiculus. Let Queen Esthers prayer, and King Assuerus's sentence ever take place, Malum quod cogitavit, convertatur in caput ipsius; Ipsius or Ipsorum, one, or many: Let not the rod of the ungodly light on the lot of the righteous. Let God in whose hand our lots are, ever maintain this days lot to us: never give forth other, but as in this Text, and as on this day, on the fourteenth of Adar, and on the fifth of November. And praised be GOD, this day, and all our dayes, that this day shewed, that He taketh pleasure in the prosperity of His servants, and from all lots and plots, doth deliver them.

Psal. 125. 3.

Psal. 50. 15.

[The text on this page is extremely faint and illegible. It appears to be a multi-paragraph document, possibly a letter or a report, with several lines of text visible across the page. The content is too light to transcribe accurately.]

P S A L M CXLIV. V E R. X.

Ipse est qui dat salutem Regibus: qui eruit D A V I D E M servum suum, de gladio maligno.

It is He that giveth salvation unto Kings: who delivereth David his servant from the perillous, or malignant sword.

Carce any that hear this Verse rehearsed, but sees, that it fits, both to this our purpose, and time. The time: Here is mention of Kings; of Salvation given to Kings, of one, a matchlesse King; D A V I D in danger and delivered; From the Sword, in danger and delivered: All most apposite.

For behold Kings, Kings, to whom G O D hath given Salvation: hath given Salvation, and doth give salvation, and I pray G O D he may ever give it, much Salvation, for many yeares. Behold our King his servant; whom this day now six yeares since [I say this very day] G O D delivered, wonderfully delivered, from the hurtfull Sword. Verily these agree; whilst at once we hear the words of the Text, we have as it were, a Commentary thereof before our eyes.

But for our purpose: This meeting, and this, not only honourable, but also sacred Assembly, what meanes it, what intends it? What else, than to give thanks to G O D, for salvation given to the King? And, what else, I pray you, doth this Verse sound forth, than, thanks also to G O D, for salvation given to D A V I D.

For in the preceding verse, the Psalmist took his Harp, tuned the Strings, promised a Song, a new Song. And behold the Contents of this new Song, in this verse. The sum of this verse (for the next verse is a Prayer, neither hath it any Song in it) and the Argument is, giving of Thanks, and of Thanks, for no other benefit (although there were many more) yet, for no other benefit, than the Kings Deliverance. That namely, the Saviour of Kings, to wit G O D (for this is G O D'S periphrase, who gives salvation to Kings:) that this Saviour of Kings, had delivered his servant D A V I D, from some eminent danger: yet, from no other danger, than the hurtfull Sword, that is the Traitors.

And thus surely, doth this Verse: and thus then also, the people of Israel praised Him for their Kings deliverance: It is He that giveth salvation unto Kings: who delivereth D A V I D His servant from the hurtfull Sword.

And we indeed, here to day, sing the very same thing; every way the same, one only word a little changed: It is He who gives salvation unto Kings: It is he who hath delivered J A M E S His servant from the perillous Sword. It is He, that hath done this; It is He, whom, for this Delivery, all of us, have met here, to day, to praise in a Festival, an Assembly, a Song.

And, this verily is usual with G O D, and surely no new thing, To give salvation to Kings: This is His ancient goodnesse: yet, of this ancient, and no new goodnesse; ever and anon He shewes new examples; yea, in our age He hath shown them; nor, doth He cease to shew them, even to this day. For this very thing, which to day we celebrate; although it be new (and surely new it is) Yet it is not the last. For, since G O D hath vouchsafed us Him, one, and again another hath befallen us, wherewith G O D hath lately blessed us. Twice, or thrice, hath G O D given deliverance: twice, or thrice hath G O D delivered Him: and (to let passe other, surely those most admirable) He that six yeares since hath delivered him, from the hurtfull sword; Very lately, this year, (this very year) hath delivered him from the perillous Gun-powder. Thus yearly He heapes upon us new Deliverances. It shall be our duty, here to imitate D A V I D: and, for several new Presidents, to sing new Songs; for several new Deliverances, new Thanksgivings: So shall He every year heap upon us new Deliverance: Rehearsing old, He will enrich us with new: nor shall there ever be wanting new matter for a Song; if a new Song be not wanting.

If old ones be not forgotten, a new Harvest of Thanksgiving shall yearly encrease unto us.

And thus, briefly, touching the scope of this Verse. It is an easie task to divide it. It falls asunder of its own accord; and severs into two parts. The one a Thesis: The other an Hypothesis. The Thesis is, concerning His care of Kings in general. It is He who gives salvation to Kings. The Hypothesis, is touching His care of DAVID in particular. It is He who delivereth DAVID His servant from the hurtfull sword. Or indeed (because we have to do with M^r. sick, and are to treat of a Song) His general care of Kings, is as the Cantus, Cantus firmus: his particular care of DAVID, is as the Discantus, or Cantus figuratus. Yet, for DAVID, although GOD hath diversly delivered him, both many wayes, and times: notwithstanding he insists on this alone (which is proper both to this season, and to us) because, He delivered him, from the perillous sword.

I. I will first speak of the safety of Kings in general, and also both of the cause of it, and manner of giving it.

II. Next of King DAVID'S Deliverance.

III. Lastly of our King.

Qua ego dum sic singula complectar, &c.

It is He that giveth Salvation unto Kings, &c.

I Promised first to speak of the Thesis.

*Who gives salvation,
Who gives it to Kings.*

To give Salvation: So well it agrees to the Divine nature, to shew Himself a Deliverer, that GOD doth challenge that as native, proper, and peculiar to Himself, Isaiah 43. 11. I, even I am the LORD, and besides Me, there is no Saviour: Thus He is a Saviour: save therefore He will.

And indeed, GOD will save both man and beast, so wonderfull is His mercy: saith our Prophet, Psal. 36. 7. Even thus also the nature of Beasts, is partaker of this saving power in GOD: It is He, who gives salvation, even to bruit beasts.

Yet, even to bruit beasts: yet so, that nevertheless, the Apostle doubts not to demand and ask, *1 Cor. 9. 9. Doth GOD take care for Oxen? doth He not rather say it for our sake? As though his care for them, in respect of that to us, might be esteemed no care at all. Neither is it. For we are His chief care, thence Job speaks unto him on our behalf, as it were by a peculiar title, I have sinned, what shall I do unto thee, O thou preserver of men, Job 7. 20. He, it is who gives salvation unto men. He, is the preserver of men: But especially of Kings μάλιστα διασώζων Βασιλεων (as the Heathen Poet sings not amisse) for they more than all kind of men, are GOD'S delight, and care: The name θεσπιάδης agrees to the King, more than others. For Great deliverance giveth He to the King, saith our Psalmist, *Psal. 18. ver. 50. He also saith; He is the saving health of His anointed, Psalm 28. 8. In whomsoever He shewes Himself wonderfull, He is wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, as he saith, Psal. 76. 12. 1. He, is surely wonderfull in Them, in preserving Them. 2. In none more. 3. In none, so wonderfull. Thus by these three steps we ascend to our Thesis: It is He that giveth salvation unto Kings.

To Kings, I say in general: For touching Kings GOD'S servants, I shall discourse more fully, when I come to the Hypothesis, concerning DAVID his servant.

It is He, who gives salvation unto Kings: He it is. Therefore let Kings know, to whom they ought to ascribe their deliverance; even to Him. There is no safety for them, In the strength of an Horse, viz. not in their cavalry, Not in the legs of man, viz. not in their infantry. Not in the Ships of Tharsis, viz. not in their Naval forces. A Horse is a vain thing to save a man. A Ship is a weak vessel, and cannot save. Finally, Vain is the help of man, Salvation belongeth to the Lord. His it is; Look up thither unto Him. He it is, who tells you from heaven, I am your salvation. Let Kings know this.

Let the people also know, whether, when all is done, they ought to lift up their eyes, whom to implore, when they would have their King safe: Namely, to the LORD, to whom salvation belongeth. O LORD save the King. Hosanna in the highest.

Hence let rebels amongst the people know, That GOD hates those, who labour to snatch that Salvation from Kings, which GOD gives them: Let loyal people know, that they are God's friends, and GOD theirs: who desire the salvation of Kings. For God desires the very same thing. It is he that gives salvation unto Kings.

I come nearer. Who gives salvation. What salvation? Surely each kind, whether that of Physicians, of a sound and healthfull body against diseases; namely, as they are mortal. For (as Daniels image may teach us) Every Kingdom stands upon feet of clay. Kings also are the very same. Treasures of their people; But yet, Treasures in earthen vessels: Therefore they need, this salvation.

True therefore it is, should we mean this; for GOD gives this, also. True indeed; but not proper to this place. For this salvation (as our Text tells us) is from the sword, not sickness; rather from malignant manners, than malignant humours; from external force, not from internal * distemper. I therefore apply myself to that. He gives salvation: He gives this salvation δυσπασις to Kings: to Kings before others.

I now demand the cause, and more near and inwardly search GOD'S Will. Why, to them before others? Is it, because Kings have need of safety, and the desire of safety, more than others? Yes verily, because they have: for as much as to them, more than others, that malignant one thieves himself more malicious. (For thus νατ' ἑξοχῶς S. John in his first Epistle often calls that wicked Spirit) He it is, that destroys Kings. Namely the Angel of the bottomless pit, of whom the same J. O. H. N. speaks, Apocal. 9. 11. His name in Hebrew is Abaddon: In Greek Ἀπολλων, that is a destroyer. A destroyer: a name directly opposite to GOD'S name. His name, is Saviour. And the name of His sonne; J. E. S. U. S., a Saviour also, (an Angel interpreting it.) They give salvation. But he is Abaddon; he is a destroyer, who chiefly desires this, to snatch away, to take, wholly to overthrow this salvation, all the salvation of all. And mark with me, how earnestly he endeavours it.

1 John 2. 12;
14, & 5, 18.

Math. 1. 21.

We said this formerly. GOD saves even Beasts: much more Men. And Princes most of all. This Abaddon sets up himself against GOD, and is only bent to destruction. Yea, rather than not destroy, He is busied in destroying brut beasts: which very thing is evident in the silly Swine, which (CHRIST permitting him) he carried head-long, and choaked in the Sea. Thus he it is, who takes away safety, even from brut beasts.

Math. 8. 32

But He covers rather to destroy any man, any one man, than whole flocks and herds of Cattel (as JOB witnesseth) Thus He it is who takes away salvation from men.

Job 1. 13, and
2. 4.

But to Kings especially, beside and above other mortals, he is most hatefully malicious: And, if any King be eminent in piety, as DAVID: him he chiefly hates. He, indeed, alwayes meditates on mischief against Kings, he desired to destroy even Assuerus, a Heathen King (only, because he was a King) by his Eunuchs. Yea, DAVID also! For, how often, was he thrust at, yea, overthrown, that he might perish: and now at the very point of destruction, unless GOD had delivered him; as he speaks of himself, Psalms 118. 13. He, it must be, in every respect, who can give salvation to them. It is the other, who takes it away.

Ester 2. 21.

But why doth that Abaddon, so zealously devise, to bring destruction upon Kings, to take away their safety? What have they only done? Surely because there is none, who can be, to him, who can be to his Kingdom, a more capital enemy, than Kings? For it is by their power and authority; that, what likes, may not be lawfull to every one: (I will use the words of Scripture) that Every man may not do (unpunished) whatsoever is right in his own eyes: which, every one both might, and did doe; when there was no King in Israel. Now for every man to have power to do, whatsoever seemes right in his own eyes, unpunished, this verily, that Abaddon earnestly desires; It must needs please him well, his kingdom may well prosper; if things go thus.

Deut. 12. 8

For, then it will seem right to the eyes of MICAH, to make and set up an Idol for himself, in his private house, Judges 17. 4. And what's lawfull for MICAH, why not for another also? Thus, look, how many Families, so many new prodigious Idols. And that's indeed, a miserable Church, where this is suffered.

It, will also seem right to the Danites, to rob, to steal, not only to break thorow the walls of MICAH'S house, but also as LAISH, even to pillage and spoil whole Cities, to destroy all, not save a man, Judges 18. Then ravishings of Women, and Whoredomes not to be named, will seem right in the eyes of the men of Gibeon, Judges 19. Lamentable indeed is the face of that kingdom, where there is such work. That these, and such like things, may be done, this surely he wills earnestly, and that Abaddon would purchase this, at a high rate. But that these, and such things as these may not be done, Kings doublelesse are his hinderers. Wherefore, he labours by all means, to take them away; to take their safety from them, and in this he is wholly employed.

First, and before all things, he desires Anarchy. If that may not be; Then would he incontinently destroy Kings, one after another. That so Kingdoms might shake as a Reed in the water. (which usually happens in often change of Kings) never enjoying a settled rest. Whereby, being alwayes under one new King, or another, they can never get strength against evil manners, and wicked men.

*Αναρχία

1 King. 14. 14

We have already seen, for what reason: It will be worth our labour, to know, by what means also, that Abaddon seeks to destroy Kings. And this is plain from the same Chapter, in the 9. of the Apocalyp. For there he hath his Emisaries, Locusts ascending out of the smoak of the Pit, (whose king he is) and those also, as well as their king Abaddon, are sworn enemies to Kings. He subornes these for this attempt. But who are these Locusts? A kind of creatures, who have a Mans face, Womens hair: but Lions teeth, and their tayles the stings of Scorpions. No others, surely, (if Fathers which interpret this place, are to be heard) than those very same, which our Prophet DAVID, twice in this Psalm, calls strange children: whom S. JOHN afterward perceived to be Locusts. These did DAVID call strange children, long before. For that kind of people, was neither unknown to DAVID: neither yet are they unknown to us. Even, our age, brings forth strange children. Strange indeed. A kind of men, which stile themselves—Of the Society of Jesu. But JESUS (as is aforesaid) is a Saviour. Wherefore these also, if from him, they have their name, if they be not strange children, they ought to minister salvation: But, is not this a strange thing, a monster-like : that these, who from JESUS a Saviour, have made a name for themselves, are accounted most wicked, even the Embassadors of Abaddon, Traitors to Kings, the overthrow of Kingdoms, in what state soever they get footing? Are not these verily strange children, who under a strange Jesu by name, every where attempt practices most estranged, from the nature of JESUS : namely, destructions, treasons, seditions? And that you may know, that these also of ours, are of the same lineage with those of David : their marks are every way alike, Filii alieni (saith DAVID, Psalm 18. 45.) mentiti sunt mihi. Even the same thing which he saith twice in this Psalm : Their mouth speaketh a lye, their right hand is a right hand of iniquity. And are not these of ours just like them? only except, what David calls lying, that, they call Equivocation. A diverse title, no different things. For, their right hand, is equally wicked. Because, whether they engage their hand, for faithfull dealing; or lay their hand, on those sacred Evangels, to win belief by religious oaths : Their right hand is wicked, and deceitfull in both : both ways, both mouth, and right hand, is estranged from their mind, their mind estranged from GOD; at the least from the true GOD : For from an equivocal God, that is, the God of this World, it is not perchance estranged. And now he employes the helps and assistance of these (whether if you please to call them Locusts, or strange children) to whet these perillous swords, to mingle poysons, to give fire to Powder-plots. To whom their King Abaddon, gives in strict charge (these being his Chieftaines) that which formerly the King of Syria commanded his Captaines; Fight neither with small nor great, save only against the King. But destroy him, with Sword, with Fire, with Poynado, with Poyson, with Powder, dispatch him what way soever.

Verse 8, 11.

Nempe

— Rege incolumi, mens omnibus una, Amisso rupere fidem.

(as the Poet very elegantly) I conclude. Though, one there be who would give salvation; There is another, who would take it away : Though one there be, who would stretch forth a gracious shield : There is another, who brandisheth a perillous sword. Though there be true born children, which desire their safety. There are strange children, which wish their ruine. Though there be a JESUS, vvho can save : There is Abaddon, who would destroy. Though there be CHRIST, who would favour them : There is an Antichrist (neither is he only called Antichrist, because he is an adversary to CHRIST the LORD, but also because he is an enemy to the Anointed of the LORD) I say there is an Antichrist, who vvould be Mischievous, and quickly destroy them, either with the perillous sword, or else a Powder-plot.

You have now already seen, both why, and how that Abaddon vvould destroy Kings. Next, you shall briefly hear, both wherefore, and by vvhat means, GOD vvould give them salvation. First, vvherefore, vvherefore doth GOD give salvation to Kings? Namely, because they are his Vicegerents upon earth; Because they are in GOD'S place, because they represent his person : Because they are his Ministers, his chief Ministers. Whereby, is shewn, that there is a kind of necessity for God to save those, viz. because they are His Embassadors. Surely those that are Kings Legates into forraign Countries. Those vvho are Vice-royes and Prefidents in Provinces here at home : it hath always been accounted part of Princely Wisdom, by all means, to protect them, to vindicate them from contempt. For, the honour of an Embassador, is his honour that sends him, and the Vice-royes dishonour, redounds upon the King. Even our Prophet DAVID, vvhen those were reproachfully handled, whom he sent, instead of himself, to rejoyce with King AMMON, he judged himself to be violated in them. The disgrace, as though it had been proper to himself, he severely revenged. Thus, it is with the supream King, to whom our Kings are Vice-royes : His own honour, except Kings be safe (who are His Vice-royes) His own honour, cannot stand safe, and inviolated. Even, for His own honour, He will preserve them safe. For, * By Him they reign, By Him they are ordained. By Him they are, what they are. All come to this point, that it belongs to him, in some sort behoves Him; that whom He makes, them, He should also favour : And whom He favours, that they may not be wronged : He is also their Revenger, if they be violated. This, is one reason why He should give salvation unto them.

Further to this, I also add another.

God desires His peoples safety, He desires all our safety : (for the benefit of Salvation the more general it is, the more heavenly it is.) The LORD said to Jonas, Is it meet that thou shouldest desire the preservation of the gourd? And should not I spare Nineveh that great City, wherein are 120000 persons which cannot discern between their right hand and their left? Now He gives Salvation to Kings, thereby to derive it to the people, fully to Them, that by Them, it may extend to all. For thence it is, that He not only calls the Magistrates Gods : I have called you Gods : but also Saviours. For, so it is in the book of Judges, as often as mention is made of the supream Magistrate : GOD (saith he) hath raised up a Saviour for them, Othniel, Gedeon, Jephthe, and others. Therefore They, save many thousands. Finally, it is most agreeable, fit, and a thing well be-seeming GOD, to save the Saviours, of so many thousands : That is, to give Salvation to Them, in whose safety, Our safety, yea all our safety, is placed. That place of S. Paul is remarkable, Let prayers (saith he) be made for all men. But this is boundlesse; it is too long, to run through all. Will you therefore, confine it in brief? Let them be made for Kings. Because if for Them, for all. If it be well with Them, it will be well with all. In which place the Apostle pleads powerfully. Mark his gradations. For Kings (saith he) that They may be safe; thence it is, that whilst They

They are safe, the peace is safe: In a safe peace, there is the knowledge of God: From the knowledge of God, an honest and godly life: from a godly and honest life, comes the safety of the whole world. Do you not see? That the Safety of Kings and prayers for it, is laid as the very corner stone to all mens safety.

But, why seek I for these examples abroad? Seeing, we have them growing at home, here in our Psalme, and surely far more abundantly. In this verse, are thanks to be given for the Deliverance of Kings: In the next verse, are prayers to be made. Why, I pray you? Namely (verse 12.) that, So, it might go well with Our sons; our daughters: verse 13. That, So, it might be well with our Store-houses, our Flocks: verse 14. That, so, all might go well with our Oxen. That, there be no Breaking in, nor going out, or complaining in our streets. None of these, shall be, we shall have all these safe, if the King be safe. By account indeed, there are eight (which the Fathers from the words of the Psalme, Blessed are the people, who are in such a case: have called them the eight felicities of this life, the eight earthly beatitudes) all depending upon the safety of Kings. Nor only these eight, but also (which last remaines, and is worth all, Blessed are the people whose God is the LORD) this also (that GOD may be our LORD, that is, that our religion may be safe) doth, certainly, very much depend on the Prince. For, surely, he that reades of six Kings of Judah, successively in the books of Kings: or the five Emperours, successively in the Ecclesiasticall History: Or he that here at home, hath seen amongst us four Princes successively by turnes altering Religion; and as the Kings, so the people also, changing in Religion: will discern, that it is of great consequence, that Salvation be given to SALOMON; least, when he is dead, Ieroboam make Israel to sin. Therefore that He may give salvation to the people, He gives salvation unto Kings: both for his own honours sake, and even for all our sakes; He gives salvation to Kings. Why He should give salvation, I have already made knowne. How He gives it, that yet remaines, I haste unto it.

First, by sending his Word, that he may save them: but if that be a small thing, by stretching forth his hands also, that he may set them in safety.

First, by the Word of salvation. For, least any should overthrow that Salvation which GOD hath given: he hath provided in a triple charge, wherewith (as with a triple trench.) He hath fortified the safety of Kings.

I. Touch not mine annointed. Whereby He secures them from violent hands.

II. Curse not the ruler of thy people. Whereby He secures them from the poyson of the tongue.

III. Curse not the King, no not in thy thought. Whereby He secures them against the bold and boundlesse thoughts, of the soule it selfe.

And if they be safe enough, from these three, all would be well: the safety of Kings would be abundantly provided for. Thus, God provides by His triple saving Word, that their safety may not come in danger.

But if these are not enough (and often they are not enough) but this triple bulwark being cast down, strange children dare sit in counsell, and mutter ill words, nay verily, even lift up their hand, against Gods annoynted. Yet then, as it is in the 7. verse, He will send his hand from Heaven, He will send His hand from Heaven, and will deliver them from the midst of danger. This truly and indeed He will do, by opposing Himself, both against their counsels, and against them.

Against their counsells partly by detecting them, whilst yet, they are scarcely ripened: partly by scattering them, even then, when they are digested, finished; even then, when all is in a readinesse.

And verily, for to detect their counsell He saith, in another place, that He hath ordained a lanterne for His annoynted. A lanterne surely, that is, faithfull counsell: and those that are His ministers (they being the lampes of Kings) whom it concernes, throughly to know their inmost designs: But, when the Kings lampe is too dim, then Gods lightning gives light. For, so it is, in the 6. verse, when the light of the lampe sufficeth not, by Him (Missa a se de Caelo fulgure) is the whole plot discovered. The Kings lanterne, I say, as, when Mardochai brought the accusation against the trayterous Eunuchs: As when Elisha revealed the plot, concerning Aram's lying in wait for the King of Israel.

But it was Fulgur Dei, when as SALOMON saith, A birde of the aire shall carry the voyce, (namely) when by some strang means, and by no humane assistance things are brought to light. When their own tongues shall make them fall, as it is, Psalm 64. 8. That is, when by their own whisperings, their own writings they betray themselves. That all that see it may be astonished; who see it to be the hand of God, and that thou, Lord, hast done it. And doubtlesse He is wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, but in no one thing more, than, in sending this His Lightning, whereby the most secret counsells of traytors, are often revealed.

Yer, suppose it be so: grant, that nothing be suspected, not a word spoken, every thing concealed till all be in readinesse: And now, the treason brought to the last cast: Yer: even then; He will scatter them notwithstanding, and, as it is in the 5 verse, He will touch the Mountaines and they Psal. 144. they shall smoke, every one. Absolom, now having usurped a Kingdome, grew as big as a mountaine. God will but touch Absolom, He will smite his braine with madnesse, that he might reject that very counsell which was most conducing to his designe. Thus in a moment God scattered them all. Adonias also liewelled into a mountaine. God will but touch Adonias, He will smite his heart with a causelesse feare, that then, when, he was almost fully enthroned, he durst neither go on forward, nor stir: Thus they all vanish into smoake. All of them are become (even when all was as sure as bird in hand) as a bowing wall and tottering fence; they either fall with their own accord, or with the least enforcing are cast downe, they are touched, turne into smoak, and vanish.

And thus God sets up Himselfe against their conspiracies, and shoves, that He will assert the salvation of Kings. Moreover, he undertakes this very thing, against the traytors themselves: By making ready the strings of his bow against the face of them, as it is, Psal. 21. and as it is here (vers. 6.) By consuming them with His arrows. That men seeing these most unhappy ends, might tremble at their accursed deeds. Moses hath rightly comprised the whole matter, then, when Corah first of all withstood him. Hereby (saith he) shall ye know, that Magistrates are from God; that God takes care for their safety. If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men.

Num. 16. 28. Then ye may make a doubt, whether it be He; But, if God do a new thing, and bring all of them forth, every one, to punishment, all of them, to fearfull ends: If Divine Justice follow them at the heels, and suffer them not to be carried to their graves in peace, Morte vel manna vel scilicet: Hereby shall ye plainly know, that It is the Lord himselfe who gives salvation unto Kings. Because the hand of the Lord is gone forth against them. And, verily so it is: For, what is become of those who boldly assayed, to cast downe that triple bulwark (of which I lately spake?) What is become of Sheba, who durst lift up his hand, and sound a trumpet, against David? His head is thrown down, from the wall. And, what become of Shimei, who durst open his mouth, and curse the annoynted of the LORD? His haire head, went downe to the grave with blond. What also became 2 Sam. 20. 1. of the Eunuchs, who only thought in their mindes, how they might lay hands on the King? They were both hanged on a tree. And what should I say more? The time would faile me, to speak of Baana and Richab, of Absolom, and Achitophel, of Adonias, and Isab, of Zimri and Iozabad: And all the rest, all who have sought the destruction of their Kings, they have all perished, and are gone to their grave by some shamefull death. All these, cry out as it were with one voyce; From our example, let no mortall men dare, to take that salvation from Kings, which God hath given unto them. DAVID, called God the horne of his salvation: He said truly. For by pouring out oyle from the horne (out of the lowest and hollow part of it) God annoynted Him. And with the same horne (the end of it being sharpened) God scattered his enemies, and brake them all in pieces. Thus, with one end, He Annoynted him King: with the other he gave him deliverance. Thus, is God indeed a horne of salvation to his annoynted.

But I may not keep you too long in the Thesis; Ye have seen (I suppose) already, both why it should be just with God, to give salvation unto Kings. 1 Because there is a wicked one who would destroy them. 2 Kings are in GOD's Place. 3 GOD's honour is concerned in Saving them. 4 In their Safety, the safety of many nations consists. You have also seen, how GOD brings this to passe; By His Word, and by His Work. 1 He reveales it by His Lightning. 2 He touches them and turnes their counsels into smoake. 3 The contrivers themselves, He shootes them thorow with His arrows. And thus He Workes salvation for Kings, in the middle of the earth.

1 Tim. 4. 10. The Thesis now finished, I descend to the Hypothesis. It is He who hath delivered David His servant, &c. But I begin with this, God is the Saviour of all Men, but especially those that believe. It is S. Pauls saying. Let me add, He is the Saviour of all Kings but especially of those that believe. For there is like reason in both. Thus I infer it. If Divine providence rest upon Kings, Kings indefinitely, Kings in generall: What, shall it do upon Kings, who also themselves believe, and are the Rulers of those that believe? If, God be wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, what is He in Kings, who, are both Sons and Nursing Fathers of the Church? If in Assurnus a Heathen, what is He in David, a religious and pious Prince. For (as the son of Sirach spake wisely of him) Even, as fat is parted from the flesh of the Sacrifice, so is David from the Kings of the earth: That look what Kings are amongst men; Such, is DAVID amongst Kings, what will God therefore do for Him? What, will He do for them, that are to Him, Faithfull as David, in all his house? For surely, what you may finde severally, in other Kings, are here in David conjoynd. Namely a King and a Servant of God. Wherefore both because he is a King, He, will give salvation unto him, and because He is His servant, He will deliver him from the perillous sword. That He is a King, He, hath that in common with other kings of the Heathen; for whom, that God should thus provide, there is no cause, but only this, because they are Kings. That He is Gods servant, this is peculiar to Him, above others.

And God will surely save all His servants, of whatsoever even of the meanest condition: But, Kings that are His servants, above others, both because, as Kings by Him they reigne, and because, as servants, they are governed by him. O Lord save the King. This is his prayer: Psal.

Pfal. 20. 9. O God save thy servant. This is his prayer, Pfal. 86. 2. This is one petition and yet not one. One in David: not one in all: For all are not servants. Yes, verily, all are His servants; all the Kings of the earth. And so it is indeed; all are, for all, although unwitting, although unwilling, yet all, doe His Will. All are, but (which is for our purpose) all do not so acknowledge themselves, all carry themselves like servants. Nebuchodonozor was His servant. Forso God n'pake by Jeremiah: Behold, I have given all these lands to Nebuchodonozor my servant: Yet notwithstanding He did not acknowledge this. He acknowledged not, either himself to be a servant, or Him his Lord. For he said as much to the three Children. Let us see, who is that God which will deliver you out of my hands? Neither indeed did Pharaoh acknowledge it. Who is the Lord? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go. Our David did not so, no surely. But he acknowledged himself a servant: Hear him speak for himself, Behold, O Lord, how that I am thy servant; I am thy servant, and the son of thy handmaid. Neither is He this in word and speech alone, but also in deed and in truth: Not (as they) doing it, neither wittingly, nor willingly, but of set purpose, Doing all his Will. Being so carefull in the Lords businessse, that He would not climb up into his bed, would not suffer his eyes to sleep, untill he had found out a place for the Arke of the LORD: And in bringing it back, being girt with a linnen Ephod, he so behaved Himselfe, amongst the servants of God, so (I say) that he seemed to his wife, to be, too much a servant. But he could never, be humbled enough before his LORD, never carefull enough to do His Will. DAVID was a servant indeed: a humble servant: faithfull as a servant: a servant after His own heart. Truly therefore, and to the purpose is it said, in this verse, His servant David. Therefore God speaks so, of him His servant: Pfal. 89. 21. My hand shall hold him fast, and my arme shall strengthen him: the enemy shall not be able to do him violence: the son of wickednesse shall not hurt him. That is (in one word) I will deliver him.

And what he said, in his word, he fulfilled indeed; therefore, God often delivered him, both from many (I do not say) dangers; that word is too large, for our present purpose (weapons I do say, which is more apposite) from their arrowes, drawn, and shot at him, to destroy him. He delivered him from Goliath's spear: He delivered him from the javelin of Saul: and (which is proper to this place) He also delivered him from the sword.

From the sword yet, not from any mans at all, in common, and promiscuously: But (as it is in the verse) from the malignant sword: And is there indeed, a malignant sword? Do I say a malignant one? Perhaps there is an evil one, perhaps a wicked one: but to call it a malignant sword, that is too violent an expression. Indeed the sword is in no fault, there is no malignancy in the iron: all the malevolency is in him, and is diffused through his mind, at whose side it hangs. For in any other sense, there is no malignant sword.

Who therefore, I pray you, is that malignant one? Truly it is not he, who openly and in flat termes is mischievous, or malevolent: Nor he, who as an enemy professeth open hostility. He is that malignant one, who covertly and in secret is malevolent. Who under a smooth forehead, hath a festered mind: under a painted face, a rotten heart. Who (as Salomon skilfully describes him) Speaks faire, but there are seven abominations in his heart, finally he is that malignant one, and his sword (in as much as he is malignant) is malignant; that is, it is like it's Master.

Those Locusts which I lately mentioned are the malignant ones. They have a Womans face, but behind a Scorpions tail: whom I lately called strange children, they are those malignant ones: whose mouth is vaine: But for their swordpoint, that is not vaine, (as we see) neither wounds it in vaine, but gives a home, and more than that, a malignant wound.

And, is it so? Are there such about David, who covertly wish him evil? Cannot, so good a King, so faithfull a servant of God, cannot he however, escape those malignant ones? Surely he might, and so he did. David had such, whom David did not satisfie. David had also his malignant ones, and they, their swords: and by them and their swords, he was in greatest perill. The King as yet met with no Doeg, and men of Keilah: Now the King met with Shimei and Sheba. He had to deal with His companions, His guide, and Achitophel, His familiar friend. He had to do with Abolom His son, His son Abolom. He met with others, and those no few: For in many Psalmes, You may heare Him complaining of the worst (for they are not the best) sort of men. Yea even in this our Psalme, twice He complains of some Natives indeed by birth, but in affection forraigns, that is, painted subjects, in whose Mouth there is no truth, nor trust to their right hand. David had such as these, even he that's like David (if any be like Him) yet such as these He shall have. And from these, namely, once at the eighth verse: Nor there once alone; But againe also at the eleventh, that is againe, and againe, he prayes, to be Delivered. For He knew how perillous this sword was, that surely the enemies sword in respect of it, was full of courtesie. For this sword was no sword of Warre, nor of Goliath, nor of the Philistims, who openly invade, which because He saw, He might avoid: This sword is the Traytors sword: Ioab is a sword, even this sword; who friendly saluted ABNER, kindly embraced Amasa. Yet thrust both of them into the belly, and that in such sort, namely so Perillously, that hee needed not to give them a second wound: For with that alone, both their bowels gushed out upon the Earth. Ioab is a sword, a perillous sword: the fault, is in Him.

Now, (that all may know, how good God is to David,) God Delivered him from this sword, Him I say: For some there are, yea some Kings, whom He Delivers not: There are some Kings

KING S, whom he destroyes, whom this perillous sword destroyes; Namely, over whom GOD doth not stretch forth His Helmet of salvation. He, destroyed Ishbosheth, who lay on his bed at Noon. He, destroyed Elam, as he was drinking himself drunk, in his Stewards house. He destroyed Joash a ffrighted with the peoples uproare. He destroyed Gedaliah fearlesly feasting, with Ishmael, his malicious murtherer. This sword destroyed all these: that is, GOD delivered them not. But GOD delivered DAVID, delivered Him (whoever that malignant one was) from his sword. And because GOD delivered Him, He sung this verse to GOD, as it were, his Canticum awrigion. And thus much for the Hypothesis, that is concerning David.

I now come, to our selves.

For as GOD formerly delivered his servant David: so lately He delivered his servant James; He delivered both, and both from the sword, both from the perillous sword: So, that this verse, may truly be applied to them both, that it may be rightly sung: both on this day, this year; and on this day, for every year.

For, now the sixt year is past, since on this day (this very day) strange children lay in wait for him: strange children dissembled with him. They inticed him home to their house; they entertained him, with all seeming courtesie, moreover they promised (some secret thing) vanities, and lies, all. And so at last, he that was not guilty of wickednesse himself, and therefore suspecting no evil, Him they brought, whether they desired, namely to a place, in the very inmost room in the house, where that Perillous sword was. There they set upon him (against the Law of hospitality) their guest; Nay against a far greater Law, for subjects assaulted their King: His retinue was included, the doores bolted, thus they set upon Him, alone, unarmed, voyd of all defence, and assistance. For then were strange children present, who brought forth that sword, true born Children, who might interpose their buckler, and (if need were) their body too, these were absent: All gone away. What, could here be expected, but a certain death? Surely, my mind trembles, to remember how near that sword was brandished, that He, even felt its cold iron edge, both applied, and more than that, dashed against that sacred breast. What (I say) but certain death, the sword being brandished, so near unto him? Even then, GOD freed and delivered him, GOD who gives salvation unto Kings, to Kings, His servants: Even then, GOD freed, and delivered him, the King, His servant, in the midst of danger, in the very jawes of death; from the midst of danger, from the very jawes of death, He saved, and delivered him. GOD Himself (I say) delivered Him.

First, by striking that armed man, with fear; who was ready instructed, and appointed, to act this great wickednesse: So, that he neither durst, nor could aslay any thing. Moreover He changed the mind of that armed man so suddenly, that he, who was appointed to do it, held back his hand, who appointed him thereto (when he would have acted this wickednesse.) Further yet by giving present courage, both power, and strength sufficient to the King ad feralem illam palastram. That the enemy was not able to do him violence, that the sonne of wickednesse could not hurt him. Lastly by leading those, the right way after a marvellous manner, through unknown passages, that knew not the place, unacquainted with the way, and by guiding those men, who being summoned by the Kings out-cry, hastened on each side, towards his reliefe; (men, for this, so happy and faithfull service, worthy eternal memory;) finally by freeing Him, both from this first, and also from that other sword, of the other brother, yet more malignant than the perillous one; and so freeing Him, that their sword went thorow their own heart, and their mischievousnesse was turned on their own pate. Thus the King is saved, salvation given to the King, given from heaven (if, ever salvation was given from heaven, to any) as if, GOD had sent His hand, from heaven, and brought Him help: at once delivering Him; and at once, overthrowing those perillous cut-throats, and killing them with their own perillous sword. Surely, this is no humane assistance; nor from man. It is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes: In all mens eyes: and, it is wonderfull in our eares: In all mens eares: and for this cause, no posterity, no future age, shall passe it in silence.

But this also, seemed a small thing to God, unlesse afterward often, and indeed very lately He had delivered Him (for yet it is not a year ago) from a like, yea from a greater, from a far greater danger, not of the sword, but of the Perillous Powder: An act so horrid, so black, so foul, so accursed: that, it is to be cursed, with all execrations, that, it almost exceeds our belief, who yet our selves have seen it. Later ages, sure enough (I think) will scarcely credit it, that ever there were in a mans shape, such Locusts from the nether-most hell, who should devise so hellish practices. Such, as was the magnitude of the danger, such shall be the measure of our thanksgiving. And verily that late Powder-plot, might make us forget this dayes deliverance. But, far be it from us, For (as I said at first) new deliverances are so to be celebrated, that old ones are also to be renewed. We shall sing Him, His song for that in due season. Now it is enough to mention it.

I will no longer offend your patience: I will finish the remainder in few words.

Therefore as they, then, sung this song for their King: So, do we, now, for ours. For salvation, is not so like salvation, as is theirs, and ours. Nor verily, is there any where an example, whence we may take a pattern to our selves, what it behooves us now to do, so fit for us to imitate, as the manner and method of this Psalm (nor, do I far digresse) of this place, in the Psalm, which which we have now in hand. David doth two things (which the Hebrewes, especially doe elegantly expresse :) He mixes Tehilla and Tephilla: (that is) petitions with Thanksgivings: Prayers with a Song. As soon as He had sung His hymn, instantly, with one and the same breath, He said His prayers. For in the foregoing verse, He brought forth His song, He tuned his Strings, takes his Lute, sings thus (as ye have heard) It is He who gives salvation to Kings: it is he who hath delivered David his servant from the perillous sword. And behold immediately (namely in the following verse) He layes his Lute out of his hand; He falls down on his knees, betakes himself to his prayers: and there dictates a prayer for himself and for us, in these words: Save Me, and deliver Me, from the hand of strange children: whose mouth talketh of vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of iniquity. This was the best way for himself, and for his people, whilst he mixed these: and let us imitate his example. And first, as the ground of our duty requires, let us praise this preserver of Kings, the Deliverer of his servant, our King. Let us praise Him with a new song, in singing, with stringed instruments, with Pipes, with wind instruments; with the best and choicest, that our breath, voyce, mind, hand, either hath, or can get. For even the best we have is due to this favour; is due to GOD, for this. Yea, all we have, even the best things are lesse than this favour, lesse than He deserves, for this. But yet, let us as lay the best we can, to sing something. And herein let all that is within us, all our bones, confesse unto thee, O Lord, that salvation is thine, that thou givest it, that thou givest it unto Kings, that thou hast given it to our King: and in Him, to us all, even, to Three kingdoms, in one; to one in Three. And now, what can we say more unto thee? For thou Lord knowest thy servants, though we expresse our minds unworthily; yet inwardly in our minds, and inmost thoughts, we are eternally bound unto thee, for this, the Kings salvation.

But yet, because to have once delivered him, it is not enough, nor twice, or thrice, nor seven times (for as long as he lives, so long is there this danger, from those perillous ones) because all strange children are not in a strange Land. Some there are in ours, even with us: In regard all the sonnes of Belial are not yet dead, at least their father Belial is not dead: But yet is alive, yet he devises his mischievous plots, no lesse now, than in David's time: No lesse, than any time since David, till this day: No lesse? Yea certainly, and more, because he hath but a short time: Let us also after the manner of our Psalm, least we stay too long in the song, hang up our Lutes a while, and lay them aside for a season; Yea let us also kneel down, and adjoyn our prayes; Yea let us also after his example make publike prayers. No other, than he Himself doth make, here, and in other Psalmes. Here: Save him: Yea deliver him from strange children; from their mouth, right hand, their perillous sword. And out of other Psalmes: * Save now I beseech thee, O Lord, O Lord, I beseech thee send now prosperity. O God, send forth thy strength; stablish this good work that thou hast wrought for me. * *Shew thy marvellous loving kindnesse: † Shew great deliverance to thy King: * Precipe omnimodam salutem* J A C O B O. It is Thou, who hast given salvation: It is Thou, who hast delivered: Be thou alwayes the same that Thou art. Alwayes deliver, alwayes save Him, alwayes continue these blessings unto us.

But for those that remain (for I much fear, that yet some remain) strange children, what else pray we, than as Cushy did, 2 Sam. 18. 32. For David also, when he, was then in like sort delivered from the sword of a Sonne, both his own, and a strange one, Abisalom; * The enemies of my Lord the King and all that rise against him, to do him hurt, let them be as those brothers, brothers in iniquity, mischievous brothers. * So let all thine enemies perish (the enemies of thine anointed) O Lord. But those that love Thee, that love Him: be as the Sun when he goeth forth in his might. That thereby as we, so may our seed enjoy, who under the prosperous successe of his Reigne, have possessed, those eight earthly Beatitudes (in this Psalm) the eight Felicities of this life; Yea that ninth also (worth all the rest) of pure Religion; I pray GOD we may long, and many yeares enjoy the same, under Him, in safety, in health, in long life; (which this four yeares we have done) Yearly paying our voves, on this day, for this dayes sake, for the salvation given on this day: Alwayes inter-lacing this verse; in the beginning, in the midst, in the end: It is he who gives salvation unto Kings: It is he who hath delivered JAMES his servant, from the perillous sword. To him, be honour, praise, glory, thanksgiving, for ever and ever. I Tim. Chap. IV. Ver. XVII, XVIII, XIX.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, that they trust not in the uncertainty of Riches, but in the living GOD, which giveth us all things to enjoy plenteously;

That they do good, be rich in good works, ready to distribute, and to communicate.

Laying up in store for themselves, a good foundation; against the time to come, that they may lay hold of Eternal life.

THE commendation of the Word of GOD is, that Every Scripture is profitable for our instruction. Every Scripture is profitable; yet, not every Scripture in every place alike. For the Place and Auditory have great interest in some Scriptures; and a fit Scripture hath a greater and fuller force in his own Auditory. And GOD in so excellent a manner hath fortified His Scriptures, as there lie dispersed in them, several Texts, seasonable for each time, and pertinent to each place and degree; for Prince, for people; for rich, for poor: for each, his peculiar Scripture, in due time and place, to be reached them. This Scripture which I have read, whose it is, & to whom it speaketh, is at the very reading straight: as one saith of the XCI. Psalm (Blessed is he that judgeth rightly of the poor) that it is Scriptura Pauperum, the Poor mans Scripture: So of this, it may be rightly said, that it is Scriptura Divitum, the Rich mans Scripture. And if this be the Scripture for rich men, this place is the place of rich men: and therefore, if this Scripture have his place, no where so fit as in this place. For no where is there such store of riches, by the [a] Harvest of the water, which far surpasseth the harvest of the ground: No where are the like [b] Summes sealed: No where do they [c] suck the abundance of the sea, and the treasures hid in the sand, in like measure: No where are the [d] Merchants Noble-men fellows, and able to lend the Princes of the earth, so much as here. Therefore when as I gave all diligence to speak, not only to true things, but also seasonable, both for this time and this place, I was directed to this Scripture. I need not to say much in this point; to shew, it concerneth this Audience. I will say, as the Fathers say, upon the like occasion; Faxit Deus tam commoda, quam est accommoda. I pray God make it as profitable, as it is pertinent; as fruitful to you, as it is fit for you.

2 Tim. 3:16;

The Division

I
II
III

1. This whole Scripture hath his name given it even in the first word: Charge (saith he) the rich, &c. It is a Charge.

2. It is directed to certain men: namely, to the rich of this world.

3. It consisteth of four branches: whereof two are negative, for the removing of two abuses;

1. The first, Charge them that they be not high-minded.

2. The second, Charge them, that they trust not in their riches.

The reason is added, (which is a Maxime, and a Ground in the Law of Nature, that we must trust to no uncertain thing;) Trust not in the uncertainty of riches.

The other two are affirmative, concerning the true use of riches.

1. The first; Charge them that they trust in God. The reason: because, He giveth them all things to enjoy plentifully.

2. The second: Charge them that they do good: that is the substance: The quantity, that they be rich in good works: the quality, that they be ready to part with, (and a special kind of doing good) to communicate, to benefit the publick.

And all these are one Charge. The reason of them all doth follow; Because by this meanes they shall lay up in store, and that for themselves, a good foundation against the time to come. The end, That they may obtain eternal life.

I. A Charge.

P Præcipe divitibus; Charge the rich of this world, &c. Beloved, here is a Charge, a Præcipe, a Precept, or a Writ, directed unto Timothy, and to those of his Commission to the worlds end, to convent and call before him: He, the rich men of Ephesus; and we, the rich men of this City, and others of other places of the earth, and to give them a charge.

Charges (as you know) use to be given at Affises in Courts from the Bench. From thence is taken this judicial term mensuræ; as it appeareth, Acts 5. 28. Did not we charge you straightly: saith the Bench in the Consistory judicially assembled. Whereby we are given to understand, that in such Assemblies as this is, the Lord of Heaven doth hold His Court, whereunto all men, and (they that of all men seem least) the rich and mighty of the world owe both suit and service. For as earthly Princes have their Laws, their Commissions, their Ministers of the Law, their Courts, and Court-dayes, for the maintenance of their Peace: So hath the King of Kings His Laws and Statutes, His Precepts and Commissions by authority delegate, Itē, predicate, Go preach the Gospel. His Connellers at Law, whom Augustine calleth Divini juris Consultos, His Courts in occulis conscientia, in the hid and secret parts of the heart and conscience, for the preservation of his Peace, which the world can neither give nor take away; to the end, that none may offend, or be offended at it.

This we learn. And with this we learn, all of us, so to conceive of, and to dispose our selves to such Meetings, as this, as men that are to appear in Court, before the Lord, there to receive a Charge; which when the Court is broken up, we must think of how to discharge.

In which point, great is the occasion of complaint, which we must take up. For who is there, that with awe and reverence standeth before the Lord, at His charge-keeping, that he receiveth a charge with, at an earthly Bar? Or with that care remembreth the Lord and his Charge, wherewith he continually thinketh upon the Judge and His Charge? Truly the Lords Commission is worthy to have as great reverence and regard attending on it, as the charge of any Prince; truly, it is. Weigh with your selfe; is not Gods charge with as much heed and reverence to be received, as an earthly Judges? Abhis ut sic (saith St. Augustine) sed utinam vel sic: God forbid, but with more heed and reverence; Well, I would it had so much, in the mean time: And (which to our shame we must speak) I would we could do as much for the Bible, as for the Statute-books: for heaven as for earth: for the immortal God as for a mortal man. But whether we do or no, yet as our Saviour Christ said of St. John Baptist, If ye will receive, this is that Elias which was to come; so say I of this Precept, If ye will receive it, this is the Charge the Lord hath laid upon you. And this let me tell you farther, that it is such a Charge, as it concerneth your Peace, the plentiful use of all your wealth and riches (in the second Verse of my Text, which giveth us all things to enjoy plentifully, &c.) Which may move you. Or if that will not, let me add this farther; It is such a Charge, as toucheth your estate in everlasting life, the very last words of my Text. That is the well or evil hearing of this Charge, is as much worth as your eternal life is worth: And therefore, He that hath ears to hear let him hear.

Rom. 7.
Mat. 28. 19.
Psal. 7. 8.
Psal. 119. 165.

Mat. 11. 14.

Mat. 14. 5.

It is a Charge then, and consequently to be discharged. To be discharged? Where? Charge, saith he, the rich man. He speaketh to the Rich; You know your own names; you know best, what those rich men are. Shall I tell you? you are the rich, he speaketh unto you. It is the fashion and the fault of this world, to exercise their authority on them most, that need it least: For rich men, to feast them that least need it; for mighty men to preferre them that least deserve it. It is an old Simile, we have oft heard it, that the Laws are like Cobwebs, that they hold fast the silly flies, but the greater Hornets breake thorow them, as oft as they list. And as these Cobweb-Laws, which exempt mighty men; So the same corruption that was the cause thereof, would also make Cobweb Divinity. For, notwithstanding the Commission runneth expressly to the Rich, Charge, &c. Notwithstanding they be in great danger, and that of many *snare*s (as the Apostle saith in this Chapter) and therefore need it greatly; Yet (I know not how) it comes to pass, whether, because they think themselves too wise to receive a charge, any charge at all; or because they think themselves too good to receive it, at the hands of such mean men, as we be; (and if they must needs be charged, they would be charged from the council, from men more Noble and Honourable than themselves) they would not gladly hear it, surely they would nor; and because they would not gladly hear it, we are not hasty they should hear it. And great reason, why (as we think:) for as it is true which is in the Psalm 45. 18. So long as they do good to themselves, men will speak good of them; So it is true backward too, So long as we speak well of them, spare them, call not on them, they will do good to us. And otherwise, if we spare them not, but prosecute our charge, then cometh Odi Michæam filium Imila, I hate Michea the son of Imilah. And who would willingly live in disgrace, and sustain, I say, not the fierce wrath, but the heavy look of a man in authority? That makes the office of giving a charge; a cold office, and therefore to decay, and be shunned of all hands; that makes us, if we cannot of the Eunuch learn to speak good of the King: yet to follow Balak, counsel at the least, neither to bless nor curse: that makes, that though for shame of the world, we will not set up for Upholsters, and stuffed cushions and pillowes, to lay them under their elbows; yet for fear of men, we shun the Prophet Esay's occupation, to take the trumpet and disease them, lest we lose Balak's promotion, or Abah's friendship; Esay's portion, or I wot not what else, which we will not be without. In a word: this maketh, that Jonah was never more unwilling to deliver this message at Ninev, than is Timothy to give his Charge at Ephesus.

The Apostle saw this, and what it would come to: and that you may see, that he saw it, you shall understand, he hath besides this of yours, directed another Writ to us, ver. 13. I charge thee, &c, running in very rigorous and peremptory terms, able to make any that shall consider them a right, to tremble. Straightly commanding us, in the name of God the Father, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, laying before us the Passion of Christ, If there be any grudge, and the day of Judgement, and there be any fear, that we fulfill every part of our charge; and immediately after nameth this your charge for one. And knowing that we are given to fear Princes and Lords, he telleth us of the Prince of all Princes, and Lord of all Lords; Knowing, that we are given to fear, and be dazzled with the glittering of their pomp (which yet a man may abide to look on) he telleth us of Him, whose brightness no eye may once abide; Knowing, that we fear honour and power, though it last but for a small time: He seareth us with one, whose honour and power lasteth for ever.

Beloved in the Lord, I beseech you but weigh the place: weigh it, and have pity on us. For, Nunquid nos recipimus? nunquid nos delere possumus? Si delenuis, timemus deleri (saith St. Augustine.) We writ not this charge, our pens dealt not in it; it was not we that writ, and it is not we that can blot it out, unless we our selves will be blotted out of the book of life.

Such is our charge, as you see, to charge you: and but for this charge, but that we are commanded, but that we are threatened, and that in so fearful a manner threatened, we would never do it: of all men, we should never deal with the rich. For who would not choose to hold his peace, and to seek his own ease for his charge, many times chargeable, sometimes dangerous, evermore unsavory, but for this Process that is our against us? For my selfe, I profess, that in the same words that St. Augustine did sometime, Ad istam visiosissimam securitatem nemo nos vinceret; In this discreet kind of fallens, no man should go beyond me, if Saint Paul would be content; if order might be taken, to have these Verses cancelled: if we could deliver (I say not yours, but) our own souls with silence. But this standing in force, Coget nos Paulus iste, we are enforced by this Paul: His precipio tibi, I charge you, drives us to our Præcipe illis, to charge them. We charge not you, but when we are charged our selves; we terrifie not you, but when we are first terrified our selves. And I would to God we knowing this terror, might both fear together this day, at the charge-giving, that some might both rejoice together in the great day, at the charge-answering. This may serve: and I beseech you, let it serve to stand between us and your displeasure in this behalf: and seeing the Commission is penned to our hand, and that Rich men are in it nominate (except the lessons of affection shew it self too evidently in us) to think we cannot otherwise do: and therefore it is, because the commandment of our God is upon us, is heavy upon us. The charge it followeth.

Charge

II.

The first point of the Charge:
Not to be High-minded.

Charge the Rich, &c. This is the first point of the charge, that they be not high minded: 1. First, against that, which if it come with all the riches, yea, all the virtues in the world, it spoileth them all; that is, against Pride. 2. Secondly, against that which is the root of this bitter branch, and the prop and stay of an high raised mind; namely, a vain trust in our riches. Both these forbidden, by means of their uncertainty ἀσφάλεια: such, as a man cannot tell where to have them, therefore not to be boasted of, therefore not to be trusted in.

Ever since our first Fathers, by infection took this morbum Satanicum, this devillish disease (Pride) of the Devil: such tinder is in our nature, that every little spark sets us on fire: our nature hath grown so light, that every little thing puffeth us up, and sets us aloft in our altitudes presently. Yea indeed, so light we are, that many times, when the gifts are low, yet for all that, the mind is as high, as the bramble: low in qualities (GOD knoweth) yet had his mind higher than the highest Cedar in Lebanon. But if we be but of mean stature once, but a thought higher than others our fellows, if never so little more in us, than is in our neighbours, presently we fall into Simons case, we seem to our selves as he did, to be τίσις ἑαυτοῦ, no doubt some goodly great thing. But if we come once to any growth indeed, then presently our case is Hamans case: Who but he? Who was he, that the King would honour more than him? Nay, who was there, that the King could honour, but he? He, and none but he. Through this aptnesse in us that we have to learn the Devils lesson, the Devils Discite a me, for I am proud; (for so it is, by opposition of CHRIST's lessons, which is Discite a me, quia mitis sum, because I am meek and gentle;) we are ready to corrupt our selves in every good gift of GOD: in Wisdom, in Manhood, in Law, in Divinity, in Learning, or Eloquence: every and each of these serveth for a stirrup to mount us aloft in our own conceits. For, where each of the former hath (as it were) his own circuit (as Wisdom ruleth in Counsel; Manhood in the Field; Law in the Judgement-seat; Divinity in the Pulpit; Learning in the Schools; and Eloquence in Persuasion;) only Riches ruleth without limitation: Riches ruleth with them all, rulerth them all, and over-ruleth them all: his Circuit is the whole world. For which cause, some think, when he saith, Charge the rich, he presently addeth, of this world, because this world standeth altogether at the devotion of riches; and he may do what he will in this world, that is rich in this world. So said the Wise man long ago, Pecunia obediunt omnia: all things answer Money; Money mastereth all things; they all answer at his call, and they all obey at his commandement. Let us go lightly over them all; you shall see, that they all else have their several predicaments to bound them, and that Riches is only the transcendent of this world.

Wisdom, ruleth in Counsel; so do Riches: for we see, in the Court of the great King Alexander, there were Counsellours, whose wisdom was to be commanded by riches, even to hinder a public benefit, the building of the Temple: Manhood rulerth in the warre; so do Riches: Experience teacheth us, it is so: It is said, it was they, that wan Deventer; and that it was they, and none but they, that drove the Switzers out of France, and that without stroke stricken. Law governeth in the Seat of Justice; so do Riches: and oftentimes they turn Justice it self into wormwood, by a corrupt Sentence; but more often doth it turn Justice into vinegar, by long standing, and infinite delays, yet Sentence will come forth. Divinity ruleth in the Church and Pulpit; so do Riches: For, with a set of silver-pieces (saith Augustine) they brought Concionatorem mundi, the Preacher of the world JESUS CHRIST to the Barre, and the Disciple is not above his Master. Learning rulerth in the Schools; so do Riches: And indeed, there, Money fetherth all to school. For (to say the truth) Riches have so ordered the matter there, as Learning is now but the Usher; Money he is the Master: the Chair it self, and the disposing of the Chair, is his too. Eloquence rulerth in persuasion; and so do riches: when Tertullus had laboured a goodly flowing Oration against Paul, Felix looked, that another, a greater Oratour should have spoken for him: namely, that Something should have been given him: and if that Oratour had spoken his short pithy sentence, Tantum dabo, Tertullus his Oration had been cleat dashed. Tantum dabo is a strange piece of Rhetorick; Devils as cunningly, pen as curiously as you can, it overthrowes all. Tantum valens quatuor syllabas, such force is there in four syllables. Though indeed, some think (it being so unreasonable short as it is, but two words) that it cannot be the Rhetorike of it, that worketh these strange effects, but that there is some sorcery or witchcraft in them, in Tantum dabo. And surely a great Sorcerer. (Simon Magnus) used them to Peter; and it may well be so, for all estates are sorely bewitched by them. I must end: for it is a world to think and tell, what the Rich of the world, may do in the world.

So then, Riches, seeing they may do so much, it is no marvel though they be much set by. Et divites cum habeant quae magni fiunt ab omnibus, quid mirum, si ab omnibus ipsi magni fiant; & cum magni fiant ab omnibus, quid mirum si & a se? Rich men having that which is much set by, no marvel though of all men they be much set by; and if all other men set much by them, no marvel, if they set much by themselves; and to set much by a mans self, that is to be high-minded. It is our own Proverb in our own tongue: As riseth our good, so riseth our blond. And Saint Augustine saith, that Each fruit, by kind, hath his worm breeding in it: as the Pear, his; the Nut, his; and the Bean, his; So, Riches have their worm, Et vermis divitiarum, Superbia; and the worm of riches, is Pride. Whereof we see a plain proof in Saul: Who, while he was in a poor estate, and his boy and he could not make five pence between them, was as the Scripture saith, low in his own eyes: after, when the wealth and pleasant things of Israel were his, he grew so stern, as he forgot himself, his friends, friends, and GOD too: and at every word that liketh him not, was ready to run David, Jonathan, and every one through with his javeline. It is very certain; where riches are, there is great danger of pride. I desire you to think, there is so, and not to put me to justify GOD'S wisdom herein, in perswading and proving, that this charge is needfull for you that be rich; that it was needfull for the Prophet, to preach under the Law. If riches increase, set not your heart on the top of them: Let not that rise as they rise: Nor for the other Prophet, Give me not riches, lest I wax proud: Nor for the Apostle Paul under the Gospel, to say: Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high-minded. I beseech you, Honour GOD, and ease me so much as to think, there was high cause, it should be in charge; and that, if a more principal sin had been reigning in the rich, this sin should not have had the principal place, as it hath.

Psalms 62. 10.

Prov. 30. 9.

How then? What, are you able to charge any here? will some say: It is not the manner of our Court, nor of any Court, that I know. To us it belongeth only to deliver the Charge, and to exhort, that if none be proud, none would be; and if any be; they would be lesse: and, if any be not humble, they would be; and if any be humble, they would be more. You that are the Court, your part is to enquire, and to present, and to endit; and that, every own in his own conscience, as in the presence of GOD, unto Him to approve your innocence, or of Him to sue for your pardon. You find none (you will say:) I would to GOD you might not.

When a Judge at an Assize, giveth his charge concerning treason and such like offences, I dare say, he would with all his heart, that his charge might be in vain, rather than any Traytour or offender should be found. A Physician, when he hath tempered and prepared his potion, if there be in him the heart of a true Physician, desireth (I know) that the potion might be cast down the kennel, so that the patient might recover without it: So, truly, it is the desire of my heart (CHRIST He knoweth) that this charge may not find one man guilty amongst all these hearers; amongst so many men, not one high-minded man. I wish, it might be in vain. The best Sessions and Potions, and Sermons are those, which are in vain: I say not, in vain, if there be cause of reproof and no amends. But, if there be no cause, and so it be in vain, I joy therein, and will joy. But, if it be far unlikely, amongst so great riches as is here, to find no pride at all; then, hear the charge and present your selves and find your selves guilty here in our Office, this day, while you may find grace, lest you be tried and found so, in that day, when there shall be no hope of grace, but only a fearfull expectation of judgement.

Which that you may do the better, so many as GOD shall make willing (as, some (I hope) He doth) I will inform you, how to try your selves; referring you, to the several branches, in our Statutes, in the High Court of Parliament in Heaven: laying them out unto you, as I find them in the Records of the HOLY GHOST.

The points are three in number. First, if the mind of any man be so exalted, that he looketh down on his brethren, as if he stood on the top of a Leads, and not on the same ground they do, that man is high-minded. Saint Augustine saith well: Excipe pompatica hac & volatica, they are the same that you are. They have not vestem communem, the same coat; but they have cutem communem, the same skin: and within a few yeares, when you die, if a man come with a foyner and measure all that you carrie with you, they shall carrie away with them as much: and within a few yeares after, a man shall not be able to discern the shoulder-blade of one of them, and one of you. Therefore no cause, why you should incedere in statum infericam, and from a high mind, bewraying it self by a high look, contemn them, as many of you do. I say then, if any of you be a child of Ahak, and look down so upon another, as in his sight his brethren seem as grasshoppers: 1. Whether it appear in the countenance, in drawing up his eie-browes, in a disdainfull and scornfull eye; such an one as David (though he found no penal statute to punish it) could never abide (and David was a man after GOD'S own heart, and therefore neither can GOD abide it:). 2. Or whether it appear in a proud kind of Dialect of speech, as was that of Saul's; Ubi nunc est iste filius Israh? Where is this Sonne of Israh? that he come to the Pharisees Non sunt sicut: 3. Or whether it be in the course of their life, and that they be like to the great fishes (to pikes) that think, all the little fishes in the stream were made for them to feed on. So that, it appeareth, they care not what misery, what beggerie, what slavery they bring all men to, so they may sike in the broth of the Cauldron, and welter in their wealth and pleasure: who are in their streets and Parishes as Lions, a great deal more feared than beloved; as implacable as Lamech to bear any injurie, and will have, for one drop of blood, no lesse than a mans life: what speak I of bearing injurie? which will do injurie, and that for no other reason but this, thus it must be, for Hophni will have it not thus, but thus; and except they may do thus (what they will; to whom they will, when and how they will) forthwith they do not govern, their authority is nothing; in this sort, over-bearing all things with their countenance and wealth, and whosoever standeth but up, drawing him before the Judgement-seat, and wearing him out with Law. These men who do thus, from a high in-bearing of the head, in phrase of speech, and in the order, or rather disorder of their dealing: over-look, over-crow, and over-bear their brethren of mean estate; it is certain, they be high-minded: Enquire and look, whether any be so.

Secondly, if any mind climb so high, that the boughes will bear him no longer; by exalting himself above either his ability, condition, or calling (a fault, which hath like to cost our times dear) that mans footing will fail him, he will down; he and his mind are too high a great deal. The late treasons and conspiracies came from such kind of mindes. For, when the mindes of men will will over-reach their abilities, what must be the end, but (as we have seen of late) to prove Tray-tors? Why, because they have sworn themselves out of their skin. Why so? because they had lashed on more on their pleasures than they had. For, so doing, when they had over-reached themselves, they became αποδύται, they must take some heady enterprise in hand, what is that? to become αποδύται; that, seeing their credit is decayed in this State, they may set up anew; and that is, by over-turning the old.

1 Tim. 3. 4.

And not only this passing the ability is dangerous to the over-turning of a Common-wealth; but the passing of a mans condition too: and tendeth to the impoverishing: and, at last, to the overthrow of the estate also. ¹ Whether it be excess of diet: as when being no Magistrate, but plain Mr. Nabal, his dinner must be like to the feast of a King. ² Or whether it be in excess of apparel, wherein the pride of England now, as the pride of Ephraim in times past, ³ testifieth against her to her face. ⁴ Or whether it be in ⁵ lifting up the gate too high; that is, in excess of building. ⁶ Or whether it be in keeping too great a traine (Esau's case) that he go with ⁷ four hundred men at his tail: whereas the fourth part of the fourth part would have served his Father well enough. ⁸ Or whether it be in perking too high in their alliance, the Brambles son in Lebanon, must match with the Cedars daughter. These are evidences and signes set down to prove a high mind: see and search into your selves, whether you find them or no.

Reg. 14. 8.

There is yet of this feather another kind of exalting our selves above that we ought, much to be complained of in these dayes. S. Paul calleth it a stretching of our selves beyond measure. Thus, if a man be attained to any high skill in Law, which is the gift of GOD; or if a man be grown wise, and experienced well in the affaires of this world, which is also His good blessing: presently by vertue of this, they take themselves to be so qualified, as they be able to over-rule our matters in Divinity, able to prescribe Bishops how to govern, and Divines how to preach; so to determine our cases, as if they were professed with us; and that many times, ¹ affirming things they know not, and ² censuring things they have little skill of. Now seeing we take not upon us to deal in cases of your Law, or in matters of your Trade, we take, this is a stretching beyond your line. That in so doing you are ³ a people that controll the Priest: that you are too high, when you ⁴ set your selves over them that are over you in the Lord: and that this is no part of that ⁵ sober wisdom, which Saint Paul commendeth to you; but of that cup-shotten wisdom which he there condemneth. Which breaking compasse and out-reachings is (no doubt) the cause of these lamentable rents and ruptures in the Lord's Net, in our dayes. For, Only by pride cometh contention, saith the Wise man. Which point I wish might be looked upon and amended. Sure, it will marre all in the end.

Thirdly, if a man lift up himself too high, any of both these wayes, GOD hath taken order to abate him and take him down: for, He hath appointed His Prophets, to ¹ prune those that are too high; and He hath ordained His Word, to ² bring down every imagination that shall be exalted against it. Now then, if there be any man, that shall seek to set himself without the shot of it; and is so high-minded, as that he cannot suffer the words of exhortation, and where God hath said, Charge them that be rich, he cannot abide to hear any Charge (and such there be:) sure, that man without all question is very high-minded; and, if he durst, he would tear out this leaf, and all other where like charge is given thorow the Bible. Of Nabal it is recorded, ¹ He was so surly, a man might not speak to him: Of ² Abner (a great man, and a special stay of the house of Saul) that upon a word spoken, of his adulterous life with one of Saul's minions, he grew to such choler, that he forgot all, and laid the plot that cost his Master Ishboseth his kingdom. Micheah prophesied good things, that is to say, profitable to Ahab, the event shewed it: yet because he did not prophesie good things, that is, such as Ahab would hear, he spared not openly to professe, he hated him; and whereas the false Prophets were fed at his own table, and fared no worse then he and his Queen, he took order for Micheah's diet, that it should be the bread of affliction, and the water of trouble; and all for a charge-giving. These here (I dare boldly affirm) high-minded men in their generations: If any be like these, they know what they are. If then there be any that refuse to be pruned and trimmed by the Word of God; ¹ Who either when he heareth the words of the charge, ² blesseth him in his heart, and saith, Tush, he doth but prate; these things shall not come upon me, though I walk still according to the stubbornnesse of mine own heart: ³ Either in hearing the Word of God, takes upon him (his flesh, and blood, and he) to sit on it, and censure it: and say to himself one while, this is well spoken, while his humour is served; another while, this is foolishly spoken, now he babbleth, because the Charge fits somewhat near him: ⁴ Either is in the Pharisees case, which after they have heard the Charge, do (as they did at CHRIST) ⁵ exuvius legem, iest, and scoffe, and make themselves merry with it, and wash it down with a cup of Sack, and that ⁶ because they were covetous: If in very deed ⁷ the Word of God be to them a reproach, and they take like delight in both, and well were they if they might never hear it; and to testifie their good conceit of the Word, shew it in the account of the Ephod, which is a base and contemprible garment in their eyes, and the Word in it and with it (this is Michol's case.) Whosoever is in any of these mens cases, is in the case of a high-minded man; and that of the highest degree: for they lift themselves up, not against earth and man, but against heaven and GOD Himself. O beloved; you that be in wealth and authority, love and reverence the Word of GOD. It is the root that doth bear you; It is the Majestie thereof that keepeth you in your thrones, and maketh you be, that you are: But for Ego dixi Dii estis (a parcell commission out of this commission of ours) the madnesse of the people would bear no government, but run head-long, and overthrow all Chaires of Estate, and break in pieces pieces all the Swords and Scepters in the world ; which you of this City had a strange experience of in Jack Straw and his meiny, and keep a memorial of it in your City Scutcheon, how all had gone down, if this Word had not held all up. And therefore, honour it I beseech you ; I say, honour it. For, when the highest of you your selves, which are but grasse, and your Lordships glory and Worship, which is the flower of this grasse, shall perish and passe away, this Word shall continue for ever. Esay 40. 3.

And if you receive it now, with due regard and reverence, it will make you also to continue for ever. This is your Charge, touching the first branch. I beseech you, enquire of it, whether there be any guilty in these points : And if there be, suffer us to do our Office : that is, to humble you, or else sure the L O R D will do His : that is, pull down riches, and mind, and man, and all. Patimini falcem occantem, ne patiamini securim extirpantem. G O D will not suffer it certainly : He would not suffer it in a King ; He would not suffer it in an Angel : He cannot bear it, to rise, in an Apostle, for the greatness of revelations : therefore, He will not bear it in any man for any cause whatsoever. Let this be the conclusion of this point. q Deut. 17. 10. Jude 6. 1 Cor. 13. 7.

We shall never have pride well pluckt up, so long as the root of it sticks still ; that is, a Vaine confidence in riches. For if we doubted them, we would not trust in them, vve would not boast of them. But, vve trust in them : and that inordinately, as counter-meanes against G O D : not subordinately, as under-meanes unto G O D : and in so doing, we translate G O D'S Office unto us, and our homage unto Him, to a plate of silver, or a wedge of gold. And that is (Saint Paul saith) the worldly mans idolatry. And indeed there is little difference : It is but turning the sentence of the Prophet David ; of Idolaters, to say thus ; Their Idols are silver and gold ; and of the Worldly men, thus : Silver and gold are their Idols. 2

We may examine our selves, in this point of the Charge : namely, whether our trust be in our riches, by two wayes : For it being a received ground ; that our strength is our confidence ; where we take our chief strength to lie, that is it certainly, which vve trust to. Now, vvhen that is, vve shall soon find. 1 If we can certifie our selves, in our need, among all meanes, vvhat doth first offer it self in our intention ; 2 And again, vvhen all our meanes forsake us, and fail, vvhat is our last succour in executions. The second Point. Not to trust in uncertain riches. Coloss. 3. 5. Psalm 135. 15.

By course of nature, every thing, when it is assaulted, ever rouseth that part first, wherein his principal strength lieth : if it be in his trikes, them ; or in his hornes, or whatsoever it is, that. To a poor man (if he have a cause in hand) there is nothing cometh to mind but G O D and innocency, and the goodnesse of his cause : there is his strength, and that is the Horn of his salvation. But, the rich, (saith Amos) hath gotten him Hornes in his own strength ; and not iron hornes, as were Zedekia's, but golden-hornes, with which he is able to push any cause, till he have consumed it. For, indeed, if he be to undertake ought, the first thing that cometh to his head is, Thus much will dispatch it : Such a gift will I assure such a man, and such a gift will stop such a mans mouth, and so it is done : Neither is G O D in all his thoughts. Prov. 24. 22.

Tell me then, if your affaires, vvhat cometh first to mind ? nay, tell your selves what it is Aures omnium pulso (saith Saint Augustine) conscientias singulorum convenio : Tell your selves, what it is ; and by this, try and know, wherein your trust is ; whether this charge meet with you or no, whether your riches be the strength of your confidence.

Now lightly, what we first think of, that we last fly to. It is so. Salomon saw it in his time and said, The rich mans wealth is his castle : that even as men, when they are foiled in the field, and beaten from the City-walls, flye last of all into the Castle, and there think themselves safe, as in their place of chief strength ; So, it falleth out with the rich of this world : in any of their causes ; when justice, and equity, and truth, and right, and G O D, and good men, and a good conscience and all forsaken them (and yet yield they will not, in the pride of an high mind) they know, when all other have forsaken them, their purse will stand to them : and thither, as to their strongest salvation they fly, when nothing else comforts them. So that, when they cannot in heart say to G O D, Thou art my hope, their matter is so bad they do say ('tis he, in Job) to their Wedge of gold : Well yet, thou art my confidence. And surely, he that deviseth or pursueth an unrighteous cause, because his hand hath strength, that man may be arraigned of the point. As again if any say, and say within truly (dic, dic, sed imus dic, saith Augustine) with all my riches, with all my friends, and all the meanes I can make. I can do nothing against the truth, vvhen a man is so rich, that he is poor to do evil ; so wise, that he is a fool to do evil ? so trusteth in his riches, that he dare not take an evil cause in hand, no more than the poorest Commoner in the City ; I dare discharge that man the Court for this point. Oh beloved, think of these things, and secretly betwixt G O D and you, use your self to this examination : Sure if G O D be G O D, if there be any truth in Him, you shall find grace, peace and comfort in it at the last. Prov. 8. 11. Job 31. 24. Mic. 2. 2.

Charge the rich, that they be not high-minded, nor trust, &c. And, why not high-minded ? and why not trust ? Inclusively the reason is added in these words, because of the uncertainty of riches. It is Pauls reason ; and it is Salomons too, vvho knew better what belonged to riches, than Paul or any other. Travel not too greedily for them, bestow not all thy wisdom upon them (saith he :) for they have the wings of an Eagle, and will take their flight of a sudden. Such is Saint Paul's word here, the very fame. We behold them, we hold them, they are here with us ; let us but turn our selves aside a little, and look for them, and they are gone. It is, as if he should say ; Indeed if vve could pinion the wings of our riches, if vve could nail them down fast to us, then were there some Prov. 23. 5.

shew or shadow, why we should repose trust in them: But it is otherwise; they are exceeding uncertaine; even the harvest of the water much above all trades. Yea, I take it, the Merchants confesse so much, before they be aware; For; by this, he claimeth to be allowed an extraordinary gaine, because he ventureth his trafficke as uncertaine, and that he is driven to hazard and put in a venture his goods continually, and many times his person, and (to make him a right venture) many times his soule too. And, if they be not uncertaine, how commeth it then to passe, the rich men themselves are so uncertaine? that is, that they that were but the other day a little before, of principall credit, within a while after, and a very short while after, their bills will not be taken? And if riches be not uncertaine, what need they upon a night of foule weather, Such Assurances upon the Exchange? What need the Merchants have security one of another? What need they, to have their estates sure, and so good? such assurances and coveynances, so strong, yea, more strong than the wit of man can devise, if both riches and men be not uncertaine? I know, they pretend the mans mortality: but, they know, they meane many times, the mortalitye of his riches, rather than himselfe; or at the least, of one as of the other. I will by judged by themselves.

I would have you marke Saint Paul's manner of speech. Before, he called them not rich, barely; but, with an addition, the rich of the world. Sure, it is thought of divers of the best Writers both old and new (I name of the new, M. Calvin; and of the old, Saint Augustine) that this addition is a diminution; and that it is (as it were) a barre, in the Armes of all rich men; and that; even by that word, he meanes to entwile them, and (as I may say) to cry them down; so, to make an entrance to his charge, that men should not be too proud of them. For, being of this world, they must needs savour of the soile; be as this world is (that is transitory, fickle and deceitfull). And now he comes in with riches, againe; and will not put it alone, but calleth it the uncertainie of riches. And I see, it is Holy Ghost's fashion, nor in this place onely, but all along the Scriptures, to speake nothing magnifically of them, as the manner of the world is to doe. Saint Paul calleth them not rich, but the rich of this world: Saint Iohn likewise calleth them not goods simply, but this worlds goods. Saint Paul calleth them not riches, but the uncertainty of riches: Our SAVIOUR CHRIST calleth them not riches, but the deceitfulness of riches. So David, the plate and arras and rich furniture of a wealthy man, calleth it of purpose, the glory of a mans house; not his glory, but the glory of his house; (that is Saint Chrysostomes not.) And Salomon calleth them (as they be indeed) GODS blessings of His left hand. For, immortalitie, eternal life, that onely is the blessings of His right hand. All, to learne us, not to boast our selves, to stay our selves, or (as CHRIST calleth it) to rejoyce (I say not, as He to His Disciples, that a few devills, but) that a few minerals be subject unto us; but that, by our humbleness of minde, trust in God, dealing truly with all, and mercifully with our poore brethren, we are assured, that our names are written in the booke of life. This then is the uncertainty of our riches; because, they are the riches of this world (the world, and they, are all within the compasse of our Text) that is, you must leave them to the world, they are none of yours. Denique si vestra sint (saith Gregorie) sollite ea vobiscum, If they be yours, why doe you not take them with you, when you goe? By leaving them behinde you to the world, you confesse, they are not yours, but the worlds. But, indeed, they are the riches of this world; Hic enim acquiruntur, hic vel amittuntur, vel dimittuntur: here you get them, and here you may lose them; here you get them, and here you must leave them. And in this disjunctive, you have the certainty of riches: the very certainty is losing or leaving, that is, foregoing; so, the very certainty is an uncertainty. Leave them, or lose them we must: leave them when we die, or lose them while we live. One end they must have, finem tuum, or finem suum; thy end, or their owne end. You must either leave them when you die, or they will leave you while you live, this is certaine: but, whether you, them; or, they you; this is uncertain. Iob carried himself, his riches went: The Rich mans riches carried, but he himself went: One of these shall be, we know; but which of them shall be, or when, or how, or how soone it shall be, that we know not.

Let us briefly consider this double uncertainty.

1. Of our riches staying with us first.

2. And then, of our staying with them.

1. In 2 Cor. 11. 26. when as he would glory, he saith, He will glory in his infirmity: which when he would recount; as a principall part of it, he reckoneth, that he had been in perills of waters, in perills of robbers, of his owne nation, among the Gentiles, in the City, in the wildernes, in the sea, and amongst false brethren. If this were frailty then (sure) frail and weak are riches. And sure, if the rich will glory, they must glory with Saint Paul: for, they are in all, and in more and greater than the Apostle ever was. He was in perills of water; they in perill both of water and fire: He was in perill of robbers, they in perill of Rovers by sea, and Robbers by land: He in perill of his owne nation; they are in perill of our own nation, and of other nations: both removed as the Moore and Spaniards, and neere home, as the Dunkirker: He in perill of strangers; they, not of strangers only, but of their own household, their servants and fellowes: He in perill of the Sea, they, both of the tempest at the Sea, and the Publican on land: He in perill of the wildernes, that is, of wild beasts; they, not only of the wild beast, called the Sycophant, but of the tame beasts too, called the flatterer: He in danger of false brethren; and so are they in perill of certaine false brethren called wilfull Bankrupts, and of certaine other called deceitfull Lawyers; for the one, their debts; for the other estates and deeds can have no certainty.

Musculus on that place (where CHRIST willeth Our treasure to be laid, where no moths come) saith

1 Iohn 3. 17.

Mat. 13. 23.
Psal 49. 16.

Luk. 12.

Mat. 6.

faith, his Auditors did laugh in conceit, at CHRIST; that frayed them with moths, their maids should deal with the moths well enough: (Saith he) you think, he meant the silly poore flies: Tush, you are deceived, what say you to Tinea urbana, evill Creditors? You must needs credit, you can have no vent, for your merchandize: and what say you to a second kind of moths, called Tinea forenses, Westminster-Hall-moths? (for I trust, I may speak of the corrupt Lawyer, with the favour of the better sort) you must needs credit them with your evidence and estates, it is not certaine what wealth these two moths doe waste, and in what uncertainty mens riches are, by their meanes.

These are out of Saint Paul's perils: he was free from these moths. But many rich men might be brought forth in a fair day and shewed, whose substance hath by these moths been fretted to pieces. Thus little certainty have we, of their staying with us.

2 But grant, Let it be that they were certaine: yet, except we our selves were sure to stay with them also, it is as good as nothing. That there may be a certainty between two things (as a man and his wealth) to continue together, they must either of them be sure: else, if the one faile, where is the others assurance? Grant then, we were certaine of them, we are not certaine of our selves; and in very deed, we are no more certaine of them, than they of us. Leases of them we have for sixtie yeares; but they have no leases of us for three houres: If they might take leases of us too, it were somewhat. Now, when the Lease is taken, nay when the Fee-simple is bought, and the house; and the ware-house filled, and the purse too, if GOD say but Hac nocte, it dashes all. For which cause; I thinke, Saint James (speaking in two severall places of our life, and our riches) our riches he compareth to the grasse, of no certainty; it will either wither or be plucked up shortly: but this is a great certainty in respect of that of our life, which he resemblance to a vapour which we see now, and by and by we turn us to look for it, and it is vanished away. To us then that are uncertaine of our selves, they cannot be but riches of uncertainty.

Luk. 12.
James 1. 11.

But, let us admit, we were sure of both these, what is it to have riches and not to enjoy them? And the enjoying of riches dependeth upon two uncertainies more.

1 First, a mans uncertainty, which hangeth upon the favour of a Prince; which is many times wavering & uncertain. I know not, whether I shall make you understand it, because of the want of examples in our time, by meanes of the mild and blessed government that we live in. For, a practice it hath been, and many Records doe our Chronicles afford, in the daies of some Princes of this Realme, when a man was growen to wealth, to picke holes and make quarrels against him; and so seize his goods into the Princes hand: to use wealthy Cittizens as sponges, to roule them up & down in moisture till they be full, and then to wring all out of them again. God wot, an easie matter it is, if a Prince stand so minded, to finde matter of disgrace against a subject of some wealth; and then he might fare never a with the better for his wealth, for fine and forfeiture whereof, rather than any fault else, the businesse it selfe was made against him. We cannot tell, what this meaneth; we may thanke the gracious government, we live under; so that, I thinke, I do scarce speak so that I am understood. But, such a thing there is, such an uncertainty belonging to riches, whether we conceive it or no,

2 Again, if the times which we live in, happen to prove unquiet and troublesome, then againe comes another uncertainty. For, the dayes being evill and dangerous; a man can have no joy, and indeed no certainty neither of riches. For, if there fall an invasion, or garboile into the State by forrein or Civill warre, then (if ever) is Iobs simile verified, that Riches are like a cobweb; that which a man shall be weaving all his life long; with great adoe and much travell, there comes me a souldier, a barbarous souldier, with his broom, and in the turning of a hand sweeps it cleane away. How many in our neighbour countries, during their misery have tasted this uncertainty? How many have gone to bed rich, and risen poore men in the morning? Great troubles are looked for, and great troubles there must be and will be, doubtles. The world now knoweth his Masters will and doth it not, it must therefore certainly be beaten with many stripes, with many more than the ignorant world was. And therefore this word [of this world] in this Text, we may with a Emphasis pronounce and say, Charge them that are rich in this world, that they trust not in the uncertainty of riches.

Iob. 8. 4.

There are but three things in riches: 1 The possessing, 2 the enjoying, 3 and last the conveyance of them. Little assurance is there in the two former, and what shall we say of the conveyance? If our pompe cannot descend with us; well yet, if we were certaine to whom we should leave them, somewhat it were for the certainty of them. These considerations oft had in mind would loosen both our assurance in, and our liking of them.

What for the conveyance: do we not see daily that men make heritages, but God makes heires; that many sons roste not that, their fathers got in hunting? that they that have been in the chief account for their wealth, their sons should be driven even to flatter the poor, and have nothing in their hands, no not bread? that never snow in the Sun melted faster, than do some mens riches as soon as they be gone.

Iob. 10. 16.

These things are in the eyes of the whole world. O beloved, these are the judgments of GOD. Deceive not your selves with vaine words: say not in your hearts, this is the way of the world, some must get and some must lose. No, no: it is not the way of the world, it is the way of GODS judgement. For, to the reason of man nothing can be alledged, but that consider the infinite number of infinite rich men in this place, the posterity of them these many yeares should by this time filled have the whole land, were it much bigger than it is, with their progeny, even with divers both Worshipfull and Honourable Families from them descended: and it is well known, it is otherwise, that there is scarce a handfull in comparison. This is not the way of the world; for we see divers Houses of divers lines remain to this day in continuance of the same wealth and worship, which they had five hundred yeares since. It is not therefore the way of the world; say not it is so; but it is a heavy judgment from the Lord. And these uncertainties, namely this last came upon some of them for their wicked and deceitfull getting of them: upon some of them, for their proud and riotous abusing them: upon some of them, for their wretched and covetous retaining them. And except ye now heare this the Lords Charge, tooke unto it, howsoever you wrastle out with the uncertainties your selves; assuredly this last uncertainty remaineth for your children. The Lords hand is not shortened. I shall never get out of this point; if I breake not from it.

Esa. 59. 1

These are but three fruits of all your getting. 1. the tenure: 2. the fruition: 3. the parting with. See, whether the Lord hath not laid one uncertainty on them all. 1. Uncertainty, in their tarrying with us, and Uncertainty, in our tarrying with them. 2. Uncertainty of enjoying, by reason of the danger of the time; 3. Uncertainty of our leaving them, by reason of the danger of our childrens scattering. The estate in them, the enjoying of them, the departing with them, all being uncertaine, so many uncertainties, might not Saint Paul truly say, the uncertainty of riches?

There is yet one behind, worse than them all. I will adde no more but that: and that is, that our riches and our worship they shall leave us, because they be uncertaine; but the pride of our minds, and the vain trust in them, them we shall be certaine of, they shall not leave us. And this is grave jugum, a heavy misery upon mankind: The Goods, the Lordskip, the Offices that they got, them they shall leave here: the sin, that they commit in getting and enjoying them, they shall not leave behind them for their hearts, but that shall cleave fast unto them. This is a certainity you will say: it is indeed a certainity of sinne, but therefore an uncertainty of the soule: so doth Iob reckon it amongst the uncertainties of riches. For what hope hath the hypocrite when he hath heaped up riches, if God take away his soul? Where is his hope or his trust then? Never will they shew themselves in their owne kinde, to be a staffe of reed, as then: both deceiving them which leane on them, and besides going into their soules and piercing them. For, very sure it is, many of that calling die in great uncertainty this way; wishing, they had never seene that wealth, which they have seen, that so they might not see that sin which they then see. Yea, some of them (I speake it of mine own knowledge abroad) wish, they had never come further than the shovel and the Spade: crying out at the houre of death, both of the uncertainty of their riches, and of the uncertainty of the estate of their soules too.

Iob. 27. 8.

Esa. 36. 6.

This point, this, is a point of speciall importance, to be spoken of by me, and to be thought of by you. I would God, you would take it many times (when GOD shall move you) into sad consideration. With great affection, and no lesse great truth (said Chrysostome) that heaven and earth, and all the creatures in them, if they had tears, they would shed them in great abundance, to see a great many of us, so carelesse in this point as we be. It is the hand of the Lord, and it is his gracious hand, (if we could see) it that He in this manner, maketh the world to reel & reel under us: that we might not stay and rest upon it, where certainity and steadfastnesse we shall never finde; but in Him, above, where only they are to be found. For, if riches, being so brittle and unsteadie as they be, men are so mad upon them; if God had settled them in any certainity, what would they have done? What poore mans right, what widowes copy, or what Orphanes legacie should have been free from us.

The III. point
Trust in God.

Well then: if riches be uncertaine, whereto shal we trust? If not in them, where then? It is, in the third point, Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high minded, neither trust in the uncertainty of riches: but that they trust in GOD. It is the third point of the Charge, in general, and first of the affirmative part: and containeth, Partly a Homage to be done for our riches to GOD, and that is, trust in Him: And partly a rent-charge laid upon our riches which is doing good. And indeed, no other than David had said before, trust in the Lord and be doing good.

Prov. 37. 5.

Prov. 18. 10.

Saint Paul will batter downe, and lay flat our Castle, but he will erect us another, wherein we may trust. Yea indeed, so as Salomon did before, setteth up a Tower against the Tower; The Tower of the righteous, which is the Name of the Lord, against the Rich mans Tower, which is as you have heard before, his riches. Instead of the Worldlings faith, which is to make money an article of his faith; teacheth us the faith of a Christian, which is, to vouchsafe none but God that honour. Even so doth the Apostle here; and that, for great reason. Nam qui vult securus spirare, speret in eo, qui non potest perire, He that will trust, and be secure in His trust, let him trust in Him, who Himselfe never failed, and never failed those that put their trust in Him: in whom is no uncertainty, no not so much as any shadow of uncertainty.

James. 1. 17.

Trust in Him, by looking to Him first; yer we admit any else into our conceipt: and by looking to Him last, and not looking beyond Him to any, as if we had a safer or trustier than He.

And that, because He is the living God: as if He should say, That you phansie to your selves, to trust in a dead idoll, and not a living God; and if ever you come to any dangerous disease, you shall finde, it is an idoll, dead in it selfe, not able to give it selfe life; much lesse to another: not able to ransom the body from the death, much lesse the soule from hers; not able to recover life when it is gone, nay, not able to preserve life when it is present; not to remove death, nay not to remove sickness, not any sickness, nor the gout from your feet, nor the palse from your hands, nay, not so much as the ache from your teeth: not able to adde one haire to your head, nor one haire breadth to your stature, nor on houre to your daies, nor one minute to the houres of your life. This moth-eaten God, as our Saviour Christ calleth it, this canker-eaten God, this God, that must be kept under lock and key from a thiefe, trust not in it for shame. O let it never be said, the living trust in the dead. Trust in the living God, that liveth Himselfe, nay that is life Himselfe; in His Son, that was able to quicken Himselfe, and is able to quicken you; of whose gift and inspiration you have already this life; by whose daily spirit and visitation your soul is preserved in this life, in this mortal and corruptible life; and of whose grace and mercie we look for our other immortal and eternal life.

Who onely not liveth, but also giveth you, &c.] A living and a giving God: that is, that liveth, and that giveth: of whose gift you have not onely your life and terme of yeares, but even also your riches themselves, the very hornes that you lift so high, and wherewith naturally many times you push against Him that gave them. He giveth; for the earth was the Lords, and all that therein is, till the earth He gave unto the children of men: And silver and gold were the Lords till, not by a casual scattering, but by His appointed giving; not by chance, but by gift, He made them thine. He gave them: thou broughtest none of them with thee into the world, thou camest naked. He gave them; and when He gave them, He might have given them to thy brother of low estate: and made thee stand and aske at his doore; as He hath made him now stand and aske at thine. He giveth your riches; you get them not; it is not your own wisdom or travell that getteth them, but His grace and goodnesse that giveth them. For, you see many men of as great understanding and foresight as your selves, want not only riches, but even bread. It is not your travel; except the LORD hath given them, all the early up-rising, and late downe-lying had been in vaine. It is God that giveth: make your recognisance, it is so, for fear lest if you deny Dominus dedit; you come to affirme Dominus abstulit. God teacheth, it was He that gave them, by taking them away.

Psal. 124. 1. 5.

Agg. 2. 9.

Eccle. 9. 12.

Iob 1. 21.

This is S. Pauls reason: let us see how it serves his conclusion to the overthrow of our vaine pride and foolish trust in them. If it be gift, Si accepisti, quid gloriaris? be not proud of it. And if it be gift, He that sent it, can call for it again; trust not in it.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

Who giveth us all things, &c.] All things, spirituall or corporall; temporall or eternall, little or great, from the least and so upward; from the greatest and so downward: from panem quotidianum, a morsell of bread, to Regnum celorum, the Kingdome of heaven. He giveth us all even unto Himselfe: yea, He giveth us himselfe and all, and more we cannot desire.

Why then, if He gives all, all are Donatives; all that we hold, we hold in franck almoigne; and no other tenure is there, at Gods hands, or in our Law. For, quid habes quod non accepisti? What is there, that is to say, name one thing, thou hast, that thou hast not received; and if there be any one thing, boast of that and spare not. But if that be nothing, then let Cyprians sentence take place (so much commended and so often cited by Saint Augustine) De nullo glorandum est, quia nullum est nostrum: and adde unto it, De nullo fidendum est, quia nullum est nostrum: we must glory of nothing, for that we have nothing of our owne; neither must we trust any thing, for that we have nothing of our owne.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

That giveth us all things to enjoy.] Not onely to have, but to enjoy. For, so to have them, that we have no joy of them; so to get all things, that we can take no part of them, when we have gotten them; so to possesse the labours of our hands; that we cannot eat the labours of our hands; as good be without them: This is a great vanity and vexation; and indeed (as Salomon saith) an untimely birth were better, than so to be. But blessed be God, that besides these blessings to be enjoyed, giveth us healthfull bodies to enjoy them with, the favour of our Prince to enjoy them under, the dayes of peace to enjoy them in; whereby our soules may be satisfied with good things, and every one may eat his portion with joy of heart.

Eccle. 6. 2. 3.

That giveth all things to enjoy.] that is, dealeth not with you as He hath dealt with the poore, hath given you things, not onely of use and necessity, but things also of fruition and pleasure: Hath given you not onely Manna for your need, but also Quails for your lust: Hath given you out of Ophir not onely linnen cloth and Horses for service, but also, Apes, Ivory, and Peacocks, for your delight. Unto them He giveth indumenta, covering for their nakedness; but unto you ornamenta, cloathing for your comeliness. Unto them He gives alimenta, nourishment for their emptinesse; unto you delictamenta, delicious fare for daintinesse. Therefore you above all men, are to rejoyce in Him, there is great cause: that He may rejoyce over you, unto whom He hath given so many wayes, so great cause of rejoycing.

Psal. 78. 19.

That giveth us all things to enjoy plentifully.] Plenteously, indeed, may Israel now say, (saith the Prophet;) may England now say (say I) and I am sure upon as great cause. He hath not dealt so with every Nation, nay, He hath not dealt so with any nation. And plentifully may England now say; for it could not alwaies: Nay it could not ever have said the like. Plente-

Psal. 7. 12.

Pfal. 144. 15.

ously indeed, for He hath not sprinkled, but poured His benefits upon us. Not onely Blessed be the People whose God is the Lord (that blessing which is highly to be esteemed, if we had none besides it,) but Blessed be the people that are in such a case. That blessing He hath given us; all things to enjoy plentifully; we cannot, nay our enemies cannot but confesse it. O that our thankfulness to Him, and our bounty to His, might be as plenteous, as His gifts and goodness have beene plenteous to us!

To move us from the two evils before, the Apostle used their uncertainty, which is a reason from Law and the course thereof. So he might now have told us; if we trusted not in God, we should have the table turned; and His giving changed to taking away; our all things, into want of many things; and having nothing neer all; our plenty into pennury; and our enjoying more than we need, into no more than needs, nor so much neither. Thus He might have dealt: but He is now in a point of Gospel, and therefore taketh his perswasion from thence. For this indeed, is the Evangelical argument of Gods goodness; and there is no goodness to that, which the consideration of Gods goodness worketh in us.

Iob. 19.

The argument is forcible; and so forcible, as that choose whether this will move us or no: Sure, if this will not prevaile with us, we shall not need Moses and Christ, to sit and give sentence upon us; the Divell himselfe will doe it. For, as wicked as he is, and as wretched a spirit; yet thus he reasoneth upon Iob: Doth Iob feare thee for nought? As if he should say: seeing thou hast dealt so plenteously, yea so bounteously with him, if he should not serve thee, if he should so forget himself, it were a fault past all excuse, a fault well worthy to be condemned. A bad fault it must be, that the Divell doth abhor: yet so bad a fault it is (you see) that the Divell doth abhor it. When men receive blessings plenteously from God, and returne not the homage backe againe, unthankfull rich men shall need no other Judge but the Devill, and then, as you see, they are sure to be condemned, For if God will not do it, the Divell will.

James. 1. 5.

Let me then recommend this third part of the Charge to your carefull remembrance and regard. It concerneth your homage, which is your trust in Him, that you trust in him with your service of body and soule, who hath trusted you with His plenty and store, and hath made you in that estate, that you are trusted with matters of high importance both at home and abroad. For it is the argument of all arguments to the true Christian, because GOD hath given him (saith S. James) without exprobration; and given all things, without exception of any; and that to enjoy which is more than competency; and that plenteously, which is more than sufficiency, therefore, even therefore, to trust in him only. If there be in us the hearts of true Christians, this will shew it; for it will move us: and so let it, I beseech you. Let us not, as men under the Law, be tried with the uncertainty of the creatures; but as men under grace, have our heart broken with the goodness of our God. In that God to place our trust, who beyond all our desires giveth: if we respect the quantity, all things; if the manner, very plenteously; if the end, to joy in them; yet so, that our joy and repose end in Him: a very blessed and heavenly condition.

The III. Part
That they doe good.
Psal. 37. 3.

Trust in the Lord and be doing good, said David: S. Paul saith the same, Charge the rich of this world, that they do good. The last was a very plausible point, which we have dwelt in with great delight. What? the plenty of all things; that we enjoy, and long may enjoy, I beseech God: who is not moved with joy to hear it reported?

But little know they, what a consequent S. Paul will inferre upon this antecedent. For thus doth Paul argue. God hath done good to you by giving you; you also are bound to do good to others, by giving them. If he hath given you all things, you ought to part with something: (and the more you part with, the liker yee become to Him, that giveth all things.) If He have given you to enjoy, you ought to receive others into the fellowship of the same joy: and not to thinke, that to doe others good, is to do your selves hurt. If plenteously He have given you, you ought to be plenteous in giving; and, not when the LORD hath His Epha great, wherein He hath mete to you, to make you Hinsmall, whereby you measure to the poore; turning the plenty of heaven into the scarcity of earth.

Thus doth the Apostle fetch the matter about, and thus doth he inferre your doing good to these little lambs and such like, out of GODS doing good unto you.

Heb. 11. 25.

And that which he inferreth, he doth exceeding fitly, and sheweth great art and learning in it. For, speaking of enjoying (his very last word) he is carried in a very good zeale and affection of the rich of this world, to desire of GOD, and to entreat of them that they may not have onely πρόκαιρον ἀπόλαυσιν of them (that is) enjoy them for a season, but that they may enjoy them for ever; not onely for a few yeares, or weeks or daies (we cannot tell well which, but from everlasting to everlasting: And that is, by doing good, So enjoy that we may doe good too.

Gen. 41. 4.

To say truth: Saint Paul could not better devise, than here to place it. For, our too much enjoying, eateth up our well doing, cleane. Our too much lashing on in doing our selves good, maketh that we can doe good to none but our selves. Our present enjoying destroyeth our well-doing utterly, and consequently the eternall enjoying we should have of our riches. As Pharaoh's leane kine devoured the fat, and it was not scene on them; so doth (saith Basil) our ἐπ' αὐτῶν, our riotous mispending (where we should not) eat up our ἐπ' αὐτῶν, our Christian bestowing where we should: and a man cannot tell tell, what is become of it. Very well and wisely said that, Father, Αὐτὸν ὁ τῆς ἀσώτίας ἡ φιλοψυχία. Pride is Prodigalities Whet-stone, and it sets such an edge upon it, in our enjoying, that it cuts so deep into our wealth, and shares so much for our vain and riotous enjoying, that it leaves but little for our well doing.

Look how the trust in God, and the trust in riches are set one against another, here by the Apostle: so are our high minds, and our doing good. One would not think it at the first, but (sure) so it is; we must have lower minds and less pride, if we will have more good works, and greater plenty of well-doing. You may therefore enjoy your wealth, that is true: but you must also take this with you, you must do good with it, and learn of the Apostle: There be two uses of your riches, and that therefore GOD hath given them, 1 To enjoy, 2 To do good: not to enjoy only, but to enjoy, and to do good.

Enjoying, is doing good: But to our selves only; but by doing good, here, Saint Paul meaneth, to do it to others, that they may be the better for us. The very same two doth Salomon in very fit terms set down: That Water is given into our cisterns, 1 that we may drink of it ourselves, 2 that our fountain may flow out, and they that dwell about us fare the better for them. The very same two doth a greater than Salomon, our Saviour Himself count of too: for of His purse, we read He had these two uses, To buy that He had need of Himself, and to give something to the poor. It is good reason, that man consisting of two parts, the soul and body, the body only should not take up all, but the soul should be remembered too. Enjoying is the bodies part; and well-doing is the souls; your souls are suiters to you to remember them, that is, to remember well-doing, which is the souls portion.

Remember this second: the other (I doubt not) but you will remember fast enough. This was the use of our Saviour Christ's purse, and if yours be like His, this must be the use of yours also. For surely, it is greatly to be feared, that many rich at this day, know not both these: indeed know no other use of their wealth than an Ox or an Ass, or other brut beasts would know: to have their crib well served, sweet and clean provender of the best in the manger, and their furniture and trappings fit, and of the finest fashion: No other than the Glutton did, to go in soft linnen and rich silk, and to fare deliciously every day. Or than the other, his pew-fellow, that professed, it was all the use he counted of, and therefore we see he saith to his soul, eat thy fill (soul) and drink thy fill; fill and fat thy self, and enjoy this life: never look to enjoy any other.

We must learn one use more, one more out of our Charge, and consequently, When we look upon our sealed sums, our heaps of Treasures, and continual commings in, thus to think with our selves: This that I see here, hath God given me to enjoy, but not only for that, but to do good with also. The former use of my riches I have had long, and daily still have; but what have I done in the other? The rich men in the Gospel, they had the same; they did enjoy theirs, but now (it is sure) little joy they have of them: why? for want of this other. Abraham he did both: he enjoyed his riches here, and now another, an eternal joy of them. Yea, he received Lazarus into his bosome. Why? he received him into his bosome, and cherished him, and did good here on earth. And so did Job, and so did Zacharias. Now good Lord, so give me grace, so to enjoy here, that I lose not my endless joy in thy heavenly Kingdome. Let me follow their steps in my life, with whom I wish my soul after death. These things are good and profitable for the rich, oft to think on.

Well then, if to do good be a part of the Charge, what is it to do good? It is a positive thing (good) not a privative, to do no harm. Yet, as the world goeth now, we are fain so to commend men: He is an honest man, he doth not hurt: of which praise any wicked man, that keeps himself to himself, may be partaker. But it is to do some good thing: what good thing? I will not answer, as in the Schools: I fear I should not be understood; I will go grossly to work. These that you see here before your eyes, to do them good, to part with that, that may do them good, use the goods that you have, to do but that, which sundry that they have heretofore occupied those roomes where you now sit (whose remembrance is therefore in blessing upon earth, and whose names are in the books of life in heaven) have before you in divers works of charity, to the maintenance of the Church, the benefit of Learning, and the Relief of the Poor of the land. This is to do good. This, I trust, you understand.

This know, that God hath not given sight to the eye, to enjoy, but to lighten the members; nor wisdom to the honourable man, but for us men of simple shallow forecast; nor learning to the divine, but for the ignorant: so, neither riches to the wealthy, but for those that want relief. Think your Timothy hath his depositem, and we ours, and you have none? it is sure, you have. We, ours, in inward graces and treasures of knowledge: You yours, in outward blessings and treasures of wealth. But both are deposits, and we both are Trustees of trust. I see, there is a strange hatred, and a bitter gain-saying every where stirred up against unpreaching Prelates (as you term them) the Pastors that feed themselves only: and they are well worthy: If I might see the same hatred begun among your selves, I would think it sincere. But that I cannot see. For that which a slothfull Divine is, in things spiritual; that is, a Rich man for himself and no body else, in things carnal, and they are not pointed at. But, sure you have your harvest as well, as we ours; and that a great harvest. Lift up your eyes; and see the streets round about you, the harvest is verily great, and the Labourers few: Let us pray (both) that the Lord would thrust our Labourers into both these harvests, that the treasures of knowledge being opened, they may have have the bread of eternal life: and the treasures of well-doing being opened, they may have the bread of this life, and so they want neither.

I will tell you it, another as easie a way: Saint Augustine making it plain to his auditory (some-what backward as it should seem) was fain to tell them thus, thus to define doing good: Quod non vultis facere, hoc bonum est (saith he:) that that you will not do, that that I cannot get you to do, that is, to do good. Shall I tell so to you? No indeed, I will not, I hope better things, and partly I know them. But this I will say, that which the Papists with open mouth, in all their books, to the slander of the Gospel: that which they say, you do not: nay, you will not do; that is, to do good.

One of them saith, that our religion hath comforted your force attractive so much, and made it so strong, that nothing can be wrung from you. Another, he saith, that our religion hath brought a hardness into the bowels of our professors, that they pity little, and the cramp of chiragra into their hands, that they give less. Another, that our preaching hath bred your minds full of Salomons horseleeches, that cry, bring in, bring in, and nothing else. All of them say, that your good works come so from you, as if indeed your religion were, to be saved by faith only. Thus through you, and through want of your doing good, the Gospel of CHRIST is evil spoken of among them that are without. They say, we call not to you for them: that we preach not this point, that we leave them out of our Charges. Libero animam meam, I deliver here mine own soul: I do now call for them, I have done it elsewhere yee now. Here I call for them now, I take witness, I call you to record, I call heaven to record, Domine scis quia dixi, scis quia locutus sum, scis quia clamavi: Lord, thou knowest, I have spoken for them, I have called for them, I have cried for them, I have made them a part of my charge, and the most earnest and vehement part of my charge, even the charge of doing good.

James 1. 27.

Unto you therefore that be rich, be it spoken; hear your charge I pray you. There is no avoiding, you must needs seal this fruit of well-doing, you must needs do it. For, having wealth, and wherewithal to do good, if you do it not; Imprimis, talk not of Faith, for you have no faith in you; if you have wherewith to shew it, and shew it not, Saint James saith, you have none to shew. Nor, tell me of your religion; there is no religion in you: Pure Religion is this (as to very good purpose was shewed yesterday) To visit the fatherless and widows: and you never learned other religion of us.

Secondly, if you do it not, I warn you of it now; you shall then find it, when you shall never be able to answer the exacting of this charge, in the great day: where the question shall not be of the highness or lowness of your minds, not of your trust and confidence, or any other virtues, though they be excellent, but of your feeding, clothing, visiting, harbouring, succouring, and in a word, of your well-doing, only. This I say to you, bear witness I say it.

2 Kings 2 12:

Now to them, in your just defence I say: (for God forbid, but while I live, I should alway defend this honourable City in all Truth.) to them whom the mist of envy hath so blinded, that they can see no good at all done, but by themselves, I forbid them, the best of them, to shew me in Rhemes or in Rome, or any popish City Christen, such a shew, as we have seen here these two dayes. To day but a handfull of the heap, but Yesterday and on Munday, the whole heap; even a mighty Army of so many good works, as there were relieved Orphanes, the Chariots of this City, I doubt not, and the horsemen thereof.

Psal. 115. 1:

They will say, it is but one; so they say: Be it so, yet it is a matchless one. I will go further with them; spoken be it to GODS glory, Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam. Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy Name give the praise; for thy loving mercy, and for thy truths sake which we profess. I will be able to prove, that Learning, in the foundation of Schools, and encrease of revenues within Colleges; and the Poor, in foundation of Almes-houses, and encrease of perpetuities to them, have received greater help in this Realm within these forty years last past, since, (not, the starting up of our Church, as they fondly use to speak, but since) the reforming ours from the error of theirs, than it hath, I say, in any Realm Christen, not only within the self same forty years (which were enough to stop their mouthes) but also than it hath in any forty years upward, during all the time of Papery: which I speak, partly of my own knowledge, and partly by sufficient grave information to this behalf. This may be said, and said truly.

1 Pet. 2. 15.

And when we have said this, what great thing have we said? that, time for time, so many years for so many; thirty years of light have made comparison with thirty years of trouble. But this is not as we would have it: We would have it out of all comparison. This, that hath been said, is strange to them (I know) and more, than they reckoned of. But I would have you in these times of peace and truth, so far beyond them, as that you might quiver, snaffle them in this. So that they durst not once offer to enter into this Theam with us, or once to mention it more. So it should be, I am sure, so the Gospel deserves to have it.

2. The quantity:
Be rich in good works.

You have the substance of that you must do, to do good. Now here is the quantity: Be rich in good works: that seeing you are rich indeed, you would not be poor men, but rich in good works.

Good works (Saint Paul saith) not good words. Good, with the goodness of the hand; not with the goodness of the tongue, and tongue only; as many now are, (well therefore resembled to the tree that Pliny speaketh of, the leaves of it as broad as any target, but the fruit is no bigger ger than a bean :) to talk targets, and to do beans. It were better reversed; if we were (as St. Paul saith) perfect in all good works, than perfect in certain curious and quaint terms, and set phrases; wherein a great part of many mens religions do now a dayes consist: plain speech and sound dealing; plain speech and good works, best.

And rich in them. The rich man in the Gospel; would (as he said) build his barns bigger to put in them πάρτα ἀγαθά, all his goods he had: no good out of his barn. Yes; yes some in good works too. Saint Paul hath here within the compass of this Text two rich men; his desire is, they may both meet together in every rich man. Rich; ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, in the world that now is, so ye are: Rich; in the world that shall be after this; be that too. Rich in Coffers, so ye are: Rich in conscience, be so too. Your consciences you shall carry with you: your coffers you shall not. Thus you are valued in the Queens books: what are you in Gods books? So much worth in this land of the dying: how much worth in the land of the living? Saint Paul's advice is; that you strive for both, which you shall be, if ye be rich in good works. The true riches are the riches of his glorious inheritance. They be the true riches; which except a man can assure himself of, after the lease of his life is out, he shall be in a marvellous poor case, as was the rich man; and beg of Lazarus there, that begged of him here. Those riches must be thought of, marry then you must be rich in good works. Not to give something, to some body, at some time: Why? Who doth not so? That is not to be rich. To give πενδοῦν sparingly; a piece of bread; or a draught of drink; and that only; that belongeth to him whom GOD hath sparingly blessed, to the brother of low estate; it is not your work.

In the Law, to the building of the Tabernacle, the poor gave Goats hair; and Badgers skins; that was for them, and that was accepted: the rich, they gave purple, gold and Jewels to the Tabernacle; they were rich in good works. And in the Gospel; to whom much is given, of him proportionally much shall be required: that is, in a word, as you are sessed in the Queens books, so are you in Gods books, each one according to his ability. And God will look, that according to that iustement they should be done: that you should περισσεύειν, abound in good works, as you do in wealth, that you should ὑπερέχειν, Go before, and sit highest, and have a precedence in works, as you have in your places. And in a word, that you should be Lords, Knights, Aldermen, Masters, Wardens, and of the livery in good works, as you be in your several Wards and Companies. And indeed to say the truth, to commit so many sinns, as no Auditor can number them, and to afford so few good works, as a child may tell them: To receive such profits, as great count-books will not hold them; and to yield so small store of good works, as a little paper, not so broad as my hand, may contain them; To lash out at a banquet, you know what; and to cast to a Captives redemption all the world knows what: to cast your pride with pounds, and your good works with pence; what coherence is there in these? This is not to be rich: But that is a part of the charge too. I pray you remember it: Remember to be Rich: not only to do good, but to be rich in doing good. That will make you in case well to die, as now (God be thanked) you are well to live.

And with the quantity, take the quality too; I pray you: for the quantity, richly; for the quality, readily. Ἐξ ἀνάγκης, with compulsion, not willingly; and ἐκ λόγους, with grudging, not cheerfully, these are the faults contrary to this vertue. God must have it done with a facility, with a readiness easily. And good reason, easily; for easily you may. We that want; cannot without difficulty; we would, and we cannot: we have a heart without a hand: though we be willing, nothing is done; why? we are not able. You are well able (God be thanked) if you be well willing, there is no more to do, it is done. This readiness is a necessary vertue in our daies; where, yer a benefit come (nay many times, yer a debt) so much ingenuity is spent, so many Roge's, such a Vade & redi, go and come such a time; such a dauncing on the threshold, such a faining of the eyes, yer it can be seen; such a cleaving to the fingers, yer it will come off; such intillation by now a drop, and then a drop; as to a liberal nature, when it commeth, it is like to bread full of gravel; for hunger a man must needs have it; and but for needs must, a man, had as leefe be without it. O beloved, matre not all you do before God and man, for want of this one thing. You have a fair seed-time; all of you; Hilaris datio, serene sario; cheerfull giving is like a fair seed-time. As you, for your seed, to bury it, with a seasonable time: so no less GOD desireth for His, that His seed may not be sown with an over-cast mind; but with the gladness of heart, and cheerfulness of countenance. Even as he doth himself, who what he bestoweth, bestoweth so, as He taketh as much; yea more delight in giving, than we in receiving. So do, and then this Charge is at an end. Be ready to communicate.

There is of this word, some difference among Writers; but such as you may easily reconcile. Some think; the Apostle would have rich men to be improbus easie to be spoken with, and to be spoken to. Some, that He would not only have them give readily, but lend freely, and not practise the Devils Alchymistrie (as they do) by multiplication in lending. Some, that they should not think their beneficence to be a taking from them without receiving back, inasmuch as there is an entercourse of the givers grace; and the receivers prayer. Some, that His mind is; that they should not do good to some few; but even to a multitude. All are good and godly, and agreeable to the analogie of faith: and you by doing all, may verifie and agree all, and make of a discord in opinions, an harmony in practice. Saint Hierome (me thinketh) saith best, that Communicare est communis datio, aut ad aliquid commune, to be beneficial to a Society, or to bestow to some common use.

Prov. 3: 34.

Cor. 4. 15.

This is the perfection or pitch of well-doing, that most plenteous grace by the thanksgiving of many, may redound to the glory of God. The Apostle therefore is a further suitor to you that be rich, and will not end his Charge, till he hath laid this on you too, to do good to Societies and Foundations, either necessary to be erected, or more than necessary to be maintained, lest through our evil-doing, our Fathers well-doing perish. It is not for every man to reach unto them; there is no hope to have them upholden but by you; that you would therefore have them in remembrance, and to think upon them to do them good.

Jer. 49. 31.

But alas, what hope is there to hear, that good will be this way done, since it is thought, that many may be enticed for seeking to eat up Companies, and to convert that which was the good and making of many, into their own singular commodo, by out-buying and out-bidding all besides themselves, that they alone may appropriate civil things, turn common into private: the whole bodies nourishment into one foregrown member, and in the end dwell alone upon the earth.

That the world is toward an end, other men may be perswaded by other reasons; none more effectual to perswade me, than this one, that every man doth what in him lieth to Discommon communities, and to bring all to the first privation. For the world being it self a main Society: these men, by dismembring under-Societies, seek and do what they can to dissolve the whole. So that, GOD must needs come to make an end of the world, or else, if this hold on, we should shortly make an end of it our selves.

It is further complained, that whereas there hath been and is given charitably to the poor and their maintenance, that the poor themselves want, and they that have the receiving of the profits do yet encrease mightily. Had not these things need to be put in the Charge? Are they not in the eares of the Lord? Is it not a sinne crying to heaven? Shall he not visit for these things? for this discredit of His Gospel, for this unexcusable, unfaithfull dealing, in the eares of Jew and Gentile, of Turk and Christian, of GOD and man? I beseech you still, suffer the words of exhortation: it is good for you to know, what things are said abroad. For my part, in GOD's presence I protest, I know none; and if there be none, present none. It is that I desire; the charge is now given, may be given in vain.

1 To the Church.

a Gal. 6. 6.

b Rom. 12. 13

Now, if you enquire, to whom your doing good should stretch it self? Saint Paul himself will tell you, To them that instruct you, they are to a communicate with you in all good things: that is, the Church; and to the necessity of the Saints, and to the Saints that be in necessity: that is, to the Poor.

c Esth. 4. 14.

d Neh. 1. 11.

e Ezek. 28. 14.

The Church first: c For this end, came Ester to the Kingdom, and d Nehemiah to his great favour with the Prince, even to do good to the Church: And for this end hath e Tyrrus, that rich City, that abundance bestowed on her, even to be a covering Cherub to the Church of GOD, and to stretch out her wings over it. The Prophets meaning was, the rich men must be a shadow of maintenance and defence to the Ark, to Divinity, their riches must serve them as wings to that end; they must be covering Cherubs on earth to the Church militant, if ever they will be singing Cherubs in heaven with the Church triumphant.

And much good might be done, and is not, in this behalf, and that many wayes: I will name but one, that is, that with their wings stretched out, they would keep the filth and pollution of the sin of finnes (whereof you heard so bitter complaint both these dayes) of Simony and Sacrilege, from falling on the Ark, and corrupting and putrifying it, which it hath almost already done. That seeing the Pope do that he doth (howsoever some have alleadged the Papists great detestation of this sinne, and of us for this sinne, for a motive; it is all but dissembling, their hand is as deep in this sin as any mans:) I say, seeing the Pope doth as he doth: that is, as he hath dispensed with the oath and duty of Subjects to their Prince, against the fifth Commandment: with the murder, both violent with dagges, and secret with poison of the Sacred Persons of Princes, against the sixth: with the uncleanness of the stewes, and with incestuous marriages, against the seventh: So, now of late, with the abomination of Simony, against the eighth; having lately (as it is known by the voluntary confession of their owne Priests) by special and expresse warrant of the See Apostolike sent hither into this Land, his License dispensative to all Patrons of his mark to set up Simony, and to marr and make sale of all Spiritual livings which they have or can get, to the uttermost penny, even (if it were possible) by the sound of the drumme; and that with a very clear conscience (so that some portion thereof be sent over to the relief of his Seminaries, which by such honest meanes as this, come to be now maintained.) Seeing thus do the Papists, and we (loath to be behind them in this gain of blood) make such merchandise with this sinne, of the poor Church and her patrimony, as all the world crieth shame of it: To redeem the orderly disposing them to the Churches good, were a special way for you rich men to do good in these dayes. Neither as these times are, do I know a better service, nor which (I am perswaded) will please GOD better, than this, or be better accepted at His hands.

2 To the poor.

John 12. 8.

This for the Church: you must have a wing stretched abroad to cover it. And for the poor, you must have a bosome wide open to receive them. Lazarus in a rich mans bosome, is a goodly sight in heaven; and no lesse goodly in earth. And there shall be never a rich man with Lazarus in his bosome, in heaven, unless he have had a Lazarus in his bosome here on earth.

The poor are of two sorts: Such as shall be with us alwayes (as CHRIST saith) to whom we must do good by relieving them: such is the comfortlesse estate of the poor Captives: the succourlesse estate of poor Orphanes; the desolate estate of the poor Widowers; the distressed estate of poor Strangers; the discontented estate of poor Scholars: all which must be suffered and succoured too.

There are others, such as should not be suffered to be in Israel, whereof Israel is full: I mean beggers and vagabonds, able to work; to whom good must be done, by not suffering them to be as they are, but to employ them in such sort, as they may do good. This is a good deed no doubt; and there being, as I hear, an honourable good purpose in hand for the redresse of it, God send it good successe. I am as one, in part of my charge, to exhort you by all good meanes to help and further it.

Me thinketh it is strange, that the exiled Churches of Strangers, which are harboured here with us, should be able in this kind to do such good, as not one of their poor is seen to ask about the streets; and this City, the harbourer and maintainer of them, should not be able to do the same good. Able it is no doubt, but men would have doing good too good cheap. I know, the charges will be great: but, it will quit the charges, the good done will be so great. Great good to their bodies, in redeeming them from divers corrupt and noysome diseases, and this City from danger of infection. Great good to their souls: in redeeming them from idlenesse, and the fruit of idlenesse, which is all naughtinesse, no where so rife as among them; and this City from much pilfering, and losse that way. Great good to the Common-wealth, in redeeming unto it many rotten members, and making them men of service, which may hereafter do good in it, to the publike benefit, and redeem this City from the blood of many soules which perish in it for want of good order. Last of all, great good to the whole estate, in bringing the blessing of God upon it; even that blessing, that there shall not be a begger in all Israel, So much for doing good.

Deut. 15:47

[Laying up in Store, &c.] That is, your work shall not be in vain in the end, but receive a recompence of reward: which is a prerogative, the which GOD'S Charges have above all other. In mans, there is death to the Offender; but if any have kept his charge; he may claim nothing but that, he hath. Only the Lords Charges are rewarded.

The last point:
The Reason.

So that, besides the two reasons which may be drawn out of the former: 1. one of the uncertainty, 2. the other of Gods bounty. 1. Of the Uncertainty, Da quod non potes retinere: That we would part with that, that we cannot keep long; that we must part with yer long, whether we will or no: 2. Of the bounty of God; De meo peto, dicit CHRISTUS: That God which gave, asketh but His own; but of that, He gave us, a part to be given Him, and we (if there be in us, the heart of David) will say, quod de manu sua accepimus. 3. Besides these, a third; Though God might justly challenge a free gift without any hope of receiving again, He will not; but tell us, His meaning is, not to impoverish or undo us, but to receive these, which He gave us, and came from Him every one; and those that within a while forgo we must, to give us that, we shall never forgo. That is that, He teacheth us: commendeth not but losse, but commendeth to us a way to lay up for our selves, if we could see it; nor, to leese and leave all, we know to whom.

1 Chr. 19:40

Well said Augustine, preaching on these very words: At the very hearing these words [Part with and Distribute] the covetous man shrinks in himself; at the very sound of parting with; as if one should pour a bason of cold water upon him, so doth he chill and draw himself together; and say Non perdo: he saith not, I will not part with, but, I will not lose; for he counteth all parting with to be losing. And will ye not lose, saith Saint Augustine? Yet, use the matter how you can, lose you shall: for, when you can carry nothing away of all you have, do you not lose it? But, go to, (saith he) be not troubled, hear what followes, shut not thy heart against it.

[Laying up for your selves.] I know, Judas was of the mind, that all that went besides the bag, was ut quid perditio? and so be all they that be of his spirit. But, Saint Paul is of that mind, that ἀναδεδεικται, to lay out to good uses, is to lay up to our own uses: that, in parting thus with it, we do not dimittere, but præmittere; not lose it, by leaving it here from whence we are going, but store it up, by sending it thither before, whither we are going. And indeed, one of the two, we must needs, either leave it behind and lose it for ever; or send it before, and have it our own for ever. Now choofe whether you will hold of Judas's, or Paul's.

Laying up for your selves.

For indeed, it is not laying up, Saint Paul findeth fault with: but the place where: not building, or obtaining, or purchasing; all which three are specified, and the Apostle speaketh in your own terms, and the things you chiefly delight in: but, the laying up in the flesh, which will rot, and with it whatsoever is laid up with it; or in the world, which is so variable now, and will be consumed all to nought, and with it, whatsoever is laid up in it. But, he would have us to lay it up in heaven: which (besides that it is our own Countrey, and this but a strange land) is the place, whether we passe leaving this place behind; and from whence we must never passe, but stay here, and either for ever want, or have use for ever of that, we part with here. And to say truth, Ut quid respicimus? With what face can we look up and look upon heaven, where we have laid up nothing: or what entertainment can we look for there, whether we have sent no part of our provision; but for ought of our sending, the place is clean empty?

You will say; how can one reach heaven to lay any thing there? I will ask you also another question: How can a man being in France, reach to England to lay any thing there? By Exchange. And did you never hear of our exchange, Cambium celeste? You know, that to avoid the danger of Pirates, and the inconvenience of forraign Coin, not currant at home, it is the use of Merchants to pay it there, to receive it here. Such a thing is there in this laying up. We are here as Strangers: the place here we wish our selves, is our Countrey, even Paradise (if so be, we send our carriage thither before; if not, I fear, we intend some other place: it is not our Country.) When we shall take our way thither, thorow the way of all flesh, through death, certainly we lose all; he strips every one he layes hold of: and put case, we could get thorow with all our bags; here it is currant (for it is the coin of the world;) but there it is base, and goeth for nought; what shall we then do? Quare non facis? Why deal you not with exchange; paying here so much, to have so much repaid you there. Alires trapezitas, you should go to the Bankers: who be those? Cum quaesiveris, when you have sought all, Pauperes sunt campores, they be the poor: Da pauperibus & accipies thesaurum. Where is our bill? Quod, vel quantum uni. Who will repay it? Ego resoluam: Nec repetit mercedem, sed dat mercedem. What? refuse you to take CHRIST's bill? If you dare trust your servants without fear of losing; if you trust your LORD, fear you to lose? If them, of whom you receive nothing, but, they of you: what, not of him of whom earst you professed to receive all things? If CHRIST be of credit, and heaven be not Utopia; if we think there is such a life after this, we shall ever have to do there, Lay up here. Think, it is a laying up. Upon the believing of this one word, the weight of doing and not doing, all the Text lieth.

When we recount our good deeds, we commonly say: For him, and for him, we have done this and that: It is true, saith Saint Paul. That good you do, you do for them, and for your selves too: but more, for your selves than for them. To lay up, and to do good; yea, to others: Nay, to do your selves good, to lay up for your selves. Before, you thought it scattering, it was indeed laying up: Now, you think, it is for them; it is, for you, and your sakes, God commandeth it.

Deut. 15. 11. GOD hath no need of you to feed the poor: No need of the Widow to feed Elias; He could still have fed him by Ravens: and, as he fed Elias by one; so could He them, by others, or other meanes, and never send them to Sarepta among you. He could have created sufficient for all men: or so few men, as all should have been sufficient for them. He would not: He ordered, there should ever be poor in the Land, Why? To prove them; and to prove you by them: that, He which feedeth you, might feed them by you; that your superfluities might be their necessities: that they of their patience, in wanting; and you, of your liberality in supporting, might both together, of Him that made you both, receive reward. They with you, in your bosomes there, as here: a good fight in heaven, and a good fight in earth. For sure, there shall never be a rich man in heaven, without a Lazarus in his bosom. Therefore, we have need of them, as they have need of us: yet, that, we make theirs, remaineth ours still.

It liketh the HOLY GHOST, as to term our preaching our seed, so to term your wealth, your seed. The seed, the Husbandman casts it, the ground receives it: Whose is it? the ground's? No, the Husbandmans. And, though it be cast out of his hands, and rot in the bowels of the earth, and come to nothing, and there becomes of it, no man can tell what: yet, this count he maketh, it is his still; and that every grain will bring him an ear, at time of the year: and so, that he hath in casting it from him, stored it up for himself. Whereas, in foolishly loving it (as many do their wealth) he might have stored it up for wormes and mustinesse, and by that meanes indeed have lost it for altogether. The seed is your almes: The ground is the poor: You are the Sowers. When it is therefore sown among them, how it is spent, and what becomes of it, you know not: yet, this you know, and may reckon; that at the fulnesse of time, at the harvest of the end of the world, for every grain of temporal contribution, you shall receive an ear of eternal retribution. Whereas, storing it up here, it may after your decease be stored for harlots, and gamesters, and rioters: in whose hands it shall corrupt and putrifie, and your selves lose the fruit thereof for ever. By this comparison you may know, that when you are dealing for the poor, it is your own businesse, you intend: that, not forgetting them, you remember your selves; pitying them, you have pity on your own soule, and that your labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

1 Cor. 13. 51.]

Men use to reason with themselves: it will not alwayes be health, let us lay up for sicknesse; it will not alway be youth, for age: and why not (saith Saint Paul) it will not alway be this life, not alway present life: lay up for your selves against the life to come. In this place, here, we shall not be alwayes, but in another of our eternal abode. This time, that is, will not be alwayes: but such a time will come, as in which, that we call a thousand yeares, shall be no more than a day, now. That place and that time would be thought of: and good wisdom it will be, for a man to forget what he is, and to weigh what he shall be. Surely, for any present matter GOD did not make us, Sed ad nescio quid aliud, to some further matter yet to come. Not yet present: as yet, in promise, not yet in performance; as yet in hope, not in possession. I know, that even in this place the LORD doth reward, and sheweth us plainly, that Dare and Dabitur are two things: We our selves have by good triall found it true; when our careful Dare and provision for the poor last year save one, was requited in present with a great Dabitur of the last yeares encrease. But this is but ah, &c. making nothing to the main promise which is to come, which our Saviour would never have out of our eye; Habebitis hic, here you have your comfort, Habete illic have it there too, for here you cannot ever have it. For the present time; you have officers and servants to wait on you; in the time to come, none will accompany you, all will leave you, when to the grave they have brought you, save mercy only; none will wait or make room, but opera eorum, your works which you have here laid up for the time to come.

Luke 6. 24:]

Heb. 11. 9.
2 Cor. 15. 15

The Scripture speaketh of this life, and all the felicity therein, as of a tent or booth, spread for a day, and taken down at night. Even like Jonas's gourd for all the world; fresh in the morning, and stark withered yet evening. But, of the life to come, as of ground-work, never to remove it self, or or we from it ; but to abide therein, ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ or ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ in the prison, or the palace for evermore. We shall not therefore lose, but lay up in store : not for others, but for our selves : Not, for a few dayes now, but for hereafter : Not a tent to be taken down, but a foundation never to be removed.

Of all the words in the Text, not one was meet for the teeth of Rhemists, save this only : here you have a perillous note close in the margin : Good works are a Foundation. A Foundation, very true : who denies it ? but whether a foundation in our graces, as CHRIST is without us, that is the point. The ground whereon every building is raised, is termed fundamentum. The lowest part of the building immediately lying on it, is so termed too. In the first sense, CHRIST is said to be the only foundation : Yet the Apostles, because they are the lowest row of stones, are said to be foundations, in the second. So, among the graces within us, faith is properly in the first sense, said to be the foundation : yet, in the second, we do not deny, but as the Apostle calleth them, as the lowest row, next to Faith, Charity, and the works of charity may be called foundations too. Albeit the margin might well have been spared at this place : for, the note is here, all out of place. For, beeing so great Schoolmen as they would seem, they must needs know, it is not the drift of the Apostle here, in calling them a foundation, to carry our considerations into the matter of justifying, but only to presse his former reason of uncertainty there, by a contrary weight of certain stability here ; and so, their note comes in like Magnificat at Mattins.

1 Cor. 3. 11.
Ephes. 2. 20.
Col. 1. 23.
Ephes. 3. 17.

Thus reasoneth Saint Paul : This world is uncertain, of a sandy nature ; you may rear upon it, but it is so bad a soil, as whatsoever you raise, will never be well settled, and therefore ever tottering ; and when the rain, and the wind, and the waves beat against it, it cometh down on your heads. Therefore to make choice of a faster soil, build upon GOD'S ground, not upon the worlds ground : for, πάντα ἐν αὐτῇ βέβαια, μεταβολὴ ἰδεῖται (faith Chrysostome ;) there all is firm, there you may build and be sure : fall the rain upon the top of it, blow the wind against the side of it, rise the waves against the foot of it, it stands irremoveable. Wherein the Apostle (faith Chrysostom) doth teach a very goodly and excellent Art, how to make of our fugitive riches a trusty and fast friend ; how to mak Gold out of Quick-silver, and of the uncertainty of riches, a sure and certain ground-work.

Math. 7. 19.

Chrysost. in locum, Hom. 18.

Assurance and security are two things (we know) that rich men many times buy dear : here they may be had ; not for thus much, or thus long, but for as much as you list, and as long as eternity is long, that never shall have end. The meaning is ; that if you lay out, or lay on that you have, on these earthly things (the plot ; which the world would fain commend unto you) with this life, or at the furthest, with this world, they shall be shaken in pieces and come to nought ; and you possibly in the hour of death, but most certainly in the day of judgement, shall shake, when the world your ground-work shakes, and be in trembling fear and perplexed agonie touching the estate of your soul : knowing, there is nothing coming to you but the fruit of this world, which is ruine ; or the fruit of the flesh, which is corruption. But, if you shall have grace to make choice of GOD'S plot, which He hath here levelled for you to raise upon, O quanto dignum pretio ! that will be vvorh all the world in that day : the perfect certainty, sound knowledge, and precious assurance, you shall then have, vvhich you shall be assured to be received, because you are sure you are CHRIST'S, because you are sure you have true faith, because you are sure you have framed it up into good works. And so shall they be a foundation to you-ward, by making evident the assurance of salvation : not, natura, to GOD-ward, in bringing forth the essence of your salvation.

Look you, how excellent a ground-work here is ! (not for a Cottage :) whereon you may raise your frame to so notable a height, as standing on it, you may lay hand on, and lay hold of eternal life. O that you would mind once these high things, that you would be in this sense high-minded ! Saint Paul's meaning is to take nothing from you, but give you a better to requite it by farre. He would have you part vvith part of your wealth to do good, he will lay you up for it, treasure in heaven for your own use. He vvould have you forsake the worlds land and uncertainty, vvherein you cannot trust ; but therefore, he marks you out a plot out of the rock whereto you may trust. He would not have you high-minded in consideration or comparison of ought on this earth ; but he would have your minds truly exalted to reach up to heavenly things higher than the earth. And last, instead of this world, the lusts and riches thereof, to match that, if you will lay hold of it, he holdeth out eternal life and the glory thereof.

Job 2. 4

To take a short prospect in eternal life. Life it self first (you know) is such a thing ; as were it to be sold, would be staple ware ; if it stood where hold might be laid on it, some vvould thrust their shoulders out of joynt, but they would reach it. It was a great truth out of a great liar's mouth : kinne and all. And I mean not eternal, but this life : and therefore some readings have, to lay hold of true life : as if, in this, were little truth. Indeed Saint Augustine saith, it is nothing but a disease : We say of dangerous sickness, he hath the plague, he is in a consumption, sure he will die ; and yet it failes ; divers die not : whereas [saith he] of life it self, it may be said, and never failes : He vvill, therefore he vvill certainly live.

Job 2. 4

Well yet, this life, such as it is, yet we love it, and loth we are to end it: and, if it be in hazard by the Law: what running, riding, posting, bribing, and if all will not serve, breaking prison is there for it! Or, if it be in danger of disease, what ado is there kept, what ill favoured drugges taken! what scarrifying, cutting, searing! and when all comes to all, it is but a few yeares more added: and when they are done, we are where we should have been before; and then, that which is now life, then shall be no life. And then, what is it the nearer? What if Adam had lived till this morning, what were he now the nearer? Yet, for all that, as short and frail as it is, we do, what possibly man can do, to ecke it still; and think our selves jolly wise men when vve have done, though we die next year after for all that. If then with so great labour, diligence, earnestnesse, endeavour, care and cost, we busie our selves sometimes to live for a while, how ought we to desire to live for ever? if for a time to put death away, how to take death away clean? You desire life I am sure, and long life; and therefore a long life, because it is long: that is, cometh somewhat nearer in some degre to eternal life: If you desire a long lasting life, why do you not desire an everlasting life? If a life of many yeares, which yet in the end shall fail; why not that life, whose yeares shall never fail? If vve say, it is lack of wit or grace when any man runs in danger of the law of man, whereby haply he abridges himself of half a dozen yeares of this life; vwhat wit or grace is there, wilfully to incur the losse of eternal life? For indeed, as in the beginning vve set down, it is a matter touching the losse of eternal life, vve have in hand; and withall touching the pain of eternal death. It is not a losse only, for vve cannot lose life, and become as a stone, free from either: if vve leese our hold of this life, eternal death taketh hold upon us: If vve heap not up the treasure of immortality, vve heap up the treasure of wrath against the day of wrath. If your wealth be not with us to life, pecunia vestra vobiscum est in perditionem. We have not farre to seek for this. For, if now we turn our deaf ear to this Charge, you shall fall into temptations? fear ye not that? Into many foolish and noysome lusts, nor fear ye that neither? yet fear whether these lead; which drown men in perdition and destruction of body and soul. Fear ye not these? doth the Lord thunder thus, and are ye not moved? Quibus verbis te curabo? I know not how to do you good. But, let eternal life prevail. Sure, if life come not, death comes. There is as much said, now, (not as I have to say, but) as the time would suffer: Only let me in a few words deliver the charge concerning this, and so I will break up the Court for this time.

Psalm 101. 28.

Rom. 26. 5.
Acts 8. 20.
Verse 9.

Wisd. 1. 12.

And now (Right honourable, beloved, &c.) albeit that according to the power that the LORD hath given us, I might testifie and charge you in the presence of GOD the FATHER, who quickeneth all things: and of the LORD JESUS, who shall shew himself from Heaven with His mighty Angels in flaming fire, rendring vengeance to them, not only that know not GOD, but to them also that obey not the Gospel of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, that ye think upon these things, which you have heard, to do them: yet humanum dico, for your infirmity, I will speak after the manner of men, the nature of a man best loveth to be dealt withall, and even beseech you by the mercies of GOD, even of GOD the FATHER, who hath loved you, and given you an everlasting consolation and a good hope through grace, and by the coming of our LORD JESUS CHRIST and our assembly unto Him, that you receive not this Charge in vain; that ye account it His charge, and not mine; received of Him, to deliver to you. Look not to me, I beseech you: in whom, whatsoever you regard (countenance or learning, yeares or authority) I do most willingly acknowledge my self farre unmeet to deliver any; more meet a great deal, to receive one my self, save that I have obtained fellowship in this businesse, in dispensing the Mysteries, and delivering the Charges of the LORD. Look not on me, look on your own soules, and have pity on them: Look upon Heaven, and the Lord of Heaven and earth, from whom it cometh, and of whom it will be one day called for again. Surely there is a Heaven; Surely there is a Hell: Surely there will be a day, vwhen enquiry shall be made, how we have discharged that vve have received of the Lord; and how you have discharged that, you have received of us in the Lord's Name. Against which day, your consciences stands charged with many things, at many times heard. O seek not death in the error of your life, deceive not your selves: think not, that vwhen my words shall be at an end, both they shall vanish in the ayr, and you never hear of them again. Surely you shall; the day is coming, when it shall be required again at your hands. A fearfull day for all those, that for a litle Riches, think basely of others: upon all those that repose in these vain Riches (as they shall see then) a vain confidence; upon all those, that enjoy only with the belly and the back, and do either no good, or miserable sparing good with their Riches: whose Riches shall be with them to their destruction. Beloved, vven your life shall have an end (as an end it shall have) vwhen the terrour of death shall be upon you; vwhen your soul shall be cited to appear before GOD, in novissimo; I know and am perfectly assured, all these things will come to mind again, you will perceive and feel that, which possibly now you do not. The Devils charge cometh then, who will presse these points in another manner, than we can: then it will be too late. Prevent his charge, I beseech you, by regarding and remembring this, now. Now is the time, while you may and have time wherein, and ability ability wherewith ; think upon it ; and provide for eternal life : you shall never in your life stand in so great need of your Riches, as in that day ; provide for that day ; and provide for eternal life. It will not come yet, it is true, it will be long in coming : but when it comes, it will never have an end.

This end is so good, that I will end with eternal life, which (you see) is Saint Paul's end. It is his, and the same shall be my end, and I beseech GOD it may be all our ends. To GOD immortal, invisible, and only wise, GOD ; who hath prepared this eternal life for us ; vvhho hath taught us this day how to come unto it ; vvhose grace be ever with us, and leave us nor, till it have thereto brought us ; the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost, be all glory, power, praise, and thanksgiving, now and for ever. AMEN.

Upon the SECOND

COMMANDEMENT.

Preached in the Parish Church of

ST. GILES CRIPPLEGATE.

Jan. IX. Anno Dom. MDXCII.

ACTS, CHAP. II. VER. XLII.

And they continued in the Apostles Doctrine, and Fellowship, and Breaking of Bread and Prayers.

THere had been two sundry dayes before, Sermons concerning the positive outward Worship of GOD, out of this Text, consisting of these four parts.

1. The Apostles Doctrine. 2. Their Society or Fellowship. 3. Breaking of Bread. 4. Prayers.

The effect of this last, was to acquaint the Auditory with sundry Imaginations by divers erected, which many unstable persons do run after, and worship in stead of those four, the Apostles Doctrine, &c. The order was to begin with the Doctrine first, and so after, through the rest, as they stand.

2 Cor. 2. 10.

HAT such imaginations there are, Salomon complaineth of Ratiocinia plurima, whereby men were with-drawn from the simplicity of their creation. And under the Gospel, S. Paul likewise of Venti doctrinarum, whereby Christian people began to be blown and carried about from the stedfastness of the truth.

But especially under the Gospel. For that, as St. Augustine saith (De Civit. 18.) Videns Diabolus templa Daemonum deseri, & in nomen CHRISTI currere genus humanum, &c. Seeing idolatrous images would down, he bent his whole device, in place of them to erect and set up divers imaginations, that the people, instead of the former, might bow down to these and worship them. Since which it hath been, and is his daily practice, either to broach, Doctrinas novas & peregrinas, new imaginations never heard of before: or to revive the old, and with the Apostles doctrine, &c. that at the least yet, he may so vent them.

And

And this indeed is the disease of our age, and the just complaint we make of it. That there hath been good riddance made of images: but for imaginations, they be daily stamped in great number, and instead of the old Images, set up, deified, and worshipped, carrying the names and credit of the Apostles doctrine, Government, &c.

Touching these Imaginations then, to find some heads of them: They be, in respect of the Devil, who inspireth them, called Doctrina demoniorum. In respect of the instruments; by whom he breathes them out, Doctrina hominum: As the doctrine of the Pharisees, The doctrine of the Nicolaitans.

These men were of two sorts, as S. Paul sorteth them, 1 Wolves which from without entered into the Church: 2 Men arising from among themselves teaching perverse things.

1. Those which from without entered, were Philosophers from the Gentiles: Pharisees from the Jewes. Both which bred many imaginations in Christian Religion.

Against them both, St. Paul giveth a double Caveat. Not to be seduced by Philosophy (meaning as he sheweth, the vain deceit of that profession:) that is the former. 2 Not the humane traditions and rudiments of the Pharisees; that, is the latter. To avoid oppositions of science falsely so called: there is the first. To avoid Jewish fables and traditions: there is the second. For, from these two forges, came a great part of the imaginations which ensued. Each of these Sects esteeming his old wine good, and consequently brewing it with the new wine of the Gospel.

Imaginations by Philosophy. First, by the course of the Ecclesiastical History, it appeareth, that Simon Magus (who of a heathen Philosopher became a Christian, and was baptized) after through the gall of bitterness wherein he was, fell away again, and proved the first of all Hereticks. He, first; and after, Valentine: and then, Basiliides devised many strange speculative phantasies. And indeed, whosoever they be, that dote about unprofitable curious speculations, from this kind they sprung first.

After these, those two main Heresies, that so mightily troubled the Church: First, that of the Manichee, who brought a necessity upon all things by means of his duo principia: making men secure how they lived, because it was ordained what should become of them. Secondly, the other of the Pelagian, who ascribed to mans free-will, and ability to keep Gods Lawes; and thereby made void the grace of Christ. Both these were but two battard slips of corrupt Philosophy: The former, an imagination issuing from the sect of Stoicks, and their fatal destiny. The latter, from the sect of the Peripateticks, and their pure naturals.

Imaginations by Judaism. As the curious speculations came from the Philosophers of the Gentiles. So whatsoever superstitious observations were imagined, came from the Pharisees and sects of the Jewes. As Simon Magus is reckoned, the first Heretick, So Ebion the Jew, is the second. And from him sprang the opinion of the Necessity of Jewish observances: which was the occasion of the Counsel in Acts 15, and the opinion of worshipping Angels as Mediators, as Theodoret testifieth upon Cylos. 2. 18. And for those Ceremonies, as at the first they desired to retain those very same that were Judaical; So (when it was withstood by the Apostles) they did after but turn them, and new varnish them over into others like, and with them so clogged the Church, as the Jewes estate was much more tolerable than the Christians, Saint Augustines complaint, Ep. 19:

Now from these two sorts of persons proceeded those two several means, whereby (as it were in two moulds) all imaginations have been cast, and the Truth of Gods word ever perverted.

1. From the Pharisee; that piecing out the new Garment with old rags of traditions, that is, adding to, and eeking out Gods truth, with mens phantasies; with the Phylacteries and fringes of the Pharisees, who took upon them to observe many things beside it. 2: From the Philosopher, that wresting and rentring of the Scriptures (which St. Peter complaineth of) with expositions and glosses newly coyned, to make them speak that, they never meant. Giving such new and strange senses to places of Scripture, as the Church of CHRIST never heard of. And what words are there or can there be, that (being helped out with the Pharisees addition of a truth unwritten, or tuned with the Philosophers wrest of a divided sense) may not be made to give a colour to a new imagination? Therefore the ancient Fathers thought it meet, that they that would take upon them to interpret the Apostles Doctrine, should put in sureties, that their senses they gave, were no other than the Church in former time hath acknowledged. It is true. The Apostles indeed spake from the Spirit, and every affection of theirs was an Oracle: but, that (I take) was their peculiar privilege. But all that are after them, speak not by revelation, but by labouring in the word and learning: are not to utter their own phantasies, and to desire to be believed upon their bare word; (if this be not dominari fidei, to be Lords of their Auditors faith, I know not what it is;) but only on condition, that the sense they now give, be not a feined sense (as S. Peter termeth it) but such an one, as hath been before given by our Fathers and Fore-runners in the Christian faith. Say I this of my self: (saith the Apostle) saith not the Lave so too? Give I this sense of mine own head, hath not Christs Church heretofore given the like? which one course, if it were strictly held, would rid our Church of many fond imaginations which now are stamped daily, because every man upon his own single bond, is trusted to deliver the meaning of any Scripture, which is many times nought else, but his own imagination. This is the disease of our Age. Not the Pharisees addition (which is well left) but (as bad as it) the Philosophers gloss, which too much aboundeth. And I see no way but this to help it.

² Imaginations from the Christians. Secondly; from among the Christians themselves arose men speaking perverse things, whom S. Paul well calleth fratres subintroductos. Who also by their imaginations, mainly corrupted the Apostles Doctrine, which we heretofore divided into the { 1 Matter, in which } 1 The Substance, and therein { 1 the foundation.

Acts 6.

* Apoc. 2. 15.

Imaginations touching the foundations. Which are two (so called by the name of foundations, first laid by our Saviour Christ, and after kept by the Apostles) Even a Repentance, and b Faith.

Imaginations touching Repentance. Nicolas one of the seven, (as Eusebius testifieth) became a man of Imaginations, and began the sect of Nicolaitans * whom God hateth! After whom arose Carpocrates in the same, of whom came the sect of the Gnosticks. A sect that blew up that part of the foundation, which is called Repentance from dead works. For (as Epiphanius testifieth,) they held; that all other things besides faith, were indifferent, Repentance and all. And that; so a man knew and embraced certaine dictates and positions, they would deliver him, live how he list, he could not choose but be saved. And of these high points of knowledge they intituled themselves Gnosticks; that is, men of knowledge. And all other Christians that could not talke like them, Simplices, good simple soules. Such is the imagination in our dayes, of carnal Gospellers; That, so hee forget not his Creed, he cannot miscarry. These be the Gnosticks of our age.

Imaginations touching faith. On the other side, against the other part of the foundation (faith;) Latiarius a Christian and a great learned man cast his Mine, of whom was the sect of the Encratites: who offended at the licentious lives of the Gnosticks, fell into the other extreame, that Non est curandum quid quisque credat, id tantum curandum est, quid quisque faciat: that the Creed might be cancelled well enough, for, an upright and strait course of life, God onely regarded: And in every Sect, a man might be saved, that lived well. These, for their sober, and temperate kind of life, termed themselves Encratites, that is strict livers; and all other Christians that lived not in like austerity, Psychicos (that is) carnal men. Such is in our daies the imagination of the Civill Christians; who, so his conversation be blamelesse and honest, careth not for Religion and Faith at all, but for the most part lives and dies in brutish ignorance. We may call these the Encratites of our Age.

1 Cor. 4. 2.

Imaginations touching the Building. A secondary part of the Apostles Doctrine, and not of like necessity with the former. Epiphanius writeth (Heres. 61) There were a sect, a branch of the old Cathari or Puritanes (as he saith) which calleth themselves Apostolici, propter exactum disciplina studium &c. For an extraordinary desire they had above other men to have discipline and all things, to the exact patterne of the Apostles dayes; which is it selfe an imagination.

For, it were cacozelia an apish imitation, to retaine all in use then; seeing divers things; even then, were but temporaria. For beside their Canon in matters of knowledge, they had their dogmata or decreta, not of equall importance; as was that of eating things strangled, and bloud which no man now thinketh himself bound to abstaine from. And, besides their Epitaxes, commandements in matter of practice, they had their Diataxes, Injunctions, not of equall regard with the former. Such were their Agape, love-feasts after the Sacrament and their celebrating the Sacrament after Supper; which no Church at this day doth imitate. Therefore, to presse all that was in that time is an imagination.

And, as to presse all; so, of these things that remaine, to presse all alike, or thinke an equall necessitie of them, which was a parcell of the imagination of the Donatists. For, some things the Apostles peremptorily commanded: Some things they had no commandment for, but onely gave counsell: Some things they commanded and taught: some things they taught and exhorted: whereof each was to be esteemed in his own value and worthinesse: Neither to dispense with the commandment; nor to make a matter of necessity of the Counsell. Both which have not a little harmed the Church.

Lastly, for these matters of Counsell; which for the most part are things indifferent, they also fall upon two imaginations: 1 Some say Omnia mihi licent: and, so it be not condemned as unlawfull, make no bones of it: which tendeth to all prophanesesse. Others say, Touch not, Taste not, Handle not; which speake of things indifferent, as merely unlawfull: which imagination tion ends in superstition. A meane way would be holden between them both, that neither a snare be cast on mens' consciences, by turning Non expedit into Non licet: nor our liberty in Christ be made an occasion to the flesh, by casting non expedit out of doores. For the Spirit of CHRIST is the spirit of ingenuity, which will freely submit it selfe to that which is expedient, even in things of their owne nature lawfull. The not observing whereof with good heed and discretion, hath in old time filled the world with many a superstitious Imagination; and in our dayes hath healed the imagination and superstition and hypocrisie; with another of riot and licentious liberty, as bad as the former, yea a great deal worse.

1 Cor. 7. 35.
Gal. 5. 13.

Imaginations touching the ceremony. First, I take it to be a phancie, to imagine, there needs none: for, without them, neither comeliness, nor orderly uniformity, will be in the Church. Women will pray uncovered (an uncomely sight) unless the Apostle enioyne the contrary: therefore, Let every thing be done decently and in order. Now, to advise what is comely and orderly in each Age and Place, is left in the power and discretion of each Church; Visum est Spiritui Sancto & nobis. And the custome of each Church is peaceably to be observed by the members of it. In a matter ceremonial, touching the veiling of women (after some reasons alledged, whil yet a troublesome body might quarrell with) thus doth S Paul determine the matter definitively: If any list to be contentious, Nos non habemus talent consuetudinem; nec Ecclesia Dei. As if he should say: In matters of that quality, each Churches custome is to over-rule, as from that place S Hilary (Ep. 28) and S. Aug. Ep. 86. & 118. do both resolve.

2 Imagination in the ceremony,
1 Cor. 11. 13.
1 Cor. 14. 40
1 Cor. 11. 16.

It hath been thought meet (saith S. Gregory) that there should be In unitate fidei consuetudo diversa: that is, the diversity of customes, should be in divers Churches, all in the unity of one faith, to shew the Churches liberty in those matters. And therefore, the eating of things offered to Idols wholly restrained the Churches of Syria & Cilicia, seemeth in some sort permitted the Church of Corinth, in case no man did challenge it.

1 Cor. 10. 17.

And as for divers Churches, this hath been judged requisite; so hath it likewise been deemed no lesse requisite, that every person should inviolably observe the rites and customes of his own Church. Therefore those former ordinances, which, were not urged upon the Corinthians; upon the Galatians, within the compasse of the Regions where they took place, (as we see) they were urged (as the fathers interpret those places,) under the paine of Anathema, which censure is due to all those that trouble the Church: as those doe, who for setting light by the customes and orders of the Church, are by S Paul concluded within the number of persons contentious and troublesome.

1 Cor. 11. 16.

Imaginations touching the manner of delivery. For, even in it also, for failing, men must imagine something, that, when they can take no exception to the matter, yet they may itch after a new manner, and hear it after such and such a sort delivered, or they will not heare at all, and therefore after their owne liking get them a heap of Teachers. 1. They must hear no Latine nor Greek; no, though it be interpreted. A meere imagination. For, the Apostle writing to the Corinthians, which were Grecians, hath not feared to use terms as strange to them, as Latine or Greek is to us (Maranatha, Belial, Abba.) All which he might easily enough have expressed in their vulgar, but that it liked him to retaine his liberty in this point.

1 In the manner of delivery.
2 Tim. 4. 3.
1 Cor. 16. 23.
2 Cor. 6. 16.
Rom. 8. 15.

2 Nor none of the Apocrypha cited. Another imagination: For, S. Jude in his Epistle, hath not feared to alleadge, out of the booke of Enoch (Jude 14.) which booke hath ever been reckoned Apocrypha. And, by his example all the ancient Writers are full of allegations from them: ever these Writings yielding the next place after the Canon of the Scriptures, and preferring them before all foraine Writers whatsoever.

3 Nor any thing alledged out of the Jewes Thalmud, a third Imagination. For, from their Records, S. Paul is judged to have set downe the names of Sorceres that withstood Moses, to be James and Jambres; which in Exodus, or the whole Canon or Scriptures are not named. As many other things in the new testament, from them receive great light. And the Jewes themselves are herein clearly confuted.

2 Tim. 3. 8.

4 But, especially no heathen example or authority (for, with allegation of the ancient Fathers I have often dealt) a matter which the Primitive Church never imagined unlawfull. For Clement Alexandrinus (in Strom. 7.) by allusion to Sara & Agar, teacheth the contrary. So doth Basil, in a set Treatise de legendis Ethnicorum Scriptis; and Gregory Nyssen de vita Moysi, out of the XXI. of Deut. by the rites touching the marrying of heathen women taken captive: and last of all S. Augustine most plainly, De Doctrina Christiana, 2. 46. And these all reckoned of the contrary, as a very imagination. Which they did the rather, for that, besides divers other places, not so apparent, they find S. Paul, in matter of doctrine, alledging Aratus a heathen Writer, in his Sermon at Athens. And againe, in matter of life, alledging Alexander, a Writer of Comedies, in his Epistle: And thirdly, in matter of report only without any urgent necessity, alledging Epimenides, or as some thinke Callimachus.

Acts 17. 28.
1 Cor. 15. 33.

And surely, if it be lawfull to reason from that which Nature teacheth, as S. Paul doth against mens wearing long haire; it is not unlawfull neither, to reason from the wisest and most pithy sayings of naturall men. Especially, with the Apostle, using them (as in a manner they only are used) thereby to provoke Christian men to emulation, by shewing them their own blindness in matter of knowledge, that see not so much as the heathen did by the light of Nature: or their slacknesse, in matter of conversation; that cannot be got so farre forward by Gods Law, as the poore Pagan can by his Philosophy. That if Grace will not remove, shame may.

Touching the Apostles fellowship.

John 2. 10.
Heb. 10. 25.
1 Cor. 11. 19.
1 Cor. 11. 17.
Phil. 3. 18.

Imaginations touching the Apostles fellowship. For, this doctrine received, doth incorporate the receivers of it into a fellowship or Society, which is called the fellowship, or coporation of the Gospel: and they, that bring not this doctrine, are no wayes to be received thêreto. Which fellowship is not to be forsaken, as the manner of some is (men of imaginations) in our daies, either because there be heresies, for oportet esse: Or, for that many at communions, come together, not for the better, but for the worse; for so did they in Corinth: Or lastly, for that many and many Christians walke (which S. Paul wrote with teares) as enemies to the Crosse of Christ; for so it was in the Church of Philippi.

1 Cor. 12. 8.
1 Tim. 5. 19,
1 Cor. 8. 12.
Mat. 18. 17.

Now it is plaine, there can no Society endure without government. And therefore God hath appointed in it Governours and Assistants: which seeing they have power from God, to reject or receive accusations, and to judge those that are within and of the fellowship; it is an idle imagination that some have imagined, to hold, the Church hath not her Judgement-seat, and power to censure her disobedient children. It hath ever been holden good Divinity, that the Church from Christ received power to censure and separate wilfull offenders. Both, with the Heathen man's separation, who might not so much as enter into the Church-door (which is the greater censure) and with the Publicans separation (which is the lesse) who might enter and pray in the Temple, but was avoided in common conversation, and in the fellowship of the private table, and therefore much more of the Alter. Of which twaine, the former, the Apostle calleth cutting off, Gal. 5. 12. the latter abstaining from; 2 Thes. 3. 6. The Primitive Church calleth the former excommunication, the latter abstencos. So that, to phansie no government, is an imagination. A Government there is.

Acts 21. 18.
Luke 18. 10.

Acts 2. 42.
Luke 9. 1.
10. 1.

Touching the forme of which Government, many imaginations have lately been bred; in these our daies specially. At the writing of this Verse, it is certaine, that the Government of Christian people consisted in two degrees onely. (Of both which our Saviour CHRIST himselfe was the Author.) 1 Of the twelve, 2 Of the seventy: both which were over the People, in things pertaining to God.

Acts 15. 23.
1 Cor. 14. 16.
Acts 4. 19.

These two, were one superiour to another and not equall. And, that the Apostles established an equality in the Clergy, is (I take it) an imagination. No man could perish in the gaine-saying of Coreb, under the Gospel; which Saint Jude saith, they may) if there were not a superiority in the Clergy; For, Coreb mutinie was, because he might not be equall to Aaron, appointed his superiour by God, Num. 16 10. Which very humour (observe it who will) hath brought forth most part of the heresies, since the time of the Gospel: that Coreb might not be Aarons equall. Now, of these two orders, the Apostles have ever been reckoned the superior to the other, till our times; as having even under our Saviour CHRIST, a power to forbid others, Luk. 9. 49. And after, exercising the same power; Silas (one of the Seventy) receiving a commandment (imprimis) from Saint Paul an Apostle to come unto him. As the Auditory had their roome by themselves. So among the persons Ecclesiasticall, the Apostles had a higher seate, as may be gathered; and in the very place it self, were distinguished. Now in the place of the Twelve, succeeded Bishops; and in the place of the Seventy, Presbyterie, Priests, or Ministers, and that by the judgement of Irenaeus (lib. 3. cap. 3) who lived immediately upon the Apostles age: Of Tertullian (de prescript.) Of S. Augustine (in Psalm. 44.) And this, till of late was thought the forme of that fellowship, and never other imagined.

But, not long since, some have phansied another, that should consist of Lay-elders, Pastors and Doctors, and whether of Deacons too, is not fully agreed yet. Which device is pressed now upon our Church: not, as a forme of more convenience than that, it hath; but, as one absolutely necessary, and of our Saviour CHRIST'S owne only institution, which maketh it the lesse sufferable. I know that by vertue of Saint Peters wrinch before mentioned, some places may be brought; which may seeme to give it colour: but, that is, if we allow those new glossed senses. But, if we seek what senses, the Primitive Church gave of them, not one of them, but will suffer it to fall to the ground. And, finding it a stranger to them, I know not how to terme it, but an imagination. To touch it briefly in a word.

If we aske Scripture for it, and where wee may finde it, they passe by the two most evident places in appearance; 1 Cor. 12. 28. Because, there are no Pastors; and Eph. 4. 11. Because, there are no Lay-elders; and lay it upon, Rom. 12. 6. 7. 8. And there, by a strange and unheard of Exposition, they will finde them all foure. But not, except that Exposition be allowed them: Nor if the ancient Writers may be heard, what the true sense of it is. There is no Epistle on which so many of them have written: Sixe only I will name: Origen, Chrysostom, Ibasodorus, Amphrose, Hierome, Oecumenius; All which have entreated of it. Let their Commentaries be looked upon that place. Not one of them applieth it to the Church-Government (which by any likelihood cannot be imagined, but they would, if it were the maine place for it) or findeth those offices in those words, which they in good earnest tell us of, as that Sidaxos in the seventh verse) is not the Deacon: but the Distributor (in the eighth verse) is heior that qui miseretur, is latine for a Widow, or such like.

But if jointly they find them not: let us see how severally they warrant their Offices. 1. Of Elders, some both preach and govern: some govern only: and there they imagine they have found their Lay-elder: 1 Tim. 5. 17. by implication, that there are Presbyteri, that labour not in preaching. Hear Saint Chrysostome on 1 Cor. 1. 17. You shall find a far other sense; Evangelizare (saith he) per paucorum est; baptizare autem cujuslibet, modo fungatur Sacerdotio. And a little after, Siquidem Presbyteris quidem, qui simplices sunt, hoc munus tradimus, ut baptizent; verbum autem ut doceant, non nisi Sapientioribus: hic sapientia est labor. Quamobrem & alibi inquit: qui bene præsunt Presbyteri, duplici honore digni sunt, maxime qui laborant in verbo. Whereby it is plain, that in Saint Chrysostome's time, it was not reckoned meet, that every one that ministered the Sacraments, should also preach. That the meaner sort dealt with the Baptizing; and they only that were of the more wise sort, with the Word. And to prove, it should thus be, he citeth this their Scripture, as if in the Apostles dayes, the like had been thought Wisdom. But as for lay-elders, He, nor any that waiteth on it, can find in this verse; nor any such in all antiquity ever understood by the name of Presbyter.

The Elders Preachers they divide into Pastors and Doctors; and these they sever in function; limiting the one to his exhortation only, the other to point of Doctrine only. An imagination, which none of the Fathers would ever acknowledge, search their Writings. Saint Chrysostome upon this Verse, Ephes. 4. 11. taketh them both for one, and maketh no difference. So Saint Hierome in both his Commentaries upon that Epistle: Omnis enim Pastor Doctor est. But Saint Augustine may serve for all, to shew, how unknown this was then. Who being purposely written to, by Paulinus to assign a difference between them, thus answereth; PASTORES autem & DOCTORES, quas maxime ut discernere veluisti, eosdem pato esse, sicut & tibi visum est; ut non alios PASTORES, alios DOCTORES intelligeremus, &c. Hos enim sicut unum aliquod duobus nominibus complexus est, Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulinum.

Lastly, For their Deacons too: that they should be men of occupation and Trade, to deal with the Church-stock, and care of the poor only, is also (I doubt not) an imagination: seeing all Antiquity hath ever reckoned of that Calling, as of a step or degree to the Ministry, out of 1 Tim. 3. 13. And that the Churches practice hath been alwayes to imploy them in other parts and functions besides that, is plain by Iustine Martyr (who lived in the Apostles daies) Apol. 2. ad Antoninum, namely, To distribute the Communion: by Tertullian (de Bap.) baptizans: by Cyprian (Ser. 6. de lapsis) and divers others. So that to conclude, these are imaginations touching the Apostles fellowship, howsoever, a great number of deceived people bow down to them and worship them.

Imaginations touching the breaking of bread: which is joyned to that fellowship, as the chiefest badge of that fellowship. For by it is gathered the Communion, as may be gathered by conference with Acts 20. 7. and as the Syrian Text translateth it. For that, as by the other Sacrament in the verse immediately going before, they are received into the body of the Church; so by this, they are made to drink of the Spirit (1 Cor. 13. 13.) and so perfected in the highest Mystery of this Society.

III:
Imaginations
touching the breaking of bread

Concerning which, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations: First, in that she many times celebrateth this mystery sine fractione, without any breaking at all. Whereas (as heretofore hath been shewed out of 1 Cor. 10. 18.) it is of the nature of an Eucharist or Peace-offering: which was never offered but it was eaten, that both there might be a representation of the memory of that sacrifice, and together an application to each person by partaking of it. And secondly, in that she had indeed no breaking of bread at all. For, it being broken (ever) after it is consecrated, there is (with them) no bread remaining to break: and the body of CHRIST is now impossible, and cannot be broken, so that they are fain to say, they break Accidents, and indeed they well know not what. Contrary to Saint Luke here, who calleth it fractionem panis; and to St. Paul (1 Cor. 10. 16.) who saith, Panis quem frangimus. As these are their imaginations, so we want not ours. For many among us, phrase only a Sacrament in this action, and look strange at the mention of a Sacrifice: whereas we not only use it, as a nourishment spiritual (as that, it is too) but as a mean also, to renew a covenant with GOD, by virtue of that Sacrifice, as the Psalmist speaketh, Psalm 50. 5. So our Saviour Christ in the institution, telleth us, Luke 20. 10. And the Apostle, Heb. 13. 10. And the old Writers use no less, the word Sacrifice, than Sacrament; Altar, chan Table; Offer, chan Eat; but both indifferently, to shew there is both.

And again too, that to a many with us, it is indeed so fractio panis, as it is that only, and nothing beside: Whereas, the bread which we break is the partaking of Christ's true body, (and not, of a Signe, Figure or Remembrance of it) 1 Cor. 10. 16. For the Church hath ever believed, a true fruition of the true body of Christ, in that Sacrament.

Esay 58.7.

Luke 22.4.

Further (as heretofore hath been made plain) it is an imagination, to think, that this breaking of bread can be severed from the other, ver. 46. which is Esaias breaking of bread to the needy. Whereby, as in the former, CHRIST communicateth Himself with us; so we in this latter, communicate our selves with our poor brethren, that so, there may be perfect communion. For both in the Sacrifice which was the figure of it, it was a matter of Commandment, Deut. 6. 10. inasmuch, as the poorest were not exempt from Gods offerings: And our Saviour Christs practice was, at this feast, to command somewhat to be given to the poor, John 13. 29. And last of all, the Agape or love-feasts of the Christians for relief of the poor, do most plainly express that, I mean. In place of which (when they after proved inconvient) succeeded the Christian Offertory.

And lastly, whereas we continue in the Doctrine and Prayers of the Church, we do many times discontinue this action a whole year together. These long intermissions, (so that, if it be panis annuus, once a year received, we think our duty discharged) and also (no doubt) a second imagination in our common practice. For sure, we should continue also in this part, and the frequenting of it, if not so often as the Primitive Church did (which either thrice in the week, or at the furthest once, did communicate) yet, as often as the Church doth celebrate; which (I think) should do better to celebrate more often. And those exceptions which commonly we alledge to disturb our selves for that action, make us no less meet for prayers than for it. For except a man abandon the purpose of sin, Psalm 66. 18. And except he be in Charity, Mat. 6. 14. he is no more fit to pray than to communicate; and therefore should abstain from the one, as well as from the other. Or to say the truth, should by renewing himself in both these points, make himself meet for both, continuing no less in the breaking of bread; than in Prayers and doctrine.

IV.
Imaginations touching Prayers.

Luke 11.12.

Imaginations touching prayers. As the former was the most special exercise of a Christian, and chiefest in dignity; So this is the most general and chiefest in use. Therefore he puts it in the plural number: as if, both in preaching, censuring and communicating, it had his use; as indeed it hath. Before all things (1 Tim. 2.1.) In all things (1 Thes. 5.17.) After all things (Ephes. 6.18. Num. 6. verse ult.) And in this also we want not phantasies: In this age especially, wherein an idle conceit is taken up, that never came into the heads of any of the old Hereticks, though never so brain-sick once to imagine: Our Saviour Christ thus willeth us, When ye pray, say our Father; &c. A most fond imagination is start up in our times, never once dreamed of before, that telleth us, in no case we must say, Our Father, &c. with which form (if Saint Augustin be to be believed as a witness of Antiquity) the universal Church of Christ, hath ever used to begin and end all her prayers, Ep. 59. as striving indeed by divers other formes more largely to express the sense of that prayer, but not being able to come near the high art, and most excellent spirit of perfection in that pattern, they alwayes conclude with it; as being sure, howsoever they may for divers defects not attain to the depth of it; and by it, they shall be sure to beg all things necessary at GODS hands. This I named first, because it is appropriate to our times.

Besides, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations touching Prayers: First, against Saint Pauls Oratio & mente, in setting the people to pray they wote not what; and so making their understanding unfruitfull, 1 Cor. 14. 14. And again, against our Saviour Christs Caveat, Mat. 6. 7. in setting them to go over whole Rosaries and Psalters; as if much babbling after the heathen manner, were acceptable to God. So likewise, do others also among us, erre in their *imagination*s, no less, and that even against the same places.

Mat. 23.14.

First, against Oratio spiritu (1 Cor. 14. 15.) in the same verse, by finding fault with a set Lyturgie (which they call stinted prayers) and giving themselves to imagine prayers at the same instant: whereby it is plain, they so occupie their mindes, with divising still what to say next, their spirit is unfruitfull, no lesse than the others understanding; And both these: 1 the understanding of the mind, and the affection of the spirit are there necessarily required. And again, that instead of Rosaries and a number of prayers, they bring in the Pharisees imagination of long prayers (that is) a prayer as long as a whole Rosarie. And this they take to be a great part of holinesse: but indeed it is nothing but the former superstition drawn in backward. In which, who so marks them, shall find, they commit both faults: that of the Pharisee, in tedious length, procuring many times nauseam spiritus, a dangerous passion: and the other of the Heathen, in fond repetitions, tautologies, inconsequences, and all the absurdities that may fall into such manner of speech. Saint Cyprian saith, It was ever in Christs Church counted an absurd thing (which some count their glory) venilare preces in conditis vocibus. The absurditie whereof would better appear, if (seeing under prayers here, Psalmes, and spiritual songs are contained, both being parts of invocation) they would have no stinted Psalmes, but conceive their songs too, upon the present out of the spirit, and so sing them. For to say truth, there is no more reason for the one, than for the other. But GODS Church hath ever had, as a form of doctrine, both of faith in the Creed; and of life, in the Decalogue; so of prayer too. Which, from Acts 13. 2. the Fathers in all ages have called a Lyturgie, or service of GOD.

These

These are, of many imaginations, some set up and magnified by some, and by others adored and worshipped, under the names of the 1 Apostles Doctrine, 2 Government, 3 Sacraments, and 4 Prayers.

Saint Stephen telleth us, out of the fifth of Amos, that if we do thus make to our selves, Tabernacles and figures to worship them, our punishment shall be to be carried away beyond Babylon, Acts 7. 43. And good reason, for these idle phantasies, are not from Christ's Church, from Sion; but from Babylon they came, and if we delight in them, thither shall we be carried.

And sure we are in a good way thitherward; for of Babel St. Augustine saith; Confusio illa confusiois indifferenter habuit Philosophos inter se diversa, & diversa sentientes. In Gods city it was never so; there was ever correction for Coyners; but in Babel, the City of confusion, every Philosopher might set up; as now every Sect-master may broach any imagination that taketh him in the head, without punishment. For in Babel, it is reckoned but an indifferent matter. Sure the Prophets tell us, that if Babylons confusion go thus before, the captivity of Babylon is not far behind. From which, Almighty God deliver us, and make us carefull, as to continue the Apostles Doctrine, &c. So neither to engrave, nor to bow down, and worship any of these imaginations. Amen.

A SERMON

One of the SERMONS

Upon the THIRD COMMANDMENT.

Preached in the Parish Church of
ST. GILES CRIPPLEGATE.

June XI. Anno Domini MDXCII.

JEREM. CHAP. IV. VER. II.

Et jurabis, vivit Dominus, in veritate, & in iudicio, & in iustitia.

And thou shalt swear, the LORD liveth, in truth, in judgement, and in righteousness.

In this Commandement, there are two main Propositions. 1. Thou shalt take the Name of GOD: Else, it should have been, thou shalt not take it at all. 2. Thou shalt take it orderly and not in vain. Of the first: thou shalt take it to those ends and uses, to which Gōd lendeth it. Of which one is, Thou shalt swear by it: which limited by two ways:

First, by what: The Lord liveth.

Secondly, how: In truth, judgement, justice. As in the former Commandments, so in this, there be two Extreams. 1. The one, of the Anabaptists, which hold all swearing unlawfull, contrary to the first, Thou shalt swear. 2. The other of the licentious Christian, which holds (at least in practice) A man may swear how, and in what sort he list: By Creatures, &c. Contrary to The Lord liveth, &c. Falsely, rashly, lendly; contrary to In truth, judgement, justice.

That

That it is lawfull to swear, it appeareth by the Law, Deut. 6. 15. By the Prophets: Jeremy here. Esay, (Chap. 45. Ver. 23.) more earnestly: I have sworn by My Self, the word is gone out of My mouth and shall not return: That every knee shall bow to Me, and every tongue shall swear by Me. Thou shalt swear. David, Psalm 63. ult. Laudabuntur omnes, qui jurant per Eum. By the practise of the Saints, not only under Moses; but, under the Law of Nature. Abraham sweareth, Gen. 21. 24. Isaac sweareth, Gen. 26. 31. Jacob sweareth, Gen. 31. 33. Now, our Saviour Christ came not to destroy the Law and the Prophets, in those things wherein they agree with the Law of Nature. Therefore, not to take away an Oath.

Whereas, they object first: That it standeth not with Christian profession, but was tolerated, as an imperfect thing, under the Law.

We answer: It cannot be reckoned an Imperfection, to swear. For that, not only Abraham, the pattern of humane perfection, both swore himself, Gen. 21. 25. and put his servant to an Oath, Gen. 24. 3. But, even the Angels, nearer than we to perfection, swear both under the Law (Dan. 12. 7.) and under the Gospel (Apoc. 13. 10.) And, not only they, but even God Himself (in whom are all perfections) Gen. 22. 16. and Psalm 110. 4. So that it cannot be imagined an imperfection.

Besides, the holy Apostles, the most perfect Christians, have in urgent causes done the like, 2 Cor. 1. 23. I call God for a record against mine own soul; and 1 Cor. 15. 31. By our rejoycing which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord: which place cannot be avoided, having in the Greek, the word (Nē) never used, but in an oath only.

Whereas secondly, they object our Saviour's saying, I say unto you swear not at all: The Ancient Writers answer, that our Saviour Christ in the very same place, not reproveth the other part: Reddes autem Domino Juramenta tua, meant not to take all oaths away: But must be understood according to the Pharisees erroneous gloss of this Commandment, which He intendeth to overthrow, by opposing to dictum est antiquis, Ego autem dico: Which was of two sorts: 1. For first, it seemeth they understood it of perjury alone: So that, if a man forswear not himself, he might swear an oath. And so Christ reproveth not only false, but all rash and unadvised swearing.

2. Secondly, it seemeth, they had this conceit: So a man swear not by the great Name of God, all was well; He might swear by any creature at his pleasure: and so Christ willeth, not to swear at all, by any creature.

Though indeed, we hold in Divinitie, that Jurare, of an by it self considered, is an act forbidden, no lesse than occidere. And that, as it is an absolute countermand, Non occides, and yet the Magistrate, by due course of Justice, executing a Malefactor is commanded: So is it likewise Non jurabis, and yet being (as we term it) vestitum debitis circumstantiis, Laudabuntur omnes qui jurant per Eum, as King David saith, Psalm 63. ult.

Lastly, there is also a barr in the word Jurare. For, God in His Law; ever putting it passively (that is) rather, thou shalt be sworn, or called to an oath, than, thou shalt swear, actively: our Saviour Christ here utterly condemneth the active, voluntary swearing of men, of their own heads: which was indeed never permitted: howsoever the Pharisees glossed the matter: If the matter were true, and so it were by Jehova.

So that, an oath is lawfull: but with this condition limited; that the partie do therein habere se passive, come to it not of his own accord, but pressed (as Saint Augustine well saith) vel auctoritate deferentis, vel auctoritate non credentis, as to the lifting of a burden, as to the entering of a Bond, Numb. 30. 3.

Thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth: or (as Moses saith Deut. 6. 13.) by God's Name. Which clause first doth limit, by what we are to swear: and doth exclude 1 Swearing by those which are no gods, Jer. 5. 7. Either Idols, forbidden in the Law, Exod. 23. 13. Josh. 23. 7. Either to swear by them alone, Amos 8. ult. Or to joyn God and them together, Zeph. 1. 5 2 Or creatures, which our Saviour Christ forbiddeth, Matth. 5. 34. 1 Limitation.
The Lord liveth,

And sure, as to swear by them is derogatorie to ourselves, seeing thereby we make them our betters; for that every one that sweareth, sweareth by a greater than himself, Heb. 6. 16. So it is highly injurious to the Majesty of God; seeing to swear by a creature, is to ascribe unto it power, to see and know all things, and do vengeance on perjury: Which in Divinitie, to think or say, is manifest blasphemie.

Ho be wit yet the Fathers (well weighing that speech of Saint Paul, 1 Corinth. 15. 31. where he speaketh on this wise, By our rejoycing which we have in Christ Jesus our Lord, &c. wherein his oath, is not immediately by the Name of God, but by a secundarie thing, issuing from it:) have thought it not absolutely necessarie, that in every oath, the Name of God should be expressly mentioned; but sufficient, if reductivè. It is ruled in Divinitie, that such things as are presently reduced to God, will bear an oath. In which respect, to swear by the Holy Gospel (considering our rejoycing will bear an oath; and that, in the Gospel, our matter of rejoycing is principally contained) hath in the Primitive Church been holden lawfull. As in the Council of Constantinople, 6. A.D. 13. Especially, seeing there is no direct contestation used, but rather by way of oppignoration, Engaging unto God our Salvation, Faith, Rejoycing, part in his Gospel and promises, the Contents, &c. if we utter an untruth.

II.
The manner or second Limitation.

Secondly, the forme and manner of swearing: Which is of three sorts: 1. Either by contestation as here, the Lord liveth. Before God, Gal. 1. 2. Or God knoweth it is so, 2 Cor. 11. 11. God is my witness, 1 The. 2. 5. 2. Or by a more earnest asseveration: as sure as God liveth, Jude 8. 19. 3. Or by detestation and execration, as in other places: and that againe is of two sorts: 1. By imprecation of evil: God be my Iudge. Gen. 31. 53. God behold it and rebuke it, 1 Chro. 12. 17. God do so, and founto me, 1 Sam. 14. 44. I call God a record against my soul, 2 Cor. 4. 23. 2. Or by appignoration or engaging of some good which we would not lose: as Our rejoycing in Christ, 1 Cor. 15. 3. Our Salvation, Gods helpe, &c.

Both are oft, and may be jonyed together, if it be thought meete. God is my witnesse, that thus it is, and G O D be my Iudge, if thus it be not. Wherein, as in Prayer; when all meanes faile, we acknowledge, that G O D can help, as well without, as with second causes: So we confesse that He can discover our truth and fallhod, and can punish the same by waies and meanes to Him known, though no creature in the world beside, know the thing or can take hold of us.

Thou shalt sweare: In Truth, Indgement, Justice. The three Enclosures and companions of a Christian oath, are.

In { Truth
Judgement
Justice } against { Falshood
Lightnes
Unlawfullnesse } the { matter.
matter and manner both.
end.

I.
In truth.

In truth: Ye shall not sweare by my name falsely, Levit. 19. 12. Which vice forbidden we call perjury. Each addition, we say, is too light super debitam materiam. The due and own matter of swearing, is a Truth. If it fall or light super indebitam materiam (as, falsehood) it proveth a sin.

At all times are we bound to speak truth to our neighbour, Eph. 4. 5. But because men are naturally given to have their mouth fraught with vanity, 1 Psa. 144. 8. in solemne matters, to be sure, to bring the truth from us, G O D is set before us. If then when we confesse the truth, we give glory to G O D, Ios. 7. 21. So if, when G O D being set before us, we testifie an untruth, it is exceeding contumelious to Him: it is to make Him one, that knoweth not all things; or that can be deceived; or that if He know, cannot do any harme or (which is worst) which will willingly be used to bouldster out our lyes. Pejorare, est dicere Deo, Descende de Caelo, & asserere mecum mendacium hoc.

I. Of Promise

In an oath of Promise, we are to sweare in Truth, He that sweareth an oath, and by it bindeth his soul with a bond, shall not violate his word, but do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth, Num. 30. 3. Reddes autem Domino Iuramenta, Mat. 5. 33. Yea, by the very light of nature Pharaoh will-eth Ioseph, Go and bury thy Father, seeing he made thee sweare to do so. Against which oath, men are two waies faulty. 1. If at the swearing they purpose not (as David saith, Psa. 119. 106. I have sworn and am utterly purposed) Such is the nature of an oath. 2. If they then purpose, but after, a damage, being likely to ensue, they disappoint their former oath, Psa. 15. 15. Touching which, we see, that when Josua & the Israelites had sworn to the men of Gibeon, though that oath cost them foure great and fair Cities, which should otherwise have come to their possession; they would not breake though. As contrarywise, Zedekias having given his oath of Allegiance to the King of Babylon (2. Chro. 36. 9.) when he regarded it not, but rose against him notwithstanding, God sendeth him word, he shall never prosper for so doing, Ezek. 17. 12. And to say truth, there is nothing more forcible to move us herein, than to consider G O D'S own practise: who having sworn for our benefit, Psal. 110. 4. though by many our unkindnesse and hard usages provoked, we (as Himselfe saith) will not breake His Covenant, nor alter the thing that is gone out of His lipps, Psal. 89. 35. Which is it, that keepeth us all from perishing, even the immutable truth of G O D'S Oath, that we the rather may take it to imitation.

I. Of Prose.
Rom. 9. 1.

In an oath of Prose: the charge ought to be, that we speak nothing but that which is true in the Name of the Lord, 1 Reg. 32. 16. That we say the truth and lye not, our consciences bearing us witnesse in the Holy Ghost: which if we do not, being charged by a Iudge, we bear our own iniquite, Leviticus 5. 1.

Against which oath, men are two waies faulty: 1. If either they swear to that, which they know to be false; as if a man finde, and deny it, swearing falsely, Levit. 6. 3. 2. Or, if they purpose to swear directly, in a matter, wherein themselves are doubtful, or have no sure ground of, As if a man swears, and the thing be hid from him, Leviticus 5. 4.

The breach of these two sorts of oathes, in regard of the truth, is called perjury; and both in oldtime and now, we greatly complaine of it in two places: 1. The one, they call Iuramenta Officinarum: When men in their shops, so they may utter to their gaine, care not how untruly they abuse the Name of G O D. Men, which (as the wise man saith reckon our life as a market; wherein they must be getting on every side, though it be by evil meanes, Sap. 15. 12. Or, as the Apostle saith, 1 Tim. 6. 15. That do in practice seem to hold, that gain is godlinesse, for all the world as the prophane man in the Comedie, Iuramentum, rei servanda non peragenda conditum; that Oathes were made to thrive by. Full little knew those men, that whatsoever ever is gotten by false swearing, must by GOD'S Law, both be restored in the whole Summe, and adde an overplus beside. Else no atonement can be made for them, Leviticus 6.5. And if that atonement be not made, that GOD by His Prophet hath denounced, that their gain shall not prosper. For He will send the flying book into their house, a Curse appropriate to those that both swear and steale, (that is steale by swearing) which shall consume both the goods, and the very stone, timber and all, of the house it self, Zac. 5.4.

2. The other they call Iuramenta Tribunalium, much more fearefull and heynous than the former: when a man (or rather as Saint Augustine calleth him, detestanda bellua, no man but a detestable beast) shall so farre presume, as in the Iudgement it self, which is GOD'S (2 Chro. 19.8.) before the Magistrates, which are GODS (Psal. 82.6.) to prophane the oath of GOD, Ecclesi. 8.2. Even, as it were, to come into GOD'S own place, and there to offer Him villanie to His face. A crime so grievous, as no Nation, were it never so barbarous, but have thought it severly to be punished; Some with losse of tongue: Some, of fingers: Some, of eares; and some, of life it self. And howsoever they escape man, the Prophet saith, the very Book of the Law, which they have touched in testifying an untruth, shall have wings given it, and shall pursue them, and cut them off on this side, and on that side till they and their name be rotted from the earth. It is a fearefull thing to fall into GOD'S hands on this wise: and of no one sin, more dreadfull examples. For it is indeed, facere Deum mendacii consortem. We hold it worse Divinity, to lay upon GOD, that evil which we call malum culpa, than the other which we terme malum pena, which hath been inflicted on many an innocent, good man. Consequently, a lesse evill to crucifie Christ by any bodily paine, than to draw Him into the society of Sin, which every perjured person doth, as much as in him lieth. Yea, we say that the Name of GOD being fearefull to the devils themselves, and bringing them to tremble, that that party that treadeth that most glorious and fearefull Name, under his feet, is in worse estate, not only than the wickedest of all men, the Murderers of Christ, but even than the devill himselfe. And all this, that we conceive aright of In veritate.

In Iudicio. For, thus far the Pharisees themselves come; to thinke perjury condemned. But, our righteasnesse is to exceed theirs, Mat. 5. 20. and therefore we must seek yet farther.

² In Iudgements

This Clause (we say) standeth against a double vanity, 1 as well in matter, if for a vaine, light, trifling matter we sweare; 2 as in manner also, if with a vaine, light, unadvised mind or affection. For, both the matter is to be weighty, grave, and judiciall: and we are with due advice and judgement to come to the action.

Against which Judiciall swearing, we complain of two evill kinds: 1. The one Iuramenta Platearum, such as going through the streets, a man shall every day heare (yea, even out of the mouthes of children;) light, indiscreet, frivolous oaths. 2. The other Iuramenta Popinarum, much worie yet than they. When men in Tabling-houses, at their game blaspheme the Name of GOD most grievously. Not content to sweare by Him whole, dismember Him and pluck Him in pieces, that they may have oaths enough. And that person of the Holy Trinity, to whom and to His name, for taking our flesh upon Him, and performing our redemption, even by GOD'S own charge, a speciall regard is due: and that action of His, which among the rest is most venerable of all others, which is His Death, Passion, and shedding His Blood.

For the Matter: The very words of the Commandement teach us, it is to be weighty; which speake of GOD'S Name, as a thing, to be lifted up with strength, as if it were heavy: and we use not to remove things heavy but upon good occasion. ¹ For the Matter.

The nature of an Oath, is as of a bond; which none that is wise will easily enter: it is to be drawn from, or pressed out of a man upon necessarie cause. Yea, it is no further good, than it is necessary. For so is our rule, Necessarium, extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum: As, purging, blood-letting; which are no longer good than needfull. The Name of GOD is as a strong Castle, which men flye not to, but when they have need. These shew, that for every frivolous matter, and of no importance, we are not vainly to take up GOD'S Name. GOD'S Name is said to be holy, Psal. 111.9 and holy things may not be put to common and vulgar uses, Numbers 18. ult. And in plaine words, Levit. 22.32. Ye shall not pollute my Name. Polluting, by GOD'S own word being nothing else, but to make common, Acts 10.15. Therefore they, to be condemned, that no man urging them, upon no sufficient ground, make it common.

For the Manner with great regard, Ecclesi. 8.1. we must sweare to the LORD, with all our heart. They are highly praised that did so, 1 Chro. 15. 16. that is, When they are to take an Oath, they are to call together the powers of their soul, and with sad and serious deliberation to undertake it; that is do it in Iudicio. Therefore in the Law GOD maketh it the entry, Thou shalt fear the Lord thy GOD, and shalt sweare by His Name: that is with due fear and reverence thou shalt swear. For, as GOD'S Name is holy; not for every common matter: so is it also reverend; not with an unregarding affection to be taken in our mouthes. ² For the Manner.

To this end is it, that the Church of GOD excludeth such persons from oaths, as are presumed, that in judgement they cannot, or will take them: as persons already convicted of perjury, that they will not: Those that are under yeares, that they can not; To this end also, there have ever been been used Ceremonies, that by that meanes, there might be a reverend regard stricken into the mind of the swearer. Therefore the very Angels, when they swear, do it not without ceremony, but with lifting up their hands to heaven, Dan. 12. 7. Apoc. 10. 5. The Patriarchs, under the Law of Nature, not without ceremonie, but laying their hands on the thigh, therein have reference to the incarnation of the Blessed Seed, Gen. 24. 3. and 47. 29. The people of GOD under the Law, came into the Temple, and before the Altar (1 Reg. 8. 31.) and in the presence of the Priest (Deut. 12. 8.) uncovered (Numbers 5. 18.) so took their Oath: all these serving to stir up their reverence, that what they did, they might do in judgement.

Therefore, they are to be condemned, that passionately swear, Eccl. 5. 1. (which Passion alwayes bereaveth men of judgement:) either in anger, as David, which he repented of, 1 Sam. 25. 33. Or in desire, as Saul, which proved prejudicial to him and his people, 1 Sam. 14. 28. And they, that as not of any passion, so without all manner of respect, to avow any idle, fond fancy of their own, even as it were water, pour out the Name of GOD.

And they yet more, that not only unadvisedly sometimes, but continually (as it were by a custom) make it an Interjection of filling, for all their speeches, and cannot utter one sentence without it: yea, which thereby come to a diabetica passio of swearing, that Oathes run from them, and they feel them not.

But, above all, they that are come to that pitch, that even in contempt they swear, and will swear, and the rather, because they be told of it. These persons the Church of GOD hath so detested, that they are excommunicate without sentence of any Judge or Canon, and Christian people forbidden to have any fellowship with them.

I
In Justice.

In Justitia. As the Matter of the Oath is to be true and weighty: and the Manner; with due advice and judgement: so is it to be taken also, to a good and just end. And of this there is to be had chief regard, for that divers times, both false and rash Oathes are not hurtfull save to the swearer only. But these tend alway to some mischief, beside the sin of the swearing.

An Oath is of the nature of a Bond, and bindeth a man to do that, he sweareth: Now, it is sin enough, to do evil of it self; but to bind himself to do evil, and to make the Name of GOD the Bond, that is sin out of measure sinfull. GOD hath ordained, that only for truth and right, His Name should be used: to abuse it, to uphold falshood, and to enforce men to evil dealing, is to change a Sanctuary, and make it a brothel-house. These we call Latronum Iuramenta; such Oathes, as thieves and such kind of persons take one of another; For, they do not only joyn hand in hand (as Salomon telleth us, Prov. 26. 5.) but do even also by Oath bind themselves to do mischief, Nehem. 6. 28. Tobiah the special hinderer of the Temple, had many in Juda his sworn-men.

I Not of things impossible.

That an Oath may be in justice: It is required that it be of a thing possible, No man ever required an Oath, to an impossibilitie apparent: So Abraham's servant saith, Gen. 24. What if I cannot possibly get any maiden to come with me? Abraham's answer is, then he shall be free from the oath: So that, if at the present it seem possible (otherwise not to be sworn to) and after, there do emerge impossible, the party is innocent. The same is observed, touching our knowledge: for, so the Law saith, A man shall testifie that only, which he hath seen, heard or known, and more shall not be required of him. So, the Law of Nature, only de quibus sciam poteroque.

Levit. 5. 1.
Nor unlawfulnesse.

Now because (as Joseph well telleth us, Gen. 39. 9.) that we only can do that, which lawfully we can, and Christian possibility implieth lawfulness; that is the second point of Injustitia, and the second Caveat Ne illicitum. Which is either prima facie, as Saul's oath, 1 Sam. 28. 10. and Acts 23. 14. Or it is likewise emergens, as in Herod's oath, at the first no harm being understood: but after the demand made, it was sin to keep it. So saith Ezra in the Law, Secundum legem fiat, Ezra 10. 5. and Saint Paul in the Gospel, Acts 23. 3. They sit to judge secundum id quod in Legge est.

Math. 26. 68.

Put these together, that we be required to swear nothing but the truth, In veritate: that we do it upon due advice and consideration, In judicio: that we do it but of those things we know and can tell, and of those whereto Law bindeth us: There is no more required in a Christian oath. This to be remembred, because divers which will be accounted Christians, refuse in our dayes, the Oath which hath all her attendents. If the Magistrate, either Civil (Exod. 22. 8. Nehem. 5. 12.) or Ecclesiastical (Numb. 5. 19.) 1 Either by a curse, where the party is not known, as Prov. 29. 24. Judg. 17. 2. Levit. 5. 1. 2 Or by tendering an oath, and that again double: 1 Either by way of adjuration, 1 Sam. 3. 27. 1 Reg. 22. 16. 2 Or by way of swearing them, as Exod. 23. 11. Numb. 5. 13. 1 Reg. 8. 31. 1 Reg. 18. 10. Where the party is accused by complaint, detection, (Gen. 3.) presumption (Gen. 4.) common fame (1 Cor. 5. 4.) He is bound to purge himself, and satisfie the people, in Adultery, Theft, or any crime.

But what if it tend to his damage, or to the prejudice of his liberty? Our rule is; Qui potest ad poenam, potest ad qua pena consequitur. Therefore in a matter of life or limme, we admit not the Oath: because, no man can lawfully swear, to cast away or maim himself. But a man may directly swear to his losse, in his goods, as Genesis 25. 33. and to become a prisoner, as (1 Reg. 1. 43.) Shimei did. Therefore, swear, and be sworn in those causes and questions, whereto Law doth bind to give answer, though, Fine and Commitment do ensue upon them.

This

This question remaineth, If a man have sworn without those, what he is to do? when an oath binds, when it doth not.

We hold: No man is so straightened between two sins, but without committing a third, he may get forth. Herod thought he could not: and therefore, being in a strait, betwixt murder and perjurie, thought he could have no issue, but by putting John Baptist to death. It was not so: for, having sworn, and his oath proving unlawfull, if he had repented him of his unadvisednesse in swearing, and gone no further, he had his issue, without any offence.

1. If then We have sworn to be simply evil: the rule is, Ne sit Sacramentum pietatis, vinculum iniquitatis:

2. If it hinder a greater or higher good, the rule; Ne sit Sacramentum pietatis, impedimentum pietatis.

3. If it be in things indifferent, as we term them, absque grano salis; it is a rash oath; to be repented, not to be executed.

IOHN. CHAP. XX. VER. XXIII.

Quorum remisistis peccata, remittuntur eis: Et quorum retinueritis, retenta sunt.

Whose-soever sinnes yee remit, they are remitted unto them: and whole-soever ye retain, they are retained.

The conclusion of the Gospell for the Sunday.

THESE be the words of our Saviour CHRIST to His Apostles. A part of the first words, which He spake to them at His Epiphany, or first apparition after He rose from the dead. And they containe a Commission by Him granted to the Apostles, which is the Summe or Contents of this Verse.

Which Commission, is His first largesse after His rising againe. For, at His first appearing to them, it pleased Him not to come empty, but with a blessing, and to bestow on them, and on the world by them, as the first fruits of His resurrection, this Commission; a part of that Commission, which the sinfull world most of all stood in need of for remission of sinnes.

To the granting whereof, He proceeded not without some solemnity or circumstance, well worthy to be remembered.

For first, Verse 21. He saith, As my Father sent me, so I send you: which is their authorizing or giving them their credence.

Second

Secondly, Vers 22. He doth breathe upon them, and withall inspireth them with the Holy Ghost, which is their enabling or furnishing thereto.

And having so authorized and enabled them, now in this Vers. here, He giveth them their Commission, and thereby doth perfectly inaugurate them, into this part of their office.

A commission is nothing else, but the imparting of a power which before they had not. First therefore, He imparteth to them a power, a power over sinnes; over sins, either for the remitting, or the retaining of them, as the persons shall be qualified.

And after, to this power He addeth a promise (as the Lawyers terme it) of Ratification, that He will ratifie and make it good, that His power shall accompany this power, and the lawfull use of it in His Church for ever.

And very agreeable is this power now bestowed by Him upon his resurrection. Not so conveniently before His death; because till then, He had not made His sole an offering for sinne, nor till then, He had not shed His blood, without which there is no remission of sinnes. Therefore it was promised before, but not given till now, because it was convenient, there should be solutio, before there were absolutio. Not before He was risen, then.

The dependance in respect of the time Why not before? Esa. 53. 10. Heb. 9. 12. Mat. 16. 19. 18. 18. Why now.

And againe, no longer than till He was risen, nor till he was ascended. First, to shew that the remission of sins is the undivided and immediate effect of his death. Secondly, to shew how much the world needed it, for which cause he would not with-hold it, no not so much as one day (for this was done in the very day of His resurrection.) Thirdly, but especially, to set forth his great love and tender care over us, in this, that as soone as he had accomplished his own resurrection, even presently upon it, he sets in hand with ours, and beginneth the first part of it, the very first day of his rising.

The Scripture maketh mention of a first and second death, and from them two, of a first and second resurrection. Both, expressly set downe in one verse; Happy is he that hath his part in the first resurrection; for over such the Second death hath no power. Understanding by the first, the death of the soul by sin, and the rising thence to the life of grace: by the second, the death of the body by corruption, and the rising thence to the life of glory.

Apoc. 20. 6.

Christ truly is the Saviour of the whole man, both soule and body, from the first and second death.

But beginneth first with the first, that is, with sin, the death of the soul and the rising from it. So is the method of Divinity prescribed by himself 1. to cleanse that which is within (the soul) then, that which is without (the body.) And so is the method of Physick, first to cure the cause, & then the disease. Now the cause (or as the Apostle calleth it) the sting of death is sin. Therefore first to remove sin, and then death afterwards. For, the cure of sinne being performed, the other will follow of his own accord. As Saint John telleth us, He that hath his part in the first resurrection, shall not faile of it in the second. The first resurrection then from sin, is it which our Saviour Christ here goeth about, whereto there is no lesse power required than a divine power. For looke what power is necessary to raise the dead body out of the dust; the very same, every way, is requisite to raise the dead soul out of sin. For which cause the Remission of sins is an Article of faith, no lesse than the Resurrection of the body. For, in very deed, a resurrection it is, and so it is termed, no lesse than that.

Mat. 23. 16.

1 Cor. 15. 56.

To the service and ministry of which divine worke, a commission is here granted to the Apostles. And first, they have here their sending from GOD the Father; their inspiring from GOD the Holy Ghost; their comission from GOD the Son: that being thus sent from the Father, by the power of the Holy Ghost, in the person of Christ they may performe the Office, or (as the Apostle calleth it) the Embassage of reconciling sinners unto God, to which they are appointed. And so much for the Summe and dependance of this Scripture.

1 Cor. 3. 9.

The points of speciall observation are three: 1. First, the Power that is granted. 2. The Matter or Subject, whereon the power is to be exercised. 3. The Promise of ratifying the exercise of that power.

The Division.

The power it selfe in which commeth first to be entreated. 1. What is meant by remitting and retaining. 2. After in generall, that there is a power to remit and retaine: but first to remit, and after to retaine. 3. Then in particular, of that power as it is set down in both words, Remiseritis and remittuntur.

I.

The Matter or subject: which is also two wayes to be considered, either as it is sin in it selfe, which is the matter at large; or as it is the sin of some persons (for it is not qua peccata, but quorum) which is the immediate or proper matter of this power.

II.

The ratifying or promise of concurrence to assure the conscience of the sinner of the certainty and efficacy of the Churches act, that what the Apostles doe in the person of Christ, by the instinct of the Holy Ghost, he that sent them, will certainly make good and effectually from heaven. And of these three in order,

THe termes of remitting and retaining may be taken many wayes. To the end then, that we may the moore clearly conceive that which shall be said, it will be expedient, that first of all we understand, in what sense especially, and according to what resemblance, those termes are to be taken.

This may we best doe out of our Saviour Christs owne Commission. For, this of the Apostles is nothing else but a branch out of his, which he Himself (as man) had here upon earth. For as man; he himselfe was sent, and was anointed with the Spirit, and proceeded by Commission.

His Commission we finde Luk 4. which he himselfe read in the Synagogue at Nazareth at his first entring on it: Which is originally recorded Esa 61. Wherein, among others, this power is one, to preach Agon (that is) Remission, as it is turned here; or deliverance, as it is turned there: but the word is one in both places; and that respectively to captives: and (as it followeth in that place of Esa) to them that are bound, the opening of the prison.

Which very terme (of Captives or such as are in prison) doth open unto us, with what reference or respect, this terme of remitting, or letting go, is to be conceived. And as it was in his, so must it be understood here in this, since this is but derived from that of Christs.

The minde of the Holy Ghost then, as in other places by divers other resemblances, so in this here, is to compare the sinners case to the estate of a person imprisoned. And indeed, who so well weigheth the place, it cannot well be taken otherwise. For, not onely here, but elsewhere (where this Power is expressed) it seemeth ever, to be with reference (as it were) to parties committed. The very terme of the Keyes (wherein it was promised, and wherein it is most usually delivered;) the termes of opening and shutting, seeme to have relation (as it were) to the prison gate. The termes of binding and loosing, (as it were) to the fetters or bands. And these here of letting forth, or still detaining (all and every of them) seeme to have an evident relation, to a prisoners estate; as if sin were a prison, and the case of sinners, like theirs that are shut up.

Verily, as sinne at the first in committing, seemeth sweet; that men cannot be got to spit it out (saith Iob) but hold it close under their tongues, till they have swallowed it downe; but after it is committed, the sinner findeth then, that it is Malum & amarum dereliquisse Dominum (saith the Prophet;) that it turneth to a bitter and cholerick matter, of which there breedeth a worme which never leaveth gnawing: Even so doth sin at the first also seeme a matter of liberty. For a liberty it is, not to be restrained; not to be (as the Apostle speaketh) committed to Moses, so be kept and shut up under the Law; not to be forbidden any fruit (under which very terme, the Serpent did perswade it:) But when it was done and past, then shall a man feel a pinching or straightnesse in his soule, termed by the Apostle συνωπία which properly signifieth the paine which they suffer, that are shut up in a narrow room or some place of little ease.

So speaketh Solomon of sinne. His owne wickednesse shall attach the sinner, and he shall be holden, or pinioned with the cords of his own sin. So S. Peter to Simon Magus: I perceive, thou art (to expresse the former resemblance,) in the gall of bitterness (and to expresse the latter in the bond of iniquity. And S. Paul that sinners, instead of having Moses to their keeper, become the Devils captives, and are of him holden and taken at his will and pleasure.

Truly some have felt as much as I speak of, and have in pregnant termes complained of it. I am so fast in prison (saith David) that I cannot get out. And, bring my soule out of prison and I will praise thee: And, I will run the way of thy commandements, when thou shalt set my heart at liberty.

Peradventure all feel not this presently as soon as they have sinned; nor (it may be) a good while after. So God told Caine at the beginning: his sin should lie at the doore; that is while he kept within, he should not be troubled with it perhaps; but at his comming forth, it should certainly attach him. But saith Moses, let every one that sinneth be sure, that his sin at last will finde him out: For he shall no sooner be under arrest of any trouble, sicknesse, crosse or calamity, but he shall be shut into his συνωπία and feel it presently. As the brethren of Ioseph, for very many years, after they had of envy and without all pity sold him to be a bond-servant, seemed at liberty: No sooner fell they into danger and displeasure, in a strange country but it came to mind, and they were served with it straight way. Even as in Iob, it is said: The sins of our youth shall let us go up and down quietly all our youth-time, but when we come to years we shall feel them pinch us in our very bones.

Yea, though many, even then when they feelee this straightnesse in their soule, make meanes to put it away for the time, and seem merry and light enough (as many times, Prisoners be in the Goale, tell the very day of Assises come:) yet when it is come to that, that iudex est pra foribus, when the terror of death commeth, and with it a fearfull expectation of judgment;

ment; then certainly, then without all doubt, the anguish S. Paul speaketh of, shall be upon every soule of every one that doth evill. Then there is no man never so wicked; that with his good will would die in his sins, but would have them releafed while he is yet in via, yet in the way. Then we seek help at such Scriptures as this, and call for the persons to whom this Commis- sion belongeth. And those, whom we have gone by seven years together, and never said word to about it, then we are content to speak with, when the counsell and direction they give, we are scarce able to receive, and much lesse to put in practice. As if, all our life time we believed the permission of sins; as if that were the article of our faith all our life long, and the article of remission of sins never till the point of death.

And this may serve, shortly to set forth unto us this prison of the soule: which if any conceive not, by that which hath been said, I must say with the Prophet to them; that sure, there is such a thing, and that In novissimo intelligetis hac plane, at their latter end (I wish, before; but sure then, shall very plainly understand, that such a thing there is.

But how, they that have either felt or believe, that such an imprisonment there is, will be glad to hear that there is a Power, whereby they may be enlarged: And this very tidings in general, that there is a Remittuntur, that men may have deliverance from these fetters, this prison, this streitnesse or anguish of the soule, must needs be very acceptable and welcome tydings to them. For which very point (even that there is a Remittuntur) what thanks are we eternally bound to render unto God? For I tell you, Nusquam Angelos apprehendit, the Angels never found the like. For, the Angels, which kept not their first estate, hath He reserved in everlasting chaines of darknesse, to the judgement of the great Day. Their chaines, everlasting; their imprisonment, perpetuall: No Commis- sion to be sued for them: No Remittuntur eis. But with man it is not so. To him, deliverance; to him, loos- ing of the chaines: to him, opening of the prison is promised. For his sins, a commision is granted out, his finnes have a Remittuntur. This, is a high and speciall priviledge of our nature to be had by us in an everlasting thankfull remembrance. So that no man needeth now, abruptly to say with those in Jeremie, Desperavimus, we are desperate, now, we never shall be forgiven, let us now doe what we list. No: but (as it is said in Ezra) Though we have grievously sinned: yet there is hope for all that: and (as in Ezekiel) that we may so use the matter, that Peccata nostra non erunt nobis in scandalum, Our sins shall not be our destruction. Which very point is both an especial stay of our hope, and a principal means of manifesting unto us the great goodnesse of God.

Which goodnesse of God, as it doth shew forth it self in this first (that, such a power there is:) so doth it secondly and no lesse, in the order that (which both acts are mentioned, as well retaining, as remitting) He placeth the power of remitting first. Which very sorting of them in that order, doth plainly shew unto us, whereunto God of His goodnesse is most inclinable; and which of them it is, that is the principall in His intent. That to remit, is more proper to Him, and that he is more ready to it, and that it is first, first in His purpose, first in His grant: and that to the other He commeth but secondarily, but by occasion, when the former cannot take place. For, of remitting sinne, He taketh the ground from Himself, and not from any other, and therefore, that more naturally: but of retaining it, the cause is ministred from us, even from our hardnesse, and heart that cannot repent. And as Himselfe doth use this power, so giveth He it to them, to edification, and not to destruction. I say, not first or principally to destruction; nor of any, save onely of the wilfull impenitent sinner. Thus much of the remitting and retaining in generall, and of their place and order. Now of the power it selfe in particular.

Of this Power there is here in my Text twice mention: 1 One in Remiseritis, and 2 againe in Remittuntur. Which two words doe plainly lead us to two Acts; of which two Acts; by good consequence are inferred two Powers. Which two powers, though they be concurrent to one end, yet are they distinct in themselves. Distinct, in person; for, Remiseritis is the second person, & meant of the Apostles; and Remittuntur is the third person, and meant of God Himself. And as distinct in person, so distinct in place; for the one is exercised in earth, which is the Apostles; the other in heaven, which is Gods. Quicquid solveritis in terra, solutum erit in Celo.

Now where two powers, are and one of them in God, the other, must needs be subordinate from it. For, Duo principia, two beginnings there are not, Therefore none other from whence it can proceed, but from God and from the power in Him alone.

Of these two then. Remittuntur, though latter in place, yet indeed is by nature and order first, and from it doth proceed the other of Remiseritis: Which howsoever in the sentence it stand before it, yet without all question it is derived from it, and after it. So that, thus the case stands between them: Remittuntur, which is Gods power, is the primitive or originall; Remiseritis, which is the Apostles power, is meerly derived. That in God, Sovereign: This in the Apostles Dependent. In Him only Absolute: in them, Delegate. In Him Imperiall, in them, Ministeriall.

The power of remitting sinne is originally in God, and in God alone. And in Christ our Saviour, by meanes of the union of the God head and manhood into one person: By vertue whereof, the Son of man hath power to forgive sins upon earth.

This

This power being thus solely invested in God, He might without wrong to any, have retained and kept to Himself, and without means of Word or Sacrament, and without Ministers, either Apostles or others, have exercised immediately by Himself from heaven.

Rom. 10. 6.

But we should then have said of the remission of sins (saith S. Paul) who shall go up to heaven for it, and fetch it thence? For which cause (saith he) the righteousness of faith speaketh thus, say not so in thy heart. The word shall be near thee in thy mouth, and in thy heart, and this is the word of faith which we preach.

Partly this, that there should be no such difficulty to shake our faith, as once to imagine to fetch Christ from Heaven for the Remission of our sinnes.

Partly also, because Christ (to whom alone this Commission was originally granted) having ordained himself a body, would work by bodily things, and having taken the nature of a man upon Him, would honour the nature he had so taken. For these causes that which was His, and His alone, He vouchsafed to impart; and out of his Commission, to grant a Commission, and thereby to associate them to Himself; (it is his own word by the Prophet) and to make them co-workers, that is, Co-operators, workers together with him, as the Apostle speaketh, to the work of salvation, both of themselves, and of others.

From God, then it is derived: From God, and to men.

Remission.
Gods power derived to Men, and not to Angels.

To sinfull men:

1 Tim. 1. 15.

2 Cor. 2. 10.

To the Apostles.

To men, and not to Angels. And this I take to be a second Prerogative of our nature. That an Angel must give order to Cornelius, to send to Joppe for one Simon, to speak words to him, by which he and his household should be saved; but the Angel must not be the doer of it. That not to Angels, but to men, is committed this office, or Embassage of Reconciliation. And that which is yet more, to sinfull men, for so is the truth, and so themselves confesse it. Saint Peter, Go from me, Lord, for I am a sinfull man. Saint James, In many things we offend all (putting himself in the number.) And, lest we should think it to be but their modesty, Saint John speaketh plainly, If we say we have no sin (what then? not we are proud, and there is no humility in us, but) we are liars, and there is no truth in us. And this is that, which is wonderfull in this point, that Saint Paul, who confesseth himself a sinner, and a chief sinner, quorum primus ego; The same concerning another sinner (the incestuous Corinthian) I forgive it him, saith he, in personam tuam in the person of Christ.

Now if we ask, to what men? The Text is plain. They to whom Christ said this Remission, were the Apostles.

In the Apostles (that we may come nearer yet) we find three capacities, as we may term them. 1. As Christians in general. 2. As Preachers, Priests or Ministers; more special. 3. As those twelve persons, whom in strict propriety of speech we term the Apostles.

Mar. 13. ult.

Some things, that Christ spake to them, He spake to them as representing the whole company of Christians: as His vigilate.

Mat. 23. 18.

Luke 22. 19.

Some things to them, not as Christians, but as Preachers or Priests: as His Ita predicate Evangelium, and His hoc facite; which no man thinketh all Christians may do.

Act. 1. 8.

And some things, to themselves personally: as that he had appointed them Witnesses of His Miracles and Resurrection, which cannot be applied but to them, and them in person. It remaineth, we enquire, in which of these three capacities, CHRIST imparteth to them this commission.

Not as to Apostles properly. That is, this was no personal privilege to be in them, and to die with them, that they should only execute it for a time, and none ever after them. GOD forbid, we should so think it. For this power being more than needfull for the world, as in the beginning it was said, it was not to be either personal, or for a time. Then those persons dying, and those times determining, they in the ages following, as we now in this, that should light into this prison or captivity of sinne, how could they or we receive any benefit by it? Of Nature, it is said by the heathen Philosopher, that it doth neither abundare in superfluis, nor deficere in necessariis. God forbid, but we should ascribe as much to God, at the least; that neither He should ordain a power superfluous, or more than needed; or else, it being needfull, would appropriate unto one age, and leave all other destitute of it; and not rather as all Writers both new and old take it, continue it successively to the worlds end.

Verse 21.

Verse 22.

And as not proper to the Apostles persons, so neither common to all Christians in general, nor in the persons of all Christians conveyed to them. Which thing, the very circumstances of the Text do evict. For he sent them first, and after inspired them; and after both these, gave them this Commission. Now all Christians are not so sent, nor are all Christians inspired with the grace or gift of the Spirit, that they were here. Consequently, it was not intended to the whole society of Christians. Yea, I add, that so far as these two, both these two, must go before it; 1. Mission, and 2. Inspiration; that though God inspire some Laymen, if I may have leave so to term them, with very special graces of knowledge to this end; yet inasmuch as they have not the form of sending, it agreeth not to them, neither may they exercise it, until they be sent, that is, until they have their calling thereunto.

It being then neither personall nor peculiar to them as Apostles, nor again common to all as Christians, it must needs be committed to them as Ministers, Priests, or Preachers; and consequently to those, that in that office and function do succeed them, to whom and by whom, this Commission is still continued. Neither are they, that are ordained or instituted to that calling, ordained or instituted by any other words or verse, than this. Yet not so, that absolutely without them, GOD cannot bestow it, on whom, or when Him pleaseth; or that he is bound to this meanes only, and cannot worke without it. For, Gratia Dei non alligatur mediis, the grace of God is not bound but free, and can worke without meanes either of Word or Sacrament; and as without meanes, so without Ministers, how and when to Him seemeth good. But speaking of that which is proper and ordinary, in the course by him established, this is an Ecclesiasticall Act committed, as the residue of the ministry of reconciliation, to Ecclesiasticall persons. And if at any time He vouchsafe it by others that are not such, they be in that case, Ministri necessitatis, non Officii: in case of necessity, Ministers; but by Office, not so.

Now, as by committing this power, GOD doth not deprive or bereave himself of it: For there is a Remittuntur still, and cheife, sovereign and absolute: so on the other side, where GOD proceedeth by the Churches act, as ordinarily He doth, it being His own ordinance; there, whosoever will be partaker of the Churches act must be partaker of it by the Apostles meanes; there, doth Remission concur in his order and place, and there runneth still a correspondence between both. There doth GOD associate his Ministers, and maketh them Workers together with him. There, have they their parts in this worke, and cannot be excluded: no more in this, than in other acts and parts of their function. And to exclude them, is (after a sort to wring the keys out of their hands, to whom CHRIST hath given them, is, to cancell and make void this clause of Remission, as if it were no part of the sentence; To account of all this solemne sending, and inspiring, as if it were an idle and fruitlesse ceremony: which if it may not be admitted, then sure it is, they have their part and concurrence in this worke, as in the rest of the ministry of reconciliation.

Neither is this a new or strange thing; from the beginning it was so: Under the law of Nature (saith Elihu in Iob, speaking of one for his finnes in GOD'S prison,) If there be with him an Ambassador, Commissioner, or Interpreter (not any whosoever, but) one among a thousand, to show unto Him his righteousness, Then shall God have mercy upon him and say, Let him go; for I have received a propitiation.

Under Moses, it is certain, the Covenant of life and peace was made with Levi, and at his sacrifices for sin, he was ever a party.

Under the Prophets. It pleased GOD to use this concurrence towards David himself: Nathan the Prophet saying unto him, Transtulit Dominus peccatum tuum.

Which course so established by GOD, till CHRIST should come; (for neither covenant nor Priest-hood was to endure any longer; was) by CHRIST re-established anew in the Church, in that calling: to whom he hath committed the Word of reconciliation. Neither are we (the ordinances of GOD thus standing) to rend off one part of the sentence. Three are here expressed, three persons: 1 The person of the sinner, in quorum; 2 of God, in Remittuntur; 3 of the Priest in Remissionis. Three are expressed; and where three are expressed, three are required, and where three are required, two are not enough. It is Saint Augustin that thus speaketh of this Ecclesiasticall act in his time: Nemo sibi dicat occulte ago penitentiam, apud Deum ago. Novit Deus qui mihi ignoscit, quia in corde ago. Ergo sine causa dictum est, qua solvitis in terra, soluta erunt in Cælo, Ergo sine causa Claves data sunt Ecclesie Dei; Frustramus Evangelium Dei; Frustramus verba Christi.

Which may suffice for the distinguishing of these two Powers, the deriving of the one from whom, and to whom, the continuance and concurrence of them.

The Remission of finnes, as it is from God only, so is it by the death and blood-shedding of Christ alone: but, for the applying of this unto us, there are divers meanes established. There is Multi-formis gratia (saith Saint Peter) variety of graces, whereof we are made the disposers. Now, all and every of these meanes working to the remission of finnes (which is the first and greatest benefit, our SAVIOUR CHRIST hath obtained for us, it resteth that we further enquire, what that meanes is in particular, which is here imparted.

For sure it is, that besides this there are diverse acts instituted by God; and executed by us, which all tend to the remission of sins.

1. In the institution of Baptisme, there is a power to that end. Be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins (saith Saint Peter to three thousand at once.) Arise and be baptized (saith Ananias to Paul) and wash away thy finnes. And to be short: I believe one baptisme for the remission of finnes (saith the Nicene Creed.)

2. Again, there is also another power for the Remission of finnes, in the institution of the holy Eucharist. The words are exceeding plaine: This is my blood of the New Testament, for the remission of sins.

3. Besides; in the Word it self, there is a like power ordained. Now are you clean, saith Christ (no doubt from their sins) propter Sermanem hunc. And the very Name giveth as much, that is intituled, The word of reconciliation.

4. Further there is to the same effect, a power in prayer, and that in the Priests Prayer, Call for the Priests (saith the Apostle) and let them pray for the sick person, and if he have committed sin, it shall be forgiven him.

All and every of these, are acts for the remission of sins; and in all and every of these, is the person of the Minister required, and they cannot be dispatched without him.

None of these meant here.

But the ceremonies and circumstances that here I find used, prevaile with me to think, that there is somewhat here imparted to them, that was not before. For, it carrieth no likelyhood, that our Saviour bestowing on them nothing here, but that which before He had, would use so much solemnity, so diverse and new circumstances, no new or diverse grace being here communicated.

The like we may say of the power of Preaching, which was given them long before; even when He sent them, and commanded them to preach the kingdom of GOD, which was done, before this power was promised, which here is bestowed, as will evidently appear, the one being given, Mat. 10. the other after promised, Mat. 16.

1 Tim. 2.2.

4. Neither can it be meant of prayer. There is no partition in prayer. Prayers and supplication are to be made for all men. But here is a plain partition. There is a Quorum, whose sins are remitted, and another Quorum whose sins are retained.

But the power of Absolution.

Seing then this new ceremony and solemn manner of proceeding in this, are able to perswade any, it was some new power that here was conferred, and not those which before had been (though there be, that apply this, others to some one, and others to all of them:) I take it to be a power distinct from the former, and (not to hold you long) to be the accomplishment of the promise made, Mat. 16. 19. of the power of the Keyes, which here in this place and in these words is fulfilled; and have therein for me the joynt consent of the Fathers. Which being a different power in it selfe, is that which we call the Act or Benefit of Absolution, in which (as in the rest) there is in the due time and place of it, an use for the remission of sins. Whereunto our SAVIOUR CHRIST, by His sending them; doth institute them, and give them the key of authority: And by breathing on them and inspiring them, doth enable them and give them the key of knowledge, to do it well, and having bestowed both these upon them as the Stewards of his House, doth last of deliver them their Commission to do it, having so enabled them and authorized them as before. So much for the power.

Verse 21.
Verse 22.

II.

Quorum peccata
The subject of this power.

Every power is not every where to be exercised, nor upon every matter; but each power hath, his proper subject.

That matter or subject, whereon this power is to be exercised, is sin. To be considered first in it self, as the matter at large. And then, as qualified with the person: (for it is quorum, and not qua peccata;) As the nearer and more proper subject.

Peccata, at large.

First then, the subject are Sinnes. Sins in themselves, no wayes restrained or limited. No sins at all, either for number, or greatnesse being excepted.

Without exception of number.
Mat. 18.22.

Nor for number. For Christ teaching us, That we our selves should forgive untill seventy times seven times, doth thereby after a sort give us to understand, that He will not sticke with us for the like number in ours. For GOD forbid, we should imagine, He taught us to be more mercifull or of greater perfection than He will be Himselfe. That number amounteth to ten jubiles of pardon: For so many sins, may we then hope for pardon at His hands. If those be not enough, we have example of one, whose sins were more in number than the haire of his head; and of another, whose were more than the sands of the Sea: both which give us hope; for they both obtained pardon.

Psal. 40.12.
O at Mana.

Of greatnesse.
Mat. 18.24.
Luc. 7.48.
Gen. 4.13.

But that which followeth in the place of Matthew, maketh both parts plain. For there a debt is remitted, not only of five hundred (as Luk. 7.) but of ten thousand, and those (not as in Luke, peace, but) talents: A great and huge summe, yet for that hath He remission in store. So that, no man shall need to say, his sin is greater than can be remitted, as Cain did, since that assertion is convinced to be erroneous: For, his sin may be forgiven, that slew Abel, though his brother, seing S. Peter saith, that theirs was no greater than might be forgiven, that slew the son of God. For no man but will conceive that the betraying and murdering JESUS CHRIST, was far a more heynous offence than that of Abels killing: But, that might (saith Saint Peter;) therefore, this much more may be forgiven. And to end this point, whereas it is affirmed, and that most truly, by the Apostle, that the weaknesse of GOD is stronger than men, if there were any sin greater than could be remitted, the weaknesse of man (for of that cometh sin) should be stronger than GOD: which neither Religion nor reason will admit. In respect of the sinne it self, therefore here is no exception.

Act. 31.15.19.

1 Cor. 1.25.

But

But because it is not qua peccata but quorum, it sheweth, that in the act of permissio, we are to respect, not the sin so much as the person. So that, though all sins may be remitted, yet not to all persons, but to quorum, as we see. For there is another quorum, whose sins are retained: so that this limiteth the former, and sheweth indeed, what is the Materia propinqua, or immediate subject of this power committed.

Our Saviour Christ Himself, at the reading of His Commissio (whereof this is a branch) in effect expresseth as much. For He telleth them, There were many lepers in the dayes of Elisha, and many widowes in the daies of Elias, yet none cleansed but Naaman, nor to none was Elias sent, but to the widow of Sarephtha. And so the case standeth here. Many sinners there be, and many sins may be remitted, but not to any, except they be of this Quorum. In which point there is a special use of the key of knowledge, to direct to whom and to whom not; since it is not, but with advice, to be applied, nor hands hastily to be layd on any man (as the Apostle testifieth) which place is referred by the ancient Writers, to the Act of Absolution, and the circumstance of the place giveth no lesse. But discretion is to be used in applying of comfort, counsaile, and the benefit of Absolution. Whereby it falleth out sometimes, that the very same sins to some may be remitted, being of the Quorum, that to some others may not, that are out of it.

To see then a little into this qualification, that thereby we may discern who be of either Quorum. The conditions to be required, to be of Quorum remittuntur, are two.

First, that the party be within the house and family, whereto those keys belong (that is) be a member of the Church, be a faithfull believing Christian. In the Law, the Propitiatory was annexed to the Arke, and could not be severed from it: to shew, that they must hold of the Arke, (that is) be of the number of the people of GOD, or else could they not be partakers of the Propitiation for their sins. So saith the Psalmist, in the Psalm of the Church, Omnes canales mei erant in te. All the conduit-pipes of all my spirituall graces are conveyed into thee, and are no where else to be had. And namely, of this benefit of remission of sins: Thou hast (saith he) O Lord, been gracious unto Thy land, &c. Thou hast forgiven all their iniquity, and covered all their sin. But the Prophet Esai, most plainly: The people which dwelleth in her (that is, the Church) They shall have their iniquity forgiven. And to end this point, the Angel when he interpreteth the name of JESUS, extendeth it no further than that, thus He shall save their people from their sins. To them then is the benefit of remission of sins entailed and limited; it is for Sanctorum, and dos Ecclesia. And they that are of this Quorum have their certain hope thereof. They that are out of it, pertain to the second sort of them that have their sins retained. The power of the keys reacheth not to them: What have I to do with them that are without (saith the Apostle?) Them that are without, GOD shall judge. Therefore, all Pagans, Infidels, Jewes, and Turkes are without the compasse of this Quorum. For who so beleiveth not in Christ, who so is not a faithfull Christian, shall die in his sins.

But are all that are within this house, thereby partakers of this remission? Is there nothing else required? Yes indeed, there is yet another condition requisite, whereby many are cut off, that are within the Quorum of the Church. And that is (as our Saviour Christ Himself setteth it down) Repentance. For, He willett Repentance and Remission of sins to be preached in His name; both these, but Repentance first, and then Remission of sinnes to follow after. So that, the sinner, that is a member of the Church, if he want this, is not of the former, but of the latter Quorum.

To Repentance there go two things (as heretofore hath been entreated more at large.) To insist upon the resemblance here made. First, that he feels his chaines and imprisonment, and be grieved with them, and therefore would gladly be let loose, and discharged from them. And no otherwise doth our Saviour Christ proclaim it: That none should come to Him but such as are weary and heavy laden. For, sensiat onus qui vult levare, & sensiat vincula qui vult solvi. And no reason there is meanes should be made for his enlargement, that is well enough already, and had rather be where He is, than at liberty abroad.

Out of which groweth this division of sinners, which make this double Quorum. For, there are sinners, that are weary of their commitment, and would gladly be enlarged. Such as he was: O bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thee. And as he: Wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me? And to these belongeth the first cause of Remission, even poenitentibus & penitentibus, to them that are weary of their durance, and that desire and sue for deliverance.

Again there are sinners, which care not greatly for their present estate, but are as it were without sense of their misery. The prison grieveth them not being in it, they reckon themselves well enough, either because they have drunken of the numbing cup, which is the very drugges of GOD'S Swrath, having their hearts as brann, and their consciences seared with a hot iron, that is (as the Apostle doth interpret it) being past all feeling, or remorse of sinne: Or else a worse sort of people, that not only have no sense of their present wretched case, but do even take delight and pleasure in the place, and (to choose) will not be out of it. Qui latantur cum malum fecerint, & exultant in rebus pessimis, that scorn the denouncing of GOD'S judgement, and when they hear the words of this curse absolve themselves and say, I shall have peace and do full well for all that. Of such, Dominus ne ignoscat illis (saith Moses) let not GOD be mercifull to them. Pity it is, that they should be let go, or the Key once turn-

In which very point (of sorrow for sinne) there is an especial good use of the key of knowledge, for counsel and direction 1. For, inasmuch as Repentance it self is an act of corrective Justice, and to repent is to do judgement (as the Prophet :) and to judge our selves, as the Apostle calleth it. 2. To which there belongeth not only a sentence, but also indignation a revenge, or punishment. And because it is not a fruitlesse repentance which must serve the turn : but it must have fruits (saith Saint John Baptist) and fruits worthy of repentance : that is, more plainly (as Saint Paul saith, he was charged to preach even from heaven) That men must not only repent and turn to GOD, but also do works worthy of Repentance.

3. And for that the works of Repentance, all of them, are not meet and suitable to every sinne, but as the sinnes are divers, so are the works to be also. 3. For that also, as a man may go too farre in them (as appeareth in the case of the Corinthian;) so may one fall too short, as appeareth in the case of Miriam : and a proportion or Analogie is to be kept, according as the case of the sinne requireth. In both these to advise, both what works are meer, and also what measure is to be kept, the Key of Knowledge will help to direct, and we may have use of it, if we mean to use it to that end.

Heb. 12. 17.
Gen. 27. 38, 14.

Psalms 85. 8.

The other condition which must be joynted to the former, is an unfeigned purpose and endeavour, our selves to remit or let go those sinnes, which we would have by GOD remitted. For, it is not enough to be sorry for sinne past, or to seek repentance, no though it be with teares : this will not make us of the first Quorum, if there be nothing but this; if there be in our hearts a purpose, our selves to retain and hold fast our old sinne still. Esaie lift up his voice with a great cry and bitter out of measure, and wept : Yet even at the same time, vowed in his heart, so soon as his Father was dead, to make away his Brother. And this purpose of mind, for all his bitter crying and teares, cast him into the latter Quorum, and made his sinnes to be retained still. And such is the case of them, that would be let go out of prison; but would have liberty to go in and out still to visit the company there, when and as often as them list. So do not the Saints that be of the first Quorum, to whom GOD, as He speaketh peace, so He speaketh this too, that they turn not thither again, that they fall not again to their former folly.

Luke 7. 48.
John 8. 11.

1 Cor. 7. 11.

But these latter would have their sinnes let go by GOD, but themselves would not let them go, but keep fast their end still. They would quoad reatum, hear that saying from CHRIST'S mouth, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee : but quoad actum would not willingly hear that other, Go and sinne no more. But we must be willing to hear them both : willing to have our sinnes remitted by GOD, and willing too (our selves) to remit our sinning, or from thenceforth remissius peccare, to sinne more remissely, and nothing so licenciously as before. To the former, sorrow, sentence, and revenge, we must (saith Saint Paul) joyn a desire, inward, and to that desire and endeavour, concord, and that, such an endeavour as may be able to alleadge for it self ἀπολογία, an honest defence, that we have used all good meanes to do that, which on our part is to be performed, that we may be of the first Quorum.

Acts 2. 37.

In which point no lesse than the former, there may be use of the Key of knowledge, to advise and direct our selves, no lesse in the cure of sinne, than in the sorrow for it. They in the second of the Acts, which were pricked in their hearts, knew of themselves that somewhat they should do (as by their question appeareth :) but what it was they should do, they knew not.

Sometimes men have good mindes : but know not which way to turn them to set themselves about it. Sometimes they are scrupulous and doubtfull, whether they do as they should, because one may Propitius esse sibi, favour himself too much, and be over-partiall in his own case, neither so carefull to use the meanes to good, nor to avoid the occasions of evil, as he ought. Wherein, it were good for men to make sure work, and to be fully resolved. For, most usual it is for men, at their ends to doubt, not of the power of remitting of sinnes, but of their own disposition to receive it : and whether they have ordered the matter so, that they be within the compasse of GOD'S effectual Calling, or as the Text is, of the Quorum, to whom it belongeth, so much for the matter, or subject, whereto this power is to be applied.

And here I should now speak somewhat of the applying or use of it : but the time hath overtaken me, and will not permit it. Now only a word of the third part, of the Efficacy, or (as the Lawyers term it) of GOD'S Ratibabition, and so an end.

III.
Of the Ratibabition.

Wherein GOD willing more abundantly, to shew to them that should be partakers of it, the stableness of his Counsel, He hath penned it exceeding effectually, and indeed strangely to them that deeply consider of it : which He hath so done, to the end, that thereby such poor sinners as shall be partakers of it, might have strong consolation and perfect assurance, not to waver in the hope which is set before them.

Super. verbis Esaiæ Vidi Dominum.
Hos. 1. 5.

And to that end, even for comfort, I will only point at four things in the inditing of it; all expressing the efficacie of it, in more than common manner.

1. The order, in this; that Remiseritis standeth first, and Remittuntur second. It is Saint Chrysostome's note, that it beginneth in earth, and that heaven followeth after. So that, whereas in prayer and in other parts of Religion it is; Sicut in Cælo, sic in terra; here it is, Sicut in terra, sic in Cælo. A terra judicandi principalem auctoritatem sumit Cælum. Nam Iudex sedet in terra: Dominus sequitur servum, & quicquid hic in inferioribus judicavit, hoc ille in superioribus comprobavit, sicut he.
as

2. The time: in this, that it is Remittuntur in the present tense; there is no delay between, no deferring, or holding in suspense, but the Absolution pronounced upon earth, Remittuntur, presently they are remitted; that He saith not, hereafter they shall be, but they are already remitted.

3. The Manner: in setting down of the two words. For, it is so delivered by CHRIST, as if He were content, it should be accounted their act, and that the Apostles were the agents in it, and Himself but the patient, and suffered it to be done. For, the Apostle's part is delivered in the Active (Remiseritis;) and His own in the passive (Remittuntur.)

4. The Certainty: which in the Identity of the word, in not changing the word, but keeping the self same in both parts. For, Christ hath not thus endited it, Whose sinnes ye wish or ye pray for, or whose sinnes ye declare to be remitted; but whose sinnes ye remit: using no other word, in the Apostle's, than he useth in his own. And to all these, in Saint Matthew He addeth His solemn protestation of Verily, Verily, or Amen, Amen, that so it is, and shall be. And all to certifie us, that He fully meapeth, with effect to ratifie in heaven, that is done on earth; to the sure and stedfast comfort of them, that shall partake it. Mat. 18.18,

Preached at
WHITE-HALL
Upon the XXIII of NOVEMBER, Anno Dom. MDC.

J E R E. Chap. XXIII, Ver. VI.

Hoc est Nomen quo vocabunt Eum, Jehova Justitia nostra.

This is the Name whereby they shall call Him, the LORD our Righteousness.

Vase 7.

THE former points, which the Prophet pointeth us to with his Ecce, and willed us to behold, we then were so long in beholding, that we had no time to take a view of this last: which I take to be the chiefeft part of his Ecce, and the point of all points most worthy our beholding. Hoc est nomen, &c.

1. The chief, because His Name is given him from this and not from any of the rest. For (commonly from his chiefeft title doth every man take his denomination. In the verse next following, GOD saith; He will no more be called, Their deliverer from Egypt, because He will vouchsafe them a greater deliverance from Babylon. And so from thence, as from the greater, have His name given. And as GOD, so men. What title of honour is highest in their style, that of all other, doth each person delight, to be termed by.

Now those (in the former part of this verse) of Salvation, and Peace which he will procure them) be great and excellent Titles: and they be no lesse verified of Him, than this of Righteousness: (The Lord is my light and my Salvation, by the Prophet: and, He is our Peace, by by the Apostle.) Yet, of neither of these doth He take His Name. But, from this of Righteousness, He doth. And that, both His former Name, in metaphor and figure, The Branch of Righteousness; and this His latter, in propriety and truth, His Royal Name, Jehova Iustus nostra. This; therefore is the Chief in His accompr.

Psalms 77.1.
Ephes. 2.14.
Verse 5.

2. Again, the Chief: because it is His peculiar. And, every man reckoneth of that, as his chiefest Title, that is not common to him with others, but proper to him alone; (as wherein he hath a prerogative above all. He, and none but He.)

Now those in the former verse (of executing judgement and justice) are such, as are also given to other Kings. King David is said to have executed judgement and justice to all his people: So is King Salomon likewise; the Queen of Sheba giveth him that Title. To do justice, is the title also of others (and not many neither, but yet of some others) But to be justice, to be righteous, He; that is the name of none, but CHRIST only. His, and His only, is that title. Therefore, as well in this regard, as in the former, this is the very chief part in the Ecce; The Name of Jehova our Righteousness.

2 Sam. 8.15.
1 Reg. 10.9.

Which, because it is nothing but a name, may seem to some, a matter of no great importance. The Deputy of Achaia (Gallio) in the Acts, seemeth of that mind: If it were some weighty matter, I would sit the hearing: But if it be a matter of Names, I take it not worth the while: Hear it who will; for I will not. And to say the truth, if it were a name of mens giving, he said not much amiss. Their names are not greatly to be looked after. The argument taken from them, the Heathen Philosopher confesseth, is μῦθος ἀλλὰ λόγος, an argument, that setteth a good face upon it, but no great substance in it. The reason whereof is, Because with men, there be Nominals, and there be Reals: Names and things, are many times two. There is quadam dicuntur de, & non insunt in. There is learning (saith the Apostle) ἰδωδωρον, falsely so called. And as learning; so, many things beside. The Church is named liberal, and they worshipfull, that have nothing worthy worship in them. Yea, it falleth out, that some have a name, that they live, and yet are dead: and many things besides, qua dicuntur de, & non insunt in. Whereof, we need not seek farre, we have an example here in the Prophet, of King Zedekia, that reigned at the time of this Prophecie; one that had neither truth nor righteousness in him: a breaker of his league and Covenant, a falsifier of his oath; and yet, his name is Zedekia, GOD'S righteous one, or the righteousness of GOD. Mens names for the most part are false.

2. And when they be true, empty, and no great weight in them. For what are mens titles, but mens breath; but a blast of ayr, but wind. If they be popular titles, the wind of a common pair of bellows: If of those of the better sort (as the heathen man well said ἄνεμος ἐπὶ τῷ στόματι), the winde of a guile or wrought paire of Bellows; but both of them, wind.

But, the names of GOD'S imposition, are not so. They ever carry truth in them. For seeing GOD cannot away with those that are title-givers (as saith Elisha) He will give none Himself. With Him, is not the division, that is with us, of Nominals and Reals; of quadam dicuntur de, quadam insunt in. If we be named the Sonnes of GOD, we are so (saith Saint John) and therefore, from His Name, a sound and substantial argument may be drawn, (as we see) the Apostle doth: proving the excellency of Christ's Nature, above the Angels, from the excellency of His Name above theirs.

Heb. 11.1.

And, as they are free from falsehood; so are they not empty, but have ever some verue in them. The Name of GOD (saith Salomon) is a strong Tower. So that, when some trust in Chariots and Horses; and other some, in the Name of GOD; they that trust in Chariots and horses, they go down; they that in that Name, stand upright. And this, not only in the dangers of this life; but, there is also, in the Name of GOD, a saving power for the life to come. A power, to justify: Ye are justified in the Name of CHRIST (saith Saint Paul.) A power for remission of finnes: Your finnes are forgiven you, for His Name's sake (saith Saint John.) A power to save: In this Name, you have Salvation (saith Saint Peter.)

Act 4.11

In the Ecce, or beholding whereof, two things present themselves to our view: 1. The Name it self. 2. The Calling Him by it. The Name in these words: Hoc est Nomen. The calling in these; Quo vocabant Eum.

In either of which, two others: In the Name, these two; 1 The parts of it: and the reason of them. 2 The sense of it.

TO GOD Himself (as the Psalmist telleth us) all the service, we can perform, reacheth not. The perfection of His Nature is such, as it can from us receive nothing. But, two things of his there are, which he hath left to expresse that duty, which we owe and bear to Himself. Which two things are in one yesse set down by the Prophet David: Thou hast magnified, 1 Thy Name, and 2 Thy Word above all things: 1 His Name, and 2 His Word. His Name, for our invocation; His Word, for our instruction. And these two: as they are the highest things, in GOD's accompt; so are they to be in ours. Not the Word only (which carrieth all away in a manner, in these dayes:) But, His Name also, no lesse. For, in the setting them down, the HOLY GHOST giveth the first place to the Name. Our very assembling, and coming together, is in his Name. And then, before all things, supplications are to be made in his Name. And the very hearing of the Word itself is, that we may call upon His Name. How shall they call upon His Name whom they have not heard? How shall they hear without a Preacher? So that, preaching, and hearing of the Word, are both ordained for the calling on of this name. Which being so high in GOD's accompt, of very civility, if there were nothing else, we are not to be ignorant, what His name is, that He is to be called by. No man, that maketh any (yea, but common) accompt of a party, but he will learn by what name to call him. And so requisite doth Salomon hold this, as he affirmeth, There is little more in that man than in a beast; yea, there is not the understanding of a Man in him: of GOD (of Him that stretcheth out the heavens, and gathereth the winds in his fist, and the waters in a garment; establisheth all the ends of the earth) not to know what is His name, or what is His Son's Name. That His name, as Jehova: And His Son's name, Jehova Iustitia nostra.

This, were we bound to get notice of, if it were but civility; or (as Salomon reckoneth it) even humanity. But that is not all. For seeing (as the heathen man confesseth) Namque deus, rexque, rexque, rexque, we all either have, or may have need of GOD, in our necessities of this life, but specially, in our last need; of very necessity it will stand us in hand, to know how to call unto Him. There is no Client, but will be sure to learn his Advocate's name; nor no patient but will tell his Physician's. Nor (in a word) any of them, of whom we are to have any special use, but we will be carefull as to learn his true name, that we misse not in it; so, if he have divers names, and love to be called by any one rather than other, to be sure to be perfect in it, and ready to salute him by it. And such is this Name here; and we therefore not to be to seek in it; seeing not only Courties, but very necessity commendeth it to us.

Which Name, (as you see) is compounded of three words: 1 Jehova, 2 Iustitia, 3 Nostra: all of them necessary, all of them essential. And they all three concurring, as it were three twigs, they make a three-fold cord (like that which the Preacher mentioned) that cannot be broken. But except it be entire, and have all three, it loseth the vertue; it worketh nothing. For sever any one of them from the rest, and the other are not of moment. A sound, but not a name; or a name, but not Hoc Nomen this Name; a Name qualified to save them that call on it. Take Jehova from Iustitia nostra, and Iustitia nostra is nothing worth. And, take Iustitia from Jehova, and though there be worth in Jehova, yet there is not that which we seek for. Yea, take nostra from the other two, and how excellent soever they be, they concern us not, but are against us, rather than for us. So that, together we must take them, or the Name is lost.

To see this the better, it will not be amiss to take it in sunder, and to see the ground of every part in order. Why, 1 Jehova, 2 Why Iustitia, 3 Why Jehova Iustitia, 4 Why Iustitia nostra; 5 Both nostra, and Iustitia.

Jehova Touching which word, and the ground why it must be a part in this Name, the Prophet David resolveth us: Memorabor (saith he) Iustitia Tua solius. Because his righteousness, and only His righteousness, is worth the remembering; and any others, beside His, is not meet to be mentioned. For, as for our own righteousness which we have without Him, Esay telleth us, it is but a defiled cloth; and Saint Paul, that it is but dung. Two very homely comparisons: but they be the Holy Ghost's own: yet nothing so homely as in the originall, where they be so odious, as what manner of defiled cloth, or what kind of dung, we have not dared to translate.

Our own then being no better, we are driven to seek for it elsewhere. He shall receive His righteousness (saith the Prophet:) and the gift of righteousness (saith the Apostle.) It is then another, to be given us, and to be received by us, which we must seek for. And whether shall we go for it; Job alone dispatcheth this point. Not to the heavens or flames: For, they are unclean in His sight. Nor to the Saints: For in them He found folly. Nor to the Angels: For neither in them found He any steadfastness. Now, if none of these will serve, we see a necessary reason, why Jehova must be a part of this Name. And this is the reason, why Jeremy here expressing more fully the Name given Him before in Esay (Immanuel, GOD with us) instead of the Name of GOD, in that name (which is El) setteth down by the way of explanation, this Name here of Jehova. Because, that (El) and the other Names of GOD are communicated to Creatures. As the Name of El, to Angels, for their Names end in it; Michael, Gabriel, &c. And, the Name of Iha to Saints, and their names end in it; Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zachariah. To certify us therefore, that it is neither the righteousness of Saints nor Angels, that will serve the turn, but the righteousness of GOD and very GOD: He useth that Name which is proper to GOD alone; ever reserved to Him only; and never imparted by any occasion to Angel or Saint, or any creature in heaven or earth.

Iustitia: Righteousness. Why that? If we ask, in regard of the other benefits which are before remembered (Salvation and Peace) Why Righteousness and not Salvation nor Peace? it is evident. Because (as in the verse next before, the Prophet termeth it.) Righteousness is the Branch; and these two: Salvation and Peace are the fruits growing on it. So that, if this be had, both the other are had with it. Of Righteousness and Salvation: Esa faith, they grow both together, as it were out of one stalk. And of Peace, that Opus Iustitie Pax, the very work or proper effect of Righteousness is Peace. For which cause the Apostle interpreting the name of Melchisedek, King of Salem; first (faith he) King of Righteousness; and after, King of Peace. Even as on the contrary part, sinne which is nothing else but discord, iniquity or unrighteousness, as faith Saint John, is that root of bitterness, from whence shooteth forth both perdition of the soul, contrary to Salvation, and unquietness of the conscience, opposite to Peace. And both they, and all other miseries are (as JOB termeth them) sparks of this brand of hell: as health and Peace, and all blessings, are the fruits of this branch of Righteousness. Now, because there is no vana salus, a vain salvation (as faith David;) and a peace falsely so called a Peace which is no peace (as faith Jeremy;) To the end therefore, that our salvation might be substantial, and our peace uncounterfeit: it behooveth us to lay a sure ground-work of them both; and to set a true root of this branch, which is the Name Jehova. For, such as the root of this branch is, such will Salvation and Peace, the fruits thereof, be. If it be man's righteousness which is vain, it will be also vana salus hominis, vain and soon at an end; and the peace, like to the world's peace, vain and of no certainty. But if Jehova be our righteousness, look how He is, so will they be, everlasting Salvation, a peace which passeth all understanding.

Jehova Iustitia. We are now to seek the reason, why Jehova is in this Name per modum Iustitie, by the way or under the term of Righteousness, rather than of some other Attribute: as of Power or Mercy; that it is not Jehova Misericordia, or Jehova Potentia, but Jehova Iustitia. GOD with us (faith Esa;) with us (faith Jeremy) of all his properties, by that of Righteousness chiefly and above other.

Not of Power (as in Esa) by His Name El: which is His Name of Power. For, in Power there is no true comfort, without Justice be joyned to it. For, what is Power, except Righteousness go before? We see it is a thing very agreeable to our Nature, to have that we shall have, by Justice (to choose:) and that way do even the mightiest first seek it; and when that way it will not come, they overbear it with Power.

Not of Mercy; nor Jehova Misericordia, by which Name David calleth Him. For, though it be a Name of special comfort, and S. Augustine faith of it: O Nomen sub quo nemini desperandum! yet if we weigh it well of it self alone, we shall find, there is no full or perfect comfort in it, except this also be added; For that, we have in us two respects: First one, as persons in Misery: Secondly, the other, as persons convicted of sin. And though Mercy be willing to receive us, in the one; for her delight is to help those in misery: Yet what shall become of the other, how shall that be answered? We have in the verse before, mention of a King ready to execute judgement and Justice. Now Justice is professed enemy to all sin; and Justice in her proceeding, may not admit of any respect, either of the might or of the misery of any, to lead her from giving sentence according to Law.

True it is, Mercy is ours, ours wholly, there is no doubt; but Justice is against us, and except Justice may be made ours too, all is not as it should be. But if Justice, if that in God, which only is against, might be made for us, then were we safe. Therefore all our thought is to be, either how we may get Mercy to triumph over Justice with the Apostle; or, how (at the least) we may get them to meet together, and be friends in this work. For, except Justice be satisfied, and do joyn in it also; in vain we promise our selves, that Mercy, of it self, shall work our salvation, Which may serve for the reason, why neither Jehova Potentia, or Jehova Misericordia, are enough; but, it must be Jehova Iustitia; and Iustitia a part of the Name.

Nostri: And neither may this be left out. For without this, Jehova alone doth not concern us; and Jehova Iustitia is altogether against us. But if He be Righteousness, and not only Righteousness, but ours too; all is at an end, we have our desires; Verily this last, this possessive, this word of application is all in all. By it, we have interest in both the former: and without it, our case is as theirs; Quid nobis & tibi, what have we to do with thee, Jehova Iustitia? Which is most fearful, and nothing but terror and torment in the consideration of it. Therefore we must make much of this. For, if once He be Nobiscum with us, and not against us, and not only Nobiscum with us, but Noster our own; all is safe. Otherwise it falleth out oft, there be many Nobiscum, that be not Nostri: with us, talk with us, eat with us, sit with us, which yet are not ours for all that. And in this point also, doth this Name of Jeremy more fully expresse the Name of Esa's Immanuel, no lesse than in the two former, first of Jehova, which is more than El: and then of Iustitia, which is more agreeable than of Potentia: and now in this here, that there is Nobiscum (which is well;) and there is sus est, c8c.

Serm. 3. in Mis-

Noster, which is better, and more sure by a great deal. For if He be (as the Apostle saith) Fa-ctus nobis, Made unto us Righteousnesse, and that so, as He becometh ours, what can we have more? What can hinder us (saith Saint Bernard) but that we should uti nostro in utilitatem nostram; & de Servatore salutem operari: Use Him and his Righteousnesse; use that which is ours to our best behoof, and work our Salvation out of this our Saviour. So that, Nostre may not be spared, no more than the other part of the Name. For all is in suspence, and there is no compleat comfort without it.

5 Iustitia nostra.

To which comfort, this may be added for a conclusion of this part, no lesse effectual than any of the former. That it is Iustitia nostra in the Abstract; and not in the Concrete, Iustifi-cans, or Iustificator noster, our Justifier or Righteousnesse it self; not our Justifier or Maker of us Righteous. For thus delivered, I make no doubt, it hath much more efficacy in it; and more significant it is by farre, to say Jehova our justice, than Jehova our justifier. I know, Saint Paul saith much: That our SAVIOUR CHRIST shed His blood, to shew His Righteous-nesse, that He might not only be just, but a justifier of those which are of His faith. And much more again, in that when He should have so said, To him that believeth in GOD, He chooseth thus to let it down, To him that believeth in Him, that justifier be ungodly: making these two be all one; GOD and the justifier of sinners. Though this be very much, yet certainly this is most forcible, that He is made unto us by GOD, very righteousnesse it self. And that yet more:
That he is made righteousnesse to us, that we be made the righteousnesse of GOD in Him. Which place Saint Chrysostome well weighing this very word, δικαιοσύνη (saith he) the Apostle useth θεοῦ τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἔσθαι, to expresse the unspeakable bounty of that Gift, that He hath not given us the operation or effect of His Righteousnesse, but His very Righteousnesse, yea His very self unto us; Mark (saith he) how every thing is lively, and as full as can be imagined, CHRIST, one, not only that had done no sinne, but that had not so much as known any sinne, hath GOD made (not a sinner, but) sinne it self, as in another place (not accursed, but) a curse it self: Sin, in respect of the guilt, a Curse, in respect of the punishment. And why this? To the end, that we might be made (not Righteous persons; that was not full enough, but) Righteousnesse it self:
and there he stayes not yet, and not every righteousness, but the very Righteousnesse of GOD Himself. What can be further said; what can be conceived more comfortable? To have Him ours, not to make us Righteous, but to make us Righteousnesse, and that not any other but the Righteousnesse of GOD: the wit of man can devise no more. And all to this end: That we might see, there belongeth a special Ecce to this Name; that there is more than ordinary comfort in it: that therefore we should be carefull to honour Him with it, and so call Him by it; Jehova our Righteousnesse.

2
The sense of this Name.

There is no Christian man that will deny this Name, but will call CHRIST by it, and say of Him, that He is Jehova Iustitia nostra, without taking a syllable or letter from it: But it is not the Syllables, but the Sense that maketh the Name. And the Sense is it, we are to look unto; that we keep it entire in Sense, as well as in sound, if we mean to preserve this Name of Iustitia nostra full and whole unto Him. And as this is true; so is it true likewise, that even among Christians, all take it not in one sense; but some, of a greater latitude than other. There are that take it in that sense which the Prophet Esay hath set down: In Jehova iustitia mea, that all our Righte-ousnesse is in Him; and we to be found in Him, not having our own righteousness, but being made the Righteousnesse of GOD in Him. There are some other, that though in one part of our righte-ousnesse they take it in that sense; yet in another part, they shrink it up, and in that, make it but a proposition causall, and the interpretation thereof to be, A Jehova iustitia mea. Which is true too. First, whether we respect Him, as the Cause exemplary, or pattern: (For we are to be made conformable to the Image of CHRIST.) Secondly, or whether we respect Him, as the Cause efficient: For, of all His righteous works, the Prophet truly protesteth: Domine, universa opera nostra, Tu operatus es nobis: and the Apostle when he had said Ego, corrected himself presently and saith, Non ego, sed gratia Dei mecum, Not I, but the grace of GOD. This meaning then is true and good: but not full enough. For either it taketh the name in sunder, and giveth Him not all, but a part of it again: or else it maketh two Senses, which may not be allowed in one Name.

1 Righteousness accounted

2 Righteousness done.

Gen. 15.6.

For the more plain conceiving of which point, we are to be put in mind, That the true Righte-ousnesse (as saith S. Paul) is not of mans device, but hath His witness from the Law and Prophets, which he there proceedeth to shew, out of the example, first of Abraham, and after of David. In the Scripture then, there is a double Righteousnesse set down, both in the Old and in the New Testament.

Gen. 11.19.

John 3.7.

In the Old, and in the very first place, that Righteousnesse is named in the Bible: Abraham believed and it was accounted unto him for righteousness. A righteousness accounted. And again (in the very next line) it is mentioned, Abraham will teach his house to do righteousness. A Righteousnesse done. In the New likewise. The former in one Chapter (even the fourth to the Romanes) no fewer than eleven times: Reputatum est illi ad iustitiam. A reputed Righteousnesse. The later, in S. John.
My beloved let no man deceive you, he that doth Righteousnesse is Righteous. A Righteousnesse done.
Which is nothing else but our just dealing, upright carriage, honest conversation.

Of these, the latter, the Philosophers themselves conceived and acknowledged; the other is proper to Christians only, and altogether unknown in Philosophy. The one is a quality of the party. The other, an act of the Judge, declaring or pronouncing righteous. The one, ours by influence or infusion; the other by accompt or imputation. That

That both these there are ; there is no question : The question is, whether of these the Prophet here principally meaneth, in this Name ?

This shall we best inform our selves of, by looking back to the verse before ; and without so looking back, we shall never do it to purpose.

There the Prophet setteth one before us, in his royal judicial power, in the person of a King, and of a King set down to execute judgement ; and this he telleth us, before he think meet to tell us his Name. Before this King, thus set down in his Throne, there to do judgement, the righteousness that will stand against the Law, or Conscience, Satan, Sin, the gates of Hell, and the power of darkness ; and so stand that we may be delivered by it, from death, despair and damnation ; and entitled by it to life, salvation and happiness eternal ; that is, righteousness indeed : that is it, we seek for, if we may find it. And that is not this latter ; but the former only : and therefore that is the true interpretation of Jehovah justitia nostra. Look but how Sr. Augustine, Con. Cref. 4. and the rest of the Fathers, when they occasion to mention that place, in the Proverbs, (Cum Rex justus sederit in solio, quis potest dicere, Mendum est cor meum?) Look how they interpret it then, and it will give us light to understand this Name ; and we shall see, that no name will serve then, but this name. Nor this name neither, but with this interpretation of it.

And that the Holy Ghost would have it ever thus understood, and us ever to represent before our eyes, this King thus sitting in his judgement seat, when we speak of this Righteousness, it is plain two ways. First, by way of position. For the renown of the Scripture touching our Justification, all along runneth in judicial terms, to admonish us still what to set before us. The usual joyning of Justice and Judgement continually all along the Scriptures, shew, it is a judicial Justice we are to set before us. The terms of 1 A Judge [a] It is the Lord that judgeth me. 2 A Prison, [b] Kept and shut up under Moses. 3 A Barre, [c] We must all appear before the Barre. 4 A Proclamation, [d] Who will lay any thing to the Prisoners charge? 5 An Accuser, [e] The Accuser of our brethren. 6 A Witness, Our Conscience bearing witness. 7 An Enditement upon these ; Cursed be he that continueth not in all the words of this Law to do them. And again, He that breaketh one is guilty of all. A Conviction, that all may be prolixor, guilty or culpable before God. Yea, the very delivering of our sins, under the name of debts ; of the Law, under the name of a Hand-writing ; the very termes of an Advocate ; of a Surety made under the Law : of a pardon, or being justified from those things which by the Law we could not. All these, wherein for the most part this is still expressed ; What speak they, but that the sense of this name cannot be rightly understood, nor what manner of Righteousness is in question, except we still have before our eyes ; this same Coram Rege justo judicium faciente.

2. And again, by way of opposition. For usually, where justifying is named, there condemning (which is a term meerly judicial) is set against it. In the Law, when there shall be strife, and the matter shall come before thee, and sentence to be given, see the righteous be justified, and the sinner condemned. To justify the wicked, and condemn the innocent, both are alike abominable before God. If man cannot judge, hear thou from heaven, condemn the wicked, and justify the Righteous.

In the Gospel. By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words condemned. It is GOD that justifieth, who shall condemn? Grace to justification, as sin to condemnation. All these shew manifestly : we must imagine our selves standing at the barre, or we shall never take the state of this question aright, nor truly understand the mystery of this Name.

For it is not in question, whether we have an inherent Righteousness or no : Or whether GOD will accept it, or reward it : but whether that must be our Righteousness, Coram Rege justo judicium faciente.

Which is a point very material, and in no wise to be forgotten : For, without this, if we compare our selves with our selves, what heretofore we have been ; or if we compare our selves with others, as did the Pharisee ; we may take a phansie perhaps, and have some good conceipt of our inherent Righteousness. Yea, if we be to deal in Schools by argument or disputation, we may peradventure argue for it, and make some shew in the matter. But let us once be brought and arraigned, Coram Rege justo sedente in solio ; let us set our selves there, we shall then see, that all our former conceipt will vanish straight, and Righteousness (in that sense) will not abide the trial.

Bring them hither then, and ask them here of this Name, and never a Saint, nor Father, nor the Schoolmen themselves, none of them but will shew you how to understand it aright. In their Commentaries, it may be in their questions and debates they will hold hard for the other. But remove it hither, they forsake it presently, and take the Name in the right sense. Hast thou considered my servant Job (saith GOD to Satan) how just and perfect he is. This just and perfect JOB, standing here, Though I be just (saith he) I will not hold up my head (or as they say, Stare rectius in curia) will never plead it, or stand upon it, but put up a supplication to be relieved by Jehova justitia nostra.

David hath the witness to have been a man according to GOD'S own heart. For all that, he darest not stand here : but desireth ; GOD would not enter into judgement with him : For that, In conspectu tuo, in His sight, not he, nor any other living (which Saint Bernard extendeth to the Angels) shall be justified. But if he must come, (as thither we must come all) then Memorabor justitia tua solius, he will never chaunt his own righteousness, but make mention only of this Name, JEHOVAH justitia nostra.

De verb. Apost.
In Gen. 22.

Daniel, Vir desideriorum (as the Angel termed him) even he, that man so greatly beloved, after he saw the Ancient of dayes set down in his Throne, and the booke open before Him, then Tibi Domine iustitia, nobis autem confusio faciei. Non in justificationibus nostris: Not in our Righteousness; yet was that righteousness a Jehova, but (here) it would not serve; he must wait for the Messias, and the Everlasting Righteousness which he bringeth with him.

And Esa likewise, at the Vision of the Lord sedentis super Thronum, and the Angels covering their faces before Him, cryeth out, Va mihi, Quia me, I am a man of polluted lips: Wo is me for I have held my peace, and (there) he seeth the very sins of his lips, and the very sins of omission will be enough to condemn him, though he had never in act committed any.

To end this point: Sait Paul, a Vessel of Election (so GOD himself doth name him) faith plainly, if it were before the Corinthians; or any Affixe of man, he would stand upon his Righteousness: but seeing, Qui me iudicat est Dominus, he will give it over, and confesse, that though Nihil mihi conscius sum (and so had iustitia a Domino;) yet for all that, in hoc non sum iustificatus; it is another Righteousness, and not that, must acquit him.

Thus do the Saints, both of the Old, and of the New Testament take this Name. And do not the Fathers the like? S. Augustines report it is, of S. Ambrose, that being now at the point of death, he alledged, that the cause why he feared not death, was, Quia bonum habemus Dominum: and doth not he give this note upon it, that he did not presume De suis purgatissimis moribus, of his conversation, though most holy and clean, but only stood on the goodness of the LORD, the LORD our Righteousness?

And doth he not, in his own case, fly to the same, against Crescentius the Donatist. That he shunned not, to have his life fitted to the uttermost by any Donatist of them all. Yet in the eyes of God, Cum Rex iustus sederit in solio (these very words he alledged) he saith plainly, he dare not justify himself, but rather waited for the overflowing bounty of His Grace; than would abide the severe examination of his judgement. And Bernard (in his 310. Epistle, the very last he wrote a little before his death, to the Abbot of Chartres) concludeth he not, Calcaneum vacuum meritis curare minime precibus? Abandoneth he not them, his iustitia a Domino, and confesseth, his heel (meaning the end of his life) is bare of all merits, and desireth to have it, by Prayers commended to Jehova iustitia nostra. Thus do the Fathers conceive of it.

Yea, the very Schoolmen themselves, take them from their Questions, Quodlibets and Comments on the Sentences, let them be in their soliloquies, meditations or devotions, and specially in directing how to deal with men in their last agony, quando iudex pro foribus est; then take Anselm, take Bonaventure, take Gerson, you would not wish to find Jehovah iustitia nostra better, or more pregnantly acknowledged, than in them you shall find it. But this is by vertue of this Ecce Rex facit iudicium; out of whose sight when we be; we may fall into a phansie, or (as the Prophet saith) we may have a dream of Iustitia nostra a Jehova.

But framing our selves as before him, we shall see, it is not that Righteousness, will consist there: but we must come to Iustitia nostra in Jehovah. It is the only way how to settle the state of this controversie aright: and without this, we may well miss of the interpretation of this Name. And this they do not, or will not (now) conceive, the Prophet telleth them after, at the 20. verse, quod in novissimo intelligeris plane, at the end they shall understand, whether they will or no.

And indeed to do them no wrong, it is true, that at his Judgement-seat, so far as it concerneth the satisfaction for sin, and our escaping from from eternal death, the Church of Rome taketh this Name aright; and that term, which a great while seemed harsh unto them, now they find no such absurdity in it. That Christi Righteousness and merits are imputed to us. So saith Bellarmino; Et hoc modo non esset absurdum, si quis diceret, nobis imputari Christi iustitiam & merita, cum nobis donentur & applicentur, ac si nos ipsi Deo satisfecissimus. And again, Solus Christus pro salute nostra satisfacere potuit, & re ipsa ex iustitia satisfecit, & illa satisfactio nobis donatur, & applicatur, & nostra reputatur, cum Deo reconciliamur & iustificamur. So saith Scapleton, Illasane iustitia, qua satisfecit pro nobis, per communicationem sic nostra est, ut perinde nobis imputetur, ac si nos sufficienter satisfecissimus: in as full terms as one could wish. So that this point is meetly well cleared now, Thus they understand this Name in that part of righteousness, which is satisfactory for punishment; and there they say with us (as we, with Esa) in Jehova iustitia nostra.

But in the positive justice, or that part thereof, which is meritorious for reward; there fall they into a phansie, they may give it over; and suppose, that iustitia a Domino, a righteousness (from GOD, they grant, yet) inherent in themselves, without a Righteousness that is in Christ, will serve them, whereof they have a good conceipt, that it will endure GODS justice, and standeth not by acceptance. So by this means shrink they up their Name; and though they leave the full sound, yet take they halfe the sense from it.

Now as for us, in this point of Righteousness, if we both go no further, than the former of taking away sin, then as much as we strive for, they do yield us. And therein (we think) we have cause to blame them justly, for not contenting themselves with that which contented the Prophet, Hic est omnis fructus (mark that omnis) ut auferatur peccatum. Which contented S. John Baptist; Ecce Agnus Dei qui tollis peccata mundi. Which contented the Angel; Hic servabit populum suum a peccatis eorum. Which contented the Fathers, S. Augustine, Puto hoc esse iustus sum, quod peccator non sum. S. Bernard, factus est nobis iustitia, sapientia, &c. sapientia in predicatione, iustitia justitia in peccatorum absolutione. So that, to be absolved from sin with him, is our Righteousness. And yet more plainly in his CXG Epistle to Innocentius the Pope himself, Ubi reconciliatio, ibi remissio peccatorum; & quid ipsa nisi justitiam? Which the very name and nature of a judgement-seat doth give, which proceedeth only in matters penal.

And as we blame them for that, so likewise for this, no less, that (if they will needs have it a part of Justice) they allow not Christ's name as full in this part as in the former. For there they allow imputation; but here they do not.

For I ask what is the reason why in the other part (of satisfaction for sin) we need CHRIST'S Righteousness to be accomplished ours? The reason is, saith Bellarmine, Non acceptat Deus in veram satisfactionem pro peccato, nisi justitiam infinitam, quoniam peccatum offensa est infinita. If that be the reason, that it must have an infinite satisfaction, because the offence is infinite? we reason a pari, there must be an infinite merit, because the reward is no less infinite. Else, by what proportion do they proceed, or at what beam do they weigh these twain, that cannot counterpoize an infinite sin, but with an infinite satisfaction: and think they can weigh down a reward every way as infinite, with a merit, (to say the least) surely not infinite? Why should there be a necessary use of the sacrifice of CHRIST'S death for the one, and not an use full as necessary of the Oblation of His life for the other? Or how cometh it to pass, that no less than the one will serve to free us from eternal death; and a great deal less will serve to entitle us to eternal life? Is there not as much requisite to purchase for us the Crown of Glory, as there is to redeem us from the Torments of Hell? What difference is there, are they not both equal, both alike infinite? Why is his death allowed solely sufficient to put away sin, and why is not His life to be allowed like solely sufficient to bring us to life? If in that the blessed Saints themselves (were their sufferings never so great, yea, though they endured never so cruel Martyrdoms) if all those could not serve to satisfy GODS justice for their sins, but it is the death of Christ must deliver them; is it not the very same reason, that were their merits never so many, and their life never so holy, yet that by them, they could not, nor we cannot challenge the reward, but it is the life and obedience of CHRIST that ide justitia must procure it, for us all? For sure it is, that Finis ad finem nulla est proportio. Especially, if we add hereunto, that as it cannot be denied but to be finite, so withal, that the ancient Fathers seem further to be but meanly conceived of it, reckoning it not to be full, but defective; nor pure, but defiled; and if it be judged by the just Judge, Districte, or cum distinctione examinis (they be Saint Gregories and Saint Bernards words) indeed, no Righteousness at all.

Not full, but defective. So saith Saint Augustine: Neque totam, neque plenam, in hac vita, justitiam nos habere, confitendum nobis est. If neither whole, but a part; not fully but wanting; then imperfect and defective. Now, which must be weighed in GODS Balance, must not be found minus habens, and this is minus habens, saith Saint Bernard in express terms.

Not pure, but defiled. Nostra recta forsitan, sed non pura justitia, saith Bernard, nisi forte meritos sumus quam patres nostri, quorum illa vox, Omnes justitie nostre sicut pavonis menstruada. Mala nostra, psa mala; Bona nostra, pura nequaquam, saith Gregory. Now Christi Pa. lra yna riva ad ipe dicitur, saith S. Chrysostome; Necessary it is, that the Righteousness, that shall present it self there, have not a spot in it. As for ours, as Pope Adrian the sixth said) the case standeth thus, that Stillemus quotidie super relam justitia nostra, sansem concupiscentie nostra, and so it is defiled.

And last of all, if it be straightly examined, indeed no righteousness. Sancti viri omne meritum vitium est, si ab Aeterno arbitro districte judicetur. And again, Quosque poena corruptionis asstringitur, veram munditiam nequaquam apprehendimus. And, Omnis humana justitia injustitia esse invenitur, si districte judicetur, in justia invenitur omnis justitia nostra. And thus we see, the concept, these Fathers have, of our Righteousness inherent: That if it be dealt with according to Righteousness, in illo examine etiam justorum vita succumbet, in that examination it will sink and cannot stand before it. Yea, they themselves, of the Church of Rome also, upon better examination, have begun to cry it down: and I doubt not, but the longer and further they look into it, the easier accompt they will make of it.

Gregory de Valentia, after a long debating the matter, thus resolvethe: that, Secula promissione divina, non superet aliquis sufficiens titulus, our opera nostra debent compensari. And thus he expreth his meaning, touching their value: That they be like to base money (as Princes have sometime made leather-money current) wherewith, Flare is bought, or other wares far exceeding the Coyne in value, which is no way in respect of it self; but because it pleaseth the Prince so to allow of it. And what is this but a proclaiming our righteousness base, or as I said before, a crying it down.

Stapleton, in his seventh proposition, how the matter standeth in our justification, at length is fain to resolve thus, Eacique indulgendo, ut perinde sumus coram Deo justii ac si universa adamussum omnia mandata eademque perfectissime fecissemus. Now, Indulgence (we know) belongeth unto sin, and righteousness, if it be true, needeth none. Therefore he telleth us, it is, Perinde ac si justii; it is not just, as they defend it: So that he confesseth their righteousness needeth an indulgence: and it is but Perinde ac si; and not that neither in justice, but acceptance, which is meer matter of favour, and not of judicial proceeding.

And to conclude, Bellarmine after his long disputation, in the end taking upon him to answer a case of Conscience, Whether a man repose any trust in that he had so long argued for, and how far; comprizeth the matter in three propositions well worth the noting. 1. For first, very stoutly ly he setteth down: Fiducia non ex fide sola nascitur, sed ex bonis meritis.

2. Then in the second he falleth somewhat: In meritis (qua vere talia compertum est) fiducia aliqua collocari potest. Not unless it be compertum, they be talìa (a case with them, impossible:) and not in them neither, but only aliqua fiducia.

3. And yet there is some: But after, better bethinking himself (it may be, of the Judge sitting in his Throne) he spoileth all in the third, which is, that Propter incertitudinem propria justitia against His compertum est) & periculum inanis gloria, tutissimum est, fiduciam totam in sola Dei misericordia reponere: Mark that same totam in solam; which is clean contrary to his aliqua a little before. Mark his Misericordia: and that he declineth the judicial proceeding. And mark his Reason; because His righteousness is such, as he is not sure of it, nor dare not put any trust in it, nor plead it coram Rege iusto iudicium faciente. Which is enough (I think) to shew, when they have forgot themselves a little out of the fervour of their oppositions, how light and small account they make of it themselves, for which they spoil Christ of one half of His Name.

This is then the interpretation or meaning of this name, that as well in the one sense as in the other, Christ is our Righteousness, and as the Prophet Esay putteth it down, in the plural number, in Domino iustitia nostra, as it were prophesying of these men: All our Righteousness; this, is that, that one as well as the other, are in the Lord. No abatement is to be devised, the Name is not to be mangled or divided, but entirely belonging to Christ, full and whole, and we to call him by it, Jehova iustitia nostra.

We to call him by it; this is our duty first: and that so to call him by it, as by His Name. And a Name is a note of distinction, and we therefore to use it: To apply it to him, and to none other whatsoever, as the nature of a Name is. The Nature of all names: but chiefly of those which be Titles of Honour: For, howsoever we dispencc with others, those we will not in any wise divide with any: Gloriam meam alteri non dabo, saith GOD by the Prophet; which maketh the Prophet to protest, he will not meddle with it, Non nobis Domine: and again more vehemently, Non nobis, sed Nomini tuo da gloriam. And such is this Name. For that very place in the New Testament, where it is said, that GOD hath given him a name which is above all names, that in his Name all knees should bow, and all tongues confess: that place is taken out of the Prophet Esay, where the very fame is said; That all knees shall bow, and all tongues shall acknowledge this Name; and that thus, by saying, in Jehova iustitia mea, and so acknowledging, concludeth, that all the whole Seed of Israel, as they shall be justified, so shall they Glory in the Lord. It is the very question which the Apostle of purpose doth propound, Ubi ergo est gloriatio tua? as if he should admonish us, that this Name is given with express intent, to exclude it from us, and us from it. And therefore, in that very place where he saith, He is made unto us from GOD Righteousness: To this end, saith he, he is so made, Ut qui gloriatur, in Domino gloriatur. All which I put you in mind of, to this end, that you may mark, that this nipping at this Name of CHRIST, is for no other reason, but that we may have some honour our selves, out of our Righteousness.

Beilarmine doth disclose as much, and doth not stick in plain terms to avow it. For, In answer to that argument, which is alleaged by us, that after we are acquit of our sins at this bar, and that only for CHRIST our only Righteousness; we are received into GODS favour, and made His Children by adoption, and then have heaven by way of inheritance: He answereth directly, Their meaning is, not to content themselves with that single title of inheritance; but they mean to lay claim to it, duplici jure. That is, not only titulo hereditatis, but jure mercedis too. And thereof he giveth this reason, Quoniam magis honorificum est, habere aliquid ex merito: For that it is more for their honour, to have it by merit. For, so (saith he) CHRIST had it, and they must not be behind Him, but go even as far as he did. So that, it seemeth he is resolved, that rather than they will lose their honour, CHRIST must part with a piece of his Name, and be named iustitia nostra, only in the latter sense. Which is it, the Prophet after (in the twenty seventh verse of this Chapter) setteth down as a mark of false Prophets; that by having a pleasant Dream of their own righteousness, they make Gods people to forget His Name. As indeed, by this means, this part of CHRIST'S Name hath been forgotten. And so much doth Pighius confess, Disimulare non possumus, hanc vel primam doctrinam Christianam partem obscuratam quam illustratam magis a scholasticis spinosis plerisque questionibus; that this, being the very chief part of a Christian Doctrine, hath rather been obscured, than received any light, by the Schoolmens questions, and handling of it. As much as to say, as they had made the people in a manner to forget this Name.

Now as to call Him by this Name is a duty; so to call him by it, is an use likewise, and a benefit there is, which we receive by it. For calling him by that Name, which God hath prescribed, and which there is to Him most acceptable, we shall not do it for nought, for he will answer us; answer us, and answer for us; for, as an Advocate in our Cause. So calleth Ezekias to Him, Domine vim pator, responde pro me. So King David reposeth himself, Thou shalt answer for me, O LORD my GOD. And this shall He, in all things wherein we shall need him: but above all, in that which concerneth His Name in particular, to be our Righteousness against sin, and that before the righteous Judge. And even so doth Jeremy teach us to pray unto Him, O Lord our misdeeds testify against us, yet deal thou with us according to thy Name; Which is Jehova justitia nostra. In thy Name we are justified: deal thou with us according to thy Name, and justify us. And, this if we do, and if he be our Righteousness, as we may say in respect of His other Name with the Prophet, Look thou upon us, and be mercifull unto us, as thou usest to do to those that love thy Name, so may we in respect of this, go further, and safely say, Esto justitia, & fac justitiam; esto justitia, & intra in judicium cum servo tuo. For with this Advocate, with this Righteousness, with this Name, we may without fear, appear before the King executing Judgement and Justice.

MAT. Chap. XXII, Ver. XXI.

Reddite ergo quæ sunt Cæsaris Cæsari; & quæ sunt DEI DEO.

Give therefore to Cæsar, the things which are Cæsars: and to GOD, those things which are GOD'S.

High XXII. of Matthew in effect, is nothing else but a Chapter of Controversies: with the Saducee, verse 23. With the Pharisee, ver. 22. With the Scribe, verse 34. And (here) with the Herodian. With the Saducees, of the R:urrection: With the Pharisees, of the great Commandment; With the Scribes, of the Messias. All worthy to be weighed, and all at other times to be commended by the Church, to our consideration. This here in this.

The Herodian was a Politique: and his question according, about a secular point; Licene solvere? The case standeth not in this, as it did in the other. The Pharisees and Saducees had no further end, but to set him on ground; and so to expose Him to the contempt of the people. The Herodians had laid a more dangerous plot: they came with this mind, saith Saint Luke, Ut caperent Eum, &c. to catch him; by catching somewhat from Him, whereby they might lay Him fast, and draw Him within danger of the State. It stood our Saviour upon, to be well advised, to escape this snare [thus laid for Him, which accordingly he doth; leaving them in a Muse, and withal under one, leaving us a pattern, that he is no enemy, but a friend to Cæsar, and a friend, in this special point point, of his receipt. That there is no duty, no not in this kind, but Christ faith of it, Reddite: willeth and commandeth it to be Rendred; That so, knowing what CHRIST held, we may make it our Tenet; and both hold it in opinion, and hold us to it in practice for ever.

At or about the birth of CHRIST, this came to be first a question; and so from thence, still remained. So that, it was very meet, Christ should resolve it. At his birth, was the great Tax of the world under Augustus: which being a new imposition, and never heard of before, fell out to breed much matter of question: Two sorts of men taking two several parts about it. There is in Acts 5. mention of Judas of Galilee, that rose in the dayes of Tribute: He it was that held touching the Tax, Quod non. The people of God, Abrahams seed, free born, they to be charged with Taxes, by a stranger, a heathen idolater? No, rather rise and take armes, as Jeroboam did. The peoples ears itched after this Doctrine. The best Religion for the Parfe, is the best for them; and they ready to hold with Jeroboam or Judas, or any that will abrogate payments. And now, though Judas was taken, and had as he deserved; and after his execution, pay it they did, though with an ill will: yet the scruple of this question remained in mens minds still; they continued irresolute, touching the right of it. As indeed, is no one thing, men are ever so long in resolving. Still there were, that muttered in corners; Judas was right: Tribute was but a meer exaction. Men indeed of tumultuous spirits; but in thew zealous preservers of the peoples liberties; whom they called Gaulonites. Luke 2. 14.
Acts 5. 36, 37.

On the other side, Herod, and they that were toward him, being all that they were by Caesar; to make the Tribute sure work, they held, that not only Tribute, but whatsoever else was Cesars; His qua was quacunque; He could not have enough; not till he had qua Dei too. The Roman Monarchy pricked fast toward this point: Divisum imperium cum Jove, was received at this time with great applause. Caesar and Jupiter at halves; half GOD. Not long after, full out a God; Edictum Domini, &c. the Edict of our Lord God Domitian. And this was not a piece of Poetry: but we find in the Jewish story, Petronius in good earnest, sought to bring in Caligula's image into the Temple of God: and called for not only Tribute, but sacrifice for Caesar. Now them, that thus in derogation of the peoples liberty, held this part, they termed Herodians: as it were men for Herods turn. And thus held this question: Thus have we both sides, and both abettours. Of which the People inclined to the Gaulonite, and liked them better: The Statesmen and Officers took part with the Herodian.

Now come they to CHRIST, to receive His resolution, which part he will take to. It is for them, a very Quodlibet. If to retain the peoples favour, to avoid their Out-cry, he speaks but doubtfully of Cesars Tribute, habetur propositum, they have what they would: It is that they came for; to bring him in disgrace with the State, and in danger of his life. Thus would they fain have had it, and therefore when truly they could not (as by this answer it is too plain) untruly, they suggested, We found this man denying to pay Tribute unto Caesar. But if this hit not: if he be for the tribute, yet will it not be from the purpose: they shall set the people (as good as a Waifs nest) upon Him, they shall subject Him to their clamour and obloquie. He that must be their MESSIAS, must proclaim a Jubile; must cry, No Tribute. Otherwise, he is not for them: if he betray them to the servitude of Tolls and Taxes, away with him: Not Him, but Judas of Galilee. So have they him at a dangerous Dilemma: imagining, he must take one part. But that was in their error. For CHRIST took a way between both. For as neither part is simply true: so is there some truth in both. Therefore, He answers not absolutely (as they fondly conceived, he needs must) but with a double Qua, as indeed he should: which was not the answer they looked for. But it was such, as they missed their purpose, and knew not how to reprove it. Luke 23. 14

The summe whereof is; that Christ is neither Gaulonite nor Herodian: Nor no more are Christians, Gaulonites to deny Caesar his Qua; nor Herodians, to grant Him GOD'S; and leave GOD none all. But ready to acknowledge what due is, to either; both of Faith to GOD, and Allegiance to Caesar; and that in every point, and even in this here, of Licetne solvere?

The substance of which answer, is the main ground of all Justice, Summ cuique, Let every one render to each, that which is his. And if to every one, then to these two great ones, Caesar and GOD. To Caesar, Cesars due, to GOD, GOD'S. Upon which two Duties, by vertue of this Text, there goeth forth two decrees, for all the world to be taxed. The first taxing, to be for Caesar, and his affairs. 2. The like tax to be levied for GOD, and for His. For though many other duties be due to both, and to be rendred to them both; yet the matter of principal entendment in this place, is, Ostende mihi numisma, matter of payment.

These be two Capital points. Wherein, 1. of the joynt and mutual consistence, of Caesar and of GOD.

2. That there are, among the things we have, certain of them, things of Cesars. Certain others, things of GODS. The division

3. That these things are to be rendred and given.

4. What these things are that are Cesars in this kind: and what those that are GODS, that we may pay each his own.

Caesar and God joyously.

From this happy conjunction of these two great Lights (Caesar and GOD) here met together, linked with this Copulative, Caesari and DEO; and both in the compass of one Period: as in the Gaulonite of our Age, the Anabaptist (who thinketh, they are in opposition, the whole heaven in sunder, and that GOD hath not his due, unless Caesar lay down his Scepter.) That Caesar and GOD, CHRIST and a Christian Magistrate, are divisata incompatible, that they stand aloof, and will not once come near another; Here is a Synthese, a Consistence; they will stand together well (both they and their duties:) as close as one Verse, one breath, one period can joyn them.

Exod 20:

To see then this pair thus near, thus coupled, thus (as it were) arm in arm together, is a blessed sight. Not here only to be seen, but all the Scriptures through, with like aspect. Here in one Gospel, Caesar and GOD. Before in one Law, GOD providing as for His own worship, so for their honour that are set over us. In one Verse the Prophet joyneth them, Prov. 24. 21. My Sonne, fear GOD and the King; And in one Verse the Apostle sorteth them, (1 Pet. 2. 17.) Fear GOD, honour the King. So GOD and CHRIST, the Law and Gospel, the Prophets and Apostles, fetcht not their breath, come not to a full point, till they have taken in both. Sure it is, CHRIST and Belial agree not, 2 Cor. 6. 11. and as sure; that they are the children of Belial, that have no part in David (that is, the lawfull Magistrate) by Sheba's case, 2 Sam. 20. 1.

This is enough to shew, GOD impeacheth not Caesar; nor GOD's due, Caesar's right. Either permitteth others interest; and both of them may joyntly be performed. That as GOD's Law supporteth the Law of Nations: so doth Christ plead for Caesar: His Religion, for Caesar's Allegiance; His Gospel, for Caesar's duty, even to a penny. It was but a penny was shewed: Not to much as a penny of Caesar's, but Christ's duty will speak, he may have it. This against the Gaulonite, that steps over Qua Caesaris, the first part, and is all for Qua Dei, the latter. And against the Herodian too; by whom Qua Caesaris is stood on alone, and Qua Dei slipped over. Two duties are set forth; There is a like regard to be had of both, that we may make not Christ's answer serve for either alone. I know not how, an evil use hath possessed the world: Commonly, one duty is singled out, and much made of, without heed had of the other. Qua Caesaris, audibly, and with full voice, Qua Dei drowned and scarce heard. And it is not in this alone, but in many others: We cannot raise the price of one virtue, but we must cry down all the rest. Not canonize Preaching, but Prayer must grow out of request. Not possible to bring up Alms and works of mercy, but Offerings and Workes of devotion must be laid down. But by sale of CHRIST'S ointment, no way to provide for the poor. Sensible in others, and this too dull.

GOD is not entire, (thinks the Gaulonite) unless Caesar's image and superscription be blotted out. Caesar hath not enough, till GOD have nothing left, thinks the Herodian.

CHRIST'S course is best; to hold the mean between both: Either to be preserved in his right. Not to look so much on one, as we lose sight of the other. Not to give so good an ear to one, as we care not though the other be never spoken of. GOD hath coupled them here: and since GOD hath coupled them, let not man sever them. To Caesar, and to GOD: Not to Caesar only, but to Caesar and GOD. And again, not to GOD only; but to GOD and Caesar.

Caesar and GOD then, will stand together: Descend yet one degree further, we may put the case harder yet. For, I demand, What Caesar was this, for whose interest CHRIST here pleadeth? To quicken this point somewhat the more: It is certain, it was Tiberius, even he under whom our Saviour was, (and knew He was to be) put to death: A stranger from Israel. A Heathen man, uncircumcised, an idolater, and enemy to the Truth. So were Augustus, and the rest, you will say: But even in moral goodness, he nothing so good as they. The Roman stories are in every mans hand; Men know, he was far from a good Prince, or good man either, as good went even among the Heathen. Yet even this Caesar, and such as he; any Caesar will stand with GOD, and GOD with them, for all that.

Not only to Caesar, but to this, and such as this; Reddite (saith CHRIST) Soluite (saith Paul) Subjeſti eſſote (saith Peter) for all that: So was the old Divinity. Though an evil spirit sent from GOD, vex Saul; yet, saith David, destroy not, it is his Word; nay, Touch not the Lords Anointed. Though Nebuchadnezzar set up a great Idol in the field Dura, and Balthazar his son rather worse, than his father; yet Pray for Nebuchadnezzar, saith Jeremy, and for Balthazar his sonne, and for the peace even of that state. From these examples, might Indas of Galilee have taken his directions. CHRIST did, and his Apostles after Him, willed duties to be paid, and obedience to be yielded; and yielded it themselves to such Caesars as Claudius, Caligula and Nero; Dyscolis Dominis (as Saint Peter term is) if ever there were any. Which sheweth, they were all of one mind, that Caesar (though no better than these) and GOD will stand together well enough. Yea, that though Caesar gave not GOD His due, as these did not certainly; yet are we to give Caesar, that his is notwithstanding.

I know, we all know; if this Cæsar be Constantine, or Theodosius, the case is much the stronger, and the duty toucheth us nearer. But whether he be or no, the Powers that are, are ordained of GOD, though Tiberius or Nero have the powers. It is not the man, it is the ordinance of GOD, we owe and perform our subjection to. We yield it not to Tiberius, but to Cæsar; and Cæsar is Gods ordinance, be Tiberius what he will. This, for the conforment of GOD and Cæsar, and even, of this Cæsar.

Rom. 13. 1.
Rom. 13. 2.

That point established, we come to the second, out of these words que Cæsaris, & que Dei, This may we inferre; That among these things we have, we all and every of us, have certain things of Cæsars, and certain other things of Gods. That all the things we have, are not our own, inasmuch as out of them, there belong some things, to either of these. It is, as if CHRIST would make, all we have not to be fully and wholly ours, but three persons to be interested in them? Cæsar to have a right to some; GOD to other some; and the remainder only, clearly to be ours, (Weigh the words Que Dei.) So that, His meaning is, every man should thus make account with himself, of that he hath, that there is in his hands somewhat that pertaineth to either of these two. That there is in our substance, a portion whereto they have as good right and title, as we to the rest. That what we have is ours, GOD'S part and Cæsars part first deducted; Que Dei & que Cæsaris (it is the case possessive) do carry thus much. Therefore saith the true Israelite, when he tendereth his offering to GOD, Sustuli quod Sanctum est de domo mea; I had a holy portion due to GOD amongst my goods, I have severed it from the rest, I have brought it and laid it upon the Altar, So, they in 1 Sam. 10. to Saul their lawfull Magistrate, presented that was his. They that did so, Tetigit Deus cor eorum, GOD hath touched their hearts, Consequently, in their hearts that did it not, there was the Print of the Devils claws, not the touch of the finger of GOD. This may serve for the second of the duty: so we shall strike the same nail home, in the third of Reddite.

II.
Certain things
Cæsars.
Certain things
Gods.

Deut. 16. 13.

1 Sam. 10. 26;
27.

For, from this right thus imported in the words (Que Cæsaris, que Dei) without any streining, naturally doth follow the Reddite.

III.
These to be rendered.

That theirs it is, and so being theirs, to be paid them. Not of courtesie, but of duty. Not, as a free largesse, but as a due debt. Not Dare, but Reddite, debitum. As if our Saviour should say, you ask me whether it be lawfull to pay, I tell you it is as lawfull to pay it, as it is unlawfull to withhold it: you would know whether you may; I say unto you, you not only may, but must answer it. Not dare, as a matter of gift, but reddere, as a matter of repayment or restitution. Saint Paul maketh this point yet more plain: indeed past all controversie, where he addeth to debitum the other debetur, to the word of rendering, the plain term of debts: expressly calling them debis, both Tribute and Custom.

Then what is paid to the Prince, or to GOD, is not to be termed a donative, gratuity, or benevolence, but of the nature of things restored, which though they be in our keeping, are in very deed other mens. And they that reckon of them as matters merely voluntary, must alter CHRIST'S Reddite needs; and teach Him some other term. But they that will learn of Him, must think and call them debis: must accompt themselves debtors; and that God and Cæsar are as two Creditors, and they indebted to them both: and thereby as truly bound to discharge themselves of these, as of any debt, or bond they owe. That, if they render not these duties, they detain that which is none of theirs; and so doing, are not only hard and illiberall, but unrighteous and unjust men.

Rom. 7. 13.

This from Reddite, but this not all. There is yet a further matter in it, which giveth a great grace to this rendering.

For in that He willeth them, debitum, His meaning is withall it should not be debitum, a forced yielding, but debitum a Rendering, and that willingly; for so the nature of the word doth import, and so the Grecians distinguish anotiois, and anotivai. Our translation readeth Give to Cæsar; no doubt, with reference to this; that it should (though duly) yet so willingly be paid, as it were even a frank gift. In our speech we say, What is more due than debt? And again, What is more free than gift? Yet both these may meet, as in any other case, the Apostle coupleth them εὐνοίας εὐνοίας, Duty, yet Benevolent; Benevolence and yet due; the one respecting the nature, the other the mind: So, both translations not amiss, both readings reconciled.

That is not therefore to pay them, because it will no better be. Cæsar both vim coactivam, Hophni hath a flesh-book, and can say, dote vel auferetur a vobis: and therefore to part with it, as one delivereth a purse, or to bear it as a Porter doth his load; groaning under it: that is not the manner of Rendering it, that is here required. But we must offer it as it were a Gift, voluntarily, willingly, cheerfully, ἐκ καρπῆς, ἐκ λύπης: Not, ἐκ ἀνάγκης ἀνάγκης. Αὐτὸς τοῦ κύριου (saith Saint Peter) Δίδωμι ὅτι κύριον (saith Saint Paul) Even for the Lord, even for conscience sake; though Hophni had no flesh-book, though Cæsar had no Publican to take a stresse.

1 Sam. 2. 13.

Col. 3. 23;
2 Cor. 9. 7. 3.
1 Pet. 2. 13.

To pay it with grudging and an evil eye, to say Vade & redde, to put off, to pay it after others coming and sending; this is no debitum, these the heathen man termeth visca beneficia, when they hang to the fingers like bird-lime, and will not come away.

Rom. 13. 5.
Prov. 3. 28.

Nay, Ecce venio (saith CHRIST;) So to pay it, even with Love and good will: An offering of a free heart (as the Prophet;) a blessing and a grace (as the Apostle termeth it.) The manner is much, and much to be regarded. The willingness of the mind, is ever the far of the sacrifice,

Psal. 39. 8.
2 Cor. 9. 5.

and without it, all is lean and dry. It holdeth here, which the Apostle saith, 1 Corin. 9. If I preach (saith he; if we pay, say we) we have no great cause to rejoyce: Necessity lieth on us so to do. But if we do it with a good will, there is then a reward. A reward at His hands, who as His Apostle telleth us, Hilarem datorem diligit. Not datorem, any that giveth; but hilarem, him that giveth it cheerfully. That gift best pleaseth GOD; and that service, Ut serviamus Regi, is ever best pleasing and most acceptable.

IV.
What are Ca-
sars, what Gods.

Render then, and give, Qua Caesaris Caesari (that is) the right duty to the right owner: As, dutifully and willingly, so to do it wisely. In Suum cuique, there is not only justice, but wisdom, to know and to preserve to every one that is his own; the right qua, to him that of right it belongeth to.

1 Cor. 14. 33.

Not to shuffle them together: Caesar's to GOD, GOD'S to Caesar; it skils not which to which. GOD is not the Author of confusion: but, to know and discern, what to each, pertaineth; and what pertaineth, that to be answered. As before we pleaded, What GOD hath joyned, man should not sever; so now we plead again, What God hath severed, man should not confound: The Prophet calleth it removing the Land-mark, which GOD hath set to distinguish the duties, that neither invade the others right, but keep the partition which He hath set up. Not to stand (as here they do,) streining at a penny, which was Caesar's without question; and do (as after they did) receive the Roman Eagle into their Temple, which was GOD'S right, and but sleightly of them looked to. Agerime punderè tributum, promptissime suscipere Religionem: with much ado to pay any tribute at all, with little ado to receive one religion after another. GOD forbid, Caesar should so readily receive GOD'S duties at their hands, as He might easily have them if He would.

Matth. 19. 6.

Deut. 19. 14.

To the end then, we may know, which to render to which, it remaineth we enquire what is others due, that we may tender it accordingly. And first, what is Caesar's.

If we ask then, what is Caesar's? Our answer must be; what GOD hath set over to him. For, though Qua Dei stand last in place; yet sure it is, the former qua cometh out of the later, and Qua Caesaris is derived out of qua Dei.

1 Chro. 29. 19.

Originally, in the person of all Kings, doth King David acknowledge: that, All things are of Him, and all things are His. But the Sovereign bounty of GOD was such, as He would not keep all, in His own hands: but as He hath vouchsafed to take unto Himself a second meanes in the government of mankind; so hath He set over unto them a part of his own duty, that so one man might be one anothers debtor, and (after a sort) Homo homini Deus. To the conveyance then of divers benefits, He hath called to Himself divers persons, and joyned them with Himself: As our Parents, to the work of our bringing forth; our Teachers, in the work of our training up: and many other, in their kindes, with Him, and under Him, His meanes and Ministers, all for our good.

Rom. 13. 4.

And in the high and heavenly work of the Preservation of all our lives, persons, estates, and goods, in safety, peace and quietnesse, in this His so great and divine benefit, He hath associated Caesar to Himself: and in regard of His care and travel therein, hath entitled him to part of His own right; hath made over this Qua, and made it due to Caesar, and so cometh he to claim it.

Esay 39. 8.

Rom. 13. 7.

1 Tim. 5. 4.

Rom. 13. 6.

In which point we learn, if we pay tribute, what we have for it back in exchange: if we give, what Caesar giveth us for it again, our penny and our penny-worthes: Even this, Ut sit pax & veritas in diebus nostris. This is it, to which we do debitum reddere, as he calleth it (Rom. 13.) This, to which we do mutuam vicem rependere, as he speaketh, 1 Tim. 5. 4. Ut sit tute, and even for this cause pay we tribute. For this, that while we intend our private pleasures and profits in particular, we have them that study how we may safely and quietly do it; that counsel and contrive our peace, while we intend every man in his own affaires: that wake while we sleep securely, and cark and care, while we are merry and never think of it. Persons, by whose providence, an happy peace we long have enjoyed, and many good blessings are come to our Nation. In which respect, we owe them a large qua: larger than I (now) can stand to recount.

1 Pet. 2. 10.

Jude 8.]

1 Tim. 2. 2.

Acts 25. 11.

1. We owe them honour inward, by a reverent conceipt: 2. And outward, by an honourable testimony of the vertues in them, and the good we receive by them. And sure I am, this we owe, Not to speak evil of them that are in authority: and if there were some infirmity, not to blaze, but to conceal and cover it; for that the Apostle maketh a part of honour, 1 Cor. 12. 23. 3. We owe them our Prayers, and daily devout remembrance; For all (saith Saint Paul) but by special prerogative for Princes. 4. We owe them the service of our bodies, which if we refuse to come in person to do, the Angel of the Lord will curse us, as he did Meroz, Judges 5. 24. And in a word to say with the Apostle, Non recuso mori.

All these we owe, and all these are parts of qua Caesaris, but these are without the compasse of this qua here. These be not the things here questioned. It is the Coin with Caesar's Stamp, it is a matter of payment. Let us hold us to that.

I say then, that to be safe from the forraign enemy, from the Wolf abroad, is a very great benefit. The sword holdeth him out; propter hoc we owe to the sword. To be quiet from the inward violent injurious oppressours, the fat and foregrown rammes within our own fold, is a special blessing. The Scepter holds them in; Propter hoc we owe to the Scepter. That by meanes of Caesar's Sword, we have a free Sea, and safe port and harbour, Propter hoc we owe to Caesar our custom. That by meanes of his Sword, we have our seed-time to ear the ground, our harvest, to inne the crop quiet and safe: Propter hoc we owe to Caesar our Tribute or taxe. That by meanes of his Scepter, we have right right in all wrongs, and are not overborn in our innocency, by such as never cease to trouble such as are quiet in the land: Propter hoc we owe to Cesar, the fees due to his Courts of Justice.

There are Quæ Cesaris; and not one of these but hath his ground in the word of GOD. The Custom, Luk. 3. 13. The Taxes, 1 Sam. 17. 25. The Tithes, Ezra 7. 26. The conscriptions, Ezra 10. 8.

These then are Quæ Cesaris. But these are current and ordinary. But extraordinary occasions cannot be answered with ordinary charges: Though, in peace, the set maintenance of Garrisons which is certain, (the ordinance Josaphat) is enough, 2 Chron. 17. 3. y et when warre cometh, voluptas & terrore Curæ, Warre admits no stint, but as occasions call for it, supply must be ready.

There is no safety or assurance of quietnesse, except the Enemy fear. There is no fear without power, except we be able to hold our own; maugre the malice and force of the Enemies. There is no power, but by preparation of Souldiers and furniture for warre. Nor that without Pay, (the Sinews of all affaires:) Nor Pay, without Contribution. And Propter hoc, Idcirco, besides those other ordinary, the inductions for war (which we call subsidies) are part of quæ Cesaris too. And warranted by the Scripture: Amaziah, levying a hundred Talents, at one time against Edom: Menahem levying a thousand Talents, at another, against Assur (a great contribution of fifty sicles a man.) Indeed so it was, but such were the occasions: , and the occasions being such, done: and done lawfully.

2 Chro. 25. 6.
20:

Then, as generally we are bound to render all quæ Cesaris: So, in particular, by this Text and at this instant, this quæ: when the times make it requisite, and it is orderly required.

CHRIST, that willeth us to render it, rendered it Himself: and very timely He did it. For, He went to be taxed, being yet in His mothers womb (as Levi is said to pay tythe in his Fathers loynes.) And he was born under the obedience of payng this duty. This may haply be said not to be his own act: Therefore after at full yeares, then also, though He might have pleaded exemption (as He telleth S. Peter) yet payed He His Stater; though not due, yet to avoid the offence of refusing to pay to Cesar, Conditor Cesaris censum solvit Cesari: Seeing then, Cesar's Creator paid Cesar his due, will any deny to do it; Especially seeing He paid Cesar his due: yea, even then, when Cesar did not render to GOD His due, but to Idols; and what colour then, can any have to deny it?

Luke 2. 5.
Heb. 7. 9, 10.
Math. 27. 27;

So have we His Example, whereof we have here His Precept: doing that before us, which He willeth us to do after Him, and calling to us for no more, than He did Himself. And ensuing His steps. His Apostle presseth the same point: telling us, Custom and Tribute are decali, debts: shewing us, why they be debts, Idcirco, for the good we receive: and willing us therefore to depart with them even propter conscientiam, for very conscience sake.

Rom. 13. 7.

Let me add but this one. The fore-fathers of these here that move this doubt, they forsook Davia's House, only because they thought much of paying the tax which Salomon had set, and they revolted to Jeroboam: what got they by it? By denying Quæ Cesaris, they lost Quæ Dei, the true Religion; and besides enthralled themselves to far greater exactions, which the erecting of a new Estate must needs require. Even these, not obeying this advice, this Reddite of our SAVIOUR, but mutining for the Roman tribute after, under Florus and Albinus Deputies for Cesar: besides that they lost their Temple, Sacrifice, and Service, their Quæ Dei; upon this very point, overthrew their estate clean, which to this day they never recovered. Therefore Reddite Quæ Cesaris, is good counsel, lest Quæ Dei and all go after it.

To conclude then, 1 Cesar and GOD will stand together; yea, Tiberius Cesar and GOD. 2 To these, so standing, there are certain things due, of duty belonging. 3 These things so due are to be rendered: Not given as Gratuities, but rendered as Debts: And again, with good will to be rendered, not delivered by force: And as willingly, so wisely; Cesar to have his, GOD His; in distinction, not confusion, but each his own. 4 Cesar, such duties: all such duties as pertain to him at large; but as this Text occasioneth, the duty of Tribute and Subsidie. This is the summa.

And if Tiberius Cesar, much more that Prince, that every way CHRIST Himself would commend before Tiberius; whom it were an injurie, once to compare with Tiberius: Above any Cesar of them all: who hath exalted Him, whom Tiberius crucified; and professed Him, with hazard of his estate and life, whom they persecuted in all bloody manner.

Who hath preserved us, in the profession of His holy Name and truth many years, quietly without fear, and peaceably without interruption; and, so may fill, many and many times many years more. To this, to such a one, by special due: Reddite more, and more willingly, and more bounteously, than to them. The conclusion is good, the Consequent much more forcible. This, for Quæ Cesaris now. For Quæ Dei, at some other time, when like Text shall offer like occasion.

 AT HAMPTON COURT,

On Sunday the XXVIII of SEPTEMBER,

Anno Dom. MDC VI.

NUMB. Chap. X. Ver. I. II.

Then GOD spake to Moses, saying,

Make thee two Trumpets of silver, of one whole piece shalt thou make them.

And thou shalt have them (or they shall be for thee to Assemble, or call together) the Congregation, and to remove the Camp.

A Grant:

From God.

Of the power of calling Assemblies.
 The Grant of this power, a matter of importance.
 Chap. 25. 1.

Among divers and sundry Commissions granted in the Law, for the benefit and better order of GOD'S people: this (which, I have read) is one. Given (as we see) per Ipsum DEUM by GOD Himself: and that voce vocis Oracula, by expresse warrant from His own mouth, Then GOD spake to Moses, saying,

And it is a grant of the Right and Power of the Trumpets, and with them, of assembling the people of GOD. A Right and Power not to be lightly accounted of, or to be heard of with slight attention: It is a matter of great weight and consequence, the calling of Assemblies.

There is yearly a solemn Feast holden in memory of it, and that by GOD'S own appointment, no lesse than of the Pascheover, or of the Law itself, Even the Feast of the trumpets, much about this time of the year, the later Equinoctial. And GOD appointeth no Feast, but in remembrance of some special benefit. It is therefore one of His special benefits, and high favours vouchsafed them, and to be regarded accordingly.

This

This power hitherto, ever since they came out of Egypt, and that GOD adopted then for His people, unto this very day and place had GOD kept in His own hands, as to Him alone (of right) properly belonging. For unto this very day and place the people of GOD, as they had assembled many times and oft; so it was ever (they be the very last words of the last Chapter, which serve for an introduction to these of ours) ever, all their meetings and removings were, by immediate warrant from GOD Himself. But here now, GOD no longer intending, thus to warrant them still by special direction from His own self, but to set over this power, once for all: Here He doth it. This is the primarie passing it from GOD, and deriving it to Moses, who was the first that ever held it by force of the Law written. For, to this place they came by the sound of Gods; and from this place they dislodged, by the sound of Moses's Trumpet.

In whose hands this Power was before.
Chap. 9. V. 18, 20, 23.

Exod. 19. 13.

And it is a point very considerable, what day and place this was: for it appeareth, they were yet at Sinai, by the 12. ver. yet, at the very Mount of GOD, by the 33. of this Chapter, even then, when this Commission came forth: So that this power is as ancient as the Law. At no other place, nor no other time delivered, than even the Law it self: when the two Tables were given, the two Trumpets were given: and Moses that was made keeper of both the Tables, made likewise keeper of both the Trumpets; Both at Sinai; both at one time: As if there were some near alliance between the Law and Assemblies. And so there is: Assemblies being ever a special meanes to revive the Law (as occasions serve) and to keep it in life. As if the Law it self therefore lacked yet something, and were not perfect and full without them: So, till this grant was passed, they stayed still at Sinai, and so soon as ever this was passed, they presently removed.

The time and place of the Granting.

To entreat then of this Power. The story of the Bible would serve our turn to shew us, who have had the exercise of it in their hands, from time to time, if that were enough. But that is not enough. For, the errors first and last about this point, from hence they seem to grow, that men look not back enough: have not an eye to this, how it was in the beginning, by the very Law of God. Being therefore to search for the Original warrant, by which the Assemblies of Gods people are called, and kept: this place of Numbers is generally agreed to be it: That here, it is first found, and here it is first founded; even in the Law, the best ground for a Power that may be.

March 19. 4.
This the original Grant of it.

In Lege quid scriptum est? quomodo legis? (saith our SAVIOUR) What is written in the Law, how read you there? as if He should say: If it be to be read there, it is well: then must it needs be yielded to: there is no excepting to it then, unlesse you will except to Law, and Law-giver, to GOD and all. Let us then come to this Commission.

Luke 10. 26.

The points of it be three: First, two trumpets of silver, to be made out of one whole piece, both. Secondly, with these trumpets, the Congregation to be called, and the Camp removed. Thirdly, Moses to make these Trumpets, and being made, to use them to these ends. These three: 1 The Instrument: 2 The End, for which: 3 The Party, to whom.

The Parts of the Grant.

Now (to marshall these in their right order:) 1. The end is to be first: Sapiens semper incipit a fine (saith the Philosopher.) A wise man begins ever at the end: for that (indeed) is Causa Causarum (as Logick teacheth us) the cause of all the causes: the cause that sets them all on working. 2: Then next, the Instrument; which applieth this power to this end. 3: And so last, the Agent, who is to guide the Instrument, and to whom both Instrument and Power is committed.

1. The End, for which this Power is conveyed, is double: as the subject is double, whereon it hath his operation. 1 The Camp, and the 2 Congregation. On either of these, a speciall exercise: to remove the Camp: To call together the Congregation: One for Warre, the other for Peace.

That of the Camp, hath no longer use, than while it is warre. GOD forbid that should be long: nay, GOD forbid, it should be at all. The best removing of the Camp, is the removing of it quite and clean away. But if it be not possible, if it lie not in us, to have peace with all men, if warre must be, here is order for it. But, the calling of the Congregation, that is it: that is to continue, and therefore, that, which we deal with.

Rom. 12. 12.

The calling of the Congregation (as in the two next verses) either in whole, or in part: either of all the Tribes, or but of the chief and principal men in them. A power for both these. And (in a word) a power general, for calling Assemblies: Assemblies in war: Assemblies in peace: Assemblies, of the whole: Assemblies of each, or any part.

2. This Power, to be executed by Instruments: the Instruments to be Trumpets: two in number: those to be of silver, and both of one entire piece of silver.

3. This Power, and the executing of it by these Instruments, committed to Moses. First, he to have the making of these Trumpets: Fac tibi then, he to have the right to them being made: Et erunt tibi: then, he to use them to call the Congregation, and if need be, to remove the Camp. None to make any Trumpet but he. None to have any Trumpet but he. None to meddle with the calling of the Congregation, or removing the Camp with them but he, or by his leave and appointment.

Wherein as we find the Grant full, so are we further to search and see, whether this Grant took place or no? Whether as these trumpets were made and given to call the Congregation, so the Congregation from time to time, have been called by these trumpets. And so first of the granting this Power to be executed, and then of the executing this Power so granted.

So have we two Subjects: the Camp, and the Congregation. Two Acts: to Assemble, and to Remove. Two Instruments: the two silver Trumpets. Two Powers: to make them, to owe them being made, for the two acts or ends before specified: First for calling the Assembly, and then for dissolving the Camp. And all these committed to Moses. The summe of all is: the establishing in Moses, the Prerogative and Power of calling and dissolving Assemblies about publike affaires.

Then GOD spake to Moses, &c.

Assembling, a motion extraordinary.

IF we begin with the End: the End is Assembling. Assembling, is reduced to Motion. Not to every motion: but to the very chiefeft of all; as that which draweth together all: and so at once moveth all. For as in the Soul, when the mind summoneth all the powers and faculties together: Or in the body, when all the sinews joyn their forces together, it is ultimum potentia: So in the body politick, when all the Estates are drawn together into one, it is nixus rather than Motus, a main sway, rather than a motion: Or, if a motion, it is Motus magnus, no common and ordinary, but an extraordinary great Motion. Such a motion is Assembling, and such is the nature of it.

Yet necessary. For the Camp.

For the Congregation.

Yet, even this (great and extraordinary as it is) such and so urgent occasions may, and do daily arise, as very requisite it is, such Meetings there should be: very requisite (I say) both in Warre and in Peace, both for the Camp and for the Congregation. The ground whereof seemeth to be; that, power dispersed may do many things: but to do some, it must be united. United in consultation: For, that which one eye cannot discern, many may. United in Action: For, many hands may discharge that by parts, which in whole, were too troublesome for any. But Action is more proper to Warre: that is the Assembly of Fortitude: And Consultation rather for Peace; that is the Assembly of Prudence. And in Peace, chiefly, for making of Lawes: For that every man is more willing to submit himself to that, whereof all do agree. The whole Camp, then, when it is assembled, will be the more surely fortified: And, the whole Congregation, when it is assembled, will be the more surely advised. And, hereby it cometh to passe, that there ever hath, and ever will be, great use of calling Assemblies.

a Especially for this land of Britain. Nec aliud adversus validissimas gentes, pro nobis utilius, quam quod in commune non consulunt. Ratus ad proprium laudum communis periculum conventus. Ita dum singuli pugnant, universi vincuntur. In vita Agric. b Necessary for the Church. De vita Constantini, lib. 3. cap. 6.

Let me add yet one thing further, to bring it home to our selves. There is no people under heaven may better speak for the use of Assemblies, than we: There was nothing that did our Ancestors the Britains more hurt (saith Tacitus [a] of them, nothing that turned them to greater prejudice, than this one, That they met not, they consulted not in common: but every man ran a course by himself of his own head: And, this was the greatest advantage the Roman had of them: they were not so wise, as to know, what good there was in publike Conventions. Therefore, great use of Assemblies: may we say of all others.

Now if they be needfull for the Camp, and for the Congregation, as it is a Civil body: I doubt not, but I may add, also, every way as needfull for the Congregation properly so called (that is) the Church. [b] The Church hath her warres to fight: The Church hath her Lawes to make.

Warres, with heresies; wherein experience teacheth us, it is matter of lesse difficulty to raze a good Fort, than to cast down a strong imagination; and more easie to drive out of the Field a good Army of men, than to chase out of mens mindes a heap of fond opinions, having once taken head. Now, heresies have ever been best put to flight by the Churches Assemblies (that is) Councils, as it were by the Armies of GOD'S Angels (as Ensebius calleth them:) yea, it is well known, some heresies could never be thoroughly mastered or conquered, but so.

Then for the Churches Lawes (which we call Canons and Ryles) made to restrain or redresse abuses, they have alwayes likewise been made at her Assemblies in Councils, and not elsewhere. So that, as requisite are Assemblies for the Congregation, in this sense, as in any other: By this then that hath been said it appeareth, that GOD'S Fac tibi here is no more than needs; but that meet it is, the Trumpets be put to making. And so I passe over the Instrument, which is the second part.

2 Instruments.

Assembling (we said) is reduced to motion. Motion is a work of Power. Power is executed Organice (that is) by Instrument: So, an Instrument we must have, wherewithall to stir up, or to begin this Motion.

Trumpets.

1 Cor. 15. 52

1. That Instrument to be the Trumpet. It is the sound that GOD Himself made choice of, to use at the publishing or proclaiming His Law, and the same sound He will have continued, and used still, for Assemblies, which are (as hath been said) special supporters of His Law. And the very same He will use too, at the last when He will take account of the keeping or breaking of it; which shall be done, in Tuba novissima, by the sound of the last Trumpet. And He holden on, or continueth one and the same Instrument, to shew, it is one and the same Power, that con-continueth still : That, whether an Angel blow it, as at Sinai ; or whether Moses, as ever after ! it is one sound, even G O D'S sound, G O D'S voice, we have in both.

2. They are to be twain, for the two Assemblies, that follow in the next Verses ; Either, of the whole Tribes Coagmentative : or of the chief and choice persons of them only, Representative. And for the two Tables, also. For, even this very month, the first day, they are used to a civil end : the tenth day to a Holy, for the day of expiation : Of which this later belongeth to the first : that former to the second Table.

3. They are to be of silver, (not to seek after speculations) only, for the Metals sake, which hath the shrillest and clearest sound of all others.

4. They are to be of one whole piece both of them, not of two diverse : and that must needs have a meaning : it cannot be for nothing. For, unlesse it were for some meaning, what skilled it else, though they had been made of two several plates ? but only to shew, that both Assemblies are unius juris, both of one and the same right : as the Trumpets are wrought, and beaten out, both of one entire piece of Bullion.

3. But it will be to small purpose, to stand much upon the Instrument : I make way therefore to the third point ; how they shall be bestowed, who shall have the dealing with them : For on them depend, and with them goeth the Power of calling Assemblies.

For, to whom these Trumpets, to whom this Power was granted, to call the Congregation : To whom committed. And then, whether the Congregation were ever after so called, by this Power, and these Trumpets.

1. Where first, it will be soon agreed (I trust) that every body must not be allowed to be a maker of Trumpets : nor when they be made, that they hang, where who that list may blow them : (that is) that every man, hand over-head is not to be in case, to draw multitudes together : There will be (saith Saint Luke) Turbatio non minima, no small ado, if that may be suffered. If Demetrius getting together his fellow craftsmen, they may of their own heads, rush into the common Hall, and there keep a shouting and crying two houres together ; not knowing most of them, why they came thither, and yet thither they came. There is not so much good, in public meetings, but there is thrice as much hurt, in such as this ; No common-wealth, no not Popular Estates could ever endure them. Nay, πάντα καὶ τάδε (say both Scripture and Nature) Let all be done in order : let us have ἐννομον ἐκκλησίαν, Lawfull orderly Assemblies, or else none at all. Away then with this confusion, (to begin with :) away with Demetrius's Assemblies.

To avoid then this confusion, some must have this Power, for, and in the name of the rest. Shall it be one, or more ? (for that is next.) Nay, but one (saith G O D) in saying, Tibi. Where I wish you mark this : That as at the first He took this Power into His own hands, and called them still together Himself : So here, He deriveth this Power immediately from Himself, unto one : without first settling it, in any body collective at all.

It is from our purpose to enter the question, whether the Power were in the whole body originally ? seeing though it were, it is now by the positive ordinance of G O D otherwise disposed. The reason may seem to be Partly ; necessity of expedition : The trumpets may need to be blown sometimes, suddenly, sooner, than divers can well meet, and agree upon it too. Partly, avoiding of distraction : The two Trumpets may be blown, two divers wayes, if they be in two hands : and so shall the Trumpet give an uncertain sound (1 Cor. 14. 8.) and how shall the Congregation know, whether to Assemble ? Nay (a worse matter yet than all that) so may we have Assembly against Assembly : and rather than so, better no Assembly at all.

Therefore as G O D would have them, both made of one piece : so will He have them both made over to one Person : for, tibi implieth one. Who is that one ? It is to Moses G O D speaketh, to Him is this Tibi directed : Him, doth G O D nominate, and of his Person make choice, first, to make these trumpets. No man to make, no man to have the hammering of any trumpet, but he.

And there is no question, but for Aaron, and his sonnes the Priests : they are to call the Levites, to call the people together to their Assemblies : How shall they warn them together, unlesse they may make a trumpet too ? But if there be any question about this ; G O D's proceedings here will put all out of question. For, to whom giveth He this charge ? Not to Aaron is this spoken, but to Moses : Aaron receiveth no charge to make any trumpet : Never a fac tibi, to him ; neither in this, nor in any other place. To Moses is this charge given. And to Moses : Not, Make thee one (one for secular affaires ; that, they would allow him) but Fac tibi duas : Make thee two, make both.

2 Well, the making is not it. One may make, and another may have : Sic vos non vobis : You know the old Verse. When they be made and done, then who shall owe them ? It is expressed that, too ; Et erunt tibi : They shall be for thee. They shall be, not one for thee, and another for Aaron : but Erunt tibi, they shall be both for thee : they shall be both thine. A third if they can find, they may lay claim to that ; but both these are for Moses.

We have then the delivery of them to Moses, to make, which is a kind of seizen, or a Ceremony investing him with the right of them. We have beside, plain words, to lead their possession ; and those words operative, Erunt tibi. That as none to make them : so none to own them being made, but Moses. And what would we have more to shew us, Cujus sunt iura, whose the trumpets be ; or whose is the right of calling Assemblies ? It is Moses certainly, and he by vertue of these, stands seized of it.

That power to continue after Moses.

To go yet further: But was not all this to Moses, for his time only; and as it begun in him, so to take end with him? Was it not one of these same Privilegia Personalia, quæ non transuntur in exemplum; A privilege peculiar to him, and so no president to be made of it? No, for if you look but a little forward (to the VIII. Verse following) there you shall see, that this Power which GOD here conveyeth: this Law of the silver trumpets, is a Law to last for ever; even throughout all their generations, not that generation only. And there is great reason it should be so, that seeing the Use should never cease, the Power likewise should never determine.

Moses received it as chief Magistrate.

Being then not to determine, but to continue, it must descend to those that hold Moses's place. I demand then, what place did Moses hold? Sure it is, that Aaron was now the High Priest, anointed and fully invested in all the rights of it, ever since the eighth chapter of the last Book. Moses had in him now, no other Right, but that of the chief Magistrate. Therefore as in that Right (and no other) he received and held them: So, he was made Custos utriusque Tabule: So, he is made Custos utriusque Tube. But who can tell us better than he himself, in what right he held them? He doth it in the third Verse of Deut. XXXIII. (read it which way you will:) Erat in Iishrune Rex, or, in relictissimo Rex, or, in relictitudine Rex, or, in relecto Regis, dum congregaret Principes populi, & Tribus Israel: All come to this; that, though in strict propriety of speech, Moses were no King, yet in this, he was in relictitudine Rex, or in relecto Regis, (that is) in this, had (as we say) Jus Regale, that he might and did assemble the Tribes and chief men of the Tribes, at his pleasure. Herein he was, Rex in relictitudine. For this was relectio Regis, A power Regal. And so it was holden in Egypt before Moses, even in the Law of Nature: that without Pharaoh, no man might lift up hand or foot in all the Land of Egypt (suppose, to no publike or principal motion:) And so hath it been holden in all Nations, as a special Power belonging to Dominion. Which maketh it seem strange, that those men, which in no cause are so fervent as when they plead, that Church-men should not κνυγεύειν, that is, have Dominion; do yet hold this Power, which hath ever been reputed most proper to Dominion, should belong to none, but to them only. Our SAVIOUR CHRIST'S Vos autem non sic, may (I am sure) be said to them here in a truer sense, than as they commonly use to apply it.

Cant 41. 44.

Matth. 20. 26.

The chiefe Magistrate to succeed in it.

To conclude then this point, if Moses as in the right of chief Magistrate held this power, it was from him to descend to the chief Magistrates after him over the people of GOD, and they to succeed him, as in his place, so in his right, it being by GOD Himself settled in Moses and annexed to this place, lege perpetua, by an estate indefezible, by a perpetual Law, throughout all their generations. Therefore ever after by GOD'S expresse order, from year to year, every year on the first day of the seventh moneth, were they blowen by Moses first, and after by them that held his place, and the Feast of the Trumpets solemnly holden, and put them in mind of the benefit thereby coming to them, so withall to keep alive and fresh still in the knowledge of all, that this power belonged to their place, that so none might ever be ignorant, to whom it did of right appertain, to call Assemblies.

Aarons Assemblies, how called.
Verse 10.

Numb. 31. 6.

And how then shall Aaron's Assemblies be called? with what Trumpet, they? God Himself hath provided for that in the X. Verse following, that with no other than these. (There is in all the Law, no order for calling an Assembly, to what end, or for what cause soever, but this, and only this: No order for making any third trumpet: Under these two therefore are all comprized.) This order there God taketh, that Moses shall permit Aaron's sonnes to have the use of these trumpets. But the use, not the property. They must take them from Moses, as (in the XXXI. chapter of this Book) Phineas doth: But Erunt tibi (Gods own words, Erunt tibi) must still be remembred: His they be, for all that: Moses the owner still, the right remains in him: their sounding of them deprive not him of his interest, alter not the property: Erunt tibi, must still be true, that right must still be preserved. It may be, if we communicate with flesh and blood, we may think it more convenient (as some do) that GOD had delivered Moses and Aaron either of them one. But when we see Gods will by GOD'S Word what it is, that Moses is to have them both: we will let that passe as a Revelation of flesh and blood, and think that, which God thinketh, to be most convenient.

לְקַרְא
הָעֵדָה

The two duties.

Now then, if the trumpet belong to Moses; and that to this end, that with them he may call the Congregation, these two things do follow: First, that if he call; the Congregation must not refuse to come: Secondly, that unlesse he call they must not assemble of their own heads, but keep their places. Briefly thus: the Congregation must come when it is called: and it must be called yer it come. These are the two duties we owe to the two trumpets, and both these have Gods people ever duly performed.

And yet not so, but that this right had been called in question, yea, even, in Moses's own time; (that we marvel not, if it be so, now;) and both these duties denied him, even by those who were alive and present then, when God gave him the trumpets. But mark by whom, and what became of them.

To come when they be called.

The first duty is, to come when they be called: and this was denied (in the XVI. chapter following, Ver. 12.) by Core, Dathan, and their crew: Moses sounded his trumpet, sent to call them: they answered flatly (and that not once, but once and again,) Non venimus, they would not come, nor once stir for him or his trumpets they. A plain contradiction indeed: neither is there in all that chapter any contradiction veri nominis, true and properly so to be called, but only that. You know what became of them; they went quck to hell for it, and wo be to them, even under under the Gospel (saith Saint Jude) that perish in the same Contradiction, the Contradiction of Core.

The second duty is, to be called yer they come: this likewise denied, even Moses himself; (that they in his place may not think strange of it) in the XX. Chapter of this very Book. Water waxing scant, a company of them grew mutinous, and in a tumultuous manner, without any found of the Trumpet, assembled of themselves. But these are branded too: the water they got, is called the water of Meriba: and what followed you know; None of them that drank of it, came into the land of Promise. God swore, they should not enter into His Rest.

Now, as both these are bad; so of the twain, this later is the worse. The former (that came not, being called) do but sit still, as if they were somewhat thick of hearing: But the later that come, being not called; either, they make themselves a trumpet, without ever a Fac tibi: or else they offer to wring Moses's trumpet out of his hands, and take it into their own. Take heed of this later: it is said there, to be adversus Mosē, even against Moses himself. It is the very next fore runner to it: it pricks fast upon it. For they that meet, against Moses will, when they have once thoroughly learned that lesson, will quickly perhaps grow capable of another, even to meet against Moses himself, as they did, Periclitamur argui seditionis (saith the Town-Clark) We have done more than we can well answer: We may be indicted of treason, for this dayes work, for coming together without a trumpet; and yet it was for Diana, that is. for a matter of Religion.

You see then whose the Right is, and what the duties be to it, and in whose steps they tread, that deny them. Sure, they have been baptised, or made to drink of the same water (the water of Meriba,) that ever shall offer to do the like, to draw together without Moses Call.

And now to our Saviour CHRIST's question: In the Law how is it written? How read you? Our answer is: There it is thus written, and thus we read: that Moses hath the Right of the trumpets: that they to go over with him and his Successours: and that to them belongeth the power of calling the publike Assemblies.

This is the Law of God; and that no judicial Law, peculiar to that People alone, but agreeable to the Law of Nature and Nations: (two Lawes of force thorow the whole world.) For even in the little Empire of the body natural, Principium motus, the beginning of all motion, is in, and from the head. There, all the knots, or (as they call them) all the conjugations of sinewes have their head, by which all the body is moved. And as the Law to Nature, by secret instinct by the light of the Creation annexeth the organ of the chiefest part: even so doth the Law of Nations, by the light of Reason, to the chiefest Person: And both fall just with the Law here written where (but Erant tibi) the same organ or poweris committed to Moses, the principal Person, in that Common-wealth. The Law of Nations in this point (both before the Law written, and since, where the Law written was not known) might easily appear, if time would suffer, both in their general order for conventions so to be called; and in their general opposing to all conventicles called otherwise.

Verily, the Heathen lawes made all such Assemblies unlawfull, which the highest authority did not cause to meet: yea, though they were ισπὸν Ὀσέων ἰσχυρῶν, say Solons Lawes: yea, though sub pretextu Religionis, say the Roman Lawes. Neither did the Christian Emperours think good, to abate any thing of that Right. Nay, they took more streight order: For, besides the exiling of the person, which was the Law before they proscribed the place; where, under pretence of Religion, any such meeting should be. But I let them passe, and stand only on the written Law, the Law of God.

We have Law then for us, That Moses is ever to call the Congregation. But though we have Law, Mos vivas Legem; Custom over-ruled Law. And the custom or practice may go another way; and it is practice that ever best bewrayeth a Power. How then hath the practice gone? It is a necessary question this, and pertinent to the Text it self. For there is a Power granted: and in vain is that Power that never cometh into act. Came then this Power into acts? It is a Power to call the Congregation together: Were the Congregation called together by it? A grant there is, That Erunt tibi; so it should be: did take place? was it so? Erantne illi? Had he it? Did he enjoy it? Let us look into that another while, what became of this Grant, what place it took. And we shall offend not Moses in so doing. It is his advice, and desire both; that we should enquire into the dayes past; that were before us, and ask, even from one end of heaven to the other: to see how matters have been carried. So that, as our SAVIOUR CHRIST sendeth us to the Law, by His In Lege quid scriptum est? so doth Moses direct us to the use and practice, by His Interroga de diebus antiquis. I do ask then, These trumpets here given, this power to call together the Congregation, how hath it been used? Hath the Congregation been called accordingly, in this, and no other manner? by this, and no other power? It hath (as shall appear:) and I will deal with no Assemblies, but only for matters of Religion.

Of Moses, first there is no question: it is yielded that he called them, and dismissed them. And even so did Joshua after him, no lesse than he; and they obeyed him in that Power, no lesse than Moses. And as for that which is objected concerning Moses, that he for a time dealt in matters of the Priests Office, it hath no colour in Joshua, and those that succeeded him.

The Covenant, and the renewing of the Covenant, are matters meerly spiritual; yet in that case did Ioshua (Ioshua, not Eliazar) assemble all the Tribes, Levi and all, to Sichem (Iof. XXIV) called the Assembly at the first verse, dissolved it at the XXVIII. For if Ioshua may call, he may dissolve too: Law, Reason, Sence, teach, That cujus est nolle, ejus est & velle. That calling and discharging, belong both to one power. Nay, Demetrius's assembly, though they had come together disorderly, yet when the Town-Clark (that should have called them together) did discharge them, they added not one fault to another; but went their wayes, every man quietly, Demetrius himself, and all: that they are worse than Demetrius that deny this.

But I pass to the Kings (that estate futeeth us better.) There doth David call together the Priests and other persons Ecclesiastical, and that even with these Trumpets. And for what matters? Secular? Nay, but first, when the Ark was to be removed; And again, when the Officers of the Temple were to be set in order: things meerly pertaining to Religion? In all these cases, did all these Kings call all these Conventions of Priests and Levites, for matters of Religion. I insist only on the fact of Ezekias. He was a King, he gave forth his precept for the Priests, and all their brethren to assemble: Wherefore Ad res Iehova, for the affairs of the service of GOD, yea, GOD himself. There are fourteen chief men of the Priests set down there, by name, that by vertue of that precept of the King, came together themselves, they and their brethren, all, ex precepto Regis, ad res Iehova, by the Kings authority, for matters meerly of the Church. I know not what can be more plain: the Matters, spiritual, the persons assembled, spiritual; and yet called by the Kings Trumpet.

Mardocheus.

Hest. 9. 17.

Thus, till the captivity. In the Captivity there we have Mardochei (when he came in a place of Authority) appointing the dayes of Purim, and calling all the Jews in the Province together to the celebrating of them.

Nehemias.

Nehem. 7. 14.

Nehem. 13. 11.

After the Captivity, Nehemiah kept the Trumpet still: and by it, first called the Priests, to shew their right to their places by their Genealogies, and after reduced them also to their places again, when they were all shrunk away in time of his absence.

The Maccabees.

1 Mac. 14. 44.

These lead the practice till you come to the Maccabees; and there it is but too evident? they profess there expressly to Simcon, made then their Ruler: That it should not be lawfull for any ἐκκλησίαν συνομωσάντων to call any Assembly in the land, ἄνευ αὐτοῦ without him. A plain evidence, that so had ever gone the course of their Government: Else how should it come to pass, that the altering of Religion, is still termed the deed of the King? that his disposition, godly, or otherwise, did alwayes accordingly change the publick face of Religion? which thing the Priests by themselves never did, neither could at any time hinder from being done. Had the Priests without him, been possessed of this power of assembling, how had any Act concerning Religion passed without them? In them it had been to stop it at any time, if they had (of themselves) had this power of assembling to set order in matters of Religion.

Thus from Moses to the Maccabees, we see in whose hands this power was. And what shall I say more? There was in all Gods people no one religious King, but this power he practised: And there was of all Gods Prophets no none, that ever interposed any prohibition against it.

Esay 38. 2.

Would Esay (shall we once imagine) have endured Ezekias, him to call, or the Priest to come together, only by his Precept, ad res Iehova; and not lift up his voice like a Trumpet against it, if it had not been (in his knowledge) the Kings right, to command; and their duty to obey? Never, certainly.

Psal. 73. 15.

What shall we say then? were all these wrong? shall we condemn them all? Take heed. In all that Government, GOD hath no other child; but these: if we condemn these, we condemn the whole generation of his children. Yet to this we are come now, that either we must condemn them all, one after another: the Kings, as usurpers, for taking on them, to use more power, than ever orderly they received; and the Prophets, for soothers of them, in that their unjust claim: Or else confess, they did no more, than they might; and exceeded not therein, the bounds of their calling. And indeed, that we must confess; for that is the truth.

Ephes. 2. 15.

This, then may serve for the custome of GODS own elect people. But they were Jews, and we would be loth to Judaize: and it may be this was one of the clauses of the Law of Commandments, consisting of Ordinances which Christ came to abrogate.

The practice or use of this power among Christians.

I demand therefore, when Christ came, how was it then? will the like appear in the Assembly since Christ? The very like every way; as consonant to that of the Old Testament, as may be. For Christ (Mat. 18.) giveth a promise of his assistance to such meetings; but sets no new order for calling of them, other than had been taken in the old. Therefore the same order to be kept still.

A time there was, you know, after CHRIST, when they were infidels: Kings and Kingdoms both.

both. A time there followed, when Kings received Religion; and no sooner received they it, but they received this power of the Trumpets with it. This to be made manifest: 1. By General councils. 2. By National and Provincial Councils, that have been assembled: 3. Under Emperors. 4. And under Kings, by the space of many hundred years.

1. And for General Councils, this first (to begin with) that if those Assemblies be not rightly called, that by this Power are called, we have lost all our General Councils at one blow. The Church of CHRIST hath to this day, never a General Council, una litura, with one wipe, we dash them out all: we leave them never a one, no not one. For all that ever hath been, have been thus called and kept. Yea those four first, which all Christians have ever had in so great reverence, and high estimation; not one of them a lawfull Council, if this new assertion take place. This is a perillous inconvenience: yet this we must yield to, and more than this, if we seek to disable Assemblies, to holden. For sure it is, all the General councils were thus assembled, all; all seven (for more are not to be reckoned; the eighth was only for a private business.) The rest were only of the West Church alone, and so not General: The East and West together, make a General: The East and West together never met, but in one of those seven for publick affairs: unless it were once after, in that of Ferrara.

In General Councils.

And it is well known, that was in hope of help, on the East Churches part, which they never had; and so the council never kept, but broken, even as soon as it was broken up.

Briefly then to survey these seven. And I will not herein alledge the reports of Stories (they write things they saw not, many times, and so frame matters to their own conceits; and many times are tainted with a partial humour) but only, out of authentical Records in them, and out of the very acts of the councils themselves best able to testify and tell them, by whose authority they came together: and it is happy for the Church of Christ, there are so many of them extant as there are, to guide us to the truth in this point, that so the right may appear.

First then, for the great Nicene council, the first General congregation of all that were called in the Christian world: The whole Council in their Synodical Epistle written to the Church of Alexandria, witness they were assembled (the holy Emperour Constantine gathering them together out of divers Cities and Provinces.) The whole letter is extant upon Record in Socrates 1.9. and Theodoret 1.9. Give me leave here to make a little stand: For here at this council, was the pale first broken, and the right, (if any such were) here, it went first away. At Nice these were then together, three hundred and eighteen Bishops; totius orbis lumina, (as Vilebrinus well termeth them) the Lights of the whole world; the chiefest and choicest men for holiness, vertue and valour, that the Christian Religion ever had before or since: Men that had laid down their lives for the testimony of the truth: Did any of them refuse to come, being called by him, as not called aright? Or coming, was there any of them that did protest against it? or pleaded the Churches interest, to meet of themselves? Not one.

What is it then? want of skill, in so many famous men, that knew not their own rights? Or want of valour, that knowing it for such, would not so much as speak a word for it, but sit still, and say nothing all the while? There were then and there present, Spyridion, Paphnutias, Potamon, and divers besides, (but these I name) that had not long before, for their constancy, had their right eyes bored out, their right ham-strings, and the strings of their right arm-pits cut in sunder. Did these want courage, think we? Were they become so faint-hearted, that they durst not open their mouth, for their own due?

Verily: that Council of Nice, (which is, and ever hath been so much admired by all Christians,) cannot be excused before God or men; if they thus conspired (all) to betray the Churches right, and suffered it, beyond all equity, to be carried away, leaving a dangerous president therein, for all councils ever after, to the worlds end. But no such right there was: if there had been, they neither wanted wit to discern it, nor courage to claim it. But they knew whose the Trumpets were: to whom (Erunt tibi) was spoken; And therefore never offered to lay hold on either of them, and say, this is ours.

And yet, to say the truth, there is no man of reason, but will think it reasonable, if this were the Churches own peculiar, if appropriate unto it (and so known to them to be) there ought to have been plain dealing, now at the very first council of all; that if Constantine would embrace Religion, he must needs resign up one of his Trumpets, and forbear from thence to meddle with their Assemblies. Was there so? No such thing. Why was there not? Belike, because none were there, that had ever been present at any Assembly, holden under persecution, to know the Churches order and manner of meeting then: Yes, there was Hosius Bishop of Cordova, who had held the council of Elvira in Spain, even in time of persecution. Hosius for the West. And for the East, there was Eusebius Bishop of Antioch, had held the like at Ancyra then too: (both the councils yet extant to be seen) and these two, Presidents of them. Yet were these twain, two that came first, and sat for most at the council of Nice; and neither of them pleaded or knew of any such right: but that their power then ceased: and that Constantines Trumpet now took place. Sure, if but this first council be well considered, it is able to move much. And the example of this first, was of great consequence; for all the rest followed it; and as this went, so went they. And this for the first.

3. For the third at Ephesus: let the Acts of the Council (now set out in Greek) be looked on, Four several times they acknowledge, they were thither summoned by the Emperours [a] Oracle; [b] Beck, [c] Charge, and [d] Commandment.

4. For the fourth at Chalcedon, look but upon the very front of the council, it proclaimeth it self, to be there assembled, Facta est Synodus, ex decreto piissimorum, & fidelissimorum Imperatorum, Valentiniani & Martiani. And it is well known, it was first called at Nice; and then recalled from thence, and removed to Chalcedon, all wholly by the disposing of the Emperour.

5. So saith the fifth at Constantinople, juxta pium iussum a CHRISTO amati, & a DEO custoditi Justiniani Imperatoris. They be their own words.

6. And so the sixth at Constantinople, Secundum Imperialem sanctionem congregata est; And pro obedientia quam debnuimus. They be the expresse words of Agatho, Bishop of Rome in the same Council.

7. [e] And even so the seventh at Nice, Qua per pium Imperatorum decretum, congregata est, (mean- ing Constantine and Irene.)

And these be all the General. In all which the force of the truth presenteth it self so clearly, that [f] Bellarmino is even dazled with it: For as one dazled, he sets down divers reasons, why the Emperours were to call them; in that very place, where he taketh upon him to prove, the Emperours were not to call them.

2. But it may be, General councils have a fashion by themselves: Those congregations may be called thus: but National or Provincial (such as ours) how? Even so too, and no otherwise. Constantine began with them first, before he proceeded to the General at Nice, His Tractoria, or Writ, is extant to be seen in Eusebius. Whereby he called the first Provincial council in France. For sure, by no Canon could the Bishop of Syracuse in Sicily, or Resitutus Bishop of London in Britain, be lawfully summoned to the Synode in France, (which they were) but (as it was indeed) by the Emperours Writ only. But this he did at the beginning of his reign; perhaps while he was yet an imperfect Christian. Nay, even first and last, he did the same: as at the beginning he calleth this; so in the end of his Reign, the thirtieth year, the year before his death, called he the Council at Tyre, and from thence removed it to Jernusalem, and from thence called them to appear before himself at Constantinople. The Letters are to be seen by which they were called, Socr. 1. 34. The like after him did [g] Constantius at Sardis, [h] Valentinian at Lampascus, [i] Theodosius at Aquileia, [k] Gratian at Thessalonica.

It is too tedious to go thorow them all: Only for that of Aquileia, thus much. Saint Ambrose, a man of as much spirit, as high a courage, as ever the Church had, and one that stood as much as ever did any for the Churches right: he was there present, and President both. Thus writeth he from the Council to the Emperour in his own name, and in the name of all the rest: juxta Mansuetudinis vestre statuta convenimus: Hither we are assembled, by the appointment of Your Clemency; and there is no one council more plain, than that of Saint Ambrose for this purpose. Yea, I add this, (which is a point to be considered) that even then, when the Emperours were professed Arrians; even then did the Bishops acknowledge their power to call Councils: came to them being called: sued to them, that they might be called. Came to them, as Hosius to that of [l] Aramine; Liberius, to that of [m] Sirmium, and that of Seleucia, sued for them, as [n] Liberius to Constantius: as [o] Leo to Theodosius, for the second Ephesine Council; Innocentius to Arcadius. And sometimes they sped, as Leo; and sometimes not, as Liberius and Innocentius: and yet when they sped not, they held themselves quiet, and never presumed to draw together of their own heads.

But it may be, this was some Imperial power, and that Emperours had in this point more jurisdiction than Kings. Nor that neither: For about five hundred years after Christ, when the Empire fell in pieces, and these Western parts came into the hands of Kings, those Kings had, held, enjoyed and practised the same power. In Italy, Theodoric at [p] Rome; Alaric at [q] Agatha; In France, Clowys (the first Christian King there) Childbert, Theodebert, and Cheribert: At [r] Orleans the first, [s] Auvergne; [t] Orleans the second, [u] Tours. And after that again by Gumbrann, Clowys, Carloman, and Pepin: At [x] Mascan first, [y] second, [z] Chalons: That which is called [a] Francia, and that which is in [b] Vernis. Twenty of them at the least in France.

In Spain by ten several Kings: in two Councils at [c] Bracara, and in [d] ten at Toledo, by the space of three hundred years together. And how? under what terms? Peruse the Councils themselves; their very Acts speak, Ex [f] precepto, [g] Imperio, [h] Iussu, [i] Sanctione, [k] Natu, [l] Decreto, ex [m] Evocatione, [n] Dispositione, [o] Ordinatione Regis; One saith, [p] Potestas promissa est nobis. Another, [q] Pacultas data est nobis: A third, [r] Injunctum est nobis a Rege. See their several titles: nothing can be more pregnant. And now we are gone eight hundred years after Christ.

4. Then arose there a kind of Empire here in the West, under Charles the Great; and did he not then take the Trumpets as his own, and use them six several times, in calling six several Councils, at [f] Franckford, [e] Arles, [u] Tours, [x] Chalons, [y] Mentz, and [z] Rhemes? And what saith he in them? Rhemes I named last: take that; In conventu more priscorum Imperatorum congregato à piissimo Domino nostro Carolo, That he called that Convention by no other right, than as the manner of the ancient Emperours had been to do. Expressing under one, both what it was: and what the usage had ever been before him.

The like after him did Ludovicus Pius, Lotharius, Ludovicus Balbus, Carolus Calvus, Carolus Crassus, and Arnulphus, at the several councils holden at [a] Aken, [b] Mentz, [c] Melden, [d] Wormes, [e] Colein, and [f] Tribur; and so he held it till nine hundred years: For about that year (a year or two under or over) was holden the council of Tribur in Germany, Cum concilio sacrum continuari decrevisset: and [g] Presidente pio Principe Arnulpho, by the Emperour Arnulphus's decree, himself then President of it.

And if it be excepted: there are of the councils which carry in their acts no mention how they were called: For them we are to understand, that after the decrees of the first Nicene Council were by Constantines Edict confirmed, wherein (as likewise in the council at Chalcedon) it was ordered, each Province should yearly hold their Synods twice: but especially, after Justinian had made the decrees of the four first General councils to have the nature and force of Imperial Lawes: (a Law being thus passed from them,) we are to conceive, the Emperours authority was in all afterward, habitually at least: that is, if not (as in the other) by express and formal consent, yet by way of implied allowance, as passed by a former Grant.

Well, thus far the Trumpet giveth a certain sound. Now after this, there is a great silence in the volumes of the Councils, in a manner for the space of two hundred years, untill the year MCLXXX. or thereabout, when the council of Lateran was: and then (indeed) the case was altered. By that time had the Bishop of Rome by his skill and practice, got one of the Trumpets away, and carried it with him to Rome: so leaving Princes but one: But, so long they held it.

Truly, three times so much time as we are allowed, would not serve for this one point of the Councils; but even barely to recite them, and to cite them, they are so many. You remember how Abraham dealt with God for the saving of the five Cities, how he went down from fifty to ten: I might well take a course the other way, and rise from ten to fifty, nay, sixty, nay, seventy, nay eighty, not so few of Councils General, National, Provincial, called by Emperours, by Kings; Emperours of the East, of the West: Kings of Italy, France, Spain, Germany (as before, from Moses to the Maccabees: so here from Constantine to Arnulphus) for so many hundred years together, extant all to be shewed and seen, all clear and evident, all full and forcible for this Power: as it is indeed a cause that laboureth rather of plenty, than penury of proof. And this was the course that of old was well thought of in the Christian world. Thus was the congregation so long called; neither is there yet brought any thing to force us to swerve from the way, wherein so many, and so holy ages have gone before us.

Yes, something: for what say you to the three hundred years before Constantine? How went Assemblies then? Who called them all that while? For divers were holden that while: In Palestine about Easter; At Carthage, about Heretick Baptism; at Rome, about Novatus; at Antioch; about Paulus Samosatenus. How assembled these?

Truly, even as these people here, of the Jewes, did before in Egypt, under the Tyranny of Pharaoh: they were then a Church under persecution, untill Moses was raised up by GOD, a lawfull Magistrate over them. The cases are like for all the world. No Magistrate did assemble them in Egypt. And good reason; they had none to do it. Pharaoh (we may be sure) would not offer to do it; not for any conscience (I trust) or fear, to encroach upon the Churches right; but because he hated both Assembly and Congregation, and fought by all means to extinguish both. But this was no bar; but that when Moses arose, authorized by God, and had the Trumpets here, by GOD delivered him, he might take them, keep them, and use them, to that end, for which GOD gave them; to call the congregation: And none then but he could do it, because to none, but him then, was this power conveyed. They could not say to him now, as before one of them did in Egypt, who made you a commander over us, to call us together? nor plead in bar of the trumpets, and say; Nay, we will meet still of our selves, even as we did before in Egypt: we will still keep our old manner of conventions. No: for GOD had now taken another order; GOD (I say) had now done it: And GOD shall (I trust) be allowed, to translate this power to the principal member of the body, and to dispose of it, as it best pleaseth him.

The very same case fell out again after, in the captivity of Babylon: and again after that in the persecution under Antiochus: and these three, all are the patterns we have in the Old Testament. As before in Egypt; so, then they had meetings: but they were all by stealth; yet meetings they had. For Moses ceasing, and his right with him, the power devolved to the body, (as is usual in such cases.) But then, when Nehemias after the captivity, and Simon Maccabean after the fury of Antiochus were raised them by God, when GOD had set them in Moses place, they might lawfully do, as Moses before had done: and take their silver trumpets into their hands again. So soon as they had a lawfull Governour, the right returned to him straight: And the Congregation, none of them might then plead; Nay, but as he did in Babylon, or as we did under Antiochus: So, and no otherwise, will we assemble still. No, we see the contrary still. No, we see the contrary rather: Even of themselves, they profess to Simeon plainly: now, they have a lawful Governour, no meeting should from hence forth be in the Land, without him, his privity and permission.

And even as these two Nehemias and Simeon: even by the same right, Constantine, by Moses right, all, all by the Commission here penned. By it, did Constantine resume the trumpet, and enjoy, and exercise the Power of calling the congregation: (For even Moses pattern and practice five sundry times at least doth Eusebius alledge in the life of Constantine to justify his proceedings still by Moses example.) True it is therefore, that before Constantine's time, they met together as they durst, and took such order as they could. They must venture it: there was no Moses; they had no trumpet: and if they had, they durst not have blown it. But when Constantine came in place, in Moses's place, it was lawfull for him to do as Moses did: and so he did; and they never said to him, Nay, spare your Trumpet: look how we have done hitherto, we will do so even still: meet no otherwise now, than in former times we have by our own agreement. As before it was said, this had been plain dealing: Thus (if rightly they might) they should have done: Did they so? No, but to him they went, as to Moses, for their meetings; at his hands they sought them; without his leave or liking they would not attempt them, Yea, (I dare say) they blessed God from their hearts, that they had lived to see the day, they might now assemble by the sound of the Trumpet.

To conclude this point then. These two times, or estates of the Church are not to be confounded: There is a plain difference between them, and a divers respect to be had of each. If the succession of Magistrates be interrupted, in such case of necessity, the Church of her self maketh supply, because then Gods order ceaseth. But GOD granting a Constantine to them again, GODS former positive order returneth, and the course is to proceed and go on, as before. When the Magistrate and his authority was at any time wanting to the Church, forced she was to deal with her own affairs, within her self: for then was the Church wholly divided from Princes, and they from it. But when this wall of partition is pulled down, shall Moses have no more to do than Pharaoh, or Constantine than Nero? Congregations were so called under them: must they be so still under these too? No; no more than their manner of meeting in Egypt (for all the world like this of the Primitive Church persecuted) was to be a rule, and to over-rule these Trumpets here (in the Text) either GOD forgiving them, or Moses for taking them at his hands. This rather: If ever the Church fall into such bloody times, they must meet as they may, and come together as they can: They have no Moses, no trumpet to call them. The times of Pharaoh and Nero are then their pattern. But if it be so happy as to find the dayes of peace, Moses and Constantine are patterns for the daies of Peace: they have a Moses then; from that time forward they must give ear to the Trumpet. In a word, none can seek to have the Congregation so called (as before Constantine) but they must secretly, and by implication confess, they are a persecuted Church, as that then was, without a Moses, without a Constantine.

The times then before Constantine, are no bar, no kind of impeachment to Constantine's, no more than the times in Egypt were to Moses's right. And indeed no more they were: for Constantine and his Successours had them, and held them till a thousand years after CHRIST, and then one of them (by what means we all know) was let go by them, or gotten away from them: It was then gotten away and carried to Rome. But that getting, hath hitherto been holden a plain usurping; and usurping (not upon the Congregation, but) upon Princes and their Right; and that they in their own wrong, suffered it to be wrung from them. And why? Because not to Aaron, but to Moses it was said, Et erunt tibi.

1. To draw to an end, it was then gotten away: and with some ado it was recovered not long since: and what? shall we now let it go, and destroy so soon that which so lately we built again? You may please to remember, there was not long since a Clergy in place, that was wholly ad oppositum, and would never have yielded to reform ought: Nothing they would do, and (in eye of Law) without them, nothing could then be done; they had encroached the power of Assembling into their own hands. How then? how shall we do for an Assembly? Then Erunt tibi, was a good Text: it must needs be meant of the Prince, he had his power, and to him of right it belonged. This was then good Divinity (and what Writer is there extant of those times, but it may be turned to, in him?) and was it good divinity then, and is it now no longer so? Was the King but licenced for a while, to hold this power, till another Clergy were in; and must he then be deprived of it again? Was it then usurped from Princes: and are now Princes usurpers of it themselves? And is this all the difference in the matter of assemblies, and calling of them: that there must be only a change; and instead of a forrain, they shall have a domestical: and instead of one, many: and no remed y now, but one of these two they must needs admit of? Is this now become good divinity? Nay, I trust, if Erunt tibi were once true, it is so still: and if Tibi were then Moses, it is so still. That we will be better advised, and not thus go against our selves, and let truth be no longer truth, then it will serve our turnes.

2. And this calleth to mind the like dealing of a sort of men, not long since here amongst us. A while they played Prince and Parliament, with Admonitions, Supplications, Motions and Petitions. And in them, it was; their duty, their right, to frame all things to their new invented plot: And this is so long as any hope blew out of that Coast. But when, that way they saw it would no be, then took they up a new Text, straight; they needed neither Magistrate nor Trumpet, they

The godly among the people might do it of themselves. For confusion to the wise and mighty : the poor and simple must take this work in hand, and so by this means the trumpet prove their right, in the end : and so come by devolution to Demetrius, and the Craft-men. Now, if not for love of the Truth, yet for very shame of these shifting absurdities, let these Phantasies be abandoned: and (that which Gods own mouth hath here spoken) let it be for once, and for ever true: That which once we truly held and maintained for truth, let us do so still ; that we be not like evil servants, judged (Ex ore proprio) out of their own mouths.

Let me not over-weary you ; let this rather suffice. 1. We have done as our Saviour Christ willed us, resorted to the Law, and found what there is written : (The Grand of this power to Moses, to call the Congregation :) 2. We have followed Moses's advice ; enquired of the dayes before us, even from one end of Heaven to another, and found the practice of this Grant in Moses's Successours : and the Congregation so by them called. It remaineth, that as GOD by His Law, hath taken this order, and His people in former ages have kept this order ; that we do so too ; that we may say as GOD saith, Erunt tibi, this power pertaineth to Moses. And that neither with Core we say, Non venimus : Nor with Demetrius, run together of our selves, and think to carry it away with crying, Great is DIA NA. But as we see the Power is of GOD : so, truly, to acknowledge it, and dutifully to yield it : that so they, whose it is, may quietly hold it, and laudably use it, to His glory that gave it, and their good for whom it was given : Which God Almighty grant, &c.

A
SERMON
 Preached before the
KINGS MAJESTIE
WHITEHALL
 On the XXIV. of MARCH,
Anno Dom. MDC VI.

JUDGES Chap. XVII. Ver. VI.

* Vel, quod rectum videba-tur in oculis suis.

In Diebus illis non erat Rex in Israel; sed unusquisque, * quod sibi rectum videbatur, hoc faciebat.

In those dayes there was no King in Israel; But every man did that, which was good in his own eyes.

His Chapter (the XVII. of Judges) is the Chapter, which by the course of the Kalendar, is proper to this very day. Not as now it is: For now, by reason this day, God set us a King in Israel; it hath a select Service, both of Psalmes and of Chapters. But by order of the Church-service, this Chapter is for this: and so it was this time four yeares (I am sure;) we all that then heard it, have good cause to remember it. And though we have got us a new, it will not be amisse, to call our selves back to our old Chapter; being this day come hither, to render our thanks even for this very thing; In these dayes, it is not with us, as In those dayes, it was with them; but that, to the joy and comfort of us all there is a King in Israel.

This, how great a benefit it is; it is not (it may be) the best Way simply to informe our selves, by Non erat Rex. Not simply; but sure to us our nature is, to us I say, there is no way better. It is an old observation (but experience daily reneweth it) that of Carendo magis quam fruendo: What it is to have, no better way, way, to make us truly to value, than by feeling a while, how great a plague it is to be without. Our nature surely is more sensible that way, and never taketh perfect impression of that we enjoy, but by the privation or want; nor understandeth thoroughly (in his diebus est) now there is one, but be those (in illis non erat.) And that is our verse.

Of which, this is the occasion. The Book of the Judges, and the estate of the Judges now growing to an end, the Holy Ghost here beginneth to make a passage, to the estate and Books of the Kings. To which state, this Chapter (and so to the end of the Book) is a preparative, or introduction: to shew, that now the time was at hand.

There should be Kings of his Race, GOD first told [a] Abraham, by way of promise. That those Kings should come of Juda, and the [b] Scepter be his, Jacob foretold, by way of prophesie. The duty of those Kings, against the time came, was set down by [c] Moses, by way of provision long before. This shewed, Kings there should be.

But all things have a time, saith [d] Salomon: and time hath a fulnesse, saith [e] Saint Paul. And till that time, it is not only a folly, but a fault, to presse things out of season: We see, offer was twice made to [f] Gedeon, to take it: by [g] Abimelech, to get it: both came to nothing; the time was not yet come. But still, as the time drew near, every thing did co-operate, every thing made way, and gave occasion, to the purpose of GOD.

And now here, in this Chapter, is set down the very first occasion, on which GOD first misleth Kings: that, for all the Judges, one Micah, a private man of Mount Ephraim, he and his old mother, it took them in the heads, they would have a new Religion by themselves; and that was plain Idolatry: and up with an Idol they went. And because they lacked a Priest, it came into Micah's head, to give Orders; and so he did. Why, could he be suffered? It was, and then cometh in this Verse, This was all for want of a King. And when he had done with this; he goeth to another; and when with that, to a third, disorder upon disorder. And still at the end of every one this cometh in, All these, because there was no King. Which all is nothing else, but a Preparative against the time came, that God should give Kings: that they might with joy receive that his gift, and with thanks celebrate it, from year to year; do as we do now. And this is the Summe.

Three points there are in it. Two are ad oculum apparent, the third by necessary inference. 1. The want of a King. 2. For want of a King, what mischief ensued; Every man did what he thought good: this in general. 3. And thirdly, Every man, but namely Micah; he went up with Idols. For, Micah's fact it was, begat this Verse, and so of necessity falleth into it. Those two both general and particular disorder, are linked to the first, as to the efficient cause, or rather deficient. For, evil it is, & malum non habet efficientem, sed deficientem causam; Evil hath a deficient, but no efficient cause. For the want of some notable good (as here, a King) is the cause of some notorious evil; as greater evil cannot possibly come to a people, than to be in this case, every one to do what he list.

For the handling of these, though in nature the cause be first (and so standeth it ever) to us, the effect first offereth it self; and through it (as through the veil) we enter into the cause; and so, erunt novissimi primi, the last shall be first. 1. First then, of Fecit quisque. 2. And then, of Noverat Rex.

In the former of these we have two parts: 1 The Eye, reclum in oculis. 2 The Hand, Fecit quisque: 3 And then together, that what seemed to the eye, the hand did; and that was mischief enough.

In the latter likewise three. 1 There was no King: (in opposition to other estates: they had Judges and Priests, but there was no King.) 2 No King in Israel, with reference to other Nations. Not in Canaan, nor in Edom; but not in Israel: Even there, it is a want, to want a King. 3 And then out of these, Quid faciat nobis Rex, what a King hath to perform. To repress all insolencies, not only in general; but particularly this of Micah. Where will fall in, that the good or evil estate of Religion doth much depend, on the having, or Not having a King. For it is as if he should say; Had there been a King, this of Micah had never been endured. Now because there was not; Religion first; and after it, all went to wrack.

And last, we shall see, how farre all this doth touch us, in matter of our bounden duty of thanks to GOD, for this day.

I
Of the effect :
fecit quisque,
&c.

IN Those dayes, when, &c. What dayes were those : were they good or evil dayes ? And this whole Verse, is set down by way of liking, or Complaint. At the first one would think, that it were a merry world, if every one might do what he *list*ed ; that there were no harm in the world : they be fair words all. Right, and doing right, and the eye, the fairest member, not an evil word amongst them ?

But yet sure, those dayes were evil. This a complaint. Quasi ingemiscit super hac Scriptura, the Scripture doth (as it were) fetch a deep sigh, so oft as it repeateth this verse, and saith thus in effect : Tanta mala conciliat non habere Regem, so much mischief cometh there in Israel, or any where, where there is no King (saith Theodoret.)

I
in oculis. The eye.*

To let you see then, what a monster lurketh under these smooth terms doing that which is right in our eyes. Two parts there be : 1 the Eye, 2 the Hand. To begin with the eye, and that which is right in the eye. There began all evil, in the first temptation : even from this persuasion, They should need no direction from GOD, or from any ; their own eye should be their director to what was right, they should do but what was right in their own eyes.

Three evils in it.

1 Quod in oculis.

Three evils are in it. It is not safe, to commit the judgement of what is right to the eye : and yet (I know) it is our surest sense, as that which apprehendeth greatest variety of differences. But I know withall, the Opticks (the Masters of that faculty) reckon up twenty several wayes, all which it may be, and is deceived. The Object full of deceit : things are not as they seem. The Medium is not evenly disposed. The Organ it self hath his suffusions. Take but one : that of the Oare in the water. Though the Oare be straight, yet if the eye be judge, it seemeth bowed. And, if that which is right, may seem crooked ; that which is crooked, may seem right : So, the eye, no competent judge. The Rule is the judge of right : If it touch the Rule, and runne even with it, it is right, if it vary from the Rule, let it seem to the eye as it will, it is awry. GOD saw, this was not good : an expresse countermand we have from Him in Deuteronomie ; Thou shalt not do every man, that which is right in his eyes : that is, you shall have a surer Rule of right, than your eyes.

Deut. 12. 18.

2 Quod quisq;

But admit, we will make the eye the judge, yet (I hope) not Quisque, not Every mans eye, that were too much. Many weak and dimme eyes there be, many goggle, and mis-set, many little better than blind : shall all, and every of these be allowed, to define what is right ? Some, it may be (perhaps, the Eagles : but shall the Owle and all ? I trow not. Many mishapen Kindes of right shall we have, if that may be suffered ; yea, otherwhile, divers of them contrary one to the other.

3 Quod in suis.

To go yet further. Say we would allow every eye his priviledge ; (it were great folly to do it, but say we should ? if we should allow it every one, yet not every one In suis. Not his own eye, to direct his own doings, or (as we say) to sit Judge in his own right. No not the Eagle, not the best eye to be allowed to right it self. The Judge himself cometh down from the Bench, when his own sight is in hearing. We all know, Self-love, what a thing it is, how it dazleth the sight ; how every thing appeareth right and good, that appeareth thorow those Spectacles. Therefore, 1 Not right, by the eye : 2 At least, not every mans eye. 3 Nay, not any mans right, but by his own eye.

We shall never see this so well in the general, as if we look in some few examples upon it In individuo. And that can we no where better, than in this Chapter, and those that follow it to the end of the Book. They be nothing else, but a Commentary at large upon these words, Right in every mans eyes, &c.

Exod. 20. 4, 5 :

1. What say you to making and worshipping a graven Image. Lay it to the Rule : the Rule is, Non facies, non adorabis : then it is crooked and nought. Yet, to Micha's eyes, and his mother, a goodly graven image sheweth fair and well.

2. Go to the next chapter. What say you of Burglary, robbing, and rising of houses ; yea, whole Cities, of harmlesse poor people, and cutting all their throats ? Fie upon it, it is crooked. Put it to the men of Dan, they saw nothing but it was right enough.

3. Go to the next to that. How think you by ravishing of women, and that to death ? How ? away with that : Let it not be once named. No man will think that right. Yes, they of Gibeab (in the XIX. Chapter) did, and stood to it to maintain it. You see a good Glosse of this Text. Upon the matter, there are no worse things in the world than these were : if these seemed straight, there is nothing but will seem so to the eye. There is no trusting in oculis.

Fecit quisque:
The hand.

But this is not all. I now passe to the next point ; Here is a Hand too, Fecit quisque. Fecit is but one word ; but there is more in this one, than in all the former. For, here at this, breaketh in the whole Sea of confusion, when the hand followeth the eye, and men proceed to do as lewdly, as they see perversly. And sure, the hand will follow the eye, and men do as it seemeth right, to them, be it never so absurd that so seemeth. To die for it ; Eve, if her eye like it, her hand will have it : and Eve's children, that have no other guide but their eye, if their eye rove rove at it, their hand will reach at it : there is no parting them. Therefore, if a bad eye light upon an hand that hath strength, and there be not Rex, or the stronger barre, it will be done. You may see it in all the former : 1. Micah liked an Idol well ; Micah had a good purse ; he told out two hundred sicles, and so up went the Idol. 2. The men of Dan liked well of spoiling : they were well appointed ; their swords were sharp ; Fecerunt, they did it. 3. They of Gibeah : to their lust, Rape seemed a small matter : they were a multitude, no resisting them ; and so they committed that abominable villany.

By this time we see, what a masse of mischief there is in these few words. For sure, if these all seemed right ; and so seeming were done ; Then are we come to quidlibet a quolibet, any man do any thing ; which is the next door to confusion, nay confusion it self. For so, no mans soul shall be safe, if idolatry go up. Alas, what talk we of the soul ! they have least sense of it, talk to them of that they have feeling. No mans goods, or wife, or life in safety, if this may go on thus. If robbery, rape and murder be right, what is wrong ?

See then now, what a woful face of a Common-wealth is here ? Idols and murder seen and allowed for good : done and practised for good. Again, Micah a private man ; Gibeah, a City : Dan, a whole Tribe : Tribes, Cities, Families, all out of course. Out of course, in Religion ; and not in religion alone, but in moral matters : and so, that the like never heard of, no, not among the heathen.

Last, this was now not in a corner, but all over the Land. Micah was at Mount Ephraim, in the midst ; Gibeah, was at one end, and Dan at the other. So in the midst and both ends, all were wrapped in the same confusion.

But what, shall this be suffered and no remedy sought ? God forbid.

First, the Eye, errour in the eye, is harm enough ; and order must be taken even for that. For, men do not erre in judgement but with hazard of their soules ; very requisite therefore, that men be travelled with, that they may see their own blindness. Then, that the counsel be followed (Apoc. 3.) that eye-salve be bought of him and applied to the eyes, that that might seem to them right, that is indeed. This, if it may be, is best. Revel. 3. 19.

But, if they be strongly conceited of their own sight, and marvel at CHRIST (as they, John 9. 40. What, are we blind trow ?) and will not endure any to come near their eyes : if we cannot cure their eyes, what shall we not hold their hands neither ? Yes, in any wise. So long, as they but see, though they see amisse, they hurt none but themselves ; it is but suo damno, to their own hurt, (and that is enough, nay too much ; it may be as much as their soules be worth.) But that is all, if it stay there, and go no further than the eye. But, when they see amisse and that grossely ; What, shall their hand be suffered to follow their eye ? their hand to be as desperate, in mis-doing, as their eye dark, in mistaking, to the detriment of others, and the scandall of all ? That may not be.

We cannot pull mens eyes out of their heads, nor their opinions neither ; but shall we not pinion their hands, or bind them to the peace ? Yes, whatsoever become of rectum in oculis, order must be taken with fecit, or else farwell all. Foul Rule we are like to have ; even (for all the world) such as was here in Israel.

We see then the maladie ; more than time we sought out a remedy for it. That shall we best do, if we know the cause. The cause is here set down ; and this is it, Non erat Rex. Is this the cause ? We would (perhaps) imagine many causes besides, but God passeth by them all, and layeth it upon none but this, Non erat Rex. And seeing he hath assigned that only for the cause, we will not be wiser than He, but rest our selves in it. The rather for that, Ex ore inimici we have as much. For these miscreants, whom He sets on work, to bring Realmes to confusion, and to root out Religion, that every one may do that, is good in their own eyes : to this point they all drive, Ut ne sit Rex. Away with the King, that is their only way. Heaven and hell both are agreed, that is the cause.

II.
The cause,
1. Non erat Rex.

To make short work then : If the cause be [There is no King.] Let there be one, that is the remedy : A good King will help all. If it be of absolute necessity, that neither Micah, for all his wealth ; nor Dan, for all their forces ; nor Gibeah, for all their multitude, do what they list : And if the mis of the Kings were the cause, that all this were amisse ; no better way to cease it, no better way to keep Religion from Idolatry, mens lives and goods in safety, their vessels in honour, than by Kings. No more effectual barre to fecit quisque quod rectum in oculis, than Rex in Israel.

This will better appear, if we take it in sunder ; There was no King. He doth not charge them with a flat Anarchie ; that there was no Estates, no kind of Government among them : but this only, there was no King. What then ? there were Priests : would not they serve ? It seemed, they would not. Phineas was to look to their eyes : But, somewhere there be some such, as Hosee speaks of, Populus hic quasi qui contrahit Sacerdoti, This people will look to Phineas : Set their Priests and Preachers to school ; and not learn of them, but learn them Divinity. The Judges are to look to their hands : But, there are too somewhere such, as he speaketh of (Chap. VII. Ver. VII.) Devorabunt iudices ; such, as (if it take them in the head) will not stick to set up, and swallow down the Judges ; specially, inter arma. How then, shall we have Military Government ? Nay, that is too violent : and if it lie long, the remedy proves as ill, as the

Osc 4. 42

the disease. To me, a plain evidence: that, though all these were, all these were not perfect. There was one yet missing, that was to do this to better purpose, than yet had been done, and till he were had, they were not where they should be.

This is then GOD'S meanes. We cannot say, His only meanes, in that (we see) there are States that subsist without them. But this we may say, His best meanes. The best (saith the Philosopher) for Order, Peace, Strength, Steadinesse, and proves them all, one by one. But, best (say the Fathers) for that, had there been a better than this, GOD would not last have resolved on this. This is the most perfect, He last brought them to. Hither till they came; He changed their Government: From Joshua a Captain, to the Judges: From the Judges, to Eli and Samuel, Priests: But here when He had settled them, He changed no more. And this act of GOD in this change, is enough to shew, where it is not, there is a defect certainly, and such a State we may repute defective.

Besides, you shall observe: Of those three estates, which swayeth most, that in a manner doth over-top the rest, and like a foregrown member depriveth the other of their proportion of growth. The world hath seen it in two already, and shall daily more and more see it in the third. Requisite therefore, there be One over all, that is none of all, but a common Father to all, that may poize and keep them all in equilibrio; that so all the Estates may be evenly ballanced.

This act then of God in this change, is enough to teach, that this Non erat Rex is a defect certainly; and where there is not one, we may report the estate for deficient. At least, thus farre; that God yet may change it into a more perfect, as He did His own. And again this; that it is not conformed to the Government, simply the most perfect of all, the Government of the whole: when as the inferior bodies are ruled by the Superior, so a multitude, by unitie; that is, all by one. Thus farre on these words, There was no King, howsoever other States there were.

Non Rex in Israel.

The next point is. No King in Israel. That this is not noted as a defect in grosse, or at large; but even in Israel, Gods own chosen people: It is a want (not in Edom, or Canaan, but) even in Israel too, the want of a King. Truly Israel, being Gods own peculiar, might seem to claim a Prerogative above other Nations, in this, that they had the knowledge of His Lawes, whereby their eyes were lightened, and their hands taught; and so the most likely to spare one: others had not like light: yet this, non obstante their light and their law, and that they which were Gods own people, is no super-sedeas, for having a King. Of which there needeth no reason but this; that a King is a good meanes to keep them Gods Israel. Here, for want of a King, Israel began and was fair onward, to be no longer Israel, but even Babel. When Micah (and by good reason any other as well as he) might set up Religions, and give Orders themselves; as it were in open contempt of God and His Law. So that, the people of God can plead no exemption from this; Since it is His own Ordinance, to make them and keep them the people of God.

1 Pet. 2. 13.

Rom. 13. 1.

Was it thus here, in the Old Testament, and is it not so likewise in the New? Yes, even in the New too. For there, Saint Peter willerth them that they be subject to the King, as to the Sovereign, or most excellent. And Saint Paul goeth further, and expresseth it more strongly, in the style of Parliament, and (like a Law-giver) saith subiacetis: Be it enacted, that they submit themselves. And when Saint Paul there, had in his Act said, Omnis anima; that this Act reacheth to every soul, which was enough: yet, because that seemed too general, Saint Peter came after, and goeth to the very point, and saith, Gens sancta must do thus too: that is, there must be a King even in GOD'S Israel. And, what would we more?

Quid faciat, nobis Rex.

I come to the third part. And to what end a King? Quid faciat nobis? What will a King do unto us; It hath been said already: He will look, that every one do not that which is good in his own, and evil in Gods eyes. He will in His general care look to both parts, the eye and the hand. The Eye, that men sinne not blindly, for want of direction. The Hand, that men sinne not with an high hand (that is wilfully) for want of correction. He will, there be good Ophthalmists, with right eye-salve, that the sight may be cured, and things seem as they be, and not be as they seem. At the hardest, Si noluerunt intelligere, but the eye will rove and runne astray, that the hand be bound to the good abearing. That they do it not: or if they do it (as do it they will, yea though there be a King) yet that they may not do it impane; do it, and nothing done to them for it, and scape the punishment due unto it. For, that is the case, when there is no King in Israel. And if, when there is one, that be the case too, where have we been all this while? For if so, Etsiam non est Rex, cum est Rex, Then, where there is a King, there is no King; or one in name, but none in deed: Which as it is not good for the State, so neither is it safe for themselves. To this special regard will be had. Non enim frustra (saith Saint Paul) for they bear not the sword in vain.

Rom. 13. 5.

2. That every one do not thus. Every one, but namely (which is the occasion of this Text) that not Mica. For, Mica's fact brought forth this first sight: that they were now come to this passe, that he, or any such as he was, might set up in his house any Religion he would, and no man controul him for it. To look to every one therefore, but specially Mica: and to care for all, but above all, the matter of Religion. Ne quisque videat quod rectum est, there; that every one be not allowed to see visions there: at least, Ne quisque faciat, that see what they list, they be not suffered to set them up: but if the eye will not be redivided, the hand be restrained. And sure, No where doth the eye more misse, nor the hand swerve, then in this; and therefore fore no where more cause to call for a King, than for this. One would think, this were impertinent, and we were free enough from Mica. We are not. Even to this day, do men still cast images or imaginations (all is one) in the mould of their conceits; and up they set them; at least for their own household to adore. And then, if they can get such a fellow as is hereafter described; a Levite, for ten shiles and a suit; (or because now the world is harder, ten pound:) they are safe; and there they have and hold a Religion by themselves.

3. For, evident it is by this Text: setting up of false worship, is the cause, why Kings were missed; and the redresse of it, the cause, why they were placed. The cause I say, and the first cause of their placing; and therefore this a part, and a principal part of this charge. I will touch them severally: 1. A part, to look to Mica, and his false worship. Why, this is matter Ecclesiastical? It is so, and thereby it appeareth (I think) that Kings have, and are to have a hand in matters of that nature: If Religion were at a fault, because there was no King; and that one there must be, to set it right again. For, is it once to be imagined, that the cause of corrupt Religion is laid on the want of a King; and yet when there is one he should not meddle with it? Rather the consequence is strong on the other side. Mica thus did, because there was then no King: therefore when there is one, he will look better to it, that never a Mica of them all shall do the like. Thus it went, when there was no King: after, when there was one, I find again, the not taking away the High places (which were places meerly religious, where the people did sacrifice) imputed still to the King, as his fault: And yet, shall we have nothing to do with high places, or sacrificing either there or any where else?

Very strange it were, that they who are by God Himself, by an expresse Ego dixi, termed GOD'S, should yet have nothing to do with GOD'S affaires! And no lesse, that being termed by Esay, Nutritii, Foster-Fathers, to whose care the Church is committed, to cherish and bring up, should yet be forbidden to intermeddle with the Church, in that which is of all fostering the principal part! Verily, when the Apostle speaketh of the service that Kings do unto GOD, he doth not only use the term of Anteysds (that is) Publik Officer, but Didaxo too (as it were Gods Deacon, or Servitor) by a name peculiar to the Church-Officers: and this he useth twice, for one other. It can therefore neither be denied, nor doubted of, in that Idolatri came up by defect of Kings, but that Kings were placed, to pull down Idolatri, and to plant and preserve the true Service of God. In a word: There is a King in Israel, that there may not be a Mica in Israel.

But this is not all; the Text carrieth us yet further: That it is not only the charge of the King; but the very first and chief article in his charge. For, this mark I pray you: that this, is the first place in all the Scripture, where; and the first cause, why Kings were missed; this the very first occasion, that drew this complaint from GOD. Being to set down the disorders, that then multiplied: other there were, besides this, yet, this he beginneth with (not with the outrage of Gibea, or the riot of Dan, but) with Micas idolatri: as that, which he chiefly disliked, and therefore would have first and chiefest care to see it reformed. This with GOD is first; and GOD was not well pleased, it was not so with them. It is that wherewith GOD upbraideth them (Hos. 10.) with their not taking the matter of Gibea. Why, were they to blame for it, being to villanous an act? No indeed, it was so good a piece of Justice. This only it is, God findeth fault with, that they could be so forward and fervent, in the case of wrong offered to a woman; and so cold and careless, when His worship received so great a wound, so sensible of their own wrong, to past all feeling in His. For when injury was offered one of their Concubines, they cry; The like was never seen in Israel. They were all up in armes, and upon the point to root out the whole Tribe of Benjamin. But when Idolatri was set up, first here in an House, after in a whole Tribe, even as it were in open defiance of God and his Law, no man drew a sword: Nay, no man so much as spake a word in reproof of it; not cry then, The like was never seen in Israel. Their fathers were more tender in this point. They, upon the erecting of a thing but like an Altar (but no Altar indeed) were all ready to have bidden basta, till they were sufficiently satisfied, that no such thing was meant. Here there is not a shew of an Altar, but (past a shew) very Idols, an whole house full of them, and no man saith to Mica so much as, What doest thou? This is that, He blameth them for, there. This, it, which he taketh in evil part; and saith, He will trust them no longer with his worship: He will have one who shall look better to his worship, than they had done.

One, that seeing, that was the first cause, that made God think of setting up Kings, will therefore think it his first duty, primum & ante omnia to have regard of that point.

To conclude, if the want of Kings, Kings in Israel, be evil (as evil it is, being the cause of so much evil) it is Gods Will, there should be a remedy for it: That remedy is a King; It is Gods Will therefore, there be Kings: S. Peter speaketh it totidem verbis: this is the Will of God that ye be sub-
j. & to your Kings.

Then secondly, being Evil, it is Gods Will, that Israel be not only kept from it at sometime, but at all. Evil is not to be allowed any, though never so short a time; but it agreeth well with His pleasure, that once and ever, it be kept from Israel. Consequently that there never be a time wherein it may be said, Nunc est Rex. That there be not only Kings, but a Succession of Kings: Not only Rex, but sanguis semen, stirps Regis; they be all in Scripture. The Blood, 1 King. 11. 14. The Seed, Jeremy 41. 1. The Race, 2 Chron. 22. 10. It is among other, one of the differences of the state of Kings and Judges: and main inconvenience of the state of Judges (and so is it of all Elective Kingdomes) the Inter-regna, as we term them; times between the old Judges death and the raising of a new: in which times, all ran to riot, and much disorder got head. To the end then, then, there be no such inconvenience, no Inter-regna at all, not so much as a minute of time, wherein it may be said: Non est Rex in Israel, it agreeth with his will, there be not only Kings, but a Race of Kings; that so soon as the breath is gone from one, instantly it may be rested in another; that so, the good may ever be, and the evil never found in Israel.

III. Our duty.

Thus have we gone through the matter of instruction; and now come to the matter of our own thanksgiving rising out of it.

As there cannot be a greater plague to a Land, than to be in that case, so is there not a higher benefit, that God bestoweth on any people, to be fairly blessed from in it, than for the removing from us so many mischiefs, and for the preserving to us the opposite blessings. For freeing us from that misery, and not only conveying to us and ours, this happiness. For this, are we all now met here, in his presence every man to put in his thanks, into one common stock, and so all joynly to offer it up unto God, that (as this day) sent us a King in Israel.

We come not for this alone to thank him: (yet well might we come for this, if there were none but this:) But there is more besides: And even seven times are we bound, this day to praise G O D, for so many benefits, and yet go not out of the Text.

Numb 23. 21.

Hof. 10. 3.

Jer. 26. 7.

Ofs 13. 11. 35

Our first thanks then shall be for this first, the ground of all the rest: For a King. This very thing, that there is one: and that this defect Non erat Rex hath not taken hold on us. The shout of a King, is a joyfull shout, was a true saying out of the mouth of a false Prophet (Balaam) but forced thereto by G O D. That a joyfull shout; and this a wofull cry, Nonne ideo nobis nullus Rex, quia non timemus Dominum? Are we not therefore without any King at all, because we feared not God? And, our fear to God, was not such, but He might justly have brought us to that miserable plight. The more cause have we to thank Him, that we have one. And when I say one; I mean first, have any one. For, be he Nebuchodonozar, yet must we pray for him: Or be it Jeroboam, him though G O D gave in His wrath, yet He took away in His fury, the worse wrath of the twain.
Or, be he who he will, to have one, though but such an one, is a matter of Thanksgiving. For, better any, than an Anarchy: Better, any one a King, than every one a King: and every one is more than a King, if he do what he lists. It calleth to mind the cry of the Beasts in the Fable, when they were in consultation, to submit themselves to the Lion, as to their King. For when it was alleadged; it was like enough he would do they knew not well what, what he listed which they had cause to fear, they all cried Præstat unum timere quam multos; Better one Lion do so, than all the Bears and Wolves and wild beasts of the forrest, as before they did. First then, for this; that there is a King.

Secondly, for this: that, a King, not many. For to have many (is a plague for the peoples sins.)
Not many: Nay, not two, as of late: But now, Rex indeed, one King over all Israel. We know, when there were two Kings, one in Juda, and the other in the ten Tribes: two in one territory; it was a maim and a blemish both: That there was not Rex, one entire King, but two diverse Kings (as it were) over two halves of a Countrey. The like imperfection was it, even the dividing of this one Island, under two Sovereigns. The reducing of both these under one, was promised Israel, as an high favour. The same, to us performed, can be no lesse: even, that (now) there is a King indeed. Rex, one King: One (and no more) absolute, entire King over all the Tribes, over all Isra- el. Let this be the Second.

Ezek. 37. 22.

Hof. 11. 5.

And this our Third: That not only over Israel: but (as the words are) in Israel. These are two different things: To speak (as the Prophet doth) that, this King is not Assur. For this cause Assur shall be your King, is a fearfull threat, G O D useth to His people, for their unkindness. To have a meer Alien, one from beyond the water, as Nebuchodonozar was; out of a people, whose speech they did not understand. One, not in, but extra Israelem, that is, over Israel, but neither in it, nor of it. That this is not our case, as (it is known) some would have had it. Therein then, must we also acknowledge, G O D hath dealt graciously with us, sending us such an one, as, by more than one or two, before this very last of all, is come of the Race Royal, and is by due and undoubted right a King, not only over, but in, and of Israel. Is not this a Third?

8 King. 15. 26.

And sure, this Fourth. That, as he sent us not Assur a stranger: so, neither sent he a Jeroboam.
No stranger, in birth, he; but one addicted to a strange worship; a stranger in Religion. (And, it was even Micha's religion just: As, Micha's Countrey-man he was; for, both, were of Ephraim.)
Who did that which was evil in G O D'S eyes, by doing that, which was good in his own; and so, made Israel to sin. Such an one he hath not sent us; but one that knoweth G O D: doth neither favour Mica, nor Micha's worship; since that was a principal cause, why there is a King in Israel, that Micha's Idols might not be set up.

2 Chro. 10. 14.

2 Chro 13. 17.

2 Sam. 19. 27:

And then fifthly. As not a Jeroboam favouring Mica, not a Rehoboam neither; who was (indeed) well for his religion, but otherwise not able to advise himself, and so ready to be advised to the worse. One, that was full of great words, but so faint-hearted, as not able to resist ought: that under him every one did what he would, for all the King. It was (as in another case the Prophet speaketh) Rex, Rex, & non est Rex. It is otherwise, where Princes are intelligent, learned, and (as David was) both religious and wise, wise as an Angel of God, to discern good and evil. Such a King as Da- vid, a special blessing: not omnibus data, not given to every people; Nay, many times, not to Israel itself. May we not report this for a Fifth?

And for a Sixth, this, That not as David neither, though he were both gentle and wise, which Rehoboam

Rehoboam was not. For, though he were both, yet was he so intangled with warres all his time, and forced still by continual effusion of blood, first to recover, and then to maintain his right, as that he was rather Dux, than Rex in Israel, a General of an Army, rather than a King: No, but (that which addeth still to the heap of our blessings) like Salomon, more happy than his father; as one that procured to his people peace with all the Nations round about. Of him, of such an one as he, saith the Queen of Saba, because the Lord thy God loved Israel, to establish it for ever; therefore hath he set thee King over them, to bring them to, and to preserve them in the happy dayes of peace. That is indeed the right King, to be as Melchisedech King of Salem, that is, King of peace. To be as the great King of Israel, whose title is Princeps pacis.

And last of all, which is the compleat perfection of all; that in and by him GOD hath not only sent us a King, but a Race and succession of Kings. A blessing yet further, a greater hope, by blessing him, and in him us all, with an issue of such hope; and with hope still of more. Who shall (we trust, and pray they may) stretch their line to the worlds end: and ever keep this land, from this plague here mentioned; from dayes, whereof it may be said, Non erat Rex in Israel Even so Lord Jesus, so be it.

And thus seventimes a day, praise we GOD, for this His sevenfold goodnesse. 1 For a King. 2 an absolute entire King, 3 a King both in, and of Israel, 4 a King neither favouring nor favoured by Micah, 5 a King too wise to endure, Fecit quisque quod rectum, 6 a King of peace, 7 a King, who hath already by himself, and shall for ever by his seed, preserve this Land from the evil dayes, wherein Israel was, without a King. There is not any one of these seven, but we owe our special thanks for it: But for them all, all that ever we have or can make.

And these now we offer and present, to the Divine Majesty, all: and together with our thanks, a commixtion of Prayers, that this blessing of a King in Israel, and of this King in Israel, may to us and our posterity, long, and many yeares, yea, many times many be continued, and we or they of ten see the renewing of this blessed day. Which Almighty God grant, &c.

A
SERMON
Preached before the
AT GREENVVICH.

Anno Dom. MDC VII.

JAMES Chap. I. Ver. XXII.

Estote autem factores Verbi, & non auditores tantum, fallentes vosmetipsos.

And be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

IN advice of Caution of Saint James, to those that receive the Word ingrafted. And that so necessary an advice, as without which, all our receiving the Word, or hearing Sermons, is nothing else (saith he) but a very cousinging or deceiving our selves.

Which I therefore thought very meet to attend upon the former verse, so lately handled. That, being a commandment to do it: This, a caution to do it well.

There is not any time, but this caution of Saint James is needfull: But, the special time for it is, when hearing of the Word is grown into such request, as it hath got the start of all the rest of the parts of GOD'S service. So as, but that sure we are, the World will not like any one thing long; it might justly be feared, lest this part eating out the rest should grow indeed the sole and only worship of GOD: which Saint James by no means would have it.

Now, if this be a proper Text for such times, our times, are such: This way our Age is affected; now, is the world of Sermons. For proof whereof (as if all Godliness were in in hearing of Sermons) take this very place, the house of God, which now you see meetly well replenished: Come at any other parts of the Service of GOD (parts, I say, of the Service of GOD no lesse than this) you shall find it in a manner desolate: And; not here only; but, go any whether else, ye shall find even the like.

And this (to speak with Salomon) is an evil disease under the Sun, which hath possessed Ecccl. 5. 12. the world; or (with Saint James) a strong illusion of our ghostly enemy. Who when he cannot draw us wholly from the Service of GOD, maketh us single out some one part of it from all the rest, and to be superstitiously conceited of that part: to make much of it, and to magnifie it highly, nay only; with neglect, and (even as it were) with some disgrace to all besides it.

Of which I may well say with Saint James (the 3. Chapter following at the 10. Verse.) My beloved, these things ought not so to be: nor they cannot so be, without manifest impeachment of the wisdom of GOD, who hath appointed all the rest, as well as this; and would have us make a conscience of all the rest, no lesse than of this. And, we cannot so sever out one (as we do) but this will follow; that, GOD did well and wisely in appointing that one, but not so in the rest. For, as for them, they might well have been spared: we can serve GOD without them, well enough.

Truly, though we cannot turn the stream or torrent of the Time (for that men will not hear of ought against hearing;) yet, sure it is, this is utterly a fault: Hearing is not the only thing: And, so much we must, and do testify unto you, though our witness be not received. John 3. 32.

But, this is not properly Saint James his only: This rather; that, in hearing when we have made it the only thing, we so carry our selves, as, when we have heard, and heard only, though we do nothing else, but hear and only hear, we think we have done enough; we stand discharged before GOD; no further thing can be required at our hands. This (saith Saint James) is (certainly) an illusion, or deceiving our selves. For, if all other parts be neglected for this; and then, in this so great an error be committed; if all we do, be hearing, and even in that, we be deceived too, what shall become of us?

For remedy (then) of this, doth Saint James give us this Item: See that ye be, &c. In effect, as if he should say: You are swift to hear, you receive the Word with all gladnesse, you will not misse a Sermon: all this I allow of and like well, But then, See, (that is) do it not blindly: to hear the word, is not a blind mans work: He had need, not only have his eares, but his eyes too, that shall do it to purpose: Yea, both his eyes; for there is work for both: Videte, quid audiat, to see, what he heares: Videte, quomodo audiat, to see how he heares; In any wife, to see, he be not a hearer only, and nothing but a Hearer, and when he hath done that, think he hath nothing else to do. Math. 4. 24. Luke 8. 18.

Yet such there were in Ezekiel's time (which place in the Old Testament, matcheth this in the New) that called one to another, Come, let us go to the Sermon: Et audiunt (saith he) sed nihil faciunt, and heard, but did nothing. Eze. 33. 31.

Such in Saint James's time, else was his Caution without cause. And such in our time: not, in dogmate, for they maintain it not; but their practice plainly discovers as much: that so they hear, they care neither what, nor how, ipsum audire, very hearing serves their turn.

Well, whosoever so doth, how sure soever he makes himself, how well and wisely soever he thinks he carries the matter, it is sure (saith Saint James) if he see not to it, he is fallen into deceptio visus. And if he hear no otherwise, into deceptio auditus. His receiving of the Word, is nothing but a deceiving himself.

So have we two principall parts of this Text: First, his advice, or caution: See that ye be doers of the Word, and not hearers only. And secondly, that which giveth an edge to this advice, which is a main inconvenience, we fall into, if we follow it not: Lest we deceive our selves. The division.

The former of the advise, thus we put in order: Be not hearers only of the Word, but doers; So is the true placing of the words, though it stands otherwise in the Text. Now, he that saith, Be not hearers only, saith two things: 1 Be ye hearers. 2 But, not hearers only. So that the points grow to be three: 1 An allowing us, to be hearers (first.) 2 But not hearers only, but somewhat else (the second.) 3 Thirdly, what that is: Namely, to be doers of the Word: Vale 31. which is nothing else, but the fruit of that graft, which so lately ye heard of. And this is the Caution.

Then secondly, he giveth it an edge, by saying, if we follow not his Caution, we fall into a flat Paralogisme, we make a false conclusion, or fallacy. Yea, a double edge: First, that we are deceived: The second, that we deceive our selves. II.

Verse 21

Acts 11. 14.

WE begin with this, that St. James, in saying, Be not hearers only, this he saith: Be hearers, but not only hearers; be ye doers too: but, be hearers still.

For, in dealing with Scriptures that consist of Negatives, by comparison (not hearers, but doers; and such like) we had need walk warily: and (as the Schoolmen say) resolve them cum grano salis, lest we cast out one Devil with another, as the manner of some is: the Devil of hearing only, with the Devil of not hearing at all: And so, the last error prove worse than the first. We must take heed we preserve both, both hearing and doing; each in their several right; and so do the former, that the latter we leave not undone.

For, S. James, by opening our hands to do, hath no meaning to shut our ears, to hear: by wishing us to fall to doing, he willeth us not to give over hearing: by bringing in the latter, taketh not away the former. But (as I said) to hold on our hearing still, only with this caution, that we reckon not that for all, or to be the thing solely or wholly to be intended by us. This being seen unto, to hear on, as we did.

For, he that had (two Verses before) willed us to be swift to hear, he that (the very next verse before) meekly to receive the word: he could not possibly forget himself, as to have any such meaning. No certainly, he had given it the honour of the first place, and his purpose is not to take it away again.

GOD from heaven so began his Law with hearing: hear Israel. GOD from heaven too, so began his Gospel; This is my beloved Son, Hear Him. So GOD began, and so must we begin, for else we begin wrong.

And not begin only, but continue still hearing: For so doth the Apostle comment on the place of the Psalm, (To day if you will hear His voice) that, by to day, is meant, Donec cognominatur hodie, while it is called to day. And to morrow, and every day (when it comes) is called to day, so that, to day, is all the days of our life.

The reason of which our continual being hearers, is the continual necessity of hearing [of the word of God]. Which necessity our Saviour Christ Himself setteth down; in express terms, speaking of Maries choice, to sit and hear his words, Unum est necessarium; one of the necessary things it is, and for such we may boldly affirm it.

What that necessity is, He tells us, when He calls it The Key of knowledge. That there is a door shut; this is the Key: no opening, no entrance without it; none at all. For Quomodo possunt (saith Saint Paul). How can they possibly be saved, except they call upon God, or call upon him except they hear? It seems, he knew not how: and if not he, not any man else. For if we must be doers of the Word, (as by and by he tells us we must) we must needs hear first what we do, before we can do it.

At the first, we are in his case, that said, Domine quid me vis facere? we know not what to do: then it is necessary to teach us.

After we know, we forget again. Then it is necessary to call us to remembrance.

When we remember, we grow dull in our duty: Then it is necessary to stir and quicken us. So every way it is necessary, and we cannot be quit of it donec cognominatur hodie, while it is called to day.

As the Philosopher said of the Celestial bodies and lights, that they were dignum & idonum spectaculum, sitantum praterirent (it is Seneca) if they only passed by over our heads, and we received not the benefit of their motion and influence (which we do) yet were they a spectacle worth the beholding. So may we justly say of the Word: though it only disclosed the high and admirable treasure of wisdom and knowledge (it doth,) yet were it worth the while to hear it. For the Queen of the South, came a great long journey, only to be partaker of Salomons wisdom, and for nothing else: & ecce major Salomone hic, and He that was the Author of this Word is greater than Salomon.

How much more then, when besides this excellency, we have further so necessary use of it? It serves us first, as a Key, or special means, whereby we may escape the place of torments. So saith Abraham to him that was in them: if your five brethren would not come where you are, they have Moses and the Prophets, audiant ipsos, let them hear them: that shall quit them, for ever coming there.

And it serves us, not only as a Key to lock that place, but to open to us another, even the Kingdom of heaven. For, not so few as twenty times in the Gospel, is the Preaching of the word, called the Kingdom of Heaven, as a special means to bring us thither. It is that which St. James in the verse before saith: It is able to save our souls. The very words which the Angel used to Cornelius, that when St. Peter came, he should speak words, by which he and his household should be saved. Such and so necessary is the use of hearing the Word both ways.

I conclude with St. Peter : Cui bene facitis attendentes, that ye do well in giving heed to it : as 2 Pet. 19. Saint James here saith, not as ἀκούσαι, bare hearers ; but, as ἀκούσαντες, Attentive hearers : that is so doing, you do well.

But Saint Paul is so far carried, with this desire to have us hear, that he saith, Let the word be preached, and let it be heard, be it sincerely, or be it pretendedly, so it be done, it is to him, and should be to us, matter, (not only of contentment, but also) of rejoicing. As much to say, as let them come, and be hearers, though it be to mock ; let them come and be hearers, though it be but to carp, so they come and be hearers. And it is not amiss. They, that came to mock the Apostles, as men gone with drink, were caught by their hearing. They that came to take our Saviour Christ, were taken themselves by their hearing. Therefore Quocunque modo (saith S. Paul and though it be more than S. James seems to warrant, say we) howsoever, and with what condition soever it be, Be ye hearers of the word, still.

Hearers ; but Hearers of the Word. For, it should be the word, we hear. Words we hear every foot : But I dare not say, the Word alwayes. Much chaffe is sown in stead of right grain : Many a dry stick ingrafted, instead of a Siene with life and sap in it. That was it our Saviour Christ willed us to look to ; Quid, what we heard, as well as Quomodo, How. And indeed, for all our hearing, few have exercised senses, to discern this point. Whatsoever it be, that we hear out of the pulpit, it serves our turn : it is all one : There is much deceit in this point. But a point it is that would not be saluted a far off, or touched lightly, but the very core of it searched, if it were dealt with as it should. But indeed it is not so pertinent to Saint James his purpose in this place ; therefore, I will not enter into it, but go on to the second.

Hearers of the Word : But not hearers only ; For all the matter is in the word [Only] The more Hearers the better : the more Hearers only, the worse. We cannot say so much good of hearing, as we must speak evil of such as content themselves with hearing only.

And, why not only ? Because to hear is somewhat ; but it is not all. A part it is ; but, in no wise the whole. It is one thing ; but not the only one thing ; And therefore we must not stay in it ; there is a plus ultra : when we have done hearing, somewhat else is to be done.

This appeareth plainly, from our Saviour Christ's own mouth, even in that very place, where he so much commendeth hearing, and so setteth out the necessity of it. He commendeth it by saying, Mary hath chosen the better part : The better part is but a part, yet ; therefore not the whole then. He setteth out the necessity of it, by saying, Unum est necessarium : Unum he saith, not Unicum : That, one thing it is, but not the only one thing, that is necessary, nor so to be reputed.

But of all other, S. Paul doth shew the best absurdity of them, that so esteem it. What (saith he) is all the body and ear ? Is all hearing ? As if he should say, that is too gross. Yet thither they must come, even to make all the senses hearing, and all the body an ear, that place all Religion in Lectures and Sermons.

This then being but a part only, being but one thing, we must not stay here : We must not stay ; for the Scripture it self (mark it where you will) never maketh a stay at this of hearing. Ever the sentence is suspended ; ever there followeth a Copulative, an [And] in the neck of it. It never cometh to a pause, or full point, till somewhat else be supplied.

This people hath well said, saith God in Deuteronomy ; What was that, that we may say so too ? This it was, They said to Moses, Bring thou GODS Word to us, and we will hear it, and do it. Not hear it only, (for then it should not have been commended) but hear it, and do it. And so it is well said, and not otherwise. I will tell you, saith our Saviour Christ, who is a wise builder : He that heareth my words (and no period there, but) and doth them. And to the woman that heard His words with a great passion, Blessed are they that hear the Word of God, and keep it. And not to trouble you with many allegations, so concludeth He in the Revelation, Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this Prophecy, and keep the things written therein. Mark it well, Never a pause, a breath, a full point, or stay at hearing ; but still an And ; and do, and keep, and fulfill, and somewhat else. To shew, it is neither the sole, nor the whole thing : There remaineth still for us some further duty behind.

In as much then, as it is never put alone, but still coupled with some other : And it is a rule, (not only for marriage, but for all things else) What GOD hath coupled, let no man put sunder : Let us see, what that other thing is, which GOD hath coupled, and Saint James supplieth to be joyned with it.

What is that ? Is it to be moved a little with that we hear ; Upon our hearing, to say with Agrippa, ἐν ὀλίγῳ, somewhat I was ; I was a little moved with it : No : this is to suffer, not to do. S. James speaketh of doing.

What is it then ? Is it to cry, Magister bene dixisti, Sir you well said, you have made us a good Sermon ? Nay then, what say you to Nunquam quisquam, we never heard a better : Is not that it ? No : for this is to say, and not to do. S. James speaketh of doing.

What say you to conferring of it, by the walls of our house, and making that we have heard, matter of discourse or question ? I can tell what I would say, if our questions and discourses tended to that of S. James (there) to doing : that then we are in a good way. But ye shall observe, for the most part, they be about some pretty speculative point, some subtill objection ; Somewhat (ever) tending tending to curiosity of knowledge, rather than conscience of practice. But if we did so, yet it were but to talk of doing, not to do. Still we are short of St. James; who, whatsoever we do, to satisfy him besides, will not leave us, till we be doers of it. And (sure) any that observe it, shall find, that those I have named, (1 To hear. 2 To be moved with it a little. 3 To commend it. 4. To spend a little talk about it) this is all. And that all these be but by-ways, which the enemy of our souls seeketh to lead us into, so to divert us from the true end, that we may rest in these, as in our final conclusion, and never come to this of St. James, (which is the point indeed) to be doers.

We see then what the other part is: to hear, that we may do, to receive, that we may bring forth; to be grafted, that we may fructify.

And that our care of it may be according, I add, that this is not only a part, but far the better part of the twain. For though Maries part, was better than Marthas: (Maries in hearing, than Marthas in entertaining: yet Maries part in doing, that is, in anointing CHRIST, was better, than her part in hearing CHRIST, and hath a greater praise and promise from Christ's own mouth: This that she hath done shall be spoken of through the world. It is our rule; Vnumquoque propter quid, & illud magis: In that doing is the proper quid, the end of hearing; and we therefore hear, what to do; that we may do, what we hear: In that (as the Schoolmen say) Scire est propter ire; We know the way, to go the way: Doing must be the worthier of the twain: Worthier in it self, and consequently worthier our care and intendment.

To make it plain, do but take them in sunder, and sever them: St. Paul saith plainly, then, Non Auditories, Hearing is nothing; sed factores, but doing is all. And when they be joyned, still there is a mark set upon this part, to shew it for the chief. As here (at the 25 verse following) he saith plainly: Beatus eris in opere suo, he that shall be blessed, shall be blessed in his work: not in any thing else. Our Saviour himself saith the same in express terms: If ye know these things: how then? Blessed shall ye be if ye do them: Mark, Blessed, if ye do them. Otherwise, if ye know them never so much, never the more blessed. Never the more blessed? Nay, Scientis, & non facienti (saith S. James) Knowing, and not doing, is an increase of our sin, and consequently, a greater heap of our condemnation. This there is the principal part to be doers.

If then we would fain be doers, and ask what that is; It is a material point to know. There are two kinds of Doers, 1. momt, and, 2. expres, Which the Latine likewise expresseth, in 1 Agere, and 2 Facere. Agere, as in Musick, where, when we have done singing or playing, nothing remaineth: Facere, as in building, where after we have done, there is a thing permanent. And momt, Factores, they are S. James his doers: But we have both the words in the English tongue: Actors, as in a Play; Factors, as in Merchandise. When the play is done, all the Actors do vanish: But of the Factors doing, there is a gain: a real thing remaining.

To be a Doer of the Word, is (as St. Gregory saith well) Convertere Scripturas in operas, To change the word which is audible, into a work which is visible: The Word which is transient, into a work which is permanent.

Or rather, not to change it, but (as Saint Augustine saith) Accedat ad verbum, unto the Word, that we hear, let there be joyned the Element of the Work, that is, some real Elementall deed: Et sic fit magnum Sacramentum pietatis, and so shall ye have the great Mytery or Sacrament of Godliness. For indeed, Godliness is as a Sacrament: hath not only the Mytery to be known, but the exercise to be done; not the Word to be had, but the work also to be performed: or else, if it be not a Sacrament, it is not true godliness.

Which very Sacrament of Godliness is there said to be the manifesting of the word in the flesh: which it self is lively expressed by us, when we are doers of the Word: as it is well gathered out of our Saviour CHRIST's speech, to them which interrupted Him in His Sermon, and told Him, His mother was without: Who is my Mother, saith He? These here, that hear and do my words, are my mother. They travel of me till I am fashioned in them. Hearing, they receive the immortal seed of the Word; by a firm purpose of doing, they conceive; by a longing desire, they quicken; by an earnest endeavour, they travel with it; and when the work is wrought, Verbum caro factum est, they have incarnate the word. Therefore to the woman's acclamation, Blessed be the womb that bare thee; true (saith Christ) but that blessing can extend but only to one, and to no more: I will tell you, how you may be blessed too; Blessed are they, that so incarnate the written Word by doing it, as the Blessed Virgin gave flesh to the eternal word, by bearing it.

It is that Saint James meaneth in the next Chapter, where he saith, Ostende mihi fidem; Faith commeth by hearing: shew me thy faith and thy hearing (saith he, in the person of an Heathen man.) The Christian saith, Quando creditur quod dicitur; the heathen saith, Quando fit quod dicitur, (for, so they define it in their Books of Offices) Ye shall never shew them your faith, cum creditur quod dicitur; but by that they understand, that is, their own faith, cum fit quod dicitur, by doing the Word. Enough to shew what is meant, by doers of the Word.

And lest we excuse our selves by this, that all Sermons (are not de Theologica practica) entreat not of matters of action, and so not to be done. By this that hath been said of the Sacrament of Godliness; we may easily understand, that there is no Article of faith, or Mytery of Religion at all, but is as a key to open, and as a hand to lead us to some operative vertue. Even those mystical points, being by the Holy Ghost's wisdom, so tempered, that they minister every one of them somewhat to be doing with, somewhat pertaining to the exercise of Godliness, no less than the moral points themselves. So that, if we would dispose our selves, to keep St. James his Caution, tion, I make no question; I make no question, we might well do it through all. At least, when the points are plainly practick, meer Agents, then to make a conscience of doing them, and to call our selves to account of what we heard, what we have done, till as St. James his term is, we find our selves to be doers of the Word: till as Saint James his term was, verbum in scriptum, the ingrafted word have his fruit in a work, suitable to the seed or fen, it came of. And this is the summe of his Caution.

What if we do thus, what then? So doing, saith Saint James, we shall do wisely, and make sure work; in saying that, Not doing so, we shall but braggle our selves. For indeed, those are the only hearers, that are doers too: The other, that are hearers only, as good not hear: for when all is done, doing must do it. That is plainest, that Scripture telleth us, how it shall go at last: They that have done good, shall go into life everlasting; and they that have done evil, go (I need not tell you) you know whither well enough.

This very thing had David said long before of the Word; A good understanding have all they that do thereafter. And so had our Saviour Christ, who saith of him that heareth and doeth, that he approved himself for a wise builder. Which is that and nothing else, which Saint James here implieth, that they make a sound conclusion, or true Syllogism.

As on the other side, supposing they do it not, they be foolish builders, foolish Virgins, saith Christ: they fall into a flat Fallacy, or Paralogism; are deceived by a peece of the Devils sophistry.

And the Apostle could not possibly devise to speak more fitly, or to give his Caution a better edge, For these great hearers, nothing so much nettles them, as to be counted men deceived, unwise, or overseen. Men are deceived for want of knowledge. They reckon themselves the only people, as if knowledge should die with them. And being men of knowledge, consequently free from error, of any men alive. They pity much the blindness of the former times: but as for them, they see light clearly, and are not deceived you may be sure. Therefore this seemeth very strange to them, and in evil part they must needs take it, to be holden for men deceived. The more it moveth them, the liker it is to work with them, and therefore S. James the rather chooseth it.

It is the course the Holy Ghost still keeps with them. For such were in our Saviours time, the Pharisees. None such men of knowledge as they; they were knowledge all over: in their forehead, at their wrists, down to the very fringe and skirts of their garment. Notwithstanding upon this very point of Non facimus: our Saviour Christ let not to call them fools and blind, though they took themselves to be the only Eagles of the world. Even so were those of the Psalm, when they had heard the Law, Sabbath after Sabbath, forty years together, yet saith he, It is a people that do erre in their hearts, for all that: and though they have heard so long, yet they know not my wayes. And even so S. Paul, with some in his time, whom though he seems always learning, continually hearing, still at Sermons; yet for all that he saith, they never came to the knowledge of the Truth: not the true knowledge, which consisteth in the Practice; but a kind of jangling knowledge, and holding of opposition, which he calleth knowledge falsely so called. Therefore for all their Sermons, and all their Lectures, a deceit there is certainly.

For let us examine it. If that which is heard, be therefore heard that it may be done; and it be not done, a deceit there is; somebody there is deceived, light where it will. Now there be but three in all, that be parties to it. 1 GOD. 2 The Preacher. 3 And the Hearer. One of these it must be.

Be not deceived (saith the Apostle) God is not mocked: No deceiving of Him. It is not He sure.

Then it is we: so one would think; so thought Esay: Alas (saith he) I have laboured in vain. I have spent my strength in vain, I find I am deceived. But he receives answer of God, it was not so. That neither he had preached the word, nor the word he had preached, had been, or should be in vain. For himself; that his reward was with God, whether the hearer profited or no. For the Word that, as the rain or snow going forth, it should not return empty without his effects.

Which answer to Esay, was it which put comfort in Saint Paul: that were his preaching the favour of life, or of death; both wayes, it was in him a sweet smelling savour, accepted of GOD. And if neither GOD, nor the Preacher, then must the deceit fall on the Hearer: and he it is that is deceived.

Deceived? Wherein, or how? many wayes. And first, in grossly mistaking the very nature of Sermons. Upon Audiamus & non facimus; Ezekiel saith plainly of those in his dayes, they seemed to reckon of Sermons, no otherwise than of Songs: to give them the hearing, to commend the ayr of them, and so let them go. The Musick of a song and the Rhetorick of a sermon, all is one. A fould error, even in the very nature of the word: for, that is a Law, a Testament, and neither song nor sonnet. A Law, enacted to be done. For, it shall not serve the three children, to say Dan. 2. 8. of Nebuchadnezzars Law. They had heard it, proclaimed from point to point; but do it they must, or into the furnace; for such is the nature of a Law. A Testament: which, though it be Gal. 3. 12. but a man: (as Saint Paul saith) must be executed; and we are compellable to the execution of it: and to GODS much more.

To speak but according to the Metaphor in the Verse before: It is a plain mistaking of the word (which is, as Seed in a soil, or as a Sien in a stock) to take it for a flake in a hedge, there to stick and stand still and bring forth nothing. Or, according to the Metaphor in the Verse next after; where it is termed a Glasse, which we should look in, to do somewhat by: to take away some spot, to mend somewhat amiss, to set somewhat right: And it is plainly to mistake it, to look in it, and look off it, and forget our chief errand to it.

Rom. 2. 19.

As this is a manifest mistaking in the Nature; so is there a like in the End. For whereas they hear, and do; and to do, is the End, why they hear; these Auditores tantum do (even as S. Paul saith) requiescunt in lege, make the Law their pillow, lay them down upon it, and there take their rest: Never seek farther, and so miss their mark quite.

But a worse error yet than this is, that they which when they have heard, have done, seem to think that hearing and doing is all one; inasmuch as all they do, is only that they hear: and so, grossly confound the two parts, that are plainly distinguished. For, hearing is a sense, and sense is in suffering: but the hearing of the Word is to ease a suffering, as if we look not to our selves, we often fall asleep at it. Now, suffering and doing are plainly distinguished: and not only plainly distinguished, but (as we see) flatly opposed (by S. James in the Text) either to other.

Not to hold you over-long: seeing the Apostle borroweth his term of Paralogism from the Schools, to speak in School-terms. In hearing only, and not doing, there is (first) the Elench, A sensu composito ad divisum: which they fall into, that where two things are required, rest in one. And again, Elench, A dicto secundum quid, ad dictum simpliciter: wherewith they are deceived that having a part, think that part shall serve them, instead of the whole. Which two, are a piece of the Devils sophistry: and so you see, both 1 that they are deceived; 2 and how they are deceived that rest upon hearing only.

Deceiving yourselves.

But to be deceived simply, is no so great matter; wise men (many of them) are so, and many of them may be. This is that which edgeth it yet more, which giveth it a double edge: that they deceive themselves.

Gen. 3. 1. 3

1 In which point, first certain it is, there is no man, that willingly would be deceived, can endure to be deceived himself. Saith the first and greatest Deceiver, to Eve, even then, when he came purposely to deceive her, Satan, Is it for a truth, that God hath forbidden you to eat of all the trees? As if he should say: I would not have you deceive me, tell me true, whether it be so or no. Lo, he would not be deceived himself, though he came merely about deceit.

Psalm 55. 14.

2 But then secondly: If deceived we must be, of all men we would not be deceived of such, as we trust: that grieves us exceedingly. Saith David, He hath beguiled me whom I trusted; my Guide, my Counsellour, my familiar friend. He can never say enough of it, for it is a grief above all griefs to be so deceived.

3 Thirdly then, if not by one we trust, least of all, by that party, whom most of all we trust (that is) by our selves; for, we trust none better, I suppose, if we must be deceived; of another, of any other rather than of our selves. For, he that deceiveth himself, is both the deceived and the deceiver too. The deceived may be pitied: the deceiver is ever to be blamed: Therefore, he is utterly without excuse, that is the author of his own deceiving. And there is no man pitieth him, but every one mocketh him, and takes up Proverbs over him, of self do self have, and I wot not what. So that, this of all other, is the worst, 1 To be deceived: 2 To be deceivers: 3 To be their own deceivers.

Luke 13. 26.

Will ye see an example of this, that they do but deceive themselves, that build upon Auditores tantum? You may, Luc. 13. where you shall see some, that upon their bare hearing, bare themselves very confidently, as if they could by no means be deceived in it, and yet they were. CHRIST saith to them, Nescio vos. They think very strange of that speech, and reply, Lord, why, hast not thou preached in our streets, and have not we heard thee duly, and never missed? Well for all that; for all their hearing, he telleth them again, Nescio vos. Though he had seen them at never so many Sermons, He taketh no notice of them by their being, or hearing there, but by their doing afterward. By which it appeareth, that upon this very point, they promised themselves very much; but found at last, they had but deceived themselves.

And (which is worst of all) found it then, when it was too late; when no Writ of error could be brought; when it was past time, and they no way to be relieved.

And yet to go further, If this deceit of themselves were in some light matter, of no great importance, it were so much the more tolerable, but so it is not, here. The last words of the last Verse, are (as you remember) salvare animas vestras: so that, it is a matter of saving our souls; a matter as much as our souls or salvation are worth. Life or Death; Heaven or Hell; no less matter depends upon our being deceived here. Things which most of all, it concerneth us, not to be deceived in.

Jer. 18. 18.

One point more, and so an end. They will be hearers of the word, and not do it: what say you to this, that when they have been hearers only all their life long: they shall in the end, be forced to be doers; and doers of that word, which least of all others they would do: Is not this evidently to be deceived themselves? (In the Prophet Jeremy they say) They will give God the hearing, but not do any of His Words: But, they shall not go away with it so. For, when they have done what they can, they shall find themselves deceived in that too. A word there is, they shall not hear only, but hear and do, whether they will or no. And, what is that word? Even Discedite maledicti in ignem eternum. For they that will do none else; that they shall do: and fulfill that Commandment that break all the rest. And, who is able to fulfill, nay, to abide that word? Who can can endure to go whither that will tend him? Of all words, that is durus sermo, nay durissimus, John 6. 60. the hardest to do of all: better do any, yea, better do all, than do that.

You see then, what an edge the Apistle hath set upon his advice: how great an inconvenience they run themselves into, that be hearers only. Which if it be intollerable (as sure, it is) it will import us, to take heed to the Caution, that so we may avoid this double edge.

First then, that we do as we do, hear still. For, Bene-facitis Attendentes.

Yet not to be carried away with the common errour, that Sermon-hearing is the Consummation est of all Christiunity; and, so we hear our Sermons duly, all is safe, more needs not. But, to resolve with our selves, that only will nor do it: somewhat there must be besides. And when all is done, it must be Factores verbi.

Lastly, that we may (if we please) entertain other opinions touching this point; but they will deceive us, and we in holding them, be deceived. And that, in a matter of great weight and consequence: which then we shall find and feel, when it will be too late to help it.

Then, that hearing, and not doing, we shall in the end be forced both to hear and to do a word, the heaviest to be heard, and the worst to be done, of all others. Therefore, that we see to it in time, and keep the Caution, that we may avoid the penalty. which Almighty GOD open our eyes, that we may see, &c.

A SERMON

Preached at the opening of the PARLIAMENT
Anno Dom. MDCXXI.

PSALM LXXXII. Ver. I.

Deus stat in Synagoga Deorum in medio Deos judicavit.

The Greek word for word, the same.

^a The Psalter.

^b The Geneva.

^c The New Translation.

^a GOD standeth in the Congregation of Princes.

^b or, in the Assembly of the Gods,
^c or, of the Mighty.

In the midst will he judge the Gods.

which was the Psalm for the day, viz. the XVII, day of the month, on which day the Parliament was first begun.

^a GOD standeth in the Congregation of Princes, &c. Of a Congregation of Princes is this Psalm (as you have heard.) And behold here, such a Congregation (and God, I trust, standing in it.) And who then can doubt but this Psalm is for this day.

The words (sure) seem to favour it: The use much more, which hath ever gone with it.

For, standing the Policy of the Common-wealth of Israel (their Writers tell us,) when ought was to be done, for choosing their Rulers, for placing them and giving them their charge: but specially, when there was any meeting of them in their Synagoga magna, their great Congregation, this was ever the Psalm before they sat down. Purposely (as it seemeth) for the Assembly, to set them in tune. For that end set: and to that end ever used.

It was Moses the man of God, that by special direction from God Himself, Deut. 19, began and brought up this order first, of making mens duty into musick; putting it into their moutbes, that so, with the sweetnesse of melody it might be conveyed into their mindes. And David since continued it, and brought it to perfection, as having a special grace and felicity; he for a Song, and his Son Salomon for a Proverb: By which two (the unhappy Adage, and a wanton song) Satan hath ever breathed most of his infection and poison, into the mind of man.

Now

Now in this holy and heavenly use of his harp, He doth by his tunes (as it were) teach all sorts of men, how to tune themselves. And there is no estate whatsoever, but in this Book he sweetly singeth their duty into them. Into his Court, Psalm 101. and so severally, into the rest. And here now, in this Psalm, how to preserve harmony in a Congregation.

Of which Psalm this is the first verse; the Key, and the Compendium of the whole. And thus we divide it. 1 Into two Parties: first. 2 Into two Acts: second. Two Parties: 1 the first word of it is God, God in the singular: 2 the last is Gods, Gods in the plural: These two Parties are distinct, 1 one from another, 2 one above another. The division.

1 GOD that standeth, from the Congregation He standeth in. 2 GOD that judgeth, from and above the Gods whom He will judge.

The Gods we consider two ways, as the word is twice repeated: 1 Deorum, and 2 Deos. 1 In Synagoga Deorum, and 2 In medio Deos. Deorum, in the Congregation 2 Deos out of it. If you will, thus into the 1 Gods of the Congregation, and the 2 Congregation of the Gods.

Now of the first God, in and upon the last Gods, and in and upon the Congregation of them, two Acts there are set down: 1 His standing, 2 His judgement.

1 In the Congregation, He stands: Stat in Synagoga Deorum.

2 Out of it, the Gods He will judge: Deos judicabit (that is) call them to account (every God of them:) and even upon this very point, how they carried themselves before Him standing in the Congregation. 1 This He will do: and do it in medio, not in a corner, but bring them forth into the midst, and do it in the view of all. In medio Deos judicabit.

The Order lieth plain. 1 Of the Gods, first, 2 Then, of the Congregation of them. After, of GOD: His standing, and His judging. Standing, now; Deus stat. Judging, hereafter; Deus judicabit. Judging, 1 even the Gods themselves. And that 2 in medio, that all the world may see it. 1. In the whole course of our lives, we may have good use of these two. 2. But the Psalm seemeth to think, not at any time so good, as at this.

Therefore what ever else slip you, my desire is, these two may stick with you, and be ever in your minds all the Session long. Two they be: and short ones, and plain ones they be (but two words a piece) 1 Deus stat, 2 Deus judicabit: 1 God doth stand, and 2 God will judge, 1 Doth stand for the present: 2 And will judge, will take a time to call each party to a reckoning, for every thing shall here passe.

1 The taking to heart; a true impression there of these two, cannot but do much good, keep all in true measure, time and tune. 2 The ignorantibus or non recordantibus of it (as it is at the fourth Verse) like enough to put all out of course, while men run on and carry things away before them, as if there were no judicare in the Creed, as if they should never come to account again.

It hath been thought, there needeth no more to make a good Parliament, but the due recording of this Verse. It will serve as a wrest to tune, and to set all right. To set GOD, 1 First standing, and then 2 judging, before our eyes.

But specially standing. For, if we shall regard Him well, when He stands, we shall never need to fear Him, when He judges; and then I shall never need to trouble you, with that part. The regard then of Gods standing, to be our only care for the present, and we to commend it to your care and so to conclude.

OF the Gods first, And first on our parts that be men: after, on theirs that be the Gods. On our parts: When we read, and weigh well with our selves, this high term and title of Gods, given to them that are in authority; we learn, To hold them for Gods, to owe and to bear all reverend regard to their Places and Persons. And above all, highly to magnifie such Assemblies as this. So taught by the Prophet here; who once and twice, over and over again, so stileth them, their persons themselves, Deos; their Assembly, Synagoga Deorum. In the Congregation they are so: Out of it they are so. Add to these two, a third yet, more authentical (and it is in this Psalm too.) The Prophet speaketh here; GOD Himself; there, Ego dixi dii estis. This faith our SAVIOUR (Iohn 10.35.) is formidat. The other two may seem to drop out of the Prophet's pen, but this came from GOD'S own mouth: the more (I say) to be regarded. And this is not Old Testament (as say our Anabaptists.) Our blessed Saviour, in the New, comments upon these words (the best Commenter, that ever was) and two things he tells us; 1 One, we thought it to be but a Psalm; He tells us it is a Law, Nonne scriptum est in Lege? And so gives it the force of a Law. 2 The other, that it is a binding Law still: so binding that Non potest solvi (they be His own words) it cannot be loosed. Was not by Him; nor can, nor any other: And so, is in full force still. The two parties

These then, Dii, Deorum, and Deos, are not S. Peter's flattering words of 1 Pet. 3.18: flattery. This is not to give titles, but of GOD'S own giving: Nor to say one syllable more than GOD hath said before us. Said it must be, that God hath said, who never gives titles flatter the R. So they are by Him intituled; and so they are. But

Rom. 13. 2.
1 Pet. 2. 13.

But I take it my duty not to keep from you, that all that are comprised here under Dii, Deorum, and Deos are not all Gods alike. No: in this Godhead, Some are before or after other, Some are greater and lesser than another. There are some higher than other (saith Salomon, Eccl. 5. 12.) And there are others yet higher than they. For the powers that are, are by God, both ordained, and set in order (saith S. Paul) So in order, (saith S. Peter) as there is one καπιχων, and that (he saith) is the King by name, supereminent above the rest, and the rest απομιση have their mission, and commission from him. Many Superiours, but one Sovereign.

Ego dixi was said to all; but not to all at once. To some one, before the rest: even to David, to whom before the writing of this Psalm, 1 Sam. 23. 3. GOD (saith he) even the strength of Israel spake to me and said, Thou shalt bear rule over men. Nor did all the sonnes of the most High (as they are after called at the sixth verse) come into the world, at one time. There was Primogenitus inter fratres: Of whose Primogeniture or birthright, this was a part, Gen. 27. 29. Be thou Lord over thy brethren, and let thy mothers sonnes bow unto thee. And take even the word Synagoga: Never was there Synagoge heard of, but there was an Archisynagogus, a Ruler of it.

Nazianzen speaking of Magistrates as of the Images of God, and sorting them, compareth the highest to a picture drawn clean through down to the feet; The middle sort, to half pictures drawn but to the girdle; The lowest, to those same Idyllia, no further but to the neck and shoulders. But all in some degree, carry the image of God, as all have the honour to be called by His Name. This for our parts. Now for theirs, the Gods.

the Gods:
To be as they be called Gods, indeed.

Acts 14. 11.
Yet have they not always been such.
a Judges 9. 4.
b 1 Reg. 12. 8.
c 2 Chro. 13. 7.

What infer we of this? Nothing, but that, what they are, they would be: having obtained so excellent a name, they would be even what their name bodeeth. They that wear Gods name, hold Gods place, represent His person, what manner persons ought they to be: Choice persons they would be? taken, as the fat from the sacrifice; having more sparks of the Deity, a larger portion of the Spirit of God, more lively expressing the image and similitude whereto man was made, than the rest.

If it were possible, such, as of them might be said in the Lycanian tongue, Gods are come down to us, in the likeness of men. Sure, they that are styled Gods somewhat more than they would be; as like, come as near rem nominis, the truth of that they are named, as humane frailty will permit.

But have they been ever so? I cannot say it. Assemblies there have been, [a] Abimelech had one: and [b] Roboam his, and Jeroboam his. But Abimelech with his needy indigent Sichemites: Roboam, with his youth, that never stood before Salomon: [c] Jeroboam with his crew of malecontents, Sons of Belial, shall I call any of these Synagoga Deorum; I cannot, I see no lineaments, no resemblance at all, nothing for which this name should once be vouchsafed them (of Gods,) Nay, nor scarce of Synagoga neither; as deserving, not only to be left out of the list of Gods, but even to be put extra Synagoga. Scarce a Synagoge, much lesse of Gods.

After, in this Psalm, at the V. Verse, they are told as much, when by their ignorantibus, or non intelligentibus, things were grown out of course. And told it by GOD Himself, and that with a kind of indignation, that He had said they were Gods, and they carried themselves scarce like men: gone from their names quite.

But ours we wish to be such:

But I leave them, and come to this of ours. There is not in the world a more reasonable request than this, what you would be, that to be: what you would be in name, that to be in deed; to make good your name. Every one to be Homo homini Deus, by doing good: specially, that good which is the good of all, that is, the good of this Assembly. This the time and place for it: And, so my wish is, you may, and my trust is you will. And so I leave Deorum, the Gods of the Congregation; and come to Synagoga, the Congregation it self.

The Congregation of the Gods.
Ezek 1. 20.
God alloweth such Congregations, when there is cause:
a Num. 10. 34.

For when we consider these Gods each apart, they are as in Ezekiel, Every spirit on his wheel, and every wheel in his own course, when they are at home in their several Countries. But when as in a Congregation, then are they to come and to be together.

e 1 Chr. 26. 15.

And this (if cause be) GOD alloweth well of. 1. For he hath to that end left with his Livv tenants; a power [d] to blow the trumpets, one or both, to call together a part, or the whole Congregation. By the Trumpets, while they were all within the Trumpets sound: but after, when they were settled all Canaan over, to call them by the pen of the writer (that is, by Writ.) Of which we have a fair example, Judg. 5. 14. 2. For secondly, He hath willed the Angels of his Church, by the Angels example (Judg. 5. 23.) to lay Meroz's curse to them that come not to it. 3. For thirdly, He berecalleth their meeting by the name of Synagogue, which is a Holy place, a Sanctuary, a High place, or Court of refuge, (סניגוגא signifies all these.) 4. For fourthly, He hath to that end spared them a piece of his own Temple, to have their meetings in, [e] On the south side of it, called twice by the name of Asuppim (which was to them, as the Parliament house is to us) that so their feet might stand on holy ground. And they knew themselves, to be, no סניגוגא common or prophane, but סניגוגא a sacred Assembly to him. 5 For fifthly, he hath set them here a Monitorie Psalm of this, to put them in mind, how to bear themselves in it, like Gods (that is) Divinely. 6. For last when they are together, He comes Himself in person and stands among them. All which shew, He favours and likes well such Assemblies as this.

The cause of the meeting of such Congregations.
f 1 Cor. 11. 17.

But then, there must be a Cause: And indeed, else it is Concurfus atomorum, rather than Congregatio Deorum. Thus many, so goodly a Company to meet to no end, GOD forbid. If the Apostle had not, Nature doth teach us, [f] When we come together, to come together for the better, not for the worse. And nothing is worse, than to come together for nothing. Better (as Debra saith well) [g] stay.

[] stay at home, and hear the bleating of their flocks. This be far from any Assembly; specially the Assembly of the Gods, who are herein to imitate GOD, who doth nothing in vain, or without a cause.

g Judg. 5. 16

If you ask me the cause, the two words themselves, Synagoga and Deorum, contain either of them a cause of it. As a Congregation, for the good of the Congregation: As Gods, Catus Deorum Catus Dei (saith S. Hieron.) the Congregation of Gods is GOD'S Congregation: As His, for Him, for His honour, who gave them theirs; to the high pleasure for that GOD, whose Ego dixi Goded them all. And so (as I remember) it is written In capite libri, the first page, or front of your acts, To the high pleasure of Almighty God (there, lo, is God) and for the weale publike (there is the Congregation.) Not this only here, the Congregation of Gods, but the Congregation of men (I know not how many) all the Land over, even the great Congregation.

This cause double.
1 One from Synagoga.
2 The other from Deorum.

Learn a Parable of the Natural Body. If there be no other cause, each Member is left to look to it self; but if there be any danger toward the whole body, presently all the parts are summoned (as it were) to come together, and every Veine sends his blood, and every sinew his strength, and every artery his spirits, and all draw together about the heart for a while, till the safety of the whole be provided for; and then return back, every one to his place again. So it is with the Body Civil, in case of danger, and never but in it.

1 From Synagoga when it is in danger.

But is there any danger then towards? There is, and that to both. To the Synagogue first, and that from a twofold Synagogue, and of two sorts; 1 One continual or ordinary: 2 The other not so, but special and upon occasion. The danger, this Psalm expresseth thus (ver. V.) That things are brought out of course, yea, foundations and all. Thus: there be (I may call them a Synagogue, for they be many) of these same malis moribus, that like ubera terre, shoot out daily, no man knowes whence, or how; never heard of before: These if they be suffered to grow, will bring all out of course. And grow they do; fore even of them, some that have penalties already set (I know not how) such a head they get, as they overgrow their punishments: that if this Congregation grind not on a new and sharper edge, they will bring things yet further out of course.

The danger of two sorts.
1 Ordinary.
2 Or upon special occasion.
1 Ordinary.
By Synagoga malis moribus.
2 Ex malis moribus.

Besides, those that should keep in course, the Laws themselves are in danger too. There be a sort of men (I may well say of the Synagogue of Satan) that give their wayes, and bend their wits to nothing, but even to devise, how to fret through the Laws, as soon as they be made; as it were in scorn of this Congregation, and of all the Gods in it. These go to the foundations (for so, are the Laws; undermine them and in a sort, though after another manner, seek to blow up all. Great pity,) but this Congregation here should look well to the foundation of all. Great pity, that it should be overcome of their evil, but that their evil should be overcome of our good, & this of yours go beyond them.

b Ex legibus depravatis.

It is not to go through all. Generally, Quid populo, quod flet? What the Congregation of men have just cause to complain of, the Congregation of God sit to redress. Whatsoever Synagoga Satana per malos mores doth put out; Synagoga Deorum, per bonas Leges, is to set in joynt again. And that is the proper work of this Assembly, to make Laws. And that is properly the work of GOD: His work, at Sinai, and at Sion both. And in truth, That there is but one Lawgiver, and that is GOD (saith S. James, chap. 4. ver. 12.) As, till Ego dixi, till then, there was but one GOD: but together with His Name, He imparted also His Power, and made you a Congregation of Lawgivers, and of Gods, both at once.

Rom. 12. 31.

1 Sam. 11. 13.
These to be helped with good Laws.

A high Power; the highest in earth, save one: Next to the Scepter in Juda's hand, is the Lawgiver between his feet; even with Jacob. And so with Salomon: After Petrus me Reges regnant, presently follows Et Legum conditores iusta decernunt. To this so high a work, a whole Synagogue of wisdom is little enough; to bring into course that is out, to set the foundations fast, against this Synagogue of Satan. And this lo, is the ordinary and continual danger, I spake of.

Gen. 49. 10.

Prov. 8. 14.

But for all this danger, we might well enough stay a longer time and not come together; there is no such present haste to meet with that. There is another (I take it) more pressing, as I said before, upon a more special and present occasion. Will you but look over into the next Psalm following, into the beginning of it? there, you shall find another Congregation, a second, casting their heads, and confederate together, able to put foundations and all out of course. And then he reckons up a rabble of them. Edomites: the Edomites first, and you know what they cryed, Exinanite usque ad fundamenta, Up with all, foundations and all: the Edomites, and Ismaelites, and Moabites, and Agarenes, Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek. And at last, Assur also was joyned with them: (Assur, that even then, purposed; and after did eat them all up one after another; yet he was then joyned with them.) Such a Congregation (as is said) there is now abroad, and what will they do? No harm; bring nothing out of course (they say.) But it will be the wisdom of this Congregation, to be provided for them, if they should not do as they say: This Psalm stands before that, that this Congregation may be before-hand, with that.

Psalm 137. 7.

Peace and perfect amity to be wished before all: (no man doubts of that:) If it be possible as in Isaiah, peace with all men. But, Peace will be had, with never the lesse assurance, and with never the worse conditions, if the Congregation be well appointed, that seek it.

Rom. 12. 18

And this is the second work of this Congregation (if not the first.) Therefore (it may be thought) at this time called together, that there may be Multitudo Consilii, soundly to advise of it; and Multitudo Auxilii, roundly to go through with it. The Text intends this of help specially; for, in some Translations, it is the Congregation of the Mighty; but howsoever, the very name is taken from M, that Name of GOD, that is given Him for His strength and Power. Of those that are Mighty and so can shew themselves; of those is this Congregation. Ever remembering this, that they who assemble for an End; assemble also to devise how to furnish means to compass that End: (and indeed, of the End, properly, we consult not, but of means rather.)

Our SAVIOUR CHRIST, spake with his own mouth, Who will ever resolve upon Warre, but they will sit down first, and set down what forces will be needfull? and how much they will stand in? and how that is to be had or levied, that (as the wise-man saith) Respondit omnibus; Answers, takes order for all.

Judges 5. 23.

Thus for the Synagogue: What for GOD? There is no doubt (blessed be GOD for it) but what Moses said of Juda (His own hands shall be sufficient for Him, if thou LORD help him against his enemies) may be said of this our Land: If GOD help us, sufficient enough. And He will help us, if we help Him. Help GOD? what a word is that? Even the very word, the Angel used, when he had laid a curse upon Meroz, for not coming to help the LORD: Again, lest we might think it scared him, upon deliberation he saith, to help the LORD against the Mighty, that is Sisera and Jabins mighty preparations. Ever, where the right is, there GOD is; when that in Danger, GOD in danger: they that help that, help him; and he will help them. If the Congregation, God; God, the congregation. They will fight from heaven (then) the stars in heaven will fight in their courses for us, And then it will be an Auxiliary war right. And in sign, that He will so, when they are met together about these matters, GOD comes Himself here in person, and stands among them. GOD, in the Congregation of the Gods, what more proper and kindly? And so much for the Gods, and for their Congregation.

Judges 5. 20.

III.

The two acts:

I

Jointly.

1 To correct

the word,

[Gods.)

2 To put a difference between them and God.

God stands:

they fall.

Now for the two Acts of GOD: in and upon this Congregation: 1 His Standing, and 2 Judging: First jointly; After, apart: 1. Jointly: They are thought to be set first (these two) as two Correctors of the two former, Deorum and Deor, lest the Gods of the Congregation should be exalted above measure with this deifying revelation. Secondly, as two marks of difference between the first GOD, and the last Gods; so to let them see what manner of Gods they be indeed, how differing from Him.

GOD stands: This may well refer to that in the sixth Verse: But you shall fall. A standing GOD; He who only stands, and will stand, when they all shall fall, and fall even to dust, every God of them. And this could not be told us in a fitter place: the place where we stand, is compassed about with a Congregation of these fallen Gods, these same Dii caduci; with Monuments of the mortality of many a great Elohim in their times. And let me tell you this, that in the Hebrew tongue the Grave is called a Synagogue as well as the Church. All shall be gathered, even the Gods, even the whole Synagogue of them, into this Synagogue at last. So this first shewes them, Their God ships give them no immortality. Gods: but mortal, temporal Gods they be.

God judges:

they are called to accompt.

* Heb. 9. 27.

The other is of judging. That as they have no exemption from the first statute, * Statutum est omnibus semel mori: So neither from the second, Et post mortem judicium. They be Dii sub iudicio: They be not Gods, absque aliquo computo reddendo. When they have done judging others, they shall come to be judged themselves. Dii caduci, Dii iudicandi; Gods that shall fall, Gods that must come to judgement. From neither of these shall their Godhead excuse themselves.

These two then, sever them from the first GOD, the Eternal GOD, and the Sovereign Judge of all. And shew (the one, their judging) that their Glory is not equal; (the other, their falling) that their Majesty is not co-eternal, that so they may understand themselves aright.

I

Specially.

The first Act:

The Metaphor

of Standing.

1 Gods presence.

Can't g. 2.

And now to standing and judging, either of them apart by it self, Standing, first. The members of man, the eye, hand, and foot; and the acts of them, seeing, doing, standing, are not in GOD (to speak properly:) only by them, is noted in GOD, the efficacy of those acts and members. By the eye, His knowledge: by the hand, His Power: by the foot, His Presence. The meaning then is first, that GOD is present. It is not enough for Him to look down from heaven, and behold us afar off, but he comes and stands here. And not (as in the Canticles) Behind the wall, and looks in by the gates: but it is even in the Assembly it self, even in the place where the Gods are.

Not as every

a Jer. 23. 24.

Esay 63. 1.

Present? Why what great matter is that? Where is He not present? [a] Heaven and earth He fills, the earth is His footstool, where then stands He not? Indeed GOD is present in all places: yet not in all alike. In some by a more special presence, than in othersome: And among all, and above all, there where the Gods are together.

But in a more special manner.

For though GOD be both in heaven and earth; yet we say (which art in heaven:) intending that there He is with a far more high and glorious presence. And so, here is He in a more eminent sort. For, nowhere on earth doth His Glory shine, and shew forth it self so, as in a well ordered Assembly.

March. 18. 20.

Ecl. 1. 10.

And, if where Two or three common Christians be together in His name, there is He in the midst of them: when three or four hundred, and those no common ordinary persons, but of His own name (Gods) even a whole Congregation of them, (Of His Name, and in His Name too;) are together, in most solemn manner assembled: and to do His work: shall He not much mote be there, and in a much more excellent manner of presence to assist them? Yes, sure: it toucheth His providence in the highest degree.

2 Gods Attention.

Present then: And secondly, the manner of His presence: standing. And that is a word of Sin. Standing is a fit, and it is a fit of Attention. When we sit and hear ought, that we would listen better to, up we stand and leave sitting: So do we (without the occasion) usually: Even to stir up our selves: For, sitting we may fall on sleep. This, to shew we shall not need to say to Him here, as in another Psalm, they do, My Lord why sleepest thou? For He stands, and they never sleep. The truth is: to be present, as good be absent, if we do not intend. This then sheweth GOD is so present, as He is also attentive: nothing passes but Deo astante & attente; but He is an ear, nay an eye-witnesse, nay more than that, a heart-witnesse of all.

Psalm 44. 23.

Stands then: and thirdly, the manner of His standing, which is (as is observed) stans; and that is not the ordinary word for standing, when one sits; so stands, as he will remove: no, but as one fixed, not to start: It is Statio militaris this, that pitch about their standard, not to remove thence, but still to maintain and keep their standing. So He, where you leave Him, you shall be sure to find Him. He makes it His rest, meanes to stand it out to the very last.

These three, 1 Presence, 2 Attendance, 3 Perseverance, be in this standing of His. Present, for he stands; and standing marks: mark, and will mark from the beginning to the end. So we, not to conceive of Him, 1 as if he were away, 2 or here stood and noted not, 3 or did for a time, but would leave off and give over, and not stand it out. This, for standing.

And, so long as it is but standing and no more, it is no great matter; So he suffer them to go quietly and trouble them not. And indeed so long as GOD doth no more, he may be said to stand, and but even to stand. But (saith the Text) when He hath done standing, He hath not done. Stay a while, you shall see, He so stands as he will judge also before He have done.

The Congregation will not alwayes sit; nor GOD alwayes stand. But that is over and past, the Prophet here begins to set him up a Seat, to erect Him a Throne to sit down and judge in. And then (to) the courses will change. We sit now, and he stands: he will sit then, and we all shall stand. All; Omnes stabimus ante Tribunal, Before his judgement seat. His first act (standing) then to take an end: and his latter act (judicabit) to have his turn too.

But by this we see (as before I told you) while He stood; He stood attentive: He stood not like an idol; was all the while no idle stander by, or looker on, but as the Writing was on the wall, Mene, Mene, He told and numbred; and Tekel, Stetis cum statera, He weighed and pondered well, every Motion that was made, every Bill that was read, every Consent or otherwise passed upon it. And weighed withall, whence every of them proceeded, whether from dutifull regard of him and his Presence; or otherwise, for some by-respect of our own. Stetis ut testis; as a witnesse, he stood: Sedet ut Judex; Now sits as a Judge, and will give His doom accordingly. And upon whom will He give it? Not upon the meaner sort, upon inferior persons, but even upon the greatest: Upon Deos, the Gods themselves. For even to them, doth this his judgement extend. They that sit and judge others, shall then stand and be judged themselves. They be Gods; but he is Deus Deorum, Psalm 50. 1. They are Judges; but He Judex judicum: Judex judicum and judiciorum both; Judge of judges and of Courts; and even of this high Court and all. Men may not, GOD may and will convent even the Conventions themselves, if they forget themselves. Yea even the rather, for that they are Gods, shall he judge them. And namely, how they used themselves in their Deity, when they sat in his place, and went under his Name.

And not for any fault they ever have made; as for those they have made here, in Synagoga. Above all, for them: for not regarding his Presence and standing here.

And because there is here a double mention of Deorum, and Deos; Deorum in Synagoga, and Deos in judicio: It will not be amiss to set them before us both at once. Now when they sit in Synagoga, how glorious! But when in judicio, they shall stand to be judged, how poor then! When God but stands and looks on, how secure! when he shall sit down to his Sentence, how full of fear then! Specially, when he shall take, and they shall give account of abusing His Presence here. For a special judicabit belongs to that, and remains for them that so do. They that despise GOD'S long suffering, when he stands here, shall find and suffer his severity, and suffer it long, when he sits to judge there.

But I cannot say, this will be presently, or out of hand. It may be, it will be deferred yet, for a while: it is not Judicat in the present; but judicabit in the Future, he will judge; Cum accipero tempus (as he saith, Psalm 25. 73.) he will take a time for it.

But take a time he will, and judge he will. Even the heathen, that have written de sera Numinis vindicta, are clear for this point; That you may well account of it, he that stands, will sit, and sitting, judge: Judge, and never a God of them all shall escape him.

And in medio he will do it: in the midst, it shall be. The midst, either Inwardly of the Gods own selves, even of their own hearts (כקרי will bear it, and so it is taken, Jer. 31. 33.) There in the midst, in their heart: their Conscience accusing them, and a worm there gnawing when they shall see the evil, that doth follow of their carrying matters unduly, see any foundation shaken by it.

Or, in the midst (that is) openly: as, openly He hath ever made it appear, that evil counsel, first or last, shall prove worst for them that gave it.

Or, in medio, referring it to the Parties: that is, in the midst between them both. Those that regard: and those other, that never looked after, nor cared for Him and His standing.

And it is well for us, it is Judicabit: for so we have a time to bethink us of it, and to prevent it. And again it is well for us, that it is In medio: For so, we may yet choose our side, which side we will fall on: for indeed, Judicare is Actus in medio; it may be for, and it may be against. It is not necessary it should be against: GOD forbid: we may not prejudice it then.

All is, as we carry our selves here. For, as we here, so He there. They that saw Him standing and demeaned themselves accordingly; a judicabit for them. Those other, that to the Text.

V

Our own duty
To regard Gods
standing.
* 1 Cor. 11. 31.
Four things to be done.

And now to our selves, and to our duty to GOD, thus standing and judging.

To avoid GOD'S judgement (the Apostle tells us) there is but one way: "To judge our selves. And here now in this, not upon many, but upon this one Point only of GOD'S standing (for, I will be bold to cut off the other, His judging;) Regard His standing, and you shall never need to fear His judging."

To regard that; do but these four: 1 Set down this and believe it, that He is present. 2 So behave your selves, as if you did so believe. 3 To do that, shew your selves well affected to His standing. 4 To shew that, Procure but those means, that He may take pleasure in His standing. These four.

1 To believe
God is present.
Job 9. 11.
John 1. 26.
Heb. 11. 26.

First, never imagine this, that GOD is far enough off, or hath otherwise to baffle Himself, than to have a hanc or foot in these Assemblies. But (with Job) believe, He is hard by us, though we perceive Him not: Or (as the Baptist said of CHRIST) Medius vestrum stetit, quem vos nescitis; He standeth in the midst of us, though we knew not so much. To see Him so standing, with the eyes of faith, with which (the Apostle saith) Moses saw Him that was invisible.

2 To behave our selves as if present.
Math. 21. 37.

Then will it follow of it self, To do all we do, Tanquam De o stante & inspectante, As if God stood and beheld us. This we behove to think: When He comes thus to stand among us, He will say as much for Himself, as he did for his Son in the Gospel, Certe reverebuntur Ade, Surely they will reverence Me; my standing, my being there, will make them the more careful: If I come and stand among them, all will go the better, if it be but because I am there. Not any thing at all shall (I trust) but if ought should be moved against His good liking, shall not our own hearts smite us, and tell us straight, What? GOD standing, and looking on, shall we offer this? What give Him an affront in His own presence, to His own face? Nonne judicabit super hoc? what, will He never judge for this j-er? And when He doth, shall it go for nought? Thus, to behave our selves as in His presence.

3 To stand well affected to God's standing.

But yet (I know not how) this is not it; To do it for fear of Him, or of His judicabit: but to do it willingly, that is it. For, as if some were not willing to allow Him a place, not so much as to stand in, with a kind of Ironie (some think) he saith: Well yet howsoever, GOD stands in the Congregation, though against some bodies will, that would be content (if they durst) to say with them in Esay 30. 11. Cause the HOLY-ONE of Israel to cease from us, Get Him away, Or with them in the Gospel (the Gergesenes) not only give CHRIST good leave, but even to pray Him fair to be gone, and take His ease somewhere else, their matters would speed better, if he were out of the way.

Math. 8. 34.

Never speak of that; there He stands, and there He will stand: He ought not, will not, cannot be excluded. To endure Him, that is not it: The point is, how we stand affected to His standing, Whether we be willing with it: whether it be the desire of our hearts, that He should, and the joy that He doth stand, and will stand there.

Exod. 33. 15.

Put case He stood not: would we earnestly entreat Him to vouchsafe us His presence, to take up His standing among us? If He made as if he would be gone (as Luke 24. 29.) would we be instant with Mane nobiscum Domine, Stay with us still good Lord? MOSES said, If thou go not with us, carry us not hence; would we say, If thou Lord stay not with us, what do we here? GOD be gone, mi gremus hinc, let us be gone too; And never hope for good of that Assembly where He is not.

4 To procure the means that God may be willing to stand.

Now fourthly, if we be willing and glad, if we take comfort in His standing, hereby shall we be tried; if we use all means, as will procure Him to stay in our Assembly the more willingly; as will make His standing pleasant and not grow tedious to him. And such things there are: And these they are.

Those be four.

1 To be of one mind.

a Psalm 76. 2.

b Psalm 122. 2.

c Acts 1. 1.

d Psalm 68. 6.

Psalm 133. 2.

One special thing that gives Him content, is a Place where there is Concord and Unity. [a] At Salem (that is) where peace is, In pace factus est locus Ejus (So read the Fathers) there is his Tabernacle: And that Tabernacle is the Tabernacle of the Congregation: His feet, and our feet, both stand willingly in the Gates there. (The reason:) [b] For, it is at unity within it self. There loves He to stand, And there, his Spirit, where [c] they were all, with one accord, in one place. [d] Qui facit unanimes habitare in domo, if He make all of one mind that are in the house, if brethren dwell together in unity, O how good, O how pleasing is that standing to Him! It passes Aarons perfume, His ointment is nothing to the delight of it.

a Heb. 12. 15.

b Jude 9. 23.

c Jud. 1. 15. 16.

d 2 Sam. 19.

14.

To use no cunning, but plain dealing.

Psalm 51. 6.

And in very deed, if we consider it well, it is the virtue (this of Concord) that is most proper, nay essential (then) to a Congregation: without it, a gregation it may be, but no Congregation. The Con is gone: a disgregation rather. Enough to make him to be gone (that.) For, if there [a] spring up a root of bitterness: if the [b] evil spirit get in that was sent upon Abimelech and the men of Sichem: [c] If the divisions of Reuben do make great thoughts of heart: there, GOD stands upon thornes. But where [d] the hearts of all the Congregation are bowed as the heart of one man, there stands GOD, and there he delights to stand.

Another: He takes pleasure to stand among them, that are good and true of heart. Where he finds truth in the inward parts: Where, without art or artificial glossing or cunning carrying of things under-hand, men go plainly to work, every one in the sincerity and singleness of an honest upright mourning. And the more plainness, ever the more pleasure God takes, there to stand. Truth, as it is the mightiest, so it is the wisest thing, when all is done. They that love it not, but to cover, and colour and, and carry all by cunning; they shall never stand in Gods Tabernacle. Neither they in his; nor he in theirs. Psalms 15: 1.

One more. There is a word, and it is a great word in this Book, Idipsum; that is, to look to the thing it self, the very point, the principal matter of all; to have our eye on that, and not off it, upon alia omnia, any thing but it. So say I (again) upon the thing it self, not upon some persons or personal respects: God accepts no persons, nor loves them that do. The very first thing, that in the very next Verse, he finds fault with, and charges them with, is this: when men are for, or against a thing (be it what it will be) and neither, for it self; but only, because it proceeds from such or such persons: Neither of these is in medio. Idipsum, that is the Centre, that the middle: That place is GOD'S place. To go to the point, drive all to that, as also to go to the matter real, without declining from it, this way or that, to the right hand or to the left for any personal regard.

And last of all, that which pleaseth him best of all: And that is, where he finds a ready well-willing mind, his heart is upon such. And where his heart is, ever his feet stand at ease: Calceat rosas, he treads upon roses there. In the Song of Deborah it is thought, there is set down a pattern of the Virtues or Faults of an Assembly. In that Song, there are two Hallelujah's, two Benedicite's for it. First, at the very beginning, Hallelujah, Praise the Lord: Why? for the people that came off, and offered themselves so willingly. And again seven verses after, My heart is upon the Governours, that offered (themselves) and made the people to offer so willingly, Hallelujah, Praise the Lord. Hallelujah, to the Princes, Hallelujah for the people; Blessed be GOD, for both.

Then have you again after those, two verses together; in the one, Meroz cursed for their backwardness; And Iael, for her forwardness, blessed and blessed again. For, this indeed is the marrow of the Sacrifice, the fat of the offering: and without this, all is poor and lean.

This is sure: GOD, loves not to dwell in Mesech: that is interpreted, prolongatus est. And His Son calling on, Serve nequam & piger, shewes, He loves piger as evil, as He does nequam. And His Spirit cannot skil of these same sarda molimina. In a word; none of them to be wearied, with standing I know not how long.

And see the very next word of all, the next that follows these immediately: is How long! So he begins his complaint, the first word of the next Verse; which shewes, he loves it not.

Nor, that he can be weary. It is an Infirmary (that) and so is grief, and so is repentance; and they cannot fall into GOD: They are attributed to him though. And GOD is said as to [a] repent, a Gen. 6. 6; and [b] to be grieved, so to be stark [c] weary. In no other sense, but this: That if he be not weary, no thanks to us: For, if it were possible, if the divine Nature were or could be subject to it; if GOD could be weary, if his feet were not of brass (Apoc. 1. 5.) we would put him to it: we do even what in us lieth to tire him outright, to make him cry usque quo, how long?

But, 1 where there is accord without Rubens divisions: 2 where plain meaning, and dealing, without (as Esay calls them) these same deep-digged devices; 3 where the eye is upon idipsum, and no ipsum else; 4 where GOD is not constrained to dwell in Mesech, but the People and their Governours offer willingly; there stands GOD, and there will be ever stand. Of that place he saith; Hic est requies mea, This is my rest, here will I stay, for I have a delight therein. Esfay 29. 15; Psalm 132. 14

Thus doing then, thus procuring, our Assembly thus qualified, we perform our duty to GOD, and to his standing. And this done, we shall never need to fear judicabit come when it will.

And now to conclude. Mine unfeigned hearty prayer to GOD is, and daily shall be, that if ever in any, he would stand in this Congregation. And if ever any used the means so to procure him, we may use them. The rather, that Ecclesia malignantium, the malignant Synagogue may not ask with derision, Where was then their GOD? Where stood he? Behind the wall (sure) not in the Assembly; Such proceedings, and his standing will never stand together. To have regard what will be said abroad. Psalm 26. 5; 1 Cor. 2. 14

But rather, that all may say, Verily GOD was among them, Of a truth GOD stood in that Congregation; where, with so good accord, so good things, so readily were passed. CH. 1. 1. 1. was in the midst of them, his holy Spirit rested on them.

Yet I know, what men say off or on, is not it; what GOD saith, that is all in all. To men we do not; To GOD, we stand or fall, whose judicabit we cannot scape, either the one way or the other: but have a judicabit for us, that we may, if we yield his standing all due respect, Even Euge serve bone, intra in gaudium Domini, which in the end will be worth all. Math. 25. 37.

But if any shall say; O the time is long to that (peradventure not so long though, as we reckon:) well yet in the mean time, now for the present, it stands us in hand to use him well, and our selves well to him. For if he stand not to us, we shall not subsist, we shall not stand, but fall before our enemies. This time is now; this danger is at hand.

Use him well then: Stand before Him thus standing, with all due reverence and regard; that as by His presence, He doth stand among us; so he may not only do that, but by His Mercy also stand by us, and by His Power stand for us. So shall we stand and with-stand, all the adverse forces: and at last (for thither at last we must all come) stand in His judgement. Stand there upright; To our comfort (for the present) of His standing by us; and to our endless comfort (for the time to come) of His judging for us. To have regard of our present use of Him against our enemies, I

AUGUST XXI. Anno Dom. MDCIII.

PSALM CVI. Ver. XXIX. XXX.

Thus they provoked Him to anger with their own inventions, and the Plague was great (or brake in.) among them.

Then stood up Phinees, and prayed (or, executed judgement) and so the Plague was ceased (or, stayed.)

HERE is mention of a Plague: of a great Plague; For, there died of it four and twenty thousand. And we complain of a Plague at this time. The same axe is laid to the root of our trees. Or rather, because an axe is long in cutting down of one tree, the Razor is hired for us; that sweeps away a great number of haikes at once (as Esay calleth it) or a Sythe that mowes down Grasse, a great deal at once.

But here is not only mention of the Breaking in of the Plague; in the XXIX. Verse; but of the Staying or ceasing of the Plague, in the XXX.

Now, Whatsoever things were written afore-time, were written for our learning, and so was this Text. Under one, to teach us how the Plague comes, and how it may be Stayed.

The division.

The Plague is a disease. In every disease, we consider the Cause and the Cure. Both which are here set forth unto us in these two verses. In the former, the Cause how it comes. In the latter, the Cure how it may be staid. To know the Cause is expedient; for if we know it not, our Cure will be but palliative, as not going to the right. And if knowing the Cause, we add not the Cure, when we are taught it, who will pity us? For, none is then to blame, but our selves.

Of the Cause first: and then of the Cure. The cause is set down to be twofold: 1 GOD'S anger, and 2 their inventions.

GOD'S anger, by the which: and their inventions, for the which, the Plague brake in among them.

II.

The Cure is likewise set down: and it is twofold, out of two significations of one word, the word Phinees in the Verse. Phinees prayed (some read it:) Phinees executed judgement (some other;) and the word beares both. Two then: 1 Phinees prayer, one: 2 Phinees executing judgement, the other; by both which the plague ceased. His prayer referring to GOD'S anger: His executing executing judgement, to their inventions. GOD'S wrath was appeased by his prayer : Prayer refers to that. Their inventions were removed by his execution of judgement : The execution of judgement refers to that. If his anger provoked do send the plague ; His anger appeased will stay it. If our inventions provoke his anger, the punishing of our inventions will appease it. The one worketh upon GOD, pacifieth Him : The other worketh upon our soul : and cures it. For there is a cure of the soul, no lesse than of the body, as appeareth by the Psalm, Heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee. Psalm 99. 8. Psalm 41. 4.

We are to begin with the Cause of the plague, in the first Verse : And so to come to the Cure, in the second.

OF the Cause. 1 First, there is a Cause. 2 And secondly, What that Cause may be.

1 That there is a cause (that is) that the plague is a thing causal, not casual ; comes not merely by chance, but hath somewhat, some cause that procureth it. I. Of the cause.

Sure, if a Sparrow fall not to the ground without the providence of GOD, of which two are sold for a farthing ; much lesse doth any man, or woman, which are more worth than many sparrows. A cause there is. Math. 10. 29.

And if any one man comes not to his End (as we call it) by casualty, but it is GOD, that delivers him so to die : How much more then, when not one, but many thousands are swept away at once ? The Philistines ; in their plague, put the matter upon trial of both these wayes : 1 Whether it were GOD'S hand, 2 Or whether it were but a chance. And the event shewed, it was no casualty, but the very handy-work of GOD upon them. Exod. 21. 13.

And indeed, the very name of the Plague doth tell us as much. For Deber in Hebrew sheweth, there is a reason, there is a cause, why it cometh. And the English word Plague, coming from the Latine word Plaga, which is properly a stroke, necessarily inferreth a cause. For where there is a stroke, there must be One that striketh. And in that both it, and other evil things (that come upon us) are usually in Scripture called Gods judgements ; If they be judgements, it followeth, there is a Judge they come from. They come not by adventure ; by chance they come not. Chance and Judgement are utterly opposite. Not casually then, but judiciously. Judged we are ; For when we are chastened, we are judged of the Lord. 1 Sam. 6. 9. 1 Cor. 13. 32.

There is a Cause : Now, what that cause is, Concerning which, if you ask the Physician, he will say, the cause is in the ayr. The Ayr is infected ; the Humors corrupted : the Contagion of the sick, coming to and conversing with the sound. And they be all true causes. I. The cause is.

The Ayr. For so we see, by casting * ashes of the furnace towards heaven in the ayr, the ayr became infected, and the plague of botches, and blaines, was so brought forth in Egypt. 1 Natural. 1 The ayr is infected. Exod. 9. 8.

The Humors. For to that doth King David ascribe the cause of his Disease : (that is) that his moisture in him was corrupt, dried up, turned into the drought of Summer. 1 The Humors corrupted.

Contagion. Which is clear by the Law : where, the leprous person for fear of contagion from him, was ordered to cry, that no body should come near him : To dwell apart from other men ; The clothing he had worn to be washed, and in some case to be burnt : The house-walls he had dwelt in, to be scraped ; and in some case, the house it self to be pulled down. Psalm 32. 4. 3 Contagion. Lev. 13. 45, 46, 52.

In all which three respects, Salomon saith, A wise man feareth the plague, and departeth from it, and fools run on and be carelesse. A wise man doth it, and a good man too. For King David himself durst not go to the Altar of GOD at Gibeon ; to enquire of GOD there, because the Angel that smote the people with the plague, stood between him and it : (that is) because he was to passe through infected places thither. Prov. 14. 16. 1 Chro. 21. 3.

But as we acknowledge these to be true, that in all diseases, and even in this also, there is a Natural cause ; so we say, there is somewhat more, something Divine, and above nature. As somewhat, which the Physician is to look unto, in the plague : so likewise something for Phinees to do, and Phinees was a Priest. And so some work for the Priest, as well as for the Physician, and more, then (it may be.) 2 Supernatural. By which, GOD.

It was King Asa's fault. He in his sicknesse, looked all to Physicians, and looked not after GOD at all. That, is noted as his fault. It seems his fault. It seems, his conceit was, there was nothing in a disease, but natural, nothing but bodily : which is not so. For, infirmity, is not only a thing bodily ; there is a Spirit of infirmity, we find, Luke 13. 11. And something spiritual there is, in all infirmities ; something in the soul to be healed. In all, but specially in this ; wherein that we might know it to be spiritual, we find it oft-times to be executed by spirits. We see an Angel, a destroying Angel, in the plague of Egypt : another in the plague in Sennacherib's Camp : a third in the plague at Jerusalem under David : a fourth, pouring his phial upon earth, and there fell a noysome plague upon man and beast. So that no man looketh deeply enough into the cause of this sicknesse, unless he acknowledge the Finger of God in it, over and above any causes natural. Exod. 12. 13. Esay 37. 36. 1 Chro. 21. 16. Rev. 16. 1.

GOD then hath his part, GOD : but how affected ? God, provoked to anger : so it is in the Text : His anger, His wrath it is, that bringeth the plague among us. The Verse is plain, They provoked Him to anger, and the plague brake in among them. God provoked to anger.

Generally, there is no evil (saith Job) but it is a spark of Gods wrath. And of all evils, the plague

1 Chron. 21. 7. plague is begun (saith Moses, Num. 6. 46.) So it is said GOD was displeased with David, and he smote Israel with the plague. So that if there be a plague, GOD is angry: and if there be a great plague, God is very angry. Thus much for By what; for the anger of God, by which the plague is sent. Now for what.

For which. Sin in general.
Heb. 3. 8.
Ephes. 5. 6.
There is a cause in God, that he is angry. And there is a cause, for which he is angry. For he is not angry without a cause. And what is that cause? For what is God angry? What, is God angry with the waters when he sends a tempest? (it is Habacuk's question.) Or is God angry with the earth, when He sends barrenness? Or with the ayr, when he makes it contagious? No indeed, His anger is not against the Elements, they provoke him not. Against them it is, that provoke Him to anger? Against men it is, and against their sinnes, and for them cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

And this is the very cause indeed. As there is Putredo humorum; so there is also putredo morum. And putredo morum, is more a cause, than putredo humorum. The Corruption of the soul, the corruption of our wayes, more than the corrupting of the ayr. The plague of the heart, more than the sore, that is seen in the body. a The cause of death, (that is) sinne, the same is the cause, of this kind of death, or the plague of mortality. And as the b Balm of Gilead, and the c Physician there, may yield us help, when Gods wrath is removed: so, if it be not, no balm, no medicine will serve. Let us with the woman in the Gospel, d send all upon Physicians, we shall be never the better, till we come to CHRIST, and he cure us of our sinnes, who is the only Physician of the diseases of the soul.

Mark 9. 2.
And with CHRIST, the cure begins ever within. First, See thy sins be forgiven thee: and then after, take up thy bed and walk. His sinnes be first, and his limbs after. As likewise when we are once well, Christs counsel is, sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee. As if sin would certainly bring a relapse in a sickness.

Particular sin.
But shall we say, the wrath of GOD for sins indefinitely? That were somewhat too general: may we not specify them, or set them down in particular? Yes, I will point you at three or four.

1 Fornication.
First, this plague here, as appeareth by XXVIII. Verse, the Verse next before, came for the sin of Peor (that is) for fornication (as you may read.) And not every fornication, but fornication past shame; as was that of Zimri there, with a daughter of Moab. And indeed if we mark it well, it fits well. For, that kind of sin (fornication) doth end in Ulcers and sores; and those are infections as the Plague it self: a proper punishment; such sore for such evil.

2 Pride.
1 Chro. 21. 14
Secondly, Davids plague of seventy thousand (which we mention in our Prayer) that came from Pride, plainly: His heart was lifted up to number the people. And that seems somewhat kindly too, and to agree with this disease. That pride which swells it self, should end in a tumor, or swelling; as for the most part this disease doth.

3 Blasphemy.
Esay 37. 36.
Numb. 16. 46.
Thirdly, Zenachibis plague (it is plain) came from Rabshakes blasphemy: Blasphemy able to infect the ayr, it was so foul. In which regard, Aarons act might be justified, in putting odours into his Censer, to purifie the Ayr from such corruption.

4 Neglect of the Sacrament.
1 Cor. 11. 30.
Exod. 5. 3.
Exod. 4. 24.
And last, the Apostle sets down the cause of the plague at Corinth: For this cause (saith he) that is, for neglect of the Sacrament: Either in not caring to come to it; or in coming to it, we care not how: For this cause, is there a mortality among you; and many are sick, and many are weak, and many are fallen asleep. And this is no new thing. Moses Himself, his neglect of the Sacrament, made him to be stricken of God, that it was like to have cost him his life. And he saith plainly to Pharaoh: If they neglected their Sacrifice, GOD would fall upon them with the Pestilence: which appeareth by this, that the Sacrament of the Paschever, and the blood of it, was the means to save them from the Plague of the destroying ANGEL in Egypt.

The phrase for sin, Their inventions.

In matters of Religion;
Deut. 12. 8.

Math. 16. 22.

A little now of the phrase; that their sins are here called by the name of their inventions. And so (sure) they are: as no wayes taught us by God, but of our own imagining or finding out. For indeed, our inventions are the cause of all sins. And if we look well into it we shall find our inventions are so. By Gods injunction we should all live, and His injunction is: You shall not do every man what seems good in his own eyes (or finds out in his own braines) but whatsoever I command you, that only shall you do. But we, setting light by that charge of his, out of the old disease of our Father Adam (Eritis sicut Di, scientes bonum & malum) think it a goodly matter to be witty, and to find out things our selves to make to our selves, to be Authors, and inventors of somewhat, that so we may seem to be as wise as God, if not wiser: and to know what is for our turnes, as well as he, if not better. It was Sauls fault. God bad destroy Amalek all; and he, would invent a better way to save some (forsooth) for sacrifice, which God could not think of. And it was St. Peters fault, when he perswaded Christ from his Passion, and found out a better way (as he thought) than Christ could devise.

Deut. 32. 17.
2 Tim. 4. 3.

This is the proud invention, which will not be kept in, but makes men even not to forbear in things pertaining to Gods Worship, but there, to be still devising new tricks, opinions and fashions, fresh and newly taken up, which their Fathers never knew of. And this is that, which makes men that have itching eares, to heape to themselves Teachers, according to their own lusts, which may fill their heads full, with new inventions.

In the common life.

And this is that, that even out of Religion, in the common life, spoiles all. The wanton invention, in finding out new meats in diet, in inventing new fashions in apparell, which men so dore on (as the Psalm saith at the 32. Verse) as they even go anhering with them, with their own inventions, and care not not what they spend on them. And know no end of them : but as fast as they are weary of one, a new invention is found out ; which whatsoever it cost, how much soever it take from our Almes, or good deeds, must be had, till all come to nought. That the Psalmist hath chosen a very fit word, that for our inventions, the plague breaks in among us : for them, as for the primary, or first moving cause of all, Indeed for them, as much and more than for any thing else.

We see then, 1 First, that a cause there is. 2 That that cause is not only natural, but that God Himself hath a hand in it. 3 God as being provoked to anger. 4 To anger for our sinnes in general (and for what sinnes in special) For our sins proceeding from nothing, but our inventions. Which cause if it continue, and yet we turn not to the Lord (as Amos the fourth,) then will not his anger be turned away, but His hand will be stretched out still (as Esay the ninth.) And no way to avoid the one, but by appeasing the other.

For the cure now. One contrary evil is ever cured by another. If then it be anger ; which is the cause in God, anger would be appeased. If it be Inventions, which is the cause in us, of the anger of God, they would be punished and removed. That so, the cause being taken away, the effect may cease. Take away our inventions, Gods anger will cease. Take away Gods anger, and the plague will cease.

Two Readings (we said) there were : 1 Phinees prayed, or 2 Phinees executed judgement. Palat, the H. brew word will bear both. And both are good : And so we will take them both in.

Prayer is good against the plague, as appeareth : Not only in this plague in the Text, wherein all the Congregation were weeping, and praying before the door of the Tabernacle : But in King b David's plague also ; where we see, what his prayer was, and the very words of it.

And in c Ezekias's plague, who turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto GOD (and his prayer is set down :) GOD heard his prayer, and healed him. And (for a general rule) d If there be in the Land any pestilent disease : Whatsoever plague, whatsoever sickness it be, the prayer and supplication in the Temple made by the people, every man knowing the plague of his own heart, God in heaven will hear it, and remove his hand from afflicting them any further.

And it standeth with good reason. For, as the Ayr is infected with noysome scents or smells, so the infection is removed by sweet odours, or incense : which Aaron did in the Plague. (put sweet odours in his Censer, and went between the living and the dead.) Now there is a fit resemblance between Incense and Prayer : f Let my prayer come before thy presence, as the Incense. And when the Priest was within, burning Incense, g the people were without at their prayers. And it is expressly said, h that the sweet odours were nothing else, but the prayers of the Saints.

Prayer is good, and that Phinees prayer. Phinees was a Priest, the son of Eleazar, the Nephew of Aaron. So as, there is Vertue, as in the prayer, so in the person that did pray : in Phinees himself.

As (we know) the office of a Sergeant being to arrest, the Office of a Notary to make acts, the act that is done by one of them, is much more authentical, than that which is done by any common person. So every Priest being taken from among men, and ordained for men in things pertaining to GOD, that he may offer prayers : the prayer he offereth out of his office, and so even in that respect there is (ceteris paribus) a more force, an energy in them, as coming from him, whose calling it is to offer them ; than in those, that come from another, whose calling it is not so to do.

To this end, God saith to Abimelech : Abraham is a Prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live. So that the prayer of a Prophet, in that he is a Prophet, is more effectual.

And in the Law, you shall find it all along : when men come to bring their sacrifice for their sins, it is said, the Priest shall make an attonement for them before the Lord, and their sinnes shall be forgiven them.

And in the Prophets we see plainly, in time of distress, Ezekiah sent unto the Prophet Esay, to entreat him to lift up his prayer for the remnant that were left : and so he did, and was heard by God.

And in the New Testament, St. James advice is, In the time of sickness to call for the Priests, and they to pray over the party, and that Prayer shall work his health ; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him. For, where the grace of prayer is, and the calling both, they cannot but avail more, then where no calling is, but the Grace alone.

The prayer of Phinees, and of Phinees standing. What need there be any mention of Phinees standing ? Was it not enough to say Phinees prayed ? It skils not whether he sat or stood ; for praying it self was enough.

No : we must not think, the Holy Ghost sets down any thing that is superfluous. Somewhat there is, in that he stood. Of Moses it is said before in this Psalm, that he stood in the gap to turn away the wrath of God. In Jeremy it is said, though Moses and Samuel stood before me : So there is mention made of standing also. And the Prophet himself puts God in mind, that he stood before Him, to speak good for the people, and to turn away His wrath from them (that is) put God in mind of the very sight of His body.

For, though God be a Spirit, and so in Spirit to be worshipped ; yet inasmuch as He hath given us a body, with that also are we to worship Him, and to glorifie him in our body and spirit, which both are Gods : and to present (or offer) our bodies to God, as a holy and acceptable sacrifice, in the seasonable service of Him.

And to present them decently. For that also is required in the service of God. Now judge in your selves, Is it comely to speak unto our betters ? sitting ? Sed mem orare, extra disciplinam est (saith Tertullian) to pray sitting or sit praying, is against the order of the Church. The Church of God never had, nor hath any such fashion.

It is noted of the very Angels, Job 1.6. Esay 6.2. Dan. 7.10. that they were standing before God. If them it becomes; if Phinees, if Moses, if Samuel, and Jeremy, it may well become us to learn our gesture of them.

Against their inventions.

1 Execution of Judgement.

Num. 14.7,8.

Prayer is available to appease Gods wrath, and so consequently to remove the Plague: but not prayer alone. For though it abate the anger of God (which is the first) yet it goeth not high enough, takes not away the second cause (that is) our inventions, which are the cause of Gods anger. We see it plain in Num. 25.6. they were all at prayers, and Phinees among them, he and the rest. But yet the plague ceased not for all that: till (in the verse following) Phinees took his javelin, wherewith in the very act of fornication, he thrust them both through, Zamri and his Woman, and then the plague was stayed from the children of Israel. For, as prayer referreth properly to anger: so doth executing judgement to sin, or to our inventions the cause of it.

Esay 29. 14.

Prayer then doth well: but prayer and doing justice, both these together (jointly) will do it indeed. And if you disjoyn or separate them, nothing will be done. If we draw near to God with our mouths, and honour him with our lips, it will not avail us, if judgement be turned back, or justice stand afar off.

2 By Phinees as a Prince in his Tribe, and a Magistrate.

There are two persons. Both of them were in Phinees. For, as he was a Priest, so he was a Prince of his Tribe. So then, both these must joyn together, as well the devotion of the Priest in prayer, which is his Office: as the zeal of the Magistrate in executing judgement, which is His. For, Phinees the Priest, must not only stand up, and pray: but Moses (the Magistrate also) must stand in the gap, to turn away the wrath of God, that he destroy not the people. No leis he, than Aaron, with his golden Censer, to run into the midst of the Congregation, to make atonement for them when the plague is begun.

3 By every man upon himself:

2 Cor. 2. 11.

1 Cor. 9. 27.

1 Cor. 11. 3.

Moses he gave in charge for the executing of them, that were joyned to Baal-Peor, Num. 25. 4. Phinees, he executed the charge: Moses stood in the gap, when he gave the sentence: Phinees stood up, when he did the execution. And these two are a blessed conjunction. One of them without the other, may miss; but both together never fail. For when Zamri was slain; and so when Rabshakeh perished; and so when the incestuous Corinthian was excommunicated, in all three, the plague ceased.

1 Chr. 21. 1,8: Num. 16. 3.

But what if Moses give no charge: what if Phinees do no execution, as oft it falleth out? How then? In that case, every private man is to be Phinees to himself; is not only to pray to God, but to be wreaked, do judgment, chasten his own body; and so judge himself that he may not be judged of the Lord. For every one, for his part, is a cause of the judgments of God, sent down, and so may be, and is to be, a cause of the removing them. Somewhile the King, as David by the pride of his heart. Otherwhile the people, by their murmuring against Moses and Aaron. So that, King and people, both, must judge themselves; every private offender, himself. Zamri if he had judged himself, Phinees should not have judged him. The incestuous Corinthian, if he had judged himself, St. Paul had not judged him. For, either by our selves, or by the Magistrate; or if by neither of both, by GOD Himself: For, one way or other sin must be judged. Zamri, by his repentance; Phinees, by his prayer or doing justice; or GOD, by the plague sent among them.

Now then, these two: 1 Phinees stood up and prayed, 2 and Phinees stood up and executed judgement, if they might be coupled together I durst undertake, the conclusion would be, and the plague ceased, But either of them wanting I dare promise nothing.

To conclude then. 1. The plague comes not by chance, but hath a cause. 2. That cause is not altogether natural, and pertains to Physick; but hath something supernatural in it, and pertains to Divinity. 3. That Supernatural Cause is the wrath of God. 4. Which yet is not the first cause. For, the wrath of God, would not rise, but that he is provoked by our sins (and the certain sins, that provoke it, have been set down.) 5. And the cause of them, our own inventions. So, our inventions beget sin; sin provokes the wrath of God; the wrath of God sends the Plague among us: To stay the plague, Gods wrath must be stayed: to stay it, there must be a ceasing from sin; That sin may cease, we must be out of love with our own inventions and not go anwhoring after them. Prayer, that allwageth anger: To execute justice, that abateth sin: To execute justice, either publikely, as doth the Magistrate, or privately, as every man doth, or may do upon himself. Which joyned with prayer and prayer with it, will soon rid us of that we complain: and otherwise, his anger will not be turned away, but his hand stretched out still.

HEB. Chap. XIII. Ver. XVI.

To do good, and to distribute forget not : for with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

IN the tenth Verse the Apostle saith, We have an Altar, of which they have no right to eat, that serve the Tabernacle. Habemus Altare. We have, that is, Christians: So it is proprium Christianorum, proper to Christians: not common to the Jewes together with Christians; they have no right to communicate, and eat there, that serve the Tabernacle. And yet it is commune Altare, a common Altar to all Christians, they have all right to eat there.

And so it is externum Altare, not only a spiritual Altar in the heart of every Christian; then S. Paul should have said habeo, or habet unusquisque, I have, and every Christian hath in private to himself: but we have an Altar, that is, all Christians have; and it must be External, else all Christians cannot have it.

Our Head CHRIST offered His Sacrifice of Himself upon the Crosse; Crux Altare CHRISTI: and the Crosse of CHRIST was the Altar of our Head, where he offered the unicum, verum, & proprium Sacrificium, the only, true, proper sacrifice, propitiatory for the finnes of mankind; in which all other sacrifices are accepted, and applicatory of this propitiation.

1 The Only Sacrifice, one in it self, and once only offered, that purchased Eternal Redemption: and if the Redemption be Eternal, what need is there, that it should be offered more than once, when once is all-sufficient?

2 And the True Sacrifice: All other are but Types and Representations of this sacrifice; this only hath power to appease GOD'S wrath, and make all other Sacrificers, and sacrifices acceptable.

And the Proper Sacrifice: As the Psalm saith, Corpus aptasti mihi, thou hast fitted me with a Body: the Deity assumed the Humanity, that it might accipere a nobis quod offerret pro nobis; being the Deity could not offer, nor be offered to it self, He took flesh of ours, that he might offer for us.

Now as Christs Crosse was His Altar, where He offered Himself for us; so the Church hath an Altar also, where it offereth it self: not Christum in capite, but Christum in membris, not Christ the Head properly (but only by commemoration) but Christ the members. For, Christ cannot be offered truly, and properly, no more but once upon the Crosse; For he cannot be offered again, no more than He can be dead again: and dying and shedding blood, as He did upon the Crosse, and not dying, and not shedding blood, as in the Eucharist, cannot be one Altar of Christ offered on the Crosse, and of Christ offered in the Church at the Altar by the Priest, by Representation only, no more than Christ and the Priest are one person : and therefore though in the Crosse and the Eucharist there be Idem sacrificium, the same sacrificed thing, that is the Body and Blood of Christ, offered by Christ to His Father on the Crosse, and received and participated by the Communicants in the Sacrifice of the Altar ; yet Idem sacrificium quoad actionem sacrificii, or sacrificandi, it is impossible there should be the same sacrifice, understanding by sacrifice the action of sacrifice. For then, the Action of Christs sacrifice, which is long since past, should continue as long as the Eucharist shall endure, even unto the worlds end ; and his consummatus est is not yet finished : And dying and not dying, shedding of blood and not shedding of blood, and suffering and not suffering cannot possibly be one action : and the Representation of an Action cannot be the Action it self.

Cor. II. Fan-stum, lib. 20. 21.
Ad Hebr. Hom.

And this conceipt was unknown to Antiquity. All the Fathers held it a sacrifice, only because it is a Representation or Commemoration of the True sacrifice of Christ upon the Crosse ; even as our Saviour commanded, Do this in remembrance of me. Saint Augustine saith, Hujus sacrificii caro & sanguis, ante adventum Christi, per victimas similitudinum promittebatur : in passione Christi, per ipsam Veritatem reddebatur : post ascensum Christi, per Sacramentum memoria celebratur, &c. And Saint Chrysostome, Hoc est exemplar illius, &c. And Thomas Aquinas giving the reason of the diverse Names given to this Sacrament, saith, that it hath a triple signification. 1. Respectu preteriti, one in respect of the Time past, inasmuch as it is commemorative of the LORD'S Passion, which is called a true sacrifice, and according to this, it is called a sacrifice. 2. Respectu presentis, in respect of the present, that is, of the Unity of the Church, unto which men are gathered by this Sacrament, and according to this it is named a Communion, or Synaxis, because by it we communicate with Christ, and are partakers of his Flesh and Deity. 3. Respectu futuri, in respect of that which is to come, inasmuch as this Sacrament is prefigurative of the fruition of GOD, which shall be in heaven ; and accordingly it is called viaticum, because it here furnisheth us in the way, that leads us thither. Again, it is called the Eucharist, that is, bona gratia, the good grace, because Eternal life is the grace of God, Rom. VI. or else, because it really containes Christ, who is full of grace. It is also called Metalepsis, or Assumptio, because by it we assume the Deity of the Son. All this, Part. III. Q. LXXII. Artic. III. In corpore. And in his Answer at III. he addeth, That this Sacrament is called a Sacrifice, inasmuch as it doth represent the Passion of Christ ; it is likewise called Hostia an Host, inasmuch as it containeth Christ himself, who is Hostia salutaris, Ephes. V.

Here is a Representative, or Commemorative, and Participated Sacrifice of the Passion of Christ, the True Sacrifice, that is past ; and here is an Eucharistical Sacrifice ; but for an External proper Sacrifice, especially as sacrifice doth signifie the Action of sacrificing, here is not one word. And therefore this is a new conceipt of latter men, since Thomas his time, unknown to him, and a meer Novellism. And the cure is as bad as the Disease : Though Thomas gives no other reasons, why it is called a sacrifice, yet (say they) Thomas denieth it nor. For, that is plainly to confesse that this is but a patch added to Antiquity. And yet when he saith, it is a Representative or Commemorative Sacrifice respectu preteriti, in respect of that which is past, that is, the Passion of Christ, which was the true Sacrifice, he doth deny by consequence, that it is the true sacrifice it self which is past. And if Christ be sacrificed daily in the Eucharist, according to the Action of Sacrifice, and it to be one and the same sacrifice offered by Christ on the Crosse, and the Priest at the Altar, then can it not be a Representation of that sacrifice which is past, because it is one and the same sacrifice and action present.

Therefore Saint Paul proceeds in the XV. Verse : By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to His Name. Let us offer up to GOD ; Christians then have an offering : and let us offer up to GOD continually ; this is the ground of the daily Sacrifice of Christians, that answereth to the daily sacrifice of the Jewes. And this sacrifice of praise and thanks may well be understood the Eucharist, in which we chiefly praise and thank God for this his chief and great blessing of our Redemption. And this and all other Sacrifices of the Church external or spiritual must be offered up and accepted per Ipsum, in, by, and through Christ. S. Paul saith not, Ipsam offeramus, Let us offer Him (that is) Christ ; but let us offer and sacrifice per Ipsum by him, in whom only we and our sacrifice are accepted. And Rom. XII. I. Offerite corpora, Offer your bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service : It is not Corpore sine animis, not bodies without soules, For in them without soules, there is no life, no holiness, no accepting : and this is mans reasonable service ; all else is without reason. And S. Peter (the first Pope as they reckon him, who I am assured had infallibility) saith I Pet. II. V, Ye also as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, and holy Priesthood, to offer up spiritual Sacrifices acceptable to God, per Ipsum Christum, by JESUS CHRIST. And Saint James (Chap. I. Ver. XVIII.) tells us, that to this end God began us by his Word of truth, that we might be primitie creaturarum : not offer to God the first fruits of our fields or cattle, but that we might offer up our selves as first fruits to God. So all the offerings of the Church are the Church it self ; and Christ the Head offered corpus naturale, his natural Body, his soul and flesh for a sacrifice ; for the ransom and price of our sinne, thereby purchasing eternal Redemption, Heb. 10. 11. and by this one offering He perfected for ever them that are sanctified, Verse 13. Neither doth Christ there (that is) in heaven where he now appears in the presence of God, offer often, or any more for us, but this one ; there is appearing, but no offering. And the Apostle gives the reason of it. For then he must have often suffered since the foundation of the the world, Heb. 9. 24, 25, 26. He appears in heaven as our High Priest, and makes intercession for us; but He offers his natural body no more but once, because he suffers but once. No offering of Christ (by S. Pauls rule) without the suffering of Christ: the Priest cannot offer Christs natural body without the suffering of Christs natural body.

So likewise the Church, which is Christs mystical body, offers not Christs natural body: it hath no power to offer the natural body, which is proper to Christ only, Pono animam & nemo tollit; not the Church, nor they that are not the Church. And there is no such thing in Scripture, nor I presume can easily be shewed out of any of the probable and undoubted Fathers, but the Church offers corpus mysticum, Christs mystical body (that is, itself) to God in her daily Sacrifice.

First, all sacrifice is proper and due only to God. Be men never so venerable, never so worshipfull, yea adorandi, to be adored also, yet no man ever offered sacrifice to any, unless he knew him, or thought him or feigned him to be God. True Angels would never accept Sacrifice: and wicked Angels only sought it, because they also affected to be deified.

In which respect, never any Priest at the Altar, even super corpus Martyris, over the body or sepulchre of any Martyr, prayed thus, Offero tibi Sacrificium, Petre, Paule, Cypriane, I offer sacrifice to Thee, ô Saint Peter, Saint Paul, or Saint Cyprian. All celebrities towards them, whether praises to GOD for their victories, or Exhortations to their imitation, are only Ornamenta memoriarum, the Ornaments of their memories, not Sacra, nor Sacrificia mortuorum, tanquam Deorum, not the sacred things or Sacrifices of the dead, as if they were GOD'S, Lib. 8. C. 27.

And therefore Saint Augustine often denies Temples, Altars, and Sacrifices inward and outward, visible and invisible to all Martyrs and Saints, as being proper and peculiar to GOD only. And I trust, Prayers and Invocation be in this number. For as Orantes & Laudantes, praying and praising, we direct our signifying words to him, to whom we offer the things signified in our hearts: so sacrificing, we know the visible sacrifice is to be offered to no other but to him, whose visible sacrifice in our hearts we our selves ought to be, Nos esse debemus, Lib. X. Cap. XIX. And then it followeth in the XX. Chapter. The true Mediator inasmuch as taking upon Him the form of a servant, the Man JESUS CHRIST became a Mediator of God and Man; whereas in the form of GOD He takes sacrifice with His Father, yet in the form of a servant, Maluit esse, quam sumere, He chose rather to be a Sacrifice, than to receive Sacrifice; lest even by this occasion any man might think he might sacrifice to a Creature, by this (Nature) He is a Priest; the same the offerer and the same the thing offered: Cujus rei sacramentum, of which things he would have the daily Sacrifice of the Church to be a Sacrament, qua cum ipsius capitis corpus sit, seipsam per ipsum discit offerre: which Church being the body of our Head himself, doth learn to offer it self (that is, the Church) by Him, that is, by Christ. Here the Body of the Head, is the mystical body of Christ: and therefore the daily Sacrifice of the Church is not the Natural Body of Christ, but the Mystical Body that offers it self to God by Christ. This made Saint Augustine to say of Angels, and Elect and Glorious Saints, Nec illis sacrificemus, sed cum illis sacrificium Deo sumus. Let us not sacrifice to them, but let us be a sacrifice to God together with them, cap. XXV.

But a singular and full place we have in the Xth. Book, and VI. Chap. Where having shewed what Sacrifice is, that is, every work which is performed, that we may cleave to God in an holy Society, being referred to that end of good, by which we may be truly blessed: (as a man consecrated to the name of God, and dying to the world, that he may live to God, is a Sacrifice, as the Body chastened by temperance, is a Sacrifice, such as the Apostle calls for, Offer up your bodies to be a Living Sacrifice, Rom. 12. 1. And if the body, the servant and instrument of the soul, much more the soul it self is a sacrifice; As likewise works of mercy and the like:) Hence (saith he) it cometh to passe, Ut tota ipsa, redempta civitas societasq; sanctorum universale sacrificium offeratur Deo, &c. [That the whole redeemed City and society of the Saints is offered up an universal sacrifice to God, by our great Priest; who also offered himself in His passion for us, that we might be the body of so great a Head, in the form of a servant. For this he offered: in this he was offered, because according to this he is our Mediator, in this our Priest, in this our Sacrifice.] and then urging again the Apostles words, Rom. 12. 1. of offering our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to GOD, which is our reasonable service of Him, he adds, Quod totum sacrificium ipsi nos sumus [All which whole sacrifice we are:] We the Members are this whole sacrifice, not Christ the Head. For as in the body there are many members, and many offices of those members; so we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members of one another, having divers gifts according to the grace given us. Hoc est sacrificium Christianorum, multi unum corpus sumus in Christo, [this is the sacrifice of Christians, many are one body in Christ.] This must necessarily be the mystical body of Christ; the natural body it cannot be: Quod etiam Sacramento Altaris Fidelibus noto frequentat Ecclesia; ubi ei demonstratur, quod in illa oblatione quam offert, ipsa offertur: [Which Sacrifice the Church also frequents in the Sacrament of the Altar, well known to the faithfull; in which it is demonstrated to the Church, that in that oblation which the Church offers, the Church it self is offered.] I hope, the Church is the mystical body of Christ, not the natural, Lib. XX. cap. X. Ipsam vero sacrificium corpus est Christi, quod non offertur ipsis, quia hoc sunt & ipsi; denying Temples, Altars and Sacrifices to Martyrs and Saints: he saith [The sacrifice it self is the Body of Christ, which is not offered to them, because they are also this sacrifice.] This may suffice to satisfy any reasonable man of the Sacrifice of the Church, in Saint Augustines judgement. Yea give me leave to add one place more, because it may stand for many: and that in Lib. 13. cap. 13. Nec jubent, &c. [Neither do they they command, that we should Sacrifice to them, but only to Him, whose Sacrifice we together with them ought to be a Sacrifice, ut sape dixi, & sape dicendum est, as I have often said, and must often say.]

This then is the daily Sacrifice of the Church in Saint Augustine's resolute judgement, even the Church it self, the Universal Body of Christ, not the Natural Body; whereof the Sacrament is an Exemplar, and a Memorial only, as hath been shewed. And when they shall prove the Churches Sacrifice to be the Natural Body of Christ, and the same sacrifice with the Sacrifice of the cross, as it denoteth the Action or Sacrificing, because the Fathers often use the word corpus Christi, The Body of Christ, they shall be further answered.

In the mean time the Church of England in her reformed Liturgie (offering our selves, our soules, and bodies to be a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service of Him) may truly and boldly say, that in this she hath farre exceeded their Canon of their Masse, in which there is not one syllable, that mentions the sacrifice of our selves and soules and bodies, which is the only thing that God looks and calls for at our hands, and in Christ our Head, is most pleasing; nay more, only pleasing to Him, and in our power to offer properly.

We deny not then the daily Sacrifice of the Church (that is, the Church it self) warranted by Scriptures and Fathers. We take not upon us to sacrifice the natural Body of CHRIST otherwise than by the commemoration, as CHRIST Himself, and Saint Paul doth prescribe. They rather, that take a power never given them over the natural body of CHRIST, which once offered by Himself purchased Eternal Redemption all-sufficient for sin, to offer it again and often, never thinking of the offering of CHRIST'S mystical body, the Church, that is, our selves, our soules and bodies; they (I say) do destroy the daily Sacrifice of Christians, which is most acceptable to God.

Now then that which went before in the Head Christ on the cross; is daily performed in the members, in the Church. Christ there offered Himself once for us; we daily offer our selves by Christ, that so the whole mystical Body of Christ in due time may be offered to GOD.

This was begun in the Apostles, in their Liturgie, of whom it is said (Acts 13.) Ministrantibus illis, while they ministered and prayed, the Holy Ghost said unto them, &c; Erasmus reads it, Sacrificantibus illis, while they sacrificed and prayed. If they had offered Christ's Natural body, the Apostles would surely have made some mention of it in their Writings, as well as they do of the commemorative Sacrifice. The word is λειτουργία so it is a Liturgical Sacrifice; or a sacrifice performed or offered in our Liturgy or form of Gods worship: so the offering of our selves, our soules, and bodies, is a part of Divine worship.

Now as it is not enough to feed our own soules, unlesse we also feed both the soules and bodies of the poor; And there is no true fast, unlesse we distribute that to the poor, which we deny to our own bellies and stomachs; And there cannot be a perfect and compleat adoration of GOD in our devotions; unlesse there be also doing good and distributing to our Neighbours; therefore to the Sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the Eucharist, in the Church, mentioned in the fifteenth Verse, we must also add beneficence and communication in this Text: For, Devotio debetur capiti, Beneficentia membris, the sacrifice of Devotion is due to our Head CHRIST, and piety and charity is due to the Members. So then, offer the Sacrifice of praise to GOD daily in the Church, as in the fifteenth Verse; and distribute and communicate the Sacrifice of compassion and Almes to the poor out of the Church, as in this Text.

Shall I say extra Ecclesiam; out of the Church? I do not say amiss, if I do say so: yet I must say also, intra Ecclesiam; this should be a sacrifice in the Church, the Apostles kept it so in their time; Primo Die, the first day of the week, when they came together to pray and to break bread, Saint Paul's rule was, Separet unusquisque; Let every one set apart; or lay by in store, as GOD hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings, when I come. And our Liturgy in the Offertory tenders her Prayers and Almes on the Lords day or Sunday, as a part of the sacrifice or service of that day and of GOD'S Worship; which I wish were more carefully observed among us For this also is a Liturgie or Office, so called by the Apostle, 2 Cor. 9. 12. ἡ διακονία τῆς λειτουργίας, the Administration of this Service, or Office, or Liturgie: there is the word Liturgie or Office. For, the daily service and sacrifice not only supplieth the want of the Saints; but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto GOD. So the Lords day or Sunday is then best kept and observed, when to our prayers and praises and sacrifices of our selves, our soules and bodies, we also add the sacrifices of our goods and Almes, and other works of mercy to make it up perfect and compleat, that there may be Opus diei in die suo, the work of the day in the proper day thereof; and these two sacrifices of praise and Almes joyned here by GOD and his Apostle, may never be parted by us in our lives and practice.

First then we see, that as our SAVIOUR first preached in the Mount, and then healed in the Cities and Townes; so when we have offered our selves, our soules, and bodies, to be living and spiritual sacrifices in the Church unto GOD, by our High Priest CHRIST, we must not rest there, but must also offer our goods and almes, whether in the Church or out of the Church, to the relief of the poor members of CHRIST, that are in want. And that these two: 1 the sacrifice of Praise, 2 and the sacrifice of Almes may appear to be indivisible and inseparable, insomuch that he that will give himself, his soul, and body to GOD, will never spare also to give his goods to those that suffer hunger, and thirst, and nakedness; See how our Apostle joynes these things. 1. First, Per Ipsum offeramus; By CHRIST our High Priest; Let us offer our selves: and last that should be thought, to be all the whole Sacrifice, that man is to render to his GOD; He adds this second, with a Nolite oblivisci; by a kind of Negative, which is many times more forcible than any ordinary Affirmative: to do good, and to distribute forget not: seeming as it were, left when man had done his homage and fealty to GOD, of whom he holds in chief, he might think, that were enough to sacrifice to GOD in the Church on the Lords day, and then forget his Brother all the week after, and never to take compassion on him: whereas the truth is, Unus amor, but duplex obiectum: the love is but one, wherewith we love God for Himself, and our brother who is Gods image for His sake, as there be two eyes, yet but one visual faculty. For as it is to no purpose, to learn our duty at the mouth of Gods Preachers on the Lords day, and never to put it in practice all our week, or life following, as if it were a matter only for the brain and understanding; whereas in truth, first it should edifie our faith, and then fructifie in our lives: So it is a very short love to profess to love God, whom we have not seen, and starve our poor brethren, who lye at our gates in such sort, that we cannot choose but see them.

So then the words contain, first an A&, Beneficentia & communicatio; to do good, and to distribute: and that must needs be a great work, for it is to do good, and nothing is truly great, but that which is good. 2. A Caveat, Nolite oblivisci, it is a work of great consequence, very important to our salvation, it may not be forgotten. 3. How small or vile it may seem in it self, yet it is of a high rate and great esteem: sacrificia sunt, & valia sunt; they are sacrifices and sacrifices of much price, though they be but crumbs of bread, or drops of water: And so much the more precious, because they are grateful to God; delectatur, or placatur Deus, God is pacified, or God is well pleased: and all the world is well given to appease and pacifie His wrath, and gain His favour.

The division;

Now the work is comprised in two words, Beneficentia & communicatio: beneficence and distribution. Beneficence or bounty, that is, Affectio cordis; the affection and compassion of the heart: And Communication and distribution; that is Opus manuum; the work of the hand. And these two may be no more divided, than the two other sacrifices, of devotion in the sacrifice of our selves, and charity in the Relief of the poor: For Beneficence is ut Fons, as the fountain and spring or cistern, whence all works of compassion do arise; and distribution is ut Rivulus, as the Rivers or channels or pipes, by which the waters of comfort and goodnesse are carried to hungry soules.

Beneficence is as the Sun, distribution is as the light that proceeds from the Sun: At the beneficence of the heart there we must begin, and by the distribution and communication of the hand, there is the progresse. And it is not enough that our heart is charitable, and full of compassion, if we be clusster-fisted, and close-handed, and give nothing: Go and be warm, and go and be fed, and go and be clothed, they be verba compassionis, words of compassion: but if we do not as well feed and cloath, as our tongue blesseth, we may have gentle hearts like Jacobs voice, but our hands will be cruel and hairy like Esau, that vowed to kill his Brother.

And true Religion is no way a gargalism only, to wash the tongue and mouth, to speak good words: it must root in the heart, and then fructifie in the hand, else it will not cleanse the whole man.

Now, God only is good, and the universal good of all things; and goodnesse it self: If there be any good in man, it is particular, not universal, and it is participatum: man is not good in himself, but only by participation: Goodnesse in God is Essentia, essence and being; and He is so goodnesse, that He cannot be but goodnesse, good in Himself, and good of Himself.

In man goodnesse is Accidens; an Accident; and such an accident, as most commonly he is devoid of it, but only by the grace and likeness of GOD: So that man is good sola similitudine bonitatis divinae, only by the similitude and imitation of the divine good: the nearer to God, the nearer to goodnesse; and the further from God the more removed from all goodnesse. So that as in every good, the greatest good is most desired: so in doing good, that is ever best, that joynes us most to our greatest good.

All creatures are said to be good, by the goodnesse of God, ut principio, as the principle, and efficient cause of all good. 2. ut exemplari, as the pattern and exemplar, and Idea, according to which all good things are fashioned. 3. ut fine, as the end and final cause for which all things were made.

And the like is in this beneficence and doing of good. For first, it must be good a causa, in regard of the first and efficient cause, which is God: as the good fruit proceeds from the good tree, and the tree owes his goodnesse to God that transplants and waters it. 2. It must be good in fundamento, in respect of the foundation: as the house, as the living stones and spiritual buildings are therefore good, because they are built upon the immoveable foundation, the Rock Christ. And 3. It must be good a fine, from the end to which it is referred: it takes beginning from the Holy Ghost; and the riches of Graces, and it must be directed only to the supreme and grand end of all things, Gods glory, and the relief of the poor members of Christ.

And these two, Beneficence and Communication, the eminent and imperated Acts of true Religion, the mother of all Vertues, they are also the acts of many other particular Vertues. For first, they are the Acts of Charity, because they proceed from the love of God: 2. They are the acts

acts

3 acts of Justice, because Relief and sustentation is the due debi, that is owing to the poor : 3. They are 4 the acts of Liberality and Bounty, because the free gift of men ; not the merit of the needy :
 4 They are the acts of Mercy, because they participate with the wants and miseries of the afflicted.

So that as impendere, is Bonitatis : to do good, and distribute, and bestow is the act of goodnesse ; so likewise rependere, to pay them, where we owe them, is Iustitia, the work of Justice. And therefore our goods, they are not properly ours, in such sort that we can carry them with us, when we go hence : but they are bona pauperum ; so our goods, that they are also the goods of the poor, whereof we are rather Stewards, than Proprietaries and Lords : and he that so keeps and hoards them, that he doth not expend them, to buy the Kingdom of heaven with them, at the hands of the poor (Ipsum est Regnum) he doth indeed detinere alienum ; he defrauds the poor, and detains that which is anothers. And therefore the Psalm saith, Dispersit, dedit pauperibus, Iustitia Eius manet in aeternum (Psalm 112.9.) He hath dispersed and given to the poor : his righteousness endures for ever ; not his mercy only, but his justice also.

Where, by the way observe ; that there it is first, Dispersit, dedit ; he dispersed and gave to the poor : here, in the Text that lies before me this day, it is Dedit, dispersit ; He gave it, and then he dispersed it, to the poor, in such sort, that He did as it were study how to dispence it to all sorts of poor, even as many kinds of poor, as He could devise and find fit to receive it, learned old men, widows, children and prisoners, and the like.

And this goodnesse whether we must understand it plainly, as the Intention of the heart, that doth the good, and the works of the hand, that distributes and divides it : or whether we understand it, as some do, that there is Beneficentia in iis qua damur ; beneficence in those things that are given : and Communicatio in iis qua servantur, Communication in those things that we give not : because in these times, Omnia erant communia, All things were in common, and so they did communicate even those things which they did not communicate and distribute : This goodnesse, I say, hath two properties of true goodnesse : First, it is diffusivum sui ; diffusive of it self, it imparts it self to as many as it can, it heaps not all upon one, as those do that rob all others, that they may enrich their heir : Secondly, it is unicum Deo, & proximo, it is unitive, and unites us to God, for whose sake we do it, and to our Neighbour to whom we do it.

And surely as in the civil States, Quid leges sine moribus vana proficiunt ? What will the best lawes profit us, if there be no obedience ; no manners ? are they not altogether vain, of lesse force than Spiders webs ? and in Christianity, Quid fides sine operibus ? What will faith and knowledge profit us, if it frustifie not in life and works ? what can Devotion, and Justice profit, if Almes follow not ? He that will send an Embassage to God, that shall surely speed, he must send sighs from his heart, tears from his eyes, prayers from his mouth, and also alms from his hands, and they will prove of that force, that God cannot deny them.

And if we will take with us the resolution of the Learned, out of the form of the last Judgment, it will amount to thus much ; that not only Peccata commissionis, sinnes of commission, or sinnes committed will condemn us, but also Peccata omissionis, sinnes of omission, or omission of doing good, as not feeding and cloathing the poor, will cast us into hell : and auferre aliena & non dare sua, to take other mens goods from them, either by force or fraud, and not to give our own to the poor, both are damnable, though not in the same degree. And therefore our Saviours counsel is well worth our learning (Luke 16.) Make you friends of the unrighteous Mammon, that when you shall fail, they may receive you into everlasting Tabernacles. And these external gifts they are the viaticum, or vians to carry us to heaven : for though Non hic Caelum, heaven be not here in this life ; yet Hic quaritur Caelum, here in this life heaven is to be sought, and here it is either found or lost. So then, shall we fast from meat, and not from sin ? shall we pray, and rob the poor ? shall our tongue praise charity, and our hands spoil those that need our charity ? G O D forbid.

And now, most glorious Bounty, and Communication, and Distribution, what shall I say of thee ? but that thou art Vita sanctorum ; the very life, and joy, and delight of all Saints : and when Saints must leave this life, and all things else leave them, and they leave all things ; yet thou leavest them not, but art Comes defunctorum the unseparable companion of the dying. For of all that a man hath, there is nothing that shall accompany him to the Tribunal of the great Judge of the quick and the dead, but Peccata & bona opera, Sinns and good works : and then it will appear, that the voice of a few good works, done for Christs sake, will speak lowder and plead harder, and more effectually for us, than all our glorious words and professions.

And this doing good and distributing, is not only profitable, but admirable also, For why ? by evils and wants of others, it self is bettered ; and it becomes beautiful, by the uncleanness and nastiness of the wretched : it is enriched by others poverty, by others infirmities it grows strong ; and bearing of burdens attols and lifts it up : and therein of all other it is happy, de spinis colligit uvas ; it does that, which CHRIST denies to be feasible, it gathers grapes of thornes, and sweetest consolation out of greatest miseries ; and that which is contrary to all Nature, and Natural reason, ex agro sterilissimo paupertatis, messiem copiosissimum colligit, out of the most barren fields of poverty, it reapes the most plentiful harvest. And herein are these two Vertues most to be admired, Misericordia miseriam aliorum facit nostram, Mercie makes other mens miseries and calamities to be our own : and Charitas facit bona nostra proximorum, Charity makes our goods to be our Neighbours.

If a travelling man were heavy loaden, were it not a great and happy ease for him, if his fellow low-traveller would bear part of his burden? And Divitia, onus: Riches is a heavy load, it presses down many so much, that they are never able to climb up to heaven. What is then to be done? Da partem comiti: give thy companion (the poor man) a part with thee, thou shalt refresh him that is weary of his wants, and thy self shall runne most lightly and nimbly to Heaven gates.

And now if thou wilt do as my Text teacheth (that is, to do good, and distribute) yet take these few rules in the way, they will make thee to make the more and better speed. First, do it Voluntari, willingly: not by compulsion, as if it were a grievous tax or seaze: For GOD more regards thy affection, than thy gift; the widows two mites, more than great heapes of treasure: and why? GOD is Ponderator spirituum, non panis aut moneta: GOD is a weigher of the spirits, rather than of bread and money. 2. Do it hilariter, chearfully: for thou well knowest what GOD loves most, that is, a chearful giver. He doth not respect Quid, what is that thou givest; but Ex Quanto, the chearful heart it comes from. 3. Do it Affabiliter, with kind words and fair language: Not of a wearinesse to be rid of a begger, as the unjust Judge righted the importunate widow; but out of compassion to relieve him. And certainly, when there is Pietas in re, Compassion and pity in the deed, non sit in verbis contumelia: though thou give him good counsel, yet load him not with reproaches and contumelies; upbraid him not with his want or diseases; for GOD might have turned the Tables, and made him as rich as Abraham, and thee as poor and infirm as Job or Lazarus. 4. Do it Festinanter, speedily: for Blessed is he that considereth the poor and needy, and prevents his petition: For, this is indeed to give twice, to give quickly; to have his money or his bread prepared and ready at his hand, as more ready to give than they to ask: And this is indeed Quarere pauperes, quibus benefacias, to seek and search for poor, to whom thou mayst do good: and know withall that Abraham's Speed to entertain CHRIST and His Angels, made sinum Abrahæ receptaculum Lazari: Abraham's bosome to be the receptacle and place of Rest to Lazarus, as well as Lazarus's patience advanced him to Abraham's bosome. And 5. Do it Humiliter, in all humility: Ut eluas peccatum, non ut corrumpas iudicem: to Redeem thine own sinnes by thine Almes, as David said to Nebuchodonozar, but not to corrupt thy Judge, that thou mayst sinne more freely, more securely. For, GOD is like to hear the loudest cry; and it may be the cry of thy sinne, may decry or cry down thine Almes; and the scale of sin make thine Almes to be found too light.

Again, take I beseech you these things into your consideration: First, Quis petit? Who it is, that askes an Almes of thee. Thou takest it to be the poor man; but thou mistakest it, it is DEUS in paupere, & CHRISTUS in paupere: GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer in the poor man: and dost thou hoord up for thy wife, or thy child, or thy servant, that will spend it in riot; Et negas Creatori, vel Redemptori; and dost thou deny to GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer, that bought thee with his own blood and life.

Secondly, Quid petit? what it is that he doth ask: in short, Suum non tuum: He askes not thine, thou hast only the use, and dispose of it, but He askes His own; and what hast thou, that thou hast not received? even to thy self, thy soul, and thy body, all the gifts of Nature, and all the gifts of grace? And when all is said, this is indeed all, Da quod dedi: give me that I first gave thee, a fruit of mine own Tree; I bestowed it on thee: Da & reddam, give me but some crummes, some drops out of thy heap, out of thy Fountain, I will repay it: Nay, da & debitor ero; give me any part, I will become a debtor to thee upon my word and promise, to repay it in Heaven.

Thirdly, Ad quid, To what purpose doth GOD ask thee by the poor man? to gain it to himself? No, ad mutuandum, only to borrow of thee; and be assured, he is the best pay-master, he will restore to thee an hundred fold. And wilt thou lend to a Jew, or a Turk for ten or eight in the hundred; Et Deo non accommodas, and wilt not lend to thy Creator and Redeemer, who will give an everlasting weight of glory for thy crummes and drops.

And fourthly, Quid daturus, qui petit; what will He give thee, that now begs of thee? For thy broken bread and mear, He will make thee partaker of the Feast of the Lamb; and for a few drops of water, He will crown thee in the Kingdom of glory: pro poculo aqua frigida, torrens voluptatis; for a cup of cold water (water the common element, and cold water, that cost thee not the charge of a fire to warm it) there is a torrent, nay, a very sea of pleasures provided for thee for all Eternity.

Do good then and distribute; but do it Manibus propriis with thine own hands, if thou canst spare it: nor by other mens hands, which may die soon after thee, or else deceive thy trust. Lucerna in manibus, non a tergo, hang nor thy light at thy back, to shine after thy death; but carry it in thy hand; be Executor of thine own Will. And do it Secreto; in secret, without a Trumpet: The seed must be buried or harrowed under the earth, else it neither roots nor multiplies: which though perdi videtur, it seems to be lost, yet unless it be thus sowed and buried, revera perditur, it will be lost indeed: And the more thou sowest, the more thou shalt reap, for he that sows sparingly, shall reap sparingly.

And now in the second place, mark the Caution: Nolite oblivisci: to do good, and to distribute forget not. Offer the sacrifice of praise daily: and if daily, it is likely enough to be remembered, bred, because it never was forgotten, never omitted in the Church; whether thou art put, as to the School of Memory. This is but lip-labour; or at the most but an heart-labour, it costs nothing but breath: but to give Almes: to do good, and to distribute, that costs more; it will put thee to the charge of bread, and water, and cloathes, and the like, which is chargeable and burdensome. Any thing but our purses: No, that must not be left out neither: To do good and to distribute, to rob thine own back and thy belly, to feed the hungry and cloath the naked, Nolite oblivisci; forget not to add the Sacrifice of Almes, to that other of devotion and praise.

And surely, I may call this the Chapter of Remembrances, or the Remembrancers Chapter. In the second Verse: Memento hospitalitatis, forget not to be hospitable: Abraham entertained Angels: yea, the Son of GOD, the LORD of Angels by his hospitality. In the third Verse: Memento victorum, & afflictorum laborantium; Remember those that are in bonds, and afflicted, being your selves in bonds and adversity together with them: for, as CHRISTUS pascitur in eis, so in carceratur; as CHRIST is fed in the poor, so he is imprisoned with them that are in bonds, and exiled with his exiled members, and condemned to the Mines, with those that are chained in the Mines: and it is an impossibility to banish the Head from His Members, in whom he lives, and they in Him. In the eight Verse: Memento Præpositorum, Remember your Governours, that have the Rule over you: you owe much to them that have sown in you the Word of GOD, whose faith is a light or example to you. So here, To do good, and to distribute forget not. The rest are particulars, Hospitality to strangers, Visitation to prisoners, comfort to the persecuted, and Sustainment to our spiritual Governours: but this in general, and extends to all; strangers, prisoners, persecuted, Governours, and all other men in need, in general; though with a precipue, chiefly to the Household of faith. For, every man is our neighbour, to whom charity is to be extended; but they are more nearly our Neighbours, to whom we stand bound by a double obligation and fraternity, of Nature, and Grace.

Why then is our Apostle so solicitous, that we forget not this doing good and distributing? A man would think, the precept need not be so strictly urged and inculcated, and that in the negative which binds Semper & ad semper, and therefore never to be forgotten. The Moralist gives a good Rule, Homo in homine calamitose misericors, meminit sui: That man that is merciful to a man in misery and calamity, remembers himself: he might have been in misery and need, as well as his afflicted Neighbour, if GOD had so disposed. Is it such a matter, to be so much and so often inculcated? Can a man forget himself? or can any man think that, that which falls to another man, might not fall upon him? Equal in nature, and grace, may also be equal in misery, if GOD will: Yes surely there is need: for he that beheld his face in a glasse, James 1.24. he went away, & statim oblitus est; straitway he forgetteth his own shape; his own spots and deformities, amends none of them, never thinks on them more, till he come to the glasse again: be the glasse never so true, never so pure, even as pure as the Word of GOD it self, yet so often as he comes, so often he forgets, therefore nothing is more needful then this not forgetting.

Matth. 13. 20.

And the truth is, most men are like to the young man, that said to our SAVIOUR CHRIST: All these things, the Commandements of GOD, custodivi ab adolescentia, have I kept from my youth; but yet he had not so strictly kept GOD'S Commandement, but that withal, custodivit bona omnia a pauperibus; he had more strictly kept all his goods from the poor: and because he had great substance, and loved it greatly, he had need to be remembered with Nolite oblivisci, Forget not to do good, and to distribute: for he was Custos pecunie, potius quam precepti; he was a keeper, but a keeper of money; and no keeper, but a breaker of the Commandement.

The Rich man and all his fellowes, Luke 16. have need of this, Forget not: He saw Lazarus full of sores, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, and the very sight of him, was conflatorium pietatis; the very bellows and Anvile of compassion: and he lay at his gate, he could neither go in, nor out, but he must look upon him, yet obliviscitur quod vidit; he forgot him that he saw, and could not choose but see him: Nay, he saw the dogs more merciful in licking his sores than himself was, in curing or feeding him: and therefore non accepit guttam aquæ, he received not one drop of water to cool his tongue. (He was a great, but a most miserable professour, and therefore his tongue was most tormented, because therein consisted all his Religion.) And the reason is, because non dedit micam panis, he would not give him so much as he gave his dogs, not one crumme of bread.

There be some that say, Matth. 25. 37, 44. Quando te vidimus esurientem, nudum, &c. When did we see Thee hungry or naked? Peradventure they saw Him, in his own person, in capite, as a particular man, the Head; but they could not but see Him, in membris; in His members, the poor: Vident pauperem, but CHRISTUM in paupere non vident; they saw the poor man, but CHRIST they saw not in the poor man: Here is great need of this Nolite oblivisci, Forget not to put them in mind, that they flatter not themselves with this ambiguity. To & Te totum: they see not the Man JESUS, the Head alone, but they cannot choose but see whole CHRIST, that is CHRIST the Head, and the poor, His Members.

Mat. 25. 18, 17:

There is one, and I would there were but one, that received a talent and hid it in a napkin under the earth: he was worthy to hear Serve nequam, Evil servant: For he knew his Masters will, that gave his talents to receive them with increase; his memory failed and had need to be rubbed with oblitus tradere usum; he forgot that which he did not forget; he forgot not to take use for his money, and use upon use, but he forgot the true and lawful use, to give it to the poor, and so to lend it to the Lord, who would surely have paid both principall and interest also; both the substantiall reward of eternal life, and also the accidental degree and measure of glory.

How many are there that forget the Preachers precept, Cast thy bread upon the waters? How many are there that say, My barnes are too little, I will pull them down and build bigger? who have been at the Schoole of forgetfulness, and do not remember, Quod ventres pauperum capiunt, quod horrea non capiunt, that the bellies of the poor are greater than the greatest barnes, and will receive and consume all that which the greatest barnes cannot hold; yea, the poor doe soe multiply, that the rich are not able to feed them. The foolish Rich-man said in the Gospel, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up in store for many years, but when he said so, he had not many houres to teckon, to eat and drinke and take his pleasure. Male recondita, male erogata; they were ill layed up, they had been much better distributed and scattered abroad. It may be they may passe all the degrees of comparison. Male parva; ill gotten by oppression, and fraud, and Rapine: And Peius detenta, worse kept and detained; that which is ill gotten may be worse kept; and so that is, that is scraped and extorted from all others, is denyed to all others, and most of all to himselfe, and God, and Christ: And Pessime erogata expended worst of all, in ryot and excesse, in pride and vanity, in cruelty and rebellion, in denying maintenance to the King and Country, or to the poor.

Eccle. 11. 2.
Luk. 12.

Luk. 12. 18, 19;

But howsoever ill gotten, worse imprisoned and debarted the light of the Sun: and worst of all so spent, that with them, the soul, and life, and Heaven it selfe is spent and lost: yet the truth is, they are then best kept, when they are well expended, and never better, then on the poor afflicted members of Christ, than in buying of Heaven. But if you will make a true conjunction indeed, they are then best recondita when best erogata, well stored and layd up, when they are well laid out. Reconde in sinu pauperum; The best house to lay them up, is to put them into the box and bosome of the poor: for that indeed is the safest and surest Treasury, safer then the Temple it selfe, the living Temples of God: A Treasury, Sine fure, Sine verme; without thief, without wormes; whatsoever is put there, deferunt Deo, the poor man will carry it to God, out of whose hands it can never be taken.

And this indeed the Art of Arts. Not the gold-making, Jugling art, which under the name of gold-making, is the consumer of gold: but the art of turning earth into heaven, and earthly almes into celestiall riches; dando, caelestes sunt, these transitory earthly things procure us the unspcakable riches and treasures of heaven. And now consider Cornelius's Almes and prayers ascended as a memoriall to God, and procured the great grace of the knowledge of Christ, and the gift of the Holy Ghost: and Dortus's Almes obtained her Resurrection to life: God remembered them both, and shall we forget to do good and distribute our almes, which have that force, that God will never forget them?

Ag. 12

God cannot forget them, if we do remember and perform them: Nay God holds them at a great rate, He accepts them as sacrifices, and such sacrifices as both please and please Him. Talibus sacrificiis, with such sacrifice God is pleased; talibus, with these of Praise and Almes; and with all those that are like; or of the same nature with these. Not with the sacrifices of Nature and Moses's Law: such are both Mortua and mortifera; dead in themselves, and mortiferous and deadly to all that shall use them. These had their time, and were accepted as types and figures, of the which they were partakers of Christ, and did eat of the same spirituall meat and the same spirituall drink, that we now eat and drink by faith, and the Rock that followed them was Christ.

Part III

No more then to doe with the sacrifice pecorum irruunt, of the flaine beasts; that is past: but cordis contritio, with the sacrifice of a broken and contrite heart: that was from the beginning, and so shall continue acceptable to God even to the end: the spirituall sacrifice, or the sacrifice of the soul and spirit, that is it, which God ever accepted in the sacrifice of His Son Christ, even from the first Adam, to the last Son of Adam, the last man that shall live at the last day. And GOD hath been and is weary of carnal and externall sacrifice, and neglected, yea, rejected it for the default and want of the inward sacrifice; but for this inward and spiritual sacrifice God will never be wearied with it.

In vocall prayer, and fasting, and outward almes, and the like, there may be Nimium too much; but of inward prayer and fasting from sin, and compassion and mercy, there can never be nimum, too much; nay, not sure, not enough; for GOD calls for all, and all we are not able to perform which we owe. So then, the sacrifice must be talibus: such sacrifices, that is, spirituall.

And they be sacrifices; in the plural number, sacrifices the representative, or memorial of Christ's sacrifice the Eucharist, which is truly the sacrifice of praise, and the daily sacrifice of our selves our soules and bodies in devotion and adoration to God: And the sacrifice of Mercy and Almes (both here recorded) these be the sacrifices, here mentioned that please GOD and all others not here mentioned that are included in the talibus: in such like sacrifices, God is pleased.

And be the number of them as great as any man please to make them, yet because they are all reducible to three, I will compasse them in the number of three. First, Sacrificium cordis contritum, the sacrifice of the contrite and broken heart, as before, which we tender to God in our Repentance; and sighs and teares for our sins. The second, Sacrificium cordis gratum, the sacrifice of the thankful heart; in praise and thanksgiving to God, called here, the sacrifice of praise, The third

third, Sacrificium cordis pii, the sacrifice of a pious and mercifull heart, in compassion and workes of Mercy, and Almes-deeds, called here, doing good and distributing.

All these, and every one of these, which are indeed but the variations, or divers affections of one and the same heart, they are the taliasacrificia: such sacrifices which God accepts: Saint Bernard was a skilfull confectioner, he made three rare and most odoriferous Oyntments of them most pleasing unto God Himselfe: The first, Unguentum contritionis, the ointment of contrition made of the sighs of the heart, and the teares of the eyes, the confession and prayers of the tongue, the revinge, the judgment, and execution done upon our own soules, for our sinnes: And this compunction in heart, though it be all made of bitter and sharpe poynant ingredients, yet the more sowre it is, the sweeter and more welcome it is to God. The second is Unguentum pietatis: the oyntment of piety and compassions, made up of the miseries and the wants of the poor; wherein the greater is the miserie, the greater is the mercy; and the more fellow-feeling and compassion of the pressures of the poor, the more odoriferous is the sacrifice to pacifie Gods wrath. The third is Unguentum devotionis, the oyntment of Devotion, which spends it selfe in praise and thanksgiving by the remembrance of His manifold blessings and graces, which cannot but be acceptable unto God, because though praise and glory be nothing unto God, who cannot be encreased by the breath of a mortall man; yet because it is all the Rent and tribute that man can render to his God, whereof to rob God is the greatest sacriledge, it is an oyntment most welcome to God, the rather, because man ever did himselfe the most hurt, when he kept glory back from God, and ascribed it to himself. In the LI. Psalm, The Oyntment of Contrition is accepted of God, with a Non despicies: the sacrifice of the broken and contrite heart, God will not despise the ointment of compassion in this place is accepted of God, with delectatur Deus: with such sacrifices God is pleased, The Oyntment of Praise goes somewhat higher with an Honorificat me: he that offers me praise he honoureth me, Psalm. L. So the contrite heart, the mercifull heart, and the thankfull heart; Talibus sacrificiis, with such sacrifices God is pleased: all of these together, and every one of these severally, and all others like unto these, they doe pacifie, and please, and delight God Himself.

Placatur or conciliatur, God is pacified or reconciled, as some read: Delectatur, God is pleased or delighted. Hilarescit, or pulchrescit, God is cheered or looks upon us with a serene or pleasant countenance: but the Vulgar will have it Promeretur Deus, God is promerited, in favour of merits. I will not much stand upon the word; be it promeretur, in the Fathers sense, in which, merit is via obtinendi, the way and meanes of obtaining, the matter is not great.

But the word in the proper sense, signifies no more but this, that God is pleased, or at most pacified with such sacrifices: and this is remarkable, that the same word, Hebr. XI. VI. signifies onely, God is well pleased, when it is spoken of faith. For, without faith it is impossible to please God, inoperatus is: but here inoperatus must be, Promeriti, as if workes were more meritorious than faith: when all the merits of workes proceed from grace and faith, as the goodnesse of the fruit is from the roote, and the sap thereof. And so, God may be both pacified and pleased, and yet no merit in us, but acceptance in God: for the best workes and sacrifices and righteousness in man, are so farre from the true merit, out of any dignity, or condignity of the worke, that they cannot stand before God without mercy and grace. The best and most laudable life of the best man, hath a Vae, or Woe, lying upon it, Si sine misericordia discentiatur, if it come to be discussed without mercy: and in the distinct judgement of God, no man, no not the man after Gods owne heart dare enter, but prays against it, Ne intres in iudicium cum servo tuo, Enter not into judgement with thy servant, O Lord (Psalm CXLIV. III.) and why? For, no flesh is righteous in thy sight; no flesh no man righteous or justified, then surely no true merit.

Brasse or copper money may be made currant by the Kings Proclamation, but still it is but brasse and copper, and wants of the true value of gold and silver: and good workes, and so doe good and distribute, may goe for currant, by Gods promise, and receive a reward out of justice, but Justice with mercy: for, there is Iustitia in reddendo, Justice in giving the Crowne according to his promise: but there is Misericordia in promittendo; Mercy that triumpheth over justice, in promising to give an infinite reward, to a finite worke, as heaven for a Cup of cold water, or bread, or drinke, or clothes and the like: and between the kingdome of heaven, and the crown of glory, and eternall life, which is infinite, and a few crummes or drops, or rags, which are scant so much as finite, there is no equality. Inter finitum & infinitum nulla est proportio, there is no proportion between that which is finite, and that which is infinite. So that as much as infinite doth exceed that which is finite, so much doth Gods infinite rewards, exceed the best finite works, of the best man. And the Rule of the Schoole in this is true: God punishes citra condignum, lesse than we deserve; so there is mercy in Gods Justice and punishments: and God rewards ultra meritum, beyond our merit or desert; and so eternall life is the grace, and free gift of God.

Infomuch that we may thus resolve; First, Non tenetur Deus: God is not bound to give us any reward for any dignity or worthiness of our workes. Secondly; Non Meremur nos, we deserve nothing, but are unprofitable servants, and our best workes are unperfect, and fall short of that perfection that Law and Justice do require. And thirdly, Non deoris tamen Deus: though God be not bound, and man merits not, yet God never failed any man, that did doe any good worke, but he was sure of his reward. For, though we be bound to good workes ex debito, of duty: God commands mands them, and requires an account of them: yet God is not bound to reward them ex debito, out of any debt owing to us for them: but onely ex pacto, out of His promise, and agreement. For eternal life is not a reward which men may exact and require in Justice at Gods hands; for his labour and hire; but it is His free gift: and therefore He calleth it not trium, thine, but Meriti, mine owne; May I not doe what I list with my owne.

What is the reason the Prophet saith (Psal. LXXI. XVI.) O Lord, Memoraber Iustitiam solius, I will remember thy righteousness onely, but because there is no other righteousness worth the remembrance, but onely thy righteousness onely; that righteousness that is a Domino, inherent in us by sanctification of the gifts and graces of the Lord, is not worth the remembrance, for it is a defiled cloth; and dung in it selfe; and were it never so good, God hath no need of it; nay, being offered to God, He is nothing increased by it. If thou do all good works, Deus minus es, & bonorum meritorum non indiges: Thou art my God (saith David, Psal. XVII. II.) my goods, and therein are his good works also, are nothing to thee: God is not increased or enriched by them. If thou do commit sin with all manner of greediness, thou canst not defile God, nor take any thing from him; thy evil cannot decrease or diminish him. But it is Iustitia in Domino, Righteousnesse in the Lord (that is) Christ's righteousness communicated, or imputed to us; for Christ is made to us wisdom from GOD, and Justice or righteousness and sanctification and redemption, and He doth not say, fecit nos, He made us righteous in the concrete; but falsus est nobis, He was made righteousness to us in the abstract, because He communicates His righteousness to us, and then by covers our nakednes, as Jacob clothed in his elder brothers garments received the blessing. And therefore the Name of the Son of God is Iehovah Iustitia nostra, The Lord our righteousness.

Besides, no man is accepted or well pleasing to God for his workes sake, but rather the work is accepted for the workmans sake: as God first Respexit Abelem, He respected or accepted of Abels person: and then follows & sacrificium ejus, and then his sacrifice: For, God cares not for Abels lambe, but because Abel the lambe, offered it: his heart and willing readinesse to offer a lambe, was pleasing, and He accepted the sacrifice. As in the Father of the Faithfull, God could not accept the sacrifices of Isaac, because he was not sacrificed falso, sed voluntate: not in deed, but only in vow, and will, and purpose: in him; Voluntas reputatur pro facto, his will was accepted for the sacrifice.

And in Cain's sacrifice, GOD made no difference between the lambe and the sheaf of corne, both which were after commanded equally in the Law, and the Panes propositionis were ever ioyned with a lambe. The difference was, he offered his eares of corne, but not himself: and therefore the words be, ad Cain vero, & alimenter ejus non respexit; But to Cain, and to his offering God had not respect: He accepted not his person, and therefore He regarded not his sacrifice. And therefore the Ancient say: That either of them offered parem cultu & religionem hostiam, an equall sacrifice in respect of Religion, and the worship of GOD: Sed non recte uterq; divisit: Cain made an ill division, he offered the fruits of the earth to God: Cor retinuit sibi, seipsum non obtulit, he reserved his heart to himselfe, and he offered not himselfe to God: but Abel first offered himself to God, and then his lambe.

And so Saint Paul's words are true; Abel offered a greater sacrifice to GOD than Cain. Greater first, Quia hostia aspiosior; because he offered aisable sacrifice, himself and his lambe: but Cain onely offered his corne. Secondly, Quia excellentior; he offered a more excellent sacrifice, better chosen, because de adipibus, of the fattest, and best of the flock: Cain carelessly took that came first to hand; de fructibus, of the fruit, and no more. Thirdly, Quia ex fide: by faith he offered it; and that faith justified him and his sacrifice, because he beleaved in the Seed of the Woman that should bruse the Serpents head. And so it is true, dignitas operantis, the faith and piety of the sacrificer, and worker, dignitatem confert operi, conferres all the worth to the worke. For if an Heathen or Turk do the same worke of Almes or mercy that the faithfull Christian doth, it shall passe without all regard; whereas the faithfull heart and person make the worke of the hand acceptable to the Lord.

So then, sacrifices of goodnesse and Almes or distribution there must be, they are necessary to Salvation in them that have time and opportunitie, and meanes: and therefore sufficit ad penam meritis carere, It is sufficient to punish us, if we want good workes. But there can be no trust or confidence placed in them; for, they are unperfected and defective, & therefore meritis nothing at Gods hand out of Justice, but onely are accepted out of GOD's mercy, and the infinite Merits of Christ, which is equall to His person that is infinite, as He is the eternall Son of God: and therefore, sufficit ad premium, demeritis non presumenda, the greatest part of the dignity of the best workes of the best men, is to renounce all trust and confidence in our selves, and our best workes, and to repose all our hope in the merits and meritis of Christ.

Now to returne to the use of the word [Promeretur], in Antiquity, I remember Saint Cyprian useth it not for the dignity and meritis of the best worke, but onely for the way or means of obtaining. For, reading that place of Saint Paul, I Tim. I. XII. [But I obtained mercy; because I did it ignorantly in unbelief]: he reads it thus: Sed Misericordiam merui: but I merited Mercy what was Merui, in Saint Cyprian's sense, but I obtained mercy; and so the Vulgar reads that place.

Again, speaking of those that were baptized, and signed, in the fore-head with the sign of the Crosse, he saith of Ozius the Leper, that he was maculatus with Leprosy, in that part of his his body in which they are signed, qui Dominum promittunt, which promises the Lord, so would our Rhemists read it: But the true understanding is they that promerited the LORD, that is, they that enter Covenant with the Lord, in Baptisme (de unitate Ecclesie; Numb. 16.) And I presume, rather the keeping the Covenant, than the entering should be meritorious, if there be any merit at all.

And Saint Augustine (de gratia, & libero arbitrio, cap. 5. & 6.) speaking of Saint Paul, saith, Meritum fuit in Paulo, sed malum; in Paul, there was merit, but euill merit, when he persecuted the Church, and received good for it. And after, Let us returne to the Apostle, whom we finde without any good merits (Sine ullis bonis meritis, imò cum multis malis meritis) yea with many euill merits, to haue obtained the grace of GOD: and then he adds, Ut post bona merita consequatur coronam, qui post mala merita consequutus est gratiam; that after his good merits obtained the crowne who after his euill merits had obtained grace. 1. Here, first it is plaine, merit is joynd in both.

with obtaining. 2. Again, Merits are good, and merits are bad: the word is common to both. 3. Merit signifies in Saint Augustines sense, no dignity of worke, but onely a meanes of obtaining. For, it is impossible, that evill merit (that is, sinne) out of the dignity of the worke should merit grace; and by the same proportion and form of speech, it is impossible, that the dignity of the worke should merit a crowne; since Saint Augustine in the same place doth say, There would be none unto whom God the just Judge, redderet coronam; should render a crowne, unlesse first, as a mercifull Father, donasset gratiam, He had given His grace: And then he adds Dona sua coronat: Deus, non merita sua; God crownes not thy merit, but His own gifts: His reason is, for, if they be such (that is, rhine) they are evill, and if they be evill, God crownes them not; if they be good, they are GOD's gifts, and He crownes them not as thy merits; but as his own gifts, exp. 7.

201 But I have troubled you too long with this School-Doctrine, and Pulpit-divinity of magnifying man's merits, before men, since their death-bed-divinity recants it all; and then, they are all forced, learned and ignorant, utterly to renounce it, and put all their trust in Christ's mercy and merits, as their sure Anchor-head: Of which I have only this to say; that merit may have some place in their science, but their own consciences, unless they be feared, tell them, there is no true merit, but Christ's only.

Application.

I have now done with my Text : and now I apply my selfe and my Text to the present Text, that lyes before us. Vix nec filendus, nec dicendus sine cura, A man whose worth may not be passed over in silence, whom all ages with us may celebrate and admire ; nor to be spoken of without great grace, care and study : Of whom I can say nothing, but his worth and vertues will farre exceed all mens words. Here I desire, neither the tongue of man, nor Angels : if it were lawfull, I should with no other but his own tongue and pen, Ipse, Ipse quem loquor, loquatur let him speak of himselfe, none so fit as himselfe was, of whom I am to speake this day. Ecce jam loquor, And he now speaks. He speaks in his learned Workes, and Sermons, and he speaks in his life and workes of mercy : and he speaks in his death : And what he taught in his life and workes, he taught and expressed in his death. He is the great Actor and performer, I but the poor cryer, Vox clamantis, He was the Vox clamans : he was the loud and great crying voice, I am but the poor Echo : and it is will with me, if as in Echo, of his large and learned bookes and workes, I onely repeat a few of the last words.

¶ No man can blame me, if I commend him at his death, whose whole life was every way commendable: Iustus sine mendacio cadaver; apud bonos, crimini non est; Iust commendation without flattery, is no fault in the opinion of the best men: And the ancient custome of the Church, did celebrate the memories of holy men, to the praise of GOD that gave such eminent graces to them; and to stir up others by their example to the Imitation of their virtues.

or I spake my knowledge of him in many things I loved, and honoured him for above thirty yeares space. I loved him I confesse, but yet hominis ingenio non est in amor, quia ex iudicio nasci debet; my love doth not blind or outsway my judgement, because it proceeded from judgement. Of whom what can I say lesse, than that he was virum in bene diffinimus, ingenioque et diffidens et propriis sanctissim us: In his life most innocent, in his knowledge, & learning most profound; being so eminent and in his purpose and life most like to and deserving, whose earthing was so happy: Quem cum videres, miseratione laud aris: no man could ever discommend him, but will he still be, he must withall commend him. And no mans words were ever able to disgrace him: Quem non sufficit laudamus, fatum, cuius imitatioque superant: They that spake truth of him, could not but spake well of him; and if they spake falsely of him, his life and manners did confute them.

And if this Love were ever fully applied in any civil preference it was in him; for, he was seen in his sacrifice; he wholly spent himself, and his studies, and estate in such sacrifices, in prayer and the praise of God, and compassions and works of charity; as if he had minded nothing else, all his life long; but this, so offer himself, his soul and body, in continual tribulation, poverty, a painful and a compassionate heart, and a thankful and grateful heart, a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God; by Jesus Christ, which is our reasonable service of Him.

He

He was born in this City of London, of honest and godly parents? who besides his breeding in learning, left him a sufficient patrimony and inheritance, which is descended to his heir, at Rawresh in Essex. It is true: Senum vita composita, the lives, of old men, many times are orderly and well composed, and disposed, and stayed; whereas in youth, many things that are in true judgement not altogether decent, are not so indecent in them, but that they well enough become their younger yeares: In this, he was happy, Hujus vita composita a pueritia. His life was well composed and ordered even from his childhood. I may well say of him, as the Prophet doth; Bonum est portare Jugum Domini ab Adolescentia: herein was his happinesse, that he took up, and did stoutly bear the yoke of the Lord even from his youth.

In his tenderest yeares, he shewed such readinesse and sharpnesse of wit and capacity, that his Teachers and Masters fore-saw in him, that he would prove lumen literarum & literatorum: The burning and shining Candle of all Learning and learned men. And therefore, those two first Masters, that had the care of the first Elements of his Learning (Mr. Ward of Ratcliffe, and Mr. Mulcaster of the Merchant-Taylor's School) contended for him, who should have the honour of his breeding, that after became the honour of their Schooles, and all learning. Mr. Ward first obtained of his parents, that he should not be a prentice: and at length Mr. Mulcaster got him to his School: and from this time, perit omne tempus quod studiis non impenditur, he accounted all that time lost, that he spent not in his studie, wherein in learning he out-stript all his equals; and his indefatigable industry, had almost out-stript himself: He studied so hard when others played, that if his Parents and Masters had not forced him to play with them also, all the play had been marred. His late studying by candle, and early rising at 4 in the morning, procured him envy among his equals; yea, with the Ushers also, because he called them up too soon: Not like to our modern Scholars, qui nondum hesternam edormiverunt crapulam; who at seven and eight of the clock, have their heads and stomachs aking, because they have not slept out their last nights surfeits and fullnesse.

Their paines and care, he so carefully remembred all his life long, that he studied alwayes how to do good to them and theirs. In which gratefulnesse he promoted Doctor Ward to the Parsonage of Walsham: and ever loved and honoured his Master Mulcaster during his life, and was a continual helper to him, and his Sonne Peter Mulcaster, to whom he gave a legacy of twenty pound by his Will: And as if he had made Mr. Mulcaster his Tutor or Supervisor, he placed his picture over the door of his Study: whereas in all the rest of his house, you could scanty see a picture.

From Master Mulcaster he went to Cambridge, to Pembroke-Hall, and was there admittred one of Doctor Wats Scholars, a notable Grammarian, well entred in the Latine, Greek, and Hebrew Tongues, and likewise in the Geomeiry, and some of the Mathematicks: and after a fellow there, in which he passed over all Degrees, and Places in such sort, Ut majoribus semper dignus haberetur; he ever seemed worthy of higher and greater Places, and would in the end attain the highest: Virtutes enim ejus matura erant; for his abilities and vertues were mature, and ripe for greater imployments.

And in this he owed little to his Tutors, but most to his own paines and study. In which, give me leave to remember one thing which he hath often lamented himself to me and others, that he never could find a fit opportunity to shew his thankfulness to Doctor Wats, his Patron, nor to any of his posterity: Yet he did not utterly forget him in his Will: having ordered that the two fellowships to be founded by him in Pembroke-Hall, should alwayes be chosen and filled, out of the Scholars of Doctor Wats Foundation, if they were found fit, of which himself had been one.

Being in holy Orders, he attended the Noble and zealous Henry Earle of Huntington, President of York, and was employed by him in often preaching, and conference with Recusants, both of the Clergy, and Laity; In which, GOD so blest his endeavours, that he converted some of the Priests, and many of the Laity; with great successe: bringing many to the Church, and seldom lost his labour; none ever converting so many as he did.

After this M. Secretary Walsingham takes notice of him, and obtained him of the Earl, intending his preferment, in which he would never permit him to take any Countrey-benefice, lest he and his great learning should be buried in a Countrey-Church. His intent was to make him Reader of Controversies in Cambridge, and for his mainenance he assigned to him (as I am informed) the Lease of the Parsonage of Alton in Hampshire, which after his death he returned to his Lady, which she never knew, nor thought of.

After this, he obtained the Vicarage of Saint Giles without Cripple-gate, London, and a Prebend Residenciary place in S. Pauls, and was chosen Master of Pembroke-Hall: and afterward was advanced to the Deanry of Westminster: and all this without all ambition or suit of his own; GOD turning the hearts of his friends to promote him for his great worth.

When he took the degree of D. D. in Cambridge, one of his questions was, that Decima debetur jure divino: which he betrayed not, as some have done, but made it good by Scriptures, and divine and natural reason, as will appear to the Reader, when that, among other of his Works, shall enrich the English Church, with a happy Treasure of Learning.

He was, as all our English world well knowes, a singular Preacher, and a most famous Writer. He was so singular a Preacher, and so profound a Writer, that you will doubt in which he did excel: whose whose weapons in the mouthes of the acversaries proved stones in the teeth of dogs : while they thought to withstand or answer them, they bit the stones and brake their own teeth : and so it is true of him, Responsa eius sine responsionibus, His answers were answerlesse : Never durst any Romanists answer him ; as their common use is, that which they cannot answer and confute, they slight it, and let it passe without any answer at all.

His admirable knowledge in the learned Tongues, Latine, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack, Arabick, besides other modern Tongues to the number of fifteen (as I am informed) was such and so rare, that he may well be ranked in the first place, to be one of the rarest Linguists in Christendom ; In which, he was so perfect and absolute, both for Grammar and profound knowledge therein, that he was so perfect in the Grammar and Criticisines of them, as if he had utterly neglected the matter it self ; and yet he was so exquisite and found in the matter and learning of these Tongues, as if he had never regarded the Grammar.

Scientia magna, Memoria major, Iudicium maximum : his Knowledge was great and rare, his Memory greater, and his Judgement profoundest and greatest of all : and over and above all these, Industria infinita, his paines and industry was infinite : For in the things the world hath seen, he used no man to read for him ; as those great Clerks, Bellarmino, and others fashion is, to employ whole Colledges and Societies to study and read for them, and so furnish them ; he only used an Amanuensis, to transcribe that, which himself had written with his own hand.

So that now I may propose him, Ut exemplum sine exemplo maximum, as a great Example example-lesse : Nec ante eum, quem ille imitaretur ; nec post eum, qui eum imitari & assequi possit, inventus est : There was none before him, whom he did imitate : nor none will come, after him, that will easily overtake him : Insomuch that his great gifts may well be taken ; a little to cloud and over-shadow and obscure all men of his Age and Order : and surely the fame of this singular Bishop will become such a light to all posterity, Us nec bona eorum, nec mala latere patiemur, 'twil not suffice neither their good, nor, their evil to lie hid.

Was his fame great ? Major inventus est, He was ever found to be greater than fame made him. In which, as he was a wonderful Mirroure of learning and learned men, so he was a singular Lover and encourager of learning and learned men : which appeared in his liberality and bounty to Master Causabon, Master Cluverius, Master Voscus, Master Grotius, Master Erpenius, whom he attempted with the offer of a very large stipend, of his own purse, to draw into England : to have read and taught the Oriental tongues here : even as one well said, Omnes quod in se amant, in aliis venerantur : those gifts and knowledges, which he loved in himself, he honoured and rewarded in others.]

When the Bishopricks of Ely and Salisbury were void, and some things were to be pared from them, some overture being made to him to take them, he refused them utterly : If it please you to give me leave, I will make his answer for him ; Nolo Episcopari, quia nolo alienare, I will not be made a Bishop, because I will not alienate Bishops lands.

After this, by some perswasion he accepted of Chichester ; yet with some fear of the burden : and after that, of Ely ; and last of this of Winchester ; whence GOD hath translated him to Heaven : in which he freed himself and his Successor of a pension of four hundred pounds per annum, which many of his Predecessors had paid. He was Almoner, Dean of the Chappel, and a Privy Counsellor to King James, and King Charles : In which he spake and medled little in Civil and Temporal affaires, being out of his profession and Element : but in causes that any way concerned the Church and his Calling, he spake fully and home to the purpose ; that he made all know, that he understood and could speak, when it concerned him, as by those few speeches which are preserved, you may judge, ex ungue leonem, a wise man by his word and deeds.

And herein he was like the Ark of GOD : all places where it rested were blessed by the presence of GOD in it ; so, wherefoever he came and lived, they all tasted and were bettered by his providence and goodnesse. Saint Giles was reduced to him by a Rare toward the better maintenance of the place, and the house repaired. He found nothing in the Treasury in Pembroke-Hall ; he left in it, in ready money a thousand pound. Being Prebend Residentiary in S. Pauls, he built the House in Croed-lane, belonging to his Prebend, and recovered it to the Church. He repaired the Deanes lodging in Westminster. When he came to Chichester, he repaired the Palace there, and the house in Aldingbourne. At Ely, he spent in Reparation of Ely-house in Holborne, of Ely-palace, at Downham, and Wisbich Castle two thousand pound. At Winchester-house, at Farnham, at Walsham, and Wolvesey, likewise two thousand pound.

It seems plainly, he loved the Churches in which he was promoted and lived, better than he did his money, or his own gain. For if we consider these expences in his Episcopal Houses, and his most magnificent entertainment of his most gracious Sovereign King JAMES, at Farenham, where in three dayes he spent three thousand pounds : as great and bountiful entertainment as ever King JAMES received at a Subjects hand : besides, he refused to make some Leases in his last yeares, which might have been very beneficial to him, for the good of his Successors ; his reason was, Many are too ready to spoil Bishopricks, and few enough to uphold them : Add to these the many Almes he gave in his life, and now at his death, and we shall see he was free from all avarice and love of money. In him, is true that word of S. John, Nolite diligere mundum : he doth not say, Nolite habere, but Nolite diligere, Love not the world : he doth not say, have not, possesse not the world, or goods of the world ; but love them not : He had them, but he loved them not : Ut dispensator, ut Errogatur; he had them but as a Steward to dispose and expend them; to procure an everlasting Tabernacle in the highest heavens.

He meddled little with them, but left the taking of his accounts from his Officers to his Brothers; and when he began his Will at Waltham a year before his death, he understood not his own estate; nay till about six weekes before his death, when his Accounts were delivered up and perfected, he did not fully know his own estate: and therefore in his first draught of his Will, he gave but little to his kindred, doubting he might give away more than he had, and therefore in a Codicill annexed to his Will he doubled all his legacies to them, and made every hundred to be two hundred, and every two hundred to be four hundred: And yet notwithstanding this encrease, he gave more to the maintenance of learning, and the poor, than to his kindred: His charity and love of God and the poor, was greater in him, than Naturall affection; and yet he forgot not his naturall affection to them.

It was said of him, that in his time was held to be Delicia hominum (Titus), Abstinnit alieno, ut si quis unquam: If ever any man abstained from that which was not his own, he was the man.

This is as true of this most Reverend Prelate, he never took any mans goods, or right from him. Give me leave to adde a little more of him: Distribuit sua, ut si quis unquam; If ever any studied to disperse and distribute his owne, either to kindred or to the poor, surely this is the Man.

Neither did he stay to do good, and distribute till his death, that is, then gave his goods to the poore, when he could keep them no longer: The first place he lived on, was Saint Giles; there, I speak my knowledge, I do not say, he began; sure I am, he continued his charity: his certain Almes there, was ten pound per annum; which was payed quarterly by equal portions, and twelve pence every Sunday he came to Church, and five shillings at every Communion: and for many yeares, since he left that Cure, he sent five pound, about Christmas, besides the number of gownes given to the poor of that Parish when he was Almoner. And I have reason to presume the like of those other parishes mentioned in his Will, to which he also gave Legacies: to Saint Giles an hundred pound, where he had been Vicar. To Alhallowes Barkin, where he was borne, twenty pound: To Saint Martins Ludgate, where he dwelt, five pound. To Saint Andrews in Holborne where Ely-house stands ten pound. And to this Parish, of Saint Saviours in South-wake where he died, twenty pound. which Parishes he hath remembred, for his Almes to the poor, when the land shall be purchased for the relief and use of the poor.

When he came to Oxford, attending King James in the end of his progresse, his custome was to send fifty pound to be distributed among poor scholars. And the like he did at Cambridge, in his Journey to Ely. And lest his left hand should know what his right hand did, he sent great Almes to many poor places, under other mens names; and he stayed not till the poor sought him, for he first sought them (as his servants employed in that service can witnesse) as appeared at Farntham, at Waltham and Winchester: And in the last year of great Sicknesse, he gave in this Parish of Saint Saviours, an hundred Marks. Besides, since the year one thousand six hundred and twentie, as I have my information from him, that kept his books of Accounts, and delivered him the money, he gave in private Almes to the summe of one thousand three hundred and forty pounds.

The totall of his pious and charitable works mentioned in his Will, amounts to the summe of six thousand three hundred twenty and six pounds. Of which, to Pembroke-Hall, for the erection of two Fellowships, and other uses mentioned in the Codicill, a thousand pound, to buy fifty pound Land per Annum, to that purpose. Beside a Bason and Ever, like that of the Foundresse, and some books.

To buy two hundred pound per Annum, four thousand pound: Viz. for aged poor men, fifty pound per annum: for poor widowes, the wives of one husband, fifty pound: for the putting of poor Orphans to prentise, fifty pound: to prisoners fifty pound.

He was alwayes a diligent and painfull Preacher: most of his Solemne Sermons he was most carefull of, and exact; I dare say, few of them, but they passed his hand, and were thrice revised, before they were preached: and he ever mistaked often and loose preaching, without study of Antiquity: and he would be bold with himselfe, and say, when he preached twice a day at Saint Giles, he prated once: And when his weaknesse grew on him, and that by infirmity of his body he grew unable to preach, he began to go little to the Court, doe so much for weaknesse, as for inability to preach.

After he came to have an Episcopall house with a Chappell, he kept manfully Communion inviolably; yea, though himselfe had received at the Court, the same moneth. In which, his carriage was not only decent and religious, but also exemplary: he ever offered twice at the Altar, and so did every one of his servants, to which purpose he gave them mony, lest it should be burthensome to them.

Now before I come to his last end, give me leave to tell you, that privately he did much find fault and reprove three sins, too common, and reigning in this latter age. 1. Usury was one, from which, what by his Sermons, what by private conference, he withdrew many: 2. Another was Simony, for which he endured many troubles by Quare Impedit, and Duplex querela: as for himselfe, he seldome gave a Benefice or preferment to him that petitioned or made suit for it: he rather sent for men of note, that he thought wanted preferment, and often gave places and Benefices, under Seale, before they knew of it; as to M. Boys, and Mr Fuller: The Third and greatest was Sacrilege, which he did abhorre, as one principal cause among many, of forreign and Civill warres in Christendome, and invasions of the Turke. Wherein even the reformed, and otherwise the true professours and servants of Christ, because they took God's portion, and turned it to publike prophane uses, or to private advancements, did suffer just chastisement and correction at God's hand: And at home it had been observed, and he wished some man would take the paines to collect, how many Families, that were raised by the spoiles of the Church, were now vanished, and the place thereof knowes them no more.

And now I draw to an end. Gods house is truly called, and is indeed, Domus Orationis, the House of Prayer, it accompanies all acts done in Gods House: of this Reverend Prelate: I may say, vita eius, vita orationis, his life was a life of prayer: A great part of five houres every day, did he spend in prayer and devotion to God. After the death of his Brother M. Thomas Andrews, in the sicknesse time, whom he loved dearely, he began to foretell his owne death, before the end of summer, or before the beginning of winter. And when his Brother M. Nicholas Andrews died, he took that as a certaine signe and prognosticke, and warning of his owne death, and from that time till the houre of his dissolution, he spent all his time in prayer; and his prayer book, when he was private, was seldome seen out of his hands: and in the time of his fever and last sicknesse; besides the often prayers which were read to him, in which he repeated all the parts of the Confession and other petitions, with an audible voyce, as long as his strength endured, he did (as was well observed by certain tokens in him) continually pray to himselfe, though he seemed otherwise to rest or slumber: And when he could pray no longer voce, with his voyce, yet oculis & manibus, by lifting up his eyes and hands he prayed still: and when nec manus, nec vox officium faciebat; both voice, and eyes, and hands failed in their office; then Corde, with his heart he still prayed, untill it pleased God to receive his blessed soule to himselfe.

And so, huius mortalitas magis finita, quam vita, his Mortality had an end, and he died peaceably and quietly in the Lord, but his life shall have no end: yea, then his life did begin, when his Mortality made an end; that was Natalis his birth-day, September XXV. being Monday about four of the clock in the morning. So died he aliorum maiore damno, quam suo; with greater dammage to others; even to all this English Church and all Christendom, than to himselfe: And God grant that many ages may be so happy to bring forth and enjoy such a Prelate, so furnished with all endowments of learning and knowledge, with innocency and holiness of life, and with such piety and charity, as he shewed in his life and death.

My conclusion is short. I have spoken somewhat of this most Reverend Prelate, but much short of his graces and worth. In summe thus much: In his life he was Concionatur & Scriptor potentissimus; a most powerful Preacher, and Writer; in his deeds and actions he was potentior & diuturnior, more powerfull and lasting. Death hath bereaved us of him: but his life, and his works of learning, and his works of piety and charity, I doubt not but God in His goodness will make them Monumentum ære perennius; a Monument more lasting than brasse, and stone, even to the coming of our Lord Christ.

For no doubt while he lived he sowed the sincere Word of life in the souls of men; and in his life and death, posuit elemosynam in sinu pauperis; he put his Almes into the bosome of the poor: and shall I say, Oravit pro eo; it prayed for him; and by it he procured himselfe a strong Armie, and bellatores fortes, valiant fouldiers, whose many prayers and blessings God could not resist, the rather because they knew him not? that is too short and the Text goes farther, Exoravit; it shall pray and prevaile too: and he and they have prevailed, and he is now at rest and peace in heaven, and follows the Lamb wheresoever he goes.

And after him let us all send this blessing which the voyce from heaven uttered, Write, Blessed are the dead, which dye in the Lord. For the Lord, there was no cause he should die, but he dyed in the Lord, because he always lived to the Lord, and a happy death must needs accompany and crown such a life, From henceforth, saith the Spirit, they rest from their labours, all teares are wiped from their eyes, and all sighs from their hearts, and their workes follow them; Opera sequuntur, & opera precedunt; their workes go before them; so no doubt but this workes have done, as the prayer and Almes and fasting of Cornelius did; they have procured a place for him in heaven, and his workes shall follow him, and the fame of him shall stir up many to follow his example.

And so I end, beseeching God to give us all, as he gave to him, our parts in the first Resurrection, from sin to grace: And to grant to him and all the faithful, and Saints departed, and us all with him, a joyful Resurrection to everlasting life and glory in JESU

CHRIST AMEN.
